There were three targets. Beatrice, Frederica, and the tacked-on Petra.

Even with his consciousness glowing white-hot, Subaru sharpened his ears so as not to miss a single detail. The fact that Rem wasn't marked as a target must have meant that whoever hired Elsa had forgotten Rem's existence. He had previously thought that Frederica was the employer, but her death sent him back to the drawing board.

Subaru: "Come to think of it, you lied, didn't you?"

Elsa: "Lied?"

Subaru: "About Frederica— Back in the Forbidden Library, you talked like you only killed Petra, but how do you explain that?"

Subaru gestured toward Frederica, lying at the side of the hallway. Following his gaze, with an "Aah", Elsa nodded as if having understood. Then, she turned back to Subaru,

Elsa: "Hers wasn't a very beautiful death."

She made this paltry remark. The murderer's definition of beauty wasn't something he'd want to understand. But after taking someone's life, was this all she had to say? Rage churned inside him, but he knew it wouldn't mean a thing in front of Elsa and the Kukri knife in her hand.

As much as he wanted revenge, his body hadn't recovered nearly enough to strike back. Just like this, strewn on the floor in front of Elsa's murdering blade, the outcome was already decided.

—So, this was as far as he would go.

Acknowledging his impending death, Subaru ran the information he had gathered in this loop through his mind, alongside the new, confounding mysteries. And then, there was his exchange with Beatrice, and the final expression he saw on her face.

Why did the girl who kept telling Subaru "I want to die" and "please kill me" shove him out of the way in the end? Promptly noticing that Elsa was alive, she pushed Subaru away. But just what was it supposed to mean when she did this? Subaru wasn't stupid enough not to realize it.

Elsa: "I don't like that look in your eyes."

Subaru: “Huh? —Gbha!?”

With these words, the flat of her blade struck against his face once again.

His left cheekbone was shattered, and several cracked teeth fell onto the floor. Collapsing, another blow struck him from the opposite side. Intense pain raced through the bottom of his right eye, and, with a flash of her blade, his left ear was sheared off.

The blade and pommel proceed to switch turns in shredding, breaking, tormenting Subaru’s body. She fails to grant the imminent death he had anticipated, gifting him only pain and pain and pain and pain as he squirms, spitting blood and wails.

Elsa: “Struggle on until the last moment of your life. Otherwise, what is the point of living?”

Subaru: “...As if I’d want to take life advice from you.”

A strike. His forehead split open, and he felt the illusion of the contents of his skull spilling as he collapsed. His consciousness grew distant at the solid impact, and Subaru could feel his body steadily being drawn into that frozen world.

So, this is where he dies.

Even if he lost consciousness now, he had no illusions about what falling unconscious in front the Bowel Hunter would entail.

This was the end. This time, this would be as far as he gets. Next time, he won’t fail again. Next time, for sure.

The expression on your face at the very end. I won’t forget it, no matter what.

Subaru: “—Beatrice.”

In her final moments, the girl who had told him “kill me”, had tears within her eyes.

With that sight seared into his mind, Subaru’s consciousness was slowly swallowed, into darkness, into nothing.

Arc 4 Chapter 64 - World Crumbling

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 4 “The Taste of Death”, Parts 1-2 (heavily changed)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken – Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

The first thing Subaru noticed as his consciousness returned was the unbearable pain throughout his body.

His face, and everything above his neck was wracked with extraordinary pain. His left cheek, the area around his right eye, his molars, his incisors, his left ear— far too many to list, there was not a spot untouched by pain.

He moved his tongue around in his mouth, and found that he had lost two molars as well as one front tooth, and that one of his canines was gone. And when he opened his eyes to survey his surroundings, he noticed that his right eye was so swollen that it could no longer open.

Subaru: “Thh... hies...”

When he tried to speak, his mouth only managed a strange gurgle due to the missing teeth and the blood pooling in his mouth.

Every breath drove a chill into the exposed nerves under his teeth, and though he tried to breathe through his nostrils, dried blood completely clotted the path. Gasping, he spat out the blood in his mouth,

Subaru: “No way... I... didn’t die?”

As he dragged along his overly-damaged body, Subaru recognized the fact that he had survived what should have been certain death.

Looking out through the remaining half of his vision, Subaru found himself lying in the dim corridor. There was no one in sight. He began to recall what happened before passing out, and,

Subaru: “Elsa, ‘s...”

Gone.

Or at least, she is nowhere that Subaru can see her.

She is a woman who operates in the shadows. She may possess a skill to make herself imperceptible to others even when they are looking straight at her— but she would have no reason to use it.

Elsa is gone. She disappeared. Without killing Subaru.

Subaru: “Why... would... no, more importantly...”

Every movement of his mouth made new blood gush out. Annoyedly spitting it out, Subaru shook his head. He tried moving each part of his body to check which areas hurt and which were immobile—

—When he noticed the warm existence, taking faint, rhythmic breaths, resting in his arms.

Subaru: “—Rem.”

The lovely blue-haired girl. The girl who was instilling him with strength even as she went on sleeping.

In his arms, Rem’s heart was silently beating. Her shallow, repeated breathing, her steady, undeniable pulse, and her faintly blushing skin— the rhythms of life remain present in her.

Subaru: “———”

Overwhelmed with emotion, he tightened his arms around her.

Taking advantage of her lack of reaction, he held her delicate body as he relished in its warmth, as if to perceive through her skin the proof that she still lives.

Subaru: “Why... did she leave... without killing me or Rem...?”

Holding Rem’s body, Subaru remarked on Elsa’s inexplicable departure.

She killed Petra, she killed Frederica, and even Beatrice was extinguished by her hands. And yet, the murderer left without taking Subaru and Rem’s lives when they were ripe for the taking in front of her.

Indeed, before losing consciousness, Subaru had pleaded for Rem's life, and Elsa's reply could be interpreted as an acceptance of his request. But would she really stay true to her word?

He doubted he would ever be able to understand the mind of a psychopath like the Bowel Hunter, but her reason for sparing Rem might have been just that simple.

Subaru: "But then... why did she let me live...?"

He would be killed for sure, that was what he had thought. At least, Elsa had swung her blade at Subaru while brandishing clear malevolence towards Subaru. The pain of every shattered bone and every carved-up muscle told him that was the case.

But that only laid more suspicion onto the central question, why on earth had Elsa allowed Subaru to live?

Subaru: "Either way... right now..."

Unable to understand, Subaru shook his head, and strained his aching body to lift Rem onto his arms.

Holding Rem lightly in his arms, Subaru looked towards the end of the hallway— and, spotting Frederica's corpse, lying there as if abandoned, he decided on what he would have to do.

—Before anything else, he would bury Frederica and Petra.

Subaru: "Even though there's really no point when this world is bound to end..."

A sentimental, irrational, and wretched act, he muttered in self-derision.

Subaru had already decided that he would reset this world with his death.

Too much had been lost. And in spite of what he gained, he had failed to protect even a single thing he had sought to protect. Subaru lost everything, just like all those times before, or perhaps even more. Subaru no longer held the courage to live on in a world where so much was already lost.

If his death could bring them back, then he wouldn't hesitate for a second.

This world was a world that was ending.

Whether it was Petra's, Frederica's, or Beatrice's death, all of it could be reset.

His promise to Petra, his apology to Frederica, and his definite answer to Beatrice's sorrows, they could all be fulfilled in the next world.

Should he rationalize matters like that, then mourning their deaths truly carried no meaning. Because if Subaru alone could endure, then the sentimentality left to a disappearing world would not be anything to remain in anyone's memory.

—But, if he truly had that kind of resolve, Natsuki Subaru would have already moved on to the next try by now.

Subaru: "Resolve, determination, ability... I'm always lacking in everything. Why am I always so weak... Huh, Rem?"

The girl in his arms did not answer him.

But, whether it was lamenting his own powerlessness, or laying bare his weakness, right now, the only place where Subaru could do this was in front of this sleeping girl.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—It had been only about fifteen minutes after deciding to lay Petra and Frederica to rest when he saw it.

Subaru: "What... the hell?"

Seeing the object sitting in front of him, Subaru let out this stupid groan in his throat.

But who could blame him? Because that was just how strange and incomprehensible the object before him was.

A pink-toned wad of meat— would perhaps be a close description.

Its shape was kind of like a lopsided ball of mud a child might have made, but out of meat. That explanation alone likely conveyed its oddity, but there was more reason than that for Subaru's bewilderment.

Subaru: "It's big—"

Simply put, the hunk of meat was enormous.

It was big enough for him to have to gaze upwards, and he could sense the weight of its dense mass just by looking. Both its color and texture reminded him of fresh pork or poultry one might find in a meat aisle. That said, Subaru lacked the courage to touch it and verify.

As far as Subaru could see, the meat wads numbered to about a dozen. Every single one was the exact same size and conspicuously littered about the area.

Subaru: "What... the hell is...?"

Confused and without answers, Subaru repeated that same question over and over. Then, as he looked around,

Subaru: "Where did all the villagers go?"

Standing in the deserted center of Arlam Village, surrounded by hunks of meat, Subaru stupidly muttered to himself.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Subaru's venture to Arlam Village was undertaken first to find helpers in preforming funeral rites for Petra and Frederica, but, most importantly, to inform Petra's family of her death.

He was prepared to be beaten, and to be sworn at.

It was the same sentimentality he had in the mansion. Subaru could avoid this pain. He could hide the truth of Petra's death, and reset this world without the villagers ever knowing.

If he hid his responsibility for Petra's death deep inside his heart, with only his guilt to haunt him, that would probably have been a grace. But, as for whether he could forgive himself for doing so, that would surely be impossible.

Subaru: "In the end, it's just self-satisfaction, isn't it?"

So he decided to inform Petra's family before burying the two.

Subaru did not know what he should do to preform funerary rites for Beatrice. Spirits don't leave bodies behind. The clean, spotless manner of her disappearance had made her death seem almost unreal to Subaru.

"Who knows, maybe", he couldn't help but cling to such hopeful thoughts. With those ambivalent feelings on his mind, Subaru made his way towards Arlam Village.

He brought Rem with him, intending to ask someone to take care of her while he saw to the burials. And then, when he arrived, while searching around for the villagers, he instead found those lumps of meat.

Subaru: "—There's... no one here."

Temporarily setting Rem down under the roof of one of the houses, and walking a full circle around the village, that was the conclusion Subaru had come to.

The congealed blood on his sweaty brow moistens, painting his face in red, his state atrocious. Should the villagers witness Subaru now, the proper reaction would be to greet him with a horrified shriek. But not finding anybody who will shriek at his appearance, Subaru returns to sit beside the sleeping Rem, utterly lost.

—When he saw that Elsa had disappeared from the mansion, it wasn't that he hadn't considered it.

Elsa didn't bat an eye when she murdered everyone involved in the Capital. So, perhaps unsatisfied with the people in the mansion, she had decided to put the whole village to the blade.

Subaru had pondered over various explanations on his way to Arlam Village, and that possibility was just a part of his unease. But what greeted him when he arrived was far beyond anything he could have imagined.

Instead of villagers, there were just scattered hunks of meat.

—Naturally, deep down, Subaru had imagined the worst, but he was just subconsciously ignoring it.

Subaru: “No one’s here... then there’s no point dawdling here... better hurry and... bury them.”

Muttering this excuse, Subaru lifted Rem into his arms and left the village.

The enormous, motionless masses of meat remained as they were. Subaru didn’t feel the slightest pang on his conscience, leaving them there. He would have preferred if they didn’t even linger in the deepest recesses of his memories.

It felt like his head was going to explode.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Burying Petra and Frederica turned out to be an unexpectedly simple affair.

Preparing their appearance for interment, he had wiped clean their bloodstained skin with a cloth. As for clothes, he had changed them into a new set with his apologies. Naturally, there were no inappropriate feelings involved.

As he passed the girls’ cold, stiffened arms through the sleeves of their clothes, he wanted to cry, but the back of his eyes only grew dry, trapping his heart within that inexplicable emotion.

Subaru: “...At least, have peace.”

Subaru quietly said a prayer for their repose, as he laid the earth over them.

It goes without saying that Subaru knew nothing about the prayers of this world, neither does he know the methods for seeing off the dead in the old world, for that matter. All his relative were still alive and in good health, so he never had to attend any funerals, and he never took any particular interest in the secular ceremonies of the Japanese people.

He regretted that now.

—The fact that he didn't even know the proper words to lay them to rest was filling him with remorse.

Subaru: "And I caused you problems, too. Thank you, for helping me."

Saying this, Subaru reached out his hand, and the black ground dragon brought her snout over to his fingers.

With her legs dirtied by the dug-up soil, Patrasche nudged closer to Subaru as if concerned for him.

After finding Patrasche safe in the stables, Subaru asked her for her help with Petra and Frederica's burials. The clever dragon quickly understood Subaru's clumsy request, and, alongside Subaru, who was using a tool resembling a spade, she dug the hole for Frederica's tall body.

Even with her mighty legs that could outrace the wind completely coated in mud, it did not diminish the jet-black ground dragon's nobility and beauty. And Subaru was once again reminded of his immense gratitude for her existence.

Petra's grave was dug by Subaru. Though her body was small, he didn't want her to feel cramped, and so he wound up tearing the skins of his palm several times over on the handle of the unfamiliar tool.

Laying the earth over her, and watching Petra's figure receding from view, at last, the stifled tears poured out, and Subaru did not bother to wipe them. He gave Frederica a similar send-off, and after placing a simple marker over their graves, the funeral had drawn to an end.

Having concluded one of his tasks, where he should have felt a burden taken off his shoulders, the weight only grew heavier.

Subaru: "...There's no point staying here anymore."

He softly murmured. The curtain had fallen over the irrevocable tragedy at the mansion.

Carving each and every last one of those unforgettable events into his memories, he made sure he'd never forget his present regret as he bid the two farewell.

This remorse engraved into his very soul, which he will be sure to wipe away in the next attempt. Only once he had accomplished this, could he truly take responsibility for their deaths.

Subaru: “After we’ve checked what we need to check, let’s return to the Sanctuary— We can’t leave Rem here, so she’s coming too.”

The sun had begun to wane.

In the steadily darkening world, Subaru realized that it must be approaching the third night. Once he had verified what he should, if he set out from the mansion the next morning, he would be back in the Sanctuary before the fourth night.

That would leave a day and a half until the fated sixth day. And this would also be the first time Subaru had traveled back to the Sanctuary from the mansion.

Defend the mansion, and break through the Sanctuary.

Because there were two inevitable hurdles, he would need to head back for the necessary experience points before he could take on the final loop.

What would have changed at the Sanctuary while Subaru was gone?

Things would have probably proceeded along the same lines as the time Garfiel knocked Subaru out and imprisoned him. In that case, Otto and Ram might just take action to free the Arlam refugees on the fifth night.

Subaru: “Must be before that happens... Huh.”

The way he left Garfiel was another cause for concern.

Subaru had utilized a forceful method to block his pursuit by using Ryuzu as a shield. His imagination surely couldn’t conceive just how much he had infuriated him.

On top of that, he would have to tell Garfiel about his older sister’s death. How he suspected her of being a spy, and how he had failed to do anything to save her.

He would likely have to resign himself to Garfiel’s rage, and take any hit that may come from that.

Subaru: “Back to the Sanctuary, then— I miss Emilia.”

Thinking over all the countless incidents beleaguering his mind, Subaru absently let slip this honest thought. Or perhaps, it was closer to a whimper.

But, in this very moment, it was what he truly wanted.

He wanted to see Emilia's face. And to touch her. He wanted to feel the reality of Emilia's existence, and to heal his heart that was on the verge of breaking.

Those thoughts were just a testament to the extent of Subaru's exhaustion.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—It was when they entered the forest surrounding the Sanctuary, that Subaru noticed that something was strange.

Riding on Patrasche, he was holding the sleeping Rem against his chest. It was a horrendously unbalanced and precarious arrangement, but thankfully, Rem did not move about, and Patrasche was able to perfectly make up for her master's incompetence as they sped along the road.

Naturally, they couldn't go at full speed as they did on the way to the mansion, and it took them seventeen hours to retrace the same path. And now, it was already approaching the fourth night. He had planned to spend a day and a half in the Sanctuary, but it looked like it would have to be shrunk down to one day.

It was a necessary use of time. And of course, he had no intention of blaming Patrasche. But if there was one thing Subaru had failed to take into account,

Subaru: "Seriously, this can't be a joke... What the fuck's happening here...!?"

Halfway along the road to the Sanctuary, through the forest where the barrier stood— a stinging chill starts to encase the world.

The trees' green leaves were coated with frost, and their trunks frozen in thin sheets of white. The puddles along the ground had frozen over, and there were wintry patches every way he looked.

The temperature was abnormally cold— even more frigid than that of a harsh winter. Subaru tightened his arms around Rem as he looked about, expelling breaths of white mist.

As usual, the woods are relatively devoid of critters, but now, even the life force of the trees had weakened. The fact that the forest was so unprepared for this sheer cold provided undeniable proof that this cold was absolutely not a natural phenomenon.

Subaru: “Everything ahead is frozen and white... I got a bad feeling about this, Patrasche.”

Patrasche: “———”

Subaru: “Hey... Patrasche?”

Irritated by the ominous feeling in his chest, he wanted to tell Patrasche to speed up— but Patrasche did not respond. Furrowing his brows as he looked down at his favorite dragon, he saw that her legs were stopping, and her breaths were pained and ragged.

Subaru: “Patrasche!?”

Subaru hurriedly pulled on the reins to stop her. He hopped down from the saddle, and reached out his hand to her neck. The rocky texture of the scales of her neck felt the same as usual, except it was terrifyingly cold. And, it was then that he realized it.

Subaru: “Unless, are ground dragons vulnerable to the cold...? They look just like reptiles, I wonder how they deal with winter?”

Most reptiles like lizards and snakes hibernate during the winter. Since they look so similar visually, perhaps some of the reptilian qualities applied to ground dragons as well.

In that case, having Patrasche march towards the cold would be nothing less than suicide. If what Subaru imagined was correct, then the closer they get to the center of the Sanctuary, the more severe the cold would become.

Subaru: “It’s too harsh for you to come with me... I guess. From the looks of it, the ground dragons that stayed in the Sanctuary might be in danger as well.”

Subaru stroked Patrasche's shivering body with his hand. Perhaps it was doing nothing more than to console her, but Patrasche leaned her body into his palm as if to wrap herself around the sensation.

Without her, it would no doubt take even longer to reach the Sanctuary— but if she went along with him, she might very well die on the way there.

Subaru: "Patrasche... I'm sorry, but I'll have to leave you outside the forest... or actually, could you go back to the mansion?"

Hearing Subaru's decision, Patrasche let out a sad snort.

But she was clever enough to understand Subaru's concerns, as well as her own physical condition and the state of the forest ahead. After a few more consoling words from Subaru, she lowered her head and did not disobey him.

After rubbing her head to his heart's content, Subaru took out some basic rations and clothing from Patrasche's travel pack and put on as much as he could to ward off the cold. He did the same for Rem, and after securing the baggage with her body, he lifted her up.

Subaru: "The way to the Sanctuary is... straight ahead... right?"

Patrasche: "———"

Subaru: "Don't give me that worried look... I'm more worried about you, you know. It must've been painful, and I'm sorry for not noticing sooner. It was inconsiderate of me, sorry."

Subaru drooped down his head, and Patrasche let out a small neigh as if to say, "There's no need to apologize". Then, she set out her steps towards the forest's edge, while Subaru watched her until she was out of sight.

Patrasche didn't look back even once as she left. Perhaps, it was because she possessed a dignity which did not regard displaying rue highly, and, simultaneously, a kindness that prevented Subaru from feeling responsibility.

Through and through, Subaru acknowledged everything his beloved dragon had done for him.

Subaru: “Patrasche should have no problem finding her way out of the forest... She was worrying about me infinitely more than herself... Shit.”

Shifting Rem in his arms, Subaru walked onward with the sound of frost crunching under his feet.

His exhaled breaths turned white, and his teeth would clatter if he allowed himself to feel the cold. Forward, forward, he headed towards the Sanctuary.

Subaru: “What on earth happened... Emilia...?”

He called to the name of the girl who must be at the heart of this freezing cold.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Forcing his frozen legs forward, breathing in shallow huffs through lips that had already forgotten how to shiver. Doing his best to keep his sticking eyelids open, Subaru managed to maintain his hazy-white vision as he advanced through the forest.

—The extreme cold enveloping the Sanctuary far exceeded Subaru’s naive expectations. With every step that brought him closer, he could feel his body temperature dropping.

He had long lost the sensation of his skin, and the only thing driving his body was the sense of duty to those who have departed, and the will to move forward,

Subaru: “———”

In his arms, Rem went emitting her steady signs of life, giving no indication of whether the outside environment was affecting her.

Forging straight ahead, he advanced towards the Sanctuary. Supposedly.

He cannot tell by sight whether he was on the right direction or not. But he could only trust that he was getting closer by the intensifying glacial cool as he walked.

The snow had already piled up to his shins, and before he knew it, the forest had completely transformed into a landscape of winter.

It was a power capable of transforming the very nature of the world— and Subaru knew what it might be.

Subaru: “———”

Quivering, he pried open his frozen lips while blood seeped from the ripped-off tissue as he gasped for air. He touched the warmth of his blood with the tip of his tongue and was assured that his body hadn't frozen through.

He could keep going. He could still do it.

He hadn't learned anything yet. If he stopped here, he wouldn't be able to tell himself what all those sacrifices had been for. And so,

Subaru: “—Ah.”

Suddenly, noticing something cut across his stark-white vision, Subaru halted his steps.

Rubbing his nearly closed eyes open, Subaru strained his gaze to see the anomaly that had cut into his sight. Gradually making out its contours, he saw that it was a person— A person he knew.

Subaru: “Ryuzu... san?”

Ryuzu: “———”

At Subaru's call, the girl only responded with a silent gaze. Observing this reaction, Subaru immediately recognized that this girl wasn't Ryuzu, but a replica of Ryuzu Meyer.

And that, if she was a replica, then he should have the rights to command her.

Subaru: “It's good... you're here... Please... guide me to the Sanctuary...”

???: “She ain't gonna listen t'yer requests, y'know?”

Huffing with white, faltering breaths, Subaru called out to the replicant girl, but another voice cut in between them.

He looked up, and immediately saw someone landing in the snow beside the girl. Watching the figure sink into the snow with a crunch, Subaru saw that it was a single youth.

With short, blonde hair, and a sharpened gaze, his entire body emanated murderous hostility.

Subaru: "Garfiel."

Garfiel: "Yo, y'still got the guts t'come back? Gotta say, I'm impressed. Well, they do say «The bow o'a lyin' betoon is splendid»."

Without forgetting to throw in an incomprehensible reference, Garfiel clicked his fangs at Subaru.

But as he disdainfully looked down at the panting Subaru, Garfiel's eyes suddenly widened in surprise when he saw Rem in Subaru's arms.

Garfiel: "Huh...? What's Ram doin' wi... wait, that ain't Ram. Hah? Th'hell's goin' on? Who's that girl..."

Subaru: "I'll explain, but whether you'll understand is a bit sketchy... This is Rem. Ram's totally authentic younger sister."

Garfiel: "I ain't never heard 'bout Ram havin' a sister... but can't really decide if yer lyin' outright either, oy."

Facing someone who looked exactly like the girl he had a crush on, Garfiel's aggression somewhat diminished. Seeing how Garfiel didn't kill him on sight, Subaru determined that he was still rational, and decided to put off making escape plans for now.

Then, Subaru turned to the Ryuzu replicant quietly standing at Garfiel's side,

Subaru: "You said that girl won't listen to me anymore... What do you mean?"

Garfiel: "...Ain't that pretty simple? Soon as ya left th'Sanctuary, I went to th'Experimental Grounds and overwrote the command right and got it back. Remembered some unpleasant times cuz' of you."

Subaru: “The command right transfers that easily?”

Garfiel: “Y’basically just have’ta touch it. That’s how you got it, ain’t it?”

“It” would be the crystal sealing the original Ryuzu Meyer inside. If touching it was how Subaru received the command right in the first place, then it was only natural that Garfiel took it back the same way. In any case,

Subaru: “It was really considerate of you to come all the way here to welcome me.”

Garfiel: “I didn’t come here t’entertain yer bullshit. Just take a look at what’s happenin’ and it ain’t hard t’see we’re way past th’time for pleasant conversations, yeah?”

Subaru: “Yeah, you’re right... I’ll just come right out and ask, then.”

Subaru nodded at Garfiel’s retort, then inhaled with a slight shake of his head, and said,

Subaru: “—Emilia’s the one doing this... isn’t she?”

Garfiel: “Got no fuckin’ idea. Either way, she ain’t coming out of the Tomb.”

Subaru: “She hasn’t come out of the Tomb?”

Subaru furrowed his brows at the unexpected reply. Seeing this, Garfiel clicked his tongue and kicked up a great chunk of snow with his foot,

Garfiel: “Th’half-devil’s been actin’ weird since th’d day y’left. I thought she’s calmed down, but then she shut herself’side the Tomb. B’fore y’know it, th’whole Sanctuary’s covered in ice— Just like Elior Forest.”

Subaru: “You know about Emilia’s...!?”

Garfiel: “Y’tthink I haven’t heard? Roswaal’s a fuckin’ bastard, but he still answers questions when needed. That’s why I ain’t trustin’ Emilia-sama one bit.”

Listening to Garfiel spit this out, Subaru’s expression darkened. Yet, before he could react, Garfiel had already closed their distance and was now standing right before his eyes.

Garfiel: “That expression’s fuckin’ pathetic.”

Subaru: “Wh—!?”

A palm shoved against Subaru’s chest, and he gracelessly fell backwards. He hurriedly tried to shield Rem with his arms, but his hands clutched at nothing. As for why that was,

Subaru: “What’re y... Rem—!”

Garfiel: “What, y’want her back? Oyoy, yer one greedy bastard. And here I thought Emilia-sama was th’girl of yer dreams.”

Having struck Subaru where it hurt, Garfiel snorted through his nose.

There, in Garfiel’s arms, was Rem’s body which he had snatched out of Subaru’s grasp. Frantically forcing his insensate body into motion, Subaru tried to grab onto Garfiel, but Garfiel leapt out of reach.

Subaru: “What’re you going to do to Rem...!”

Garfiel: “Ain’t like I’m gonna have anythin’ bad happen t’her. That’d be what yer’d call bein’ unreasonable. I’m a reasonable guy, y’know. Things that ain’t got any proper sense to ‘em make me sick.”

As he said this, Garfiel’s gaze as he looked down at Rem indeed did not carry any hostility. At very least, Garfiel’s character is not so twisted as to injure a girl whose face is identical to his sweetheart’s.

“Then why”, Subaru almost wanted to ask, but Garfiel beat him to it.

Garfiel: “You get in the tomb— And then, you pull the half-devil out.”

Arc 4 Chapter 65 - Passion in the Snow

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 4 “The Taste of Death”, Part 3

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

Forcibly dragged all the way to the Tomb, he was dumped in front of the entrance.

Be it snow or frost, Subaru spat out the sorbet-like substance that had gathered in his mouth. Mistaking the pain of his exposed skin for numbness, he looks back behind him.

Subaru: “That’s some... pretty rough treatment.”

Garfiel: “My head ain’t smart enough to be so considerate. Be glad I’m just bein’ rough with ya. ‘Less y’want me t’be rough with yer girl too?”

Puffing white breaths and looking down at Subaru on the ground, Garfiel gestured to Rem, who was still in his arms.

A hostage. Subaru wasn’t sure if that was what Garfiel intended, but it was certainly the perfect threat to coerce Subaru with.

Subaru: “Don’t you... do anything weird to Rem.”

Garfiel: “Long as ya do what I ask’d, I won’t.”

Subaru uttered quietly as he pushed himself off the thinly snow-veiled ground. Standing at his side was the Ryuzu replicant who helped carry him here, staring blankly at him. As usual, she was in her shabby robe, which seemed to be far too scant for the cold.

Subaru: “Can’t we give the girls some more clothes...? She looks so cold, I can’t bear looking at her.”

Garfiel: “Y’realize what they are, right? They can’t feel th’cold in th’first place. If yer tryin’ to buy time, I ain’t got no reason t’play along.”

Subaru: “Aw, don’t keep pointing it out. Even I know buying time won’t improve the situation in any way.”

His vision blinded by the snowstorm, Subaru followed Garfiel’s advice and turned towards the Tomb.

Amidst the world of white, he could faintly make out the ruin of stone. Even in this raging phenomenon of nature, Echidna’s tomb stood calmly, eerily waiting for its next challenger.

And Emilia would be inside.

Subaru: “How long has Emilia been in there?”

Garfiel: “She went in th’night before last, it’s been two days now. Honestly, I couldn’t care less as long as she ain’t dead.”

Subaru: “From your position, I can see how that’s the case... So you didn’t try to go in and bring her out yourself?”

Garfiel: “I can’t go in th’Tomb. Part of the Contract.”¹³²

That intriguing reply pretty much summed up the whole of Garfiel’s position. Subaru wasn’t sure just to what extent the Sanctuary’s residents knew about this, but Garfiel had definitely been inside the Tomb. He met Echidna and was granted the influence of an Apostle of Greed, as well as the qualification to hold the command rights over the Ryuzu clones.

But why he would keep it a secret and postpone the liberation of the Sanctuary was beyond Subaru.

Subaru: “Once I go inside and ask Echidna herself... guess I’ll find out.”

Garfiel: “Quit mumblin’. I told ya to get in there. Drag that half-devil out and get her to stop makin’ all this snow. Otherwise I’ll be forced to do somethin’ I don’t wanna do.”

¹³² Note by SummaryAnon: “Double meaning. The Japanese can simultaneously mean «I’ve made an agreement not to».”

Garfiel slightly lifted Rem in his arms and let out a menacing smile. That smile didn't suit him at all, but Subaru knew Garfiel as a person who carries out his threats. Regardless of what his true intentions were, as long as it serves to protect the Sanctuary, he would easily turn his claws on a girl with the same face as the one he loved.

Subaru: "Don't do anything to Rem— That's my condition."

Garfiel: "...Just go."

Blown by the frigid wind, Subaru left these words with the coldest voice he could muster, and began walking towards the Tomb. Behind him, Garfiel watched him as he went.

His true motives were still unknown, but Subaru remembered that there was something he had forgotten to tell him.

He had forgotten to tell Garfiel about his sister Frederica's death.

The only explanation he could think of was that the cold and rage had gotten to his head.

Right now, was he still sane? If he was sane, then how?

He let Petra die, he doubted Frederica's innocence, and he returned to the Sanctuary to find this. His relationship with Garfiel was at its worst, and he had no idea whether the others in the Sanctuary were safe.

Continuing on in these atrocious circumstances, how could he be sane?

He mustn't stop thinking. He mustn't give in. He must look forward, look upward, grasp for a future worth grasping, and take on every burden he must bear.

Otherwise, what would Subaru—

Subaru: "——"

The claps of his faltering steps struck upon the Tomb's dry floor.

Unlike the outside, in here, he could barely feel the reach of the raging cold. It was as though the cold had been barred from entering this place, but that would only be an illusion, and the reality was that it was merely diminished.

As Subaru stepped into the Tomb, the mechanism for welcoming those who were qualified activated, and the dim lamps of the dark corridor came alight.

The murky lights lining the walls invited Subaru into the depths, and, with the sensation of all the blood in his body freezing, Subaru drove his limbs to venture inside.

And, at the end of what felt like a long, long passage, he arrived at a room.

The room where the First Trial took place, where they faced their past. Arriving here at last,

Emilia: “—Subaru?”

Like the ring of a silver chime, Subaru was welcomed by that tender, long-awaited voice.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru heard his name in the darkness and saw a figure directly in front of him.

Just as his eyes began to adjust to the darkness of the ruins, her long, silver hair and her alluring, amethyst eyes flooded into his sight, and Subaru couldn't help but call out her name.

Subaru: “Emilia.”

Emilia: “Yes. Yeah, Subaru... It's me.”

Pronouncing those four short syllables and hearing her reply, Subaru felt his body on the verge of collapsing.

It might seem like an overreaction, but that was simply the weight of his overflowing emotions.

Fatigue, exhaustion, and the sense of loss.

All these sensations tormented Subaru, and yet, it was only when he stood in front of Emilia that his knees gave way to the emotions that he had forbidden himself to notice.

His body tilted forward, about to fall, but two arms reached out and caught him. Their touch was soft and warm. He looked up, and saw her fair, beautiful face looking back at him. For a moment, he held his breath, and forgot where he was.

Right now, he was only resting in Emilia's tender embrace.

Subaru: "Ah, s—sorry... I felt weak all of a sudden..."

Emilia: "It's alright. I'm not suspecting you of doing it on purpose or anything. But even if it was on purpose, I still would've caught you."

Cutting off Subaru's excuse, Emilia closed off his escape.

Rather than chiding him, she gently consoled him. For this, Subaru breathed a deep sigh of relief— But it was only then that he noticed something strange about Emilia.

Emilia looked the same as usual. Gentle, calm, a little aloof, full of compassion, and cute with a somewhat childish charm— none of it had changed.

She was the same, usual Emilia from the peaceful days they spent in Roswaal's mansion.

This was not the ordinary for an Emilia who had failed to conquer the Trials and been cornered by her feelings of duty.

Subaru: "E—Emilia... while I was gone, uh..."

—Did something happen to change your mind?

Subaru carefully chose his words, intending to ask that question.

But before the words could escape his lips, she softly murmured,

Emilia: "—Lonely."

Subaru: "...Huh?"

Failing to catch Emilia's whisper, Subaru furrowed his brows and asked her to repeat it.

He could see her beautiful, silver visage just by turning up his face. Staring into her eyes from a distance close enough to feel her breath, this time, Subaru would not miss a single word.

Meeting his gaze, Emilia continued,

Emilia: "I was so lonely, Subaru— When you left me."

Subaru: "Ah... No, it's... not like that. I was never going to abandon you..."

Emilia: "———"

Subaru: "I'm sure I said this in the letter too, but... there was something I had to do. So I couldn't be with you for a while. I am so sorry for making you feel lonely, Emilia. I made you feel like that, but I that thing I had to do, I wasn't even able to do properly, and..."

Emilia: "Pff... Huhu."

Resting under Emilia's gaze, Subaru frantically tried to explain himself. But before he could finish, as if she couldn't hold it in any longer, Emilia burst out laughing.

When he saw this, Subaru couldn't help but doubt his eyes. They were in the middle of a conversation, and in such dire circumstances, why did Emilia burst out laughing?

What was so funny? Besides, Emilia was never the kind of girl to do this.

Emilia: "Even if you don't try sooooo hard to explain, I won't get mad at you. Geez Subaru, even your face is turning pale... Pffffhuhu."

Subaru: "E—Emilia...?"

Emilia: "It's alright, Subaru. You left a letter for me. After thinking really really reeaally hard, you wrote it for me. I felt so lonely, and I thought I was going to cry, but... I just read that letter over and over again."

Weaving those adorable words with her lips, Emilia's smile deepened.

In that enchanting, lovable smile is a sweet whisper near clutching Subaru's heart. Learning that Emilia had valued his letter, and had even used it as a mental support, could almost make Subaru's heart soar with fiery passion.

But, keeping his consciousness from being swept away by tides of passion was the sickening foreboding in his chest.

Something was wrong. Something was strange. The sense of awryness that he had felt from the start had never left him.

What is it? Something wasn't right. Even when Emilia was so adorable in this instant.

Even though Emilia was answering him so sweetly.

Subaru: "Emilia... how did the Trial go?"

Emilia: "The Trial..."

Subaru: "Yeah, the Trial. That's why you came in here, right? I'm sorry you had to endure it alone. I want to apologize, but I also want to know what happened. Even if you failed, I won't care, but the fact that you're like this tells me..."

Emilia: "Failed. I failed, you know? I couldn't overcome the First Trial, my past. And all this when you were expecting from me, and worried about me, I'm sorry."

Subaru: "Ah..."

Subaru regretted allowing that groan to escape his throat. To Emilia, that voice must have sounded like disappointment just now. In that case, it'd be no different than an immediate betrayal of his words, right after he assured her "I won't mind".

The thought overwhelmed him with remorse, when suddenly, he felt a soft, smooth touch against his head.

Emilia slid her fingers through Subaru's short black hair, and gently stroked his head with her palm.

Unable to understand the meaning of her gesture, Subaru blinked as if in a daze. Emilia smiled as she saw his surprised expression, and a touch of red flushed onto her cheeks.

Emilia: “Subaru, you always want to touch my hair, right? So, I want to occasionally do it to you, too. Hehe, Subaru’s so vulnerable right now...”

Subaru: “Em... ilia...?”

Emilia: “If you really abandoned me, and left just like that, whatever would I do... over, and over, and over, that thought’s been circling in my mind. I was really, really afraid. And so, when I saw you come back to me, I was really happy.”

Although she had just told him that she failed her Trials, right now, the only thing reflected within Emilia’s eyes was Subaru. Her eyes were feverish, and wet, and fixed upon Subaru.

How Subaru had longed for the day when she would gaze at him this way. And how he had yearned for her to call his name so warmly, and to look at him with such passionate, teary eyes.

Everything he had done up till now had been for a taste of the passion of this instant.

And that was why---

Emilia: “Subaru. Will you always stay with me? Always be with me? Because, as long as you are with me, I won’t need anything else---”

Subaru never imagined that when the day came for Emilia to sing him these words of blind affection, it would frighten him so.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Holding Subaru in her arms, Emilia went on with her loving whispers.

Emilia: “At first, when I heard that Subaru was gone, I felt really hurt. I was so scared. I wondered if it was because I couldn’t do anything right... and Subaru had grown tired of me. Whenever I thought that, I’d be so terrified, I couldn’t stop my body from shaking...”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “But then, I found your letter, and I knew it was Subaru’s words, and the fear went away. Subaru is so amazing. Even though just a moment before I was still afraid, you blew away that feeling in an instant... Yeah, you’ve always helped me like this, Subaru.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “The contents of your letter made me really happy. You wrote a lot of things so that I wouldn’t worry. And it took me a reaaaaaally long time to read them. You took the time to write it for me, and all that time you were thinking about me, it made me so glad.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “In the letter, you told me you loved me a whole lot. When you said it in the dragon carriage, I was reeaally happy, so much so that I wanted to cry... And when I read it in the letter, I felt like I was really going to cry too. And then, I was thinking, I’ve received something so immense and precious... And I’ve only just realized it.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “So when I saw Subaru come back, I couldn’t help myself anymore. The little me in the deepest part of my heart was crying Subaru’s name. Then, I wanted to reach out, to touch you, and I couldn’t stop myself...”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “Say, Subaru. Sorry for everything up to now. I’ve done a lot of cruel things to you. Even when I knew what you felt about me, I made you hold it all down. That was reeaally cruel of me, I kind of realize that now.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “It must have hurt, to hold all those feelings inside. I must have been so selfish when you were trying so hard. Even though I wanted to think about you... to understand you, I couldn’t understand at all.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “But it’s different now. I’ve always been thinking about Subaru. You’re all I seem to think about. Just like how you... Um, told me that you love me, and that you’re always thinking about me... Now, maybe I... feel the same way about you too.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “I’m sorry. That was unfair just now. Even when you were scared and didn’t know what I thought, you still said it to me.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “So, I’ll... say it properly too— I want to tell you that...”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “You know, Subaru. I... love you. I really, really love you. I keep thinking about you, I’m always thinking about you, and about how I always want to be with you.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “Subaru, if you feel the same way about me... I’ll be really happy... you know.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “Ehehe. Mm, mm... love you. Subaru... I really, really love you.”

Illustration from Volume 12, coloring by DdukaE (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 66 - Crimson Snowscape

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 4 “The Taste of Death”, Parts 4-5

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

—Seeing Subaru come out of the Tomb alone, Garfiel’s hostility spiked as if stabbing into his skin.

The cold was of a different level outside the Tomb.

Contrary to the somewhat insulated warmth inside, the extreme cold of the Sanctuary sucked all the stamina and warmth out of one’s body in a matter of seconds.

An endless blizzard, and a blinding curtain of white. His exhaled breaths froze as they left his mouth, and the shivers driving into his core were almost unbearable.

Hugging his own shoulders, Subaru shuddered in front of Garfiel’s glare. And, clicking his exposed fangs, Garfiel’s attention turned to the empty corridor behind Subaru,

Garfiel: “Doesn’t look like anyone’s behind ya, oy.”

Subaru: “Yeah, she’s not coming. Emilia is inside, sleeping right now.”

Garfiel: “Sleepin’? Huh?”

Subaru: “She’s exhausted. For two days straight, she’s just been waking up to the Trials, over and over. It’s worn her down, both body and soul. And she hasn’t been eating. It’s just like her... to force herself like this.”

Again and again, forcing herself to challenge the Trials only to fail regardless, Subaru could imagine Emilia’s frustration and disappointment.

Surely, it would be the same the sense of powerlessness that Subaru himself had felt on so many occasions.

Subaru: “———”

Deep inside the Tomb, in her reprieve from the Trials, Emilia was blissfully sleeping.

The memory of Emilia’s body heat and of the warmth of their long embrace as she whispered her blind love into his ear at once sent Subaru’s blood boiling with love and longing, and left him stricken with such regret that he wanted to die.

He remembered Emilia’s flushed cheeks, her voice trembling with passion as she said all the words he had wanted to hear, and the entirety of her emotion tempting him to drown inside it.

Had a part of him considered just letting himself drown and sink into that tender depravity alongside Emilia? No one could possibly know.

After rejecting Emilia’s temptations that would have brought even Gods to their knees, Subaru walked out of the Tomb. Leaving Emilia as she slept, he had no intention of telling her about what was happening outside. And he was not about to bring her within reach of Garfiel’s malice.

But, in contrast to Subaru’s quiet determination, Garfiel’s rage showed no signs of dissipating. He kicked at the snow under his foot and clicked his bleach-white fangs,

Garfiel: “Y’didn’t drag out th’half-devil. The snow doesn’t look like it’s stoppin’. Y’didn’t bring any souvenirs and came back with nothin’ but yer stinkin’ mug. Th’fuck d’ya think yer doin’, ah?”

Subaru: “—Emilia, she... told me she loves me.”

Garfiel: “———Huh?”

Subaru’s off-beat remark might’ve been too out of place here. For a moment, Garfiel looked as if he couldn’t understand what he had just heard. But his face quickly darkened as he decided that he was being played with.

Garfiel: “Looks like the half-devil ain’t th’only one who ain’t seein’ th’situation here, hah!? Take a look where we are, and yer still bullshittin’ with me, oy!? Oyoy! Ah!?”

The heat of Garfiel's seething rage began evaporating the melted snow on his skin. And the sight of Garfiel's body swelling was no optical illusion, but the start of his transformation from human to giant tiger.

Subaru did not waver as he watched.

With the same expression as when he uttered his previous words, Subaru went on staring at him with the same dry gaze. And repeated in front of the enraged Garfiel,

Subaru: "Emilia, said that she loves me, and that all she needs is me."

Garfiel: "—Y'fuckin'..."

Subaru: "With her adorable face, her clinging voice, her tingling movements, at a distance so close that I could melt, almost touching, within range of each other's breathing... that was what she told me."

Garfiel: "So fuckin' what!? It was already obvious when y'got here that half-devil's fuckin' glued to ya. If y'wanted congratulations for y'two gettin together, rippin y'two to shreds would fuckin' do it—"

Beastial growls began mixing with his curses as Garfiel's transformation accelerated with his wrath. Ready to pounce at any moment, Garfiel jabbed his words into Subaru.

—And that was the last straw.

Subaru: "...As fucking if."

Garfiel: "Hah? Didn't hear that, y'mind repeatin'..."

Subaru: "—As fucking if Emilia would possibly tell me that she loves me!?!?"

Garfiel: "———Hk."

Subaru turned up his face and screamed.

Even Garfiel fell mute in front of this flood of emotions. Glaring at the flinching Garfiel, bearing an expression of agony, Subaru allowed his heart to erupt.

The words they shared in the Tomb, the heat of their touch, and the certainty of their love— He threw them all away. Was it painful? Of course it was painful. But, within those inseverable memories, there existed not the slightest radiance of genuine meaning.

How nice it would be, if Subaru could be foolish enough to be deceived by that counterfeit radiance. But it was Natsuki Subaru's misfortune to be incapable of being that foolish.

Subaru: "As fucking if she would say that. How could Emilia tell me that she loves me... cling to me, offer up everything to me, and tell me she needs nothing but me... That could never happen."

Garfiel: "The fuck y'goin' on about, oy?"

Subaru: "She would never lean on me this way and tell me that her feelings for me are her everything. Never— If Puck was here, there's no way she could be so utterly engrossed with me..."

He couldn't say how desperately he wished he could be placed first in Emilia's heart. But Subaru wasn't so conceited as to believe that he was nearly enough to be worthy of that place in her heart, nor did he think so little of her.

The one Emilia relied on the most, the one she would cling to till the very, very end, would always be Puck. Now that Puck would not appear before her, she was merely turning to Subaru as the secondary harbor of her reliance, nothing more.

Her confessions of love, the warmth of her fingertips, and her trembling breaths, Subaru didn't want to believe that they had all been lies.

He didn't want to— but he knew that they weren't real.

Lifting his head, Subaru glared into Garfiel. His anger seemed to have cooled, but this time, it was Subaru who bared his teeth,

Subaru: "Who was it that drove her into a corner until she had no choice but to depend on a worthless guy like me? Who made her think that she had to keep going... no matter how many times her heart had been broken, over and over! Who!?"

Garfiel: “That’s all necessary, ain’t it! That’s a choice you fuckin’ made yourself! Th’fuck’re y’tryin’ t’pin this on me... n’ the others in th’Sanctuary, hah!?”

Garfiel shot back at Subaru’s charges.

But, listening to Garfiel’s barked retort, Subaru only shook his head.

Who was it that drove Emilia into a corner? He already knew the answer without having to ask.

Subaru: “There’s no question whose fault it is... it’s my fault.”

Garfiel: “—Hah!?”

Subaru: “It’s my fault. It’s my fault that Emilia was driven into a corner. It’s my fault, it’s your fault, it’s all of your faults.”

Garfiel: “...Cut it with that bullshit. If she can’t stand th’weight and caves, ain’t that just her calibre!? If her heart’s that weak and she goes settin’ a goal that high, ain’t that just her makin’ a fuckin’ fool of herself!”

Subaru: “Yeah. You’re right. Emilia’s too gentle, so she only ever takes the pressure head-on. She never unloads her burdens on anyone else, until she crumbles— Even though that was what I was supposed to do.”

Receiving Garfiel’s rage, Subaru felt his heart growing cold just like the white snowscape around him.

“Even though that’s what I have to do”, he felt like clarifying.

Subaru: “Yeah. That’s what I have to do. That’s why I’m here... and even though I’m the one saying this, what was I doing...”

Garfiel: “Th’fuck’re y’agreein’ with yerself, oy... No, nevermind. Just, nevermind. There’s no end t’bullshittin’ with ya. «Mordoba’s thirst ain’t never get quenched». If y’can’t do it, then...”

Subaru: “You’ll go in the Tomb and bring Emilia out yourself...? You think you can actually do it?”

Garfiel: “...Th’hell’s that supposed to mean.”

Garfiel muttered this quiet threat. Though it was meant to intimidate Subaru, it only served to confirm Subaru's baseless conjecture.

Subaru: "Garfiel, I already know you're an Apostle of Greed. I know that's the only way you can be granted the command right over the Ryuzu clones."

Garfiel: "-----"

Subaru: "So it's inevitable, that being an Apostle of Greed, you must've been inside the Tomb... Or, more accurately, that you've taken the Trials."

Garfiel: "—You..."

Subaru: "You've challenged the Trials, haven't you? Though I don't know why you're so insistent on keeping it a secret. Is it because the Sanctuary's residents are forbidden to enter the Tomb? If not... then is it for Ryuzu, who entered the Tomb to save you?"

Garfiel: "-----Agh."

Garfiel's complexion changed.

After all, family was Garfiel's sore spot. Watching his expression shift to a color of agony, Subaru continued weaving his conjectures as he spoke.

Subaru: "Frederica told me about how you went inside the Tomb. And I heard that Ryuzu went in as well."

Garfiel: "That... fuckin' snitch...! Just leavin' ain't enough for her, she had to pander to th'fuckers outside... Tch."

Subaru: "What, would it be so bad if a certain someone caught wind of this? Come to think of it, who was it that made this Contract with the residents, anyway? Was it the Witch Echidna who, created this Sanctuary? If so, then have the residents of the Sanctuary been upholding a Contract with the dead all this time?"

Garfiel: "Don't y'fucking—!"

“—go any further”, Garfiel kicked into the ground, becoming one with the wind as he flew towards Subaru. Aiming his claws that could shred through steel directly at Subaru’s face—

Subaru: “—The one making the snow fall is Roswaal.”

Garfiel: “———”

Hearing Subaru strike the core of the matter, Garfiel’s claw stopped just inches from his face.

Watching a look of stupefaction rising onto Garfiel’s expression, Subaru nodded.

Subaru: “It’s not Emilia. Without Puck here, Emilia couldn’t do this by herself. Even if, on the million-to-one chance that Emilia was the one who caused this, there’s no way that girl could hide it from me with such perfection.”

Garfiel: “That’s... just yer wishful thinkin’...”

Subaru: “You’re right, but I can only believe. That girl, even if she’s completely abandoned herself, she’s not the kind of girl who’d throw a tantrum and hurt everyone around her... I just believe that.”

It may be a suspect he had arrived at through the process of elimination. But it was certainly not a baseless accusation.

Subaru: “The one binding you all to the Sanctuary... is Roswaal, isn’t it?”

Garfiel: “Y’heard that from Frederica too?”

Subaru: “Of course not... It’s me putting together information and circumstantial evidence, and then having enough preconceptions and enough of a bad impression that I don’t mind making false accusations— But looks like I was right.”

Garfiel: “———”

As Garfiel fell silent, Subaru exhaled a white sigh.

—It was just the exhaustion of finding out that the person he suspected of being the mastermind was really the mastermind. But, even if he knew that Roswaal was the one conspiring behind the scenes, he still didn't know why he would oversee a Contract that was trapping the Sanctuary's residents here, and why he would be tormenting them with this snow. No matter how much Subaru thought, he couldn't find a plausible answer. In that case,

Subaru: "Guess we'll just take a few shots at that smug face of his."

Listening to Subaru mutter this full of resolve, Garfiel dropped his arms.

And Subaru could tell that Garfiel's face was painted with the same emotions as his own.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Roswaal: "—Weeell now, you two ceeertainly look aaangry."

Laying on the bed in his allotted residence, Roswaal greeted Subaru and Garfiel with these words, cheerfully smiling in his usual clown makeup.

Subaru: "Yeah. I'm super pissed right now. And this one over here wants to jump on you this very minute, you know? So you might wanna be careful what you say."

Standing there blocking the doorway, Subaru spread out his arms and nudged his chin at the person beside him. On the other end of his gesture was Garfiel, who was quietly growling.

The sound of his bestial breathing was proof that he was using the last of his rationality to maintain his human form. Although they were indoors, the coldness had penetrated the masonry of the walls and passed inside. Both Subaru and Roswaal were breathing white, while only Garfiel's were bordering on red from the sheer heat of his breaths.

Roswaal: "This is an iiinteresting pairing, no? I was sure I remember Garfiel saying something about riiipping Subaru in two when he comes back?"

Garfiel: "Things've changed a bit. I'll have to put off decidin' who t'crush into paste 'till I figure out what's true or not."

Subaru: “Don’t say such scary things so naturally. Roswaal too, you shouldn’t accept that kind of scary statement like it’s normal, you know.”

Subaru’s exchange with Garfiel as he left the Sanctuary for the mansion had left him with a deep sense of self-loathing. Unable to forget that humiliation, Garfiel’s resentment towards Roswaal and Emilia wasn’t too difficult to understand.

Seeing Subaru furrow his brows, Roswaal shook his head with “Noo noooo”, as he turned his single yellow eye between Subaru and Garfiel,

Roswaal: “I was simply telling it as it iis, Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “Sounds like I’m pretty despised. I’m hurt, Ros-chi. Weren’t you gonna do anything even if Garfiel ate me up?”

Roswaal: “Aaaya aya, now isn’t that too hard on yourself? If Subaru-kun went head-to-head with Garfiel, I’m not so sure that Garfiel would come out on tooop?”

Subaru: “You think I have a chance? If you heard my combat record you’d be shaking in your boots, you know.”

Ever since being summoned to this parallel world, Subaru had just been constantly taking damage, with barely a single combat victory to his name. He did manage to beat up the weird trio in the alley, kill a few Wolgarms, and finish off the dying Petelgeuse, but that was about it.

Subaru: “Actually, that’s a lot better than I thought... but if I’m pitted against a pissed-off Garfiel, I won’t last two seconds before I get turned into meat cubes. I can at least see that much.”

Roswaal: “I wonder. Perhaps, under the right conditions, you could put up a good fiiight, I think.”

Narrowing his eye, Roswaal looked Subaru up and down as he spoke. Unfortunately, no matter how Subaru tried to reflect on those words, he just couldn’t seem to agree.

Subaru shrugged and decided to set Roswaal’s statements aside for now, while almost simultaneously beside him, Garfiel stomped down his foot, shattering the floorboard beneath it.

Garfiel: “None’a that crap matters right now! Ain’t there somethin’ more important here, hah!? Are y’two assholes asleep?”

Leaving a deep footprint in the center of the floor, Garfiel bared his fangs and shouted at Subaru and Roswaal.

He didn’t seem too fond of their little sparring match before moving into the main topic. But then again, it didn’t suit Subaru too well either. Following Garfiel’s prompt, Subaru gave a single nod, and,

Subaru: “You’re the one making it snow outside, aren’t you, Roswaal?”

He cut straight to the chase.

Roswaal: “———”

Hearing Subaru’s question, Roswaal closed his mouth.

Subaru followed suit, and quietly waited for Roswaal’s answer. Silence descended on the room, as the only sounds audible were the howls of the freezing wind outside the window, and the steady clockwork rhythm of Garfiel’s clicking fangs.

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “Yeah?”

Roswaal: “—Did you hear that from me?”

Subaru: “———”

What kind of question was that?

Subaru had run multiple simulations in his head about what Roswaal’s response might be.

Perhaps a boldfaced laugh like “Aha, you got me”, or a pathetic “W—what a ludicrous... proof, where’s your proof!”. Most likely, it would have been an evasive “I’m afraid I have no idea what you’re taaalking about”, or something along those lines.

But Roswaal’s reply was completely different from anything Subaru had imagined.

Subaru: “What? We just got here, how are you supposed to have told us? You sure you’re not confused?”

Roswaal: “Hmmm... Is that so. Is that so? Iis that so... Unfortunate.”

Despite chewing over the meaning of his words, Subaru only looked at Roswaal with an expression of non-understanding. After leaving him those words, Roswaal cast down his gaze, and let out a feeble sigh.

The side of his pallid face seemed even more devoid of strength than usual. And Subaru could see that it was not a result of his injuries, but a reflection of the state of his heart.

Roswaal: “—Iiin that case. I misspoke, I misspoke. I said something strange just now.”

Lifting his face again, Roswaal revealed a faint smile as if taking back what he had just said. Somehow, Subaru just felt like there was something off about that red-painted smile.

But, paying no heed to Roswaal’s subtle change, Garfiel stepped forward,

Garfiel: “Y’ain’t denyin’ it, oy?”

Roswaal: “Don’t you think that if I throw up a bunch of excuses when I’m already under suspicion, it’ll just sound like I’m lying? But on the other hand, my uuusual behavior hasn’t earned me any trust from you two eiiither.”

Garfiel: “So y’fuckin’ noticed? Then y’can probably guess what I’m about t’do next... Yeah!?”

Exhaling a sharp breath, Garfiel instantly erased their distance from several steps to zero.

Approaching the foot of the bed, Garfiel reached out his hand to grasp Roswaal by the throat. The split-second movement happened so fast that Subaru didn’t even have the time to call out to stop him. But,

Garfiel: “—You.”

???: “I will not permit such insolence in front of Roswaal-sama, Garf.”

Flying out of the adjacent room, Ram caught Garfiel by his torso and the wrist of his reaching hand. With his right arm restrained to his chest, Garfiel leered at Ram with a growl.

Subaru was surprised that he hadn't noticed Ram's presence in the house until now, but, with a sigh of relief, he was at least grateful that she had managed to avert needless bloodshed.

Then—

Roswaal: "Ram. You really are an excellent servant."

Ram: "Yes, Roswaal-sama—"

Subaru couldn't find anything strange about their exchange.

Ram had placed herself in harm's way to protect her master, and Roswaal praised her. There should be nothing wrong about this. Ram was simply carrying out her duty.

So where was the problem? Subaru looked up, furrowing his brows, wondering.

Standing near the door, Subaru could see Garfiel's back in front of his eyes, and Ram's delicate figure opposite him. Beyond them, was the bed which Roswaal had taken for his recuperation, but,

—Since when was Roswaal standing?

Subaru: "——"

It must have happened in an instant.

In the time it took Subaru to blink, Roswaal had stood up from his bed, and walked up to the standoff between Ram and Garfiel. And,

Subaru: "——"

What the hell is that?

Protruding out of Garfiel's back was what looked like a human arm.

Penetrating from the front of his chest to the center of his back, it had five writhing fingers, and Subaru was certain that it was someone's right arm.

Garfiel: "Hng, buh... uh."

Before his eyes, Garfiel's body violently convulsed.

Little by little, crimson blood stained into the back of his jacket as his legs dangled from his torso. With nothing to support his body, Garfiel dropped to his knees as the arm disappeared into his back.

And, having lost its plug, mass volumes of blood instantly spouted from the hole.

Garfiel: "—Ah."

Garfiel collapsed to the floor. Looking down at him, were Ram and Roswaal.

And sticking out of Ram's chest, was,

Ram: "Ros..."

Roswaal: "You truly were an excellent servant."

Ram tried to call his name in a feeble voice, but Roswaal gently interrupted her.

He tenderly stroke his left hand on Ram's peach-colored hair, while Ram seemed to accept it with a soft blush on her intoxicated expression.

—From the corner of her smile, a belated trail of fresh blood leaked out.

But of course.

Because her chest had been pierced through from behind.

The arm was drawn out. And Ram's delicate body, unable to withstand even the slightest force, fell forwards onto the floor.

But what caught her was the profusely bleeding Garfiel.

He took the collapsing Ram into his arms, and lifted her upright,

Garfiel: "Gh... Ros... Tch. R—Ram... Ram, Ram, Ram, RAMRAMRAMRAM!!"

The instant of hatred dominating his heart was drowned to nothing by the sight of the one he loved.

Over and over again, Garfiel screamed the name of the girl in his arms, roaring blood as he emitted pale-blue light from his hands. Subaru knew that vivid glow was from the channelling of healing magic. While it wasn't Garfiel's specialization, he was still capable of casting it.

Right now, despite the fatal wound through his chest, Garfiel was pouring his everything into healing Ram in his arms.

As he did so, with each beating of his heart, his body pulsed and transformed.

Fur covered over his exposed skin, his fangs began to grow, and his pupils instantly narrowed into slits. His muscles swelled by magnitudes, as his clothes burst apart from the overwhelming mass of his body.

He was transforming into that mindless tiger, and his bestial instinct to protect his body was furiously clashing with the rational human desire to save the life of the one he loved.

But,

Garfiel: "——"

Roswaal: "It would be troublesome if you were allowed to transform."

Slightly tilting his head, with these words Roswaal kicked his leg towards Garfiel.

His long, sweeping leg became wind, and smashed directly into Garfiel's skull— With the sound of an eggshell cracking, like some circus prop, Garfiel's head exploded into a spray of red.

Garfiel's body lost everything from the neck up. Blood spouted like a fountain from the severed stump of his neck, filling the room with its bloody stench as his corpse fell on top of Ram.

Underneath, the faint smile on Ram's expression remained unchanged.

Garfiel's healing magic had no effect. Ram's pulse had already ceased the moment Roswaal pulled his arm from the cavity of her destroyed heart.

Garfiel had simply failed to notice it as he wrenched out his lifeforce to save her.

Roswaal: “Eeeven I have trouble casting magic while sustaining a spell that can interfere with the weather in this magnitude— For a court magician, it really is an unsightly display.”

Roughly scraping his blood-drenched leg on the nearby bed sheet, having murdered Ram and Garfiel with his bare hands, Roswaal turned to the immobilized Subaru.

And, with a tone and bearing completely unchanged from usual, he spoke.

Roswaal: “Now— Shall we begin our talk? Natsuki Subaru-kun.”

Arc 4 Chapter 67 - Warlock

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 4 “The Taste of Death”, Part 6

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

“Incomprehensible”, was the only feedback Subaru’s mind could muster as he watched the scene unravel before his eyes.

Ram lay in a pool of blood, and, on top of her, was Garfiel’s decapitated body. Standing beside their overlapping corpses, the one who had accomplished this with his bare hands, Roswaal, was wiping blood off the hems of his garment.

Having witnessed this horrifying feat, for a moment, Subaru couldn’t believe that it was Roswaal who did this.

Roswaal L. Mathers was the representative Court Magician of the Kingdom of Lugunica, one who could control extreme-tier magic at will, and possessed combat power akin to a siege engine, or so Subaru was told.

It had been what had reached his ears. And precisely because he heard this, Subaru never imagined that Roswaal could deal such destructive power without the use of his magic.

Roswaal: “«Mages are weak in close-quarters combat» is such a preeeejudiced notion. Anyone who’s ever taken up arms against me had that naturally stuck in their heads... As to what happened to those thick-headed fools, it’s as you can clearly seeee.”

Subaru unwittingly swallowed his breath at Roswaal’s perfect reading of his unvoiced thoughts.

While Roswaal traced his finger over the specks of blood that had spattered onto his face, painting over his blue eyeliner with a shade of rouge as he smiled— Demonic, in the truest sense of the word.

Subaru: “Wh... y...”

Roswaal: “Mmmmmm?”

Subaru: “Why did you kill them... kill Ram? Garfiel was... killing Garfiel was... necessary... but...”

Roswaal: “If we were to talk alone, Garfiel would’ve gootten in the way. As for Ram, I admit that what I’ve done was inexcusable. But I am not so strong as to be able to fight Garfiel heeead-on. I was only able to kill him by catching him off guard just now.”

Which meant skewering Ram and Garfiel both.

Somehow, as he listened to Roswaal’s casual explanation of why he killed them, Subaru’s emotions shed away their rage, and his mind returned it its usual calm state.

It was a ludicrous answer to a ludicrous situation. And if Subaru allowed himself to be played in the palm of his hands, giving in to his passion would only be giving Roswaal what he wanted.

Subaru: “...”

Roswaal: “Hmmmmm, that’s unexpeeected. And here I thought you’d be angry at what I said?”

Subaru: “Well, the anger’s done a whole loop around and went back to where it started... Not saying I’m not angry, though. Naturally I am. Naturally.”

Roswaal: “Iiis that right. While that is an admirable attitude, the young Natsuki Subaru I know would be howling, mad with rage right now, if it were natural. Dooon’t you think, Natsuki Subaru-kun?”

Roswaal’s single yellow pupil locked onto Subaru’s eyes.

One would often find Roswaal closing one eye and peering his gleaming yellow pupil into his targets, just like now.

And the mere thought of finding himself reflected in that blazing, yellow eye unsettled him to no end.

Subaru: “I realize how stupid I was before, but that doesn’t mean I’ll never grow up. This isn’t a situation that could be fixed by throwing a tantrum, I know that much at least...”

Roswaal: “Nooono, that’s not what I meeeant, Subaru-kun. Subaru-kun. Natsuki Subaru-kuuun.”

Roswaal stroked his unbloodied left hand through his navy-blue hair as he prodded Subaru with that infuriating address.

But even as the repugnant intonation drove an indescribable sensation into his chest, Subaru did not back down. Instead, he took a step forward, glaring into the clown’s face.

Subaru: “What are you trying to say?”

Roswaal: “What am I trying to say... if that’s what you’re asking, then this is how I’ll answer—Congratulations, and welcome. I’ve been waiting. For you to finally stand there before me.”

Subaru felt a chill like damp fingertips creeping down his spine.

In front of him, true to his word, Roswaal watched him with a look of sheer delight. That attitude, that delight, all gave Subaru an incomprehensible sense of disgust.

Roswaal didn’t appear sarcastic at all, instead seemed genuinely overjoyed for Subaru. The only problem was the inexplicable nature of his elation and of his words.

Subaru: “You’ve been waiting... for me to stand here?”

Roswaal: “Not in this particular spot in this particular room. Thaaat would be too literal of an interpretaaation. I’m sure you can understand how that is not what I meant. After all, you are the only one who should be capable of understaaanding.”

Subaru: “I’m the only one... who could understand?”

Little-by-little, it was as though the pieces were falling into place. Slowly but surely, though hesitating as he linked them, the final picture began to take shape.

The moment he grasped its meaning, “No way”, the thought pierced through his mind.

Roswaal: “Dooo you understaaand, Subaru-kun? Why is it that, when you’ve just witnessed two deaths before your eyes, you could remain so calm and keep yourself from falling into uncontrollable rage...? In fact, I’m sure you knooow why.”

Subaru: “———”

Roswaal: “Their deaths didn’t hit you with any great impact. You were shocked to see them die. There might’ve even been some reeeeeeeentment. But you felt no grief. And that is why you could not turn your anger against me, or striiike me with your fists.”

Listening to Roswaal reading him like a book, Subaru opened his mouth to object, but closed it again, unable to say a thing.

“What would you know!?”, “You think I don’t care about their deaths!?”, “How could you murder Ram and Garfiel, you monster!”. Countless rebukes came to mind.

In truth, the impulse to let his emotions explode had surged up many times inside him, each threatening to fly out of his throat, only to dissipate and fade to nothing.

He was enraged. He was shocked. He was in grief, or at least he should be.

But even so, Subaru had no words to refute Roswaal, because——

Roswaal: “——Because it can all be recovered. Isn’t that what’s going through your miiiiiiiiind?”

Subaru: “You——”

An involuntary shiver froze up his throat, gripping his heart. Without resorting to metaphors, he really felt the illusion of something clutching at his heart, so great was the shock.

Lifting his head, Subaru instinctively looked around the room, dreading that the black hand might appear to punish his trespass. This would be his first punishment since rejecting the Witch of Envy. What horror would that shadow bring at its return? Just the thought of it strangled his heart with such twisting pain that it felt like it might break. But,

Subaru: “—It didn’t come...”

Roswaal: “I wouldn’t know what you’re so wary of, but... Aaaaah, I’m sure it must have something to do with your coocontract? Iii see. That would explain the peculiarities of your words and actions up to now. I think I understand.”

Subaru: “Understand... No, before that...!”

Watching Roswaal hold his chin as he nodded, Subaru’s face turned pale as his lips trembled. Roswaal’s statement just now had no doubt struck upon Subaru’s core, and the fact that it struck meant that—

Subaru: “You... kno... know about me...!?”

Roswaal: “As far as it does not deviate from what is written, yes— You possess the power to redo. Iiisn’t that right?”

Without a shadow of a doubt, Roswaal confessed his knowledge of Return by Death.

Subaru swallowed his breath and immediately noticed the danger of the situation.

The conditions were now exactly the same as at Echidna’s tea party.

If he allowed Roswaal to continue talking about Return by Death like this, the disaster where the Sanctuary was engulfed by shadows would only be repeated.

In fact, he wouldn’t be surprised if the Witch snatched him this very instant.

Drawing the breath into his stomach and releasing it in a deep exhale, Subaru confirmed that time hadn’t stopped.

That is to say, the Witch hadn’t grasped his heart as punishment. This ruled out the possibility which, as unbearable as it may be, would also have been the safest. While the other possibility—

Roswaal: “—Silence is as good as proven admission, that is a phrase I wonder just whoooo left to the ages.”

Plunging his thoughts into risk aversion, Subaru forced his mind to turn at an incredible speed, but Roswaal, apparently growing tired of waiting, interrupted with those words.

This confession just now must have held some rather large significance to Roswaal as well.

Seeing Subaru ignore him without saying a word, Roswaal furrowed his brows in a rare sign of displeasure.

Roswaal: “Weeell, the fact that you’re not deenying it as some absurd assertion does say a lot about your hooonesty.”

Subaru: “I—”

Roswaal: “Ooooho, that’s fine. It is one thing for me say it, but there could be some unpleasant consequences if you were to confirm it. That was why you were never able to say it out loud, iisn’t it? Although...”

Stopping Subaru at the first syllable, Roswaal continued until his voice abruptly trailed off.

Seeing Subaru biting his lip, Roswaal cast him a glance with a revolting smile,

Roswaal: “Perhaps, you were also afraid of what they’d think of you if you tooold them?”

Subaru: “———Guh.”

Roswaal: “It is only naaatural. Aaafter all, the power to rewind the world is an outrageous and teeerrifying thing. Interference with time is the absolute pinnacle of the pinnacle of Yin magic. Even Beatrice, exhausting all her strength, could only bring it to a stall. But to reverse it would surely be a dream wiiiithin a dreeeam.”

Unable to refute a thing as he listened to Roswaal read into his genuine repressed fears, Subaru’s face stiffened as he suddenly heard Beatrice’s name. With Elsa’s blade plunged into her back, the final expression on her face as she vanished from existence was still vivid in his mind.

Roswaal: “——Judging from your reaction, it would seeem that Beatrice had fulfilled her roooooole...”

Subaru: “Her role... What would you... but, yes.”

As the conversation moved away from Return by Death, Subaru took the opportunity to rein in his unsettled thoughts and redirected his attention to take a bite out of Roswaal’s unruffled face.

Did this man even know about Beatrice’s lonely cries?

Subaru: “You knew how she’s been suffering... didn’t you? Bound to that mansion, clinging to a promise made in some ancient Contract... letting herself be worn to the core, huddling in a corner, you knew all of this, didn’t you!?”

Roswaal: “Ooof course I knew. Beatrice and I have knooown each other for a very long time. Since I was born, in fact. There is a loneliness in her heart, I’ve aalways known this.”

Subaru: “Then...!”

Roswaal: “Why didn’t I do anything about it? Iii would rather you did not say that. There is no one who can relieve her of her sadness other than herself, I’m sure you understaaand this?”

Just as Subaru was on the verge of screaming, he was struck down by Roswaal’s irrefutable reasoning.

Subaru could have screamed out his accusations at Roswaal just so he could hear a fragment of Beatrice’s sorrow. Although he could have, the fact was that it would’ve been meaningless.

Beatrice was already dead, and no one could heal her of the sadness of her heart.

Only Subaru, who possessed the means to rewind the world, could be there in her final moments as many times as it would take. But how was he supposed to heal four-hundred years of sorrow?

Four-hundred years— not even Subaru could reach back that far.

Watching Subaru fall silent, Roswaal slightly shook his head. Then, he said,

Roswaal: “How I eeenvy her.”

Subaru: “—Envy, her?”

Subaru repeated, pressing his voice low. But, paying it no mind, “Yes...”, Roswaal went on, nodding,

Roswaal: “How enviable it is. Beatrice fulfilled her long-cherished wish and disappeared. The fact that you are here means exaaactly that, no?”

Subaru: “Cherished... wish? She... died... like that... and you’re telling me that’s her long-cherished wish!? Are you seriously saying that!?”

Roswaal: “It was nothing more than what Beatrice desired, no? What right would we have to criticize what someone else holds dear? Neither you, nor I, have the right to sully Beatrice’s death.”

Sensible words, and impeccable logic. It was true, that they had no right.

Subaru and Beatrice may as well have been strangers. He had never understood her wish, and he never even once considered fulfilling it.

But, even so, was that really what Beatrice wanted?

—If it was, then why did she protect Subaru at the very end?

Roswaal: “Beatrice’s long-cherished wish had been fulfilled. For that, I truly envy her— Since it seems that I would no longer be able to fulfill mine.”

Subaru: “———”

There was something strange about the way he phrased it.

Subaru couldn’t tell where, or why. But it was certainly there.

Subaru: “And what is... your wish...?”

Roswaal: “I cannot say. My Contract forbids me from revealing it, and that is as much as I can say. What I have told you is already pushing the limit of what I can compromise with the Contract. But, I can tell you this.”

Subaru: “———”

Roswaal: “To see that my wish is fulfilled, I have always, always, always, always devoted my utmost. Not a single action I have taken was without purpose, and not a single one do I regret.”

Roswaal shamelessly declared without the slightest hint of remorse.

Stunned by his audacity, a black rage began boiling in Subaru’s chest.

It was a begrudging rage that was the cumulation of all the severed emotions that had built up inside him. But, although it was there, he did not lose himself in it.

Subaru: “Necessary...? Killing Ram and Garfiel, burying the Sanctuary in snow, everything... You’re saying that it was necessary...?”

Roswaal: “Hmm, as for the former... no, that would put a damper on this conversaaation. But as for the latter, yes, would be my aaanswer.”

Subaru: “For what!?!?”

Baring his teeth, Subaru swung his arms, shouting.

Subaru: “Why the hell are you doing this!? Making snow fall on the Sanctuary, tormenting the residents like it’s some sick joke... What’re you trying to accomplish!? What’s the point in doing that!? Why don’t you come out and say it! Roswaal!!”

Roswaal: “It’s entirely obvious—— To isolate Emilia-sama.”

Subaru: “——Wh... at?”

Roswaal: “I will say it again. Snow falls and the residents suffer. Emilia-sama is isolated, and descends into an unsettled state of mind. Isn’t that what happened?”

Roswaal spoke as if he had seen it himself. Indeed, Emilia’s condition inside the Tomb was exactly as Roswaal envisioned. But Subaru had no intention of admitting this.

More importantly, Roswaal’s statement just now was by far the most senseless thing Subaru had heard to date.

Roswaal: “The Sanctuary is a land closely tied with the Witch, and Emilia-sama is taking the Trials to liberate it. Aaaaaat such a time, if a natural disaster were to befall the Sanctuary... just what would people think of Emilia-sama?”

Subaru: “What...”

Roswaal: “Here is where the impulsive Garfiel comes into play. He, if anyone, would be the first to doubt Emilia-sama, and to loudly proclaim it. With the volume of his voice, anyone would begin to think the same—— That Emilia-sama was the cause of this disaster.”

Roswaal's analysis was spot-on, and Garfiel had just been dancing in the palms of his hands. From the moment Subaru returned to the Sanctuary, it was already clear that Garfiel was convinced that Emilia had caused the blizzard.

Even though there was someone else who could have done it, this land, and this world, chose to direct all its hostility towards Emilia.

All thanks to the demon named prejudice that had tormented Emilia from the start.

Roswaal: "And what happens once Emilia-sama is isolated? Despite appearances, Emilia-sama is actually a terribly weak person. It'd be no wonder if she wished to entrust everything to a person who would be willing to give her approval. And if that person could support her with their entire heart and soul, then I would be satisfied."

Subaru: "Wait... wait... wait wait wait wait wai... t."

Subaru held out his arms, calling for Roswaal to stop.

He got a feeling that he had heard something outrageous just now.

Like he had just been told some absurd, impossible fact.

Like something he mustn't hear was—

Roswaal: "You cannot turn yourself away if Emilia-sama relies on you. Of course not, since you love her. If your beloved Emilia-sama were to entrust everything to you, there is no way you could push her aside."

Subaru: "That—"

Would never happen.

At least it shouldn't.

But the fact was that, in this very loop, Subaru had managed to keep himself from drowning within Emilia's clinging embrace. He had withstood it and left her to come here.

It wasn't that he rejected the temptation of Emilia's loving whispers. It was because he knew that she didn't truly mean it, and that her fallen engrossment was merely—

Roswaal: “«That wasn't the case this time», is that how you wanted to answer? I can only say that is unfortunate. I suppose you just have a few too many superfluous things about you right now.”

Roswaal took a single, silent step towards the confounded Subaru. Hearing the sound of a splash from his foot stepping into the pool of blood, Subaru's body inadvertently froze. A groan escaped his throat,

Subaru: “Are you, going to kill me—?”

Roswaal: “Kill you, now thaaat would be a rather viiiolent idea. I would be quite troubled if you died. Since, one way or another, I will need you to rewind the woorld.”

Subaru: “Hh—?”

For a moment, Roswaal's words as he approached stunned Subaru into silence.

But he immediately noticed the discrepancy in his understanding.

Roswaal knew that Subaru could rewind time, but he didn't know that it was through Return by Death, with death acting as the trigger.

Thus, his intention was to corner Subaru so that he would willingly choose to rewind. Although, that would likely involve far more agony than if he was instantly killed.

If Roswaal had no intention of killing Subaru, then there was still a chance.

Subaru: “—Everyone! Inside now!!”

Raising his hand, Subaru shouted.

The instant Roswaal furrowed his brows, the room's doors and windows, as well as those of the adjacent living room, simultaneously shattered. And flying in alongside the frigid wind, were small, scrawny shadows, numbering twenty in all— each of them a little girl with light-pink hair.

Seeing the assembly of identical girls lined up in a row, Roswaal turned his single eye towards Subaru,

Roswaal: “And here I thought the command right was transferred back to Garfiel?”

Subaru: “We were venturing into the maybe-mastermind’s den, after all— Of course we had to bolster the cards in our hand.”

—The exchange took place after his argument with Garfiel outside the Tomb.

After persuading Garfiel to go on ahead, Subaru went to the crystal room and transferred the command right back to himself.

Then, he ordered the Ryuzu clones to surround the building where Roswaal was convalescing and to prepare to break inside in case of emergency.

Rem, who had temporarily been Garfiel’s hostage, was entrusted to the current representative Ryuzu Meyer, who brought her to the cathedral, where the rest of the residents and Arlam villagers had taken refuge.

He had taken all these measures on the assumption that Roswaal was the culprit.

—Although, naturally, Subaru never anticipated that Roswaal would kill Garfiel and Ram.

Roswaal: “So, what do you wish to do, now that you haaave me surrounded?”

Subaru: “The fact that you’re that strong with your bare hands was a surprise, but you’re outnumbered. If a single beastified Garfiel could give you trouble, you’ll probably have a hard time when you’re swarmed...”

The reason Roswaal skewered Ram along with Garfiel was because he wasn’t confident facing Garfiel in direct combat. And although there was no question that Roswaal was infinitely stronger than Subaru—

Subaru: “Twenty of them should be about enough to overwhelm you. We’ll beat you up, pin you down, and make sure you spit out everything that you’re still hiding.”

Roswaal: “You should know how important it is to uphold the terms of one’s Contract, being bound by siiimilar ones yourself?”

Subaru: “Too bad, mine was kinda one-sided forced on me without me having any say in the matter and just punishes me whenever I violate it. This time it hasn’t come though, so I’m still in the safe-line!”

With over twenty people crammed inside, the small house was packed to the brim.

Obedying Subaru’s signal, the emotionless Ryuzu replicants surged towards Roswaal as a sea of faces.

Meeting their charge with his bare hands, Roswaal could only handle two at a time. His manipulation of the weather outside had become his own downfall. Deprived of the use of his magic, Roswaal would only be swarmed by sheer numbers.

Subaru figured that while it would be close, victory was assured. However,

Roswaal: “—I may be outnumbered.”

Subaru: “———”

Roswaal: “But when your opponent is a mage, trying to overpower him with sheer numbers is just an overly foooolish decision.”

At the fall of his voice, an infernal flame swept through the room, and every Ryuzu Meyer replicant caught in its path was scorched to their core.

In the matter of an instant, their small, charging bodies were incinerated from head to toe by the wall of flames, reduced to ash and to the Mana from whence they came.

All this, in Subaru’s eyes, was nothing more than a momentary wave of heat and light that had flashed across the room.

Subaru: “How’re you... still using magic...?”

Roswaal: “I wouldn’t have been able to if I was still controlling the weather. Unfooortunately, I have already lost any reason to sustain this snowfall. So it’s been a while since I’ve stopped. Sorry, I suppose I should’ve told you eaaarlier.”

Subaru: “Wh—Guh, kha.”

In Subaru's moment of confusion, Roswaal flashed forward and took him by the throat. He didn't know where those slender wrists had gotten that kind of strength, but he felt his legs leaving the ground as Roswaal lifted him writhing into the air.

Subaru: "Kgh—!"

Crashing backwards through a half-shattered windowpane and out of the building, Subaru landed in the snow, rolling until he was stopped by a wall.

Spitting out the mixture of mud and snow in his mouth, he lifted his face.

The remaining Ryuzu replicants quietly followed Roswaal out of the building. Since they were given no further orders, they appeared at a loss as to what to do.

But Subaru was just as lost as to what to tell them.

Roswaal: "Even after all this, you have yet to rewiiind... Ooor, perhaps you already have? Come to think of it, what happens to my consciousness when the redo occurs is still a complete mystery to me. Now, this is quiiite the predicament."

Walking over to Subaru's side, Roswaal tilted his head.

Looking up at the clown's face amidst the suffocating pain, an abrupt question escaped Subaru's lips.

Subaru: "Ros... waal... you keep on asking me to rewind over and over, but..."

Roswaal: "Mm? You have something impooortant to say? Let's hear it, let's hear it."

Subaru: "You're the one I've got a problem with here. Doing all this on the assumption that someone else has the ability to rewind the world... You must be out of your mind... Unless, you actually have..."

A way to carry over your memories?

Could Roswaal also have the ability to read the memories of the previous worlds, just like Echidna in her Citadel of Dream?

If not, then his blind desire to reset the world would just be far too incomprehensible.

Subaru: “If not... that’s fine. But, if you do... perhaps you and I... could...”

Collaborate, maybe.

Roswaal’s goals were mysterious and unknown, and he had done many unforgivable things. Subaru would never forgive him for the murder of Ram and Garfiel, or the way he had cornered Emilia. But Subaru was in no position to discard Roswaal’s strength out of emotion. In fact, he needed it badly.

If you’re going to eat poison— or however that saying goes, assuming it applies here, Subaru was also prepared to lick the plate.

Roswaal: “—It seems, that is nooot to be.”

But Subaru’s thin sliver of hope was severed by a shake of Roswaal’s head.

Roswaal turned away from Subaru’s downcast eyes, and pointed towards the end of his gaze,

Roswaal: “Goa.”

A small flame rose and set the corner of the forest where Roswaal was looking at alight. Subaru blinked at the abrupt act of destruction, when he heard, amidst the noise of crackling wood, yet another sound.

—It was the sound of a small, small animal dying.

Subaru: “—No, way.”

Roswaal: “lil see... So this is how the end comes.”

Springing to his feet, Subaru’s face paled as he scanned his surroundings. Simultaneously, Roswaal shifted his posture, and with several crisp snaps of his fingers, the scent of burning flesh and shrill, ear-splitting cries coursed throughout the Sanctuary.

Then, when a charred corpse landed in front of his eyes with a thud, Subaru clearly understood.

Subaru: “The Great... Rabbit...!!”

It was one of the Great Rabbits.

As they began slowly trickling out of the forest, Roswaal burned them one-by-one with his magic. And even as they came in droves, they remained Roswaal's prey.

No matter how great their numbers grew, they could gain no ground against Roswaal. Witnessing this, a terror gripped Subaru's heart and would not let go.

Every time he closed his eyes, the memory of being eaten by razor sharp teeth would be revived. The sense of loss, the experience of having his fingers, body, and organs ripped to shreds was beyond description.

Subaru could hear his very soul shrieking at the sight of the Witchbeasts' approach.

Subaru: "But this is only the fifth day... there should still be half a day left!"

Roswaal: "It's the snow."

Subaru: "Snow—!?"

Roswaal: "Where there is magic powerful enough to manipulate the weather, naturally, the atmosphere would be oversaturated with Mana. Not to mention that everyone in the Sanctuary has gathered inside the cathedral thanks to the snow. For a nearby Witchbeast, this is an all too enticing feeeeeding ground."

"Then...", Subaru shuddered at Roswaal's quiet observation.

Following his logic, the single most dangerous place in the Sanctuary during the Great Rabbits' attack would be—

Subaru: "Th—the cathedral! We have to hurry to the cathedral...!"

Roswaal: "It's too late. The instant they appeared before us and our small number, it meant the arrival of those who had failed to already obtain food— Eeeeeeeveryone's gone."

Subaru: "But! That's where...!"

Rem is.

Having entrusted her to Ryuzu, that was where Rem was taken. Alongside the Sanctuary's residents and the refugees from Arlam Village, there would be over a hundred people in the cathedral.

With everyone gathered there, he didn't even want to think about it.

Subaru: "Roswaal! Truce! Anyway, let's get to the cathedral! We'll collect the survivors, just get them somewhere sa..."

Subaru rushed up to Roswaal, grabbed him by the collar and screamed. But Roswaal gently pushed Subaru arms away,

Roswaal: "Flee? Where, exactly? There is a barrier. The people of the Sanctuary cannot flee."

Subaru: "Th—that's..."

Roswaal: "There wasn't enough time, Subaru-kun. The residents of the Sanctuary cannot leave unless the Trials are overcome. That is to say, your wish will not be granted."

Collapsing, Subaru fell rear-first into the snow.

Shuffling against themselves, the Ryuzu replicants gathered around the fallen Subaru, waiting for their next instruction in a rather humorous scene.

And only then, did Subaru notice it.

That Roswaal, who had been incinerating swathes of oncoming Witchbeasts as they appeared up to now, had completely stopped doing so.

Subaru: "R—Roswaal! If you stop... Unless you're out of mana..."

Roswaal: "Nooo no, it's no such thing? Since, in a sense, my Mana is inexhaustible. It wouldn't run out so easily... What has run out is my reason to live."

Little-by-little, white furballs began plodding out of the forest.

Leaving small pawprints in the pristine snow that was as white as their fur, they were certainly drawing closer.

Subaru: “E—even if I can rewind... this kind of... At least we should talk it through first! You might think you’re ok with leaving it to the next try, but...”

Roswaal: “You seeem to have misunderstooood something, Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Roswaal: “Even if you can rewind, I cannot. The me you meet after your rewind will not be me. This is my end— But thaaat is fine.”

Subaru was struck dumb by Roswaal’s words.

“The rewind won’t apply to me”, Roswaal admitted it himself. That is to say, Roswaal only knew that Subaru was someone who could potentially Return by Death, and his death here would mean the end of this Roswaal’s consciousness.

He had accepted it, and was nonetheless ordering Subaru to rewind, though he would no longer exist after Subaru returns. That way of thinking is just,

Subaru: “Not... how humans think at all...”

Unlike Subaru, whose consciousness would continue, Roswaal’s would not, and his death would be the end.

What kind of human would accept it without question, knowing that it would be the end?

Roswaal: “The day will come when you will truly surpass me, Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “Ro... s.”

Roswaal: “Liiisten well, Subaru-kun— This is important. The one thing that is truly, truly important to you. Cast away everything else except that one thing. Let go of everything else except that single thing, and think only of protecting your single most important thing to the end.”

Subaru: “———”

Roswaal: “If you do that——”

Roswaal raised a finger as if to lecture.

A nearby rabbit immediately leapt up and chomped down on his lifted wrist. Blood scattered, and Roswaal's right arm was gnashed to bits from the wrist, while other jaws sank their fangs into his elbows, shoulders, and all over his body with the dull creak of tearing flesh.

Subaru: "ROSWAAAAAAAAAAAAAL!!"

Roswaal: "—You too, can become like me."

The body of a rabbit with its mouth wide open blotted out the clown's smile.

The swarm of white rabbits completely covered over Roswaal's body. He fell sideways, offering no resistance as the rabbits devoured his flesh. Devoured. Devoured.

Blood sprayed, meat flung out, and the white snow was dyed crimson red. Then even the crimson snow was greedily slurped up by the rabbits without leaving a drop.

Subaru watched in silence, as Roswaal ceased to be Roswaal. Watched, as Roswaal's existence was eaten and wiped from this world.

—He went on watching.

This Roswaal was eaten by rabbits in front of Subaru's eyes. And his consciousness would not follow Subaru to the world beyond death. He may be staking his wishes on Return by Death, same as Subaru, but the weight of the toll was nowhere near the same.

Because, unlike Subaru, Roswaal could not reclaim the price he had paid.

Subaru: "—Uh, ugh."

Recalling the macabre image of Roswaal's death as he ran, Subaru was hounded by the urge to vomit.

Bile surged up, burning his throat. But he couldn't spare even the time to puke as he wandered through the Sanctuary in search of survivors.

—Hell unfolded before Subaru once again.

Snow had stopped falling on the Sanctuary, but the howling wind persisted.

Lifting his face, grimacing at the skin-shearing cold as he gazed about his surroundings, he could hear the animals' calls all around, intermixed with the wind.

Grinding, grinding, the noise of serrated teeth grinding besieged the Sanctuary as if voicing their threat to their prey.

The Great Rabbit prowled through the Sanctuary in search of their feed.

Just how terrible was the hunger and famine that assaulted them?

When they fail to find prey, as if not to waste time letting their teeth stand idle, they would stave off their hunger by biting into their companions. A true, abominable monster.

Bit-by-bit, the grating noise of gnawing teeth and their cannibalistic shrieks of death and ecstasy chipped away at Subaru's sanity.

Subaru: "—Uwa!"

While trying to shake off that appalling cacophony, the wide-open jaws of a hare shot over Subaru's head. Teeth clicked viciously upon teeth as it tumbled into the snow. Having missed its prey, the rabbit flipped around with a threatening hiss.

Immediately, a Ryuzu clone running alongside Subaru crushed her heel into the rabbit's torso.

With the sound of meat squishing and bones cracking, the rabbit puked out its body's innards from its mouth, dead. Exhaling, paying no heed to the corpse, Subaru resumed his sprint as the Ryuzu clones moved out alongside him.

Not far behind them, other rabbits arrived at the crushed corpse. Hearing the sound of the corpse devoured in an instant, the bells of doom inside Subaru rang ever louder.

Six Ryuzu clones remained at Subaru's side.

The eleven who had been present at Roswaal's death had had their numbers cut by half.

Having been ordered to protect Subaru, some had turned to face the charging rabbits, while some used their bodies to shield him before returning to Mana.

As for why he ordered the clones to protect him with their lives, Subaru had already given up trying to explain it. Right now, the only thing on his mind was the safety of Rem in the cathedral and of Emilia inside the Tomb, while all else was abandoned somewhere beyond his considerations.

That was the only way to justify his present actions, and to safeguard his own sanity.

Subaru: "Th... cathedral...!"

Avoiding the rabbit-infested roads with the snow pulling at his steps, Subaru took a large detour around the Sanctuary to reach the center of the village and the cathedral.

In a village devoid of any source of light, Subaru immediately spotted the cathedral.

But, of course.

—Since amidst this world of white, only the cathedral was enveloped in pure-red flames.

Subaru: “—Wh, y?”

Falling to his knees in the snow, Subaru muttered in a hoarse daze.

The crackling of the sprawling blaze mixed with the sound of snapping wood as Subaru watched rabbits leaping into the flame like moths, intending to eat the prey inside only to be instantly burned to a crisp.

The fact that they were so desperate to enter the cathedral meant that there was still something to satisfy their hunger inside. And the fact that there were those who remained inside the flames, meant that—

Subaru: “—”

—Deciding survival was hopeless, rather than be eaten by rabbits, they had chosen to commit suicide. Subaru wasn’t incapable of understanding this feeling. He wasn’t incapable, but,

Subaru: “Even so... could’ve resisted to the end...”

“I wish you would’ve fought on to the very end without giving up on life”. But perhaps, that was way too heartless a thought. Both Roswaal and the people of the Sanctuary had treated their lives with excessive neglect.

Nearly forgetting that he himself was most guilty of that charge, Subaru covered his face as tears streamed from his eyes.

Neither Roswaal nor Subaru had inspired enough hope for the residents of the Sanctuary and the refugees of Arlam to resist until the very end. If Subaru had managed to build that kind of trust, surely, they wouldn’t have given up until the last moment.

—Once again, everything was Subaru’s fault, and Subaru’s crime.

Subaru: “But even if... only Rem...”

...Survived? This ordering of the value of life was just the height of hubris and pride.

Mentally, Subaru called out to the clone he had instructed to take Rem to the cathedral— the current Ryuzu personality. But he could find no visible reaction indicating that she had heard it.

—Rem was inside that burning cathedral.

Or, even if they escaped, Subaru was not nearly naive enough to think that Ryuzu could have single-handedly protected Rem from the Great Rabbit as they ran.

He clenched down on his molars. There was the taste of blood.

Biting into the bloody taste, into the surging bitterness, Subaru clenched onto his decision— He should have already realized that this world was lost, and that he only wound up here because of his repeated refusal to accept it.

But now, it was truly about time to give up.

Subaru: “—”

He could hear the hunger-plagued monster approaching.

That was because the rabbits, who had abandoned the prospect of devouring any prey in the burnt cathedral, had noticed the presence of the kneeling Subaru and the Ryuzu clones surrounding him.

Standing up, brushing off the snow, Subaru spilled a deep exhale. He did not notice the sensation of the tears streaming down his cheeks. And so, he did not wipe them away.

Subaru: “Emilia...”

This world was ending.

And even if it wasn’t ending, Subaru would make sure that it ends.

In a world in which everyone he wished to be with, to live with, and to save, was gone— At least, at the very end, he wanted to be at the side of the girl he loved.

Subaru: “Use your lives... to protect me— Once I reach the Tomb... you’re free to do whatever you want.”

Subaru emotionlessly relayed to the six remaining clones. He took one step, and then another, away from the horde of rabbits, until he was running.

Sensing their prey's intention to escape, the rabbits raised an inaudible cry as they hounded Subaru's trail, drooling from their mouths.

Ryuzu: "—"

Two Ryuzu clones dived into the Great Rabbit's mass just as it was poised to leap.

It was followed by the sound of death and crushing flesh, until the two of them were surrounded by the ever-swelling swarm. In an instant, the two were completely coated in white fur and fell to their sides—
Fatally wounded, their small bodies transformed into streams of pale-blue light.

And, with their final attack, they caught the feeding rabbits in an explosion of Mana, lighting up the Sanctuary's night sky with its dancing radiance.

Sensing the clones' final burst of brilliance on the skin of his back, Subaru shook his head to cast off the ones he had deserted, gritted his teeth, and ran for the Tomb.

—And just went on running.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

By the time Subaru arrived at the Tomb, his body could no longer feel the cold.

The snow had clouded his vision, and it felt like his eyelashes were frozen, but, spilling a white breath from his shivering lips, Subaru didn't seem to care.

The only thing his heavy, leaden thoughts could envision was a single, solitary girl.

With his footsteps echoing upon the stone-tiled corridor, Subaru headed into the depths.

At the Trials room, there would be a girl whom he had put to sleep, waiting for him.

??? : "—Subaru?"

When he reached the open space, a voice like a silver chime called out his name.

Letting his feet be lured in by that voice, he entered the room. And, upon seeing him, the one who called to him raised a voice full of delight.

Emilia: “So it is you, Subaru! Geez, where did you go? I was soooo worried.”

Emilia ran up to him with skipping steps and took him by the hand.

Pouting, she pressed his hand against her chest, transferring over her tender warmth as she looked up,

Emilia: “...Are you tired?”

Subaru: “Yeah... Maybe, just a little... tired.”

Emilia: “Teehee, I see. In that case... in that case...”

Emilia giggled at Subaru’s straightforward admission, her cheeks blushing red. Then, still holding onto Subaru’s hand, she suddenly sat down on the spot. Folding her legs and sitting on her side, she pulled the half-crouching Subaru closer,

Emilia: “Here, go ahead, Subaru.”

Subaru: “...A lap... pillow?”

Emilia: “Yep. Subaru, you like my lap pillows, don’t you? That’s what you told me. I do remember these things, you know. Here, go oooooon.”

She gave her lap a pat, smiling as if both proud and embarrassed at the same time. Obediently, Subaru sat down and settled his head on her soft thighs. The moment his short hair brushed against her skin, Emilia let out an enticing “Mnnn”, but soon proceeded to stroke his head with practiced form.

Emilia: “How many times is it now, that I’ve given Subaru a lap pillow?”

Subaru: “Not sure... This is the third, I guess... Somehow, it’s always when I’m exhausted and broken.”

Emilia: “You know, Subaru, it’s fun to fiddle around with your hair and cheeks... Taaake that, fiddlefiddleeee.”

Pulling on his bangs and poking her finger into his cheeks, Emilia happily played with Subaru’s head.

Knowing that it was an expression of her affection, he didn't feel the slightest urge to push her fingers away.

In a world that was ending—for now, he just wanted to drown in Emilia's love.

—Because he had already lost most of his blood and viscera.

The goriness of Subaru's current state would make any normal person want to look away.

His back had been scoured by fangs, and one could probably see the bones if he lifted up his clothes. Profuse blood was streaming from his demolished thighs, and on his right hand, which he used to swat away the incoming rabbits, only his thumb remained intact.

Perhaps it was delusional tenacity that led his murky consciousness here. That, along with the freezing cold that had ironically dulled the sensations of his body.

Emilia: "Subaru, did you get a little lighter?"

Subaru: "I'm trying out the blood-loss diet... it's... like dump the ballast, and get lighter and light... er... Something... like that..."

Emilia: "I don't understand what you're saying, but you did something crazy for someone else again, didn't you? That's the kind of person you are, Subaru. I know that, but... I still get reeaally worried."

Subaru: "..."

Emilia: "The truth is, I only want you to do that... for me. But I know that's being selfish, and I wouldn't want to see Subaru pretend not to care about anyone else because of me... Even though that's me being selfish too... sorry."

Emilia's rapid-fire words grew distant.

Unlike the frigid cold outside, the Tomb's interior retained a certain level of warmth. This ironically restored Subaru's metabolism to its normal levels, and renewed his sedated bloodflow.

Fresh blood dyed the stone slabs red, as even more was coughed out of Subaru's mouth. Dots of splattered blood stained onto Emilia's white cheeks. But—

Emilia: “Say, Subaru, are you listening? There are so, so, sooo many things I want to tell you, and ask you. So, please. Stay with me. Listen to my voice. And let me hear yours, ok?”

Emilia didn’t seem to mind the touch of blood on her cheeks.

Or rather, she never even noticed them. Her amethyst eyes were on Subaru, and were certainly seeing him— but they simply hadn’t accepted the reality they reflected.

From the moment Subaru set out from the mansion, he was already littered with the marks of Elsa’s torture. Being dragged to the Tomb by Garfiel must have only worsened his miserable appearance.

But Emilia didn’t make note of Subaru’s wounds, or seemed at all worried.

Even now, with various parts of his body missing, eaten by rabbits, she didn’t react any differently.

Right now, Emilia wasn’t seeing reality. And perhaps, Subaru was just the same.

Subaru: “———”

He was supposed to warn Emilia of the danger and take her far away from here.

The Great Rabbit had already overrun everything outside the Tomb, and would probably rush inside at any moment. When they do, Emilia wouldn’t stand a chance.

Just like Roswaal, and the villagers who chose to die in the fire, Emilia would not escape a cruel and gruesome death.

But, even knowing this, Subaru didn’t warn her.

Because, within moments of losing his life— he couldn’t escape his selfish desire to face the end at Emilia’s side.

Roswaal’s words and grisly demise, the regret for Garfiel and Ram’s deaths, the devastation of losing Petra and Frederica, and the sense of powerlessness of his inability to save Rem and Emilia, all struck Subaru to the core.

Pain, or even the terror of death, none of it mattered anymore.

—Right now, all he wanted was to vanish from this world.

Subaru's haphazard and selfish wish would be fulfilled. The world was clouding over, while little-by-little, his consciousness and his soul fell away from this place.

Strength deserted his limbs, and the last of his sensations left his body.

All that remained, all that stayed behind, was Emilia, seemingly unaware of Subaru's departure.

Subaru: "——"

So, was he going to leave Emilia behind?

When he was the only one she could rely on, when she had lost everyone else she could depend on, was Subaru going to leave her too?

Subaru: "Ah——"

It was too late to regret it now. It was too late to do anything. Without uttering a sound, life faded from his eyes.

Emilia didn't seem to notice it, but only adorably tilted her head at Subaru, who had gone quiet. Then, she smiled, and brought her face closer——

Emilia: "Subaru——"

Subaru: "——"

She took the silent Subaru. And kissed him on the lips.

——His first kiss was of the cold taste of death.

Illustration from Volume 12, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 69 - Liar

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 5 “Ending List”, Parts 1-4

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Feeling the touch of the hard ground, cold as always, Subaru’s consciousness was pulled back to reality.

Lying flat on his stomach, he opened his eyes and pushed himself up while spitting out the dirt and gravel in his mouth. He looked about his surroundings and found himself in a murky darkness.

—It was the Trial Room inside the Tomb.

From the same spot as it ended, Subaru’s world began anew.

Although a part of him was relieved to have managed to come back, the suffocating prospect of repeating the same hell in this world clenched onto his heart and would not let go.

Shaking his head, Subaru rejected those ominous portents of another dead-end.

Then, standing up and brushing the dirt off his clothes as he scanned around the area— he found Emilia, collapsed in a corner of the room.

Subaru: “...”

But just before he could call out and run over to her side, Subaru hesitated.

What scraped across his mind was the scene that immediately preceded his return— of Emilia with him dying in her lap, oblivious to his departure as she shared with him a kiss. Without meaning to, Subaru touched a finger to his lips and furrowed his brows at the dry sensation.

In those last moments, Subaru's face must have been a mess from all the blood he had coughed up. He couldn't possibly understand what Emilia was thinking when she kissed him, but it was certainly not a memory which he would remember fondly.

Just as it had been when he was on the verge of death, though he could remember it happening, no emotion or tactile sensation carried over to the present world.

It was Subaru's first kiss, as well as the first kiss he shared with Emilia. But, having been obstructed by the unreasonable barrier of death, it had left him no notable impression.

Subaru: "———"

Yet, Subaru's hesitation was not the result of that regret.

His reflection on that kiss was not for sentimentality's sake, but for the enormity of the dangers surrounding Emilia— The way she had clung to Subaru, utterly detached from reality.

With Puck refusing to show himself, she was crushed by the pressure from the villagers and the Sanctuary's residents. And when even her last support, Subaru, left her, Emilia's heart was finally broken.

If the result was her falling into that state, then what had happened to Emilia in all those loops up to now?

Subaru: "..."

Subaru had left the Sanctuary for the mansion four times now. Of all those times, the last was the only one where he had managed to come back to her— Then what became of Emilia in those other three loops?

In each of those loops, the Great Rabbit would have attacked the Sanctuary.

Even if Emilia had managed to keep her sanity intact, it wouldn't be hard to imagine the outcome considering the Witchbeast's ferocity. But just what must have been going through her mind back then?

Subaru: "As if there's any point in asking... If it turns out like that every time I leave, I'll have no choice but to stay around..."

Nothing about their situation inspired optimism.

He could leave everything to the future and distract himself from what was happening around him, but that would be pointless.

To reach the perfect future, Subaru must constantly assume the worst possible continuation.

Assume that the world would always prepare for him the cruelest, most unreasonable fate.

In that case, the problems surrounding Emilia, Beatrice, Elsa, and Roswaal would naturally always be arranged in the most difficult way possible.

Subaru: “What I’ll have to do is...”

Save Emilia from being broken, save the people of the Sanctuary from the Great Rabbit, and save his friends at the mansion from Elsa’s violence— No doubt, it would be a perilous path.

—Can it really be done?

Inside, the weak part of himself was asking, while preparing escape routes, excuses, and safeguards.

—It’s not a matter of can or cannot, all there is left, is to do it.

Subaru bared his teeth at that weakness inside himself and declared his resolve not to betray his vow.

All he had to do was to retry as many times as necessary to clear away the obstacles, confirm the victory conditions, sort out the chronology, and determine the best use of his time.

Even if Subaru’s heart would be worn down by every failure, even if it meant having to witness things he’d never want to witness, as long as it brought him closer to grasping that perfect future, then it’d suit him just fine.

That was why—

Subaru: “—Emilia. Are you alright?”

Reaching out, he shook the shoulder of the collapsed, lovely girl.

Emilia's eyelids twitched at Subaru's touch, as her consciousness was brought out of the world of the Trials and back to reality.

Her eyes opened, reflecting Subaru inside their amethyst gleam. Within seconds, tears welled up, rejecting her past as she clung tightly onto Subaru.

Accepting Emilia's reach for his support, Subaru returned her embrace as he silently reaffirmed the promise he had made.

—He would protect Emilia to the very end, as well as save everyone there is to save.

Because there was no one except Natsuki Subaru who could do this.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

He began organizing the chaotic information from the end of the previous loop.

Most important among them, was that concerning Roswaal L. Mathers. The same Roswaal who, right in front of his eyes, had lost his life, becoming the Great Rabbit's feed.

Roswaal knew about Subaru's Return by Death. Even if he didn't know that death was the trigger, he was aware of Subaru's ability to rewind.

Though Subaru wasn't sure if Roswaal had learned of this after his arrival at the Sanctuary, or if he had known long before that, most likely, it was written in Roswaal's Gospel.

Subaru hadn't been able to recover Roswaal's Gospel in the previous loop.

If the Gospel had been tucked in Roswaal's robes, then it would have been swallowed by the rabbits alongside his flesh. But even if Roswaal had left it in the residence, Subaru was in no state of mind to run inside to check.

And so, Subaru never got to see what was recorded inside.

—Or just what Roswaal's ultimate objective might be.

If Roswaal was only acting according to the Gospel's text, then what made him abandon his life in the end? —Perhaps the answer lay in the Gospel itself.

Most likely, Roswaal would obey the Gospel even if it cost him his life.

Subaru didn't know what format the entries in Roswaal's Gospel would be written in, but they should be instructions, signposts towards its owner's desired future, just like in Petelgeuse's Gospel.

When something deviated from the Witch Cultist's Gospel, Petelgeuse would use his own judgement to improvise within a reasonable range until the outcome matched the records.

But it was very different for Roswaal.

Acting with the knowledge that it was possible to rewind the world, when the future differed from what was written, he would give up his own life just so he wouldn't have to endure the time that would pass in error.

When reality differed from the text, Petelgeuse chose to improvise.

Whereas, refusing to permit the slightest deviance, Roswaal insisted that reality must follow the writ.

Though they were both dangerous adversaries in possession of Gospels, and even if the contents of their Gospels were largely the same, their approaches were almost complete opposites.

Considering the manner in which they relied on their Gospels, Subaru couldn't help but find Roswaal's to be the more misguided of the two.

—The problem lay in the contents of Roswaal's Gospel.

If the outcomes of the attacks on the Sanctuary and the mansion were all recorded in its pages, then the tragedy would only repeat over and over again until Roswaal's wishes are fulfilled.

Even the snowfall in the Sanctuary could be attributed to Roswaal's desire to match the Gospel's prophecies. Which means, the snow was probably a part of every loop. The only reason Subaru hadn't encountered it until now was because it always started after he had left for the mansion, and he never returned in time to see it.

Roswaal had induced the snowfall on the Sanctuary in order to isolate Emilia.

But just what was the point of doing that?

Even without such roundabout methods, the unbearable pressure from all sides should have been enough to wear her down. With her sense of duty and being acutely aware of the expectations of those around her, Emilia could only bite down on her unease and powerlessness and continue challenging the Trials.

The moment Subaru was no longer at her side, she would lose her way and descend into a state of self-abandon.

Unless, that was Roswaal's goal to begin with?

But if Emilia stopped acting for "Everyone else's sake", the Sanctuary would never be liberated. And without liberating the Sanctuary, there would be no escape when the Great Rabbit attacked.

There were too many places where Roswaal's actions and attitude towards Emilia were at odds.

More than anything, there were Roswaal's final words, moments before he was devoured by the Great Rabbit.

—Cast away everything except the one most important to you.

That was what Roswaal had whispered.

If you do that, you too, can become like me.

Disregarding whether Subaru wanted to become like Roswaal, the underlying implication of those words was that Roswaal had abandoned everything except what was most important to him, and that was how he wound up here.

In fact, it was a resolve for which he could relinquish his life— there was no doubt in that regard.

If everything followed the Gospel's writ— Emilia was driven into isolation, and events progressed exactly as Roswaal intended, would he really obtain that thing for which he was willing to abandon all else?

Or, perhaps a better question would be— why did Roswaal tell Subaru all this? In any case—

Subaru: “If you’re telling me to let go... there’s no way I could do that.”

Emilia was important. But it goes without saying, that there were people who Subaru wanted to protect and to keep at his side, far too many to count.

In Subaru’s narrow world, even the loss of a single fragment would forever render that world colorless.

Greedy and selfish as he was, there was no way he could permit it.

And so, he could never follow Roswaal’s advice.

Subaru: “Roswaal... I— will never become like you.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru comforted the crying Emilia until she fell asleep, and brought her out of the Tomb.

As usual, while everyone was shocked to see Emilia in her state and to learn that she had failed the Trials, Subaru carried her to Ryuzu’s house to put her to bed.

Along the way, Garfiel’s feigned cheerfulness out of consideration for the atmosphere was almost painful to watch, and Subaru could notice Ryuzu casting him a meaningful gaze, though he didn’t mention anything.

He overlooked the former on purpose because there was still something he had to confirm.

As for the latter, it was because Subaru already somewhat understood the meaning behind her gaze.

Garfiel: “Oy, borrow y’for a minute.”

After entrusting the sleeping Emilia to Ram, Garfiel called out to Subaru while everyone was leaving for the night. Having been expecting this, Subaru answered with a “Yeah”, as he followed behind the slouching figure, heading into the forest surrounding the Sanctuary.

Subaru wasn't sure if Garfiel was bringing him to the same spot as last time, but he could tell that Garfiel's expression was exactly the same as back then.

With eyes blazing, Garfiel locked his glare onto Subaru. In stark contrast to his attitude as they left the Tomb, his hostility was now plain as day.

Naturally, the first question to come out his mouth was—

Garfiel: "What d..."

Subaru: "«What did y'bastard see in the Tomb»... yeah?"

A blue vein was about to bulge from Garfiel forehead at Subaru's interruption when his eyes widened as he heard the exact words he was about to say.

As if taken completely off guard, Garfiel's cutting impression fell away to an almost childish air. It was almost strange. Immediately shaking his head at the squinting Subaru, Garfiel clicked his fangs as if to compose himself.

Garfiel: "That's creepy as fuck, but if y'already know, that'd speed things up. Don't try hidin' anythin', honest now. Y'don't want me t'hurt ya, do ya."

Subaru: "Right. But I'm a busy guy, there're loads of things I want to check as well— If I answer your questions... in exchange, will you answer some of mine?"

Garfiel: "Y'think yer in any position t'negotiate? I'm in a position t'eat y'whole, and yer in th'position t'keep tossin' meat t'stave off gettin' eaten. «Meegee gives up th'big bro before the lil' bro», as they say."

Subaru: "Of all the references you made... that might be the darkest one, you know."

Replying with a shrug, Subaru dropped his gaze and fell into silence.

Garfiel looked like he was growing impatient, but he didn't pressure Subaru to hurry. While Subaru took a deep breath and decided how best to answer.

Subaru: "Inside, I took the Trials. I saw my past."

Garfiel: “—! So y’did have th’qualifications... Tch. Then, yer result’s...”

Subaru: “Failed. It’s not so easy, accepting or denying your past... It’s the same with Emilia, I’m afraid.”

Giving him half a truth and half a lie, Subaru tried to gauge Garfiel’s response.

Garfiel’s face paled when he heard that Subaru had taken the Trials, but once learned that Subaru didn’t pass, his shoulders slumped in relief.

Subaru: “Well you sure look pretty damn pleased about it.”

Garfiel: “What d’y...?”

Subaru: “I was just thinking, you certainly look pretty happy to hear that Emilia failed, and the Sanctuary won’t be liberated.”

Listening to Subaru’s words, Garfiel furrowed his brows and snorted as if starting to catch on. Slightly lowering his stance, he glared up at Subaru.

Garfiel: “Y’bastard, what’n yer past... ‘n yer Trials, what th’hell did y’hear?”

Subaru: “About the creation of the Sanctuary, and some background stuff as well. Also, about you and Ryuzu-san, I guess.”

Garfiel: “—! Y’know... about, my...”

“Past?”, Garfiel was about to say, when Subaru cut him off with a shake of his head.

Subaru: “Not sure what you saw in your past, but I don’t know nearly that much. Although, I do have an idea why you’re keeping quiet about having taken the Trials.”

Garfiel: “...Y’already know that much...”

Subaru: “Part of it’s speculation, too. You can reply with an outraged «you’re just imagining it!», if you want.”

In this world, Subaru and Garfiel have only known each other for a single day.

Most of the information he had gathered from his interactions with Garfiel were things he wasn't supposed to have heard yet. The same goes for information about the original Ryuzu Meyer, sleeping in the Experimental Grounds.

Thus, Subaru was trying bypass this by conveniently making use of the Trials and Echidna's existence. For now, he figured that there was nothing else he could gain from this interaction with Garfiel.

So he really just wanted this conversation to be over. But—

Subaru: “—Say, why won't you retake the Trials?”

Garfiel: “———”

In front of the silent Garfiel, Subaru asked him this question.

Hearing this, Garfiel lowered his head so as not to let Subaru see his expression.

His arms dangled at his sides, as his wary posture slackened and lost its strength.

From that, Subaru judged that no sudden attack was coming.

Subaru: “You know, I can't help but feel that your actions lack consistency. First you push Emilia to liberate the Sanctuary, and then you look all relieved when she fails. But then again, if you're really trying to block the Sanctuary from being liberated, you're going about it way too half-heartedly.”

If he completely disregarded the consequences, Garfiel could just transform into a beast and kill Subaru and Emilia.

Naturally, his relationship with the refugees and Roswaal's faction would plummet, but if Garfiel's goal was truly to hinder the Sanctuary's liberation, then this method would be both quick and reliable.

And yet, Garfiel didn't take any actions up until the very last moment—until Subaru crossed the line by having the refugees escape the Sanctuary.

—There was still some threshold inside Garfiel's mind that Subaru didn't know of.

Subaru: “I was hoping I could get your help.”

Garfiel: “—Don’t say such stupid crap.”

Hearing Subaru say this, Garfiel paused a moment before turning him down.

Looking up and shaking his head, Garfiel’s usual vigor was completely gone from his face.

Garfiel: “Like y’said, our interests ain’t aligned. I won’t actively get in yer way, but I ain’t gonna help ya, either. Neutral. Yeah, neutral’s good.”

Subaru: “You do realize that position doesn’t suit you at all?”

Garfiel: “It ain’t a matter of suitin’ or not. I’m just doin’ it ‘cus it’s what I have t’do.”

Annoyed at saying something he wouldn’t usually say, Garfiel kicked at the ground, sweeping up a cloud of dust as he turned his back to Subaru.

Garfiel: “If that half-devil beats th’Trials, that’s fine by me. Once yer here, the only way yer gettin out is by passin’ the Trials. I’m aware of that— But whether I’m leavin’ the Sanctuary once it’s freed ‘s another matter.”

Subaru: “...”

Garfiel: “If yer gonna leave, go ahead’n get out. But don’t try anythin’ in here. Don’t meddle in our shit any more’n y’already have. Y’stay by that, and I ain’t gonna do anythin’.”

Subaru: “Even if I told you that we need your help outside?”

Garfiel: “...Th’things that I want, none of y’lot can give me. This’s as far as this conversation goes. Don’t try pullin’ any unnecessary stunts now.”

Though he refused to listen to Subaru, Garfiel left him with those still-rational words.

Garfiel had shown his strong rejection in all their conversations up to now, but only this time, he didn’t lose his composure.

Just what was different, and what could it mean?

Subaru: “There’s a mountain of things I have to think about... But.”

Inserting his fingers into his black hair, Subaru set aside his over-complicated considerations for now.

As much as he wanted to sort them, organize them, and arrange them to arrive at some kind of answer,

Subaru: “There’s no way I could sort out all these things alone.”

Should he get lost inside his labyrinth of thoughts, Natsuki Subaru would only be caught in another downward spiral. To make sure that doesn’t happen, what he needed to do now was,

Subaru: “Guess it’s time to rely on you again...”

Subaru’s thoughts turned to the only person in the world to whom he could lay bare his worries.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

As if spurred on by some unbearable emotion, Subaru’s steps hastened.

After parting with Garfiel, Subaru’s walk turned into a run.

With ragged breaths, sweating brows, and trembling eyes, Subaru sprinted.

His sole destination, lit by the moonlight, was the interior of the Tomb.

This was after their previous conversation.

Having stated that he would not interfere with Subaru’s actions, Garfiel did not stop him. There was no one left to rebuke him for venturing into the Tomb once more.

Arriving at the entryway, Subaru stopped to roughly wipe off the sweat with his sleeves. Drawing deep breaths to calm his winded lungs, Subaru pressed forward into the darkness of the Tomb.

Since there was something he must do— in the abyssal Citadel of Dreams that was Echidna’s realm.

Subaru: “If you truly wish inside your heart... «I want to know».”

Then you will be invited. That was what the white-haired Witch had told him.

Clinging to that hope and putting his faith in those words, Subaru came here.

There was a mountain of things he wanted to ask, to talk about, to agonize over, and to search for the answer together with her.

Things he could only reveal to the Witch of Greed, so that she might show him the way. What he needed to do, and what he wanted to do were now one and the same. All that was left was some way to make it reality, some way other than deliberating alone.

Subaru: “———”

It was not that he didn't feel ashamed about going to Echidna's Citadel, dumping all his doubts and worries on her, and imposing on her good will.

And it was not that he wasn't afraid that revealing everything to Echidna would violate the forbidden and once again drown the Sanctuary in Envy's shadows.

Yet, even so, Subaru had hope. Hope that the Witch's guidance might be the key to breaking through fate's dead-end.

Subaru: “Right now... I should meet all the requirements.”

He was so lost as to what to do. And so ruled that any means necessary shall be used. If the present Subaru wasn't a willing and eager Apostle of Greed, then what was he?

Innumerable times would he freely surrender his life. And he would give up his pride too, if that was all it took to settle this.

For that was all this pathetic, useless, and ignorant Natsuki Subaru could manage.

Subaru: “I'm counting on you, Echidna...!”

Subaru steadied his breaths, and silently gathered the courage to step into the Tomb.

Making his way to the rectangular space that had already accepted him as a challenger once tonight, he scanned over the room, and proceeded towards its center.

Subaru: “Gonna have to wing it with where and what rituals’re required, but...”

The second time Subaru was invited into the dream, aside from the desperate desire for an answer, he should have been in the same position as he was immediately after Returning by Death. There didn’t seem to be any special offering required.

In any case, Subaru kneeled on the spot, joined his hands, and closed his eyes. He envisioned the White Witch in his mind, calling out to her with the enumerations of his emotions, as if telling of his impossible future and his despairing desire to reach her.

Subaru: “———”

Just like this, time passed as Subaru waited in silence.

He could feel the Tomb’s cold air caressing his skin as cold sweat formed on his brows.

He wanted it. Desperately.

He yearned for it. Earnestly.

If he wanted it this badly, yearned for it this badly, and still couldn’t reach her——

——Then perhaps Greed is far too immense an avarice for mere humans.

Subaru: “——Uh?”

Just before this faintheartedness could sink in, Subaru felt the illusion of a white light encroaching on the darkness behind his eyelids—— Or perhaps, it was no illusion.

Subaru: “———”

White light invaded his vision, slowly, and slowly, eroding away the pitch-dark world.

Before he knew it, his kneeling body had fallen to its side, and he could feel his consciousness detach from reality as it was pulled into another world.

——His summon to the Citadel of Dreams had begun.

In the Citadel where Echidna was waiting, this time, he was determined to hold the conversation that would let him truly grasp the future.

That thought alone occupied his fading consciousness, as—

???: “—Witness, a present that was not to be.”

The moment his awareness fell away, he thought he heard that voice.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

A sensation like a drunken stupor swayed Subaru’s nerves.

He didn’t know what happened. His awakening came so suddenly that it was like when a channel was switched on a television. As if having jumped to a channel of a completely different genre, it felt like his entire consciousness was replaced.

It was almost reminiscent of the sensation immediately following Return by Death.

The discrepancy between the wretchedness of the world where he died, and the one after Returning by Death always carved a sense of incongruity into his mind, body, and soul.

Subaru: “———”

When he tried to speak, Subaru realized that he couldn’t make a sound. He tried bringing a hand to his throat, but only then, he belatedly noticed that he could feel neither his hand nor his throat.

Subaru: “———?”

Whether it was his limbs, his eyes, or his mouth, none of his body existed. There was only his consciousness, floating in space, watching the world from above as nothing more than a point of view. It was unnatural, like the disembodied sensation of being inside a dream.

But he had a feeling that this wasn’t the first time he felt this way. Could he be dreaming, after all?

With those thoughts in the back of his mind, Natsuki Subaru tried to tear his consciousness away from the scene before his eyes.

But it was impossible.

For the disembodied Subaru, not only turning his head away, even closing his eyes was forbidden.

All he could do was watch— as this scene before his eyes was forcibly burned into his mind.

???: “—iar.”

The voice was quiet, and hoarse. And so weak that he could barely make out what it was saying. But,

Subaru: “———”

He intuitively understood it.

With nothing but his consciousness, Subaru intuitively understood “this is bad”. It was a voice that he mustn’t hear.

A voice he mustn’t recognize.

Proclaiming something he mustn’t know.

But, regardless of what his consciousness told him, the scene searing into his mind did not change. It would not disappear. But only went on pushing, carving this outcome into Subaru.

???: “Liar... Liar, liar liar liar liar liar... Hk.”

Within that repeating whisper, the previously inaudible word began to take shape, as if forgetting to stop, and interspersed with sobs.

A heartrending sight. His ears were filled with despairing grief. To take this into his eyes and to receive this into his ears must have been the greatest suffering in this world.

Subaru: “———”

Why was he here?

Why was he seeing this?

His failure. His mistake. His error in judgment. He wasn't supposed to see these. He wasn't supposed to know these. He was never supposed to know these.

—If I didn't tell myself, "It won't be like that", I...

Emilia: "Liar... liar! Subaru... you liar! You liar—!!"

Collapsed on the floor, with a flood of tears pouring from her amethyst eyes, Emilia cried out. Like an accusation of a betrayal, rejecting the nightmare before her eyes, disheveling her hair like a small child, Emilia screamed as if in a frenzy.

—While, at the sleeping Rem's bedside, Subaru's corpse with a small knife pierced into his throat lay in front of the wailing Emilia.

Arc 4 Chapter 70 - What Comes After Hell

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 5 “Ending List”, Parts 5-6

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

—What on earth was he watching?

Subaru: “———”

Expelling ear-splitting shrieks, Emilia was crying Subaru’s name.

Subaru’s body was leaning limply against the bed, its wide-open eyes devoid of life.

Well, naturally. With its throat pierced by a dagger, and with that much lost blood, it couldn’t possibly be alive.

It’s not every day that you’d get a chance to look down at your own corpse. It was a twisted sensation, as if he had detached from his dead body as a ghost and was being made to watch the spectacle that followed.

Even if the majority of that feeling was false, the fundamental part was not.

—What Subaru was being forced to watch was unmistakably the scene after his death.

Subaru: “———”

The room’s furnishings, the people present here, and the wretched figure of his dead self.

Putting these together, Subaru realized precisely what he was being shown here.

It was the result of his thoughtless act after the subjugation of the Sin Archbishop, Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti, and saving Emilia, when he first learned of the loss of Rem.

Having felled the White Whale, repelled Sloth, and saved Emilia and the Arlam Villagers, Subaru was at the height of joy when he was sent plummeting to the pit of the abyss upon learning that Rem was lost.

He had raced the carriage all the way to the Capital— where he found the sleeping Rem in Crusch Karsten's mansion, and, once he confirmed that her consciousness was gone and no one could remember her, Subaru immediately committed suicide by stabbing a knife through his own throat.

It was almost a reflex, without a single moment of deeper consideration.

He had merely done it to reject the scene before his eyes, to ask Return by Death for a chance to retry the past and retrieve what had been lost.

—But this rash deed came to no success, and the place he returned to after his suicide was immediately before he stabbed his neck, after already having reunited with the sleeping Rem.

Return by Death's savepoint had been updated.

Its merciless timing had stolen away Subaru's only means of retrieving Rem, and once again plunged him into the depths of the abyss.

It was after that, when he sealed his resolve and made his oath to restore her and to somehow keep standing up to now, but—

Subaru: "It's not... my fault... This... it's not my fault. I didn't know... I've never seen any of this."

He had never seen this scene before.

Well, of course. Subaru was already dead in this world.

Though he had the means to return after losing his life, he never knew what happened to those worlds after he died. Or rather, there was no way for him to know.

But still, it was not until this moment that he had even considered it.

Experiencing his own death, rewinding the world, then proceeding along a different path to bypass the dead-end, the world in which he died gave him no information beyond how he died, and served as nothing more than a transit point.

Judging these worlds to be mere checkpoints towards his ultimate, desired future, and having decided to make full use of Return by Death, he had regarded even this present world as no more than a waypoint.

But now— That was crumbling.

Subaru: “Stop. Stop stop stop stop stop stop stop stop it please stop!”

Rejecting the scene before his eyes, Subaru shrieked a voiceless shriek. But, without a throat to raise a sound, no eyes to avert his gaze, and no ears he could cover, the world went on engraving its outcome into Subaru’s consciousness.

—As punishment for the careless deed he committed.

???: “Emilia-sama, what—!”

Overhearing Emilia’s wails, a new character stepped into the horrendous scene.

Wearing a brand-new butler’s outfit over his muscular body, his stride giving no indication of this old man’s injuries— Wilhelm.

Skidding into the room, the old man unwittingly fell silent at the sight before him.

—So even the Sword Demon Wilhelm could make such a dumbfounded face.

Subaru was hit with that out-of-place thought as he saw Wilhelm’s face head-on. That was just how far Wilhelm’s expression deviated from the usual, unable to hide his shock at the sight of Subaru’s corpse.

Wilhelm: “What in the world has... No, now’s not... Subaru-dono!”

But Wilhelm’s bewilderment only lasted an instant.

Shaking his head to promptly suppress his bafflement, he rushed to the collapsed Subaru’s side. Emilia continued clinging to the lifeless body, oblivious to Wilhelm’s approach.

Emilia: “Subaru... Subaru you... liar... You said th... we’d be together...”

Wilhelm: “Emilia-sama, I beg your forgiveness—!”

While Emilia condemned Subaru's betrayal like a curse, Wilhelm pushed her aside to reach the corpse. Without any strength to support her own body, she fell to the floor, but Wilhelm immediately turned from his momentary attention towards Emilia back to resuscitating Subaru, who was still soaking in the fresh, profuse pool of his own blood.

Wilhelm: "-----"

His expression grave, Wilhelm took off his jacket and used it to cover Subaru's throat as he unhesitatingly drew out the dagger. Blood sprayed out, staining Wilhelm's perilous visage, but without even blinking, he immediately plugged the wound.

The bleeding stopped, while Wilhelm pumped on Subaru's still chest, attempting to revive his heart.

Wilhelm: "Ferris! Felix! Come quickly!! Emergency! HURRY!!"

Aiming his shout outside the room, Wilhelm applied pressure to Subaru's wound as he continued the resuscitation effort. However, the volume of lost blood was far too great. His limbs and face were drained of color, and anyone could see that Natsuki Subaru's soul was no longer present.

But still, Wilhelm had no intention to give up.

Ferris: "Old Wil', what're you yelling ab— hk!"

Wilhelm: "Felix, quickly! The blade's punctured his throat! There's not a second to lose!"

Ferris: "-----!"

Rushing up at the call, Ferris immediately nodded at Wilhelm's command, cloaking his hands in a blue, undulating aura as he sent healing magic into Subaru's fallen body. Gazing down on his own soul-departed corpse, Subaru saw a seriousness on Ferris' always easy-going face that he had never seen before.

Subaru: "That's... enough... It's useless. It won't work. You can't save him anymore..."

Anything they do would be pointless now.

In Subaru's memories, there was nothing about being saved after this attempted suicide.

Natsuki Subaru had impulsively plunged a knife into his own throat in rejection of reality, leaving irreparable wounds in the hearts of those around him, while he himself disappeared without feeling the slightest pang on his conscience.

Those were the facts. Those two's desperate efforts would come to nothing.

Wilhelm: "You mustn't die! I absolutely won't let you die! If I lost my benefactor in this way, I could not live with the shame...!"

Ferris: "Why did he have to pull this stupid stunt now... Tch."

Wilhelm shouted, pressing on the wound, and Ferris muttered this agitated complaint while casting the gentlest magic in this world. This scene, and the ripples of their emotions, went on striking at Subaru's heart. But despite their hopeless efforts—

Ferris: "——"

Wilhelm: "Felix! Why!? Why have you stopped healing!? If this goes on..."

Ferris: "It's over, old Wil'— His soul isn't here anymore."

Wilhelm closed in, but Ferris pushed him away. Removing the Sword Demon's jacket, he took a handkerchief from his pocket and wiped off Subaru's wound. The gash had been perfectly closed, and it was impossible to tell that it had been a fatal injury. Subaru's body had been restored to the same state as several minutes ago.

Except, neither the volumes of spilt blood nor his departed soul remained.

Looking down at Subaru's pale, lifeless face with the wound wiped away, Wilhelm shook his head,

Wilhelm: "Why... Why did you do this! Why would you... so easily... Subaru-dono, you were...!"

His fist struck the floor with the sound of a hard crack. Blood mixed into the fractured floorboard as Wilhelm's fist was cut along with it. His knuckles dripping with blood, Wilhelm bit into his lips as if enduring unbearable regret.

Directly opposite the clearly emotional Wilhelm, Ferris only looked down at Subaru with a pained expression. His cat-ears drooped as he gazed at Subaru's unpeaceful expression,

Ferris: "...Weakling, coward. You just abandoned everyone important to you... Pushed all the pain and all the suffering onto everyone else... Are you satisfied nyow?"

It was too severe to be mocking, and too kind to be a condemnation. The complexities of the emotions hidden in Ferris' voice was too far beyond what Subaru's frozen thoughts could comprehend.

But it was clear from Wilhelm and Ferris' reactions,

—That Subaru had done something irreversible to them both.

Emilia: "——"

His thoughts completely stopped.

What was he seeing right now?

He knew. He already knew what he was being made to see. He was being forced to bear witness to his own sins.

Wilhelm: "—Emilia-sama?"

Wilhelm suddenly called her name.

The astonishment in his voice was because Emilia had suddenly stopped crying, and her collapsed body was no longer trembling.

Noticing this change, a touch of pain scraped across Wilhelm's expression. The loss he had just tasted, how much more strongly must it have struck Emilia? This expression was simply because he realized this.

The old man firmly closed his eyes, and stood up.

Then, he walked over to the fallen Emilia, and extended his hand to help her up.

Wilhelm: "I must apologize for my actions, Emilia-sama. But it would be harmful to your health to remain like this. Please, take care to..."

Emilia: “—He told me.”

Wilhelm: “Emilia-sama?”

Emilia: “Even though he told me he loved me...!”

Lying sideways on the floor, hugging her knees, Emilia curled into a ball and screamed.

“You’re behaving like a child”, was not a reprimand anyone present could voice. Wilhelm furrowed his brows as if enduring his pain, and even Ferris turned away, unable to bear watching Emilia’s grief. When,

Ferris: “—Eh?”

Baffled, Ferris’s eyes and mouth opened wide as a dumb noise escaped his throat.

As if guided by that voice, Wilhelm followed Ferris’ gaze, and was stunned.

Wilhelm: “———”

—Before their eyes, Subaru’s apparently perished body sat up.

Subaru: “———!?”

This spectacle transcending comprehension shocks even Subaru’s consciousness.

His revived flesh stretches out its limbs with the choppy movement of a mechanical doll, standing up with its head still bent ninety-degrees sideways, eyes slowly opening. Its unfocused gaze, its pupils bereft of light, leer over the room.

Wilhelm: “Ferri...”

Ferris: “Impossible! His body was certainly dead! The resuscitation failed!”

Wilhelm called to Ferris as if clinging to the last strand of hope, but Ferris cut him off, shouting back his thoughts.

Hearing this, Wilhelm immediately decided on his next action. That is—

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono, forgive me—!”

Even the lack of a sword caused no detriment to the Sword Demon’s skill.

Wilhelm crouched down to pick up the jacket that was discarded on the floor, twisting it up along with Subaru’s blood, and used his entire body to lunge it forward like a lance.

Riding on its speed and the added weight of the blood, its tip pierced through the air as a spear of cloth. With what might be called the Cloth-Spear Technique, Wilhelm preemptively struck at the rising Subaru.

His aim was true, and the point of his jacket seemed about to pierce straight into Subaru’s face—

Wilhelm: “—Hn!”

—When a cascade of shadows surged up from Subaru’s feet and swallowed the pointed cloth whole, nullifying Wilhelm’s attack.

Sighting the shadow that appeared without warning, Wilhelm instantly drew back his arm— but could not completely avoid the damage. Three fingers on his right hand were severed at the joints, taken along with the jacket.

Flying backwards, dripping with blood, Wilhelm clicked his tongue as he kept his distance from the now standing Subaru.

Wilhelm: “Felix! Take Emilia-sama away from here, now! I will try to delay it!”

Ferris: “Don’t even have a sword... all I’ve got is a dyagger!”

Tumbling into a corner of the room, Ferris tossed the dagger at his hips to Wilhelm. Catching it in his left hand, Wilhelm drew it from its sheath with a turn of his wrist and muttered “Feels off with short weapons”,

Wilhelm: “Get out of the mansion, follow Crusch-sama’s instructions—No, that won’t work now. Felix, use your own judgement. Bring the Knights here.”

Felix: “Won’t it be a bit hard on your own, old Wil’?”

Wilhelm: “It’s something on the level of the White Whale, or potentially... What in the world has been living inside Subaru-dono...”

Measuring his opponent’s strength, Wilhelm held his breath as beads of sweat emerged on his skin.

In front of the wary Sword Demon, Subaru’s arms remained dangling at his sides as his gaze swept aimlessly to-and-fro’ while his upper body swayed side-to-side. It was without rational thought. And perhaps, it wasn’t even conscious.

The question was that despite being in this state, did it have enough awareness to defend itself?

Warily, Wilhelm went on glaring at the transformed Subaru.

Meanwhile, watching all of this, Subaru’s consciousness was caught in a storm of question marks.

The situation had clearly changed from what it was before. Being forced to witness his sin while his heart was torn and shattered, Subaru was now watching the absurd progression of the world after his death.

What the hell was this supposed to be? Could it have really happened? If not, then what was it supposed to mean? Why was his consciousness here, now?

He couldn’t understand any of it. None of it made any sense at all, but—

Wilhelm: “Felix! Take Emilia-sama—!”

Ferris: “I got it already! Emilia-sama, come with...!?”

Answering Wilhelm’s urgings for him hurry, Ferris crossed the room and roughly pulled up the fallen Emilia. But a quake instantly rocked Ferris’ expression. The reason, was,

???: “—You dare make Lia cry.”

Birthing a white haze, a small figure descended on the center of the room.

With grey fur, and a tail as long as its body, of such a size it could fit in one’s hand, the pressure it exerted could easily make one mistake it for some great, ferocious beast. Making his long-overdue appearance, the tiny Great Spirit floated in the center of the room, gazing down on Subaru. On his expression was unfathomable severity, and his words were rife with contempt.

Puck: “Factoring the barbarism of that body’s owner alongside, you’re deserving of ten-thousand deaths. You damned witch.”

The narrow room was flooded with cold, murderous intent. Exhaling white breaths, Wilhelm’s face stiffened as he watched Puck turn that intent into icy spearheads.

Wilhelm: “Spirit... Emilia-sama couldn’t have possibly...”

Puck: “Lia is unconscious right now. In accordance with the Contract, I will act on my own judgment. The Witch shall not be forgiven. I shall protect Lia— As for the one who made Lia cry, I shall not forgive this man.”

Wilhelm: “Wait! Fighting here now will only—”

Puck: “Violated your Oath, and my Lia’s heart is frozen— It’s due time that I end you.”

Ignoring Wilhelm’s protests, Puck’s cold intent was steadily rising. White mist filled the room, all was starting to freeze, marking the beginning of the death of all things. In a world where even breaths would be frozen, Puck’s hostility was directed at Subaru alone.

That Subaru’s head tilted upwards, looking at Puck for the first time. Its void, blank eyes gazed at the floating Puck, when suddenly, its eyelids twitched. Then,

Puck: “———”

It snickered.

Subaru’s corpse twisted its face and snickered at the sight of Puck. Full of malice, contorted beyond recognition, a mocking grin.

Subaru: “———Sto...”

Watching this unfold, Subaru’s consciousness called for it stop before the destined catastrophe.

But his call reached nothing.

Sweeping his little paw down from above, Puck births a small-scale glacier inside the room, its absolute zero threatening to consume Subaru's corpse. Shadows burst up from below to beat the ice back, the torrent of mana throwing the small room into disarray, catching Wilhelm and even Ferris in the whirling nexus— And it explodes. Shrieks and wails, freezing ice, cracking and crumbling, all peel out as white demise and black despair intermingle to shroud out everything.

Subaru: “———!!”

Abruptly, like the power had been cut, the world lost all color.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “———Pffu.”

The pain of his face smashing into the ground prompted Subaru's consciousness to wake. His jaw crashing against the damp floor, Subaru's eyes teared up at the stinging pain as he shook his head. And, immediately lifting his face, he quickly scanned over his surroundings— Nothing was off.

Subaru: “I—I'm... inside the Tomb...”

Cold air and dark space, the dampness of the floor and the scent of mold and decay— He was definitely inside the Tomb. Having confirmed this, Subaru opened and closed his hands to check that there was nothing wrong with his limbs. His ragged breathing began to settle, as he exhaled a deep breath from his lungs to force himself to calm.

But the tremors of his very organs refused to be chased away.

Subaru: “A daydream... that'd be too much of a coincidence. But, otherwise...”

What the hell was that?

After being forced to witness that spectacle, Subaru began to assess the situation he had been placed in.

First of all, without a doubt, that was a scene after Subaru's death.

Emilia's shrieks at the sight of Subaru's corpse, Wilhelm and Ferris' desperate attempts to save him—and the final, nightmarish clash at the end.

The first part carved scarring gashes into his heart, while the second part plunged his soul into incomprehensible, uncontrollable bewilderment.

Subaru: "Uuh, guh—"

The moment he remembered it, Subaru bent over, holding the wrenching pain in his waist while the expelled contents of his stomach splashed onto the floor. It would be called vomit, but he hadn't really eaten dinner. All that came out was yellow bile and some tea he had drunk an hour earlier.

He could only repeat this vomiting motion to constrict his stomach in answer to his body's demands.

It was while repeating this, over and over, that Subaru began to realize the circumstances of his situation.

Inside the Tomb, if he was not summoned to Echidna's Dream Citadel, then there was only one other place his detached consciousness could have been taken.

Subaru: "Unless... that was a Trial...? Not the past... but the second one...!?"

No longer the First Trial, where he had to face his past, the Second Trial had begun.

Noticing this possibility, Subaru stood there, stupefied.

Indeed, to Subaru, it had been several days since he passed the First Trial. But that only applied to his soul, while for this body and for this world, it had only been several hours. In other words, he shouldn't have met the requirements for the next stage of the Trials.

If the Trials had started regardless, then it could only be an irregularity. And more importantly, according to Echidna,

Subaru: "She said it wouldn't be as painful as the Trials to face my past..."

—If what Subaru saw really was a part of the Trials, then even in scratching the surface, he already felt like he was facing the worst possible continuation.

That scene was, for Subaru, what came after hell.

Subaru had witnessed hell numerous times. He was aware of that.

And if it were for the sake of obtaining the optimum future, Subaru had prepared himself to see hell many times again.

—But, preparation to go even deeper than hell, to learn of an even worse realm?

???: “Witness, a present that was not to be.”

Subaru: “———Wh!?”

In the face of that terrifying experience, at a loss as to stay or to retreat, Subaru heard a whisper scraping across his ear.

Just as his body tensed from the shock— the sensation of his consciousness slipping once again came visiting.

Bracing the fall with his arms, but unable to support himself, he collapsed shoulder-first onto the floor. He tried lifting his face in an effort to stay conscious, but neither his eyelids nor his neck could resist that invisible force as he was instantly dragged into the depths of the abyss.

—The Trial, the deepest pit of hell, once again welcomed Subaru.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “———”

When he opened his eyes, Subaru found himself on a field of grass, at the scene where Julius’ sword had cut open his throat— as he was forced to bear witness to his sins once more.

Arc 4 Chapter 71 - Ending List

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 5 “Ending List”, Parts 7-19

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

From the slit where the blade entered his skin, shallow and sharp, life was leaking out.

Fresh, gushing blood dotted the green grass, while Subaru’s body reflexively convulsed under the watching, purple-haired youth.

Turning up the whites of his eyes, foaming at the mouth, mass volumes of blood spouted from his mouth and neck. Gradually, the intensity of the bleeding waned, until, hearing a sound like a sigh,

Subaru: “———”

Subaru clearly understood that his past self had died.

It wasn’t because his present and past selves shared the same senses. But still, the vivid sensation of his neck being sliced open resounded without end within Subaru’s disembodied consciousness— and soul.

Julius: “Emilia-sama, if you would wipe his... Subaru’s face clean...”

Emilia: “———”

Julius: “He would have wanted you, rather than me, to do this. To have it be your hands.”

Wiping off his bloodied Knight’s sword and returning it to its scabbard, Julius muttered to the stupefied Emilia.

At the feet of the fallen Subaru, lying face-up on the ground, the silver-haired girl fell hard onto her knees. Her amethyst eyes were devoid of emotion, refusing to accept reality. Nor did she wipe away the tear trails on her cheeks, glistening in the light.

Seeing Emilia like this sent sharp pain gouging into Subaru's non-existent chest. Her grieving expression brought out the punishment Subaru had refused to see, made it bare its fangs, and scoured away the callous approach he had taken up to now.

Emilia: "Suba... ru."

Her hand slowly crept onto his face, wiping off the blood and spewed contents with her palm. Barehanded, she did not mind the filth as she did her best to turn Subaru's expression that was twisted in agony into something presentable. And once she finished wiping off the blood,

Emilia: "Why...? Why, Subaru... why did you..."

A question. Emilia asked this empty question to someone who could never respond.

He had neither ears to listen, nor a mouth to answer. Nothing Emilia could say would ever reach the lifeless Subaru again.

Subaru: "-----"

Watching this from above, Subaru searched his memories for the context of this new scene.

—It was the second time he battled Petelgeuse, when, unable to resist possession, Subaru's body was destroyed along with that madman.¹³³

Ferris' magic had sent his body's Mana into a frenzy, overloading his vessels and organs, so his death couldn't have been called pretty. Blistering rashes covered his exposed skin, and broken blood vessels had dyed his half-open eyes red. Before being wiped away, the blood from his nose had painted the lower half of his face, and if it weren't for Julius' timely coup-de-grace, his death would have been even more grotesque.

But no matter how neat his death might've been, it would've been no consolation for the ones who remained. Especially to those who survived the battle against the White Whale and the final showdown with Sloth, about to set off on their triumphant return to the Capital— The dejection and regret on all their faces wrenched at his heart.

¹³³ In the Web Novel, the fight against Petelgeuse took three tries total. The first loop was merged with the second, in the Light Novel and Anime, and the way he died on the second Web Novel loop was used in the Light Novel - assisted suicide.

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono... I must beg your forgiveness...”

Dropping to his knees, Wilhelm lowered his head in front of the lifeless Subaru.

Having slain all the Witch Cultists under Petelgeuse’s command, Wilhelm’s expression took on a bitter taste at the outcome of their battle. Of the old knights of the expedition, some joined in their lamentations with Wilhelm’s, while others punched their fists into the ground. There were even some who teared up from their emotions.

Subaru fell speechless to see his death so mourned.

That was perhaps even more overwhelming than being shown the events after his own death.

Emilia: “Why... would you go to such lengths to help me...? Say, Subaru... why did you?”

Setting her hand on the silent Subaru’s cheeks, Emilia went on calling with words that would not reach him.

Witnessing her grief, it was only now, that Subaru realized— In this world, Subaru had never answered Emilia’s question.

He had never given her his honest answer to the question she asked in the Capital, “Why do you want to help me?”. And so, Emilia still didn’t know the reason behind Subaru’s selfless devotion.

—Though decisively different from the scene he was shown before, both were the results of his irrevocable sins.

Julius: “The world has long suffered from the Witch Cult, and we have slain its vanguard, Sloth. To the world, this is a momentous accomplishment— However.”

Looking down at Subaru’s corpse, Julius tapped his finger on the hilt of his sheathed sword. Over and over, as the intervals between the taps gradually shortened,

Julius: “That does not mean I can accept every sacrifice made to achieve this— I had wished to speak more with you, Natsuki Subaru.

With that pained mutter, Julius turned away from Subaru’s lifeless face.

The knight looked up to the sky, his eyes harboring a melancholy gloom,

Julius: “I would have liked to call you a friend.”

By the sound of Julius’ exhausted whisper, this grass-field world was brought to an end.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Again, all fell to black, as the returning Subaru woke with a jolt.

Subaru: “—Dgh, hwa...! Ah, aaah, hah, AAAAAAAH!?”

He found himself writhing on the cold, hard floor.

The stench of moss invaded his nostrils as he rolled on the ground, immersed in that senseless act as if to escape from the emotions threatening to sweep up a storm inside him.

“What on earth is happening?”, was not the question on his mind.

He tumbles, tumbles, his inner-ear in pain, torturing his lungs as he wheezes shallow breaths, his consciousness wishing to reduce its allotment spent thinking by even a little, even a hair, to hopefully sink into unconsciousness.

Subaru: “—Ugh, guh!”

But even that demeaning attempt to distract himself failed the moment he bounced off a wall.

The collision drove pain into his spine, and he could feel blood seeping from his grazed forehead. Drawing gasp after gasp with his face against the floor, before he realized it, tears were streaming from his eyes.

—Pathetic. Stupid. Hopeless.

Just how many times, and to what extent, would Natsuki Subaru have to crumble under his own weakness?

And just what would he need to do to acquire that heart of steel that could remain unshaken no matter what transpired, and no matter what pain he would have to endure?

He was so weak, so brittle, and that was why Subaru had always—

Subaru: “Pretended not to see it, and averted my gaze... Is this my punishment...?”

There was no way he had never thought of it.

In some corner of Subaru’s consciousness, more than once, the possibility must have occurred to him.

But even so, the thought never rose to the surface, because he was subconsciously refusing to seek and verify the truth.

For Subaru, who could Return by Death, the moment he begins to consider the existence of worlds after his death— his entire strategy would crumble beneath his feet.

Everything Natsuki Subaru had hoped to save had left him behind.

Or rather, it was Natsuki Subaru who had left them behind. Pathetically and selfishly choosing to embrace death, Subaru had abandoned those worlds so he would escape to new ones. If the worlds left behind by Natsuki Subaru’s thoughtless decisions still existed, it would be exactly what he had just been shown.

Through death, Subaru had sought relief from hell, and those scenes were what followed.

Subaru: “—Can’t... be.”

Before he knew it, his consciousness began to grow distant once more. Unlike sleepiness, here, his consciousness was rapidly turning white as if forcibly being severed from reality.

???: “Witness, a present that was not to be.”

Again, the unrecognizable voice whispered in his ear.

“Whose voice was it?”, his fading consciousness was desperately asking— until he realized it.

—Without the slightest doubt, that voice was his own.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

In front of the corpse's shattered skull, a young girl was kneeling.

Having fallen from such heights, no human flesh could survive the impact without shattering. His black hair, along with the contents of his scalp, were splattered over the ground, blooming into a crimson flower of death.

Subaru: “———”

The sensation of his consciousness being switched wasn't surprising anymore. He had expected this the moment his awareness was forcibly cut.

But what he did not expect was the sight he would be presented with when his consciousness awoke——

???: “Spewing nonsense until the very end... when nothing... can...”

Fallen to his death, Subaru's body was sprawled out over the ground. Standing beside him, spitting this out, was a girl with peach-colored hair—— Ram.

Her usually impeccable grooming had been flustered, and visible rips and tears riddled the ends of her maid's uniform. On her face, which she had always consciously kept expressionless, was some unbearably complex and enraged emotion.

Rather than regret for Subaru's death—— it was closer to fury at this outcome.

Ram violently scratched her head and turned around.

Ram: “So, was this all according to your designs, Beatrice-sama? You stood in my path just so he could...”

Beatrice: “———”

Just as she was setting off her accusation, Ram's face stiffened as she stopped mid-sentence.

For reflected in her light-pink irises, was Beatrice, kneeling beside Subaru's corpse. Unworried about dirtying her dress, the girl just sat there on the ground— While Ram's gaze wavered, seeing her like this.

Ram: "Beatrice-sama..."

Beatrice: "—Why."

She softly murmured.

Paying no mind to Ram's existence, Beatrice single-mindedly kept her eyes on the dead Subaru. Tears were trailing from the corners of her blue eyes, even Subaru could see it.

—Beatrice was crying. At Subaru's death.

The fact plunged a knife of guilt into Subaru's heart.

Feeling the depths of his non-existent eyes heat up from the heart-gouging pain, he wanted to run up to that small, little girl, and say something, anything to her. Yet he lacked the legs, arms, and mouth to do so.

Beatrice: "You... aren't, That Person... I know that... at least... but..."

Her face devoid of expression, Beatrice whispered as if in a daze while the teardrops continued to fall.

Before that heart-rending figure, Ram gave up trying to say anything further. She exhaled a sigh, and turned her scornful eyes towards Subaru's corpse, and its neck, bent upwards at an outrageous angle,

Ram: "What nonsense... Love us— you're truly beyond saving."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: "Witness, a present that was not to be."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

As if the very air was being frozen, a white, misty cold presided over the world.

The frozen forest broke apart at every gust of wind, and, unable to maintain its existence in this mana-starved environment, everything was returning to dust.

The trees, the streets, the creatures, and the world all fell to white, crystalline particles in the sweeping gale, as the earth was slowly consumed by white demise.

Subaru: “———”

This time, Subaru was witnessing the ending of the world. Mirroring the white void that was his consciousness, the world awaited its frigid and merciful end. Except,

???: “—So, you’ve come.”

The somber voice, quaking the atmosphere as it bellowed, was one of agreement.

Immediately, followed the deafening boom of earthshaking tremor as the impact of the behemoth’s fall reshaped the landscape. Trees snapped and toppled, shattering upon each other like icicles as the forest was wiped into flat, barren land.

The one that flattened the frozen forest was an enormous, four-legged, almost feline creature coated in grey fur.

Half the beast’s overflowing fangs were broken, while white mists escaped the gaps between its sword-like teeth. Collapsed onto its side, its radiant, golden irises turned to look at something in front of it.

And, with trembling, almost convulsing motions,

Beast: “A shame... I knew this would happen, but still there’s nothing I can change about it.”

???: “—I’ve more or less grasped what had transpired. Indeed, it is regrettable.”

The beast spoke, not to lament its defeat, but simply in knowing acceptance of the truth. And, it was a strikingly clear and elegant voice that replied.

In a world that was ending, that voice did not suffer the slightest loss of vitality or strength. Standing tall and straight, with red hair fluttering in the ivory wind, was a blue-eyed youth.

Youth: “Emilia-sama and Subaru are no longer in this world, I take it?”

Beast: “Lia is sleeping, eternally. Existing in a world without her carries no value at all. I who failed to protect her, and that man, share the same sin—”

Youth: “So for that reason, you would destroy the world?”

Beast: “I knew that I would be obstructed. But this is what I had pledged.”

Unsheathed from its dragon-talon-engraved scabbard, the glinting steel was pointed at the beast’s snout— at Puck, in his true form, while, wielding it, the Sword Saint Reinhard quietly shook his head.

Harbored within his sapphire eyes, was a deep, and compassionate sorrow.

Reinhard: “I understand your regret. And I feel the same. But that does not mean you may ruthlessly vent that regret upon this land. Your actions, and your Oath would bring chaos to this world— And I shall never permit it.”

Puck: “Because that would be unjust?”

Reinhard: “Yes, because that would be unjust— I am the model of Justice. The sword to rectify error. And thus, here I shall slay you. Great Spirit-sama.”

Despite their overwhelming disparity in mass, which side the balance of power favored was too plain to see.

Even Puck, in his true form, failing to ruffle Reinhard’s unfazed expression, was on his dying breaths. By simply drawing a silver arc with the point of his outstretched sword, Reinhard’s blade would carve the Spirit’s existence in two.

The ferocity of his surging swordcery communicated that fact clearly to the surroundings.

Puck: “—Kh.”

The sound led Reinhard to furrow his brows. Even Subaru's disembodied consciousness felt something akin to confusion in his scant emotions.

Brief and intermittent, it was difficult to make out what that sound may be.

Difficult, simply because it was so hard to believe that it was precisely what it sounded like.

Puck: "Kh, kheheh... Haha, hhahaha!"

Reinhard: "—What's so funny?"

With his throat trembling, and on the verge of death, Puck's face twisted as he burst into laughter.

Even with his life and death in another's hands, and having had his actions impeded, Puck was laughing. Unable to fathom his meaning, Reinhard asked this question.

But Puck only seemed to find his reaction even more hilarious.

Puck: "Is something funny? Incredibly funny, of course it's funny. Reinhard, do you... No, I mean, you cannot know anything.¹³⁴"

Reinhard: "..."

Puck: "I remember now. How it was meant to be. It took me long enough to understand it. And, having understood, when I saw how you still don't know, it's so funny I couldn't help myself."

There was something different about the tone and volume of that statement that was completely unlike Puck.

For Subaru, who had plenty of memories interacting with the cat-shaped spirit, this was the first time he had heard such spite in his words. This was different from his hatred towards Subaru and Petelgeuse after Emilia was killed. At that time, Puck was still Puck.

¹³⁴ Note by SummaryAnon: "During this line, Puck's form of addressing Reinhard changes from «kimi» (君), which is more respectful, to «omae» (お前), which is sometimes used as a derogatory term to address someone equal or inferior (assume all of Puck's uses of «you» from this point on are «omae»)".

This time, the laughter directed at Reinhard was nothing like what he had ever seen from Puck before, but something else entirely—

Reinhard: "...I will make sure that there are no more casualties. If you want someone to hate, then hate me."

Puck: "I don't resent you, Reinhard. You are a hero. Heroes have their roles, their deeds, that only heroes can do. I don't resent or fault you for following your creed."

Reinhard: "———"

Puck: "You are a hero, Reinhard— A hero is all you will ever be."

At the end of the end, he uttered the most spiteful remark of them all.

With the fall of the last syllable, Reinhard lifted his sword over his head, and in a single flash of his swordsmanship— from the glint of his blade's edge, an intense heat shot out.

It cleaves through the sky, drills through the air, shatters the ground, roils the ambient mana, rending everything which was in the blade's path in two— And, as the light settled, the world parted before Subaru's disembodied eyes.

Reinhard: "———"

At the close of the torrential sword slash, the world that was covered in the white, encompassing cold was born anew.

The parted world was mended, as the spiral of Mana faded into a ring, returning to the atmosphere. From the shattered earth, flowers budded and bloomed. The pierced-through air was imbued with warmth, as sunlight peered from the severed sky.

The strike of the Sword Saint simultaneously brought about the world's end as well as its rebirth.

—While the colossal beast that was rent by that strike vanished without a trace.

Indisputably present only moments ago, the enormous body was gone, and no indication of its destruction remained.

Subaru: “———”

With a shrill ring, Reinhard returned his Knight’s sword to its scabbard. The wind caressing the bangs of his red hair, Reinhard squinted his eyes as he looked up to the sky while spilling an all but inaudible sigh.

Reinhard: “——Felt-sama will surely be saddened.”

He whispered, closing his eyes.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Witness, a present that was not to be.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Witness, a present that was not to be.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Witness, a present that was not to be.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Witness, a present that was not to be.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Witness, a present that was not to be.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Witness, a present that was not to be.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Witness, a present that was not to be.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Witness, a present that—”

Arc 4 Intermission I - Tea Party

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

???: “Parallel universes, that’s one school of thought. It states that, separate from the universe we are living in now, many alternate universes following along a similar path exist.”

The person speaking was trying her best to suppress the waves of excitement in her voice. Accompanying that lecture-like statement, she was lightly tapping her fingers on the table in a pleasant and even rhythm.

???: “That sounds, huu... like it’s, haa... kind of complicated.”

???: “It’s not that hard to wrap your head around. Imagine infinite parallel worlds, each being generated by just one difference in choice. For example, say there is a split in the road on your way home. Both paths ultimately lead to your house, and there is a you who went right and a you who went left— That possibility would already constitute an extremely small-scale parallel universe.”

???: “What. So, you’re saying that there’re so many worlds out there that we can’t even count them? That’s just stupid.”

Hearing the response to the lethargic voice, a spirited voice butted in.

The lecturing speaker returned a wry smile, and raised a finger in front of her impatient companion,

???: “It isn’t anything so ridiculous. While yes, the breadth of that last example may’ve been too narrow and not communicated the scope of the difference very well... But you can definitely apply it to a grander scale as well.”

???: “Grander scale... like what?”

???: “Let’s see, right— Imagine if you had abandoned the isolated elven vanguard on the Boroid Plains, what would have happened then?”

???: “———”

???: “...Hmm. I was expecting you to be more infuriated by that.¹³⁵”

???: “It’s simple why I’m not angry. Even if you repeat that situation tens, hundreds, or thousands of times, I would’ve always chosen to throw my fists into the fray— So your parallel universe or whatever would never have come to be!”

With that intense assertion, the stubborn voice’s owner swings up their legs as they throw their feet down on the table, taking a reclining posture. The lecturer suppresses a laugh. Seeing their smile, the stubborn one’s pretty eyebrows pitch sharply down

???: “What’s so funny!?”

???: “No, I mean that was very manly of you, but your panties are showing, Minerva.”

Minerva: “Aa, kyaaaa! What, stupid! I can’t even believe this! Stupid! Stupid! Stupid! You’re so stupid! Just stupid! Stupid! You are so stupid! You’re stupid and, um, stupid!

Shouting curses that exposed the limits of her vocabulary, the blond-haired girl— the Witch of Wrath, Minerva, pulled her foot off the table with tears in her eyes, quickly closing her legs and holding down her skirt with her hands.

She looked up furiously at the white-haired Witch sitting opposite her. But,

???: “Haa. Leaving aside who’s right or wrong here, huu... your panties... haa... you kind of did that to yourself, Minerva, always so unladylike, huu... no point blaming anyone else for it... haa.”

Minerva: “Unladylike! Like you’re one to say that, Sekhmet. As if you ever wear anything other than that... Actually, when’s the last time you changed your robes?”

¹³⁵ Note by SummaryAnon: “Throughout this entire chapter, Echidna uses the pronoun «watashi» (わたし) instead of her usual «boku» (ボク).”

Minerva swiped her harsh glare onto the Witch of Sloth— Sekhmet, plopped on the table, completely buried in her long, magenta hair.

Under that sea of hair, a head moved and peeked out between the gaps, looking back at Minerva.

Sekhmet: “You just throw it over your head, huu... It’s the most convenient, haa... Typhon wipes my body for me, huu... So it’s not like I get filthy or anything, haa.”

Minerva: “You go criticizing other people’s behavior when you... Argh, arghh, arghhh... What do you want!? So I’m to blame? It’s all my fault? You want me to beat you clean here!?”

Minerva angrily waved her fist about, while Sekhmet turned her head away without saying a word. Seeing Sekhmet lose even the energy to speak, a blue vein popped up on Minerva’s forehead, but, as if having grown used to her temper, Sekhmet already completely lost interest.

Taking over for the spent Witch of Sloth, the first Witch— the Witch of Greed, Echidna, clapped her hands together and carried on the conversation,

Echidna: “I do understand your anger, but as much as I find it delightful, I would like to continue on our topic now.”

Minerva: “Hrrmph. You’re the one provoking me with all that parallel worlds rubbish, Echidna. I’m angry. I’m enraged. I’m furious...”

Echidna: “Right right. Now, on with parallel universes. If that last example didn’t stick... Let’s see. What do you think would have happened if Flugel never sealed the pact with Volcanica?”

Holding a finger to her lips, Echidna mischievously smiled as she raised this question to Minerva who, in turn, swallowed her breath and narrowed her blue eyes.

Minerva: “If Volcanica and Flugel never sealed their pact, Reid couldn’t have stopped her by himself... and the world would’ve been swallowed.”

Echidna: “If it had been swallowed, what then, I wonder. Of all the world, only the Witch of Envy would remain. Perhaps, a parallel universe in which this is the case even exists. And, if it does, won’t you find it incredibly interesting?”

Minerva: “Your eyes always get so gross whenever you talk about her, Echidna— I’m really not that mad at her. I just can’t share your wrath on that one.”

Echidna: “Well, that’s one way to approach it, I suppose— Your wrath is truly pleasant. That’s why you were the Witch most worthy of being loved.”

Echidna said in past tense, while Minerva looked away with a small snort and crossed her arms, emphasizing her abundant breasts with a jolt of her back.

Minerva: “I’m not looking to be loved. All I want is for conflict to be wiped from this world, for all the suffering, grief, and cries and wails of pain to be exterminated by my fists. I don’t need anything else on my path. My rage, my wrath, and my healing fists— are my everything.”

Minerva proclaimed her life’s purpose without a shadow of a doubt.

Without reserve or hesitation, it was conviction from which nothing could lead her astray.

Truly, this was wrath— directed at the world, an inexhaustible fury forming the roots of her existence from which all else was built.

???: “Well, you’re free to say that as you waaant. But you get so happy when people praise you, you can’t help but grin so biiig, that’s what’s so cute about you, Neru-Neruuu.”

Dragging the ends of her sentences, a rather dopey voice cut into the conversation.

It came from the opposite side of Sekhmet, and from Minerva’s left.

???: “Neru-Neruuu, you really are like a Witch when it comes to not being honest with your feelingsss. I like that about you so much I just want to eat iiit.”

Minerva: “Shut up, Daphne. You were sleeping until now, why’d you have to wake up all of a sudden?”

Daphne: “But I’ve been awake ever since Neru-Neru made a ruckus and started flashing your undies. You go around wearing a tiny skirt that flies up whenever you move, and still you wear those cutie undiesss, tsk tskkk, Neru-Neruuu.”

Minerva: “Y—you’re one to talk! You’re younger than me, and yours are simply obscene! The hell is that? That’s not underwear, that’s a string, dumbass! What’re you, a dumbass!? Stupid dumbass! Seriously, you’re just a hopeless dumbass, you know that? Dumbass dumbass!”

Red in the face and teary-eyed from emotion, Minerva squeaked back— while the one happily ignoring her would be the Witch of Gluttony, Daphne.

With her body completely restrained and her eyes covered by crisscrossing blindfolds, her small body was settled inside a strange black coffin. Though this thing was just casually hanging out at the table like it was natural, to an outsider, this tea party must have seemed utterly surreal.

Running out of insults to throw at Daphne (though it was just saying “dumbass” over and over), Minerva plopped back into her chair, buried her face in her palms, and slumped over the table.

Minerva: “Whatsthiswhatsthiswhatsthis! Like, is this supposed to be my fault? It’s not like I’m doing it to get praised, but of course you’re gonna be happy when someone praises you. When someone says «thank you», of course you’re gonna think «I’m so glad I did that». Is that so wrong? Am I in the wrong here? I want to heal everyone, but I want to be healed too...”

Echidna: “The fact that you didn’t explode into a state of self-abandon just now is just a part of your charm, I suppose— Now.”

Leaving aside Minerva, who had checked out of the conversation by sinking into a sea of her own brooding, Echidna set her sights on Daphne.

With both eyes covered, Daphne shouldn’t have been able to sense Echidna’s gaze, but her small nose nonetheless twitched adorably with a few little sniffs,

Daphne: “Dona-Dona, what’re you staring at Daphne foor? Unlike Neru-Neru and Met-Mett, Daphne can’t stand a whole conversation with you, you knooow. Besides... haa... haaaaa... I’m already running out of calorieees.”

Echidna: “There’s nothing more foolish than asking cooperation from a Witch... I’ve already learned that far too well while I was alive... but I never thought this conversation would go this badly, you’ve all outdone yourselves, I almost want to congratulate you.”

Mumbling this, Echidna lifted her right hand and gave her fingers a snap. Instantly, a steaming cup of tea and a plate full of cookies appeared in front of Daphne. Her blindfolded eyes widening, Daphne immediately lit up at the appearance of food.

Echidna: “Of course, I don’t intend to keep you waiting, so if you want to eat befor...”

Daphne: “Gafugafu- Omuomu- Muchumuchu-.”

Echidna: “Forget I said anything... Though I’d rather hoped you would practice better table manners.”

Echidna shrugged, while in front of her, Daphne threw her whole upper body onto the table as she ate— Quite literally, she was putting her whole body into it.

Even though she was making eating noises with her mouth, the tea and pastries were sucked in directly upon contact with her skin. The offered tea and pastries, along with the wares made out of pottery, all disappeared inside Daphne, instantly becoming Gluttony’s feed.

Daphne: “Aaaaa, so tastyyy, so sweeeet... Ohh, sorryyy. I went a little overboard and gobbled the table toooo.”

Echidna: “Don’t worry about it... Rather, I wouldn’t go so far as to say that, but I more or less realized this would happen the moment I invited you. There’s nothing I’d desire more from you than to be a little more prudent with yourself.”

Daphne: “Dona-Donaaa, would you tell birds not to fly and fishes not to swim toooo?”

Hearing Daphne’s roundabout refusal, Echidna sighed, while, having finished her treat, Daphne wriggled her body and continued with “Alriiight”,

Daphne: “My tummy’s got food in iiit, so I’ll keep Dona-Dona company a bit longeeer— You were saying something about parallel universees?”

Echidna: “That’s right. Daphne, do you have any thoughts on it?”

Daphne: “I don’t really think anythiiiiing? What if this and thiiis, then maybe that and thaaaaat, my tummy won’t be filled even if I think about iiit. Haa, but if it’s a split about whether I’ll eat meat tonight or fish toniiight, then maybe it won’t be so silly to think abooout.”

Echidna: “In your case, Daphne, there’s nothing to complain about in terms of comprehension... Looks like it’s just a matter of capturing your interest. That’s also to be expected, I guess.”

Out of all the Witches, Daphne’s temperament could be considered mild. The problem was that her very existence was a calamity to other living things, and, regardless of temperament, this vicious constitution made her hopelessly unsuited for coexistence with others.

Sekhmet: “So in the end, haa. Even if we speculate about parallel worlds, huu. It’s completely useless, haa... Isn’t it, huu.”

The one inserting this unprogressive comment into the conversation was the Witch of Sloth, still entirely slumped over the table. Blanketed in her own long hair, she looked at the onlooking Echidna, and then at the onsmelling Daphne.

Sekhmet: “Even if you accept this school of thought and the existence of these branching worlds, haa. There’s no way to really know or experience it for yourself, huu. So then, they’ll only be bubbles of unreachable possibilities, haa. Ones that’ll pop and vanish the moment you touch them, huu.”

Echidna: “Indeed, from a realistic perspective, it is as you say. Even if we are aware of the existence of parallel worlds, they could not be observed. Parallel, is truly an apt description. Two lines, never to meet— Parallel worlds would mean different worlds extending in parallel.”

Minerva: “—But, that’s not the case for the Second Trial, right?”

As Echidna summarized Sekhmet’s argument, her conclusion was finished off by Minerva’s thorny interruption. Minerva’s lovely face was dyed red with fury,

Minerva: “If Echidna’s going out of her way to talk about it, it must be heading somewhere mean. Right? Caught you out, didn’t I. Must feel like I jabbed you where it hurts, doesn’t it. If you don’t want to be found out, then don’t do something that you’d want to hide.”

Echidna: “I didn’t even say it, and you’re already mad at me. I’d feel troubled too, you know... But well, it’s true that I can’t deny it. After all, that’s how the Second Trial was supposed to work.”

Watching Minerva punch a dent into the table, Echidna lightly reached out, as a book with black binding appeared in her hand. This was Echidna's book of forbidden knowledge which held the world's past, present, and future—the Memories of the World.

If the Thirst for Knowledge Incarnate, Echidna, ever felt like it, she could access any information, knowledge, or history within this world. But, out of personal preference, she seemed to feel an aversion to using the power of this forbidden tome.

Echidna: "The Second Trial reads into the challenger's heart and finds every crossroad he had passed—one could also call it regret. The Memories of the World recreates the different choices he might have made, as presents that were not to be. In its very nature, compared to the First Trial of facing one's past, and the Third Trial of overcoming one's future, the Second Trial is somewhat easier to pass."

Minerva: "Easier to pass, what do you mean?"

Echidna: "It's a question of whether one could see the world as Daphne does. As Sekhmet said, so-called parallel worlds would ultimately remain separated, untouchable lines never to meet. Regardless of regret, or longing, they could never be reached."

Minerva: "And here your Trial is shoving those lines right in people's faces!"

Seeing Minerva turn up the ends of her eyes in annoyance, Echidna lightly shrugged.

She brushed her hand through her own white hair, and said, as if to calm the now standing Minerva,

Echidna: "To the common person, the Second Trial is indeed easier to pass. Compared to having to overcome a past that actually happened, the Second Trial merely touches on the possibilities of what could have been. It is each person's freedom to accept or deny it... and all one has to do is to accept the present, current world."

Minerva: "The current, world..."

Echidna: "And we are back to the question of perspective. Sekhmet, Daphne, or even you could easily find the solution—if you could do that, then you would pass the Trials."

Listening to Echidna's explanation, Minerva gave a begrudgingly nod.

Indeed, if it was as Echidna said, then the Trials isn't as harsh as she thought. For all the Witches present— Or even just for anyone with a clear sense of self-identity, it should be easy to pass that Trials.

Daphne: "If sooo, then whyyy, is Subarun having such a hard time with iiit? Subaruuun doesn't look like a child with no sense of identityyy."

Echidna: "—In his case... Hm."

Recalling Subaru in her memories, for some reason, Daphne started making a chewing motion with her mouth. Overlooking this behavior, Echidna closed her eyes to ponder on her words,

Echidna: "The Second Trial is an observation of parallel worlds. In a sense, it is an act of witnessing the implications of one's regrets. Like I said, it is easy to accept or deny it— In fact, one would only have to rationalize it by noting that reality never progressed this way."

"But", Echidna continued,

Echidna: "Only in his case, this wouldn't apply. It was even a surprise to me that the Second Trial hit him this hard— Truly beyond my expectations."

Daphne: "Snifffff snifffff... I could smell you grinning with joy, Dona-Donaaa."

Minerva: "She gets happy whenever she sees something she couldn't predict, I bet. Nasty pervert... Just hopeless."

Echidna: "Birds of a feather. Since you are all my friends, you aren't exempt from that, either."

Daphne chuckled while Minerva puffed with rage, and, if one listened carefully, one could hear snoring coming from Sekhmet's general direction. Taking each of these Witches' reactions into her eyes, Echidna rocked in her chair, when,

?????: "Donaaaaaaa Typhon's hungry toooo."

Running up from the meadow with little steps was a little girl. As if to leap onto the table on the hill, she called out to Echidna. With green hair and auburn skin, and her white teeth beaming in her smile, it was the Witch of Pride, Typhon.

Seeing the girl who had avoided getting involved in the tricky conversation and had instead passed her time playing in the meadow, Echidna smiled back,

Echidna: “Sorry for boring you. Now for Typhon’s tea... should I make it extra sweet? And do you want your regular treats?”

Typhon: “Anything’s goood. Running around a lot took up all my strength, I want drink and eat and rest noooow.”

Saying this with incredible energy, Typhon pulled out an empty chair next to Sekhmet and hopped onto it. Then, with one hand playing with Sekhmet’s long hair, she used the other to stuff her face with treats Echidna had made appear with a snap of her fingers, spraying crumbs all over the table.

This scene might just bring out a smile onto the face of someone who was ignorant of Typhon’s nature.

Echidna: “You must be tired too, from looking after Typhon?”

?????: “Th—that’s not, true... though? T—Typhon’s a good girl, and, her powers... also, wouldn’t, work... on, me, you know? S—so, it’s fine. I’m, doing just fine.”

Looking up at Echidna from her side, the one who arrived at the tea party one step behind Typhon gave this stuttering reply with a weak smile rising on her face. With her pink hair reaching down to her waists, the girl gave off a shockingly ephemeral vibe. Though there was nothing outstanding about her features, for some reason, she just naturally attracted one’s gaze.

More than anything, like a small animal, the impressions of her expressions and bearing tugged powerfully on one’s heartstrings.

Echidna: “Take a seat, Carmilla— I’ve called you here for a reason.”

Carmilla: “I—is, something... st—starting? It, wo—won’t be scary?”

Echidna: “There will be nothing scary or painful— I’d merely like your help to get the pieces moving.”

Sitting down next to her, Carmilla— the Witch of Lust, timidly looked back at Echidna. Echidna gave her a smile, and lithely flung out her arms,

Echidna: “—With your love, I wish to rescue a poor lost lamb.”

Echidna said in the trembling voice of a Witch, and offered her outstretched arms—

Arc 4 Chapter 72 - BADEND 1, 5, 11

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation for the most part, last section adapted in Volume 12,
Chapter 5 “Ending List”, Part 20 (to be continued)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken – Part 1, Part 2, Part 3, Part 4

—How many times does my heart have to break before I can be forgiven?

???: “And it’s already over... this job really wasn’t worth taking.”

In a dark warehouse, gazing down on the three corpses submerged in an ocean of blood, a black-robed beauty slightly tilted her head.

Even in this blood-suffused scene, the absurdity of her skill ensured that she wasn’t touched by a single drop, while the abnormality of her mind was such that she remained utterly unfazed by this carnage.

Without a doubt, this was what they’d call a monster in human skin.

Stepping across the floor soaked in blood, the monster looked over the fallen corpses with interest. A giant old man with one arm severed at the shoulder and profuse blood draining down his head. A black-haired youth with a perfect line sliced across his stomach, having died writhing as his intestines spilled out.

—And, a silver-haired girl, slashed in two from her left shoulder to her right waist.

—How many times had he struggled and fought just so he wouldn’t have to witness this scene?

???: “In terms of the outcome of the assignment, this is as bad as it gets... Although, I wonder what’s with all this.”

Holding a finger to her red lips, the monster casually made this awfully out-of-place mutter. Dangling in her other hand, was a sinister, bloody, crooked blade— her Kukri knife. Swaying the weapon that had just stolen three— No, four separate lives in this loot house, the monster named Elsa let out a splendid smile.

Elsa: “—Aya.”

Elsa tilted her head, and lightly leaped backward.

Immediately, a blade of ice stabbed into the floor where Elsa had been standing. A sequence of icy spears followed, pursuing Elsa’s steps with shearing, biting fangs.

Elsa: “Now this is...”

???: “How— dare you.”

Before the evading Elsa, dim specks of light gathered in the empty space as the figure of a small Spirit took shape. The floating cat-Spirit, Puck, had a perilous expression, while his androgynous voice was trembling with rage.

Puck: “You shall regret taking Lia’s life—”

Elsa: “Ah, so the girl... was a Spiritual Arts user. Marvelous... I’ve never opened a Spirit’s stomach before— Though.”

Facing the battle-ready Puck surrounded by floating ice lances, Elsa’s expression reveled in the premonition of battle. But, before raising her guard, she squinted a single eye,

Elsa: “Why didn’t you show up before that child died? Spirits and Spiritual Arts Users should be teams of two— It’s a shame if I can’t enjoy the full experience.”

Puck: “Shut it with your drivel, murderer— If I weren’t bound by my Contract, I...”

Puck shook his head with an expression twisted in vexation. He bared his fang, pointing his little arm at Elsa,

Puck: “I have no intention to chat. I will freeze you, and lay Lia’s soul to rest. After you, the Kingdom, the world, then the Dragon and the Witch. Everything.”

Elsa: “Haaa, marvelous— I’ll be enjoying this!”

Elsa leaped, crawling along the walls and ceiling like a spider. With her slender frame as the target, icicles shot forth in quick succession, piercing the walls of the loot house and freezing the atmosphere, as its shrill shrieks rang through the air.

All vision clouded over with white, until nothing could be seen. Not even the incidentally intertwined fingers on the floor, nor Subaru and Emilia’s corpses. Nothing.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—How many times do I have to be betrayed by this world before I can be rewarded?

Rem: “I was merely preventing the situation from getting any worse. By the time I found him, Subaru-kun’s state was already beyond saving— He would have wished to be put down immediately.”

Emilia: “And, so... That’s what that... horrible end... was. Is that what you are saying... Rem? Subaru was my benefactor, and there was so much we would have liked to talk about... and you...”

He heard the quarreling words of his two beloved girls.

One voice called out within Subaru both immense adoration and insurmountable grief.

And the other voice, when he stood in the face of adversity, how many times, how clingingly, how imploringly, and how sweetly, had he wished to be touched by that voice.

The blue-haired girl and the silver-haired girl faced each other, as a turbulent atmosphere flowed throughout the room. The place was the lounge in the mansion, the two were seated on either side of the table, and the situation was set to explode.

Roswaal: “Weeell now, Emilia-sama mustn’t get carried away, either. Fiiirst of all, we should heeeear what Rem’s haaas to say, no?”

Emilia: “Roswaal... do you understand what has happened here? Rem... Your servant, has caused the... dea... death... of my benefactor... and your guest... Subaru.”

Roswaal: “Ooof course I understand. Thaaat is why I’m... making sure we keep the conversation in line— We mustn’t let any misunderstandings get in the way of our mutual feelings.”

Roswaal narrowed his yellow eye as he replied. Then, the clown turned his gaze towards Rem, seated beside him. Sensing his gaze, Rem nodded,

Rem: “Late last night in the east wing... there was an intruder on Emilia-sama’s level. Alerted to this by the alarm gems, Rem immediately went to the scene, and that’s when I found Subaru-kun crawling on the floor.”

Ram: “Barusu was already under the curse’s effects by then.”

Rem: “Yes, it is as onee-sama said. Subaru-kun was weakened to the verge of death. The curse’s effects had sapped his vitality to its absolute limit, and I determined that saving him was impossible...”

Emilia: “And so you crushed him to death with your flail— That brutality only added to his suffering.”

Ram: “Emilia-sama—”

Holding Rem’s hand at her side, Ram shot a harsh glare towards Emilia. But Emilia’s sharp, unrelenting gaze remained locked onto Rem, Emilia: “The facts are facts... Subaru’s body, his arm, and his head... If you wanted to put him out of his misery, there should have been a gentler way. Instead, why did you...”

Rem: “That’s, because...”

Emilia: “...”

Rem couldn’t answer Emilia’s question. She did not say anything further, perhaps because her personality was not one for telling lies, and Emilia’s words had struck the core of her true motives.

Rem had harbored intense distrust towards Subaru back then.

After the second round of the loops in the mansion— Having failed to conceal Subaru's corpse after crushing him to death in the hallway, events led to this current discussion here.

Subaru's friendly interaction with Ram must have only further inflamed her hostility, to the point where she could no longer resist her murderous intent.

—Just what was she thinking when she swung her iron flail towards Subaru in the upper floors of the mansion?

Perhaps even Rem didn't know this herself.

Emilia: “—It was a slip of the hand... or because you hesitated... Those were the answers I wanted to hear...”

Rem: “———Hk.”

With closed eyes, Emilia sadly murmured as Rem's face shot up. It was unclear how much of Rem's true feelings Emilia had grasped when she said those words. And it would always, forever remain unclear.

Roswaal: “Emilia-sama, where are you going?”

Seeing Emilia stand up, patting off the hems of her skirt, Roswaal's expression vanished as he asked her this question. Hearing it, Emilia brushed her hand over her long, silver hair,

Emilia: “—I'm leaving. It has only been a short while, but thank you for your hospitality. Without your backing, I would not have been able to participate in the Royal Selection. But... I cannot trust you anymore.”

Roswaal: “Even if you don't trust us, surely our relationship of mutual utilization would still be beneficial, don't you think? Forfeiting your place for the sake of a tantrum couldn't be called a wise decision.”

Emilia: “Tantrum...?”

Hearing Roswaal's remark, Emilia stopped in place as her expression stiffened in shock. Then, she promptly turned her steps towards Roswaal, and,

Roswaal: “———”

No one could have stopped that crisp sound from ringing out.

Her white fingers slapped hard across Roswaal's blue-and-white cheek.

In front of the reddened, swelling cheek, the single slap already left Emilia out of breath. The one who had been slapped made no reaction, but instead held Ram back as she was about to stand with her changed complexion.

Roswaal: "Ram."

Ram: "But, Roswaal-sama——"

Roswaal: "It's fine. You can stay seated. Emilia-sama, my apologies for Ram."

Emilia: "This is what you're always like to me... but you're still saying nothing about Subaru..."

Biting her lip, Emilia glared at the collected Roswaal. But despite the furious rage churning in her amethyst eyes, Roswaal never lost his composure for an instant.

This was only a testament to their irreconcilable standpoints.

Roswaal: "Once you leave the mansion, and return to the forest—— what will you have left?"

Emilia: "I was wrong to have been taken along by your beguiling words. My atonement... My penance will come in many other forms. I was mistaken about it. And because I was, Subaru died."

Emilia closed her eyes, and quietly answered Roswaal's question.

Then, with a slight shake of her head,

Emilia: "I will bring his soul with me and lay him to rest in the forest—— For Subaru, and the others, for as long it takes, I will devote my time to tend to their souls. That is all I will say."

With this, Emilia backed away from Roswaal, indicating that she had no intention to continue the conversation. Her silver hair swayed as she turned her back, while Roswaal watched on with his mismatched eyes. Still seated in his chair, he reached out his hand towards the leaving figure—— But put it down again.

Roswaal: “Should this veer away from the writ, then... this is where my paath ends.”

Ram: “Roswaal-sama...”

Hearing Roswaal’s powerless whisper, Ram spilled a voice of concern as she took his hand. The clown glanced back at the girl’s worried gaze, while a weak smile rose onto his face,

Roswaal: “Ram, it seems you’ve won the waager. Here is where my purpose reaches a standstill... That is to say, the Contract can now be fulfilled.”

Ram: “...Yes. Yes, Roswaal-sama.”

Leaving the two to their quiet exchange, Emilia proceeded toward Rem, who had stood up to open the door. Before passing her by, she looked to her solemnly bowed head,

Emilia: “Lead me to where Subaru is.”

Rem: “Emilia-sama, that would be...”

Emilia: “He’s in an awful state, I know. I will restore him as much as I can... And take him with me... to the forest.”

Watching the side of Emilia’s grief-stricken face, Rem’s expression stiffened as she lowered her head. Within that expression was something like regret, as well as something like anger.

Why did it have to turn out like this, she must’ve been wondering.

—Why did it turn out like this? No one knew the answer.

Emilia: “I’m sorry, Subaru— I couldn’t do anything at all.”

Emilia whispered at the very end.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—How many times do I have to be hit with my own stupidity before I can understand?

???: “Desu, desu! Desudesudesudesu, DESU!!”

The shrill, deafening cackle echoed on.

Chest pumped, mouth stretched wide, drooling from the lips and mussing her long, red hair, a young woman was howling.

This woman’s abhorrent behavior, her bloodshot, gawking eyes, and the deranged posture she had taken were nothing like those of a human.

Woman: “For love! To love! In love! By love! The repayment of love is! Everything! DESU! Aah! Oh witch! O beloved witch! DESTINED HARBOR OF MY LOVE!”

Falling to her knees, with both hands stretched to the sky and tears streaming from her eyes, the woman extolled her love.

All around the crazed woman, were submerged corpses scattered in an ocean of blood. Limbs torn apart, heads gouged open, lay countless cadavers stripped of human dignity. In their midst, was the body of a black-haired youth, his throat pierced by his own sword.

Blood drowned every corner of Arlam Village, as every member of the expedition lay upon the ground, deprived of the last sign of life.

The moment their most powerful asset, the Sword Demon, fell in the ambush, the tide was already set. The rest was a massacre by the Unseen Hands, an uninterrupted chain of death-wails until the last of them met their end.

Woman: “Behold my diligence! What could this cleansing of Sloth be called, if not a testament of my love! DESU! Aaah! My adoration, my faith, my unshakable love! Receive it! Accept it! May it nestle within your embrace— DESU!!”

Decrying her love, tears pouring, the woman barked amid the sea of blood— Her flesh stolen, her mind invaded by the monster, Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti.

After wiping out Subaru’s rescue party in one fell swoop, despite the loss of his cultists, the madman went on proclaiming his love. When—

???: “—What... happened?”

A winded girl muttered as she ran down the path trailing from the village. Impatiently wiping aside the silver hair sticking to her forehead, she scanned her amethyst eyes over the carnage— Emilia’s eyes widened at the villagers submerged in the ocean of blood, and noticed it.

Emilia: “Suba... ru?”

Lying in the center of the carnage, was a youth she had known well.

Just what emotion flashed through her mind in that instant? The feelings in those widened eyes were far too complex, such that no one, not even herself, could have understood it. Only, Emilia’s lips trembled, as she,

Emilia: “Why, is... Subaru, sleeping th... Huh?”

Puck: “Lia—! This is bad, it’s the Witch Cult! A Sin Arch... Why, why now!?”

Emilia’s expression was stunned, and one not accepting reality. In her stead, Puck flew out in a terribly panicked state.

Flying circles around Emilia while fixing his glare on Petelgeuse, standing alone in that carnage, his black round eyes were rife with alarm and hostility.

Puck: “Lia! Now, right now! Get away from here now! That thing... you mustn’t meet with that Sin Archbishop! The Ordeal will begin! If it gets imposed on you, it will be terrifying!”

Emilia: “Puck...?”

Puck: “I just remembered, I finally remembered! That bastard... meeting that bastard finally made me remember! Why did I forget... And there’re so many things I still can’t recall... Unless, I can’t remember until things become like this... but if so, then!”

Facing towards the sky, Puck stretched out his little body as far as it would go, and screamed.

Puck: “This is not as you said— ECHIDNAAAAAAAAAAAAA!!”

Loaded with frustration and loathing, the shout echoed out as Puck panted, shaking his head. All the while, Emilia fell speechless in front of her utterly changed companion.

Having heard the scream, the madman slowly stood upright.

Petelgeuse: “Well well... How pleased to meet you! DESU!”

Slanting his upper body, Petelgeuse violently yanked at his long red hair, mercilessly pulling as blood began seeping out of his scalp. Watching this act of self-injury, horror and disgust flickered across Emilia’s eyes.

Petelgeuse: “I am... Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Sloth— Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti... DESU!”

The madman cackled, his voice quaking the atmosphere.

Just like this, the howling madman slanted his body as he observed the petrified Emilia from head to toe then to her upper body, practically licking her all over with his gaze,

Petelgeuse: “...In, credible, desu.”

He spilled this sigh of wonder. A crisp peal of a clap. Petelgeuse was clapping, directing his applause at Emilia.

Petelgeuse: “Incredible— DESU! A figure so perfect for a vessel! A visage so reminiscent of the witch in life! Since you’ve prepared such a magnificent vessel, there is no more need for debate! DESU! The Ordeal! The Ordeal to determine whether the Witch Factor shall take root!¹³⁶”

Puck: “Silence, madman! You take one step towards that child! And I will make you regret ever being born—! Utterly!”

Petelgeuse: “In the face of love, pain and fear are all offerings for the sacrifice... Nothing you say would give me reason to stop, DESU.”

¹³⁶ Albeit the Kanji used is the same as the one used for Echidna’s Trials, I am using Ordeal out of my own wish to distinguish them somehow.

Puck met Petelgeuse's raving with a threat, but the madman didn't seem to mind. Dragging its steps along the ground, it slowly approached, while Puck only seemed to tremble, unable to do a thing.

Puck: "Wh... y. Why, does this have to be the moment when I... no, that's wrong. I remember now. That's wrong. Yes, that's wrong, that's wrong! That's wrong! I'm... I... I..."

Emilia: "Puck! Wh-what should I... what should I do!? I-I'm... and Subaru... over there he's..."

Petelgeuse: "The Ordeal! The terminus of this diligent soul is selected, DESU! An occupied vessel, would interfere with the injected soul, DESU! The contents, are unneeded— DESU!"

Emilia desperately called to Puck, who was hugging his head. While Petelgeuse went on towards the bewildered pair without stopping.

Watching Petelgeuse making strange motions with his fingers and licking his lips, blaring alarms sounded inside Emilia without end. At the sight of his deranged eyes, Emilia gasped, and, in a choking voice,

Emilia: "No... I'm scared, daddy... Ah—"

She whimpered, pleading for someone to rely on.

Seeking help in a voice so quiet that no one could have heard it.

Petelgeuse completely ignored this as he extended his hand towards Emilia. Surely, beyond that hand, would be the invisible Authority of Sloth, the Unseen Hand. It would be reaching to bind Emilia's petrified body, to enact its evil designs—

Puck: "—Get your filthy hands away from my daughter!!¹³⁷"

The next moment, a wall of ice of incredible density and height emerged in front of Emilia. Dividing the space between her and Petelgeuse, the wall continued to expand, bursting from the ground. In the matter of an instant, even Petelgeuse, with his Unseen Hands outspread, was forced to leap backwards.

¹³⁷ Note by SummaryAnon: "Puck's pronoun changes from his usual «boku» (ボク) to «ore» (俺). Puck's speaking style changes drastically on some lines from this point. If pressed to describe it, I would call it a lot like Subaru, as «ore» is the same pronoun Subaru uses. For other lines it sounds more like normal Puck."

Petelgeuse: “That’s—!”

Puck: “I’ve finally remembered the most important thing of all... If it’s to protect it, Contracts and constraints can go to hell for all I care. What a worthless thing I’ve been bound to... Now, I finally remember.”

Hearing this rare sign of hesitation in Petelgeuse’s voice, the little cat floating in space quietly proclaimed.

The aura of bewilderment had vanished, as the Spirit glared at the madman with a liberated air.

Puck: “I remember now, why I’ve become like this. It was to protect my daughter, at last— If the price to do so was such a constraint... that vile wretch...”

Emilia: “Puck— Ah.”

Emilia extended her fingers towards the rueful Puck, when her throat froze.

At her breast, was a crystal glowing with green light. It was Puck’s Spiritual residence, the vital stone tying him and Emilia together. But suddenly, without the slightest touch, the stone shattered into dust.

Emilia: “What... Wh—why...!?”

Puck: “I... I have broken out of the confine, and the consequences have begun. Perhaps even this was foreseen from the start... But still.”

Turning around, Puck floated down to the level of Emilia’s eyes.

A flicker of doubt flashed through Emilia’s pupils at Puck’s gesture. But, gazing into her, Puck’s expression was that of someone gazing at something precious and beloved.

Puck: “Lia, this is goodbye—”

Emilia: “Wh...”

Puck: “The Anchor has been broken. I cannot be tied to this body anymore. As much as I wish to stay by your side, that too is part of the price— I’m sorry.”

Emilia: “No, don’t, Puck... Everyone... Everyone’s gone... Subaru is... He’s... Everyone’s... gone! Puck... if you leave me too... I... I’ll be all alone... I don’t... want... to...”

Like a whimpering child, Emilia pleaded as tears poured from her eyes. Puck used his long tail to wipe away her tears, and gently touched his lips to the tip of the crying girl’s nose.

Puck: “Be a good girl and listen now. There’s still Ram in the mansion. Betty is also around. If you ever need to, you can rely on Betty. That child... would never refuse you. Though, knowing this, it is rather mean of me to ask this of her.”

Emilia: “I...! Puck, other than you, I have no one...”

Puck: “—Go now. My most cherished in this world, my cutest, most beloved Emilia.”

Emilia: “Wai—”

Before Emilia could say a thing, Puck’s little body pushed hard against her forehead.

Unable to withstand the unexpected force, Emilia’s body was sent swimming backwards— When instantly, a tear in space swallowed up her slender frame,

Emilia: “Wh—”

In a blink, Emilia’s figure vanished from the village.

—Watching this to the end, Puck spilled a long, drawn out sigh.

Puck: “Sorry for forcing you to do this, Beatrice.”

Puck thanked his accomplice in the abrupt disappearance. Then, he turned around, and looked to Petelgeuse, who had been staring at him,

Puck: “You just sat there quietly watching... Pretty good manners for a religious fanatic, huh?”

Petelgeuse: “It looked like if I did anything, you’d have crushed me in an instant, DESU. Either way, it’ll be all the same once I make my way to the mansion, DESU. Purposeful aggravations were entirely unnecessary... DESU.”

Puck: “I see. You may look deranged, but you’re surprisingly thoughtful— You fucking scum.”

Spitting this out, Puck flew over the wall of ice into Petelgeuse’s side. Not even Petelgeuse did anything as foolish as using his Unseen Hands to stall the approach.

Then, they faced each other with a certain distance between them,

Puck: “There is no time— Hurry up and start, so we can get this over with. The rest... I will leave to my trusty little sister.”

Petelgeuse: “Something’s changed about you, desu. For a Spirit, you are quite human-like.”

Puck: “—Yeah, I guess I am.”

Puck rubbed his little hand against his pink nose with a cynical smile.

Puck: “I may look like this now, but my limbs used to be a little longer, and my face would’ve been rather handsome, too. When my daughter is that cute, isn’t that only natural?”

Petelgeuse: “...I’m having trouble understanding you, desu.”

Puck: “Well, nevermind. I wasn’t expecting you to understand... Since you are about to die here, anyway.”

Saying this, Puck pointed his arms towards Petelgeuse as his body began to turn white.

He was running out of Mana, and losing his ability to keep hold of this body. Perhaps, this was partly because his bond with Emilia was severed, and partly because he had broken the constraint he had mentioned earlier.

Either way, the contours of his form began to fade—

Puck: “Before I am extinguished, I will extinguish you first. Who would’ve thought my companion in death would be a religious nutcase. Gross.”

Petelgeuse: “Sorry to tell you this, desu, but even if you destroy this body, that won’t st—”

Puck: “I will freeze your soul alongside it— If I do that, what would happen, I wonder?”

The dauntless grin on Petelgeuse's face up to now abruptly froze.

Watching the madman's eyes widen, Puck smiled an utterly delighted smile,

Puck: "Aaah— Now there's the face I wanted to see, you moron."

In an instant, simultaneous with the unravelling of the Spirit's contours, a white radiance blasted forth, and—

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Forced to witness the endings of worlds one after another, Subaru lay collapsed upon the ground.

He could not tell where he was anymore.

Was this reality, or was he inside a dream? Could it be one of those cycling nightmares? And if it was a nightmare, would he be absolved so simply?

Were they really just possibilities? Or were they worlds that actually existed? Could they merely have been convenient fancies that Subaru's mind had invented? If so, then how does he explain the previously unknown information contained within them?

Were they worlds born out of delusion? Were they alternate realities feeding on each other? Whichever it may be, the torment to Subaru's heart was colossal. So much so, that he could not stand, or raise his head, or do anything at all. And so—

Rem: "Are you no longer able to stand? Subaru-kun?"

He heard someone at his side, gently uplifting his heart with those words.

He thought it was the voice of someone he loved.

Subaru: "——"

The hot streaks of tears that should no longer be spilling drew their trails down Subaru's cheek.

Arc 4 Chapter 73 - Where Weakness Resides

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 5 “Ending List”, Parts 20-21

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

—How long had it been since he last heard that voice?

In reality, she hadn’t been sleeping for all that long.

At most a week, a conceivable timespan for going without seeing one’s friends or family— But Subaru could not think that way.

For Subaru, who was constantly shedding off his life and time, actual timespan meant nothing. According to his soul’s internal clock, a far longer interval had passed since that voice had last struck upon his eardrums, and his heart.

Rem: “—Wake up, Subaru-kun, I’d be happier if I could see your face.”

The words rained down from above as he lay face-down on the ground.

The tender compassion and the heated affection contained within that voice swiftly filled Subaru’s chest with warmth, and instilled the parched, empty vessel of his heart with searing heat.

All this, from a single sentence whispered by that gentle voice.

—Just how much strength had she given him?

Subaru: “...You have to be joking.”

Rem: “No, this is not a joke.”

Subaru: “You can’t be here.”

Rem: "Should you desire it, Subaru-kun, I will always be at your side."

Subaru: "Whenever there's something important I must do... Whenever I feel this way... It's like you'd always come to me... but how could... something that convenient..."

Rem: "Well, I've always wanted to be the girl who'd just so conveniently happen to be at Subaru-kun's side."

With his sobbing voice, he spilled that pathetic whimper. But the voice that answered did not look down on him, nor think any less of him.

She knew.

Knew, that Subaru was weak, helpless, so brittle that he could not live without something to cling to, always lacking confidence, and perpetually in doubt.

Nevertheless, this girl told this hopelessly weak Subaru that she loved him.

Subaru: "—Rem."

Rem: "Yes. It's Subaru-kun's Rem."

He lifted his head.

Blue arises in his teary vision. Roughly wiping his eyes with his dirtied sleeve, banishing his tears, he saw.

The form of the girl standing before him.

The form of his beloved Rem.

Subaru: "Rem..."

Rem: "Yes, Rem. The maid who's always within arm's reach when Subaru-kun wants her there."

Subaru: "Y—you..."

Slightly tilting her head, Rem replied in a playful tone.

Just before he could say something about her attitude, he felt the air calmly seep out of his lungs. With a thump, the heavy burden in his chest dropped to the ground.

His breathing eased, and the tiny self, screaming in his skull, disappeared.

Being so easily, so so easily saved, Subaru was struck dumb. He had thought himself hopeless and stuck, and yet, upon seeing this single girl standing before his eyes, he was so easily released.

Subaru: “You’re incredible, Rem...”

Rem: “Why thank you. Subaru-kun is amazing too.”

Smiling as she spoke, their exchange was just as perfectly off-beat as it always was.

Feeling such happiness at this back and forth, everything he had tried to endure up to now suddenly turned to tears on the verge of falling.

While he was pinned to the ground, casting down his eyes, Rem kneeled before him,

Rem: “Are you alright? Are you feeling worn out?”

Subaru: “Who... knows... Maybe I am... worn out... but nothing... is finished yet.”

In these never-ending, looping worlds, Subaru had been battered and torn without reaching a single answer. He was in no position to say he was worn out.

Not while everyone else suffered more. Not while everyone else was enduring more. Just why did everyone else have to suffer along with him? —The answer was obvious.

Subaru: “It’s because I’m too weak.”

Rem: “_____”

Subaru: “Because I’m always lacking.”

Rem: “_____”

Subaru: “If only I were a stronger, smarter, and a less useless guy... they wouldn’t have to suffer, grieve, or hurt like this...”

If Subaru was strong enough to do everything on his own, then the task of consoling Emilia’s broken heart in the face of her past, easing the sorrow of Beatrice’s four-hundred years of solitude, saving Petra and Frederica from the murderer’s blade, defending the people of the Sanctuary from the Great Rabbit’s threat, and reaching an understanding with Garfiel who sought to keep his distance from outsiders—would all have fallen to him.

Everything, all of it, every last aspect, was Subaru’s fault.

And so, in order to overcome this balance sheet of his own weakness, Subaru had to scour his soul and start anew.

—Or so he thought, and yet,

Subaru: “I didn’t save anyone... in the end... did I?”

Rem: “Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “If these worlds continued after my death, then how many... How many times... How many people... have I left to die?”

Rem: “Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “How many times did I let you die? How many times do I need to... kill you before it’s enough?”

Rem: “—Subaru-kun.”

Shuddering from a dread surging from the depths of his body, Subaru ravingly confessed his sins. Expelling them from his lips, he only wanted instant sentencing for his crimes. Before he could crush his own heart to dust, he wanted someone, anyone, to carry out his punishment for him.

He desired that someone smack this colossal idiot, who, while pledging to no longer make mistakes, had tread down the wrong path on their very first step, and let him know what a hopeless moron he was.

Subaru: “———”

—But Subaru’s plea for punishment was answered by a gentle, enveloping embrace.

Subaru: “Re... m.”

Rem: “It’s alright. Everything is alright, Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “But, noth... nothing is... alright... is it.”

Nothing. Subaru hadn’t succeeded in anything. If Subaru slackened now, absolutely no one would be saved. Countless people would meet their end. Rem too, was someone Subaru absolutely must save.

Because only she had the right to chastise this inadequate, insufficient, hopelessly weak Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: “You should be... at me...!”

Rem: “—I love you.”

She pressed her forehead against his, and whispered those loving words.

Subaru: “———”

No words escaped him.

There was nothing he could say.

So near, her light-blue eyes were looking directly into his. He could drown in the depths of the compassion in those eyes.

Rem: “I love you, Subaru-kun— And so, everything is alright.”

Subaru: “Th... at’s... not an answer...”

Rem: “Yes, it is. Why is it I am here? Why is it I forgive you? Why is it that I hold you? —All of it, is entirely due to that.”

Close enough to feel each other’s breaths, Rem’s smile softly grasped Subaru’s heart like an invisible hand.

He couldn't move. Not even a twitch. Reaching around his back, her delicate hand clasped onto the hems of his clothes, tightly, tightly, so tightly as if to merge into one, she held him in her embrace.

Rem: "It must have been tough, Subaru-kun."

Subaru: "-----"

Rem: "All alone, taking all the pain onto yourself... It must have been hard, Subaru-kun."

Subaru: "-----Guh."

Rem: "You don't have to bear all that sadness anymore, it's alright."

With no words to answer her, Subaru desperately tried to keep everything from flooding out, while Rem's sweet whispers went on. Gently unravelling his heart, melting away his obstinacy.

Rem: "All of Subaru-kun's pain, grief, and weakness, all of it, Rem will bear it for you."

Subaru: "..."

Rem: "Everything Subaru-kun wants to protect, to fight for, to accomplish... Leave all of those to me."

Subaru: "..."

Rem: "There's no need for you to carry every single burden— You can leave them all to me. For now, just rest, and go to sleep."

Subaru: "...I, I."

Rem: "And let me see the Subaru-kun that I love once again."

Rem set her hand against Subaru's cheek and raised up his face, gazing directly into him.

Her lips tightened, as if with some hesitation, as she drew her face closer.

What was she doing? What would happen next? Even his lagging consciousness could understand.

So close, near enough to feel her breaths, the lovely girl's lips were approaching. It'd be fine if they overlapped, intertwined, drowned, melted, and merged with his, wouldn't it?

—Regardless of right and wrong, she would forgive him, wouldn't she?

Just how deeply had Rem's gentle words seeped into Subaru's heart?

His indeterminate emotions, his soul, agonizing over whether to reach for that helping hand, along with the entirety of this Subaru's existence was once again saved by the girl who knew everything about him.

To this powerless Subaru, Rem offered her hand.

To this brittle back of Subaru's, Rem offered her support.

To this foolish Subaru's journey, Rem offered her escort.

By so shamelessly, clingingly, relying on her so entirely— If that would guide to the correct answer, then...

Where was the point in struggling alone?

Worn to the core, lost without a footing, no longer sure where to turn his steps, perhaps he should, just, give up, everything, and yield—

Rem: "Giving up is easy."

Subaru: "——"

Rem: "But—"

Subaru: "——"

Rem: "—It doesn't suit you, Subaru-kun."

He heard a voice saying.

Rem: "—Subaru-kun?"

Puzzled, Rem asked in front of his eyes.

It was only natural, since just before their lips could meet, a hand was placed between them. The sweet sensation of entwining tongues that was supposed to have come grew distant, while a wavering, wounded glimmer flickered in Rem's eyes.

Watching this wavering glint through the gaps between his fingers, Subaru spoke.

Subaru: "—Who, are you?"

Rem: "Huh—?"

Subaru: "I just asked you. Who are you?"

Rem: "Subaru-kun, why're y... asking who, I..."

In front of Subaru's quiet question, Rem's throat seemed to choke up, unable to speak. The faint, wounded color in her eyes deepened, as her expression became marked by grief. No matter what, it tore at Subaru's heart to see this.

To distract himself from this feeling, he pressed his hand to his chest and bared his teeth.

Subaru: "When... I'm hopeless at the end of my rope, seriously wishing that someone'll do something, thinking maybe it's impossible and about to give up... you would come to me. I seriously believed that."

Rem: "——"

Subaru: "If you were there, you would console me, comfort me, while I sat there stuck hugging my knees... I believed that."

Rem: "——"

Subaru: "Just like this, you'd listen to my whining, let me spew out all my whimpers, watch me cry until I wring my tears dry..."

Rem: "——"

Subaru: "—And then, you'd tell me to stand up."

The delicate touch of her fingers, the up-close warmth of her skin, and the immensity of her love, Natsuki Subaru remembered with all his body and soul.

And so, he could tell, without a doubt— that this Rem before his eyes was an impostor.

Subaru: “She would never say «rest for now».”

Rem “———”

Subaru: “She would never say «give up and leave it all to me».”

Rem: “———”

Subaru: “A girl who loves me, who’s loved by me, who’s kind to me, who’s head over heels for me— who’s strict and uncompromising with me, more than anyone else in this world, THAT is Rem!”

Springing to his feet, Subaru barked as he backed away from the Rem before his eyes.

Still on her knees, Rem looked up to Subaru without a word. Even now, he felt like he could drown in the sadness of her expression that was brought about by his rejection.

Rem: “No, you’re wrong. Subaru-kun, listen to me! I... That’s not what I meant. It was just, I couldn’t stand seeing Subaru-kun suffering like this... That’s why... I just wanted you to forget the pain and get some rest, that’s all!”

Subaru: “I’d let you see my weakness. I’d let you see my frailty. I’d let you see what a hopeless, worthless bastard I am— But I would never let you see me giving up.”

“Subaru is a hero”, that was what Rem had told him.

And so, Natsuki Subaru had resolved to become Rem’s hero.

Ever since they exchanged that promise, Subaru had decided——That in this life, in this world, the only place where Natsuki Subaru would show his weakness, was in front of Rem.

Only in front of Rem, who despite knowing Subaru's weakness still expected him to be strong, would he expose his own feeble self.

Not Emilia, not Beatrice, he would let no one see it except Rem.

Subaru: "My weakness belongs to Rem. She accepts and shields my weakness, and in exchange, I will hold down any thoughts of giving up, and never let it out."

Rem: "-----"

Subaru: "So fuck off, you fake— And don't fucking coddle me wearing my Rem's face and voice!"

Firmly declaring this, Subaru jabbed out his fist at Rem— at the impostor.

In front of Subaru's pronouncement, the listener was at a loss for words. Keeping her face downcast, softly, and quietly, she stood up,

Rem?: "B—but this is, not... what, she, told... me?"

Subaru: "ah...?"

Slanting her head and swaying her blue hair, the impostor stuttered out her words.

Hearing this, Subaru let out a voice of doubt—

Subaru: "-----"

Before his eyes, the girl's image seemed to blur as Rem's figure turned vague. A storm of television static drowned out his vision, and, following the momentary hijacking of the world, there was now another person standing in that same spot.

—Someone he had never seen before.

Her pink hair stretching halfway down her back, her bearing was gentle— or rather, timid. The girl's features were attractive, but nothing about it came across as outstandingly beautiful. It was more of an ordinary, commonplace kind of cuteness.

Illustration from Volume 12, coloring by Setowi (source)

Wearing a white, long-sleeved robe, her hands were hiding inside her sleeves as she held them against her cheeks, watching Subaru nervously.

Subaru: “Who are... you?”

Carmilla: “I—I’m the Witch of Lust... Carmilla... you know? N—nice to meet... you.”

Hearing the girl— Carmilla’s reply, Subaru inadvertently swallowed his breath. She just called herself the Witch of Lust. Which means,

Subaru: “So this strange, inexplicable space... is inside Echidna’s dream?”

Carmilla: “Yes... and no... I guess. Echidna-chan is, watching, the Trial... And the Trial itself is, kind of, like, a dream... Mm... Yeah.”

Subaru: “That’s kind of missing the point, but no, even before that...”

Carmilla’s manner of speech was getting on Subaru’s nerves. Naturally, seeing Subaru’s gaze grow harsh, Carmilla immediately started shivering and hugging her head.

Carmilla: “P—please don’t hi... hit me...”

Subaru: “I won’t do anything like that. I won’t, but... what were you trying to do earlier?”

Carmilla: “Earlie... r?”

Subaru: “Appearing in front of me, pretending to be Rem! Is that what your power is supposed to be!?”

All the Witches bearing the name of a sin seem to possess some sort of special Authority. Assuming the Witch of Lust was no exception, she should have an Authority as well. If her transformation earlier was her Authority, then—

Subaru: “Well, I guess compared to what the other Witches can do, transformation is a pretty orthodox ability...”

Carmilla: “I—I didn’t, tr—transform... though? I—I, just, looked, to you, like someone, else... b—because... that’s, who, you wanted, to see... that’s all?”

Subaru: “What?”

Carmilla: “I, mean... I, didn’t, even, want to, meet you... E—Echidna-chan, asked me, to... And lied, to me, too...”

Carmilla’s mutters were exacerbating Subaru’s annoyance. The way she spoke, the way she shifted her glances, and the way she looked down whenever she sensed his gaze, all irritated him to no end. That whimpering tone, and those sulking complaints, the hell is her problem?

Not only was nothing she tried to say getting through, she could not know how treasured a thing for Subaru she had just stomped all over.

Irritated. Aggravated. He wanted to scream at her just so she’d understand.

Subaru: “You... Do you even know what you just did...?”

Carmilla: “Echidna-chan, she... s—said, I just had to spoil, you... a little, and it’ll all be, fine... Even, though... I—I didn’t want to, I told her.”

Subaru: “Listen to me...!!”

Carmilla: “E—everyone... is ganging up, on, me, p—p—p—picking on me... like, this. Echidna-chan is, d—doing it, too. You’re all, so... so mean.”

Subaru: “DON’T YOU UNDERSTAND WHAT LISTEN TO ME MEANS—!!??”

Screaming, Subaru felt all the air being wrenched from his lungs as he expelled that scraping shout. He felt it, but the incinerating rage burning through his body erased that thought from his mind.

Suffocation was nothing compared to this irritation clawing at his chest.

He wanted to jam her sniveling, stuttering, whimpering mouth shut, and blast her with all the rage and agony inside him so she’d understand what she had j—

????: “—Any more of that, your life would be in danger.”

Subaru: “———Ugh!?”

That instant, Subaru heard a voice whispering into his ear, pulling him back to his senses.

The very same moment, the pain of being deprived of oxygen up to the point of asphyxiation struck him, along with the dry soreness of his continually wide-open eyes.

Subaru: “Aah— A, aah?”

???: “These were drastic measures, but I’m glad to see you back— When facing Carmilla, Lust’s Faceless Goddess, people tend to forget to breathe. Ultimately, even their hearts stop beating.”

Subaru: “Egh, haaa, guh, tch... Haaaaa, haaaaaaaaa.”

Spitting out the choking saliva, having fallen to his hands and knees, Subaru’s consciousness was strobing.

But the voice had entered his ears, and its meaning delivered to his brain.

And so, Subaru wiped off his lips with his sleeve as he looked up at the most probable culprit behind this prank, and, baring his teeth,

Subaru: “Just what, what were you plotting. Echidna.”

At the receiving end of Subaru’s hateful gaze, the white-haired Witch softly stroked her hair, and all-so-naturally rested her elbows on the table,

Echidna: “Isn’t it obvious? —I am a Witch. I’m plotting something nefarious, of course.”

She said, smiling.

Arc 4 Chapter 74 - The Witch's Plan and Proposal

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 6 “The Witches’ Tea Party”, Parts 1-2

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Panting from asphyxiation, Subaru belatedly noticed that his hands were on a green field of grass.

From the ground where his limbs landed rose the thick scent of grass scraping across his nostrils. Like that of a meadow bathed in sunlight after the rain, the choking fragrance of nature gently wrapped all around him.

He turned his head and saw Echidna straight before him.

She was, as always, on the small hillock in the middle of the plains, seated in a chair at the table, waiting for her tea party's guest— for Subaru.

As always. Yes, just as always.

Echidna: “I’m sure there are all sorts things you want to say and ask me... But first, how about taking a seat and having a cup of tea?”

Subaru: “...If you, consider what you just did to me, do you think I’d just cordially sit in that chair... and go along with your tea party?”

Echidna: “I do. Compared to losing yourself to instinct and senseless rage, you are the kind who’s more likely to dress yourself in rational, cold calculation. Now, rather than distancing yourself from me, there are far more benefits in holding a profitable conversation... Isn’t that what you’ve concluded in your heart?”

Subaru: “———”

Faced with Subaru's suppressed fury, Echidna's carefree bearing remained unfazed. Calling down to him from above, as if mocking Subaru's all-too-obvious bluff, the words struck true while Subaru could neither affirm nor deny them.

Except, the thing that she had trampled over was not so cheap that he'd concede so easily.

Subaru: "Echidna... just tell me you didn't mean to."

Echidna: "Hm?"

Subaru: "Just now... That trick with the Witch of Lust, tell me you didn't mean for it to happen. Tell me, that you made a mistake, go on say it."

Echidna: "..."

Subaru: "Say it was unavoidable. Say you didn't anticipate it, that it shouldn't have gone down that way. Say it. If you just tell me that... I won't blame you for it."

What Echidna said was right. If Subaru wanted to proceed, he would need her knowledge and help.

But, what was unforgivable remained unforgivable still. Echidna had used the Witch of Lust to trespass into a precious and inviolable place inside Subaru—his Sanctuary. That much was certain. And so, for Subaru, this was the necessary requirement before he could forgive Echidna and hold a meaningful conversation with her.

Echidna: "...And I was wondering what you'd say."

In that moment, she must have understood Subaru's inner weakness and obstinance.

Spilling that inadvertent mutter, Echidna turned her gaze toward Subaru, who was biting his lips, waiting for her reply. She leisurely fiddled her white hair, and,

Echidna: "Then, as you wish, that was just the Witch of Lust running amok. I tried to stop her, but she wouldn't listen. Taking advantage of the Trial, she tried to seduce you by unveiling the part of you that you least wanted to be touched, and with it, drown you."

Subaru: "-----"

Echidna: "It came close, but you still managed to escape her spell through your own strength. Then, having failed her seduction, when Carmilla let down her guard, I took back control and summoned you to my Citadel. You could say that it was by a stroke of luck that we could now meet here, face-to-face."

Subaru: "-----"

Echidna: "...Now, suppose I told you all that, would you be satisfied?"

Swiftly, Echidna lined up everything Subaru had wanted to hear, only to betray her own words in the end.

Without saying a thing, Subaru looked upwards, as if to put Echidna out of his gaze.

Subaru: "...What were you trying to do, goading on a Witch like that."

Echidna: "Carmilla didn't tell you? What she did was to save you, after the Trial had all but abraded away your heart."

Subaru: "That... That couldn't have been the Witch of Lust's intention. If what she said was true, then that was only my selfish weakness wanting to hear Rem say those things to me. The Witch of Lust had no reason to be kind to me... Those were your instructions, weren't they?"

Echidna: "So you've already deduced this much, out of such little information... In that case, I suppose there's no point making excuses."

Casually, Echidna discarded the act with a shrug. Then, she brought her teacup to her lips, and tilted it with a sip,

Echidna: "It's as you suspected, sending Carmilla to you and having her pretend to be the girl in your heart were all by my instructions. Though, the imperfect outcome and the fact that it was seen through is more of a problem on Carmilla's end than mine."

Subaru: "—Why... would you do that?"

Echidna: "Hearing it straight-out is probably going to make you angry— It was the most efficient method, and the one most likely to succeed."

Without apology, Echidna went on as Subaru's expression vanished.

Echidna: "Even I didn't expect you to get so hung up on the Second Trial. Above all, the fact that its contents hit you this hard was, in all honesty, something I couldn't have imagined until I saw it with my own eyes."

Subaru: "-----"

Echidna: "Oh my, I do wish you'd overlook me peeping in on your Trials? I'm sure I've already told you after the First Trial, that these are Trials set up by a Witch? Even if the product is a bit mean-spirited, I still wouldn't like to have this and that said about me."

Subaru: "...Get on with it."

Echidna: "Anyway, while watching you face the Trial from the sidelines, I had a thought— If you went on challenging the Trials like this, you'd be worn to the core before long..."

That wasn't an exaggeration. In fact, it wasn't far from the truth.

Subaru wasn't so aloof to what was happening to him that he'd try to refute her here.

The Second Trial, the presents that were not to be, and the scenes, events, and tragedies he was forced to witness were more than enough to shatter his hubris, stubbornness, and delusions.

Echidna: "And so I intervened. Even though, being worn to the core is also a result in itself, I like to experiment with everything through trial and error. My curiosity is insatiable and strives endlessly to produce conclusions. To satisfy my insatiable Greed, I seek out any and all outcomes— The one in which challenging the Trial breaks you, is no exception."

Subaru: "So then why did you intervene? If me breaking is just another outcome you seek, you could've just left me there. If the result was that was all I amounted to after all... you would've been satisfied too, wouldn't you?"

Echidna: "I did have a mind to just accept it as another result... I did, but that doesn't mean I shouldn't do something to produce the result I wanted."

Subaru: "What...?"

Hounded by Subaru's questioning, Echidna dropped her tone as she replied.

Hearing this, for the first time today, Subaru furrowed his brows for a reason other than rage. Carefully scrutinizing her words and forming the semblance of a meaning, if he wasn't mistaken, then,

Subaru: "It was to reject the outcome where I'd be worn to nothing... That's why you set up that situation. Is that what you're saying?"

Echidna: "...And as a result, I trespassed onto a territory that was precious to you, I have no excuses for that. So, if you want to shower me with insults, I will resignedly accept them. Your anger is justified, and it was wrong of me to be so inconsiderate. That's all there is to it."

Setting her cup on the table, Echidna gazed straight down towards Subaru at the foot of the hill. Completely devoid of the playful caprice of before, the Witch of Greed now faced him with the entirety of her sincerity.

Her attitude, her stance, and her words all overwhelmed him.

All of a sudden, the rage and distrust towards Echidna that were occupying his chest only moments ago now seemed horrifically egotistical and selfish.

The truth is— unable to forget her hand in what happened earlier, Subaru was still reluctant to accept Echidna's help, but then, what would his heart become without it?

Laying on the cold floor of the Tomb, his heart, shattered, crushed to dust, left in a darkness without the faintest light, and there, erased to nothing. It wasn't hard to imagine.

He couldn't go as far as to thank her. But nor did he feel that she deserved his rage and abuse— That much, was his emotional compromise.

Subaru: "——"

Standing up without a word, Subaru patted off the grass on his clothing and made his way up the hill.

Seated in her chair, a flicker of pain flashed through Echidna's eyes as she watched Subaru's approach. What words would he pummel her with once he got here? It seemed that not even this centuries-old Witch could tell.

The Incarnation of the Thirst for Knowledge. The Witch of Greed. To see such an adversary's expression twinge at his approach still gave Subaru's heart some small relief.

Echidna: "—Ah."

In front of Echidna's soft cry of surprise, Subaru pulled out a chair and sat down opposite her. Though he had no intention of bringing that teacup to his lips, this was his way of show his willingness to talk. While Echidna looked on with a hint of unease, Subaru rested his cheek in his hand and turned his face away,

Subaru: "I'm not in the mood for Dona Tea... But I would like to have that profitable conversation with you."

Swallowing down his unbearable emotions, Subaru summoned up the magnanimity to reply.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: "So in the end, what is the Second Trial?"

Keeping his cheek rested against his palm, Subaru asked without looking at Echidna.

On the other end, Echidna shifted her chair forward in order to enter Subaru's field of view,

Echidna: "Well, what do you think it was?"

Subaru: "You're not... trying to confuse me, are you? Is that your way of telling me I'm asking too much? Putting me on the spot like that."

Echidna: "I'm not as mean-spirits as to do that. I did do something to upset you, after all. I just wanted to check if we can still speak on friendly terms, and also to hear your opinion while we're at it."

Those words would've made anyone feel embarrassed. If Subaru had come into this conversation in a normal state of mind, he certainly would've been discomposed and gotten stuck on his words.

But, in his current state of mind, there was no way he would give her the reaction she wanted. Instead, Subaru spilled a small sigh as his reply,

Subaru: “The Trial’s topic was to witness a present that was not to be. That was the premise, as well the subject of the scenes it showed me... I’m guessing this present that was not to be would be a present that would have existed if I had made a different choice along the way, right?”

One way to think about it is like what happens in Visual Novels. It is a game in which the player makes decisions in key points of the story, causing the paths to diverge. On a grander scale, one could even say that life itself is kind of unfolding like one gigantic game. People must constantly face choices and make decisions based on their individual will—all the while trying to aim for a certain potential thread in the world: that would be precisely what life is.

Echidna: “By definition, they are worlds which you should never have been able to witness. Who knows? You might find that you are happier in that world than in the actual present, then you might come to regret, «Why didn’t I do that back then?». Or otherwise, that world might be more wretched than the actual present, and then, perhaps you’d say to yourself, «Thank god I didn’t do that»— Ultimately, the Second Trial is to witness presents other than the present you have chosen, and to determine whether or not you could correctly affirm the only genuine present.”

Following on Subaru’s words, Echidna succinctly summed up the Second Trial. It wasn’t too far from what Subaru had imagined. Except for the part where Subaru had to go through that deeply penetrating ordeal.

Subaru: “—So, those alternate presents I saw, do they really exist?”

Echidna: “...”

Subaru: “Every time I die, I’d Return by Death. So I’ve never seen what happens after I die... Until now, I’ve never even considered the possibility of the world continuing after my death... No, actually, it’s that I’ve been trying not to.”

Well, of course.

Subaru only Returns by Death because the world was already beyond saving. In order to break through the deadlock and save everyone he held dear, Subaru had believed that by Returning by Death he could reach the perfect future— Or so he told himself, so he could endure the sensation of constantly spending his life.

The existence of worlds beyond his death would upturn that premise from its roots.

If only to set his mind at ease, he must convince himself that there were no worlds he left behind, and that the people in those lost worlds had in fact been saved. And so,

Subaru: "After my deaths... do the worlds continue on...? When my choices caused the world to diverge, when I left those unsalvageable worlds behind... Was everyone I failed to protect still inside them...?"

Echidna: "-----"

Subaru: "What is it, Echidna... Please, answer me."

Having lost the option of avoiding looking at her with his eyes, Subaru leaned forward in his seat and turned a pleading gaze towards Echidna.

Echidna didn't say a word, but, bathed in Subaru's gaze, she touched her chin as if in thought, and then closed her eyes.

Echidna: "There is, one thing I should clear up about the Trials."

Subaru: "..."

Echidna: "The present in the Second Trial is no more than a phenomenon which allows you to witness an imagined world. The challenger taking the Trial... That's you, in this case. By projecting off of the details of your memories, the Memories of the World draws on everything that makes up your surroundings, the people, the world, the atmosphere, and even the Mana, and, assembling them with necessary information from the past, present, and future, a new present is created."

Subaru: "..."

Echidna: "Meaning that is entirely a well-made unreality. The degree of their reconstruction is on an entirely different dimension from your self-produced imaginings and delusions, and as a fake reality those things would potentially occur. But they're artificial realities from start-to-finish. If questioning whether they really happened, the answer is not affirmative."

Subaru: "Th—that means..."

Echidna: "However."

Seeing hope in Echidna's explanation, Subaru lifted his head. But just as he thought he saw the light, Echidna held up her palm and stopped him,

Echidna: "The precise mechanisms of your Return by Death are unclear. It's almost certain that the one facilitating your Return by Death is the Witch of Envy, but the issue of how the Witch of Envy causes you to Return by Death leaves questions unending. Perhaps, it is a power that rewinds the world upon your death. Or perhaps, each time, it is achieved by reaching into another, parallel world and pulling out another you, and with it, overwrites your existence."

Subaru: "Aah..."

Echidna: "If we assume it to be the latter, then parallel worlds do indeed exist, and, after your death, those worlds would continue on even without you."

Subaru: "S—so how do we know for sure..."

Echidna: "—We don't."

With a shake of her head, Echidna mercilessly cut off Subaru's trembling words.

Subaru's eyes opened wide while his mouth hung open without making a sound. Echidna turned him a sympathizing gaze as she tapped her finger on the edge of the table.

Echidna: "If there is one way to confirm it, it would be to ask the Witch of Envy herself. But I'm sure you know from experience how difficult that would be?"

Echidna must be referring to Subaru's memories of the first time he truly faced the Witch of Envy. Leaving the Tomb after the end of the tea party, there, he found the Witch of Envy. Stealing Emilia's body, tearing Garfiel to shreds, and engulfing the Sanctuary in shadow, it was a monster in the truest sense— Suddenly, he remembered the doubts surrounding that thing's appearance.

Subaru: "Ri... ght... Echidna. Before, after the tea party ended... outside, I saw the Witch in the Sanctuary. What was... that? Just what was that?"

Echidna: "I thought it'd be obvious? That was the Witch of Envy. Though, that imitation is nothing compared to the real thing. The fleshly vessel it had chosen was immature, and more importantly, not a single one of its seals had been undone. With its Witch Factor in a deficient state, there was no way it could have displayed the same power it had in its heyday.”

Subaru: “That was still nothing compared to its heyday...?”

Disposing of the beastified Garfiel like he was nothing and slaughtering everyone without receiving a scratch, that monster was still nothing compared the true Witch of Envy.

Four-hundred years ago, in the age when the actual Witch ran rampant, what hell must it have been?

Echidna: “Just as you imagined, the trigger for her appearance was the tea party. Not even that thing could prevent you from violating the taboo in here. And so, driven mad with envy, yet unable to vent it inside, it took out its rage on the external world, exploding into a rampage wreaking havoc in its wake.”

Subaru: “And you knew that it’d fucking happen?”

Echidna: “Not exactly. It was the first time, after all. Being the first time, it was only after it actually happened that I could come up with my hypothesis. I can’t derive conclusions without first seeing it happen, in that sense, as the Witch of Greed, I’m not that different from you all.”

Subaru: “-----”

Subaru was at loss for words to see that Echidna’s spectator’s stance showing no signs of collapsing. There was no point in reproaching her for it. But even though he knew this, he still couldn’t quite shake the vexation.

If only she had felt like it, if she had felt like helping Subaru, then maybe---

Echidna: “I doubt there was any great reason why the one you loved was chosen as the vessel. Although there would be a certain affinity when it’s another half-elf, I think the biggest reason could only be envy.”

Subaru: “Envy...?”

Echidna: “For a Witch who wants to be the sole subject of your thoughts, is it really so hard to believe that she’d hate and seek to destroy the recipient of your impassioned affections?”

Loving someone to the point of madness also meant demanding that person to love her back in return. As long as that love wasn't directed at her, she'd go to insane lengths to make sure that it was. Such was the volatile lunacy known as love.

Perhaps the Witch of Envy was precisely the incarnation of that behavior.

Echidna: "All the questions puzzling your mind, are ones which only the Witch of Envy could answer."

Subaru: "-----"

Echidna: "You can mull over them endlessly, but, in all honesty, I doubt you will ever reach an answer. Not about why she pursued you back then, nor about the presents that may or may not exist."

Subaru: "Th... at's..."

To Subaru, that would be far too cruel a reality. He wanted to hear it clearly refuted. To be told that the worlds beyond his death never existed. Or if not, then at least he wanted to hear it outright. That so many had been sacrificed due to his conceit.

Whichever the answer, Subaru would have taken it as his admonition, his creed, his reminder to never forget, and though he'd grit his teeth, shed tears of blood and cry out from his very soul, he would turn his steps forward.

—But for the answer to be "there is no answer", isn't that just far too cruel?

Was he to live, without confirmation or denial, leaving the fate of worlds in this indeterminate limbo?

To go on without knowing whether his steps were his own. Whether he had abandoned what he had abandoned. Whether his sins were sins. Was this to be his punishment?

Were Natsuki Subaru's crimes so great that no one could ever forgive him?

No one was capable of passing judgement on Subaru. No one could condemn him, either. He already understood this.

—But was even Subaru himself to be denied that right?

Echidna: "I think it's harsh. But I also think all you could possibly do is rationalize."

As Subaru was stricken into speechlessness, Echidna addressed him with these words.

He slowly shifted his head and turned his vacant gaze onto Echidna. Taking in Subaru's gaze, Echidna swallowed a breath, and, with a serious expression,

Echidna: "In more extreme terms, the Second Trial is to accept the true present as the only present that is, while separating out all the others as utterly unreachable worlds."

Subaru: "-----"

Echidna: "I'm sure it must be hard, since, compared to other challengers, you have far more reason to believe that these realities truly exist. But still, it's time that you changed perspective."

Subaru: "Changed... perspective...?"

Echidna: "Your choices may have indeed left many sacrifices in their wake. And among those you left behind, there must be plenty that are beyond retrieval. But to spend your life counting those you have lost and left behind... would be a miserable resolution. Futile. And painful, don't you think?"

Subaru: "If I wanted empty idealism, I wouldn't have come to you... Don't know why I have to say this, but did you actually think some run-of-the-mill counseling advice was going to help me get through this...?"

Echidna's words were pleasant, and comforting. If the wound was shallow, or the crime light, or if it had just been the matter of some causal occurrence, then maybe it would have helped.

Or perhaps, if he had merely wanted to feel saved, he may have been capable of that change in perspective. But,

Subaru: "It still doesn't change the fact that everything I've done and everything I couldn't do hadn't changed reality by one bit... That everyone I sacrificed, believing that those worlds would cease to exist, would amount to nothing more but a piling of bodies..."

Echidna: "...That's true."

Subaru: "Then how am I supposed to be okay with this? How am I supposed to forgive myself? When you tried offering me a hand, I slapped it away. That's because I didn't want to be saved by a counterfeit Rem. I will definitely retrieve the real Rem in the end, one way or another— But."

Pausing for a breath, Subaru's face twisted in anguish,

Subaru: "—When I do... would she really be the same Rem I had set out to save?"

Echidna: "——"

Subaru: "Without an answer, my heart has nowhere to turn... And here you are telling me that I don't have to be like this, that all I have to do is rationalize it...?"

Echidna: "——"

Subaru: "Rather than count those I couldn't save, I should live counting the ones I did save... Is that what you're telling me?"

What Echidna tried to tell him was that there was hope if he only looked ahead. For Subaru, those words may have become a beacon.

—But the darkness into which he had fallen was not so shallow that he could consider it as such.

Subaru: "With this mediocre idealism... you're telling me... to just fight...?"

Echidna: "—I am."

Subaru: "——"

Echidna: "That is what I am telling you."

While he was shoving aside all words of comfort and crying from the depths of despair, Echidna said this to Subaru.

Speaking slowly, pronouncing each syllable, Echidna looked Subaru straight in the eyes and told him.

Echidna: "Rather than count the multitudes you might not have saved, you should count all those you have saved. I have seen the roads you've taken to get here."

Subaru: "I, what... what would y... about me..."

Echidna: "I have seen you doing your utmost, striving with all of your soul to forge your own path up to now. And so, I can say this. Indeed, I can."

Subaru: "-----"

Echidna: "Of all the paths you have taken until now, not even one has been wasted. No one has the right to tell you that your utmost was not enough. It was only by throwing in everything you had that you have reached this moment— That is something to be proud of."

Echidna's sincere words struck at Subaru's emptied chest. Something resounded in its hollow interior—but it was not enough. Those words could not compel him to stand.

Even if he was told that he should be proud, the fact remained that he had abandoned and lost too much. Things he should have been able to change. Things that would have gone differently if it had been anyone else besides Subaru. But, because that person was Subaru, there were so many that could not be saved.

That was Subaru's crime. Subaru's transgression. The sin which Subaru must accept and atone for.

Subaru: "There's no one who can forgive me."

Echidna: "Then I will forgive you. I, who know everything about you."

Subaru: "There's no one who can judge me."

Echidna: "Then I will judge you. I, who know all of your sins."

Subaru: "—There's no one who can validate me."

Echidna: "If you cannot validate yourself, then allow me to invalidate the self you cannot forgive."

Subaru: "-----"

Echidna: "If you cannot accept your sins, then leave it to me to deny them."

For each of Subaru's words, Echidna had one to strike it down.

Why was this Witch so insistent on denying Subaru's sins?

Why was this Witch so unrelenting about wiping that darkness from Subaru's heart?

Subaru: "Why... are you... trying so hard to help me?"

Echidna: "...A—a—asking a girl to say that kind of thing is just plain mean, you know."

Echidna, who had not faltered once until now, was, for the first time, stuttering her words.

Then, with a slight blush on her cheeks, Echidna cleared her throat, and,

Echidna: "—Will you forge a Contract with me, Natsuki Subaru?"

Her voice was quiet, yet suggestive of her strong volition.

Subaru blinked, letting the words seep into his brain but still needing more time to comprehend them.

Subaru: "Con... tract...?"

Echidna: "Yes, a Contract. A formal Contract with the Witch of Greed— Are you interested in tying one?"

Subaru: "We for... Say, if we forged this Contract, what happens then?"

Echidna: "It's simple— from now on, whenever you meet an obstacle you cannot surmount, I will face the wall and ponder with you. Whenever you wish to hear someone's words, I will endeavor to give you the testimony you desire. Whenever you feel close to being crushed by the weight of your sins, I will clear those crushing sins together with you."

Saying this in a single breath, a bashful smile rose on Echidna's face,

Echidna: "Will you forge this Contract with me?"

Subaru: "...But you're dead... so you can't influence reality anymore, right?"

Echidna: "I believe my reach has already far exceeded that of the dead? I suppose it's a bit late for me to admit this, but better late than never... That is, if you can forgive me."

Holding her hand to her chest, inclining her head as she spoke, Echidna's words reverberated upon Subaru's eardrums. The vibration passed into his body, bringing a gradual warmth that followed his coursing blood and pervaded throughout his body.

Sensation returned to his numbing fingers. His parched tongue regained some of its moisture and mobility, and he could feel his thirsting eyes that had forgotten to blink being quenched by something wet and hot.

Her offered hand, her proposition, her proposal, her pledge of assistance left him at a loss as to how to answer.

Just when his vow to go on struggling seemed to have all but lost its meaning, the Witch pledged to be there to support him.

Echidna: "I don't mean to brag, but I am rather confident in the volume of my knowledge. I can prepare countermeasures for just about any problem you might encounter, and no matter how absurd a situation threatens to befall you, unlike your peers, there is no need to go to such pains to persuade me. And, most of all, I can comprehend your Return by Death."

Subaru: "Are you trying to hit me with a surprise fast-lipped sales pitch?"

Echidna: "As the requesting party, I do think it's only natural for me to lay out all the benefits of sealing this Contract with me. And if it has managed to put some ease into your heart, then all the better, don't you think?"

Making use of Subaru's words, Echidna took even those as a part of her pitch. Seeing the Witch this way, Subaru couldn't help but loosen his cheeks into a smile.

Suddenly feeling the air peacefully flowing out of his lungs, Subaru sighed. Bathed in the meadow's gentle wind, he leaned his back into the chair and looked up to the sky. In the blue, artificial sky, he could see white clouds floating.

Whenever he gets stuck, whenever he is lost without an answer, whenever he is facing against impossible odds.

—If he could sit here under this azure sky, and trade words with her in search of a solution...

Subaru: "Maybe, it wouldn't be so bad..."

Echidna: "—You mean...?"

Her chair squeaking as she stood, inadvertently clenching her hands into fists, Echidna looked down at Subaru. But, noticing Subaru's gaze looking back at her with his back still inclined against his chair, Echidna's face suddenly changed color as if embarrassed by her own actions,

Echidna: "Ah, no... Hmm, but, if you absolutely must insist, then I guess sealing such a Contract isn't entirely out of the..."

Subaru: "It's a bit too late to cover it up, isn't it? I mean, you were the one who asked for... Ugh, nevermind, saying it just feels incredibly crude at this point."

Echidna was the one proposing it, but she had done so to save Subaru's heart. To put it plainly, it was a Witch's kindness. The fact that she didn't make him cling and beg must have simply been the Witch's consideration for Subaru.

No matter where he was, no matter who it was, was he always going to wind up being saved like this?

Bouncing off the back of his chair to jolt himself forward, Subaru stood up.

Standing close enough to touch if he only reached out his hand, Echidna looked into Subaru's eyes that were now level with her own, a tinge of unease in her expression.

Even the Witch's minutest actions are cunning, he thought. But since he was the one being saved, he was surely in no position to complain.

Subaru: "So... how does one seal a Contract?"

Echidna: "—To seal a formal Contract, you and I must be connected by a path between us. I will take care of the details... But for now, your palm."

Echidna held up her right hand with her white palm facing towards Subaru.

"Here, put your palm against mine", was probably what it meant.

Feeling somewhat dumbstruck, watching the Witch across from him failing to keep the glee from escaping onto her lips, “Haa”, he spilled a quiet sigh,

Subaru: “Now, hopefully things’ll finally start changing...”

Filled with great expectations of the future, he placed his palm onto hers, and—

Impact.

A crashing boom rang out as the cup-bearing table beside him burst into a thousand pieces.

The impact that shattered the table passed into the ground, birthing a crater in its wake as the rumble of the quaking earth jolted Subaru into squawking in shock.

???: “—I’m putting a stop to this Contract.”

Striking her fist into the ground, proclaiming this in her magnificent voice, was a blonde-haired, blue-eyed girl—

—The Witch of Wrath, peering her eyes over the two, smoldering with furious rage.

Arc 4 Chapter 75 - That Person

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 12, Chapter 6 “The Witches’ Tea Party”, Part 3

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3, Part 4, Part 5

Stumbling back from the impact as if he had a rug pulled from under him, Subaru widened his eyes at the blonde-haired girl glaring back at him. Her blue eyes teeming with exorbitant rage and her beautiful face colored with a crimson hue, it was the Witch— Minerva.

Taking her sharp gaze off the petrified Subaru, she turned to the entirely unfazed Echidna, standing opposite him.

Minerva: “I’ll say it again, this stops now. I will not allow this kind of Contract.”

Echidna: “...Hm. Now isn’t this... quite an unexpected development.”

It was a sentiment too familiar to be hostility, and too violent to be called rage. Standing in the crater she had made, single-mindedly directing this at Echidna, Minerva folded her arms, hoisting up her ample breasts while biting her lip.

Echidna: “Surely— you should understand the significance of a Contract with a Witch. That you have interrupted it regardless would mean... Could it be, that you also wish to seal a Contract with him yourself? This wouldn’t be a case of sour grapes, now would it?”

Minerva: “Can’t you tell from my fury that it’s nothing so docile? I’m furious. I’m incensed. I’m so upset I’m ready to explode.”

In front of Echidna’s dodging jests, Minerva shot back with the shade of red deepening on her cheeks. Tears pooled in her eyes from the intensity of her emotions while her face pouted like a sulking child.

Her childish face entirely at odds with her voluptuous figure— Subaru couldn't help but be intrigued to see such a character in the flesh. After all,

Subaru: "What... are you doing here?"

Minerva: "What. Am I not allowed to be here?"

Subaru: "Well, no. That's not... But... I mean, Echidna's right here."

Saying this, Subaru pointed at Echidna as Minerva puffed up her cheeks in displeasure. Not seeing his point, Minerva tilted her head, while Echidna, apparently catching on, lightly clasped her hands together and nodded,

Echidna: "Ah, I think I know why you're confused— You're surprised to see another Witch manifesting while I am still here, correct?"

Subaru: "Y—yeah. I mean, since I've always met the Witches one-on-one... I thought they kinda had to take your place when they appear. But..."

Minerva: "And she never said we can't appear at the same time, I bet. That just sounds like the kind of prank this unkind Witch would pull."

Huffing in rage, Minerva easily smacked down Subaru's protests. Muttering "Seriously...?" under his breath, Subaru looked at Echidna. But, in front of Subaru's gaze and Minerva's address, Echidna made no effort to deny it.

Echidna: "I wouldn't want you to misunderstand. Calling the other Witches here is quite a taxing and risky thing to do. There's a chance they might even wrest away my control over this place, or, even if they don't, it is still incredibly exhausting to manifest beings as powerful as them."

Subaru: "That's... why? —No, but, you..."

Echidna: "I've never once lied about this. I can assure you that much."

With that single incisive statement, Echidna sliced through Subaru's faltering words.

It was true. Searching through his memories, Echidna had never said anything about this present situation that would constitute a lie. It was only Subaru's imagination going off on its own when he was presented with this phenomenon.

So, in the end, technically Echidna hadn't actually deceived him, but,

Echidna: "I just didn't want you to know that other Witches can manifest as they wish, and have them take you from me."

Subaru: "H—huh?"

Echidna: "To me, you are the first guest I've had in a very long time. Conversing with you had thrilled me in ways I've rarely ever been thrilled, whether it be before or after my death. If I told you I simply wanted to have you here, all to myself, would you berate me for my shallowness?"

Subaru: "——"

Echidna: "I know I keep on saying this, but I am rather fond of you. And so, I didn't want your interest to shift onto other Witches more charming and more helpful than myself— Go on, you can laugh at me if you wish."

So this extreme, hideous desire to possess— was her reason for hiding it from him.

Quietly listening to Echidna's excuse without saying a word, Subaru wondered why she would have this obsession towards him. Just what about him warranted this kind of fixation?

It was the same with the Witch of Envy, and now Echidna, too. Just why would they—

Minerva: "You're way too easy to dupe, you know that!?"

Subaru: "—Dgah!?"

Just as his mind was sinking into thought, Subaru's head was bumped by a soft fist from behind.

He turned around holding his head and found Minerva right behind him. She took the hand he was holding against his head, and, in one fluid motion, she twisted his arm and flipped him onto the ground.

Subaru: “Oa, aah! Wai— hurts hurts hurts... or... not?”

Minerva: “When I directly touch anything living, no matter what action I take, it would be transformed into healing. I could punch with all my strength and it would close wounds, I could wrest you to the ground and it would cure you of your diseases, I could place you in a lock and it would fix of your shoulder-pains...!”

Subaru: “That... explains why my body’s not aching all over, but.”

While his body was savoring the full power of the Witch of Wrath, Subaru frantically twisted his neck to look at Minerva as she locked him in a hold.

Despite the creaking of his bones and the horribly-unnatural-looking directions his joints were being twisted in, instead of pain, all he felt was an incongruous warmth spreading throughout his body. This Witch, with the strange Authority to instill every action with restorative powers— Come to think of it, Subaru hadn’t had a single bad impression about her up to now, but,

Subaru: “What the hell are you trying to do...?”

Minerva: “If I didn’t do this, you would’ve been happily cajoled into getting all ready to sign a Contract with Echidna. This careless, braindead attitude of yours is really pissing me off!”

Echidna: “Cajole, makes it sound bad. I only remember explaining the benefits of sealing a Contract with me and working to reach a mutual understanding...”

Minerva: “It’s the way you make it sound like you’ve fulfilled your responsibility to explain that’s getting to me. You explained the benefits alright. You did... Then what about the inconvenient details that come with the Contract, you didn’t say a thing about those!”

In a fit of rage, Minerva angrily stomped down her foot. The place where her heel landed was exactly on Subaru’s butt, as he felt the inexplicable sensation of a heel driving into his rear while its force passed through him, crushing an indentation into the ground.

While feeling his bowel functions being somehow improved by this strike to his behind, to Subaru shock, he began to realize the meaning of Minerva’s words.

—It was true, that his conversation with Echidna hadn't touched on the detriments of the Contract at all. Just how was it that it took him so long notice it?

Subaru: "No, but... calling them detriments... It's not actually that serious, is it?"

Minerva: "«It won't be that bad», is that what you're thinking? You are taking Contracts way too lightly. Especially when the other person is a Witch— especially the one who, out of the seven Witches of Sins, has forged the most Contracts, interacted the most with humans, and meddled the most with the course of history. The Witch of Greed."

Echidna: "All those were my laurels in life... though it's true not every one of them would be what you'd call honorable. And, it is also true that sealing a Contract with me did not necessarily save all of them."

What Minerva put forth was something Subaru never knew about. Following on Minerva's words, Echidna insisted on her lack of any ill-will towards Subaru.

Stuck between the two as they asserted their stances, Subaru's head was at the peak of disarray. He didn't know whose words to believe.

Ever since Subaru got involved in the Trials inside the Tomb, his multiple meetings with Echidna and all the time they spent together deliberating over his worries had led him to consider her somewhat like a comrade-in-arms. And so, when she proposed to forge a Contract to formally seal their cooperation, a part of Subaru even felt relieved.

On the other hand, compared to the time he had spent with Echidna, he had had very few opportunities to speak with Minerva. Yet each time, it was when he was on the brink of collapse that she mercifully saved him with her mighty arms before exiting like a hurricane without demanding even a word of gratitude in return.

Minerva had no reason to deceive Subaru, so if it was a matter important enough for her to manifest herself to intercede, then there might be reason for him to carefully reconsider.

Or, actually, rather than pondering like this, he should first be asking this question. That is—

Subaru: "Echidna. If we seal this Contract... you'll have to get something in return, right?"

Echidna: "...Mhm, that's correct. Contracts require compensation. Just as I will offer you the knowledge you seek, you will present me with the compensation I desire."

Subaru: "Of course. Right— So, what do you want from me? If I enter a Contract with you, what will I need to give you?"

From here on, whenever he gets stuck in a hopeless deadlock and needs Echidna's help, what will he need to pay?

To his question, Echidna's cheeks softened into a smile.

Echidna: "Nothing you need to be so wary about. What I want from you is not so hard to give. In fact, since the compensation I seek is neither material, nor immaterially precious, you could say that mine is more than a fair offer."

Subaru: "—And what is it... that you want?"

Echidna: "It's simple— What you feel, what you think, what lingers within your heart, what you know, what you do, what you create, and all of the fruits you could call Unknown, born from your very existence, I want to relish... always."

Echidna's face blushed, like that of a young maiden with a crush.

The fruits you could call Unknown— that poetic phrasing made Subaru furrow his brows.

Subaru: "The hell's... that? You want me to hand over my feelings, my memories, my recollections, is that what you mean? In that case..."

Echidna: "Didn't I tell you? It's nothing so troubling. I just want to witness the sights you see, the melodies you hear, the stories you weave, all from a special box seat. All I want is to experience it. To be in a position to know the Unknowns you create. With that, and that alone, I will be satisfied."

To dispel Subaru's concerns, Echidna clearly stated her demands.

It was simply to watch Subaru walk his path. To see the same sights he sees. To know the feelings he feels, to know what he knows, and witness the results of his actions.

The Incarnation of the Thirst for Knowledge, the Witch bearing the crown of Greed, wanted only that.

Subaru: “You aren’t, lying to me, are you?”

Echidna: “Lying about the terms of a Contract would be absurd. As for myself, I pledge that I will never do anything to betray those words. I swear this on my life.”

Placing her hand on her chest, “Though, I am already dead.”, Echidna concluded with a quip.

Subaru could sense no deception in her words or behavior. Or perhaps, it was because he wanted to believe her.

Subaru: “Minerva. Since Echidna’s already said that... I think I’ll...”

???: “I—it’s all... true, but... she hasn’t, told you every, thing, h—has she?”

Just as Subaru asked Minerva to release him from her hold, this time, he heard another person’s voice addressing him. It was a voice he had heard only ten-odd minutes ago— a voice for which Subaru had absolutely no positive feelings for.

Subaru: “Carmilla... Witch of Lust!”

Carmilla: “Do... n’t... look at me... with those scary eyes. I, I’m... not even, doing any, thing... aw—awful...”

Subaru: “I was born with scary eyes. I’m not trying to make an especially intense expression or anything.”

With Subaru still held against the ground, in front of him stood Echidna and behind him was Minerva, the three of them forming a straight line, while, sitting on the grass a short distance away, was a pink-haired girl— Carmilla.

She timidly hid her face from Subaru’s gaze, and only now and then peeked over. Her attitude was irritating as always, but by consciously keeping his attention off her, he managed to avoid being captivated to a life-threatening degree. Then, he asked again,

Subaru: “But anyway, what were you talking about? I won’t complain about more Witches showing up at this point, but if there’s anyth...”

Carmilla: “E—Echidna-chan is... hiding lots and lots of things, you know...? She, isn’t lying, but... she’s hiding lots, and lots...”

Subaru: “Hiding... what...?”

Pondering over Carmilla’s words, Subaru imploringly looked towards Echidna. While Echidna turned to the newcomer, Carmilla, and narrowed one of her eyes,

Echidna: “And I was wondering why you came out all of a sudden, so it’s to bad-mouth me is it? Actually, how is it that he’s caught your eye? Unlike Minerva, I don’t see a reason why you’d get all cozy with him. I thought you didn’t like him.”

Carmilla: “A, r—rea—reason, like... Minerva-chan? No, I don’t have, any... thing like, that. But, Echidna-chan, you... tr—tricked, me... didn’t you?”

Speaking in a frail and stuttering voice, Carmilla looked down as she responded to Echidna’s methodical statements. However, unlike the frailty of her voice, the actual contents of her words implied no weakness or compromise.

Carmilla puttered her fidgety gaze around, glancing several times at Echidna,

Carmilla: “I-I don’t like... him, but, you tr—tricked, me... E—Echidna-chan, so I’m, not, on your side any, anymore, you know? People, who trick, me, h—hate, me... do, m—mean things to me, I... I will never forgive.”

—Those last words alone were spoken with incredible clarity.

It was such that, for a moment, Subaru couldn’t process the fact that those words had come from the girl beside him. So utterly detached that voice was from his impression of this girl up to now. Except,

Carmilla: “———”

Wordlessly, yet determined and unwaveringly, Carmilla stared at Echidna.

In her eyes there churned an indescribable emotion— a whirlpool of something dark and grudging, unforgiving of the one who had offended her with their transgression.

A pure mass of narcissism— that description suddenly scraped across Subaru's mind.

Echidna: "While it may've been a necessary measure, doing something contrary to Carmilla's desires was a mistake on my part. There is nothing more unenviable than making an enemy of you, Carmilla."

Carmilla: "E—everyone, is, on my side... so, it, won't be pleasant, to have me, hate, you... you know? You can, a—apologize, but, I won't, forgive, you..."

Carmilla wasn't just an equal balance of timidity and rebellion. Her personality was so introverted that she was too timid to even properly communicate with others— But that had very little to do with the intensity of her retribution against those who wronged her.

Subaru: "What've you all been... What've you all been talking about!?"

Finally disrupting the perilous atmosphere between the Witches, Subaru broke his silence and blurted out. Feeling the gazes of all three Witches falling on him, Subaru frantically turned his neck, and,

Subaru: "How long are you gonna leave me out of the conversation!? I, I'm the one who must make a decision here! Say it in a way I can understand! Echidna, what're you hiding!? And you two, what is it you know that's making you want to stop me!?"

Minerva: "“Even saying that you're in a mentally frail position, stopping all thinking and immediately going to grasp an offered hand is totally naïve... and what guided you into doing that was all of your oh-so-careful planning!"

Echidna: "You make me sound like a villain. Won't that make him misunderstand? If we seal this Contract, I will certainly help him, and guide him to the optimal destination he desires. My only request is to see what he sees, hear what he hears, and learn what he learns in the process. Not a single one of the things I said was false."

Minerva blasted back at the protesting Subaru, her voice trembling in rage. All the while, Echidna remained calm as always.

Listening to the pristine clarity of Echidna's voice, Subaru began sensing that something was awry. Having overcome the state of heated delirium up to now, he once again scrutinized over Echidna's words. Over her attitude, and why the other two Witches tried to stop him.

What was out of place? She didn't say anything strange. Both the other two Witches acknowledged that she wasn't lying. So then, where was the problem...?

Echidna: "I will repeat, Natsuki Subaru. If you choose me, choose to seal this Contract with me—I will without fail lead you to the place you desire..."

???: "—«In the end», would be the necessary disclaimer to this promise, right? Haa..."

Just as Echidna reached out her hand to Subaru, a listless voice covered over her words.

Looking up, he saw a monster made of magenta hair who had appeared opposite to Carmilla— sitting on the ground, buried in her own long hair, it was the Witch of Sloth.

The increasing number of Witches didn't surprise Subaru anymore. But, what Subaru did pick up was,

Subaru: "In the, end...?"

Sekhmet: "I'm sure Echidna, huu... is certain to fulfill the Contract, haa. But, so long as she maintains the fact, huuu... that she intends to fulfill the Contract, haa... she can probably do whatever she likes in the process, huu."

Subaru: "Do, whatever she—"

Tying together Sekhmet's intermittent, huffing words with the sense of awryness he had felt earlier, a single explanation emerged in Subaru's mind.

But that explanation was simply too hard to accept. His face stiffening in shock, Subaru looked towards Echidna, who had closed her eyes, and,

Subaru: "Echidna, if I Contract with you... without fail, you will definitely lead me to the optimal future, that's what you're saying?"

Echidna: "Yes, it is. That is a fact. Without a doubt, I will carry out this Contract to the end. With my knowledge and your ability, we will certainly be able to achieve it."

Yes, surely, the Contract will be properly fulfilled.

There were no lies in Echidna's words. If Subaru cooperates with her, they will certainly be able to save everyone and reach that perfect future. However,

Subaru: "As you guide me towards the optimal future— will we be taking the optimal path?"

Echidna: "——"

Subaru: "Will you truly be doing everything in your power to bring me to the place I desire?"

Echidna: "——"

Subaru: "Why're... you saying nothing. Answer me, Echidna... no... Witch of Greed!!!"

Lifting his head, Subaru screamed at the top of his lungs.

Though still held against the ground with his joints locked in place, Subaru paid it no heed as he single-mindedly glared at Echidna.

On the other end of his razor-sharp gaze, Echidna let out a small sigh.

Echidna: "—If you wish to reach the optimal future, you will have to permit certain sacrifices along the way. Could it be that you lack even that resolve, Natsuki Subaru?"

Subaru: "———Ugh."

Her response neither affirmed nor denied what Subaru had asked her. But Subaru had realized it.

Echidna's words just now weren't meant to dispel his doubts. Instead, as if intending to make her thoughts known to him, she spread out her arms,

Illustration from Volume 12, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Echidna: “This extraordinary ability you possess, Return by Death, is an incredible authority. Its utility is something you don’t yet truly comprehend. By refusing to allow endings that are contrary to your desires, you repeatedly retry, and repeatedly reach for the future— that is the near-perfect ideal for a researcher. But of course. In the first place, once an event has reached its outcome, it would mean that no other outcome could take its place. While in the process of reaching an outcome, it is possible to hypothesize on various possibilities of what that outcome may be. Such an approach under such conditions can serve to verify such various propositions. But when there is an actual result you want to reach, the outcome of each experiment and the hypothesis it verifies must forever remain singular. All the while, to truly reproduce the exact same conditions is impossible. No matter how meticulous the preparation, deviation from the conditions of that particular point in time is inevitable. And so too, is the question, «what would the results have been if I had done things differently?»— Forever out of the reach of an researcher such as myself, instead being what you’d call a dream beyond a dream. Possessing the Memories of the World, there are indeed ways in which I could come to know the answers. But while they exist, I have no desire to use or rely on such methods. My desire to know is not simply a desire to have knowledge. Even for me, that distinction is quite a contradictory and loathsome thing. But I’m getting carried away, let’s return to the topic at hand... For one such as myself, with no choice but to accept the singularity of the outcomes, having but one means of observation, your existence and your Authority is a godsend. Using the exact same conditions to conduct a different test, and see a different outcome from what originally should have been— who would not desire such ultimate Authority? Seeing it laid before one’s eyes, who could go without first trying absolutely everything? Of course, I have no intention of taking it by force. In the end, you will be the one making full use of Return by Death for your own purposes. I will ensure that you reach your desired future to the absolute best of my ability. And, in the process, if possible, I would fully like to sate my curiosity to the fullest possible extent. Surely, you won’t fault me for such a measly request. You will get your answers. I will sate my curiosity. Our interests are entirely aligned. Since I don’t know the answers myself, I certainly won’t misguide you on purpose towards the most wretched endings possible. When first encountering a problem, I’ll be just as ignorant as you are to what the optimal solution may be. So together, we will ponder, agonize, and find the answers as partners. I can say this without the slightest embarrassment. I am immensely fond of you, that is, for your capacity to increase my means of inquiry, and I swear I will never do anything to impede you. Of course, when initially without answers, I cannot guarantee a smooth resolution to every problem even with my help. While I can aid you with the strength of my knowledge, I can never directly interfere with reality. Should the obstacle before you require physical, material strength, I cannot help you. Time after time, perhaps in the hundreds and thousands, your mind and body may be shattered and torn. But even should that hypothetically happen, I will faithfully tend to your heart. I must admit that not wanting to lose something as useful as you is part of that wish of mine. But, my fondness for you, and my intention to lend you my strength is genuine. I hope you won't think badly of me. Though I've said this over and over, I am confident that I will prove valuable to achieving your purposes. Indeed, just as I will be, in a sense, using you to satisfy the curiosity you also call my greed, you can also use me to attain your perfect future. To be that kind of overly convenient girl you can take advantage of, for me, is entire satisfaction. If doing so will motivate you, then I will gladly submit my being to you. Alas, I suppose that would be unfair to those girls within your thoughts—the subjects of your longing, the silver-haired half-elf, and the blue-haired Demon, the girls that your heart has sworn to save and protect. I won't go into what I think about the intense emotions you feel towards them, but I will simply state that the barricade standing before you is far greater than you could possibly imagine. Just the obstacles you are aware of now already have you struggling at your wit's end. While your resolve to overcome them alone is admirable, it would be far too desperate a fight. There is not the slightest falsehood in my desire to lend you my help. And you have every reason to make use of my willingness. You must use everything you have, use everything you can, and only then can you save the ones you hold dear. Isn't that what you have vowed, and the conviction you took onto the painful path you have chosen? That is why I challenge you, repeat with you, and feel for you. The path you have sacrificed your lives to forge, as ironic as it is, has now been validated in the form of the Second Trial. Perhaps, the Trial might offer the illusion that it existed to make you understand the nature of the path you have walked, and as such, was necessary. Yet the truth is that it was not necessary, and those scenes in fact only served to wear down your heart. However, between a state of ignorance and a state of knowing, no matter how appalling the truth may be, I will always value the latter. Up until now, and also from now on, you will need to present your life as compensation for Return by Death, and in doing so seize the perfect future. As you do so, you will constantly keep in the back of your mind the possibility that the sacrifices you have made and those worlds themselves might still exist in some form or another. Someday, you'll cease to feel any emotion when it comes to paying with your life, your human emotions will wane, you'll cease to be rattled by the deaths of those precious to you, you'll submerge into a life of impassive, indifferent inertia, and even should you reach the optimum future, you will be reaching it as an impaired version of yourself. For the sake of avoiding this kind of future, where the only thing that remains is a vain feeling, this was necessary. Indeed, there is not a single useless thing in this world, every path is necessary, everything is an indispensable piece of the puzzle. The Trial was necessary for you to comprehend that. If you need to make sense of the reasons why you have now stopped in your tracks, then you can think of it this way. And I will affirm your thoughts. If my words can give you the strength to move forward, then I will endeavor to give them. Be it consolation, incitement, whispers of love, or evocations of contempt, if it can become your strength, then I will not hesitate to use it. You might hate it, but you will certainly need me on your path ahead. If you are to proceed along this road of unavoidable pain and solitude, then you will need someone to walk alongside you who will never veer their sight from the path. If you leave this role to me and to no one else, then I am willing to walk this road alongside you without question. I will repeat it, I will restate it, I will convey it as many times as necessary until it reaches you— You need me. And I need you. I need you immensely. My curiosity can no longer be quenched by anything except you. You are the only one in existence who can satisfy me. My insatiable Greed will surely be fulfilled by you alone. Your existence is already indispensable to me in this closed-off world. If you wish to be someone else's hope and use your power to slice open their world, could you not take pity on my miserable self so that I may partake in the fallen scraps as well? If you will bequeath me this kindness, then without a moment's hesitation, I will offer up my body, my knowledge, and my soul. And so, I beg of you. Please trust me. That I haven't told you my true feelings until now was never because I wanted to deceive you. I was merely waiting for the right moment to do so. At this stage, the instant I appealed to you with even a fragment of my true intentions, you surely would have left me. That would have been an unbearable loss to me. And of course, for you as well, as it would certainly be a loss in the sense that you'd be distancing yourself from the future you seek. Although, with the power of Return by Death, you will inevitably reach your desired future. Nevertheless, it will certainly be preferable to reach that future while paying as little in compensation as possible. With me, with me you can lighten that price. I do not want you to make the mistake of thinking that this means that as long as you reach the desired future, the details can be held in contempt. Indeed, falling into temptation and failing to advise you of the optimal path just so I can see the end of a thread is not something which I am so confident in my control over my desires that I can guarantee will never happen. This I will confess. But I will never mislead you. If, on the off-chance I do betray your trust in this way, I will under no circumstances try to hide it from you. I will certainly disclose it. And then, do everything in my power to repair that damaged trust. No matter what happens, I will deliver you to the perfect future you desire. Absolutely, absolutely. And now, if you agree that this is necessary, then won't you choose me? All I want from you, all I ask of you is as I have mentioned in the Contract. After that, it is simply a matter of how much suffering you are willing to endure for your desired, coveted wish. I have told you my resolve. Now I would like to hear yours. Prove it to me, seal this Contract with me, enlist my assistance, and muster the will to reach your destined future. Do so, and you may for the first time boast that you have conquered the Second Trial. From there, proceed to the Third Trial, and overcoming that, liberate the Sanctuary. When you consider the calamity to befall your loves and those precious to you, this is indeed exactly yet another Trial you must surmount. Show me that you have the strength and resolve to overcome it. Once you do, use me, plunder me, drink my knowledge, and take hold of the future ahead. What I desire from you, what I request from you, and what I offer you in return is as I have stated. All is as I have sincerely, honestly, willingly confessed it. So now, I want you to tell me. What is your decision? For the sake of sating a fragment of my curiosity too, of course.”

—A lovely smile rose onto Echidna’s face.

With her white, snow-like hair swaying and her cheeks flushed red from the heat of passion, she turned up her eyes to Subaru, awaiting his answer. Echidna’s eyelashes trembled in trepidation for his reply, as her fingers holding her chest anxiously fidgeted about. Her lips tried several times to speak, but, hesitating, she merely moistened them with her tongue.

Subaru looked up into the eyes of the one restraining him, Minerva.

For a while, they went on staring at each other, until Minerva spilled a small sigh and finally released Subaru’s arm. Freed from her hold, Subaru stood up with a roll of his shoulders.

Just as Minerva promised, the aching in his shoulders was gone. In fact, he could feel that his somewhat tensed waist and other parts of his body have been purged of their fatigue as well. Such was the terrifying healing of the Witch of Wrath’s Authority.

Subaru: “———”

Rolling out various parts of his body, Subaru checked the sensations in his limbs as he reorganized his thoughts.

About what he had heard just now, of Echidna’s unreserved, truest of true intentions.

Subaru: “Echidna.”

Echidna: “Yes?”

Subaru: “You’re... going to use me?”

To use, and be used. That was what Echidna had repeatedly proclaimed in her speech. Hearing it, Echidna nodded without hesitation.

Illustration from Volume 12, coloring by Setowi (source)

Echidna: “I am. Just as you may use me. The Contract is merely a safeguard should either of us stray from that agreement. If you wish to chastise me for wanting to do everything in my power to hold onto you, then I can only resignedly accept it.”

Subaru: “It’s not that I haven’t thought about it... Ultimately, that’s what mutual interest is, I understand this too. As much as I hoped that you were only helping me out of the kindness of your heart... I was at least prepared to accept the reality that you weren’t. But...”

In front of Echidna, Subaru covered his face with his hand and leaned back his head.

Subaru: “It’s just, not there anymore...”

Echidna: “What... isn’t?”

Subaru: “Everything you have done up to this point... looks faded to me now. Every warmth you have shown me, everything that made me want to trust you, to start believing that perhaps you weren’t a bad person after all... All of it, has faded.”

Everything from their first meeting to this moment suddenly collapsed with a thud. Their first tea party, the scene during the Trial, interrupted by reality, when he countless times clung to her wisdom, her words. When he thought he could not regret forming a contract with her.

—All of it was now mercilessly jeering at Natsuki Subaru’s foolishness.

Subaru: “Was this your intention from the start?”

Echidna: “I don’t see what you have a problem with? If it means reaching the optimal future, then you won’t hesitate to take whatever path to get there— isn’t that the resolve you have made? You yourself have affirmed it, and I was merely agreeing and giving you a push on the back...”

Subaru: “When I decided that... when I hadn’t yet, and you tried to guide me down that path, was that all a part of your plan...? Is that what you’re telling me?”

Echidna: “I wouldn’t want you to misunderstand. That conclusion was entirely your own. All I’ve done was give you a little nudge. To blame your own conclusions on someone else is something I cannot agree with. I cannot agree with it, and I am not so meek that I’d just sit down and take it.”

Pouting up her lips, Echidna's face sulked in protest. That display of emotion was so childish and out of place that it only intensified Subaru's sense of incongruity.

Somehow, there was just something off about the degree of her affectations.

There was nothing wrong with where Echidna expressed her emotions. She would be indignant when doubted, smile when there was something to be happy about, and let slip glimpses of grief when there was reason to be sad. All of these were on point, and without error.

Yet this sense of incongruity, and the distrust it inspired, was because—

Subaru: "All your emotions are synthetic... and superficial."

Echidna: "———"

Subaru: "Whether you're happy, or mad, your emotions are equally childish and shallow. Just now, when you were riled, all you did was pout. It had nothing to do with magnanimity. Your reactions... All your reactions have been strange. Before... I had thought... you were just an easy-going, open-minded person, but..."

Echidna: "———"

Subaru: "The truth is something else. You're... You're someone who can't understand other people's emotions at all."

Recalling all of Echidna's behavior up to now, it was as if everything had been toned in sepia.

What he had previously imagined to be her good nature had in fact merely been owing to the shallowness of her emotions. The moment he saw through this, all their interactions abruptly faded of color.

And, even when showered by these unsparing words, Echidna's face remained unchanged from the sulking expression from before. As if she didn't know any way to express any greater discomfort.

Subaru: "This is where you're supposed to be angry, you know."

Echidna: "...Is that so. So here is where I should raise my voice, and shower you with insults? I see, now I learned something. I'll make sure I do so the next time I get the opportunity."

With the fall of Subaru's words, Echidna's expression vanished.

Expressionless—— it was something Subaru had never seen from the Echidna he knew. This was the true face of the Witch of Greed.

In front of Subaru, who had fallen into silence, Echidna snapped her fingers. In an instant, the destroyed hillock was restored to its original shape, and the shattered table and scattered chairs were formed anew.

Echidna sat down in one of the chairs, and pointed to the one opposite her,

Echidna: "Would you like to sit? I'd like us to iron out the details of the Contract."

Subaru: "...With things as they are, do you still think I'll readily consider a Contract with you?"

Echidna: "Unless, you are really going to reject me over such a small disagreement? What would be the point of that? Driven by the impulse of a moment to abandon the correct choice cannot be considered wise. I suggest you take a good look at reality and select the most rational course of action."¹³⁸

Faced with Echidna's words that were frozen of emotion, Subaru closed his eyes and held his breath. Echidna was right. Subaru was the one who was losing himself to impulse—— There was no way around it. Her argument was sound. Nor was she lying. All Echidna did was hide her true intentions from Subaru. She had merely kept silent about how she benefited from observing Subaru on his path.

If he sealed this Contract, chances were he would finally reach the correct solutions. And that he would obtain Echidna's unreserved cooperation was also an indisputable fact.

Subaru: "There is one thing... I've been meaning to ask you the moment I got to see you again."

Echidna: "——Hm, and what is that?"

Subaru: "Once I hear the answer, I think I'll be ready to choose."

Echidna awaited Subaru's question.

¹³⁸ Note by SummaryAnon: "Echidna's pronoun once again reverts from her usual «boku» (ボク) to «watashi» (わたし)."

Subaru would put forth this question as his touchstone: the question he hadn't been able to find even a fragment of an answer to since embarking on the loops starting in the Sanctuary. A question which she could not possibly have nothing to do with.

Subaru: “—You know about Beatrice, don't you, Echidna.”

Echidna: “...Yes, I do. I was rather deeply involved in her creation, in fact. Did something happen with her?”

Echidna returned this innocent reply, seemingly bearing no hidden meaning, yet rife with questions all the same.

Subaru closed his eyes once more, seeing the girl with drill-curls in his mind.

In her last moments, with her back pierced through, just before she vanished.

At the end of her long, long solitude, the shadow she had cast within him remained heavy in his heart.

Knocking Subaru aside, shielding him from that murderous blade, that final expression she showed him—even now, was seared into the back of his eyes, refusing to fade. And so,

Subaru: “Because of her Contract, Beatrice has been waiting for That Person to come. Are you the one who forged this Contract with her? Are you the one who bound her to the mansion?”

Echidna: “I don't remember specifying a location... but I was the one who received her promise to guard the Forbidden Library and to wait for someone to come.”

Subaru: “Then... who is That Person? What'll I have to do to free her?”

Through four-hundred years of solitude, Beatrice had been waiting for someone. Yet not even Beatrice herself knew who that someone was. Nor did Subaru have the slightest clue.

But if he asked Echidna herself, the one who had arranged this promise in the first place—

Echidna: “Now who would it be, I wonder?”

Subaru: “—Ah, uh?”

Echidna: “Nono, I wasn’t joking, I really am wondering. Who do you think Beatrice’s awaited person would be?”

Echidna asked, as if she had been presented with a question she did not know the answer to. Stunned by this reply, Subaru shook his head,

Subaru: “Even you... don’t know who Beatrice is waiting for?”

Echidna: “No, I don’t. I have no idea who Beatrice’s awaited person would be.”

Subaru: “But... how? Weren’t you the one who told her to wait in the Forbidden Library? If you don’t know, then... unless...”

The one who instructed Beatrice to wait in the Forbidden Library was Echidna, but it could’ve been someone else who set the condition for her to wait for That Person to come.

If so, then the one who would know the answer would again be someone else—

Echidna: “No, you’re mistaken.”

Subaru: “———”

Echidna: “I was the one who instructed Beatrice to wait for That Person. You weren’t wrong about that. What you got wrong was something more fundamental.”

Subaru: “Funda... mental?”

Echidna: “Just why in the world did I seal this Contract with Beatrice? That is where you are misunderstanding. I made Beatrice guard the Forbidden Library so that she could give its contents to That Person, is that what you thought?”

He couldn’t understand what Echidna was saying.

It was just a natural assumption. When instructing someone to give something to someone else, naturally, the intention was for that thing to end up in the right person’s hands.

But, in front of Subaru’s instinctive interpretation, Echidna shook her head, and said,

Echidna: “That wasn’t the point of my instruction to Beatrice. I sealed the Contract with her, having her wait for That Person... while waiting for the result of just who she would choose That Person to be.”

Subaru: “———”

Subaru: “———”

Subaru: “—————”

Subaru: “—————”

Subaru: “—————What?”

Echidna: “You see, that child was created for a specific purpose. But necessity arose for her to live in a way that differed from her original purpose... For that, she had to go far away from here, and there, she needed to be given a new purpose. For that child, who was now hollow, it was necessary to give her a reason to live. It was for that, that I sealed this Contract with her.”

Subaru: “—Tha... t’s.”

Echidna: “Watching over the Forbidden Library, and eventually handing it over in its entirety to That Person who was destined to come. I placed no limitations, since, in the first place, there is no correct answer. She stays alive just as planned, and I have another result to look forward to. It’s quite logical, don’t you think?”

Subaru: “———”

Echidna: “Of course, going four-hundred years without choosing anyone is yet another result. So was the fact that she did not simply choose one of the people she had met in her days to be That Person. And potentially, her deliberations over whether to break the Contract, desiring for her own death, is also another result.”

Subaru: “And how... do you feel about that?”

Echidna: “—? It’s quite marvelous, I think.”

As if she had just been asked something incredibly obvious, Echidna innocently tilted her head.

That reply, that attitude, and the expression of the girl he saw in his mind, all led him to the answer.

It's decided. Understood. Clearly understood.

—His misconception about who this person was that he was dealing with, has been rectified.

Subaru: "Echidna... You really, are a Witch."

Echidna: "——"

Subaru: "An indecipherable, unfathomable, monster."

Echidna: "——"

He told her. The answer that was in his heart.

He withdrew the hand he had almost given her, and as for who it would now reach out to, he has already decided.

Subaru: "I... I can't take your hand. I've already decided whose hand I'll be taking."

Echidna: "——"

Subaru: "With those callous, binding words, without the slightest malice, you stole four-hundred years from that girl— I've already decided. I'll be taking that girl's hand. Not yours."

That was their farewell. With it, he shook away the hand of the one he once thought would walk alongside him.

He lifted his face. And looked forward.

Beneath his eyelids, he saw that girl's final expression.

—Disappearing, dying, afraid, twisted as if about to cry, but nonetheless relieved that she had protected Subaru.

He would take the hand of the girl who mourned his death, that much was decided.

Echidna: “———”

Echidna’s eyes narrowed. Flickers of thought flashed through her irises as if pondering on what words to say to Subaru.

Yet before she could, the change had arrived.

Minerva: “———She’s here.”

Carmilla: “Oh, no, I... I don’t want, anything, to do with... this, anymore.”

Sekhmet: “At a troublesome time, a troublesome girl, has come to cause more trouble, haa...”

The three onlooking Witches all gave their respective reactions.

He felt an overwhelming pressure on his back.

While in front, staring at what was behind him, Echidna’s eyes slightly widened. Following her astonished gaze, Subaru turned around, and saw it——

???: “———”

——With everything above her neck shrouded in pitch darkness, there stood the Witch of Envy.

Character Pages for Volume 12

Characters

Re: Life in a different world
from zero

Characters

Re: Life in a different world
from zero

The only ability I got in a different world "Returns by Death"
I die again and again to save her.

カーミラ
Carmilla

『色欲』の魔女。明るい桃色の髪を
腰まで伸ばし、ゆるく纏めている。
伏し目がちでおどおどとした印象の美少女。

セクメト

Sekhmet

『怠惰』の魔女。
無造作に伸びた赤紫の髪が
特徴的な気だるげな美女。

あとがき

今回も初期デザインも
大公開!

大兔 初期 Ver.

通常は絆創膏でツノを
隠してる設定でした

セク外 初期 Ver.

前巻から
おハロツブームが
続いている
セク外姉さんも
下着姿になる
ところでした...

Web Novel Volume 13

Arc 4 Chapter 76 - ≠Satella

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 1 “The Sounds that Make You Want to Cry”, Part 1

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

—This would be the first time Subaru had ever met face to face with the Witch herself like this.

The Witch of Envy, it was a name which he had heard countless times before, and a Witch whose threat he had experienced first-hand during their showdown in that loop inside the Sanctuary.

Defying the rules she had one-sidedly imposed upon him, it wasn't once or twice that he had tasted the pain of his heart being crushed within her grasp, nor was it easy for him to have any positive impressions of the Witch who possessed Emilia's body while unleashing destruction upon the Sanctuary.

It was especially so now, after his last conversation with Echidna had spawned within him an aversion to the word “Witch” itself. But,

Subaru: “Right... this one... is on a whole different level from the other Witches.”

Facing the pressure emanating from the Witch standing before him, Subaru squeezed out this hoarse mutter.

It was a slender woman.

Standing languishingly with her arms dangling at her sides, she seemed to be staring at Subaru. Shrouding over her body was a pitch-black dress— literally woven from the shadows rising from her feet, pulsing, as if in rhythm with her heartbeat.

Though her sleeves were long, he could eerily see her hands from the tips of her pale fingers up to her wrists. Chances were, like the other Witches, the Witch of Envy must be exceedingly beautiful.

But the most vital piece required to confirm this was missing.

Subaru: “Seen it quite a few times now... but what’s the deal with that?”

An impenetrable shadow covered everything above the Witch’s neck, making visual confirmation impossible. Unlike the darkness of her dress, the shadow drifted about like a mist, hiding the face of the Witch of Envy from Subaru.

The Witch gave no reaction to the dumbstruck Subaru’s question.

Driven by the surging apprehension scorching inside his heart, sweat emerged on Subaru’s forehead as he looked to the ones around him— at the other four Witches, watching in absolute silence.

Subaru: “———”

But when he saw the change in their expressions, Subaru was taken aback.

As far as he knew, the relationship between the Witch of Envy and the other Witches was that between a murderer and her victims. To meet their own killer— Subaru was at least aware of how much mental distress that should bring.

But the expressions on the Witches’ faces were nothing like what Subaru had imagined.

One was a gentle smile, one was a gaze of saddened sympathy, one was of innocent indifference, and lastly—

Echidna: “So you have broken my boundary to get in here. Brazenly trespassing into my Dream Citadel... always the egotist, aren’t you.”

Only one, Echidna, glared at the Witch of Envy with eyes of pure hostility.

Seeing that hatred, or something like it, from none other than Echidna astonished Subaru. Just now, he had voiced his final farewell thinking that she was incapable of such feelings, yet this blatant outpour of emotion made him wonder if he had been mistaken.

Although, realistically speaking, the time for such thoughts had already passed. Right now, the problem was how to deal with this motionless Witch before his eyes.

Subaru: “But why is she here in the firs...”

Minerva: “Because you made her mad by blabbing about stuff you shouldn’t have? I don’t know what to do with men like you who can’t keep their mouth shut. I can kinda get why she’d be furious.”

Subaru: “What, I don’t get it... I mean, are you actually taking her side? I thought you and the Witches were her enemies.”

Minerva: “Enemies, that is such a stupid thing to hear... We’ll see if you are right or wrong about that and show you.”

Narrowing her eyes at Subaru, Minerva swayed her blond hair as she jolted into action.

Cutting in front of the Witch of Envy’s line of sight that was fixed on Subaru, she pushed out her busty chest as she magnificently faced down the Witch. And then,

Minerva: “Can you hear me? It’s me, Minerva? The Witch of Wrath, Minerva? If you remember me and hear me, say something?”

Subaru: “—! No, w—wait! As far as I know, talking won’t work with her! If you do anything weird to provoke her...”

Sekhmet: “Just keep quiet and watch, haa.”

In Subaru’s eyes, what Minerva was doing could only be called reckless. But just as he tried to stop her, he was interrupted by the hairball sprawling on the ground, Sekhmet.

Subaru turned around, while the magenta-colored hairball that was Sekhmet slightly shifted in size,

Sekhmet: “The time we spent together with that thing, huu... is many times longer than what your short interactions have been, haa. It’s only natural that you’d be worried, huu... But you can leave it to Minerva, haa... She does things without thinking sometimes, huu. But, that’s probably not the case this time, haa...”

Minerva: “I can hear you, Sekhmet! If you don’t want me to mess up the conversation and get all of us swallowed, then don’t say things that’ll make me mad! I’m completely enraged here!”

Sekhmet: “When you can get mad at people, huu... just for breathing in front of you, haa... what am I supposed to do, huu.”

Even while getting hit with that unflattering critique, Minerva did not take her eyes off the threat in front of her.

The Witch of Envy also made no reaction to this little back and forth, but only stood there, unmoving, staring through the Witch of Wrath at Subaru.

Indeed, this was definitely a departure from the direct, instinctive reactions the Witch had exhibited up to now. But all that meant was that she hadn’t taken any hostile actions so far, and whether or not a conversation could be established between them was still a different matter.

All the while, as Sekhmet left the conversation entirely to Minerva, the other two Witches—

Carmilla: “Well I—I... think, if, Minerva-chan, tr—tries her, best... i—it’ll, turn out, alright... you know? But if, she... hu—hurts, Minerva-chan... I—I’ll kill, her.”

Echidna: “I don’t doubt it, but as I’ve told you before, your affinity is terrible with that thing. The only one here who can resist it is Sekhmet— Do you understand?”

Echidna kept her voice as calm as she could as she pacified the stuttering but belligerent Carmilla. Meanwhile, the bundle of hair shuddered as she noticed the white-haired Witch’s gaze, as if even replying was too much of a nuisance.

Sekhmet: “Even I can’t keep its movements sealed for long, haa. You know that my abilities aren’t suited for that, huu.”

Echidna: “Of course I know. That’s why you just need to pulverize its limbs and throttle its neck. Once you disable its movements and stop it from breathing, I can abolish it from this space with my own hands.”

There was enough hostility in Echidna’s words to make Carmilla’s statement seem cute. Though she said it with a casual air, the unconcealable disgust seeping into her voice made it clear that she wasn’t joking. In front of the Witch of Envy, only Echidna left no shred of doubt about the certainty of her contempt.

While this perilous conversation was going on behind her, Minerva continued her standoff against the Witch of Envy. In fact, as if trying to keep the Witch of Envy from overhearing the other Witches, she took a step closer.

Subaru: “———”

Subaru gulped down his breath as he watched Minerva’s advance. While her actions simply seemed insane to Subaru, it made even less sense why the Witch of Envy appeared here in the first place.

If this was like the previous times, the Witch of Envy would have shown up because Subaru had violated the taboo. But the Witch’s methods so far had been materializing her arm to clench at his heart and physically appearing in the real world to swallow everything into shadow.

Friendly interactions were obviously impossible, so the Witch of Envy had never even explained what her intentions were. Her goals were just as mysterious now as they were from the very beginning. And so, just how the Witch would react to Minerva’s actions was still completely unknown to Subaru.

—If Minerva got swallowed by the shadow, the other three behind her would move instantly.

If Echidna’s expectations for Sekhmet were justified, the Witch of Sloth should be able to crush the Witch of Envy with her Authority, and Echidna would be able to expel the weakened Witch of Envy from this place. But if that was the case—

Subaru just couldn’t understand why they weren’t doing it now.

Subaru: “———”

Speaking of strange, the fact that Minerva was tasked with communication with the Witch of Envy in the first place was very strange.

Carmilla only swore to retaliate if something happened, Sekhmet did not seem to want any active hostility, and even Echidna, overflowing with contempt, did not defy Minerva’s wishes by ordering a preemptive strike.

Just what on earth were they thinking—

Echidna: “You look like you are getting spun around trying to understand us Witches just now.”

Subaru: “...”

Echidna: “Although, if our... I mean, if our thoughts could be seen through so easily, we wouldn’t be called Witches. I’d feel troubled if you took us so lightly.¹³⁹”

Subaru: “Cut it out with the fake *Bokukko*¹⁴⁰ already— I just thought if you really wanted to expel the Witch of Envy, now would be the best chance to do it while she’s defenseless.”

Echidna: “I see. Is that how you perceive this situation? Oh my... Mhm, is that right. Personally, I’m all for what you are proposing. After all, nothing would make me happier than to bash that thing with every Authority at my disposal and annihilate it until not even a speck of dust remains, but...”

Cutting off her words there, Echidna narrowed her eyes. That attitude wasn’t like her at all— it wasn’t like he really knew her even now, but Subaru nevertheless sensed a certain reluctance that was entirely unlike her as he waited for her next words.

After a short silence, Echidna continued,

Echidna: “Doing everything in my power to eradicate that thing and having the other Witches turn on me would be putting cart before ground dragon¹⁴¹. Even disregarding Minerva, it’d be a rather terrible bet to make enemies of Sekhmet and Typhon.”

Subaru: “I don’t get it. Why would expelling the Witch of Envy make them turn on you? She’s your enemy, the same should go for all of you...”

Carmilla: “It’s, not like, that...though...?”

Carmilla, who had kept silent up to now, suddenly interrupted Subaru’s question. Without looking at the startled Subaru, Carmilla went on watching Minerva’s standoff against the Witch of Envy, and quietly stuttered, ¹³⁹ Note by TranslationChicken: “Echidna’s started using «boku» (ボク) to refer to herself again”.

¹⁴⁰ A girl that uses the pronoun “boku” (ボク), which is primarily used by boys and young men. Most are Tomboys or completely unaware of social norms.

¹⁴¹ Stylization! Original expression used by both SummaryAnon and TranslationChicken was “cart before horse”, which isn’t wrong, but have you ever seen a horse in the ReZero world?

Carmilla: “Envy is, everyone’s, enemy... that’s... right, but, that thing... and, her... are, different, you know?”

Subaru: “...What’s that supposed to mean? What are you guys...”

Sekhmet: “As long as we don’t know... which one that thing over there is, huu... it’s not just that we don’t want to... it’d also be unreasonable... haa...”

Subaru: “Which... one...?”

Sekhmet followed up with her explanation. But hearing it only threw Subaru into even further disarray. What on earth were they talking about? Yet, the answer came from a different direction.

Taking a step forward, Minerva moved closer to the Witch of Envy. She spread out her arms, assuming a posture of nonresistance, and asked the Witch of Envy,

Minerva: “—Are you the Witch of Envy? Or are you Satella? Which?”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

He felt like he had just heard something that would turn everything he knew on its head.

Minerva’s question ran completely contrary to what Subaru thought he understood. But the silence of the other Witches who had personally lived through that era only confirmed that Minerva was neither confused nor joking.

Hearing Minerva’s call, for the first time, the Witch of Envy’s shoulders trembled. The black mist concealing her head writhed, as she apparently turned towards Minerva.

—It was only now that the Witch seemed to have noticed Minerva’s existence.

Subaru: “———”

There was no time for Subaru to ask, “what did she mean by that?”, even as the sense of apprehension tightening in his throat rapidly exacerbated his restlessness.

The Witches' affirmation only further confounded Subaru's thoughts. Since, Minerva's words would mean that---

---The Witch of Envy, Satella. This character might in fact be someone else...

No. That would be over-interpreting from the little information he was given.

How many times had he gone through painful experiences because he fell into such stubborn assumptions with only superficial clues to go on? Although he must always consider the possibilities, he must not get stuck on any particular idea.

More importantly, he couldn't afford to divert his attention from the scene before him for even a second.

Minerva: "Since you didn't attack me after the very first question... There's still a chance."

Saying this, Minerva closed the distance.

Between the Witch of Wrath and the Witch of Envy, there were now only five steps remaining.

Minerva: "Though, if you were the Witch of Envy, I'd be surprised you didn't attack out of jealousy the moment I stood between you two... So I'm not that worried."

Four steps.

Minerva: "Then again, you could've said something right from the start. I know it's hard to have this face-to-face considering our relationship. And your last expression when you swallowed me back then isn't something I can forget."

Three steps.

Minerva: "Rather than the other five, I thought it'd be way better if it was me. Besides Typhon, out of the other Witches, I was your... closest friend, I believed."

Two steps. She lowered her head.

Minerva: "Yeah, that's what I thought... and because I thought this...!"

Stooping down, with only two steps between them, Minerva leaned forward, pouring her strength into her back leg. And,

Minerva: “Do you realize what it feels like to be ignored, when it’s been so long—!?”

The ground exploded, instantly annihilating the distance between them.

Minerva charged forward leaving a cloud of dust in her wake as she twisted her body to punch with all her might. Piercing the air, breaking through the sound barrier with a thunderous clap, the strike continued towards the Witch’s head, drilling towards the shadow obscuring her visage, and—

Minerva: “—There, I knew it.”

Minerva’s fist miraculously stopped mere inches from the Witch’s face.

It wasn’t because the Witch’s shadow reached out to tangle her arm. But instead, Minerva had intentionally stopped just before the strike would reach her.

With her fist still extended, Minerva leaned back, swaying her golden hair,

Minerva: “Look, see? She knew there was no need to dodge my punches, it’s Satella, not the Witch of Envy. Echidna, you were worrying too much.”

Echidna: “...I wonder. While I honestly admire your courage in using your own body to test it out, it’s no guarantee that it is as you say. It could just be that it perceived your threat to be so negligible that it naturally didn’t react. As such, Sekhmet...”

Sekhmet: “You’ll find any reason you can to get me to move, huu... and you are just as bad at knowing when to give up, Echidna, haa... Admit it, that’s Satella, huu.”

Sekhmet let out a sigh at the silenced Echidna. Still curled up as a ball of hair, the Witches’ final weapon showed no intention of moving. Then, standing within reach of the Witch— Satella, Minerva turned back to Subaru.

Seeing himself reflected within her pale-blue eyes, still unable to take in the fact that she was standing right beside that enormous threat, Subaru only stood there, dumbstruck.

Seeing this, Minerva snorted, and pouted with a dissatisfied expression,

Minerva: “What are you standing there for? Come on, get over here.”

Subaru: “Get... over... well, even if you say that...”

Minerva: “What, are you a man or not? I’m all the way over here and proved that it’s fine, didn’t I? So you can just scuttle over already. Right? Or is all this table-setting still not enough? If you won’t cross the stone bridge even when someone’s tapped it out for you, how are you ever gonna get across!?”

Subaru: “Don’t just get excited all of a sudden! It’s not like I won’t come over because I’m freaking out! I’m not going over there because I don’t know why I should!”

Shouting back at Minerva in the same indignant tone, Subaru objected to being left in the dark.

Pointing at Satella, who had apparently been deemed no immediate threat, Subaru looked around at the other Witches, who were unraveling from their combat stances,

Subaru: “First of all, what do you mean the Witch of Envy is different from Satella!? You keep talking about it like it’s obvious, but that’s not the case from where I’m standing!”

Echidna: “It’s not too complicated. When you forcibly insert a Witch Factor into someone with no compatibility for it, these afflictions are bound to arise. The Factor’s influence would lead to a Witch persona emerging, would then conflict with the original self... That’s one way to explain it. But as far as I’m concerned, they are one and the same, so I don’t see the point of differentiating the two like the others do.”

Subaru: “A split... personality...? Then, what’s...? You mean the one who swallowed you guys and carved those atrocities into history was the alternate personality, even though the original personality didn’t mean to...”

Echidna: “No, that’s not it either.”

Just as Subaru tried to make sense of the information he had been given Echidna stopped him. She shook her head, and, as if to correct Subaru’s theory,

Echidna: “Consuming half the world, and devouring us six Witches of Sin, were entirely Satella’s doing, not the Witch of Envy’s.”

Subaru: “Wh—!?! No, but that doesn’t make any sense! If the one who swallowed you was Satella, and that’s Satella standing over there... then...”

Sekhmet: “Actually, it does make sense, haa. While we cannot forgive the Witch of Envy, huu... we hold no grudge against Satella, haa... That’s all there is to it, huu...”

Carmilla: “I—I don’t... like, Satella-chan ei—either, but... at, least she’s, better, than, the Witch... I, guess.”

Sekhmet and Carmilla’s agreement only put more questions into Subaru’s head.

The Witches seemed to have some sort of consensus, but Subaru couldn’t understand it at all. They would forgive the personality that destroyed them, but not the alternate personality that didn’t— What was that supposed to mean?

Echidna: “I’ve always been asserting that such distinction is pointless... but it’s a futile effort. So, I can’t just ignore their feelings and eradicate that thing. My frail spiritual body won’t hold up for long if I do it, only to have them come after me. Even I can’t come back from having my only soul scattered into the wind.”

Subaru: “B... ut... Isn’t that extremely risky for the other five as well? You are the one keeping their souls intact. If you disappear, the other Witches would...”

Echidna: “They have already come to terms with their own deaths. So they have no special attachment to prolonging their existence as souls— They would rather choose destruction than live on betraying their ideals. It’s because they think this way that they are Witches.”

Neither Sekhmet nor Carmilla objected to Echidna’s words. “Resolute” might be too flattering of a description, but Subaru had no words for the uncompromising way the Witches chose to live.

“If only I could be like this”, “I wish I could be like this”, anyone would have had such thoughts at one point or another. But to stay true to their ideals even after death isn’t something anyone could do.

Subaru: “And Minerva...”

Is probably the same.

Before anyone else, she was probably the first to be destroyed by the Witch of Envy. But she still trusted her enough to approach within arm’s reach, and the result proved that that trust wasn’t misplaced.

Subaru didn’t know what kind of relationship these girls had had. But if there was this bond of trust between them, what drove the Witch of Envy to destroy the other six? And how was it, that they could then forgive her?

Echidna’s thoughts on it were at least understandable. But, even so—

Subaru: “I can see this is how you guys are. It’s a bit... hard to take in, but I think I got it. But, I still haven’t heard anyone explain to me why she’s here.”

Witches: “———”

Subaru: “She isn’t going to attack indiscriminately. I get that... But, that doesn’t mean she’s safe. If the one I’ve been dealing with was the Witch of Envy, then what does Satella want from me? The Witch of Envy has been a serious pain in the ass... So even if you suddenly tell me that this one’s different, it’s not like I’d just understand.”

Besides, according to the Witches themselves, Satella was definitely the one who devoured them. So even if the one who swallowed the Sanctuary was the Witch of Envy, it would seem that Satella was no less dangerous. So who could blame him for feeling threatened and wary, and wanting to stay away?

Subaru: “What does she want, why is she here. As long as no one tells me...!”

Minerva: “If you want to find out, then you should come over here.”

Minerva stopped him just as he was raising his voice. Placing her hands on her own hips, Minerva couldn’t hide the annoyance on her adorable face as she stared at Subaru.

Minerva: “That’s enough of your long-winded excuses and drawn-up defenses. I’m here standing right next to her, and nothing’s happened. She came here to see you too. So if you are gonna keep acting like a loser and won’t come near, that can only mean we’ve misjudged you.”

Subaru: “What was there to misjudge!? Don’t just go one-sidedly imagining things about me! And stop pushing that crap on me! What would you know about me, anyway!?”

Being slapped with some arbitrary image of himself, it wasn’t like he’d just start acting in accordance with it.

But, once, when Subaru had shouted that exact same thing, there came a voice that answered him. He could still remember what it said. And that those words had become his strength.

—If he didn’t want to betray that past-self that was saved by those words, then,

Subaru: “Agh, damn it... What was I thinking... Idiot...”

Being irrational, making decisions based solely on emotions. After so many painful experiences resulting from this, had he learned nothing at all? Instead, he should be paying attention to the details, stifling his emotions so he could act calmly, not out of impulse, but on facts alone— To uphold that never-wavering heart of steel.

That was what he had always wanted himself to be.

Minerva: “You are taking too long.”

Subaru: “What it’s like to be up-close to someone you’ve tangled to the death with... Crap, actually you do know, don’t you? It’s kinda hard.”

Minerva: “It’s not like we don’t have any thoughts on it. Sekhmet and Carmilla are just more mature, unlike me. But I have a reason to stand by her.”

Watching Subaru clicking his tongue as he walked over, Minerva shrugged. Giving him no time to ask her what that reason was, Minerva handed the scene over to Subaru. The Witch of Wrath naturally stepped aside as Subaru drew closer to the Witch— until he was face-to-face with Satella.

Subaru: “———”

Unwittingly gulping in front of the thing before his eyes, Subaru was at a loss for words.

Although he had already expected this while watching from afar, as well as while walking up to her, he still couldn't get used to the immense emanated pressure and the visual sense of incongruity. The dress of shadows clinging to her form traces out her curves and body with horrific sensuality, and the invisibility of everything from the neck up conversely creates an inverse kind of lusciousness.

But all that was instantly swept away by the dissonance of her unrecognizable head.

Subaru: "——"

Seeing her from up close, Subaru realized that it wasn't anything physical obstructing his recognition.

What seemed to be a darkness shrouding over her head was not, in fact, what hid her face from view. What made the Witch's face invisible was something more primordial, something on the mental level.

No physical obstacle was blocking her face from view. Instead, it was something instinctual that was not allowing him to see it.

Echidna: "Everyone wants to avert their eyes from their most repulsive delusions."

Subaru: "..."

Echidna: "If you can't see her face, then that's a problem with of own heart."

The cautioning voice came from behind him, affirming Subaru's realization.

Resisting the urge to fire back at her, Subaru ignored Echidna— or rather, he had no attention to spare as he continued to face against Satella.

In the interim, Satella had yet to take any kind of action. The only thing she had done so far was appear here, and it was those around her that had kicked up a fuss, frantically trying to prevent any potential damage from being brought about by her actions.

It'd be no exaggeration to say that the fear inspired by her presence was a testament to the danger her existence posed.

And, just when Subaru was growing impatient with her lack of motion,

Subaru: “—Hk!”

Satella: “———”

Seeing her hands suddenly reach out to him, Subaru’s throat froze.

Not distracted for a second or even a blink of an instant, Subaru kept his attention fixed on Satella. What would happen in the next moment? —The tension of not knowing was like imperceptible hands toying with his mind.

His shock was not because he had failed to see the hands move. Subaru clearly saw Satella’s hands move towards him. What surprised him was his own consciousness, which had quietly watched their approach to the end.

Subaru: “What... are you, really? What... do you want with me?”

In fact, Subaru hadn’t made any useful reaction to those hands reaching towards him. Though subconsciously understanding what her gesture meant, Subaru hastily uttered those words.

As if he didn’t need to acknowledge that fact, as though he didn’t have to face it, he wrenched out the words,

Subaru: “If you are... the one giving me the power to rewind... why... are you...”

He didn’t know why Satella was doing this.

Or why his body, facing Satella at a distance close enough to touch, despite him time and time and again screaming commands from the depths of his consciousness, was refusing to obey him.

—Was he supposed to feel so inexplicably relived in front of her?

Satella: “———u.”

Subaru: “—Ah?”

Still struggling with his disobedient body, Subaru belatedly reacted to the voice striking upon his eardrums. This time, it was no doubt the correct reaction to something so far outside his expectations.

Holding his breath, Subaru waited for her to continue.

In front of Satella, staring at him with her still-indiscernible expression, Subaru swallowed, as he went on waiting while time slowly passed on, until she spoke.

Satella: “———you.”

Subaru: “———”

Satella: “I have always, always loved you. You, and only you.”

Arc 4 Chapter 77 - Lonely

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 1 “The Sounds that Make You Want to Cry”, Part 2
(halfway)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken – Part 1, Part 2

How to describe the impact that shocked through Subaru’s entirety the moment he heard that confession of love?

He felt the illusion of a bolt of lightning piercing him from head-to-toe.

Every pore of his body opened as goosebumps carpeted his skin, while the blood coursing through his veins seethed to a virulent boil. The thumping heartbeats in his chest flushed him red from the neck-up, as, roughly panting, Subaru stumbled one step backward.

He couldn’t stand there any longer.

If he kept standing there, his breaths would reach her, his fingertips would reach her.

If he didn’t get away from her now while he could barely keep his instincts in check, he wouldn’t be able to stop himself.

And if that happens, Subaru would be swept away by love—

Subaru: “Stop...”

Satella: “I love you.”

Subaru: “Please, stop...”

Satella: “I have always, and will always, love only you.”

Subaru: “I told you to stop—!!”

Shaking his head and swinging his arm, Subaru wrested his attention away from her hot, entangling gaze.

Still, Satella’s expression remained invisible to Subaru. And so, he couldn’t tell just what emotions were harbored within those eyes.

Yet the feverish pounding in his chest showed no signs of abating.

Only by consciously suppressing that feeling, desperately crying out, thrusting her with that rejection as if he was spitting out blood, could Subaru manage to preserve his fundamental self. If he didn’t maintain this effort to keep himself conscious, he was certain that his very existence would distort. And that thought terrified him to no end.

Blatantly rejecting her, flinging his open disgust, and slapping her with that truth, Subaru screamed, while Satella stood stock-still, as before.

Her unseen expression remained behind a veil of darkness. Indiscernible. Impossible to read. And yet, somehow, Subaru could tell that Satella was being injured by those words, and was now casting down her gaze. Somewhere within his heart, was an urge to caress her hair, console her to ease her pained expression, and whisper her his love so that perhaps she might smile again.

Even as he tried to reject it, his heart was insisting that he loved Satella.

Subaru: “Wh—what are you!? What did you do to me!? Just like Return by Death... did you put something in me, to manipulate my heart!?”

Subaru poured all of his distrust for his disobedient heart at Satella.

Just why was his heart suddenly reacting in a way that was utterly contrary to his understanding? If this overwhelming emotion inside him was also the doing of this Witch and her supernatural powers, then that’d be simply far too horrifying.

Twisting people’s hearts to suit her will— that was an abhorrent deed, less than human.

Natsuki Subaru’s crush on Emilia was the first glimmer of light he had ever received in this world. Lost, and without a single guideline in the midst of that initial desperation, he was indebted to Emilia for extending him her hand, and his memories still told of her rescuing his heart just when it was all but abraded away. Even now, her existence had not lost even a fraction of that luster.

Over the days he spent repeating the loops starting from death, fighting alone through countless adversities, the number of precious people he wanted to protect had only grown, while the words, bonds, and feelings he shared with them slowly accumulated inside him.

By now, he could no longer say that his feelings for Emilia was his primary motivation.

But even so, Emilia was still the first ray of light Natsuki Subaru had received. And now Satella was demanding that Subaru experienced a crush of similar magnitude to what had awakened towards Emilia. Even though there was no word exchanged, no touch of warmth, no time spent together, no bond accrued, and nothing whatsoever shared between them, she was demanding feelings of love from him.

What could one call this, if not heinous?

Subaru: “You, and Echidna... You are both insane! This... This place is just full of incomprehensible bastards! I’m fucking sick of it!”

To the faceless Witch in front and the white-haired Witch behind him, Subaru screamed without hiding his disgust.

Satella, who sought to extort from him this baseless affection, and Echidna, who would entangle others to sate her devious curiosity, were both monsters beyond Subaru’s understanding.

Echidna: “It’s rather upsetting to be lumped together with that thing. Even though we are both technically Witches, to me, that is a vulgar creature several magnitudes below Witches. But incomprehensible, now you are not wrong there.”

Subaru: “Just shut up. You pretend to be friendly, but I haven’t forgotten how deceitful you are... Enough. There’s no point in me staying here. Let me out. I don’t wanna be involved with you people anymore!”

Cursing at Echidna, Subaru hugged his head and pleaded to be freed from her Dream Citadel.

He couldn’t stand another second in front of Satella and Echidna. There were enough things Subaru needed to worry about, now was not the time to be looking for more.

He was not omniscient, and there was a limit to how much he could handle. Yet why do the problems keep mounting, one after another, when the obstacles were already so stacked against him?

Subaru: "I'll never ask for any of your help again... All the problems outside, I'll deal with them myself— That's how it's supposed to be, isn't it!? That's what I should've done from the start..."

Minerva: "And then? You'll go back to dying over and over, making tons of people cry while spouting excuses to yourself like «this is information-gathering, there's no helping it»? Wow. Amazing."

Minerva crossed her arms and snorted at Subaru's words of definite parting. Then, seeing Subaru return her a glare, Minerva's unruffled face reddened,

Minerva: "What. Got something to say for yourself?"

Subaru: "Like it has anything to do with you. The pain, the anguish, the wounds, the wear I endure because of Return by Death, all that's got to do with is me! What right do you have to complain about it!?"

Minerva: "It's easy for you to say that you are ready for the pain, the suffering, and the anguish. Who cares about the feelings of those watching you spew blood, as your flesh is flayed, and your bones are crushed, right? You can always use the excuse you are the one who's suffering the most."

Subaru: "What...!?"

Minerva: "Just because you are taking on the most obvious, most visible wounds, you think the ones who receive lighter wounds as consequences of your actions have no right to complain about anything. After all, you are the one who's hurting the most. Suffering the most. Enduring the most... And so, naturally, the others around you should just shut up with their sniveling, right?"

Perhaps because of the rage building up as she spoke, Minerva's tone intensified as Subaru bared his teeth. There was just no way Subaru could let those merciless words go unanswered.

Subaru: "You! You think I'm getting drunk on my own tragedy just so that I can shut everyone else up!? That this dead-end road I'm walking is just a fucking act!?"

Minerva: “No, that’s not what I’m saying. All I’m telling you, is that thinking «It’s alright as long as I’m hurting more than anyone else» is cowardly. I’m not a fan of Echidna’s devious methods, and I can’t even hope to understand how roundabout Satella is, but... to me, compared to a Witch, the way you are twisted is a lot more sickening.”

Subaru: “———”

Minerva: “Above all, while I beat everything in order to heal them, the way you live is not only the opposite, but the antithesis of what I do— Isn’t that just way too ungrateful for what she’s doing for you?”

Holding out her small fist at Subaru, Minerva huffed out those words. Adding that quiet whisper at the end, she turned her blue eyes towards Satella.

Still standing there as before, Satella had stayed silent ever since Subaru showered her with abuse, making no indication of affirming or denying those words. Seeing this, Minerva narrowed her eyes, somewhat sadly.

But Subaru couldn’t care less about their sentimentality at this point.

Subaru: “Sickening... Ungrateful...?”

Catching Minerva’s last few words, with his face downcast, Subaru’s shoulders slightly trembled. The tremble grew larger, and, when Subaru lifted his face again, he was smiling.

It was far too asinine, how could he help but laugh?

Subaru: “The hell is that. Sickening or whatever... And just why do you think I chose to be like this? How did you think I got to this so-called twisted way of thinking? Whether it’s my methods or my mindset... isn’t that just the natural consequence of the fucking hand I was dealt!? —Isn’t it!?”

Satella: “———”

Subaru: “And it was you! You!!! You were the reason I became like this!!”

Shrieking, Subaru threw all his rage at Satella, who had kept her silence up to now as if to escape her culpability.

It was by accepting Return by Death, using its characteristics to overcome his obstacles, enduring all varieties of hardships that Subaru had made it this far. Tasting the despair of death, time and time again, letting it carve into his soul, turning it into his strength, Subaru got to where he was.

—And it was that same Natsuki Subaru's wound-ridden path that made him this way.

Subaru: "The one taking on the wounds, the one suffering...! It'll be me, all me, only me! If having me suffer is enough, then everything'll turn out great, won't it!? As long as I can hold it in, as long as I can bury the rage, the grief, everything, despair will NEVER touch anyone else, no matter how painfully I have to die! Throughout all of it, all the pain will fall only on me, and what is wrong with that!?!? How is anything to fault with that!?!?"

Repeat with Return by Death, and, through trial and error, reach the optimal future. It was just as Echidna said. But rather than accept Echidna's offer which would have her use that resolve to satisfy her own curiosity, he would continue to forge his path alone, just as he had always done.

Unlike Echidna, who would lure him into taking extra detours, if Subaru set his heart and mind to search for the optimal path, the number of retries would no doubt be less than if he went with her. Naturally he did expect for the retry count to be outrageous. But, even so, there was value in trying.

If at the other end of the bruise-laden Subaru's outstretched arm was a future where no one else would be hurt, then,

Subaru: "I said you are incomprehensible, that I'm sick of it, didn't I? Yeah, sorry, my bad. There was not a shred of dishonesty in that feeling... But I should've thanked you. How did I forget? I actually forgot, how utterly ungrateful of me."

Satella: "——"

Subaru: "There is just one thing I have to thank you for. Thanks, for giving me Return by Death. It is all thanks to you. Without it, I wouldn't be able to protect a single thing important to me. And now I'll be sure to keep relying on that power. So for that, and only that... I thank you."

He was prepared to continue with this continuous trial and error methodology. The option to flee from this fate had already been abolished a long time ago.

Ever since he said, “Take my hand, and run away with me” and was rejected, the option to flee was gone. He must fight on. For this was what he pledged, what she expected of him, and what she believed in him. Subaru will not run away but keep on fighting.

Subaru was the man who would always stand back up. Otherwise, he would no longer be Rem’s hero.

Subaru: “That’s why... Thank you for giving me this power. It’s thanks to you that this useless, worthless fool could turn those hopeless situ—”

Satella: “—Don’t.”

Subaru: “—ations...”

Just as Subaru was going to pour out all the heat that had been pent up in his chest, Satella broke her silence with a murmur. Hearing that single fragment, Subaru’s words dulled from their momentum. His face stiffened, waiting, begging to hear that whisper once more.

What did she say just now? It was like something he couldn’t bear to hear.

He held his breath, while Satella, after a brief silence, spoke again.

Satella: “—Please... Don’t cry. Don’t hurt. Don’t suffer. Don’t make... such a sad expression anymore.”

Pleading, Satella whispered to Subaru. Her words swept up violent tremors in his heart. Of rage, of shock, of a nondescript jumble of every emotion there is.

Subaru: “Y—you... W—what are...”

Overwhelmed by the maelstrom of emotions, he didn’t know what to say. Intense passion clogged up his throat as he merely opened and closed his mouth, staring at Satella.

Before the wavering Subaru, Satella continued with her sedition.

Satella: “And so, love...”

Subaru: “Is... Is that what it comes down to...? You want to twist my emotions until I finally love you? Is that what you...”

Satella: “—No.”

Satella interrupted Subaru’s trembling words. Her expression remained invisible. But, somehow, he could almost sense through his skin how Satella was looking at him behind that veil of shadow.

—Satella, she was,

Satella: “—Love yourself... a little more¹⁴².”

Surely, casting him a look of compassion—

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

It took some time for the meaning of those words to filter into his brain.

But once it did, a shapeless, tremoring wave of emotion instantly engulfed his heart.

Subaru: “The hell... Did you just say.”

Satella: “...Please... Don’t hurt anymore. Be kinder to yourself.”

Subaru: “You... were the one who gave me Return by Death... weren’t you? You gave me this power, so I’d have a way to move forward...”

Satella: “—I love you. So, please, love yourself as well, and protect yourself.”

Subaru: “If you pity me and take this method away from me! What’ll I have left!?!?”

In rejection of Satella’s boundless whispers of love, Subaru screamed, pressing his hand against his chest, ¹⁴² In a very similar manner to what had happened previously on Volume 12, “愛して” (read “aishite”) is used, which can be understood to mean “love me” if there is no direct object of action, commonly “を”. However, this later phrase has “自分” (meaning yourself) indicated as the target of the action, which becomes “love yourself”. Japanese is fun!

Subaru: “You know it too, don’t you!? I’m completely powerless! No wits, no skill, I have no special powers at all! The only thing this good-for-nothing has is the Return by Death which you’ve given me! So isn’t my life the only thing I can offer!?”

Satella: “Don’t be sad.”

Subaru: “I’ve already factored in all the pain, all the deaths I am fated to experience. I’ve accepted it, I’m fine with it! If I’m the only one who’ll have to suffer, then I’m fine with that!”

Satella: “Don’t suffer anymore.”

Subaru: “Getting myself hurt more than anyone else, by going through more than anyone else, if I strive and struggle to protect everyone else, then I can make sure that no one besides me has to suffer! There’s nothing more that I want!”

Satella: “Please... don’t cry.”

Subaru: “It doesn’t matter what happens to me, does it!? Like anyone would be bothered to care what happens to a bastard like me! No matter how broken, how torn I become, as long as everyone reaches that future safely, then... hk.”

Because, if Subaru stops taking those wounds at the very front lines—

Subaru: “If we can welcome that future... without losing anyone... then... hk.”

—He might irrevocably lose someone somewhere unreachable again.

Subaru: “...Rem is... already gone.”

Satella: “———”

Subaru: “If I were smarter, if I were stronger, if I wasn’t so concerned about my life, if I had put myself in the front... It could’ve been avoided.”

The loss and the despair from back then, kept its binds on Natsuki Subaru still. And so, Subaru had resolved not to rely on anyone, but to carry his wounds, fighting on alone, believing this to be the most correct course.

Subaru: “I have to believe... I have to believe that there’s always a way...”

That Return by Death was a means that could solve everything.

That as long as he uses it well, Subaru will not lose a single thing in the end.

If he didn’t believe, if he didn’t tell himself that taking those wounds was necessary, if he didn’t convince himself that this was the truth, how could he possibly confront that despair again?

Subaru: “!...! I don’t want to lose anyone the way I lost Rem again— hk!”

Grabbing his head, Subaru shrieked as if to reject all other audible sound.

Before he knew it, he had crumpled to the ground. Forgetting even to distance himself from Satella, he retreated into his shell, curling up as he denied her sweet whispers.

Poison. Virulent poison. Satella’s very existence was a will-melting poison to Subaru.

Subaru’s heart, which he had sworn never to allow to falter, began to fracture.

Into that opened gap entered ice-cold despair, wrecking his heart with the reawakened grief of that day.

Sekhmet: “You aren’t a child anymore.”

Suddenly, there came a muttered voice. Seeing Subaru, wailing and crying, stubbornly insisting on his self-made conclusions and shaking his head in denial of all else, one of the Witches who had kept silent until now murmured.

Sekhmet: “Crying, bawling, throwing up a tantrum, taking everything onto yourself... Isn’t that, just like...”

Subaru: “———”

Sekhmet: “—a little, lonely child?”

In a sad, pitying voice, Sekhmet remarked on the current Subaru.

The other silent Witches who had heard Sekhmet’s murmur did not refute it.

The Witch of Sloth's words were all too accurate.

Because Subaru's figure now was just that of a pitiful, frail, little child.

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Setowi (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 78 - These Sounds to Make You Shed Tears

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 1 “The Sounds that Make You Want to Cry”, Parts 2 (halfway)-3

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken – Part 1, Part 2

Sekhmet: “Curling up, being stubborn... Isn’t that just like a child? It’s so painful, I can’t bear watching, haa...”

Listening to Sekhmet calling him a child, Subaru, closed off in his shell, couldn’t help but think that maybe she was right. Obstinate and conceited, he was stubbornly shutting out the voices around him— But surely, his way would be the most reliable for minimizing losses.

Being granted an unlimited number of chances to rewind the world, with his life as the only price, Subaru could keep trying indefinitely. In the process, over and over, Subaru’s heart would steadily be abraded away.

But just when he was on the brink of shattering, he was given the words to make him stand again.

Rem: “—You are my hero, Subaru-kun.”

That. That was all he needed.

After his soul is finally worn to the core, if he could just hear those words with everyone there beside him, he would be satisfied. What’s so wrong with that?

???: “—Baru is crying-?”

Suddenly, a child’s voice pierced through the silence of the scene as the Witches held their breaths.

Curled into a ball, Subaru felt his head being caressed by a little palm. Glancing up through his teary vision, he saw the murky shape of a tan-skinned girl.

Subaru's gaze had landed on the Witch of Pride.

Typhon: "Poor Baru... He's cry-ing...Who made him cry-?"

The kneeling Typhon stood up, glowering at the other wordless Witches. A perilous gleam twirled in her eyes as she looked at each of the Witches in turn, then she raised her brows when she finally spotted Satella.

Typhon: "Tella? Tella's here? Why? It's been so long~"

Typhon waved as she called to Satella, but the war-like gleam in her eyes hadn't diminished. Seeing this, the first to address her was Sekhmet, who spilled a languid sigh as she sat up.

Sekhmet: "Typhon, haa... He's a bit occupied at the moment, huu... Don't bother the boy, haa. Come here, huu..."

Typhon: "Mama... did you do something bad to Baru? Mama... are you a sinner too-?"

Sekhmet: "Your mother, haa... doesn't have the energy to be a bad person, huu... I wouldn't want to give myself more work, haa... and I wouldn't want to give you more work either, huu."

Typhon gave a little nod at Sekhmet's answer, but showed no intention of moving away from Subaru like she was told. Instead, she turned to Minerva,

Typhon: "Nerva~~? Did you bully Ba... Nah~"

Minerva: "How come you are not asking me? It's not that absurd? It's not like I only ever go around healing people, sometimes I get carried away and abuse people emotionally too, you know... I mean, I... can hurt, people... too, sometimes..."

Echidna: "When your face turns pale just thinking about it, it's kind of hard to envision any violent act being committed by you..."

Echidna shrugged, teasing Minerva for her unconvincing reply. Minerva shot her a sharp glare, while Typhon also followed her gaze, turning to Echidna as her childish face twisted into a frown.

Typhon: “So it’s Dona. Dona, you did something bad again, didn’t you-? Dona... you are the baddie-?”

Echidna: “Now why is it that when you are asking me, it sounds a lot more like a conclusion rather than a question? I think I should have a word with your foster parent about that. So, what do you have to say?”

Sekhmet: “It’s to do with your daily behavior, haa...”

Saying this, Sekhmet languorously held her hand to her forehead. Without leaving Subaru’s side, Typhon was still intently searching for the sinner who made Subaru cry. Seeing the small Witch like this, Echidna narrowed her eyes, muttering “Anyway...”,

Echidna: “Now that Typhon’s here, we almost have everyone. If Daphne shows up as well, it’ll be just like four-hundred years ago...”

???: “Did... someone just call for Daphne...?”

In response to Echidna’s remark, a pitch-black coffin abruptly appeared on the meadow.

Inside, with her entire body in bondage and her eyes covered by blindfolds, was the Witch of Gluttony, Daphne. She made a little twitch with her nose, as if sniffing out all the people present.

Daphne: “Not just Subaruun... Tella-Tella’s here too? Woooooow... All seven Witches of Sin are here, even a Sage Candidate too...”¹⁴³

Echidna: “Daphne— He’s... not there yet.”

Daphne: “...Aaaaaaaah, really? Sorry... Anyway... Sniiiff~ sniiiff~, I smell something salty... is someone crying? Is it Neru-Neru?”

Without the slightest regard for the mood, Daphne went on poking at the tense situation in her dopey tone.

¹⁴³ Note from SummaryAnon: “Unclear if it should be «a Sage Candidate» or «the Sage Candidate»”.

To have all seven Witches, including Satella, gathered in the Dream Citadel must've been a rare sight even during the golden age of Witches four-hundred years ago. The Seven Witches of Sin who once thrust the world into chaos, present now in this livewire situation, powers liable to reshape the world itself were assembled together here.

The Witch of Pride, seeking to pass judgment upon the one who made the young boy cry.

The Witch of Wrath, clenching her fists, wishing that the feelings of the close friend at her side would bear fruit.

The Witch of Sloth, paying heed to everyone's movements, languidly prepared to instantly attack if anything should happen.

The Witch of Lust, keeping her uninvolved demeanor, ready to protect herself should the matters escalate in a flash.

The Witch of Gluttony, having already lost interest in what was happening around her, now agonizing over whose fingers to munch on to best stave off her hunger.

The Witch of Greed, directing her hostility toward one Witch in particular, while her eyes went on brimming with curiosity at just how this tea party shall unfold.

And, the one who was not the Witch of Envy, but Satella—

Satella: "I, love you— Because you gave me light. It was you who took me by the hand and showed me the world outside. In the nights when I was lonely and afraid, you stayed by my side with your hands around mine. And when I was all alone, you kissed me on the lips and told me that I wasn't. You've given me so, so much... That's why, I love you. Because you... you gave me everything."

Subaru: "——"

Subaru couldn't recall doing a single thing that Satella had whispered.

He had no part in it, it had nothing to do with him. Whether it was meeting Satella, trading words with her, or sharing a single feeling of warmth. Everything she is talking about is the fruits of her delusion.

This woman insane with sentiment had lined up empty daydreams where she simply watched a fantasy of Subaru.

That was how it should be. And yet, Natsuki Subaru remembered.

Subaru: “Why is this... inside me, what is this? I don’t want this feeling. Don’t try to bind me... with memories that can’t exist... you... you... I... Hk.”

“I hate you”, was all he needed to say.

All he had to do was stab the girl who offered him these feelings with the fact that he didn’t have the slightest affection for her. Once he does, he would be able to see the look on the face of the one who had selfishly sought to warp his heart. Surely, it would be an expression magnificently twisted by heartbreak.

—But, how are you even capable of doing that to her?

Typhon: “Baru?”

Sekhmet: “Oh, kid...”

Carmilla: “H—he’s...”

Minerva: “You... Tch.”

Daphne: “Subaruun?”

Echidna: “—Ah, well. That is yet another possible one option... Natsuki Subaru.”

As the Witches called to Subaru in turn, Echidna gave a small nod at this outcome.

Subaru: “—Guh, buh.”

—Just like this, curled up on the ground, Subaru had bitten off his own tongue.

Cornered by the Witches, he had no idea of anything anymore. With his heart on the brink of twisting, what was left for him to do, when he could no longer act of his own volition?

If it was just something he couldn't accept, he could have rejected it and it would've been fine. But, in front of Satella, when even his rejection was being turned into acceptance---

That very thought terrified Subaru.

---Now, just what would happen if you lose your life in a dream?

Subaru's body should still be in the Tomb inside the Sanctuary. What had been summoned here was Subaru's mental body, or you could even say his soul. If his spirit died here, would it carry over to his physical body? Could souls even die?

None of it mattered. If it meant another death and respawn, he'd be fine with that.

He would not take the Witches' help. Instead, he would move forward with even greater self-abandon, scouring away anything that wasn't necessary, and, if he could just stay true to his course, surely, the path would open--- If he were able to do just that, he...

Minerva: "That, idiot---!"

The instant she noticed Subaru's attempted suicide, Minerva rolled up her sleeves and jolted forward, hurrying to punch Subaru to heal him. But, cutting in front of her was Typhon, who had been standing at Subaru's side.

The small Witch stretched out her little body, blocking Minerva's path.

Typhon: "Baru made his own choice! Nerva, no interrupting!"

Minerva: "Self-harm or suicide or injury or murder, I won't allow any of it under my watch! I don't care what kind of anguish is going on inside! I can't do a thing about wounds that I can't see! That's why! There's no way I could ever overlook a wound that I can see!"

The ground caved in beneath her single step as Minerva's fist pierced through the wind, driving towards Typhon's face.

The shrieking fist advanced with enough force to rupture a mountain, but the moment it connects with a living being, the destruction would transform into healing. Although, the shockwave of the impact would still be transferred to the recipient of the strike.

Producing a resounding boom, Minerva's full-forced strike sent Typhon flying.

The prepubescent girl was blown away as easily as a leaf, dancing through the meadow's artificial sky. It was a rather brutal sight— but Typhon wasn't the only victim.

Minerva: “———Tch!”

Minerva's right arm, from her shoulder onwards, shattered like ice-crystals. This was the consequence of touching the judgment of the Witch of Pride, and thus being deemed a sinner.

Minerva tilted back her head in pain for the loss of her arm, opening her mouth wide to shriek——

Minerva: “A scratch——!!”

Or not.

Though she was sensitive to other people's pain, the Witch of Wrath completely disregarded her own. Even as she criticized Natsuki Subaru for his outlook, she was guilty of the same sin.

Minerva: “Anyway, now——!”

Having removed her obstacle, Minerva leaped towards Subaru, readying her remaining left arm. Aiming the mighty arm for a hit with the full brunt of her force from above,

Sekhmet: “I'll be getting in your way next... haa.”

In an instant, with her blonde hair fluttering, Minerva was slammed into the ground.

Her entire body pinned to the earth creating a person-shaped crater in the grass, Minerva lifted her face, flushed red with indignant fury, as she screamed at the seated Sekhmet.

Minerva: “Don't get in my way——! Sekhmet——!”

Sekhmet: “That won't do, huu. Sentimentally speaking, I'm on the kid's side, haa. Even more, I'm also on Typhon's side, huu... So I have no reason not to get in the way, haa...”

Hearing Sekhmet's declaration of war, Minerva ruefully bit her lip as she looked around her.

But Daphne and Carmilla were staying neutral in this conflict, and Echidna was merely watching with piqued interest for the outcome. And, Satella—

Satella: “Haa... haaaa...”

Crumbling to her knees, her voice trembled as she watched profuse blood spouting from Subaru’s mouth.

With his pouring blood and severed tongue clogging his throat, Subaru was experiencing the sensation of drowning as he caught Satella in a corner of his consciousness.

She’s crying, isn’t she?

Witnessing Subaru’s death, she looked more shaken than he had ever seen her before.

Satella: “Why can’t you understand...? That among all the things you want to protect, you should be included too.”

Why would she think this way about Subaru?

Within her delusions, just how much support did Subaru lend to her heart?

Satella: “Just like everyone else, struggling in the dead-end of fate, it should be the same for you too. Just because you alone have possibility of overturning it.... but... you need saving too... so why...?”

She was completely wrong.

Subaru was a hopeless bastard who couldn’t even hold onto the things within his grasp, much less capable of saving those he wished to save. A half-assed, useless prick. There was no escaping from that.

Had he not pledged? To escape from that, and to stop doing things halfway?

Had he not decided? To pretend to he was any better?

—That weak, useless self, and the self that no longer wanted to be weak were fighting inside him.

No one would see Natsuki Subaru’s weakness anymore.

He must become that strong, dignified, unshakable hero he needed to be.

Because there was a girl who wanted this from him. It was the curse he had placed upon her, and it was his duty to repay her for accepting that curse. Or, actually. It wasn't so much of a duty. It was just that, since that girl believed this about him, he wanted her to keep on believing.

Yes. That was it.

That was it.

If there was anyone who would grieve over Subaru's death, it would be her.

Choosing death was a betrayal of the girl who believed in him. Though of course, to Subaru, death would not be the end. Using death as a steppingstone, he would eliminate his cause of death and retrieve everything he had lost.

But what would this mean for the others whom Subaru had left behind, electing death in their stead?

He mustn't think about it.

He mustn't know it. Those were dangerous thoughts.

It was fine. Natsuki Subaru was fine just the way he was.

He mustn't think that anyone would grieve for him.

He wasn't someone worthy of such a thing. Subaru's life was a expendable resource. To be used, and used, and used, the very end was reached. That was all it was meant to be.

To use death without reservation to its greatest effect, he mustn't balk at his own death.

Be decisive. It's fine to think nothing. To take back what he needs to take back, he must be prepared to abandon what he has to abandon. Everyone does this. It's fine for Subaru to do this as well.

All that needed to be done was to save the ones precious to him. If he could do just that, Subaru—

Satella: "What did you see... in the Second Trial...?"

The Trial— The Trial. The Trial, Trial. TrialTrial Trial, TrialTrialTrialTrial, Trial—?

Shock and deprivation of oxygen had slowed his thoughts to their limits.

His vision blurred and blurred into a flickering red, as a storm of television noise ran through his mind. “It’s about time this ended”, he vaguely thought.

The end was slowly approaching.

How many times was it now, that he had welcomed death like this? It was far too tiresome to count, but that was fine.

Eventually, he would have repeated deaths so many times, that counting would become sickening.

He didn’t think he could stay conscious long enough to count all the deaths anyway.

That heart of steel.

To have, that unshakable, heart of steel—

Slowly, and slowly, Subaru’s consciousness departed.

And faded,

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “I’m counting on you, son.”

A voice.

Through the noise, and through the rebounding cacophony, he heard a horrifically clear voice.

???: “—Have a safe trip.”

He heard another.

A different voice. But it brought the same emotions to his chest.

???: “I would have liked to call you friend.”

Another voice, bringing a different feeling.

Somehow, it agitated him to hear it. But there was also something pleasant to it.

???: "Subaru-dono... please forgive me..."

Yet another voice.

Flooding his chest with a passing loneliness and had a tinge of longing to it. A voice he wanted to apologize to.

???: "You... aren't, that person... I know that... at least... but..."

Here was a voice that gripped at his chest.

Hearing this voice, he could no longer control himself. This voice, that was about to cry. This voice mustn't be allowed to cry. This voice he must protect. This voice. This voice. This voice.

???: "So show me how amazing you can be. Subaru-kun."

Thud, something thumped inside him in answer to this voice.

His body heated up. Compelled by a sense of duty to move. At this voice that had always supported him. And,

???: "Thank you, Subaru."

There came a voice.

???: "—For saving me."

—The voice that announced the beginning of everything.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

He was probably crying.

If the people dear to him learned about his death, would they grieve for him?

Those irreplaceable people left behind in the worlds that Subaru had selfishly escaped through death, would they mourn and grieve for him?

Just as Subaru was lamenting his own weakness, repeating through Return by Death in search of the perfect future, those who lost him in the final step— would they mourn for him as well?

The people who were precious to him. The people he believed he must protect. The people he undoubtedly wished to rescue from their fate's dead-end.

—Was he worthy of being mourned by those so precious to him?

It's alright to be a little conceited, isn't it? To be so conceited as to think that I'm also precious to the people I consider precious.

It's alright to have a little faith, isn't it? To believe that those I want to protect also want to protect me as well.

I'm allowed to have a little hope too, aren't I? That someone would shed tears if I died and see me as important enough to reach out their hand to save me.

—It's alright for me to think this, isn't it?

I don't want to die.

I don't want to give up, as if this is the only way.

I don't want to be a steppingstone, even if it means saving the futures of people I love.

In that future where I've protected all of them, I want to be there too.

It's alright for me to think like this, isn't it?

I... have the right too... Don't I?

If I do, then—

Subaru: “I don’t... wanna die...”

Gurgling through the clotting blood, alongside the escaping air, he spoke.

The severed tongue clogging his throat broke free, as his mouth opened and closed, gasping for air. His lungs expanded, oxygen cycled through his brain anew, and his murky vision began to be restored. Then,

Minerva: “There, those are his real thoughts... Kuh!”

—Despite having lost both her legs, fueled on willpower alone, the red-flushed Witch of Wrath rammed her healing head into Subaru’s.

Arc 4 Chapter 79 - End of the Dream

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 1 “The Sounds that Make You Want to Cry”, Part 4

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

The moment he realized that oxygen was passing through his windpipe, with a massive cough Subaru expelled the remaining blood clotting in his throat.

Still collapsed face-up on the ground, pant after pant, he gasped for the nourishment of life.

There was no time to think about how wretched he looked now. Although, he was well aware of how miserable it was to unhesitatingly cling to the first chance of rescue right after biting off his own tongue to die. But,

Subaru: “...Does my...”

Minerva: “—Hm?”

Subaru: “Does my life... have any value...? Besides dying... without dying over and over... do I value besides that...?”

Return by Death, and in doing so, save everyone from the depths of despair.

He had believed that paying with his life to attain this outcome was Natsuki Subaru’s only value.

But, would it be alright to think otherwise?

Subaru: “Is it alright... to think that this person that I am... has any value besides Return by Death? To think that... the people I care about... care about me... as well?”

Minerva: “...The hell would I know.”

Minerva looked away and shot down Subaru's whimpering question.

Having lost her right arm and both her legs, she used her left arm to shuffle away from Subaru. Then, aiming her face at her right shoulder— she bit down. Immediately, Minerva's missing right arm regenerated from droplets of light.

Opening and closing her restored right fist, Minerva proceeded to punching her legs— both missing from the thigh down, which, just like her arm, were formed anew. Her already short skirt had been shaved even shorter and her right arm was now entirely exposed, but, other than her rather precarious costume, the Witch of Wrath Minerva was restored to perfect condition.

She stood up on her brand-new legs, crossing her arms in a pose that propped up her ample breasts, and looked down on Subaru. Then,

Minerva: "I couldn't care less whether you have value or not. But she really wants you to live... And you've seen it in the Second Trial too, haven't you?"

Subaru: "...But the Second Trial... were my mistakes... and my sins..."

Minerva: "Are you stupid? That wasn't about making you take responsibility for the worlds in which you messed up. That was to show you how sad everyone is as the result of your mistakes— Isn't that the answer you wanted?"

Subaru: "———Oh."

He remembered it.

The voice that was crying. The voice stifling its regret. The voice gently sending him off as always. The whisper of love from someone who believed in him. And the words that began everything which would become Subaru's will to fight.

None of which he was supposed to have in his life. Having nothing, deprived of even what he should have had, Subaru was summoned to this world.

To prove his own worth, he needed to keep fighting. To protect those precious people that became dear to him over that period of fighting, he needed to keep walking further in solitude.

I thought that I've only ever been receiving from others, but is it alright to think otherwise?

Would they cry, for me?

Would they lament their own powerlessness, for me?

Would they want to see that future together with me?

When we get there, those people that I love, would they give me a place to stand smiling at their side?

He wasn't sure if he'd have that place. But surely, if he chose to stubbornly walk that road alone, at the end, that place would not be there for him. His heart, which would have been turned to steel so he could fight with an unshakable will, would have no tenderness left to smile.

And so, was it really alright to believe?

The option to procure a future for those precious to him, at cost of losing his own heart.

The option to frantically guard his own heart, at the cost of losing the road to proceed.

Was he allowed to believe in neither and instead in some greedier option?

The option to see the future of those precious ones, while simultaneously remaining as Natsuki Subaru, was an option that existed— Was he allowed to desire this, to believe this?

Satella: “—You are.”

Subaru: “———”

Shedding only tears, those had been Subaru's unvoiced thoughts. But the timing of that answer was so perfect that it was as if those words had been communicated in sound.

Still lying on the ground, Subaru moved his head to look beyond Minerva— towards the face of the girl who had collapsed to her knees on the grass, smiling without wiping away her tears.

He still couldn't see her face. A veil of darkness was concealing it, such that even now, Subaru couldn't determine her expression. Yet, somehow, he knew that she was smiling.

Echidna had told him. The reason Subaru couldn't see her face was because he could not accept her. The fact that she was smiling came through, but his subconscious was insisting that he didn't see it.

Satella: "You saved me. And so, I permit you be saved as well. I want you... to be saved."

Acutely aware of Satella's words and voice seeping into his fractured heart, Subaru buried his face in his arms. It must be a mess from all the tears, and there was already no way he could look more pathetic at this point. But still, he wished to stop anyone from seeing it.

Even after lashing her with that merciless abuse, how was it that he could still feel relieved to hear Satella's words? And how could he possibly let them see how much his expression had calmed?

But the fact remained that Satella's inexplicable words of love conveyed to Subaru the true meaning of the Trial.

Echidna: "...I'm surprised Minerva managed to break through Typhon and Sekhmet's obstruction, but, personally, what surprised me even more is you two."

Setting aside Subaru, who was hiding his face, Echidna quietly murmured.

After looking at Minerva, who had regenerated herself, Echidna turned her gaze elsewhere— Towards the pitch-black coffin pinning Typhon to the ground with its claws, and the coffin's owner, Daphne, facing down Sekhmet.

Hearing Echidna's words, Daphne let out a throaty cackle. She opened the lower half of her bondage and stepped barefoot onto the grass, poking out her tongue,

Daphne: "I'm definitely the best counter to Ty-Ty there iiiiiiis... The Centipede Coffin has no head to think with... Using that as Daphne's arms and leeeegs, Ty-Ty's authority won't work on meeeeeee..."

Typhon: "Uuuu, Phinnieeee cut it oooout! Hnnn! Uuuuuu!"

Sekhmet: "So, haa... You've shown your true colors to keep me in check? Huu. I'm not Echidna, haa. Why bother pulling this on me? Huu... Unlike Minerva, I don't see why you'd want to get involved, haa."

Sekhmet roughly scratched her overabundant hair. With Typhon practically taken hostage, even Sekhmet couldn't act carelessly here.

Hearing Sekhmet's question, Daphne swayed her short pigtails and smiled with a "Weeeell",

Daphne: "Subaruun, he claimed some pretty big things to Daphneeee. Something about killing the White Whale, and then the Great Rabbit neeext? Soooo I was thinkiing I want him to at least live long enough to take them ooon~"

Echidna: "That's an interesting perspective. If he sets his mind to it, he will certainly achieve it. You realize this, don't you...? Or do you actually want the Great Rabbit to be destroyed?"

Daphne: "Whateveeeeeer? The moment it split away from Daphneee, its belly has nothing to do with Daphne's belly anymoreee. Whether it gets destroyed or not won't really bother meee... but I am interested to see how the Great Rabbit representing Daphne's insatiable hunger would come to an eeend~"

"After all", Daphne went on,

Daphne: "If to end is to be satisfieeeee... That would be a happiness completely unknown to meee~"

Constantly tormented by endless hunger, to Daphne, its fulfillment would eternally be an unreachable dream. The Great Rabbit was a reflection of her everlasting hunger, and perhaps, even an extension of herself— Although, Daphne herself completely lacked this sense of intimacy with it.

If the Great Rabbit were to meet a different end than what she had received, could it be called fulfillment? Was there ever hope that she would ever be satisfied? With this rare display of interest in something other than food, she smiled.

Hearing Daphne's answer, Echidna gave a nod of gratification, and turned her head yet again. Not to Subaru, Satella, or Minerva. Nor Daphne nor Sekhmet nor Typhon, but to someone who, like Echidna herself, had stayed somewhere isolated from the fray.

Looking at the Witch of Lust, Carmilla, Echidna softly stroked her own white hair,

Echidna: "And what about you, Carmilla? Did you have a reason like Daphne?"

Carmilla: "I—is, there... something you are trying to... say? E—Echidna... -chan...?"

Echidna: “It’s simple— You called to his consciousness when he was on the brink of death, just when it was about to be extinguished. With your Authority, Faceless Goddess, you must have known what the result would be.”

Carmilla: “———”

Echidna: “Your call would have held every significance for him. You must have known this. Hence the reason to my question. You don’t seem to have any fondness for him, so why did you?”

Listening to Echidna’s question, Carmilla held her hands to her lips as her eyes pattered about. She glanced towards Daphne and Minerva, as if hoping for someone other than herself to come and back her up. But there was no Witch on site who would be seduced by the all-beloved Carmilla.

Helpless, Carmilla began biting her fingernails, looking at Echidna with watery eyes.

Carmilla: “There, was... no, rea...son? He, rejected... E—Echidna-chan’s temptations, so, I’m, already, satisfied... and, everyone, started, fighting for some, reason... But, that has nothing, to do with, me... only...”

Echidna: “Only?”

Carmilla: “L—love, is, a pretty big...deal, you know? It’d be, wrong, to... ig—ignore it. He, doesn’t... want to, see it, but, there, is love, there... and when, it’s, there... I won’t allow it, to be denied. And, I... absolutely despise taking without giving.”

Hearing only the last part spoken with terrifying clarity, Echidna shrugged. The Witch of Greed gave a wry smile, before looking to each of the other Witches in turn,

Echidna: “Sekhmet and Typhon respected his will and intervened, while Minerva valued life and healed him. Daphne helped prolong his life so she could see his will to fight, and Carmilla used her Authority to inform him of the love he was refusing to see— And so, everyone here, for their own varying reasons, has decided to help Natsuki Subaru.”

Listening to Echidna’s appraisal of their actions, all the Witches’ expressions changed. Pride tilted her head, Sloth spilled a languid sigh, Wrath snorted and folded her arms, Gluttony munched on one of her coffin’s extended legs and smiled, while Lust unhappily scowled.

And, taking all this into her sight, Greed held a hand to her jaw,

Echidna: “It’s truly fascinating— Don’t you agree?”

Echidna’s lips softened as a blissful smile rose on her face, her words aimed at the one directly in front of her— at Subaru, wavering as he stood up.

Having wiped away his tear tracks with his sleeve, only now finally managing to stand, Subaru did not respond to Echidna’s question. He merely looked, first at her, then over the other Witches, with a passionless gaze. And,

Subaru: “Just what... are you people.”

Witches: “———”

Subaru: “Curiosity. Sympathy. Pity. Duty. Expectation. Disgust... None of your reasons for helping me make any sense to me. I guess I can see why you are called Witches.”

Echidna: “Since you are back to throwing insults, perhaps that means you’ve perhaps regained your spirit?”

Subaru: “...I don’t know.”

Echidna squinted a single eye while Subaru pressed a hand to his chest and muttered. Those few spilled words perfectly encompassed all of Subaru’s present feelings.

Subaru: “I was supposed to have decided... what I have to do. The things I must do haven’t changed. That much is certain. That’s certain...”

“But”, he went on, more to himself than to anyone else,

Subaru: “I had already decided that this was the only way. That was what I chose... what I’ve resolved to choose. And yet, here, the Trial shattered all of that.”

The Second Trial, the presents that were not to be, stuck the products of his actions right in his face, as reality settled in— He could no longer use the word “resolve” to divert his heart from those consequences, which ripped it to shreds.

Being forced to witness all that, Subaru would have tried to put it behind him, and to push through with said resolve. In fact, that was what should have happened.

Subaru: “But when I learned of your reasons for helping me, and then having Satella appear right after... My head is a total mess. All of you, just stop going off, doing all these things. What I ought to do is something I alone am saddled with. That’s how it’s meant to be, but...”

At this point, how was he supposed to start clinging to the life he had already decided to treat as expendable?

At this point, how was he supposed to start valuing the life that was meant to be used to its utmost?

At this point, what could he possibly do with the knowledge that he was being loved?

Subaru: “I have... no idea... what to do anymore.”

“You can’t protect anyone if you can’t die”, Subaru’s rationality was screaming.

“There’s someone who’ll be saddened if you hurt yourself like this”, Subaru’s memories were telling him.

People will suffer if he doesn’t die, and people will suffer if he does.

Echidna: “—I will present you this question once again, Natsuki Subaru.”

As Subaru shook his head in indecision, Echidna lowered her tone and said.

Looking up, he saw Echidna raise a single finger in front of him. Seeing herself reflected within Subaru’s eyes, she slowly nodded,

Echidna: “Should you enlist my help, you will, without fail, reach the future where everyone you wish to save will be saved. There will be no more need for worry. Speaking in extremes, I will solve all the problems you’ll face in your stead. All you’ll need to do is focus on implementing those solutions, and on overcoming those obstacles. If this constant burden is too painful for you, you have the option of entrust me with all of it. I won’t fault you for it, and, in a sense, I’d welcome it. And so, I present you this question once again.”

Subaru: “———”

Echidna: “Lost and without knowing where to go, will you let me guide your hand? I will, without fail, bring you to that future. This, I promise you.”

Saying this gently, Echidna reached out her hand to Subaru.

Looking down at Echidna’s white fingers, then looking up at her awaiting face, Subaru’s breath froze. Those were the same words he had just rejected.

Back when Subaru first learned of Echidna’s true nature, he had been terrified by that morbid curiosity driving her. But, what about now? Now that some time had passed for him to quietly reflect on her words, how about it?

Treating his life as expendable, attempting every form of trial and error, using brute force to break through the obstacles standing in his path. Between accepting Echidna’s guidance, fighting on at the cost of his heart— and declining her help, resolving to struggle alone, what difference is there?

It was out of a stubborn impulse of the moment, a knee-jerk revulsion at her attitude, that Subaru had rejected her.

But if he truly had the resolve to abandon everything and use himself as the sacrifice, if he could just overlook Echidna’s nature, then why shouldn’t he use her just as she had proposed? Refusing her out of self-righteous morality only to continue down the exact same path— What point is there in this obstinacy?

He should take that hand.

If he had the resolve to swallow all the pain and suffering, and fight on without fear of getting hurt, then he should take that hand. And so,

Subaru: “Echidna.”

Echidna: “———”

Subaru: “I’m... afraid of getting hurt.”

Echidna: “———”

Subaru: “I hate pain and suffering and grief. I don’t want to go through those awful experiences, and I don’t want to see others suffer those terrible fates—— I don’t, want to die.”

Echidna: “———”

Subaru: “And so, your hand that presupposes sacrifice—— I can’t take it anymore.”

Even Subaru wasn’t sure what he could do by himself.

But it seems that he could no longer choose the path that Echidna had pointed out.

He had realized that he didn’t want to die.

He had learned that, even as he thought that death was his only contribution, there were those who would accept him even if he didn’t die.

Natsuki Subaru wasn’t a man whose only value is in death. The people who grieved for him weren’t doing so because they saw value in Subaru’s death.

But then, just what did they see in him that made them grieve for him?

Subaru: “I still don’t know what they saw—— But, I intend to find out. I get the feeling that once I find out what it is, I’ll be able to repay everyone in a way other than death.”

Echidna: “...But there lies a thorny path, Natsuki Subaru. Using death as your tool to cut open the way, scouring yourself down to proceed along that road, that would no doubt be the shortest path, albeit a treacherous one. The only thing you’d need to offer is your heart. To deny this, and intend to keep your own heart as well as the future of those precious to you, is an act of extraordinary difficulty, and above all——”

Here, Echidna paused for a breath.

Then, with the most resplendent smile he had ever seen on her face,

Echidna: “——Greed.”

Affirming his desires, the Witch of Greed received Subaru's decision with a contented expression.

Alas, having been rejected, this Witch was still happily smiling. It's not something Subaru could understand at all, but,

Subaru: "The truth is that you've already saved me countless times... Even if, deep down, you were thinking of me as some kind of lab animal... that's still the truth."

By being there, Echidna had been a support for his heart, and helped him through those difficult times. And so, for granting him that reprieve to keep hold of his heart, he was indeed grateful to her.

Echidna: "—That foolish, pitiful Garfiel is scared of the outside world."

Subaru: "...Huh?"

Echidna: "What that child saw in the First Trial has always been binding him. If you are to break through this situation yourself, you will need to undo that curse."

Subaru: "Echidna?"

Echidna: "The other Witches have all done something nice for you, so if I don't give you something as well, what'll you think of me? I wouldn't want you to think «The Witches were all fundamentally great guys, except that Echidna, she was just the worst». I am a girl, after all, and I am rather fond of you."

Quickly saying this, Echidna lightly poked Subaru in the chest.

Pushed back a step by the momentum, when Subaru looked up again, Echidna had already turned her face away. With her white hair swaying, the Witch of Greed stepped away from Subaru.

The other Witches too, were quietly watching Subaru.

Subaru: "...I just can't understand you guys at all."

Witches: "——"

Subaru: “You guys drive me crazy, messing with my head like that, and I’m still kinda pissed about what you said. All that time I kept thinking «Stop talking over my head about things I don’t understand», I seriously can’t stand you guys...”

That was the truth. The Witches all had their own unyielding ideals that were beyond what Subaru—or any normal person could comprehend. And so, Subaru couldn’t understand them, or agree with their actions.

But just like his feelings towards Echidna, understanding and gratitude were separate things.

Subaru: “Thank you... for letting me die. Thank you... for not letting me die. And thank you, for letting me hear those important voices— For these, thank you.”

He bowed his head to each of the Witches in turn, deriving some small pleasure from the way they each swallowed their breaths.

Then, Subaru turned around, and walked forward. Ahead of him, was the girl still kneeling on the grass— Satella.

She looked up at his approach, holding her breath as though her throat had frozen.

Seeing her frightened, sitting there like a small, little girl, Subaru lost his words.

Why was it that, when faced with someone he had thought abhorrent, his heart was filled with warmth?

What were those emotions he was harboring inside him for someone he had never touched before?

Subaru had received far too many unanswerable questions since he got here.

Still without a single answer, choosing only to continue struggling, Subaru extended his hand to the Witch on the ground. She looked at his offered hand, lost and uncertain.

Subaru: “I... don’t know who you are. I don’t know why you are telling me that you love me, or what you meant... when you said that I had saved you.”

Satella: “Ah...”

Subaru: “But, this Return by Death you’ve given me has saved me, that’s a fact. It was all thanks to it, that I’ve managed to get this far. That’s the truth.”

Satella: “———”

Subaru: “Return by Death is just an option available to me... Right?”

Satella: “———”

Subaru: “I shouldn’t rely on it entirely, I should love myself a little more... That’s what you said, right?”

Satella: “———”

Subaru: “I won’t pretend there’s an easy solution— But you... the one who gave me Return by Death... You don’t want me to die. I know that for certain now.”

And so,

Subaru: “Like you said, I’ll try to... be a little kinder to myself. And to cherish myself. I have no idea what’ll happen if I start doing that... But that’s okay.”

Satella: “...Will you be alright?”

Subaru: “Yeah... Compared to dying, that’s nothing.”

In answer to Satella’s worried voice, Subaru did his best to manage a weak smile.

As if relieved to see his expression, Satella took hold of Subaru’s hand.

Instantly, the sound of the world breaking fell upon Subaru’s eardrums. The blue sky and the green grass fields began to fade in color as Natsuki Subaru was being released from the Citadel of Dreams.

Subaru: “—I’m leaving, then?”

He could no longer remember how, or why, he came here.

What would he do first when he gets outside? For reasons inside his heart, even that was unclear.

Satella: “Don’t... struggle on alone. Do it alongside the people who care about you...”

Subaru: “———”

Satella: “These people who don’t want you to die, these people who don’t want to let you die, fight alongside them... And when even that isn’t enough, die without forgetting what it is to fear death.”

Subaru: “———”

Satella: “Don’t forget... that there are people who would grieve your death——”

The world was cracking into pieces. Satella’s voice was growing distant. A fact that tore at Subaru’s heart. The palm in his hand was frightfully hot.

But he mustn’t let it go, he felt.

Subaru: “——I”

He couldn’t form the words to call to her. He couldn’t make the sounds to call her name. Satella, that name mustn’t escape his lips. His desire to reject her was fighting with his desire to accept her.

The sky was falling. The earth was breaking. Light flooded through until his surroundings were no longer the Citadel of Dreams. The other Witches had disappeared, leaving only Subaru and Satella in this world.

All was fading. And starting anew.

——Subaru only went on gazing at Satella in front of him, unable to say a thing.

Subaru: “———”

Suddenly, the veil of darkness fell. The impenetrable shadow, the one his subconscious rejection insisted was obstructing his view, was dispelled.

And, when he saw the face behind it, Subaru’s breathing ceased.

Before the breathless Subaru, Satella’s silver hair was swaying, while tears were falling from the edges of her narrowing, amethyst eyes——

Satella: “And one day— no matter what, you must kill me.”

Fading.

Disappearing.

The world was wiped away, and even the girl before his eyes had vanished.

Subaru: “I, no matter what—”

Only, clenching tight onto the certain, lingering warmth on his palm,

Subaru: “—Will definitely save you.”

He said to that vanished, beloved girl.

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Setowi (source)

Arc 4 Intermission II - The Guest of Honor Has Left

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Complete

Sekhmet: “Was it really alright, haa. Letting them leave like that, huu?”

Echidna: “It was his decision, his choice. I would like to respect that... Although, I can’t say I don’t have a thought or two about the way he left holding that thing’s hand.”

Echidna shrugged in response to Sekhmet’s listless voice.

Just as always, they were inside the Citadel of Dreams with its grass fields and blue skies unchanged. A cool wind scraped by, gently caressing the Witches’ hair.

—After the fracturing world swallowed Subaru and Satella, releasing them from the Dream, the world was formed anew.

Well, of course. This indestructible space was woven from Echidna’s soul, and so long as Echidna exists, it too would persist in this state. What transpired had been nothing more than an extravagant send-off for the guests who were leaving.

Echidna: “Still, when you fire off your ability all over like that, I can’t help but end up drained, you know. It would be appreciated if you could exercise a little moderation with your rampant healing.”

Minerva: “I follow my creed, if I see an injury, I heal it. Be it humans, Witches, animals, birds, fish, bugs, or Witchbeasts, it makes no difference, any wound on a living being is my enemy!”

Echidna: “Yes, but, unlike in life, everything you do here is a burden on me. When you were alive, it was the world that had to shoulder that burden, but now that’s all on me, can you imagine how tough that is to bear alone?”

Minerva: “Burden or whatever, I couldn’t care less about stuff that I can’t see. I heal wounds. If it shortens the lifespan of the world or something, that’s not my problem.”

Minerva crossed her arms, propping up her ample breasts, while the other two Witches wryly smiled. At first glance, the Witch of Wrath Minerva might seem like the most amicable of the Witches of Sin— Or at least, the most harmless of the Witches. In fact, her actions consisted entirely of healing, and the number of lives she saved in her lifetime must have surpassed the tens of thousands.

—However, Minerva’s seemingly harmless healing was indirectly causing equivalent damage to the world.

The destructive energy of every punch, kick, and bite would transform into healing in Minerva’s hands. This being the mechanism of the Authority of Wrath, no one besides Minerva could perform it. Even Echidna, who could understand its construction, could not replicate it.

Minerva’s healing attacks could bring lifeforms back from the brink of death— But to think that this Authority was all-powerful would be a mistake.

The healing power triggered by her fists was the result of a mechanism which forcibly twisted cause and effect, expending incredible amounts of Mana to activate. The Mana required far exceeded the capacity of humans, and, even for a Witch, Minerva could not possibly manage it alone.

In that case, where did the Mana for her strikes come from? —The answer is simple. It was stolen from the very Nexus of the world.

Ordinarily, when humans use magic, it is done by drawing Mana from the atmosphere through their gate, converting it into magical energy, and then releasing it once more as spells. In Minerva’s case, her gate was not linked to the atmosphere, but directly to the Nexus of the world. Said in more complicated terms, the Nexus of the world is a great, transcendental concentration of Mana— One might even say that it is the place where Mana is born.

Minerva’s strikes were drawing Mana from precisely that to convert her attacks into healing. By repeatedly doing this, the Mana that should originally be provisioning some other place in the world would never reach it. With a starvation of the Mana, important in upholding the world’s fundamental structures, an extremely dangerous possibility is then born— These unsupplied regions were to suffer natural disasters and calamities.

She may have healed over tens of thousands with her punches.

—But, in the natural disasters indirectly caused by her actions, just as many would have lost their lives.

Therefore, the Witch of Wrath Minerva was among the most dangerous of the Witches bearing the names of Sins, such that she was regarded as an enemy of every nation.

Minerva: “All I can do in here is draw up whatever Mana you have, Echidna. I can barely cure or heal anything even if I suck you dry, that’s so lame.”

Echidna: “There shouldn’t have been anyone getting hurt in here in the first place. But with all the ruckus that’s gone on here lately you could almost forget that.”

Minerva: “Right... Yeah. It was pretty rowdy, for a little while.”

Echidna’s words somewhat doused Minerva’s intensity. Her adorable face took on a visible shade of gloom as the blond-haired Witch looked up to the sky,

Minerva: “You think he’ll be alright? I’m getting super worried.”

Echidna: “You can rest assured. Since he’s rejected my hand, he will be struggling with everything he’s got to make sure that he succeeds. Although, he doesn’t seem to have an answer yet.”

Minerva: “What’s with that phrasing? You guided him so that he’d reject you, and then you are trying to hide that from us, when we know what you are really thinking? What’s the point of that!?”

Echidna: “It’s not that I was trying to be rejected— Since whether he declined or accepted, I would’ve been glad either way.”

Answering Minerva’s objection, Echidna sat herself down at the regenerated table. Clicking her fingers, she produced a teacup. Then, bringing the steaming cup to her lips,

Echidna: “I will affirm whatever choice he makes. And I don’t see any problem with what results from that choice. The fact that he chose it, or the fact that he didn’t choose it— That’s the important part. Whether the outcome is good or bad, I’m rather proud of my ability to be happy with either.”

Daphne: “Buuuut, that doesn’t mean you don’t have preferenceees~”

As Echidna brought the tea to her lips, a pitch-black coffin came inching up beside her. Daphne, who had settled herself inside her coffin once more, was attracted over by the assorted sweets on the table.

Daphne: “You say you respect the outcomeeees, but Dona-Dona doesn’t hesitate to manipulate things towards the results she wants to see, does sheeee? It’s probably true that you’d be glad either waaaay, but it isn’t true that there isn’t one you wanted, is iiiit?”

Echidna: “You barely have any interest in others, yet you always hit things right on the mark, don’t you, Daphne.”

Daphne: “Compared to the constant hunger on my miiiiind, I don’t really get caught up on the unimportant stuff. Haaa, haaaa, munchmunch~”

Munching straight through the sweets, Daphne ate up the plate as well. Seeing this, Echidna sighed before looking over the other Witches who were now taking their seats at the table.

Languid, visibly indignant, timid— and one with a particularly perilous gaze.

Echidna: “Well you sure look angry, Typhon.”

Typhon: “Because Dona wasn’t honest... Not being honest... means you are a liar? And liars... are baddies? Dona... Are you a baddieeee?”

Echidna: “I act sincerely in accordance to what it is I want. Telling lies is something I have no present recollection of doing.”

Unfazed, Echidna answered Typhon’s innocently blunt question. Echidna’s roundabout phrasing would probably have been lost on the young Typhon. After all, Echidna knew that if she really got on Typhon’s bad side, everyone present would be in terrible danger.

Condemning criminals and judging sinners amounted to just a fraction of Typhon’s Authority of Pride.

But, seeing Typhon puff up her cheeks assenting to Echidna's careful mental gymnastics, the next to speak was the Witch buried under a ball of hair.

Sekhmet: "Speaking while hiding your true intentions while speaking, haa... isn't exactly lying... How convenient for you... huu."

Carmilla: "E—Echidna-chan, is, really... just hopeless, isn't she..."

Echidna: "You two..."

Seeing Echidna scowl at being caught in the concentrated barrage, the other Witches smiled. The only one still sulking was Minerva, glaring at her with the corner of her eyes tilted up.

Sekhmet: "Minerva too, how long are you gonna stay grumpy about it, haa. Didn't we all agree before-hand, huu? You knew we'd be doing this whenever a Sage Candidate¹⁴⁴ arrived, haa."

Minerva: "Ugh, I know, I know. I'm saying I agree with having a real talk. Just, unlike you guys, I'm not in a position where I'm able rationalize it. I'd like you to understand that."

Daphne: "Met-Met's always sticking with Ty-Ty, she wouldn't understaaaand. You guys spend too much of your life worrying about stuff that isn't eatiing. It's such a waste, isn't iiiit?"

Daphne juttet in, prompting a snort of displeasure from both Minerva and Sekhmet.

While this tea party between Witches did preserve a kind of equilibrium, all its attendants were still people with egotistic dispositions. More often than not, they failed to see eye-to-eye with each other, and spats like this one were not rare at all.

Especially between Minerva, prone to jabbing out at anyone, and Sekhmet, who dislikes conflict, had more than a few verbal skirmishes. Every time, Daphne would get between them by striking to the heart of the matter with one of her tone-deaf comments. And more often than not, the conversations would end like this with no real conclusions being made.

¹⁴⁴ Much like earlier, it is unclear if it should be «a Sage Candidate» or «the Sage Candidate».

Minerva gets mad, Sekhmet entertains her conversation, Daphne comes in teasing, Carmilla soothes Typhon so she doesn't explode, and Echidna watches happily from the side— All the while Satella watches over them, smiling to see that all six are safe.

Those were the days from four-hundred years ago, never to come again.

Satella was driven mad because of the Witch Factor; Minerva died of insanity, caught in a trap; Carmilla perished in a sea of flames; Daphne wasted to death amid an ocean of sand; Typhon drowned in a flood; Sekhmet fell down the Great Waterfall as she rained destruction upon the Dragon; Echidna collected their souls, remaining bound to the present world by soul alone.

This was but an imperfect reproduction of those forever-gone days.

Carmilla: "You look, sad... Echidna... chan...? You look, really... sad?"

Echidna: "Why's that? I have no reason to be sad. You are all here with me, and I've have my chances to interact with the outside world— Why would I be sad?"

Carmilla: "Is, that, really alright? W—we are, just... souls, and, so, it's not really us, ri—right? We, are... hmm, al—already... dead. We can't, really, be together with, Echidna-chan, anymore, right...?"

Carmilla's stuttering words struck Echidna silent for a moment.

—It was Echidna's powers that had given the Witches, who had lost their bodies and existed only as souls, these temporary bodies in the form of mental constructs. She had prepared the vessels and housed their souls inside them.

But their souls were frozen at the time of their death, without a single change afterwards. So was the Carmilla that Echidna was seeing now truly Carmilla herself?

Drawing reactions that they've made in life from their souls, and using them to animate these bodies— Was this just a game of dolls instigated by Echidna's own desires?

The Witches did share Echidna's knowledge. And how to explain that if not with the statement that their existences were produced from inside Echidna? —This was a query Echidna had mused over countless times already.

Echidna: “Being the bundle of narcissism that you are, though I am a friend, it’s quite unusual for you to worry about me... Don’t tell me his boisterous, soft-headed personality has rubbed off on you?”

Carmilla: “I, wouldn’t... know, anything, about, that... Echidna-chan... You dummy.”

In front of Echidna’s self-distracting answer, Carmilla muttered with a despondent expression.

Hearing her reply, Echidna couldn’t help but burst out laughing.

Seeing Echidna like this, the other Witches, who had not been paying attention up to now, all turned to look at her. And, showered in all their gazes, Echidna spread out her arms,

Echidna: “Now, the tea party will go back to just being us Witches for a while. He— Natsuki Subaru probably won’t be setting foot in here again, I’m afraid.”

Minerva: “And you are okay with that? Not that I’m worried you’d get lonely or anything, but don’t you usually say something at the end? You were always so insistent about getting your compensation or whatever.”

Echidna: “Compensation... Ah, that’s right. Would you guys laugh if I told you that was my parting gift to him in consideration of his foreseeable tribulations?”

While she put her hand to her chin and pondered, the other Witches looked at each other. Then, sharing a nod, they opened their mouths at once,

Witches: “—Definitely not!”

Echidna: “Goodness, more people have recognized goodness in me than I thought...”

Minerva: “After all, getting no compensation and just helping for helping’s sake is something that would never happen out of you.”

Saying this, Minerva folded her arms while the other Witches nodded in agreement.

Echidna closed her eyes in front of their unanimous opinion, and, clearing her throat,

Echidna: “I guess we still have a whole lot of things to talk about. But seriously now, is that really what you think of me?”

Witches: “———”

Echidna: “But, well...”

Before the silent Witches, Echidna drank up the remaining contents of her cup, and then, bewitchingly licking her tongue over her lips,

Echidna: “—You are not wrong in the slightest.”

Arc 4 Chapter 80 - Rough Tongue

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 2 “Ignoring the Odds”, Part 1

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

—He woke to the sensation of something rough brushing against his cheek.

His returning consciousness was wracked by a pervading sense of exhaustion, and his body felt so heavy that it might’ve been lead rather than blood running through his veins.

Prying open his dry, sticking lips to inhale, sharp pain and the taste of blood seeped into his mouth, while, inside his completely parched oral cavity, his tongue scampered about, seeking moisture from the liquid called blood.

His limbs were sluggish, and his feverish head was barely functioning. He lacked even the strength to force apart his eyelids, only managing to open them by rolling his heavy eyeballs. And there,

Subaru: “...It’s you.”

The moment color entered his vision, Subaru’s eyes picked up a different hue of black than the darkness beneath his eyelids.

Exhaling breaths carrying the characteristic scent of living lifeforms, the creature had been consolingly licking Subaru while he slept.

It had a lustrous black body, its form slender and refined. Although sharp, there was a certain charm about its reptilian eyes, and its knife-like fangs could send one to eternal rest with only a single bite—reaching out a red tongue from between those fangs to lick Subaru on the cheeks, it was Subaru’s beloved dragon, Patrasche.

Seeing that Subaru had awakened and noticed her presence, Patrasche stopped her licking and sat down, waiting for his words. Apparently, the surprisingly dexterous dragon could bend her knees to sit down on the spot.

Seeing Patrasche before him, Subaru realized that he was sitting with his legs splayed on the ground and his back leaning against something hard. He tilted back his head to find a moss-covered stone wall behind him, and that he had woken near the entrance of the Tomb.

Subaru: “But, I was inside... Why am I outside...?”

The established precedent was that he’d wake up from the Dream Citadel to find himself inside the Tomb. If someone had gone in and pulled an unconscious Subaru out, then that’d be a different story, but the only two people in the Sanctuary who could enter the Tomb were Emilia and Garfiel.

The notion that either of them could have dragged Subaru outside wasn’t terribly convincing.

Subaru: “Then again, I doubt I crawled out of there myself, so...”

“Who”, he was about to mutter, when he was interrupted by the echo of another voice. The voice came from behind Patrasche, from an approaching figure in the distance, dragging his feet and out of breath.

???: “Oyyyyy! P—Patrasche-chan, wait... hold on...! Haaa, haaa... I—if you really run away, it’ll spell disaster for m—— Huh?”

The grey-haired young man—— Otto, stopped still, wearing an expression of sheer relief at the sight of Patrasche. After he caught his breath, Otto tilted his head as he noticed Subaru beside her.

Otto: “Is that you, Natsuki-san? What are you doing out here?”

Subaru: “Can’t you see? I’m moon-bathing. More like, what are you doing out here? Depending on your answer, I’ll see about turning you in to Garfiel.”

Otto: “I don’t know why you’d automatically assume I’m doing something devious, but me being out here at this hour, sweat dripping down my brows, isn’t entirely unrelated to you, Natsuki-san.”

Seeing it was Otto, Subaru jokingly glossed matters over as usual. Otto slumped his shoulders at Subaru’s reply and shook his head as if saying “Good grief”.

Subaru: “It’s not unrelated to me?”

Otto: “There was a big commotion at the stables, so I went there to see what’s going on, and I found Patrasche-chan kicking up a ruckus. I thought maybe she’s stressed out from being cooped up for so many days, so I unlatched the gates hoping to take her for a little stroll and... POW.”

Making a big clap with his hands, Otto squinted at the dignified Patrasche. But Patrasche simply ignored him, keeping her gaze on Subaru.

Otto: “Why do I feel like I’m being completely disregarded... Ugh, never mind. So anyway, she knocked me flying and dashed straight out of the stable. I was disoriented for a little while, but then I really panicked when I realized what serious trouble I’d be in as the one who let her escape... So that brings us here.”

Subaru: “And since she’s come to me, you can relax now, huh.”

Otto: “Yeah, no kidding. Natsuki-san, did you leave some kind of instruction for Patrasche-chan?”

Subaru: “Never had the time. I didn’t even come to see her that much except to give her food...”

Otto: “Well that explains why she’s so worried... You should’ve seen the way she rushed out of there.”

Subaru: “———”

Worry. Hearing this word in Otto’s muttering, Subaru’s rebuttal suddenly clogged in his throat.

No way, the thought surged into his mind as he looked down at his body in search of evidence. And there, he found it. On the right shoulder of his jacket were dented teeth-marks, mingled with traces of saliva. The middle of Subaru’s back was also plastered with dust as though he had been dragged over the ground.

Subaru: “Patrasche...”

Patrasche: “———”

Her round pupils focused on Subaru. Seeing the dragon silently waiting for her master’s words, Subaru inadvertently held his breath.

Subaru: “Did you... drag me out of the Tomb?”

Of course, there was no way for Patrasche to answer back with words. But, looking at Patrasche after seeing the dirt on his own body, Subaru noticed that her black skin was littered with lacerations.

Coated in resilient scales, it would be no easy task to damage the ground dragon’s skin even with the appropriate tools. But it seemed to Subaru that these wounds were inflicted from the inside.

Only then, did he remember.

—The Tomb would use its powers to expel those unqualified to take the Trials.

The wounds that confined Roswaal to his residence were inflicted similarly. When anyone without qualification trespasses inside, the Tomb would mercilessly bare its fangs— Which meant,

Subaru: “Did you seriously... get yourself hurt to pull me out...?”

Patrasche: “———”

Subaru: “Why would you... do something so stupid... for me it’s just waking up and walking out of there... That’s it. You didn’t have to get all flustered and hurt yourself pulling me out...”

The gashes carved into her skin were deep enough that the red flesh beneath her black scales was showing through, and just the sight of blood seeping from the gaps made Subaru want to wince in pain.

Patrasche’s persistence in pulling Subaru outside despite her wounds— was, quite frankly, pointless.

Unable to understand the meaning of Patrasche’s actions, Subaru dropped his gaze while the ground dragon brought her snout closer. Subaru, still sitting there with his legs powerlessly splayed out, felt its tough surface brushing over and over against the back of his neck.

The unspoken understanding Subaru thought existed between them, was in fact a one-way road, and their relationship was actually just him being cared for in various contexts.

Subaru: “Otto.”

Otto: “Huh? What is it? You two look like you are having a nice moment, so I was thinking I should just leave so I don’t get in the way...”

Subaru: “Can you... please ask Patrasche why she’s helping me?”

Otto possessed the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language, which allowed him to speak with animals, bugs, and various other life forms. Naturally, that meant he could communicate with Patrasche as well.

What was Patrasche thinking when she pulled Subaru outside in spite of her injuries? —What could be laying at the root of her actions unsettled him to no end.

But Otto frowned at Subaru’s request, looking reluctant.

Otto: “Honestly, I’d rather not, Natsuki-san.”

Subaru: “Don’t say that, just please.”

Otto: “From what I can guess from your mutterings to Patrasche-chan... Natsuki-san, you were just inside the Tomb taking the Trial, right? Judging from today morning, I’d already vaguely suspected that you are qualified for the Trials, but, from the looks of it... you failed?”

Subaru: “...Yeah, pretty much.”

Though the intensity of his interactions with the Witches had muddled his memory, in this loop, Subaru had yet to tell the others about taking the First Trial. After revealing it only to Garfiel, he re-entered the Tomb to the Second Trial and the Witches’ tea party.

The Trial wasn’t the only reason he was so distraught, but Subaru saw no reason to correct Otto’s misunderstanding and merely nodded his head.

Hearing this, Otto slumped his shoulders and let out an astonished sigh.

Otto: “I can imagine several reasons why you did that... But what you did was stupid, Natsuki-san. Your time in there was harsh, and on top of that, you worried your dragon, getting us where we are now. Patrasche-chan has a keen intuition, and she must’ve sensed that something’s happened to you. That’s why she knocked me out of the way and rushed over... And her wounds couldn’t have been unrelated, either.”

Subaru: “———”

Otto followed the same train of thought to reach the same conclusion. Subaru had figured as much. But the question was why did Patrasche go so far for him? That was what he wanted Otto to ask her.

Otto: “What? What’s with that look? You mean you are actually serious about what you said?”

Subaru: “How about we flip this. Do I really look like I’m in a state to be joking right now?”

Otto: “I’m sure you’ll find a way to tell terrible jokes even when you are ragged and torn, Natsuki-san. In this case, I would’ve been happier if you were joking—— You really don’t know?”

Before Subaru could refute that quiet question, he found himself overwhelmed by Otto’s gaze. It was nearly a look of disbelief, as if Otto was looking down at Subaru like he was a moron. So, was there something huge Subaru had overlooked, or what?

But finding no answers, Subaru only fidgeted, furrowing his brows, and looking confused. Sweat rose on his forehead from the anxiety, but still nothing came to mind. Seeing this, Otto sighed once again,

Otto: “My Divine Protection isn’t as all-powerful as you think, Natsuki-san. While it can communicate ideas, that doesn’t mean it can do translations. Even if what you say makes sense to me, I can’t act as an intermediary and convey it to someone else, there’s a tricky problem of nuance.”

Subaru: “———”

Otto: “That look’s totally saying, «do it anyway». Well, I can do it, but... I don’t really... see the... point...”

Drooping his head, muttering in dissatisfaction, Otto nonetheless gave in to Subaru’s request. He approached Patrasche, still rubbing against Subaru with her snout, and gently stroked her jet-black back,

Otto: “———!”

The sound that came out of Otto’s opened mouth was scraping and shrill. Bearing no resemblance to human speech, it was the product of the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language, which was converting his words into a cry that ground dragons could understand.

Patrasche lifted her head and answered in a similar screech. Hearing this, Otto opened his mouth again, and they went on exchanging these screeches, until,

Otto: “That’s about it, but... Hnnnnnnn, it’s kind of hard to find the proper words to communicate this. The way dragons express emotions is different from humans as well, so how do I explain this from only what I can understand...”

Subaru: “Stop playing around. Just tell me, please.”

Otto: “It’s not that I’m playing around... Ugh, this is really problematic! I mean, it’s really going to require an insane amount of consideration to get this right.”

Scratching his head, Otto looked up several times as he deliberated, only to lower his head again to continue thinking while Subaru started impatiently fidgeting. Then, Otto sighed, and,

Otto: “Alright, here it is. I’ve chosen the words that... probably... will be the closest I can manage.”

Subaru: “Right... So what did Patrasche say?”

Otto: “Mmmmm, it would be something like «Well don’t make me say that out loud».”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

Subaru’s eyes widened as Otto embarrassedly scratched his cheek.

Subaru waited a bit longer to see if Otto had anything else to say, but it didn’t seem like any more words were coming. Seeing the dumbfounded Subaru, “Well”, Otto went on,

Otto: “Patrasche-chan said, «Well don’t make me say it out loud». And in my opinion, that sounds about right.”

Subaru: “Don’t make me say... What...?”

Otto: “Whichever way you take it, that’s what it means. If I must supplement with my own opinion, it would be «Do you really need to be told that for you to understand it?». Something like that.”

Seeing Subaru’s confusion deepen, Otto held up a finger with “You listening?”,

Otto: “When you don’t know whether someone is in danger, but you couldn’t bear standing still and rush out, paying no heed to your own injuries as you lend them your hand, then you stay at their side until they wake up, and finally give them a relieved smile when they wake— I think whether it’s a human or a dragon, when they do something like that for another person, it’s pretty obvious what they are thinking.”

Subaru: “Ah—”

Otto: “So even if you are not Patrasche-chan, you should know what «Well don’t make me say that out loud» means. If you still can’t tell from her attitude, then you are just way too daft. You are really lucky, aren’t you?”

Hearing Otto’s exasperated question, Subaru realized just how stupid he was.

He looked at Patrasche, still sitting at his side, and found her staring at him with the same relieved gaze. As if noticing the shift in his mind, she wagged her long tail and stood up,

Patrasche: “———”

Once again, she brought her snout over, and Subaru’s hand naturally moved to pat it. Stroking his palm over her hard, craggy hide, Subaru’s voice was trembling,

Subaru: “So, um... You, like me, huh.”

Patrasche: “———”

Subaru: “You love me... that’s why you are here for me... huh.”

Something that had weighed on his chest suddenly dropped with a thunk.

Patrasche growled in reply, then violently rubbed her snout inside his palms as if to hide her embarrassment. Subaru furrowed his brows at the sensation scraping his skin, and, when he opened his mouth,

Subaru: “Oh... Ah...”

Otto: “Natsuki-san?”

A droplet of heat rolled down his cheek.

It was a teardrop. For before he knew it, the tears that had abruptly welled up in his eyes overflowed. Quickly wiping it with his hand, it was too late to hide it. Otto already saw it.

Otto: “Are you... crying because you realized your ground dragon is attached to you... Natsuki-san...”

Subaru: “Nonono... That’s not what this is... The timing’s just lined up too well... Ugh, just when I thought it didn’t feel real, the answer suddenly flew into my mind when I wasn’t prepared...”

The unfair timing of this revelation caused even more emotions to come flooding in even as Subaru desperately tried to restrain them.

Back at the Witches’ tea party, Subaru had realized that he didn’t want to die. And that just as much as he wanted to protect those he loved, he also wanted to be there alongside them in the end. As for whether he was worthy enough for them to care about him, that was more difficult to say, and so he swore that he would find out.

And now, Patrasche’s unconditional loyalty. Being hit with something like this before he had done anything, what was he supposed to do?

The answer to the question he had been agonizing over, Patrasche had just given it to him along with his awakening. At least to Patrasche, Subaru was precious enough that, when she sensed he was in a nightmare, she rushed there to pull him out even though it meant injuring herself to do it.

Subaru: “Didn’t think I’d be getting this lesson from you— Thank you, Patrasche.”

Answering the loyalty directed at him, Subaru filled his strokes with sentiment as he patted Patrasche. And, standing still, Patrasche resolutely stretched out her neck to savor his touch. All the while, she was swaying her tail in indication of her happiness.

Otto: “Now that you’ve reconfirmed your bond with Patrasche-chan, are you alright, Natsuki-san?”

Subaru: “Yeah, that helped a lot, thank you... Am I alright?”

Otto: “I mean physically and mentally. The Trial must’ve been really hard on you, right? You looked like you were almost crying from loneliness, and Emilia-sama was the same way.”

Just when Subaru was about to refute Otto's observation, he realized just how frail he must have been, and did not say anything. Instead, his thoughts turned to Emilia,

Subaru: "It wasn't easy, that's for sure. But I think it was easier on me than it was on Emilia. More importantly, since you were worried about me... does that mean you love me too?"

Otto: "Can you please refrain from turning it into something repulsive!? There are lines you shouldn't cross even if you are feeling lonely! Is Patrasche-chan not enough for you that now you have to ask that question to anyone you meet?"

Subaru: "Can't I? Honestly, right now I'm right on the fence about whether to give myself validation here, so I'd like to get one more encouraging message please."

Otto: "Right, right, good to see you are back to your usual self... My worries for you were purely out of consideration for our future cooperation, I hope you don't misunderstand."

Scowling at the warning signs of Subaru's returning eccentricity, Otto threw up his arms, saying this.

Future cooperation was a rather pretentious way to put it, but for Otto, who would like to clearly maintain his standing as a merchant, this was a necessary thing to say.

Otto: "My acquaintance with you, Natsuki-san, is purely to preserve cordial relations with Margrave Mathers. Should any problems arise on that front, or should it appear that I myself will be faced with peril, I'll be scurrying away as fast as my legs can take me. I'd like you to remember that."

Making that rather unfeeling statement, what Otto said wasn't as heartless as it sounded, because it was already the implicit understanding between them. The fact that Otto kept going out of his way to say it only showed that he was a kind person at heart, late as it is to mention this.

Subaru: "Right, yeah. You'd... Actually, no."

Just as Subaru was about to accept Otto's realist remark with a nod, he stopped.

Listening to him just now, a sense of awryness scraped across his chest. Then, arriving at the answer instantly, Subaru sighed.

Otto: "...What is it?"

Subaru: “I just remembered. Yeah, remembered... Remembered.”

Nodding several times in front of the confused-looking Otto, Subaru held his hand to his head and tilted back his neck.

Subaru and Otto had operated together many times in these loops inside the Sanctuary. Each time, Subaru had seen him. And because Subaru had seen him,

Subaru: “You’ll scurry away at the first sign of danger, huh?”

Otto: “Yeah, you bet. It’s obvious, isn’t it? There’s no reason for me to extend my concerns to you or anyone else. Where there’s life, there’s hope, as they say...”

Subaru: “You wouldn’t run away.”

Otto: “—Huh?”

As Otto tried to take a realist’s stance by assuming this frivolous tone, Subaru muttered. Seeing Otto’s eyes widen, Subaru looked at him straight on, and said,

Subaru: “—You wouldn’t leave me and run, Otto.”

Otto had snuck into a hidden building being guarded Garfiel who was prepared to inflict violence, all to rescue Subaru.

Otto had fought alongside the villagers, in an attempt to halt a transformed Garfiel, all to protect Subaru.

Even as he dressed himself in heartless words and pretended to be a bad person, Subaru knew that that was not the case. That’s because,

Subaru: “Otto— You are my friend.”

Arc 4 Chapter 81 - Glimmer of Hope

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 2 “Ignoring the Odds”, Part 2

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

After receiving that pep talk from Otto and Patrasche, Subaru’s heart was temporarily brought back from the depths of the abyss.

Quite frankly, there was a lot about the events inside the Dream Citadel that he still hadn’t swallowed down, but nevertheless, he must chew them and turn them into strength.

Subaru: “Well... I won’t be getting any help from Echidna anymore...”

The Witch of Greed Echidna had put up a friendly facade as she observed Subaru’s struggles. But after their final exchange, he was now convinced that that wasn’t all of it, and that Witches are creatures who never stray from their principles.

This was made painfully clear by the other five Witches— Sekhmet, Daphne, Carmilla, Typhon, and Minerva. In Subaru’s eyes, they certainly weren’t evil beings. But by no means would he call them virtuous. This was true even for Minerva, whose very creed was to heal others. The way she rushed with self-abandon to heal him, despite losing her arm and legs, was more horrific than noble.

As for the final Witch, Satella— He would much rather not think about her for now.

His feelings for Satella, and those incomprehensible emotions surging inside him. He instinctively knew that seeking answers now, when he was so pressed for time, would be dangerous. And those final words they exchanged at their parting. The last he saw of Satella— just remembering her in that moment sent the insides of his chest into a frenzy, as if his heart would tear itself out.

And so, Subaru consciously avoided thinking about Satella, and instead directed his thoughts to other matters. That is, the last bit of advice Echidna had given him, and the question of whether he should accept what Satella said entirely.

Subaru: “Be kinder to myself... That’s easy to say, but...”

By meeting Satella, and through the experience of the First and Second Trials, Subaru was made aware of the fact that those he wished to save from death would also grieve over his— And that, in his heart of hearts, he did not want to die.

But then, what could he do? Nothing had changed the fact that he had no other weapon at his disposal. The multitudes of problems waiting to be solved hadn’t gone away. In fact, the number of people he could rely on to help him had only decreased.

Though his heart had slightly gotten back on his feet, everything else had only degraded rather than improved.

Subaru: “Rely on the people who care about me... How am I supposed to do that...”

Just be honest and ask them for help. That’s probably what she meant.

But the one forbidding him from telling others was none other than Satella— Or, judging from the flow of the conversation, the one forbidding any mention of Return by Death was probably the Witch of Envy personality. Perhaps, Satella had different ideas than her alternate persona. And, the meaning of that final whisper was—

Subaru: “—Ugh, I already said this isn’t the time to be fucking thinking about this.”

Noticing that his thoughts were once again drifting towards Satella, Subaru stepped on the brakes.

What he needed to do was find to concrete plans to solve his problems.

Subaru: “Garfiel is... afraid of the outside world... Huh.”

That was Echidna’s last piece of advice, and possibly the information needed to break through this situation.

Garfiel had practically confessed that he had taken the First Trial, and Echidna's words had confirmed it. The question was, what did he see in his past that made him afraid of the outside world?

The trauma of not being able to follow Frederica out of the Sanctuary to live in Roswaal's mansion couldn't be unrelated. But Subaru doubted Garfiel would divulge it freely if he asked him upfront.

Subaru: "Which means I'll have to get it out of someone who knows... Frederica or Ryuzu-san were both pretty tight-lipped about it..."

If Frederica's words were to be believed, then she was unable to follow Garfiel into the Tomb, and consequently, she would not be in a position to know the contents of the Trial. Ryuzu, on the other hand, or at least the Ryuzu clone who ran in to drag him out, had taken the Trial. There was a good chance that she might know the details of Garfiel's Trial.

Subaru: "As much as I'd hate to do it... The most reliable plan would be getting the command right from the Ryuzu Meyer crystal and ordering her to tell me."

Not even the leader of the clones and the representative of the Sanctuary, Ryuzu, could disobey an order from the person holding the command right. Even if it went against her wishes, he could force her to do it. And more than just information, it would also mean obtaining the support of twenty-odd accomplices. At least, that was how he tried to convince himself.

Subaru: "-----"

The image of the Sanctuary in flames, overrun by a horde of white rabbits, rose in his mind. As well as the wretched memory of ordering the Ryuzu clones to protect him as he ran.

I must get to Emilia's side. With that as his justification, Subaru mindlessly gave his order as he sprinted, wound-ridden, into the Tomb.

He had never regretted or reflected on his actions after the fact, but now that he looked back on it with a clear head, the callousness of his deed horrified him. Especially now that he realized that it was out of his own pathetic desire not to die. Was there a more arrogant, more shameless way he could have sent those girls to their deaths? Even though he insisted that he didn't want to, he couldn't trust himself anymore.

Subaru: “My head’s a mess... I’m going too far into the negatives, damn it. My brain’s gonna explode if I keep thinking like this. Let’s go one-by-one, and scratch off what I can.”

Questions and answers, untangle the problems. Start clearing them one at a time and then connect all the answered questions into a bigger solution. Approach the problems so that it leads to a positive outcome. First,

Subaru: “Since I’ve passed the First Trial, I should be the one to liberate the Sanctuary. There’s no need to put any more burdens on Emilia. Or rather, since any more pressure would break her state of mind, that has to be avoided at all costs.”

He could remember Emilia sweetly drawing closer in the snow-covered Sanctuary.

It was obviously the result of her mind breaking as she repeatedly challenged the Trial. Nothing good can come from making her face the Trials anymore.

Subaru: “Clearing the Trials will be my problem... Which brings us to the Second Trial. I managed to survive it, but... does that mean I passed?”

The presents that were not to be— Just as the name suggests, are worlds that would have been if a different choice had been made. The Second Trial was precisely to experience such parallel worlds.

To anyone other than Subaru, it might simply have been an exploration of alternate paths that the world could have taken. But, to Subaru alone, the Trial truly bared its fangs. Subaru was shown the continuations of the worlds in which he had failed.

Facing him was a myriad of regrets, consequences, and grief-stricken laments for his death. Taking them into his eyes and soaking them into his skin, Subaru’s heart was shattered to pieces.

Even now, recalling it sent chills coursing through his body and assaulted his limbs with inescapable numbness.

And, just when he was swallowed by the shrieking of his own heart, he was summoned to the Citadel of Dreams— So now the question is, did he pass the Trial or not?

It didn't look like he passed. But then, what would he have to do to clear the Second Trial? Unlike the First Trial, he couldn't figure it out at all.

Subaru: "Just thinking about it won't get me anywhere... I just have to do the things that I can do."

Shaking his head and clenching his indecisive heart, Subaru stood up. He pressed his hand against the mossy wall behind him and peered into the dark entrance of the Tomb.

He had been pondering here alone, with neither Patrasche nor Otto at his side. Embarrassed by the sheer stupidity of their last exchange, he had asked Otto to bring Patrasche back to the stables. In the end, although it reassured him to see Patrasche's concerned gaze as she left, Subaru needed some time alone to sort over the various thoughts on his mind.

Subaru: "The primary problems that need addressing are the Sanctuary and the mansion. In the Sanctuary are the Trials, Garfiel, and the Great Rabbit. In the mansion are Beatrice and Elsa... I'm fighting on too many fronts here."

With not a single solution in sight, he was just about falling into despair. But this was no time to be despairing. He must steadily eliminate his problems, one at a time— While no longer treating his life as if it were disposable.

Subaru: "First is to confirm the status of the Trials. If the Second Trial begins, then that's okay, but if it's completed and the Third Trial begins, that's even better."

At least, if he could remove the barrier sooner, that would help the situation greatly. He should start thinking about how to move Garfiel as well. In the worst case, when the Great Rabbit attacks, they'll be able to escape outside. Even Garfiel wouldn't be so stubborn when he is faced with the Great Rabbit.

Removing the barrier would move the problems of the Sanctuary closer to resolution. Thinking that far, a faint glimmer of hope opened before Subaru's eyes, bringing relief along. He had been racking his brain over the endless problems, but now he finally saw something that could be leading to the answer.

Subaru: "-----"

Standing at the entrance of the Tomb, Subaru held his breath as he gazed into the darkness of the stone corridor.

If he entered, the Trial would start, and he may be faced with another present that was not to be. Subaru could never get used to those scenes, no matter how many times he saw them.

But he knew that he was not allowed to ignore or forget them.

If he cannot escape, then he must face that challenge.

Subaru inhaled a deep breath, held it inside, and stepped forward. Venturing into the Tomb, he would challenge the Trials and release the Sanct—

Subaru: “———!?”

The moment he stepped inside, a sensation swept over him like a punch to the skull.

The pain was like needles stabbing directly into his brain as light scattered before his vision while his legs gave way. His upper body toppled, and, unable to stand, Subaru collapsed on the spot. Intense nausea surged up, wrenching out the contents of his stomach as he choked on its bile. He coughed, but no matter how much he did so his body would not be appeased.

Alarms, alarms, the alarm bells were ringing.

Caught in this cycle of discord and dissonance, Subaru panted as he tumbled towards the Tomb’s exterior. Instinctively, he knew. If he takes one step deeper inside, the torment racking his body would explode in ferocity.

Subaru: “Ugh... haa, pffffff, ah.”

Tumbling out of the Tomb and throwing his hands onto the grass, Subaru puked, and puked, and puked. The moment his body completely exited the Tomb, the agony tormenting his body fell away. The headache, the nausea, the numbness of his limbs all faded as Subaru looked up with his teary eyes,

Subaru: “Ah... Ugh... What was... that...?”

He looked to the entrance, but just as he reached out his hand to crawl towards it, primordial rejection rose inside him.

It wasn't in fear of the trauma from the Trial or anything of the sort— It was simply that he understood that the Tomb had rejected him.

Subaru: "What, is..."

It rejected him. Understanding this, Subaru immediately realized what had happened to him.

Patrasche was injured when she went inside to bring him out. Roswaal was severely wounded when he went in to challenge the Trials. The Tomb rejects those who lack the Qualifications to challenge the Trials. And it had just done so to Subaru.

Subaru: "That can't be... I mean, that would..."

Standing up, tottering, Subaru mustered the courage to face the Tomb once more.

But, in just one step, the moment his foot entered the headache and nausea returned as the overwhelming malaise crushed him so that he couldn't even stand.

Subaru: "Haa... haa, haah... ha."

Stumbling back drawing ragged breaths, Subaru pulled away from the entrance of the Tomb. This attempt only confirmed what he had already realized.

Subaru: "That... bitch..."

Floating into his mind was the white-haired Witch in her funerary dress. At their parting, surely, she was asking Subaru, "Will you take my hand, or will you take Satella's?".

And Subaru turned down her hand to choose Satella's.

If this was her revenge for his choice, then that's just far too—

Subaru: "And just when I thought...!"

In the very, very end, that apparent gesture of goodwill that had made him almost think fondly of her,

Echidna: "—You are not wrong in the slightest."

Hearing the mischievous voice of the Witch he should not be hearing, he turned his head to the sky,

Subaru: “Revoking my Qualifications... You said nothing about this, ECHIDNAAAAAAAAAAAA!!!”

——Natsuki Subaru had lost the Qualifications to challenge the Trials to liberate the Sanctuary.

Arc 4 Chapter 82 - Mutual Deception

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 2 “Ignoring the Odds”, Part 3 (until halfway)

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Complete

Subaru: “Right, so I’m not just imagining this...”

Touching his hand to the crystal before him and sensing no signs of anything happening, Subaru pressed his forehead against the cold crystal and sighed.

The girl sleeping inside the crystal, the original Ryuzu Meyer, made no reaction to Subaru’s lament. Although the lack of reply from that eternally sleeping girl was somewhat expected, the lack of reaction in the general sense wasn’t.

Subaru: “I’ve been disqualified... So even if I touch the crystal, the command right won’t transfer to me, huh...”

The right to command Ryuzu Meyer’s clones was a power only an Apostle of Greed could wield. Having rejected Echidna, Subaru had his qualification to challenge the Trials of her Tomb revoked. Apparently, he had been deemed unworthy of that role.

Standing inside the facility’s stagnant, sickening air, Subaru held his head as he saw his glimmer of hope fading.

The worst case, the absolute worst case before he confirmed this, was that it was the trauma from the Second Trial that made him hesitate to step inside the Tomb. Should this be the case, then it was only a problem with Subaru’s mental state. If he just forced himself to try again and again, he would eventually be able to bend his whimpering heart to his will.

But if it was something outside of his control, then there was nothing to be done.

Being unable to enter the Tomb also meant that he wouldn't be able to negotiate directly with Echidna to regain his qualification.

Even before that, considering their last parting, would any of the Witches even want to see Subaru again? —Probably not, would be his instinctive understanding.

Realizing this, Subaru understood that clearing the Trials himself was now out of the question, and the task of liberating the Sanctuary must be entrusted to someone else. Which means—

Subaru: "Emilia... will have to do it... then?"

Voicing the possibility that he was most afraid of, a heartfelt desire to curse Echidna's insidious designs swelled up inside him.

Echidna could read Subaru's memories. Only she could observe the repeating worlds the same way Subaru did. And so, Echidna must know about Emilia, and how her heart and mind had been broken from continually challenging the Trials alone. Echidna must also have known how desperately, and to what lengths Subaru would go to avoid that outcome.

Was the Witch of Greed forcing this hardship on Subaru and Emilia, knowing this?

Subaru: "What do I do, what do I do, what do I do, what do I do what do I do what do I do what do I do what do I do..."

His thoughts blazing and his mind growing white-hot, Subaru searched for a solution. But even as he taxed the burning synapses of his brain, not a single answer appeared to replace that extinguished glimmer of hope.

The situation was on a one-way road downwards, and the number of people he could rely on was diminishing.

A person who knew the situation he was in, who could pleasantly listen to his words with understanding.

Someone who could accept the things he must leave unsaid, and converse with him regardless.

Nothing would come of mulling over it alone. And he couldn't rely on Echidna anymore.

Which means, there now was only one person left whom he could share his problems with.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Roswaal: “Iii certainly wasn’t expecting you to be visiting so late at niight.”

Subaru: “...Right, but why do I get the feeling you got everything ready and had been waiting for me? You haven’t snuffed out the light to sleep, and looks like you just lit the fire, too.”

Roswaal: “Aahaaaaa, so haaarsh. But, well, you are not wrooong in the least.”

Sitting up on the bed leaning against his pillow, Roswaal welcomed Subaru with a smile. While most of the lights in Roswaal’s residence were extinguished, the candle burning on his little bedside table had just been changed, its amber light swaying as it illuminated the room.

The entrancing, flickering candle-flame cast an eerie shadow over Roswaal’s pallid face. Taking this into his sight, Subaru swallowed a small breath as he prepared for the conversation to come.

If Subaru’s understanding was correct, then this conversation with Roswaal would—

Roswaal: “Aaand so? You’ve come to me in the middle of the night for a reason? Cooould it be, that you are here to win me over with impaaassioned confessions of your longings?”

Subaru: “...Confession... I wouldn’t call it that. Roswaal, is there a way to release the Sanctuary without passing the Trials?”

Roswaal: “———”

At that sentence alone, Roswaal’s smile curdled, taking on a lurid, ghastly chill.

In fact, the slit of the clown’s smiling lips stretched wide. Stroking his long blue hair, he nodded several times, gazing into Subaru with his single yellow pupil,

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun—— Which attempt are you currently on?”

That question took the reins of the conversation by implying that they both knew the whereabouts of what the other knew. With this, Roswaal would confirm the fact that Subaru could indeed Return by Death, and Subaru would know that Roswaal was in a position to know this.

And so, Subaru must present concessions while amending Roswaal's information.

With a short sigh, Subaru gave a purposefully emphasized shrug.

Subaru: "Sorry, but it's too stupidly many to count at this point. I can't remember how many times we've probed each other like this, either."

Roswaal: "I... see. Uuunderstooood. If you are putting it that way... I'll have to take your word for it, I suppose?"

Subaru: "So, how about it?"

Averting his gaze, Subaru tried to hurry the conversation along. However, he did not overlook the fact that his words had made Roswaal's cheeks stiffen, or that he had seized the initiative with his opening move.

—While Roswaal knew that Subaru was looping, unlike Subaru, he cannot retain memories from the previous loops.

This was something Subaru had learned in the loop where Roswaal revealed his knowledge of Return by Death. It was there, that Subaru learned of Roswaal's incomprehensible resolve where, despite knowing that his death will be the end, he still sought to use Subaru's Return by Death to attain his desired outcome.

Even now, Subaru couldn't help but find that way of thinking disgusting and repugnant, but—

Subaru: "I'm in the middle of some trial and error right now. So I'd appreciate your help."

Saying it with a kind of self-derision, Subaru was giving off the illusion that he was acting in accordance to Roswaal's intentions.

At this stage, Roswaal certainly knew more about the secrets of the Sanctuary than Subaru. It was unclear how much Roswaal's Gospel documented what would happen next, and it'd be no easy task finding out, but, recalling Roswaal's mutters as he sighted the Great Rabbit, Subaru deduced that it wasn't detailed to that extent.

Which means, as long as he chooses his words carefully, there was a good chance Subaru could deceive Roswaal while extracting information from him.

Roswaal: "And part of said trial and error involves freeing the Sanctuary without challenging the Trials... is it? If so, that's rather faint-hearted. With the Authority in your possession, an infinite number of attempts should certainly make it possible for you to overcome any hardship. I don't know how many times you have tried... But to give up in search of another method... is surely a sign of insufficient resolve?"

Subaru: "I don't consider stubbornly betting everything on overcoming the Trials to be a clever way of doing things. I'd rather choose a sharper method if such a thing exists, that's all. It'd be silly to put style over substance here. The important thing is the fact that we escape from this place and that the credit goes to Emilia... Am I wrong, Roswaal?"

Keeping his face calm and collected, one-by-one, Subaru scrutinized his own words in real time as he spoke. The task of weaving and checking each word moments before they rolled off his tongue was straining his nerves to the limit, but he would stand no chance of deceiving Roswaal without doing so.

His argument was cold, hard logic. Most likely, this was the Subaru that Roswaal wanted to see. There was also no doubt that Roswaal wanted to make Emilia the ruler, and have Subaru help it come to fruition. Besides, Subaru imagined that the more ruthless the suggestion, the more they would fit Roswaal's desires. And, sure enough,

Roswaal: "I see... that is indeed an answer to my liking."

Roswaal smiled with satisfaction at Subaru's reply.

Seeing the color of depravity deepen on the clown's painted face, Subaru bit down on the insides of his cheeks while doing his best to keep his untroubled expression.

Roswaal's disturbing gaze suggested that he regarded Subaru to be of the same breed as himself. That is to say, Roswaal was considering Subaru to be the same as his own degenerate self— Visceral disgust swelled inside him as he thought this.

But the more Subaru tried to think of a difference between them, the more apparent his own crookedness became.

Roswaal: “Whiiile I am certainly delighted to see the change in your thinking, aaaaanswering your question would prove raaather difficult. There is no precedent. After all, the barrier has never been broken since it was placed there. I wouldn’t imagine there is a crack somewhere, since, considering who installed it, it’d be best to abandon all optimistic hopes for suuuch oversights.”

Subaru: “Echidna’s barrier, is it...”

Roswaal: “Eeexactly. The Sanctuary’s Tomb is her gravestone, and the barrier is something she erected in her lifetime to keep the half-bloods for her experiments from escaping... Aaalthough, I’m sure you’ve already discooovered that much.”

Subaru: “Well, obviously. Just saying, I already know about Ryuzu Meyer in the facility in the woods. That and the clones, and how Garfiel has the command right.”

Roswaal: “Ahaaaa, that doooes speed things up.”

While Roswaal gradually disclosed information, Subaru was also carefully revealing his cards. Hearing this, Roswaal closed his single eye, sighing as if in thought.

Roswaal: “The liberation of the Sanctuary is an indispensable achievement if Emilia-sama is to become King. If she siiidesteps it, the people of the Sanctuary and the villagers of Arlam will not see it as such.”

Subaru: “As long as we can get them outside for now, we can easily smooth that part over later. Besides, this isn’t the only chance for her to gather achievements. It’s actually pretty bad timing, in fact, so if we pick another time to...”

Roswaal: “Another time? Whyyy are you saying this again?”

Seeing Roswaal’s eye widen in bewilderment, Subaru realized that he had misspoken.

Having scoured himself away and confirmed his resolve over countless loops— That was the Subaru he was performing here. In that Subaru’s ruthless thinking, there was no reason he would pass up an opportunity to pick up an achievement right in front of him.

Without letting his regret show on his expression, before Roswaal's doubts could deepen, "Just think about it", Subaru continued,

Subaru: "As you already know, I'm willing to stop at nothing to make Emilia the King. So, don't take this the wrong way, but considering how I can rehearse the future and come back with all the information, liberating the Sanctuary is an insignificant event that doesn't really involve a lot of people. We could be putting our efforts into more important stuff like the White Whale and the Witch Cult instead— This place just isn't worth the effort."

Roswaal: "...Nooooono, liberating the Sanctuary is necessary. Let me make this clear, that point is beyond compromise. You see, I still have some inevitable doubts about your pooooooooowers."

Subaru: "Doubts...?"

Subaru tilted his head as the conversation took a strange turn. Seeing this, Roswaal nodded.

Roswaal: "Indeeeeeeed, liiii cannot confirm what your Authooooority can do with my own eeeeeeyes. It is also possible that I am not convinced by your excuuuses. Though naaaturally, provided there are results, I would have no choice but to acceept it."

Subaru: "..."

Roswaal: "I can say with all certainty that to make Emilia-sama ruler, my power... And the support of the House of Mathers is iindispensable. Liberating the Sanctuary is what will make me believe that your ability to assist Emilia-sama is genuine, and only then, can there be a positive relationship between us... I would like you to understaaaaaand this."

Roswaal narrowed his single eye, as Subaru fell speechless at the soundness of his argument.

Everything Roswaal said was true, and Subaru could think of no effective rebuttal.

Emilia needs someone to back her if she is to stand on that stage as a Royal Selection candidate, and no other person of influence besides Roswaal would be willing to do so. All Subaru could do was to accept this as the reality of things, there was no other way.

Following his orders so as not to displease his patron would be the correct course of action. Roswaal's views were sound, and the urgency of the situation was undeniable.

But even while being swayed by those waves of reason, Subaru still felt like there was something off about it. It just sounded as if Roswaal was far too fixated on the point of liberating the Sanctuary.

Subaru: "This is slightly off-topic, but..."

Roswaal: "Hm? Whaaaaat is it?"

Seeing Subaru raise a single finger to draw his attention, Roswaal tilted his head. Locking his gaze onto his single, mismatched eye, Subaru spoke.

Subaru: "Is there a reason you are so obsessed with liberating the Sanctuary no matter what?"

Roswaal: "-----"

Roswaal met that question with only silence.

Silence, as his smile deepened and his yellow eye pierced into Subaru's.

—Subaru could sense it on his very skin that the mood of the conversation was changing.

Arc 4 Chapter 83 - Mutual Confessions

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 2 “Ignoring the Odds”, Part 3 (after halfway)

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Sensing the prickling pressure on his skin, Subaru understood that his statements had just touched the core of Roswaal’s intentions.

Roswaal’s smile was now the same kind he had given before being devoured by the Great Rabbit in the snow, as he revealed a portion of his plans. It was an expression of neither resignation nor delight, one which only exacerbated the alarms in Subaru’s heart.

Roswaal: “Nooooow what gave you that idea?”

Delayed as it was, Roswaal’s obfuscation indicated that he had no intention of moving the conversation forward. At this, Subaru clicked his tongue with “Even if you say that”,

Subaru: “There was just something off about the way you turned down my suggestion just now. When you stick a condition like «the Sanctuary must be liberated» right at the very top, of course I’m gonna suspect something.”

Roswaal: “But I’ve already given you a very logical eeexplanation? Besides, for the sake of our future cooperation, some proof is necessary. That you can become Emilia-sama’s unfailing support, that you can always provide her with the optimal solutions at her side. That is what I want you to convince me of. The requirement for this is liberating the Sanctuary.”

Subaru: “But that doesn’t sound like it has to be liberation. Any other method of escaping should be fine? If you want to give me a chance to prove myself, you can set up plenty of those later...”

Roswaal: “Let me ask you something.”

In rebuttal to Subaru's insistence, Roswaal raised a single finger. Cut off mid-sentence, Subaru fell silent as Roswaal gave a calm, collected nod,

Roswaal: "You are the one who seems awfully preoccupied about the Trials? It's almost as if there is a reason you don't want the Sanctuary to be liberated?"

Subaru: "Of course I want it liberated! I want to get this barrier opened as soon as possible and move the problems we can't solve in here outside... But."

Roswaal: "But?"

Rambling before he knew it, Subaru realized he was playing right into Roswaal's hands. If he starts shouting and blurting out words without thinking, this game of deception will go to Roswaal.

As calmly as he could, Subaru picked his words.

Subaru: "I don't want to see Emilia's heart wounded from challenging the Trials."

Roswaal: "But isn't that what your Authority is for? Should Emilia-sama stumble in the Trials, you can always take her place. What is the issue here? The important thing is that the Sanctuary is liberated, you said so yourself."

Subaru: "Hn, guh..."

Caught off-guard by his own words, Subaru bit his lip, searching for something to say. But asserting nonsense on top of nonsense wouldn't lead to any sensible response.

Subaru: "Of course I know it doesn't matter whether it's me or Emilia who clears the Trials. Digging up the wounds of her past is too painful for Emilia. I know I should be doing it in her stead... It's just..."

Roswaal: "Please don't tell me you are looking for a way out because the Trials are too painful for you too?"

Roswaal's gaze harshened, as his words grew in sharpness. To the stumped Subaru, "No, no", he continued,

Roswaal: “To save yourself, to cower from the pain... If that is the reason you are searching for another way out, is that all that your feelings for Emilia-sama amooooooooount to?”

Subaru: “That’s not...!”

Roswaal: “It’s not? Truly? How can you possibly assert that? Who would believe that? If you care about Emilia-sama, shouldn’t you swallow down all the pain, suffering, and agony? If you love Emilia-sama, surely you must be caaaaaapable of this? If you hold Emilia-sama dearer than anything else, if you prioritize Emilia-sama above anything else, if you regard everything besides Emilia-sama as minuscule existences, all while placing Emilia-sama higher than anything else... Surely, there shouldn’t be any problems?”

Roswaal’s fluent and irrefutable speech was on the verge of engulfing Subaru.

Although Roswaal’s words were the very definition of extreme, anyone who understands Subaru’s Return by Death would likely reach the same conclusion.

If this were before Satella brought out his true feelings at the tea party, Subaru would probably have found himself agreeing with this logic.

—Yeah, that must’ve been it.

Subaru had wanted to declare to Roswaal that he would never be like him and sacrifice everything for the one thing most important to him.

But, if had he taken Echidna’s hand at the tea party, right now, Subaru would be living exactly the way Roswaal wanted him to, probably.

Abandoning thought, eliminating choice, seeking only the results, scorning absolutely everything else. No matter how much he gets hurt, so long as Emilia and everyone else are smiling in the desired future ahead, then it’s fine. That was what he had believed in.

But would Natsuki Subaru, after opting to withstand that suffering, be able to smile alongside them at the very end?

—Or would he only manage something forced and barren, out of a sense of obligation to smile?

Subaru: "...In a sense, what you are saying is right, Roswaal."

Roswaal: "In a sense?"

Narrowing his single eye, Roswaal tilted his head at Subaru's meaningful reply. Enduring the gaze of that yellow eye, Subaru spat out the words,

Subaru: "Like you said, if I throw everything else away and move forward protecting nothing but Emilia... I'm guaranteed to be able to save her. But that's not enough."

Roswaal: "Not enough..."

Subaru: "I will save Emilia. But I won't be satisfied with only Emilia. Rem, Beatrice, everyone in the Sanctuary, everyone in the mansion, and everyone who's helped me in the Capital... I want to save all of them, all together."

Roswaal: "———"

Subaru: "Your lifestyle of being satisfied with only one person just doesn't work for me. Honestly, I'm not sure if it's me or you who's greedy here."

Consistently longing for a single person and abandoning everything for that one person is, in a way, beautiful. One could even say that there is no nobler pursuit than to live by that kind of love.

Roswaal's methods might be the absolute in perfection for a single man's lifestyle. But to pull this off required horrifying resolve. Scouring his soul and casting away everything but the one most precious to him wasn't a lifestyle Subaru could live by.

Just as always, Subaru was far too petty. Like a selfish little child.

Roswaal: "...It seems it still wasn't enough to sharpen your resolve."

Subaru: "..."

Roswaal: "For a moment... Yes, for just a moment, I had hopes. That I might live to see my desired future. But... it seems that is noooooooooot to be."

Roswaal shook his head, voicing this lament.

Their exchange had revealed to Roswaal that Subaru still lacked the resolve he wanted from him.

For a Roswaal who desired a Subaru ready to conquer with unfeeling resolve, the current Subaru was only an unsatisfactory failure. At the same time, to Roswaal, this meant nothing less than seeing the endpoint of his own life.

Roswaal: “Just how many times... are you going to disappoint me?”

Subaru: “If that’s how you feel, then you could be a little more cooperative with me. If you were more open to lending me a hand, most of our problems could be solved by now.”

Subaru threw back this disdainful comment at the disappointed Roswaal.

The truth is, being hopelessly lacking in the combat department, Subaru desperately needed Roswaal’s strength. His incredible magic that rained fire on a forest of Witchbeasts and skills which accurately scorched the attacking Rabbits— countering the Great Rabbit’s threat would be impossible without Roswaal’s help.

Conversely, if Subaru could secure Roswaal’s assistance, that alone would solve the greater part of the Sanctuary’s problems.

However, Roswaal shook his head to Subaru’s cheap yet ardent request,

Roswaal: “Sorry, but I cannot. Working with you as you currently are would be far too disadvantageous for me. Hypothetically... Yes, let’s hypothetically say that I assist you, and you overcome this situation. Your resolve will remain uncertain, and you and Emilia-sama will undoubtedly encounter other obstacles in the future... Will you also rely on me then? Postponing the resolve that you truly should have sorted out here, and panicking, bewildered, once you fall into an unrecoverable situation?”

Subaru: “...”

Roswaal: “You see, Subaru-kun, I... cannot give my assistance unless it is to someone with whom I can entrust my goals. A relationship of dependence is not what I need for my purposes. And so, I want you to do what you can to convince me that you have the resolve to go forward.”

Subaru: "Your... goals..."

Roswaal: "Regrettably, it appears it will go unfulfilled this. I will have to place my hopes on the next opportunity. When you can truly and unquestionably accept your power."

Ending his words there, Roswaal's body laid down onto its side as if having lost its strength.

For Roswaal, his present self had already lost any reason to live. All that was left to do was to watch Subaru fail and rewind, bringing about the ending of this world.

If the conversation ended here, Subaru would not have achieved a single thing he came for. As he watched Roswaal withdrawing into himself, waving his hand urging him to leave the room, Subaru desperately forced his mind to think,

Subaru: "...So what would I have to demonstrate to convince you of my resolve?"

Roswaal: "Mhm... Honestly, I had hoped you'd have already figured it out from our interactions uuup to now. Rewinding so many times just to ask that really is a waste of effort."

Drawn by Subaru's words, Roswaal sat up once more and held a hand to his chin,

Roswaal: "In short, liberating the Sanctuary will achieve that. Your actions are indispensable to the Sanctuary's liberation, and you will need to possess the unwavering resolve to repeat as many times as necessary. The liberation of the Sanctuary itself will be proof of that resolve."

Subaru: "But why is that? Sure, that might be the closest to an answer if there is one, but... If it's just overcoming the Trials, what does that have to do with my resolve to cast everything else aside? I mean, there's also a chance Emilia could just pass the Trials on her own and..."

Roswaal: "There is none."

Finding Roswaal's statements a bit too extreme, Subaru immediately voiced his doubts. But, Roswaal's response was cold and cutting. Its sharpness daunted Subaru, while Roswaal wagged his finger,

Roswaal: "Your fleeting hopes will not come to fruition. Emilia-sama will neeeeeeeeever overcome the Trials. That thing is too weak at heart."

Subaru: "...That... thing?"

Roswaal: "Precisely. I'm sure part of it has to do with its upbringing and the habits it had grown accustomed to, but that thing is useless. It can't even stand by itself, just like a weak, brittle little child. Watching the manner in which she pushes herself out of guilt and remorse, it's so admirable I even feel some pity."

Hearing Roswaal speak of Emilia in a way he had never heard him before, Subaru was at a loss for words.

Courageous, tenacious, kind-hearted, eager Emilia, temporarily caught by an ill twist of fate and unable to resolve her Trials, would surely overcome it and liberate the Sanctuary with her own strength if only she was given time. Subaru never doubted this.

The only reason Subaru wanted to take the Trials in her stead was that they had no time, and that Subaru couldn't bear to see Emilia hurt.

It certainly wasn't because he had given up on her or thought her incapable of passing the Trials.

Subaru: "How could you say... that Emilia can't... Then why, then why did you bring her here!?"

Roswaal: "Because of you. Because you are here, even a weak, powerless half-elf could aspire to the throne. No, she will take the throne. That is certain. Because you will remove all other paths and ensure that her desires are realized. That is the power vested in you. If Emilia-sama has any value, it is that she holds the strongest card— You, in hand."

Subaru: "I'm... the strongest, card...?"

Roswaal's piling and dizzying statements, these fantastical words about him being strongest, lead Subaru into utter confusion.

These are adjectives foreign to his powerless self. And Roswaal's words are quite incredibly insulting toward Emilia, and unforgivable.

Subaru: "Just, fuck off! What would you... What would you know about how hard Emilia tried, what kind of thoughts went through her head, and how much she suffered challenging the Trials!? Being forced to witness a past she didn't want to see, still, she... Do you know how desperately she tried!? And yet, you...!"

Roswaal: "If it all comes to nothing, then it is nothing but wasted effort. I'm sure you know far beeeeetter than I that it all came to noooooothing. If Emilia-sama's efforts bore fruit, you would have had no reason to coooooome here."

Subaru: "-----Hk!"

Subaru's shouted rebuttal did not make the slightest dent in Roswaal's composure. Instead, as if doused by cold water in the heat of passion, Subaru fell utterly speechless.

In fact, Roswaal's statements captured a portion of the truth. As far as Subaru had seen, Emilia had never progressed beyond the First Trial. Despite challenging with everything she had, each time she was thwarted by the barricade of her past, her heart was worn a little thinner. Unable to rely on her trusted Puck for support, as she was abraded down to her core, Emilia eventually came to mistake her dependence on Subaru for love, and broke.

Because he knew that future, Subaru could not refute Roswaal out of emotion here. But, there was no way he could just quietly watch as Roswaal insulted Emilia.

Roswaal, looking down on Emilia while expecting far too much of Subaru's Return by Death, was there some way to wipe that smug look off his face? ---The moment he thought of it, Subaru shouted it out,

Subaru: "Yeah, I get what you are saying now! But you know what!? Nothing will come of your plans!"

Roswaal: "Oh? And why is..."

Subaru: "You seem to be hoping I'd take Emilia's place and break through the Trials... but Echidna's already revoked my Qualifications! The outcomes you were hoping for won't be coming from me! Too bad, isn't it!?!?"

Clutching his chest, Subaru screamed at Roswaal's composed face. It was a painful affair for Subaru himself, but its meaning for Roswaal's plans must be simply devastating. Knowing that it'd be impossible even for Roswaal to keep calm once he learned this, Subaru was about to curl his face into a twisted smile, when,

Roswaal: “—Revoked... your Qualifications?”

Hearing a mutter, desolate and feeble, it was only moments later that Subaru realized it had come from Roswaal.

Before his eyes, Roswaal’s body sank into the bed, frozen rigid. Both his mismatched eyes were now wide open, staring at Subaru, while his lips faintly quivered. His usual self-assured attitude, that detached, all-knowing air, and that incorporeal queerness— had all peeled away.

Roswaal: “What... could it mean...”

Subaru: “What could it...? It means what it means.”

Called by that faltering voice, Subaru unwittingly answered in a shaken voice of his own.

Pressured by a voice that sounded nothing like the Roswaal he knew, Subaru swallowed his saliva to slightly moisten his parched throat,

Subaru: “Echidna... She disqualified me. Forget the command right over the replicants, even stepping into the Tomb sends my head reeling... I’m in the same boat as you now, can’t go in even if I try.”

Roswaal: “Why, did... No... How could this be... You, taking the Trials of the Tomb... Otherwise, the Sanctuary’s liberation... And her wish...”

Holding a hand to his lips, Roswaal let out this hollow mutter with a look of disbelief.

Seeing this unexpectedly intense reaction, Subaru was at a loss for words as he realized that his revelation went further than exacting revenge. Not just in this series of loops, but from the day they met, this was the first time Subaru had ever seen Roswaal panic. Just which part of his words could have shocked him to this degree?

However, Subaru only swallowed a breath, and,

Subaru: “Your Gospel... Does it say that I will overcome the Trials?”

Roswaal: “———”

Subaru: “I know that if things don’t follow the Gospel’s writ, you’ll be ready to give up on everything. But if you’ve decided that breaking through the Trials is my job... That won’t be happening now.”

Like how his victory over the First Trial carried over, and how the Witches seem to share his memories across Return by Death, the Citadel of the Witch of Greed lies beyond the rules of this world.

Even if he did Return by Death, the memories of their exchanges in the Citadel would not fade. That was why he felt saved in that place, and why he held more than a little fondness for Echidna— And that was why, he knew.

That even if he died and returned to the Tomb, his Qualifications would not be restored.

He would need Echidna’s permission to regain them, but to receive Echidna’s permission, he would need to enter the Tomb, yet to enter the Tomb, he would need the Qualifications.

—In short, Subaru had completely lost any means of challenging the Trials.

Roswaal: “Is there... a way you could regain the Qualifications...”

Subaru: “If there is one, you’d know better than me. If you are saying you don’t know, then how could I know.”

While answering Roswaal’s faint whisper, internally, Subaru noticed a possibility. Most likely, Echidna was even now watching Subaru’s struggles and hardships from inside her Tomb. As if sulking after Subaru rejected her hand, she must be waiting to see what he could do by taking Satella’s.

If that path winds up riddled with failures, and at last he relents and comes back crying to the Witch he had rejected, perhaps Echidna would offer him her hand once more.

—But, if he took Echidna’s hand then, it would mean throwing away every word he had said to Satella, as well as every feeling his heart harbored at this moment.

He would have delivered Emilia to the optimal future in the end. But even that would be better than scattering into a thousand pieces halfway.

Roswaal: “If you rewind the world, can you return to a time before your Qualifications were revoked...?”

Subaru: “You seem to be misunderstanding something, my power isn’t that infallible. It’s not like I can just return whenever I want with no price to be paid... Besides, the point I go back to will be too late. If I return, it’ll be after it’s been revoked. I still won’t be able to enter the Tomb.”

Roswaal: “I, see...”

Roswaal’s voice as he replied was weak, and his visage seemed to have aged all in a single moment. He had always carried a certain youthfulness about him such that it was almost impossible to discern his age. But now, with his shoulders drooping, even that was gone.

It was the anguished expression of a man who had clung to a delusion for a long, long time, only to be thwarted by something beyond his reach.

Beneath the clown’s makeup, for the first time, Subaru managed to feel that Roswaal was something of a fellow human. But this fact did not solve anything, no matter how much Roswaal might wish otherwise.

Subaru: “I’m just as lost as you are, Roswaal. But if we work together and talk this over, I’m sure we could come up with a solution.”

Roswaal: “———”

Subaru: “It might be pretty hard to get things the way your Gospel described, but the writ doesn’t have to be the end of everything. If we just follow its general plot... Well, you might not agree with that, but if we can come up with a compromise...”

Roswaal: “...Not enough.”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

Subaru tried to find some kind of compromise and make Roswaal concede. But, with eyes so hollow that he might as well not have heard a single word Subaru was saying, Roswaal murmured something. Inadvertently opening his mouth as he heard this, Subaru took a step forward.

What did Roswaal say just now? Did he mishear him?

And, inching closer, Roswaal’s whisper slid into his ears.

Roswaal: “—All the ways I tried to corner you, were they still not enough?”

Subaru: “What?”

Roswaal: “I don’t know the circumstances, but if Echidna went back on her decision, you must have had a befitting exchange. I was supposed to have steeled your resolve to challenge the Trials before such a rift could have opened between you... I didn’t succeed.”

Subaru: “———”

Roswaal: “If I had cornered you further... Made you realize that if you tried to reach for everything, you will lose what’s most important to you... Then this wouldn’t...”

Subaru: “Wait, Roswaal. Wait.”

What was he trying to say? Though Subaru had the feeling that it would be something decisive and he absolutely needed to hear it, for some reason he was hesitating. Because, if he kept listening, he would no longer be able to stand here.

He was sure of it.

Or rather, he had already suspected something along these lines for a very long time. Those quizzical suspicions hadn’t taken tangible form because Subaru’s thoughts had frozen on the idea that Roswaal had no reason to do this, and because of the thin, yet present, trust he held.

But the words Roswaal was about to say would sever that once and for all. Before this happens, he must say something. But no matter how hard he searched inside him, Subaru could not find the words, while time passed on,

Roswaal: “Summoning you and Emilia to the Sanctuary, knowing Garfiel’s disposition...”

Subaru: “———”

Roswaal: “Forcing Emilia-sama to challenge the Trials, knowing its horrors, so that her wounds would spur you to action...”

Subaru: “Wait, please wait. Wa——”

And—

Roswaal: “Perfecting you by having you lose those precious to you in a place beyond your reach... All of that, and it still was not enough.”

—With this, Roswaal had just confessed to pulling the trigger on the tragedies in the mansion.

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 84 - Denied x Denied x Denied

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 2 “Ignoring the Odds”, Parts 4-5 (halfway)

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

—Crumbling, crumbling, the ground was crumbling beneath his feet.

Losing sight of the footing that by all means should be there, Subaru felt like he was falling from somewhere up high.

In reality, Subaru was only standing there frozen in the middle of the room, staring with wide-open eyes.

The fact that he nevertheless felt this was simply owing to the shock of Roswaal’s confession.

Subaru: “A place... beyond my reach...?”

Roswaal: “You already have the answer, don’t you? When two important things are simultaneously faced with peril, one would be forced to choose. Choose which one is more important, and which to cast aside. Only this way, by relinquishing everything except the one most precious to you, will you become the perfect being that you were chosen to be.”

Subaru: “What kind of bullshit is that!? The perfect being!? All I see is a stupid, wound-ridden moron stuck alone in the middle of a gale-swept wasteland!”

Roswaal: “And yet you may still stow the one most precious to you in a place abound in lusciousness, where its purity and beauty is untouched. Compared to your own injuries, this is more important, isn’t it?”

Roswaal, somewhat regaining his composure, asked this question, but Subaru did not reply.

It was not that he was persuaded, nor at a loss as to what to say.

But simply that his erupting emotions were so great in volume that they could no longer be formed into words.

—There was never a time he had felt so overwhelmed beyond speech.

Was the tragedy at the mansion just the result of this senseless obedience to this incomprehensible logic and this arbitrarily prophesying Gospel? Frederica, Petra, and Beatrice, did they die for such a selfish reason?

Perfecting Subaru's existence— was it for such a idiotic goal that those girls lost their lives, betrayed by the master they trusted?

Subaru: "Roswaal... are you really... actually... insane...?"

Roswaal: "...So it would seem. I have been for a long time. Ever since four-hundred years ago, when I was enchanted by those eyes, I have always been insane."

Subaru: "Four, hundre... d?"

Unable to swallow down the words that had just been thrown at him, Subaru only parroted it back at Roswaal with his face contorted by confusion.

Again, it was four-hundred years ago— but it was far too unnatural to hear it from Roswaal's lips. He couldn't possibly know what happened four-hundred years ago. Yet, the way he said it almost sounded as if he had existed all the way from four-hundred years ago until now—

Roswaal: "Natsuki Subaru-kun."

While Subaru's eyes wavered in bewilderment, a nearby voice called to him.

Looking towards it, it was Roswaal, who had stood up from his bed. Seeing his tall figure standing within reach of his exhaled breaths made Subaru step back with a gasp— But he was caught by his collar, unable to escape. Being pulled closer so that their foreheads were touching,

Roswaal: "You have judged me insane. Which I wholeheartedly agree. Without a doubt, I am insane. I am without sanity. Since a very long time ago, my heart was claimed from me."

Subaru: “Ah, haaa...”

Roswaal: “But why is it that you are not insane eeeeeeenough? You should be as insane—— No, even more insane than I. Your situation requires insanity to attempt. Because the place you are seeking is far higher than the place I am. For traversing a path of solitude beyond any comprehension or sympathy, you have no need for a human heart. Your heart must be strong, solid, as iron, yes?”

Subaru: “Ah, gh... st—stop it!”

One-by-one the words seeped into his mind as Roswaal’s voice drew him towards the depths of the abyss. Subaru shook his head, trying to dispel that sensation, shoving Roswaal’s chest away. Jabbing a finger at his lanky body as he stepped back, unable to hide the shaking of his voice, Subaru bluffed,

Subaru: “Whatever happens, no matter what, your plans had already gone down the drain the moment I lost my Qualifications! Those traps you laid for the mansion, all of it’s just pointless, meaningless sacrifice! If you understand that, then put a stop to this stupidity now!”

Roswaal: “I refuse—— Seeing your insufficient resolve, I am even more convinced of its necessity. There is no need for you to be human. I will corner you, wound you, force you to become so dependent on Emilia-sama that you shed and lose your humanity. At the same time, I will make sure that Emilia-sama is plunged into hopeless love and dependence for your very existence. With you two engulfed by that mutual reliance, I shall choose the course while you mindlessly drown. That is the one and only way that I shall realize my goal.”

Subaru: “Wh... at’s the point in any of that...!? No matter how much you whittle me down, that will not get my Qualifications back! You can break every bone in my body trying to do it, and you’ll still have nothing to show for it!”

Roswaal: “You should know best whether that is what you truly believe.”

Subaru’s screams were met by Roswaal’s frozen voice. The single, heavy thud in his chest was only because he grasped the meaning of Roswaal’s words. It’s quite simple, really.

Just as he figured—— If he truly, truly repented and asked for Echidna’s help, she would offer him her hand again. If he was ever genuinely, hopelessly lost and was content with merely moving forward, this option would still be available to him. And for that,

Roswaal: “If it means having you return to her, Echidna will gladly reinstate your Qualifications. Considering her nature, that is the expected outcome. I still know at least that much.”

Subaru: “...”

Roswaal: “Hold your conceit, Natsuki Subaru. You are not the only one who understands Echidna.”

Spoken in a tone completely unlike Roswaal, it was filled to the brim with hatred and malice.

Struck by the intensity of its loathing, Subaru’s body froze. And it was only when he digested the meaning of those words that Subaru realized what Roswaal’s goal may be.

Subaru: “The reason you are so obsessed with liberating the Sanctuary is... because that’s Echidna’s wish?”

Roswaal: “...”

Subaru: “She designed it so that the Tomb’s Trials would lead to the liberation of the Sanctuary... and completing this would serve as some kind of offering to her memory, is that what you feel?”

Roswaal: “...In life, Echidna had always wondered how this place would meet its end after her death. To that end, she left the Tomb’s mechanisms behind, and in there, she housed her soul. But for all of four-hundred years, the ending she desired has not visited this place.”

In the four-hundred years since the Sanctuary’s barrier was erected, not once had it been broken. Echidna’s wish of witnessing its end never came to pass. Could Roswaal’s desire be showing Echidna that end so that it would give her soul repose?

The idea itself wasn’t beyond Subaru’s understanding. While he never believed in ghosts back in his old world, in this one, Subaru had interacted with Echidna and the other Witches. Should it be that the Witches still had some attachment to this world, then wanting to grant their wish should evoke a feeling close to gratitude.

But to live entirely for that purpose while disregarding the lives of everyone else would be preposterous.

Subaru: “That’s not the same thing at all. Roswaal, we can find other ways to give Echidna’s soul repose. I promise, I will make sure of it— So call off the attack on the mansion.”

Roswaal: “I refuse. I will fulfill my desires and Echidna’s wish. I will do what is necessary. I will ruin all those I need to, I will wound you, I will become the villain, and I will bloody my hands if need be.”

Subaru: “Stop dragging other people into your own self-satisfaction! If there’s something you want to tell her, pull her out and tell her yourself! Instead of making sacrifices of some woman trying to create a future, some child who still has her future, and some girl who’s shutting herself in because she’s stopped believing in the future!”

There was no need for Frederica, Petra, and Beatrice to be sacrificed for this plan. And there was no way he could accept Roswaal’s self-indulgent reasoning, especially when it completely disregarded the lives of those girls and was designed only to wound Subaru.

Roswaal: “I refuse. The only offer I will hear is «I will do as Roswaal intended». All else I will reject. Their sacrifice is necessary.”

Subaru: “Fuck off. I’ll have no problem exposing everything that you are planning and all the consequences that’ll entail.”

Roswaal: “Or rather, you ought to think before you act. What would be the point of doing such a thing? Making my misdeeds public will not change a single thing about the situation the Sanctuary is wrapped up in. Emilia-sama will lose her backer for the Royal Selection, and the relationship between the residents and the refugees will only deteriorate. How do you think Emilia-sama will do in the Trials with a malice-laden bomb at her back? How many times have you already seen Emilia-sama crumble?”

Subaru: “Wh—when Garfiel learns that Frederica... that his sister is to be sacrificed in your plan, there’s no way he’ll just...”

Roswaal: “If that’s where you are placing your hopes, then you are truly blind. Garfiel will never rush out of the Sanctuary to Frederica’s aid. Just the phantom threat of what might happen to the Sanctuary while he is away will paralyze him with fear. Such is the pathetic, foolish existence that is Garfiel. Narrow-sighted, stubborn, relying on nothing but brute strength. Even with that half-witted head, he could see what could befall the Sanctuary without him. And so, you can never use him to your advantage— Because that child is far too desperately concerned with protecting the weak and brittle in this world.”

A desperate child, a description that jabbed at Subaru's chest.

It was the same evaluation the Witches had given to the self-sacrificing Subaru at the tea party. It would seem that Roswaal felt the same about Garfiel. Unaware of this, or perhaps knowing full-well, Garfiel nevertheless persevered for his goals wholeheartedly.

Roswaal: "Garfiel will not side with you. And I have no intention of halting my plans. All you need to do is let your heart be withered, polished, and perfected. Nothing else is necessary. Accept this, Natsuki Subaru— Accept that the deaths of those other than Emilia-sama mean nothing."

Subaru: "Shut up! !! I'll never become like that! I'll never... I'll never think like you, I'll never be like you! That's just not how humans think!"

Roswaal: "..."

Subaru: "I'm human. No matter what kind of random, incomprehensible power I'm given, no matter how much pain and suffering I endure, it'll never change that— I'm human. I'll always be human."

Declaring this to the silent Roswaal, Subaru backed off from his towering body. A flicker of complicated emotion briefly flashed across Roswaal's solemn expression, but he immediately shrugged.

Roswaal: "Weeell, no matter. So long as you have infinite chances, it is all the same to me. This time, I will give up on trying to convince you fooor now. I'll be leaving it to the next me."

Subaru: "It didn't work this time... It will be the same next time and the one after that, I'll never accept your proposals. I will never become like you."

Roswaal: "Leave the room now. This life no longer has any meaning to me."

Returning to his bed and withdrawing into his sheets, Roswaal left Subaru with these words and drew his attention away. He closed his eyes as if to sleep, literally shutting off any further conversation.

Seeing this, Subaru opened his mouth, but no words came.

Subaru: "-----"

Instead, without breaking the silence, he merely left the room, feeling defeated.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Coming out of Roswaal's residence, Subaru wandered beneath the moonlight.

Subaru: "—What do I do?"

Muttering a seemingly impenetrable question, voicing the words that had been repeating over and over in his mind, he was answered by only an echoless silence. His question reached no one, merely disappearing into the void leaving a lingering emptiness in his throat.

In every sense of the word, he was stuck. He would have neither Roswaal nor Echidna's help now.

Collaborating with Echidna was now physically impossible and collaborating with Roswaal was now sentimentally impossible.

Subaru had considered this possibility. That perhaps Roswaal was Elsa's employer and the attack on the mansion was in order to spur Emilia— or rather, Subaru, towards the Trials.

It was almost as if Elsa knew exactly when Subaru would arrive at the mansion. And then there was the death of the possible informer, Frederica, combined with Elsa's knowledge of the hidden passage and the Forbidden Library. All things considered, the only remaining suspects were Ram and Roswaal.

However, Ram's utter devotion to Roswaal would give her no reason to do anything against Roswaal's interests, so that left only Roswaal— Yet, Subaru had always kept this possibility out of his mind, not because he didn't want it to be true, but because he thought it couldn't be.

Subaru: "If Roswaal is Elsa's employer, then..."

When Emilia's insignia was stolen the very day Subaru was summoned to this world, was that also on Roswaal's instructions?

If the Gospel's texts had foretold of Subaru's existence, of the existence of the Authority of Return by Death, and of the fact that it would prove indispensable to Emilia's victory, then the upheavals of that day would all have been necessary to procure Subaru as an ally.

His frantic efforts that day, the three deaths he endured to save Emilia, and Emilia's smile when he asked her for her name, was all that simply playing into Roswaal's hands?

Subaru: "If everything was following this prophecy... Then Rem's existence being stolen, the Sanctuary being entrapped... All of it was according to someone's plan...?"

In that case, all of Subaru's desperate struggles would have been nothing more than dancing to the strings that someone else was pulling. Was abandoning everything besides Emilia really the only way to proceed? Now that all roads were closed, was there truly no other choice?

Subaru: "What am I, stupid...? No, I am being stupid. This is exactly the kind of brainless thinking that made Roswaal who he is... If I let the same thing happen to me, I..."

The Gospel is not absolute. No one understood this more than Subaru, who had personally overwritten the prophecies in Petelgeuse's Gospel. The future-instructing Gospel is not all-powerful. In fact, every time something deviated from the writ, Roswaal gave up on the world and placed his hopes on the next—

Subaru: "—Huh?"

He felt like he hit on something strange just now. While speculating on Roswaal's Gospel and carefully going over the events in sequence, Subaru sensed that something was unmistakably amiss. But he just couldn't quite put his finger on it.

Subaru: "What is it... What... Something's off. But, what is it...!?"

As if being given an impossible riddle, Subaru searched through the mist for some sliver of light.

Roswaal's Gospel. Acting in accordance to the writ. Beatrice's Gospel. The Witch Cult's Gospel. No new prophecies following the death of its owner. Blank pages. Outcomes following the prophecy. Outcomes that don't follow the prophecy— This ongoing present that is currently deviating from the writ.

Subaru: "Still nothing— It's one step away, but I just can't reach it..."

Though he felt he was holding all the pieces of the puzzle, they would always scatter before he could form them into any semblance of an image. But it was a tug that he simply couldn't ignore.

Every time he was stuck like this, it was by piecing together smaller clues into an answer that he found the way out. This time is no different. If he could just assemble the fragments one by one—

???: “—Subaru?”

Subaru: “Mm?”

The call of his name pulled Subaru’s consciousness out of the sea of thoughts. Breaking out of the surface of the water, he found himself standing in the darkness under the pouring moonlight and saw Emilia gazing at him with her shimmering silver hair swaying.

Unable to hide his surprise at this unexpected encounter and the pain that stabbed at his chest, Subaru raised his hand, and,

Subaru: “Oh, Emilia... tan. What are you doing out here? It’s pretty late, you know?”

Emilia: “But that’s the same for you too, Subaru. If you stay up too late, you won’t grow any taller.”

Subaru: “I... think I’m about finished with puberty, so I’m not super worried about that...”

Emilia came in with a topic that was slightly beside the point as usual. Regaining some of his calmness thanks to her reply, Subaru naturally slid himself to Emilia’s side.

They were in the middle of the Sanctuary, in something of an open plaza. Leaning herself against the mossy stone of a dried-out fountain, Emilia’s silver hair drifted in the night wind as she looked to Subaru beside her.

Seeing an allure in her gloomy amethyst eyes gives a sweet, yet achy impulse to his downcast heart.

Emilia: “I couldn’t fall asleep, so I kind of came out for a walk... What about you, Subaru?”

Subaru: “...Nah, it’s the same for me. I’m the kinda guy who can’t sleep if you swap out my pillow, and Otto snores surprisingly loud as well.”

Emilia: “I’m reeeaaally surprised you are dainty about those kinds of things, Subaru.”

Emilia gave a quiet laugh, putting her hand to her lips. Watching her from the side, Subaru reflected that this was the first time he had reunited with Emilia since Returning by Death tonight.

In places unconnected to Subaru, people's actions generally follow the same path across the loops. Which means, on the night of challenging the First Trial, Emilia would've always come out here for a walk, unable to sleep.

Being invited to the tea party, being threatened by Garfiel's violence, discovering Ryuzu's true identity, and learning of Roswaal's dark machinations— While Subaru was busy with all of that, Emilia had changed her plans as well.

Emilia: "...You seem down, Subaru."

Subaru: "Mm, I guess. I'm not, though."

Emilia: "Hmm, liar. If you are the usual Subaru, you'd be more... kooky?"

Subaru: "It's been a while since I heard anyone say «kooky»..."

It's been a while since they've had this kind of exchange, Subaru thought as his cheek softened with relief. "See?", Emilia pointed at Subaru's cheeks, smiling.

Emilia: "There, you smiled. You always try to smile when you are in front of me, Subaru, but you couldn't do it just now."

Subaru: "——"

Emilia: "Did something painful... happen? If you are worried about something... If you want to tell me, I'll listen?"

Having the softening of his previously tense cheeks pointed out and having those words of concern flung at him, Subaru desperately tried to contain the heat building beneath his eyelids.

Her gentle, compassionate words permeated throughout his body. Surrounded on all sides, helpless and stuck, when even the last ray of hope is cut, he almost wanted to cling onto that beloved hand, so tenderly offered.

This wavering conviction, unable to follow through with even the resolve he had only just made, was both pathetic and frustrating.

Subaru: "It's... my own problem. I can't put that burden on you."

Emilia: "..."

Subaru: "Compared to me, you have a lot more on your hands, right? The way you were after the Trial... Are you really alright now?"

Emilia: "Mhm, I got you worried. That was unsightly of me, wasn't it? Sorry... I think I ran into a problem I just wasn't mentally ready for at all."

Subaru looked away, trying to change the topic, while Emilia managed a powerless smile in reply.

She leaned back into the fountain behind her, looking up at the night sky as if to distract herself.

Emilia: "Really... I wasn't prepared at all. I've gotten this far by running away from so many things that I needed to face, but..."

Subaru: "I don't see how that's a bad thing... What's so wrong with running away from things that you don't like? Does facing unpleasant things all the time mean that you'll beat them eventually? And who says you have to beat them? If you run away and find a different path, and then decide to take that path instead... is that really something people have to fault you for?"

Emilia: "Subaru...?"

Watching all those words spill from Subaru's tongue as he rambled, Emilia furrowed her brows. But without noticing her confusion, Subaru only kept going,

Subaru: "Echidna, who put up the Trials, Roswaal, who knowingly lured us here, and Garfiel, who keeps getting in the way, everyone's just fucking doing it for themselves. You are free to do whatever the hell you want but why drag us into it? And then you bitch at us for not living up to your expectations... the hell do you want from us!?"

Emilia: "-----"

Subaru: “My head’s about to explode and I’m at my wit’s end. And yet and yet and yet and yet more problems just keep piling up... and to top it all off, it’s supposed to be all my fault? Don’t make me laugh. Fuck off. Just f—”

Just as he was growing dizzy from the surging emotions and inexplicable rage—

—Soft palms looped around the back of his head, as he felt his body being pulled downwards. Feeling his head plunging into the softness before him, Subaru inadvertently stopped breathing.

A hot, yet tender touch enveloped Subaru’s face.

Through its warmth, he heard a heartbeat, while his blanked-out consciousness began realizing what was happening— realizing that he was being cradled against Emilia’s breasts.

Subaru: “Ah, aah—?”

Emilia: “Take it slow. Quietly now. Take it slowly, and listen to the sound of my heart.”

Subaru: “—Mm.”

Emilia: “Leave yourself to my steady heartbeat, and quietly breathe in, and out... in... and out... and repeat. Once you are calm, give me a pat on the back. Until then, we can just stay like this.”

His spine tingling with pleasure at the sound of the whisper in his ear, Subaru’s breathing accelerated. The shock of his unhinged emotions was blown away, replaced by the torment of all the blood in his body boiling.

How did it become like this? He was listening to the quiet beating of Emilia’s heart, yet his own was about to jump out of his chest.

But even his panicked heartbeat was naturally unravelling alongside Emilia’s breathing as her palms softly caressed the back of his head. Obeying her whispers, he took a deep breath, exhaled, and repeated until his lungs and his heart returned to normal.

Quietly, he tapped Emilia’s back. Her hands on his head moved away at this signal, while Subaru stood up, withstanding his reluctance to part,

Emilia: “Calmed down now?”

Subaru: “...Somewhat.”

Facing her gleaming amethyst eyes, Subaru spilled a small sigh. Hearing his reply, with “I’m glad”, a relieved smile rose on Emilia’s face. Trying his best not to blush from embarrassment, Subaru gave a little shake of his head,

Subaru: “Sorry for flipping out there... I really didn’t want to trouble you like this.”

Emilia: “I don’t feel troubled at all.”

Subaru: “But, you must be going through a lot more than I am... There’s no question about that... If I could, I should be saving you from all this... That’s what I thought.”

Emilia: “Subaru...”

He had always shown off his cool side in front of Emilia.

But the truth is, he was just an embarrassing, weak, conceited, useless, boastful try-hard who wanted to be at her side.

Subaru: “Nothing ever goes right... In fact I... spoke with Roswaal just now. About whether there’s a way to free the Sanctuary without the Trials.”

Emilia: “Huh?”

Subaru: “Truth is, I thought it’d be best if I took the Trials in your place... But now, I don’t think I can anymore. So I thought I’d at least find the shortcut that would be less painful, but even that’s not working out. Just... What do I do... I’m sorry I’m so useless...”

Emilia: “Subaru—”

Subaru hung his head. Despite receiving so many chances to repeat through Return by Death, he still failed to find a single solution. Just how pathetic is that?

If he had done just a little better, he could've prevented those tragic worlds he saw in the Second Trial from ever coming to be. And here too, there must be something he could do about this miserable situation—

Subaru: "But, I will find a way. I will make sure you won't have to get hurt or suffer anymore. So please, trust me..."

Emilia: "...Subaru."

Subaru: "Yeah?"

Emilia looked up at Subaru with her eyes drenched in tears. Gazing back at those teary eyes, within his wavering heart, Subaru steeled his resolve to ensure that its most integral part would never falter. He will defend Emilia, overcome the Sanctuary, save the mansion, and recover everything.

Though there is not the faintest visible sliver of hope in the road ahead, surely, he—

Emilia: "I'm happy you feel this way. I truly am— But, I cannot accept this kindness."

Yet, the resolve he had just supposedly steeled was, by the lips of that girl with unyielding conviction in her eyes, flat-out rejected.

Arc 4 Chapter 85 - With Words, With Feelings, With Fists

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 2 “Ignoring the Odds”, Parts 5 (halfway)-6

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

Subaru: “—Huh?”

For a moment, unable to understand what he had just been told, Subaru only let out an astonished groan. His eyes widened and his mouth gaped open, while Emilia watched him as she formed her thoughts into words.

Emilia: “I’m happy that you feel this way about me, say these things to me, and do all these things for me. It makes me feel so safe, and I rely on you so, so much... But I can’t let you search for escape routes for me.”

Subaru: “N—no, it’s... it’s not such a one-sided issue!”

Emilia: “I’m the one who decided to take this challenge. There is somewhere I need to go, a door I need to pass through to get there, and right now, I need to do my best to pass through it. I don’t want to make any excuses.”

Subaru tightened his lips as he was struck by Emilia’s determined eyes. Her resolute visage was overflowing with strong-willed radiance. It was not the face of a weak little girl who would stop still in her tracks without Subaru there to pull her along.

“But, why?”, with his heart buried in questions, Subaru shook his head.

Subaru: “Emilia, I think your resolve is amazing. But the Trial is not suited for you. To go in there with no plan when the chances of winning are this... slim, I don’t think it’s noble or anything.”

Emilia: “...The chances do feel slim, I guess.”

Subaru: “...”

Emilia wryly smiled at Subaru’s matter-of-fact statement. Her eyebrows droop slightly because she accepted Subaru’s opinion with absolute sincerity. And Subaru himself felt like a horribly deficient human being for not immediately finding the right words to comfort her.

Subaru: “Can we at least wait until I find some clues? If I can just have some time, I... can make the whole thing easier for you. Then you won’t have to worry about...”

Emilia: “No, you can’t, Subaru. Somehow, I just know— That there are no shortcuts or sideroads to get through the Tomb’s Trials.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “It’s strange. But I just know it. Even with time, unless I steadily prepare myself for the challenge, the result will always be the same. I know that.”

Subaru: “Ah...”

He had no words to refute her.

Though he didn’t know the exact details behind the Trials, he did agree with Emilia about these feelings.

Repeatedly challenging the Trial will not soften or intensify its contents nor its nature. The same conditions and the same contents will be there to welcome its challenger. Keeping its own properties constant, only changes in the challenger’s heart would result in different outcomes— This aligned perfectly with Echidna’s tastes.

Seeing right through his attempts to console her, Emilia’s understanding of the Trials was more than Subaru had imagined. And just as Subaru frantically tried to string word together,

Emilia: “Say, Subaru— Why do you want to help me?”

Subaru: “———”

It was a question that carried tremendous significance on the previous time it had been asked.

How desperately had Subaru struggled to answer her? How much hardship had he overcome just to tell her?

And that was why, being asked the same question now, Subaru could answer without the slightest hesitation.

Subaru: "I want to help you... because I love you— Because I love everything about you."

Emilia: "—Mhm. Yes, I know. Subaru, you love me."

Subaru: "———"

Emilia: "And it makes me reeaally happy that you do. It makes me feel reeaally safe. And makes me want to reeaally depend on you. And just having you watch me like this, I feel like I can reeaally try my hardest."

Holding her hands to her chest, her cheeks slightly blushing, Emilia closed her eyes. As if instilled with all her emotions at once, "And so", she continued,

Emilia: "Don't get stuck thinking that you have to do something. I can do my best just by having you watch me. If you want to do something, if you want to indulge my selfishness, then I want you to stay by my side. And be there behind me to support me."

Subaru: "Emilia..."

Emilia: "With your hand on my back when I'm faltering, I know I can stand back up again. And when I'm wavering, I want you at my side, Subaru."

Subaru: "———"

Emilia: "Thank you... for walking ahead of me, moving away the stones, smoothing out the path, cutting away the branches, and then guiding me by the hand. But, I think, if you always do that for me, I'll just be a burden to you. While I'll be all fudged up inside."

Subaru: "Who says, «fudged»... anym..."

He tried to say his usual line, but the words wouldn't come.

Subaru could no longer restrain the emotions swelling inside his chest. Just what is that indescribable, incomprehensible sensation? So as not to lose himself in that undeniable emotion, Subaru gritted his teeth as he continued facing Emilia.

Emilia: “I’ve only ever taken, and taken, and taken from you... So, this time, I want to do something different. It bothers me that every time I fail, I’m making you and everyone else worry... To make sure that doesn’t happen again, I’ll try my best to overcome it as soon as possible.”

In front of Subaru, who had fallen speechless, a subtle, courageous smile rose on Emilia’s face.

Emilia: “So please stay by my side and watch over me as I try my best— That’s all I ask of you, Subaru.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “———Hk!!”

Slicing through the wind, straining his legs as he ran, his heart would not stop pounding.

Every perilous footfall sprinting down that slope sent branches cutting painfully across his cheeks, and, tripping countless times, he nevertheless continued frantically running.

Subaru: “———!!”

Expelling a soundless shriek, stretching his throat to the point of tearing, he gazed up into the night through the gaps between the obscuring foliage, into the cloudless sky, into the pale, radiant moon amid the shimmering stars, and screamed.

——As if to spew out all the foolish foolishness inside him, and to empty himself of everything.

——Emilia’s last, resolute smile remained seared into the back of his eyes. That smile, her proclaimed resolve, and his own mistaken conceit. He finally understood that sweltering impulse scorching the insides of his chest.

And because he understood it, he could not bear to stay another second. Instead, after parting from Emilia, Subaru rushed into the forest, running aimlessly like an animal.

Not permitting him to stand still, not allowing him to escape into sleep, that emotion which would burst into flames just at the thought of Emilia— Shame. Shame dominated Subaru's entirety, forbidding him to stop.

Subaru: "I... I...!"

Overwhelming idiot. Truly, truly, a hopeless, irredeemable idiot.

When Roswaal disparaged Emilia and called her a "thing", Subaru had flown into a rage. He bared his teeth, screaming, proclaiming that he would not allow Roswaal to insult her. But then, when he met Emilia right afterwards, when he told her everything that he wanted to do for her, and was rejected, that was when he realized it.

—The one most guilty of doubting Emilia's resolve, determination, and strength was no one but Subaru himself.

Thinking that he had to protect her, not wanting her to feel sadness or pain— With that as his excuse, he had racked his brain trying to keep Emilia from any hardship. Challenging the Trials in her stead, then seeking shortcuts when that failed, and when even that was hopeless— Worst case, if he could just do something about the Great Rabbits responsible for the time-limit on the Sanctuary. All along, Subaru had occupied his mind trying to find a way to solve everything without Emilia having to take the Trials.

But while Subaru was obsessed with this self-satisfied desire to protect her and devising plans to shelter her, Emilia was steeling her resolve and determination in those nights she spent alone, choosing not to flee, but to face the Trials head on.

All she wanted was for Subaru to support her in that resolve.

Yet, it was none other than Natsuki Subaru who dismissed her from the start.

Subaru: "———!"

The instant he realized it, that unbearable feeling of shame pounced at Subaru's head.

Giving Emilia some unconvincing reply when she needed his response, he gave the worried girl a wave and left, practically fleeing. Then, his legs carried him into the forest, where he was now.

In the Capital, it was with the same selfish conceit that Subaru had wounded Emilia. Paying no mind to Emilia's considerations or resolve, thinking only of his new-found Authority, Subaru gave her no explanation for his selfish behavior and allowed it to open the rift between them.

It was because that happened, and because he confirmed his feelings for her and how he was going to express it, that Subaru was able to stand here now.

—But he was wrong yet again.

Taking on wounds in Emilia's place, shouldering the burdens in Emilia's stead, clearing the path for Emilia's sake. While his current methods lacked any bragging to Emilia or showing off to others, and may appear something of an improvement compared to before, in reality, nothing had changed at all.

He had just gotten better at hiding his wounds.

He had just muted the arrogant self-aggrandizement flaunting his injuries.

But he was still imposing his selfishness on Emilia, screaming that he was right.

Subaru: "I... I... Ugh."

Out of breath and panting as he ran, when he looked up again, a thick branch struck him on the forehead. Bending backwards in pain, he felt his footing reach empty space. Collapsing sideways, tumbling over the dirt and leaf-covered surface, Subaru came to lie sprawled out over the ground. With the frigid soil that would suck all the warmth from his body at his back, drawing ragged breaths, Subaru laid there gazing straight above. Through the gaps between the trees, he could glimpse the night's sky.

In this world devoid of streetlights, amid the prickling, clean air, the stars were brilliantly shining. Under the full expanse of that starry sky, surrounded by constellations he did not know, Subaru felt himself dissolve into a vortex of his own smallness, the anxiety for his uncertain future, his tangible dread, and his disheveled emotions.

Struck by a sudden exhaustion, he could no longer keep himself conscious. This tumultuous time left not only his body weighed down by fatigue, but also his mind, encumbered by the countless labors, steadily drawing him into darkness.

Return by Death. The Witches' tea party. Roswaal's intentions. His conceited self, and Emilia, who had resolved to stand up on her own.

Engrossed in those thoughts, just what would Subaru have to---

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: "Hell, y'look like shit."

The first things Subaru sensed as he woke were the skin-piercing cold and the sound of the voice addressing him.

His eyelids shuddered in the frigid sunlight as he grimaced while opening his eyes. Unwittingly looking directly into the sun peeking through the trees, his eyes teared up as he tried to right himself,

Subaru: "Gh, aw, hurt... s."

Hearing the sound of his stiff joints creaking, Subaru groaned in pain. The coldness of the soil and air as he laid on the solid ground had stiffened his body, and every movement of his joints was protested by dull pain.

???: "Not sure what you are tryin' to pull here, but sleepin' in a place without a roof ain't what I'd recommend. «When there's a roof 'n a floor, a Gauran gets by», they say."

Subaru: "What's a Gauran... Ugh, never mind."

Shaking his head, Subaru looked up at the source of the rowdy voice--- Garfiel, clicking his fangs and looking down at Subaru on the ground.

Just then, Subaru's sobering consciousness remembered what put him in this situation in the first place.

Subaru: "Ri... ght... I fell asleep like this last night..."

Garfiel: "My amazin' self's smelled ya in th'forest on my mornin' routine and came t'see what's goin' on. Layin' there sprawled out like that, thought someone beat me to it and killed ya overnight."

Subaru: “As the primary suspect, if you didn’t do it, I doubt anyone else would’ve... What time is it, anyway?”

Holding his hand to his forehead, Subaru shook his heavy head and asked. At this, Garfiel snorted with a “Hah”, and,

Garfiel: “No need t’ hurry, it’s still before breakfast time. Aside from th’ early-risin’ gramps and grannies, you’n my amazin’ self’re th’ only ones up.”

Subaru: “So no one’s missed me yet, then... It’ll be trouble if I don’t get back to the cathedral befor... Or, right away, actually...”

If Subaru never returned overnight, Otto, who got back before him, might suspect that something was amiss. Even if that wasn’t a problem in itself, Subaru would still prefer to avoid any anxiety spreading among the Arlam refugees. With the mountains of problems as it is, to cause any further discord because of his own indiscretion would be unforgivable.

Garfiel: “...Yer expression’s different from last night.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Using a nearby tree as support to stand himself up, Subaru gave his neck a turn when he heard Garfiel address him. Looking back, he saw Garfiel violently scratching at his short, golden hair.

Garfiel: “Yesterday my amazin’ self couldn’t tell if yer calm or not, but now it’s like... Yer face looks fuckin’ refreshed or somethin’.”

Subaru: “———”

Garfiel: “Tch, that ain’t it either. Can’t fuckin’ say it right... Oy, th’ fuck you laughin’ at?”

Subaru: “Kh, hahahaha...”

Hearing Garfiel point this out, Subaru touched his hands to his cheeks. Feeling that the corner of his lips had somewhat slackened, a trembling laugh spilled out of the back of his throat. At first a low, stifled noise, it grew gradually louder.

Subaru: “Hah, hahaha! I look refreshed!? Really, is that what I look like?”

Garfiel: “Yeah, what? Th’hell’s so funny...”

Subaru: “You got it backwards, Garfiel. Just, totally backwards.”

Garfiel: “Ha?”

Pressing back the urge to laugh, Subaru jabbed out his finger toward Garfiel. And,

Subaru: “I’m not refreshed at all. My insides are creaking and pounding, and honestly, right now, I feel like I could burst apart at any second. Everything I’ve tried to do has been invalidated, everything I’ve struggled for has backfired... and I seriously don’t know what to do now.”

Garfiel: “———”

Subaru: “I figured out I’m really in a deadlock, and it actually makes me just laugh. If everything I tried to do was pointless... then I’m right back where I started, aren’t I.”

Muttering powerlessly, Subaru’s shoulders drooped. If he had been mistaken from the very start, then every single thought he had since then would be faulty. With the time limit steadily approaching, only now did he belatedly realize that he had been using the wrong equations. And what’s worse, was those were the kind of problems no one could give him the solutions to.

Garfiel scrunched up his nose, not sure what to say to the dejected Subaru. And knowing that Garfiel wouldn’t give him any straight answers even if he asked, all Subaru felt in return was resentment.

And so, an awkward silence fell between them— Until,

???: “—How about I tell you what you should do?”

Subaru: “———!”

Subaru quickly turned to the voice coming from above, but Garfiel didn’t seem the least surprised as he looked towards the same direction, probably because he had already sensed its presence.

On the other end of their gazes, weaving through the gaps between the trees, it was,

Subaru: "...Otto?"

Otto: "Mhm, good morning. Yep, it's me."

Accompanied by the sound of twigs snapping under his feet, Otto wore a somewhat counterfeit smile as he approached. While his sudden appearance startled Subaru, Garfiel only clicked his tongue.

Garfiel: "Just sayin', my amazin' self's only just found him too. Not like I forgot all 'bout ya t'come chattin' with him instead."

Otto: "I wasn't worrying about anything like that. Just glad we found Natsuki-san safe— Anyway, mind if I make a request?"

Garfiel: "...Spit it out."

Otto: "Might I have a minute with Natsuki-san alone? There's something I'd like to discuss with him."

In front of the still-disoriented Subaru, Otto and Garfiel carried on their exchange with a pretentious air between them. Gritting his teeth at Otto's request, Garfiel glanced over at Subaru,

Garfiel: "Just don't try anythin' funny."

And with that, he left them. Treading over the grass, and out of the forest, Garfiel headed back towards the Sanctuary. Watching him as he left, Subaru wetted his lips with his tongue,

Subaru: "Sounds like you got on Garfiel's good side while I wasn't looking."

Otto: "That's because I wasn't just doing nothing while you are off on your little adventures, Natsuki-san. There's been a deepening of understanding between the refugees and the people living here, and... Well, none of that really matters right now."

Halfway through candidly answering Subaru's question, Otto suddenly dismissed the topic with a wave of his hand and then proceeded to lock his gaze onto Subaru. Or rather, it was far too intense to be a gaze. Its intensity was clearly closer to a glare.

Subaru: "Well, what..."

Thoroughly unsettled by that stare, Subaru only managed a weak mumble. Hearing it, Otto let out a small sigh,

Otto: "While it was only bits and pieces, I still heard what you said. Natsuki-san, it sounds like you are being cornered... by all sorts of things."

Subaru: "-----"

Otto: "Naturally, I wouldn't know the details, being kept out of the loop and all. But you must be at your limits, aren't you? Otherwise we wouldn't hear you blabbering about «What do I do now»."

Subaru: "So then, what do I do...? You said you could tell me."

Listening to Otto's sardonic remarks, Subaru brought up what Otto had said when he first cut into the conversation. Surely, that was what he said when he broke into the silence between Subaru and Garfiel. Just what could he have meant when he said that?

Subaru: "You said... you could tell me what I should do..."

Otto: "Yeah, I know. It's very simple really."

Subaru: "Simp... le?"

Otto: "You want to know what it is?"

That manner of speaking was really getting on his nerves. He'd agonized over his troubles extensively and was in hardly any presentable state. What this person was saying was just plain irritating.

Subaru: "O—of course I want to know! Quit joking around! If there's something you know, then..."

Otto: "Alright, then prepare yourself."

Subaru: "P—prepare...?"

Otto: "Yes. First take a long, deep breath..."

Holding out his hands, Otto motioned for Subaru to take a breath. Though he was unsure what Otto was getting at, Subaru nonetheless followed the instruction and adjusted his breathing, closing his eyes and letting his lungs expand—

Subaru: “———!?”

The next instant, a sharp impact whacked him across the face, sending him flopping to the ground.

Failing to catch himself as he fell, Subaru dropped face-first into the dirt. Quickly shaking his head, looking around to see what happened, he caught sight of Otto brandishing his fist, and, only then, realized that he had been punched.

There, in front of the breathless Subaru, Otto clenched his reddening fist, and declared,

Otto: “You should stop putting on airs when you are in front of your friends, Natsuki Subaru.”

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 86 - Ignoring All Odds

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 2 “Ignoring the Odds”, Part 7-9

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Subaru was so stunned by what had just happened that he all but forgot about the pain of being punched.

Toppled across the ground, he looked up to find Otto glaring at him. On that usually pathetic, dead-pan, definitely-not-intensely-emotional face, there was definite, blazing fury in his eyes.

Otto Suwen’s eyes were looking down on Subaru, full of rage.

Otto: “You don’t know what to do, and your head is all messed up.”

Subaru: “———”

Otto: “When you are in a place where you need help, when the strength of your own arms and mind aren’t nearly enough, all you do is frantically scramble around accomplishing nothing but wasting time, isn’t it?”

Saying this to the silent Subaru, step-by-step, Otto drew closer. On his hands and knees, stunned on the ground and feeling the heat swelling on his left cheek, all Subaru could do was stare at Otto.

Otto: “Silence means no denials, and so affirmation. In our world it’s the lowest of deeds, liable only for suckering— You hear me?”

Otto reached his hand to the speechless Subaru and hoisted him up by the collar,

Otto: “If you hear me, say something!”

Subaru: “———!”

A sharp, solid impact rammed into Subaru's forehead, sending sparks flying.

Feeling the world revolve before his eyes, Subaru realized that he had taken a headbutt from Otto. Then again, another headbutt sent him flying backwards. With his forehead and cheekbone aching, Subaru was shoved stumbling backwards. Naturally, no one could be expected to just sit there and take it—

Subaru: "The hell are you doing...!?"

Otto: "Oh, so you were conscious when I beat you just now? I was pretty sure I was roughing up someone asleep, you know."

Subaru: "What are y—!?"

Tearing up from the second headbutt straight to the nose, Subaru lashed back in rage, trying to grab Otto. But Otto slipped aside from Subaru's reaching arms and violently swept out his legs from under him, sending him tumbling to the ground.

Subaru: "Gah!?"

Otto: "Just because blood's finally rushing to your head, you've left your footing unattended. Isn't that just like you, Natsuki-san? Pathetic."

Subaru: "Oh... Really now!?"

Springing to his feet, Subaru threw the fistful of dirt he had grabbed during his fall, straight at Otto's face. But, having read his movements, Otto guarded his face with his arm and quickly closed in before Subaru could react. Just like that, in the time it took to gulp, Otto had placed one hand on the back of Subaru's collar and the other on his waist and tossed him.

Slamming back-first into the ground, Subaru bounced off the impact, choking from the pain. Even though the ground was thick with dead leaves where he landed, that didn't absorb the entirety of the shock.

Gasping, with numbness running all the way to the ends of his limbs, Subaru couldn't get up again.

Otto: "Resorting to dirty tricks as usual, Natsuki-san? As expected of you. Too bad they don't work on me."

Subaru: "...Ghh, khaaaa."

Otto: "See, Natsuki-san? This is what your strength amounts to. You'll never reach the level of a Knight nor that of Roswaal-sama, or even Garfiel. Even against me, you end up like this."

Watching Subaru desperately sucking oxygen into his convulsing lungs, Otto shook his head with exasperation as he prodded him with these words. Walking over to the helpless Subaru's side, Otto drew his face closer,

Otto: "Picking fights with the White Whale and the Witch Cult is ridiculous. You are weak, and the best you can manage in a straight fight is being snapped dead by a single finger. Surely, you understand this."

Subaru: "-----"

Otto: "So, were you going to compensate for your lack of strength with wits? From what I've seen, there is a bit of cleverness about you... But certainly no above-average judgement or decision-making abilities. Even your common sense is lacking."

Not sure what Otto was trying to say, irritation began showing through Subaru's ragged breaths.

By now, the convulsions of his lungs, the shock of being thrown, and the pain on his forehead and cheek had somewhat faded. In their place, what accompanied his returning calm was only confusion regarding the true intention behind Otto's words.

Looking down into Subaru's black, non-understanding eyes, Otto continued,

Otto: "Both your strength and wits are lacking, so if we are to assume you have something else to compensate for this... Well, there's nothing, really. You are small, your reach is short, you are the kind of person that can be found anywhere. You are just a commonplace nobody, and yet you are aiming for these disproportionately great things."

Subaru: "What... are you... even trying to say?"

Otto: "You know that you are powerless and weak, so what's the backup plan you came up with? It's to corner yourself even further, whittling yourself down trying to pull something out of nothing... I finally understand how Patrasche-chan feels."

Subaru: “Patrasche...?”

Hearing the name of his ground dragon, Subaru’s eyes widened in surprise.

Patrasche. The black ground dragon who got herself injured to save a master who didn’t even know why she would do such a thing for him, who had taught him so much and to whom he owed so much— The ground dragon who was so utterly wasted on Subaru.

Now Otto was saying that he understood how she felt.

While Subaru lay there, blinking, Otto stuck his fingers through his grey hair, and, with thorns in his voice, “So, you see”, he continued,

Otto: “It’s fine to show off in front of the girl you have a crush on. That much vanity is necessary, and I’ll respect that. I suppose it’s inevitable that you’ll be boasting things that are way out of your league. So I’m willing to overlook that.”

That would be Emilia. And the way Subaru acts in front of Emilia.

Otto: “And I’ll forgive you for showing off in front of the girl who has a crush on you. Again, that’s necessary. When love is involved, I believe the one on the receiving end carries a certain responsibility too. It’s important to be putting on airs when you are around someone who loves you, so I’m willing to overlook that.”

That would be Rem. Once, Subaru had told Otto the exact same thing. That he wanted to show off in front of Rem, because she was a girl who loved him.

Otto: “But, you see, that’s where you stop.”

With this, Otto stuck his face even closer.

Subaru shrunk up his shoulders in anticipation of another headbutt, but Otto went on, practically snarling,

Otto: “You know that you are lacking. You know that you are insufficient. You want to show off to the girl you like. And you want to be something that the girl who likes you could be proud of.”

Subaru: “———”

Otto: “So, to make up for the parts that you don’t want those girls to see, shouldn’t you be enlisting some help from others? —Say, from a friend?”

Pulling his face away, Otto said the last part holding his palm to his own chest.

Subaru: “Haaaa...”

Listening to those words, Subaru let out a small sigh.

Honestly, for a moment, Subaru thought something along the lines of “Yeah, you are right”.

It wasn’t that he hadn’t hoped he could cling to and rely on someone this way. Of course he had. Like Otto said, Subaru knew that he was weak and lacking. He was not nearly so conceited as to think that he could solve everything on his own.

In fact, all this time, hadn’t he been trying to enlist Echidna and Roswaal’s help to compensate for his own incompetence? And what happened was that far from gaining their cooperation, he instead learned truths he didn’t want to know and was wounded further.

He had already tried to do it Otto’s way. But what Otto’s suggested wouldn’t work at all. That door was already shut.

Subaru: “—Hah.”

Otto: “What’s so funny?”

Reaching that desolate conclusion in his heart, it began to show on his face as well. Seeing this, Otto furrowed his brows in displeasure, while Subaru, with his face red and swollen, looked up to meet his gaze,

Subaru: “You got it all wrong... It’s not like I haven’t asked for help. I’ve already tried everything that might work. I’ve already tried to rely... on anyone I thought I could rely on, and yet...”

His hopes were betrayed, but, not willing to give up, he was left only hugging his head.

In the end, even Emilia, whom he thought he must protect and save, rejected his thoughts. And only then did he realize that, all along, he had been looking down on Emilia as a weakling who needed his protection.

Having experienced various things, met various people, said flashy lines, barked that he would make everything work out, rejected the resolve to die and embraced the resolve to live, and pretended as if he had moved forward if only just a little, ultimately, all Subaru had been doing was marching in place.

He couldn't see a single thing he could do to alter this deadlock. Now that even his forced smile had dried up, only a cold, rigid expression remained on Subaru's cheeks.

Watching this, Otto's lips quivered at Subaru's silent laments.

Otto: "...But, I don't recall you ever asking me for help, Natsuki-san."

Subaru: "———"

Otto: "I'm not worthy of being relied upon, and it'd be pointless... That's how you see me, isn't it? Or could it be that, in your eyes... I'm just another one of those who needs protecting?"

Otto's trembling voice as he tried to stifle his emotions only made his words even more jarring.

This was merely a glimpse of Otto's rage, sorrow, and emotions without an outlet.

Touched by the ripples of Otto's overflowing emotions, Subaru realized that his words had inadvertently hurt him, and he quickly shook his head.

Subaru: "No, you are wrong..."

Otto: "How am I wrong? It'd be strange if I was wrong. If I was, then why are you sitting there alone not telling me anything?"

Subaru: "The fact that I'm not... telling you anything isn't because I don't trust you. You are wrong about that."

Otto: "———"

Shaking his head, Subaru's eyes were wandering.

Meanwhile, Otto fell silent, only keeping his blue¹⁴⁵ irises fixed on Subaru. The pressure of that gaze made Subaru cast down his eyes, muddying his words as he put his hand to his forehead.

It wasn't that he didn't trust Otto. During these loops, Otto had staked his life to protect him, and stayed with him even when there was no profit to be made from it. For that, Subaru was sincerely grateful, and was not lying when he called him a friend.

But how could he tell Otto the truth?

If it was Echidna or Roswaal who could understand Subaru's circumstances, then it'd be fine. The taboo wouldn't be violated, and conversation would be possible. But that was not the case with Otto. Even disregarding Otto, neither Emilia, nor Ram, nor any of the others in the Sanctuary knew the first thing about Subaru's situation.

Without mentioning either the Witch or Return by Death, Subaru couldn't possibly explain the predicament he was in. Even if he could tell them what will happen, about the Great Rabbit and the attack on the mansion— Subaru wouldn't be able to say how he came to know these things in the first place.

Even should he state this information, what could he tell them to make them believe him? Could he even hope for such a thing?

He knew he wasn't strong enough, he knew he wasn't smart enough, and he knew just how useless he was. And so, ultimately, Subaru couldn't do anything without getting help from others, and understood his task was to obtain the help he needed.

But now, having failed to do his job, he had come to a standstill.

Subaru: "I can't explain it. My head's all a mess... like you said, it's all a mess, and... there's no way I can prove anything I say."

¹⁴⁵ Originally, Otto's eyes were described as green. However, I've come to learn that to cultural differences, what is perceived as blue/green in Japanese culture is a bit different from most Western culture. In fact, it seems there was no Kanji that stood for green up until recently! Because of this, I've adapted the text. For more information, see here.

Otto: “...”

Subaru: “It’s all stuff that, even if I told you, you wouldn’t believe any of it... So how can I explain it... It’s like that with you, with everyone, with...”

Otto: “...Why don’t you try?”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

When Subaru told him that he could give him no reason to believe him, that was Otto’s reply. Unwittingly looking up at those words, he saw Otto with his arms folded, looking back at him,

Otto: “So, why don’t you try saying it? Even if it doesn’t make sense and comes out all jumbled because your head’s messed up, I won’t interrupt you, and I’ll listen to the end.”

Subaru: “No, but, that’ll...”

Otto: “Just... out with it!! Didn’t I tell you to stop putting on airs!?”

Otto kicked his foot into the ground, shouting that he had had enough. Then, jutting out his finger at the wide-eyed Subaru,

Otto: “If you have the time to whine about having no proof and how no one’s going to believe you, why don’t you use that time to spit out everything that’s holed up in that head of yours!? Isn’t that way more constructive than sitting there moping!?”

Subaru: “Even if you say that...! There’s no way you’d believe me if I gave you this mishmash...!”

Otto: “—Fucking, out with the mishmash! Then when you are finally done, I’ll reply «I believe you»! Because that’s what friends do!!”

—All the confounded, tangled contents of Subaru’s head was uprooted and blown away by Otto’s shout. Otto’s words were devoid of any real basis, and his logic was not that convincing at all.

Yet, to Subaru who had come to a standstill, it was more than enough of a push on his back.

Subaru: “Well... I don’t expect you to believe any of this, but...”

Little by little, he gave voice to every single one of the problems he had been keeping inside himself, and it didn't even take that long.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: "So, yeah... Roswaal's hired an assassin to attack the mansion... in order to corner me and Emilia so we have nowhere to run... Pretty much."

Gingerly watching for any censoring hands popping up, Subaru carefully brought his explanation to an end. Meanwhile, Otto had only quietly listened, albeit with furrowed brows.

Subaru: "And that's all the information I have right now... It may not be all that precise, but that's everything. With nothing held back, all of it."

Naturally, the unspeakable part about Return by Death and the Witches' tea party were a different story. With those parts left out, the foundations of his speech were definitely a bit shaky. Even Subaru himself felt that the everything was connected in way too vague a manner.

As such, he was pretty on edge to see what Otto's reaction would be. Although Otto had promised to say "I believe you" at the end, just what would he actually think about everything he said just now?

Otto: "Natsuki-san..."

Subaru: "..."

After a long silence spent in thought, Otto dropped his folded arms and looked at Subaru. Seeing himself reflected in Otto's green pupils, Subaru unwittingly held his breath. What's he going to say first? Subaru could hear his own heart pounding.

And, to this stiffened Subaru,

Otto: "There's no way I can pretend I didn't hear any of that and just run away, is there?"

Subaru: "Wh— haa!?"

Subaru yelped, thrown off by that off-kilter reply. But Otto shouted right over Subaru's yelp with, "After all!",

Otto: "We are trapped in this place with the Great Rabbit approaching, the only way to get out is if Emilia-sama breaks through the Trials, if we try leaving with just the people not affected by the barrier we'll get stopped by a clueless blockhead, and even if we make it back to the mansion we'll get murdered by an assassin hired by the owner of the mansion... What kind of a situation is this!?"

Subaru: "That's what I wanna know! Why do I have to be herded into a stupid ridiculous situation like this!? I mean I already knew it but is this how much *kami-sama*¹⁴⁶ hates me!? Well, I hate him too!!"

Supposing a god of fate really exists, there is no doubt that god really hates Subaru. And since Subaru didn't think he did anything atrocious to actually deserve this, it was just plain unfair.

But cursing the gods wasn't going to move this situation anywhere nor make things any easier. And, even before that,

Subaru: "Wait, Otto. I can see why you wanna flip out right now, but... you mean you actually believe all those crazy things I said?"

Otto: "———"

Subaru: "That these bloodthirsty Witchbeasts are coming, and even if we wanna run we require Emilia to be successful, that Garfiel'll get in our way, and that Roswaal's already betrayed us for his batshit insane ideas... You really believe all that?"

Saying it out loud again, it just sounded like a list of unfortunate situations all bunched up into one. In particular, the Great Rabbit's advance and Roswaal masterminding the attacks on the mansion lacked any proof whatsoever. Those were the two most important parts, and Subaru had nothing he could use to convince anyone.

For the Great Rabbit, how could Subaru possibly predict the movements of Witchbeasts when almost everyone in the world had already been trying?

¹⁴⁶ Literally meaning "Mr. God". It's neat, so I'm keeping it.

As for Roswaal, why would he be plotting against Emilia, the candidate he is backing in the Royal Selection?

Subaru could explain none of it.

Otto: “Natsuki-san.”

Otto briefly closed his eyes before addressing Subaru’s question. He raised a single finger, and,

Otto: “I’ve been to quite a few places up to now, and I might not look like it, but I’ve interacted with all sorts of people on the way.”

Subaru: “...Unless, you can tell if someone’s trustworthy just by looking at them?”

Otto: “No, I don’t believe in that kind of superstition. When you are a merchant, you’ll come to learn very quickly that there are people who can lie to anyone without a single cloud in their eyes. I’ve had more than my share of experience in that regard.”

He’s bragging about it, but doesn’t that just mean Otto has been duped enough times for him to have learned his lesson?

However, deciding that this was too important a conversation to stick that quip in there, Subaru kept his mouth shut and allowed Otto to continue,

Otto: “Well, after meeting all those people, I’ve also learned to do business in my own sort of way. It’s been four years since I left home and, for better or for worse, I survived.”

Otto made it sound simple, but it probably wasn’t an easy road. He too must’ve been thrown into life-or-death situations more than a few times. In this world, in which one could run into the White Whale just by crossing a field, it’s not hard to imagine the kind of dangers a travelling merchant would have to face. Stray dogs, burglars, those kinds of things.

Otto: “And so, day after day, like this, I’ve managed to make a life for myself as a merchant... And I can confidently say that, up to now, I’ve always picked the side that was favored by the odds. Though things don’t always turn out the way I’d hope... And there were times when what I thought was the winning side turned out to be absolute disasters and were never heard from again...”

Subaru: “Oy, oy, oy...”

Otto: “But, regardless of the outcomes, I’ve always tried to make choices that I don’t end up regretting. When I’m putting myself on the line, I think it’s obvious why that’s necessary.”

Subaru still couldn’t exactly tell what Otto’s criteria is, but it sounded like he always picked the side with the best chances.

Hoping to establish a connection with Roswaal, Otto had accompanied Subaru to the Sanctuary with his personal advancements in mind. On that front, Otto behaved very well as a through-and-through realist. That’s why Subaru figured that Otto would have no reason to listen to his baseless words without the slightest hope of—

Otto: “And so, this is a first, Natsuki-san.”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

Not sure what he was saying, Subaru only stared at Otto with his mouth gaping open. And, seeing this, with a stupidly cheerful expression,

Otto: “Ignoring all odds, and joining the side with no visible chance of success, for me, is definitely a first.”

Otto stated his decision.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Running as fast as his legs could carry him. Out of breath.

Chasing his bolting heart across the meadow, without a second to lose, Subaru’s body was shrouded in wind. Slicing through the crisp morning air, making great swings of his arms, he sprinted, step after leaping step. Kicking up soil, trampling over rocks, he dashed straight along the shoddy path.

At last, the destined building entered his field of view.

His cheeks twisting with unwitting exhilaration, Subaru bared his teeth. Huffing like a dog with his tongue sticking out, he bounded for the building's entrance, reaching for the door. And,

Subaru: “—Roswaal!!!”

Violently flinging it open, Subaru tumbled into the building. Through the entryway and past the adjacent living room, he shoved open the flimsy door with nearly enough force to break it.

Inside, were Roswaal, sitting up on the bed, and Ram, diligently tending to him, their expressions painted over with surprise.

It was rare to get such a startled reaction from the usually carefree Roswaal and the always brazenly unemotive Ram.

A good omen for the present, where he was attempting something he never had before.

Counting on their surprise to be the winds of his good fortune, Subaru jutted out his finger at the speechless master and servant, and,

Subaru: “—Let's make a bet. Between you and me, using our respective wishes as the chips.”

Arc 4 Chapter 87 - One Oni Outside, Two Clowns Inside

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 3 “Straight Bet”, Part 2

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Complete

Two astonished gazes landed on the out-of-breath Subaru who had barged into the room.

As far as he was concerned, the two were supposed to be completely foreign to the concept of being surprised. And, deriving some small satisfaction from their reactions, the wicked smile on Subaru’s face deepened.

Roswaal: “—A bet?”

Muttering this, Roswaal narrowed his mismatched eyes.

His face that was usually covered in clown’s makeup was now devoid of any paint. Over the various loops, only once had Subaru seen Roswaal’s real face like this before. His skin beneath the white cosmetics was pale, and there was a certain guileless simplicity to his gaze without his eyeliner— an impression entirely detached from the Roswaal Subaru had known. The shady, calculating figure behind the painted face had swiftly transformed into a clean, upstanding youth as the makeup fell away.

Handsome people are handsome without needing anything extra, Subaru silently remarked as he nodded to Roswaal’s mutter,

Subaru: “Yeah, a bet. Your wish against mine... A real one-shot, winner takes all affair.”

Roswaal: “———”

Subaru raised a single finger, magnificently declaring. As if scrutinizing Subaru’s proposal, Roswaal squinted his eyes. But before Roswaal could give his reply, another figure cut in between their line of sight— the pink-haired maid, Ram.

With Roswaal to her back, Ram's gaze was severe as she faced Subaru. Although, in their day-to-day, Ram tended to scold Subaru every chance she got, and her gaze towards him was always sharp, none of it could compare with what was in her eyes at this moment.

Ram: "Hold it, Barusu. You come barging into the room, and just when I was wondering what you had to say... You mean to further burden Roswaal-sama in his convalescence? There should be a limit to your insolence."

Subaru: "Considering the circumstances, the «I'm sick and injured» excuse won't work anymore. That's got nothing to do with that slick tongue and black heart of his... So he'll just have to suck it up until I'm done."

Ram: "Barusu—"

Subaru: "And nothing you say is gonna change that!"

A blend of perilousness and severity flared in Ram's eyes. But before she could act, Subaru stomped his foot into the floor. Jutting out his finger at Ram, who had cautiously halted,

Subaru: "I've got no reason to stop or hesitate. That's just how much you and I know about each other, right Roswaal?"

Roswaal: "—Mhm."

Subaru: "Or has your motivation gone all the way to zero just because something's deviated from your little diary? How about showing a little backbone and making some effort for your coming selves instead?"

Roswaal: "...That's an interesting way of putting it. My coming selves, is it?"

Subaru tried to get his meaning across to Roswaal without directly mentioning Return by Death. Although Ram furrowed her brows in confusion, Roswaal seemed to have understood. With some vigor returning to his lifeless face, Roswaal addressed Ram in front of him,

Roswaal: "Ram. Stand down... or raaaaaather, could you leave us for a moment?"

Ram: "...! But, Roswaal-sama."

Roswaal: “It’s fine, it’s fine. Even if we are alone, Subaru-kun isn’t thoughtless enough to attaaaaack me. And it would be very easy to defeat him anyway. Wooooouldn’t it?”

Subaru: “Yeah, embarrassing as it is. If we ever get physical, I’m not even confident I can pull him off the bed.”

Watching Subaru flapping his empty hands in agreement, Ram gritted her teeth, and once again turned her worried gaze to Roswaal,

Ram: “—Please don’t strain yourself.”

With this, she gave a solemn curtsy and headed for the room’s exit. Just before passing Subaru, she shot him a sideways glare,

Ram: “—If anything should happen to Roswaal-sama, I will not forgive you.”

Subaru: “You should be more worried about him doing something in a self-destructive fit, you know.”

Seeing Ram off with a shrug, Subaru watched the door shut behind her before turning back to Roswaal. Roswaal’s expression remained thoughtful as he closed a single eye, catching Subaru in his yellow pupil.

Roswaal: “Again, your expression is consiiiiiderably different from when we paaaaarted last night. Could it be that something has changed in your heart in these few hours?”

Subaru: “A change of heart... guess you could call it that. I got a talking to, got into a fight with a friend and... Well, it was a bit too one-sided to be a fight, but it was something of a reaffirmation of our friendship.”

Touching the cheek that Otto had punched, still faintly red, Subaru thought back on the sensations of that morning.

Despite his scrawny figure, Otto was surprisingly strong. Perhaps, that was because the number of ordeals he’d had to go through was far greater than Subaru’s. Subaru thought he had gotten into quite a few predicaments since coming to this world, but it seems that still wasn’t nearly enough.

Subaru: “Seriously, how vicious is this world...”

Roswaal: "I couldn't agree more. Weeeeell, I've already confirmed that I haven't coooooornered you enough yesterday, but the fact that you've come back so early just shows I wasn't mistaken."

Subaru: "I was pretty much at my limit though... I'm just simple-minded, I guess."

It seems Otto's words and fist had knocked Subaru's crooked wits straight. A terribly crude and simple method. There was nothing more childish than having to have a friend beat you onto the right path, and if it had happened to someone else, Subaru would definitely have derided them for it.

Subaru: "But I don't think it's a bad thing. When you find yourself stuck with no way out, it's pretty nice to have a buddy to help figure things out."

Roswaal: "Naive. Green, immature... Ultimately, the suffering of this world can be only be changed by yourself. You have no need for such indolent ideas as relying on friends."

Subaru: "Relying on friends, relying on bonds, relying on feelings... You don't think it'll work?"

Roswaal: "It woooooon't."

Subaru: "Is that so— Then, we'll just have to see who's right."

Roswaal's expression shifted, while Subaru walked up to the bed, snapped his fingers, and pointed straight at Roswaal.

Subaru: "Like I said, let's make a bet. With our wishes as the chips, one round decides all."

Roswaal: "Very well, let's heeeeeear it then."

Having confirmed that Roswaal wasn't outright rejecting his proposal, Subaru turned his finger towards the ceiling,

Subaru: "I won't be following your intentions this time. Not just this time, I have no intention of doing it your way, ever... But, even if I keep insisting on that, we'll never be able to sort out our differences. So let's set a limit."

Roswaal: "A limit?"

Subaru: “Yeah.”

Hearing Roswaal repeat it back, Subaru nodded. Wetting his lips with his tongue, Subaru stared straight into Roswaal’s eyes,

Subaru: “This loop, I’ll break through everything my way. If I fail... starting from the next one, I’ll do things the way you want me to. That’ll be the limit.”

Roswaal: “—Having the ability to rewind indefinitely, you would abandon your right to keep trying?”

Subaru: “You said it yourself. What you did wasn’t enough to corner me. And I agree. If I keep thinking that I can just rewind and get it right next time, I’ll get cocky and everything will just end up like that debacle again¹⁴⁷.”

Though of course, he had no intention of rejecting the concept entirely.

In this merciless world, what could Natsuki Subaru possibly do without Return by Death? Subaru wasn’t so shameless as to completely deny all the benefits Return by Death had given him.

But his mindset had changed. If he had done everything he could and died anyway, he would at least resignedly accept it. But if that was not the case, and he died when he could have lived, then,

Subaru: “It would be an insult to all the people who’d cry for me. I won’t do that anymore.”

Roswaal: “And so, you will set a limit on yourself... iiii it? Though I admit I couldn’t have asked for a more favorable condition, how will you guarantee that you will abide by it?”

Subaru: “Guarantee?”

Roswaal: “Yes, guarantee. It’s quite impooortant, no? Aaafter all, with your ability to rewind, you can easily pretend this promise neeeever happened. If you fail, return to last night, aaand simply decide to try another way...”

Subaru: “Roswaal.”

¹⁴⁷ It’s unclear here, but my interpretation would be Subaru is referring to the final tea party with Echidna, Satella and the others.

As Roswaal voiced his doubts, Subaru quietly called his name.

Cut off by that call, and faced with Subaru's gaze, Roswaal's eyes slightly widened. Then, Subaru carried on with his tone of voice unchanged,

Subaru: "You think I would do that?"

Roswaal: "———"

Subaru: "If you do, then... this conversation isn't going to work at all. That's all there is to it."

Roswaal narrowed his eyes at those words, and lightly raised his hands, sighing.

Roswaal: "No, nooooooooo, let's heeeear the rest of it. I can decide at the end."

Subaru: "...Then here goes. As I said, we'll set a limit. I'll put everything I have into this loop. And if it still doesn't work, I'll do as you say. Since, either way... If this doesn't work, I doubt anything else will."

Roswaal: "You don't sound too confident? But you are resolved... In thaaaaat case, I will respond in kind. Now, you would set a limit on yourself, and make this attempt your last. So what would you requiiiiiiire from me?"

Roswaal's tone was beginning to return to normal.

Seeing that the negotiations have reached a degree of mutual understanding, Subaru clapped his hands together,

Subaru: "My demand is simple. If I manage to break through the situation my way this loop, the future will stray from your expectations. When that happens, you'll probably lose all will to live in a world that has deviated from your Gospel, won't you... That must not happen."

Roswaal: "That must not happen? You mean I shan't lose my determination? Uuuunfortunately, I have to say that is a rather difficult request. Of course, I could continue to pretend on the suuuurface, but in my truest thoughts, I would..."

Subaru: "You know, Roswaal. I don't want us to be enemies forever."

Roswaal: “—Hm?”

Unsure of Subaru’s meaning, Roswaal tilted his head.

Seeing this, Subaru rubbed his finger against his nose, and,

Subaru: “I know you can’t stand a future that deviates from your Gospel and a route that differs from the one you’ve decided on. But even in a future that deviates from your Gospel, I’ll still be busting my ass off to make Emilia the ruler. And I’ll keep relying on the power to redo to make sure of it— Whatever the road we take to get there, at the end, the result won’t stray from your goals.”

Roswaal: “———”

Subaru: “Roswaal, my demand is simple. If I open a path to the future that’s different from your Gospel’s... then you will toss the Gospel aside and join me. I’ll make Emilia King. And I need your help for that.”

No matter how many unforgivable deeds Roswaal has stained his hands with, his strength will be necessary for Emilia’s goals. Subaru himself still harbored a sense of incomprehension and disgust towards him. And if things were left as they are in this timeline, the consequences of Roswaal’s machinations would be irreparable— But Subaru himself will extinguish that possibility and avoid that fatal pitfall.

Hearing Subaru’s proposal, Roswaal let out a long, deep sigh.

Closing his eyes, he sank into thought, stroking his chin as his lips slowly parted,

Roswaal: “So that’s the ultimate compromise you are asking for... Is it?”

Subaru: “It’s all pretty convenient, isn’t it? But y’know, me, I love convenient things. Emilia will do her best to become King, I’ll be rooting for her at her side, and you’ll be tagging along for the ride.”

Roswaal: “That is a difficult thing you ask of me, since I have kept to this one method for such a long, looooooong time. If you want to get me to chaaaaaange now... that would necessitate some equally severe conditions on your end, no?”

Subaru: “Yeah, it would.”

Roswaal squinted a single eye, while Subaru nodded and held up two of his fingers. Feeling Roswaal's gaze focus onto his fingertips, Subaru gave one of his fingers a light wag,

Subaru: "Two conditions. Two conditions you said were impossible and could never be done. If I manage to clear those conditions, I win the bet."

Roswaal: "And if those conditions go unfulfilled, the victory is mine. And I will have you discard your humanity."

Speaking in a low, sonorous tone, Roswaal locked his gaze into Subaru's. At the end of Roswaal's urging gaze, Subaru briefly gritted his teeth with a nod, and continued,

Subaru: "So, the first condition— I will make Garfiel an ally and bring him outside."

Roswaal: "——"

Subaru: "You said his attachment to the Sanctuary means I'll never be able to bring him out of this place. I agree. But while I agree... we'll be needing his strength in the future. Even if we consider the feelings of the people in the Sanctuary, we can't just leave that stubborn, bratty kid in here forever. So, I'll do what you consider to be unachievable and win Garfiel to our side."

Roswaal: "—And the second?"

The moment he heard the first condition, a dark emotion passed through the depths of Roswaal's eyes. But, without remarking on it, he merely asked for the next condition. With a nod, Subaru continued,

Subaru: "—I will have Emilia pass the Trials. The one to overcome the Trials of the Tomb and liberate the Sanctuary will be Emilia. Not me."

Roswaal: "Impossible!"

Shouting, Roswaal slammed his palm upon the bed. A dry thud rang out, as Roswaal's visage contorted in rage. Squaring his shoulders, he jutted his finger towards Subaru,

Roswaal: "I told you last night. That thing is incapable of passing the Trials. And Garfiel will never abandon his attachment to the Sanctuary!"

Subaru: “Won’t know ‘til I try, right?”

Roswaal: “Indeed, you wouldn’t know unless you’ve tried. And isn’t it precisely because you’ve tried so many times that you come to me beaten and defeated!? Your visage, and your very resolve now is proof that those two are not worth the investment of your hopes!”

Practically screaming, Roswaal’s shoulders heaved up and down as he spoke. While he took ragged breath after ragged breath, Subaru only calmly faced him,

Subaru: “You are getting yourself awfully worked up, aren’t you?”

Roswaal: “What...?”

Subaru: “Isn’t it to your advantage that the conditions are so harsh on my end? Makes no sense for you to get angry about its harshness, right?”

Roswaal: “It is a matter of whether such a bet can be established in the first place. When it is not just its balance, but its legitimacy that is questionable as well, the very outcome of the bet would be compromised. It’s only natural that I am cautious.”

Being given conditions this stacked against Subaru and this favorable towards himself, Roswaal’s wariness had risen. But seeing Roswaal’s reaction, Subaru’s cheeks twisted, as a vicious, vicious smile deepened on his face.

Subaru: “Roswaal, you don’t seem to get it.”

Roswaal: “...”

Subaru: “Are the odds stacked against me? Well yeah, it’s pretty harsh no matter how you look at it. I admit it’s crossed my mind that this’ll help you save some face while you revise that master plan of yours, but... This is actually referring to something else.”

In front of the speechless Roswaal, Subaru went on with the smile on his face unchanged,

Subaru: “You said it yourself, Roswaal.”

Roswaal: “———”

Subaru: “When I’m driven into a corner, I become the strongest card— It might not be how you wanted it, but this is the strongest card right here, without a doubt. You still dissatisfied?”

Against Subaru’s cutting words, Roswaal remained silent.

He merely stared fixedly at Subaru as he brought the rhythm of his breathing under control. And, once his breathing had calmed, Roswaal raised a single finger,

Roswaal: “—Contract.”

Subaru: “———”

Roswaal: “Very well. I will accept the conditions you’ve preseeented— Break Garfiel out of his spell, and let Emilia-sama liberate the Sanctuary. Once both of these come to pass, I will discard my plans and follow the path you’ve constructed. Let us forge a Contract to this end.”

A dim light flickered atop Roswaal’s raised finger.

The rainbow-colored concentration of Mana looked just like the multi-elemental light Julius had used to destroy Petelgeuse.

Roswaal: “Through our gates, we shall carve this mutual Contract into our souls. No matter whom you may deceive, you cannot deceive your own heart. A Contract carved into the soul transcends distance and time and persists even across worlds. It should continue to bind you even if you rewind and start anew.”

Subaru: “Huh, so you did have something in mind... But, that’s more convenient for me anyway. If we are both bound by Contract, that’ll save me having to drag you around kicking and screaming after you’ve lost the bet.”

Roswaal: “It doesn’t appear as though you are taking this lightly... Very well.”

Seeing that Subaru was willing to accept the Contract, Roswaal said nothing more.

The radiance at his fingertip pressed into the center of Subaru’s chest, and with it, came the sensation of something seeping into his body. Immediately, feeling a wave pulse inside him, opening all the pores of his body, Subaru exhaled a breath.

Subaru: “Ah, haaaa—”

Roswaal: “And the same will be engraved upon my soul— Once Natsuki Subaru’s Contract has been fulfilled, Roswaal L. Mathers’ Contract shall also be fulfilled.”

An identical rainbow burst of light pulsed on Roswaal’s chest. For an instant, the light spread through Roswaal’s entire body, before all returned to normal in the blink of an eye.

Subaru: “So, it’s done?”

Roswaal: “It is done... There’s no taking it back now.”

Confirming their mutual inability to flee, Subaru quietly gulped down his breath. There, Roswaal placed a hand to his own chest, and,

Roswaal: “Just as you will try your utmost to fulfill your conditions, I will also move to actualize the Gospel’s writ. You won’t fault me for that, will you?”

Subaru: “—In five days, the snow will fall again?”

Roswaal: “...If Emilia-sama does not bring the snowfall, I will likely have to briiiiiing it about myself.”

In other words, the time limit is set. In five days, the Great Rabbit will attack. Emilia will have to liberate the Sanctuary, and Subaru will have to break Garfiel’s spell before then.

Subaru: “If that’s decided, there’s no time to waste. I better get started.”

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun.”

As Subaru moved away from the bed to set about his tasks, Roswaal called to him.

Turning around, he saw Roswaal slightly averting his gaze,

Roswaal: “The event at the mansion will happen the same day— Do your best, I’ll be praying for your good fight.”

Subaru: “Because if I try to do everything and botch it, next time you’ll get me to do things your way... Right?”

Roswaal: “———”

Roswaal answered Subaru’s reply with silence.

At this, Subaru gave him a wry smile, and finished it by pointing his finger at Roswaal,

Subaru: “Roswaal, you are throwing off your vibe, so please put the clown makeup back on.”

Roswaal: “Mhm, now that you mention it... this is the first time I’ve received you without makeup on, isn’t it?”

Subaru: “In this world, yeah.”

Subaru could tell that Roswaal’s eyes widened at his insinuation as he turned away. Savoring this reaction on his back, Subaru set out his steps,

Subaru: “This is a match between you and me. A couple of clowns tossed around by fate— So let’s fight it out, fair and square.”

With that, he left the room.

The conditions of the bet are in place— And so, this is where it begins.

Natsuki Subaru’s final challenge, with the Sanctuary’s liberation as the wager.

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Setowi (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 88 - Garfiel's Motive

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 3 "Straight Bet", Parts 2-3

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

Otto: "So, were you able to successfully seal the Contract?"

After issuing his final challenge and concluding his talks with Roswaal, Subaru left the building and took a short walk to join up with Otto. And now, they were in a corner of the cathedral, reporting their respective results to each other. Subaru answered Otto's question with a nod, and,

Subaru: "Yeah, it worked. I was worried he'd just sink into self-abandon and reject the bet outright, but... I think the unfavorable conditions on my end got him through that."

Otto: "Guess so. When you are presented with a bet that's so one-sidedly in your favor, and on top of that, have a blueprint telling you that you cannot lose, it'd be insane not to take it. Of course, I've also considered the possibility that Natsuki-san might go overboard with the presentation and end up without a Contract."

Subaru: "Even if you say that, without a Contract... Wait, you've thought of that too?"

Otto: "Mhm, I did."

Otto crossed his arms nodding as if it were a matter of course. Actually, Otto had just managed to dupe Roswaal, albeit temporarily. Subaru widened his eyes at the thought of it. Seeing Subaru like this, Otto gave a wry smile,

Otto: "Merchants use written documents all the time when more than a few agreements need to be exchanged, but... adept magic users are the ones really into Contracts. And when the person is the leading magic user in the country... chances are he'd take the bait."

Subaru: “By the way, there’s no way he could’ve planted some secret conditions in there, right? Like, he says one thing but binds me with some other Contract.”

Subaru would have no way of knowing if that was the case. The bet’s outcome was supposed to decide the future of their faction, but if the Contract actually says something like “Keep breathing and you’ll die the next day”, Subaru wouldn’t even know.

While Subaru shuddered at his own imaginings, Otto waved his hands,

Otto: “It’s designed so that that kind of trickery wouldn’t be possible. Margrave Roswaal must have said something when you two sealed the Contract? That it’ll be etched into your souls, something like that? It’s only when both parties agree on the contents that the Contract can be established. Unless there was some serious wordplay involved, there’s no way it could be done.”

Subaru: “You make it sound like there’s an exception if you get tricked by a play on words...”

Otto: “...Just between you and me, before all that legislation was in place, when the whole world was still in a more turbulent age, those kinds of scams using Contracts were rampant. If the other party was just some small-time scoundrel then no big problems would arise, but in the case it were a powerful, malevolent mage who’s got his eyes on you, the consequences would be unimaginable.”

Otto shrank up his shoulders in fear, and Subaru also shriveled up his in agreement.

In this sense, Roswaal was a more-or-less passable Contract partner. While he may be powerful, and certainly malevolent, he was driven by his obsessions rather than by pure evil. It should be safe to say that he’d have no intention of abusing their Contract and risk permanently falling out with Subaru.

And even if Roswaal did deceive Subaru this way— Subaru would just use the power of his ability to rewind to utterly annihilate him heart and mind until he relented.

For both their sakes, it’d be best if nothing like that happened, so Subaru opted to keep a minimum level of trust between them.

Subaru: “Anyway, that’s what happened on my end, how did yours go?”

Otto: "How indeed... I'm not entirely sure, to be honest. After all, it's pretty much a gamble in places... And we won't have many chances to get it right, either."

Otto's expression wasn't too optimistic when referring to the duty he had been tasked with performing while Subaru was negotiating with Roswaal. Like Otto said, the task that Subaru had given him was more likely to fail than succeed, and a great deal of gambling was involved. In return, if it did succeed, it would bring them much closer to victory.

The problem was that Subaru wasn't sure just how many more chances he would get in the five days remaining.

Subaru: "Guess we'll just have to wait and see. We better go over what we'll need to do in the limited time we have for now."

Otto: "The most urgent business is Emilia-sama and Garfiel. Specifically, I can't offer any help in getting Emilia-sama to beat the Trials. So that one'll have to fall on Natsuki-san."

Subaru: "Yeah, you are right... I'll have to respect Emilia's resolve to do it herself, and now that I've lost my Qualifications, I can't do it for her anymore."

Still, even if Emilia kept challenging the Trials as she had been, the chances of her clearing it by the fifth day looked dim. Emilia's heart should remain unbroken so long as Subaru stays in Sanctuary, but that wouldn't prevent it being worn down from repeatedly failing the Trials.

She needs to change somehow—and that too, would have to fall on Subaru.

Subaru: "—It's about time we honestly faced each other."

Otto: "..."

Subaru: "I've tried to put it off in all sorts of ways. I think I've been running away because I didn't want to ask her only to realize that there's something irreconcilable between us. And I was hoping Emilia wouldn't have to tell me, since she must also be wishing that I'd never ask her..."

Otto: "—I believe it's important that you tell each other what's in your hearts. If I only knew the silly Natsuki-san you wanted me to see, I'd never have known what'd be coming in five days' time."

As Otto said this, consoling Subaru in his self-reflection, Subaru scratched his cheek in silent gratitude. He was glad that Otto was thoughtful enough not to scold him for ignoring the issue for so long.

Otto: "Or actually, if you've never made it clear to each other, what's with all this talk about liking and loving anyway? Stop pretending to be all pure and innocent already."

Subaru: "...Y—you!"

As they were both feeling embarrassed at that point, Otto quickly threw in a tease that made Subaru's lips twinge. But, having been hit right on the mark, there was nothing he could say.

Subaru's fundamentally good-for-nothing character had invited this outcome, in which various situations are just one step away from where they need to be. But that has gone on long enough, and it was time to stop running.

Subaru: "I'll be going in blind, but I'll try to come clean with Emilia one way or another. I don't want this to fail because I didn't do something when I could have."

Otto: "...Well, I'll trust in your judgment, Natsuki-san. After all, I really don't want to be here on the fifth day when the Great Rabbit comes."

Otto looked as if he wanted to say something else in response to Subaru's words, but he only swallowed it back and looked away. Then, with "Now, there's the other topic", he changed the subject,

Otto: "What do you plan to do with Garfiel?"

Subaru: "The hint is that he's afraid of the outside world. It must have had something to do with what he saw in his past when he took the Trial in the Tomb. If we could just know the details..."

Otto: "Asking him directly is out of the question. He's not the kind of temperate person who'd let just people pick his old emotional wounds."

Subaru: "And if he gets pissed off and smacks us, you and I will have our neckbones pulverized in one blow. I'm becoming increasingly worried about our team combat-wise..."

Disregarding Subaru who is totally incompetent, Otto is basically just a peddler who's been in some rough situations. They aren't martial artists, not by a long shot, and if something like a ranking of everyone in the Sanctuary by combat ability existed, you'd probably find them faster if you started looking from the bottom.

Subaru: "Now that I think about it, we really need someone to fill that pure-damage-dealer position. There's Roswaal, Emilia, Ram, and I guess Frederica too... It's a bit of a problem for our faction that that's all the combatants we got. So we'll definitely need Garfiel in our ranks."

He didn't include Rem, because bringing her out of her present condition would be the outcome of that battle. Besides, even though he knew it was his own selfishness, Subaru would never want that girl whom he swore to retrieve to ever stand on a battlefield again.

Subaru: "We'll coax Garfiel into joining us with eloquence and finesse. And to do that, we'll have to clear away that trauma of his. As for the missing pieces..."

Otto: "The missing pieces...?"

Subaru: "Since we can't ask the person himself, we'll have to pull it from somewhere else. Ryuzu-san or Ram. Both feel like they'll be tight-lipped about it."

Which side would those two take, now that Subaru was going head-to-head with Roswaal? It's worth a try, even if only to confirm that.

Guzzling down his breakfast and giving his butt a few pats as he stood up, Subaru clicked the bones of his neck,

Subaru: "Right then, time to get started. I'll go try Ryuzu-san for now, and..."

Otto: "And I'll be following the schedule we've talked about... Right. I'll pass the story around to them¹⁴⁸ in advance, but it would be entirely preferable that we could settle all this without using it."

Subaru: "I don't wanna think about it, either. I don't, but... I get the feeling that the chances that we'll end up relying on it are seventy or eighty percent ..."

Otto: "That's pretty high... Though I can't deny it."

¹⁴⁸ "Them" is left intentionally vague here.

They glanced at each other with a sigh, and Subaru shook his head to pull himself together. Then, facing the still deflated-looking Otto, Subaru held up his hand,

Subaru: “Anyway, all that’s left is to do it. Once all of this is done and dusted beautifully, we’ll drink a grand toast to celebrate.”

Saying this, Subaru stretched out his palm as if to show it to Otto. For a moment, Otto seemed to have difficulty understanding, but apparently catching on to Subaru’s meaning, he held up his palm as well,

Otto: “Right, for the sake of my dazzling future as well, let’s give it our best shot.”

Subaru: “You said it.”

Sharing a mischievous smile, their palms struck together. The crisp sound resonated through the airy cathedral, and, amid the gazes of the surprised villagers, Subaru and Otto turned, with each to the other’s back, and began to walk.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Ryuzu-san, are you homeeee~? I wanna talk to you for a bit.”

Bounding over the uneven ground, through the acrid stench of the room, thinking on how he should have gotten used to that smell by now, Subaru saw beyond the scraps and rubble the gleam of the pale blue crystal.

As ever, inside the crystal was a naked girl in wakeless slumber. Brushing his palm against the crystal’s surface, and once again disappointed by the lack of anything happening, Subaru looked around the room.

The faint blue glow of the crystal was the only light source in the darkness of the chamber. For a place reeking with stench, there were no rats or insects in sight. Thinking about it soberly and realizing that it must be because this place was ridiculously unhealthy, Subaru was finally starting to have some concerns about his bodily condition.

Subaru: “If not even bugs or rats wanna live here, the air pollution’s probably off the charts, huh...”

???: "You can put away those queer worries of yours. It's only the Witch's vestiges looming over this place... The animals instinctively sense it and keep away from here."

While Subaru hugged his shoulders, shuddering, a voice came from behind him, dismissing his worries.

It was a familiar voice, spoken in a young pitch and an elderly tone. Turning around, Subaru caught sight of Ryuzu, walking over with her long hair trailing behind her. Stopping at Subaru's side in front of the crystal at the center of the room, she looked up with eyes the same color as her hair,

Ryuzu: "Now, Su-bo. The fact that you are here... means you already know what I am?"

Subaru: "I got an explanation directly from the manager of this place. Something about taking turns being the representative was also mentioned... Pretty sure I got the gist of it."

Ryuzu: "Is that... so. So that's why Ros-bo was looking strange this morning— Ros-bo must've failed again."

Lowering her eyes, a pained expression rose on Ryuzu's face. Those words made Subaru raise his brows,

Subaru: "Incidentally and unexpectedly, feels like I've just heard a part of what I came here to ask... So Ryuzu-san, do you happen to know about Roswaal's plans?"

Ryuzu: "Only in part, I'm afraid. Unless one's somewhat familiar with his points, there's no way anyone could understand why Ros-bo does these baffling things... Then again, that's also why Gar-bo's angry with him."

Subaru: "A part... how much?"

Ryuzu: "Su-bo?"

His voice dropping in pitch, Subaru took a step towards Ryuzu.

Perhaps sensing the change in Subaru's voice, a look of surprise flashed across Ryuzu's eyes. Subaru bent his knees, bringing his gaze level with Ryuzu's, and,

Subaru: "Tell me, Ryuzu-san. How much of Roswaal's plans have you heard? Depending on the answer, I..."

Ryuzu: "Su-bo..."

If Ryuzu knew Roswaal's plan—to secure the progression of the world as described by the Gospel, ordering Elsa's attack on the mansion, inviting the Great Rabbit to a Sanctuary enclosed by snow, murdering everyone involved, and isolating Subaru to make him forfeit his heart. If she knew all of it, did nothing to stop it, and was complicit, then,

Subaru: "I don't want to despise you, Ryuzu-san. So please, tell me. How much do you know? How much have you been helping Roswaal?"

Ryuzu: "...What I know is that Ros-bo has a Gospel that he's received from the Witch, and he's trying to rewrite history in accordance to its contents. The Sanctuary's continued existence, too, was written in the Gospel. Were it not for that, I would have stopped protecting him a long time ago."

Subaru: "...Is that, all?"

Ryuzu: "That is all. I swear on my words. The Contract I am born with forbids me from ever telling a lie."

Without taking her gaze off Subaru, a sincere expression appeared on Ryuzu's youthful face. Since her Contract forbade her to lie, Subaru chose to believe her.

His rigid shoulders instantly lost their tension as Subaru breathed a sigh of relief.

Subaru: "I see, thank god. If I found out that even you were on board with Roswaal's monstrous designs, I might've come back to punch you after all this is over. Punching a loli-looking Ryuzu-san... just picturing it is horrid."

Ryuzu: "I honestly felt sorry for worrying you... But after what you said just now, I'm not feeling all that sorry anymore."

Hoping to clear the oppressive atmosphere, Ryuzu went along with Subaru's quip. Then, she placed her hand to her chin, and continued with "So,".

Ryuzu: "By the sound of it just now, this is no frivolous matter, I take it? Su-bo, what kind of squabble did you and Ros-bo get into?"

Subaru: "Leaving aside whether it's cute enough to be called a squabble... Right now, we are in the middle of a contest. I can objectively say that if I win, we'll get the big happy finale, so I kinda want Ryuzu's help with that."

Ryuzu: "Judging from the flow of the conversation, this is something about the future of Sanctuary? Just what are each of you thinking, Su-bo and Ros-bo...? Until I know that first, I can't just carelessly accept."

Subaru: "Well yeah. Right, how to explain..."

Tilting his head, Subaru deliberated over just how much information to give her. He had been completely open with Otto, and it didn't seem like Ryuzu was entirely biased towards Roswaal. In fact, her position seemed to be the only reason she was being cordial with Roswaal.

With that in mind, after thinking over the matter carefully,

Subaru: "Simply put... It's about what to do with the Sanctuary after the barrier is gone."

Ryuzu: "What to do, after it's gone?"

Subaru: "I heard snippets from Garfiel too, so the opinion is pretty split in the Sanctuary, right? Those who want to go out, and those who don't."

Basically, those in support were the majority, and those in opposition the minority. But there were extremists in the opposition who would sabotage Subaru and Emilia's attempts to pass the Trials and liberate the Sanctuary.

Having spent over twenty days in Sanctuary, Subaru figured that the vanguard of said opposition would be Garfiel. As such, Ryuzu would be the head of those in support. But just what would she have to say about this difference in opinions?

And just when Subaru was considering how best to continue,

Ryuzu: "A split in opinions...? No, there shouldn't be anything like that."

Subaru: "Huh?"

Ryuzu: “After this place is liberated, whether to leave or to stay on this land would be up to the individual. Most of us would want to follow Ros-bo and leave... and those who stay would stay because they wish to bury their bones in this land. So where is the difference in opinions?”

Subaru: “Uh, eh... No, but...”

The shock of hearing Ryuzu’s unexpected reply sent Subaru’s head reeling.

The stand-off between support and opposition, the supposed antagonism resulting from differing stances regarding the Sanctuary’s liberation— Subaru had been planning to use this as a jumping-off point to redirect the conversation into how to secure Garfiel as an ally.

Subaru: “But, if there never was any contention...”

Ryuzu: “———”

Subaru: “You mean he just made all that stuff up? He was the one warning us to be wary of the opposition, but... was it just so we wouldn’t find it strange if we got sabotaged afterwards?”

If so, that’s a level of thought that isn’t like him at all, Subaru thought.

To divert attention from himself, Garfiel had been warning of potential obstructions in advance, thus removing himself from the list of suspects. As a result, it was only after going through multiple loops in the Sanctuary that Subaru realized that that obstruction was the rampaging Garfiel himself, and that the warning was utterly meaningless.

Subaru: “Why would he go through all these hoops if he really wanted to stop the Sanctuary’s liberation...?”

Ryuzu: “...You are talking about Gar-bo?”

Listening to Subaru’s mutters, Ryuzu seemed to have guessed who he was talking about. Little-by-little, she lowered her eyes as a darkness fell over her expression,

Ryuzu: “The fact that that child doesn’t want to go outside is because of our own cowardice...”

Subaru: “Cowardice... What do you mean?”

Ryuzu: “Just what the word means. We have lived here ever since our birth. And so, we know nothing of the world outside. We don’t know, and so we are afraid. It must torment Gar-bo terribly.”

Subaru: “———”

Subaru could understand what Ryuzu was talking about.

For the residents of the Sanctuary, born into this narrow, closed-off place, the connection to the rest of the world after the barrier falls away would be something utterly unknown and new.

Having lived for so, so long on this land, the anxiety they must be feeling to face something new must be more intense than whatever hope they may have. The prospect of the collapse of one’s mundane, unchanging, everyday life just has that sort of influence over people.

Subaru: “Garfiel doesn’t want the Sanctuary to be liberated because he doesn’t want to see people hurt by the upheaval of their circumstances...? It doesn’t fit his character at all... but...”

If that was really the reason Garfiel so desperately tried to prevent the Sanctuary’s liberation— it’d be the exact same thought process as Subaru’s desire to distance Emilia from hardship.

Garfiel was shutting his ears to the opinions of Ryuzu and the other residents and proceeding with his own stubborn way of protecting them. In that case, if, like Subaru, he could have a proper conversation with Ryuzu and the other residents, maybe this problem would be solved.

Subaru: “No, it’s not that simple.”

Subaru and Garfiel were alike in how they pursued what they seek, but their positions were different. Subaru was failing to get what he wanted because he was weak.

But that was not the case with Garfiel. Garfiel had the strength to prevent the Sanctuary from being liberated. Kill Subaru and Emilia, thus eliminating anyone who could challenge the Trials, and his wish would be fulfilled. The problem is, even if he did this and shut himself in the Sanctuary, there would still be no escape from the approaching Great Rabbit.

But that fact was unknown to Garfiel, and he’d be unlikely to believe even if Subaru told him. The situation would be quite different from when he was explaining it to Otto.

Subaru: "If we are just looking for grounds for compromise, this still isn't it... But, it's strange."

Ryuzu: "Su-bo?"

Subaru: "Why... didn't he choose the most efficient method for stopping the Sanctuary's liberation at the outset, and just kill me and Emilia?"

If he truly didn't care about appearances and was wholeheartedly pursuing a single goal like Roswaal, Garfiel could have taken Subaru and Emilia's lives immediately.

But he had never once attempted to directly harm Emilia. And even the times he did attack Subaru, he only did so after Subaru had taken some drastic action.

Subaru still couldn't clearly identify what Garfiel's trigger for killing him was. There was no doubt that killing Subaru was to prevent the Sanctuary's liberation, but the reason behind it remains unclear.

Subaru: "There has to be a trigger... But, thinking back on those times Garfiel attacked me, was there really anything they had in common...?"

The times Garfiel attacked Subaru were when Subaru flew into a rage at Roswaal and when he tried to escape the Sanctuary with the villagers— ultimately, that's all.

Objectively looking at the scene with Roswaal, it was quite normal to have judged Subaru to be in the wrong for pouncing on an injured person. So there was nothing suspicious there.

The problem was the second time, when he tried to murder a Subaru he had already failed to kill.

Transforming into a giant tiger to kill Subaru, Garfiel set his fangs and claws upon Ram, the villagers from Arlam, and Patrasche who tried to stand in his way. Though Subaru didn't die in the end, passing through the scene of the massacre, the hatred he felt towards Garfiel then still hasn't vanished even now.

But how much of a decision must Garfiel have made before staining his hands with such atrocities? There must have been something that had triggered it. Looking back on it now, it doesn't seem as though the trigger came from Subaru's end.

In other words, the impetus for the massacre wasn't something from Subaru, but Garfiel's end.

Subaru: "Ryuzu-san. Garfiel may seem rough and reckless, but he's not a guy easily moved to violence... would that be a safe assessment?"

Ryuzu: "He is a kind boy at heart. He puts up a hard shell and barks before anything else to protect those around him... The strength he holds within himself is also for that purpose."

Subaru: "Right, in that case... there's only one answer."

Ryuzu: "—?"

Subaru rubbed his nose and turned to face Ryuzu, who was tilting her head.

Then, putting his hand on the crystal at his side and feeling its chill on his palm,

Subaru: "Someone's been feeding Garfiel these ideas. Whoever it is, their actions are what's triggering Garfiel's sudden bouts of violence."

If all those uncharacteristic acts from Garfiel were done on someone else's instructions, then it would all make sense. And the most likely candidates for Garfiel's collaborator would be,

Subaru: "Roswaal, Ram, Ryuzu-san, or some yet-unseen malevolence..."

Someone from that list was inciting Garfiel to violence. He must find them out. And only once he has found them, can he have a real conversation with Garfiel.

Subaru: "Just for reference, Ryuzu-san, can I ask you something?"

Ryuzu: "Hm, what is it?"

Subaru: "—Do you happen to know the contents of the Trial Garfiel took in the Tomb?"

Ryuzu: "...No, I don't. I'm sorry, but that is not within my knowledge."

Ryuzu shook her head. Since she is forbidden to tell lies, what she said must be true. Receiving this answer, Subaru nodded,

Subaru: "Right, then let me change the question— Does another Ryuzu-san know the contents of the Trial Garfiel took in the Tomb?"

Ryuzu: “———”

Subaru: “This time you are silent, which can only mean yes.”

Announcing this to the silent Ryuzu, Subaru slightly lifted his face.

Of the Ryuzu Meyer replicants, there were several Ryuzus acting as the representative of the Sanctuary. This system where the Ryuzus took turns to assume that role day-by-day, created a problem where the individuals did not necessarily share all the memories and experiences.

Four replicants play the role of the representative Ryuzu. If we labeled them A, B, C and D, for the sake of distinction, naturally, not all of A's experiences and memories of her activities during the day would be transmitted to B, C and D.

On the day in question, where Garfiel challenged the Trial, failed, and was dragged out—— the Ryuzu who saved Garfiel then, is not the same Ryuzu standing before Subaru now.

Subaru: “...So the Ryuzu-san who knows about the Trial, when will she show up next?”

Ryuzu: “———”

Subaru: “The Ryuzu-san who spoke to me yesterday said she had taken the Trial. Since as a rule you guys cannot lie, what she said must be true. And if the rotation happens daily... then she'll show up in three days?”

Since he was strapped for time, he would really prefer it wasn't on the last possible date.

At Subaru's almost pleading question, Ryuzu's closed lips softened, as she let slip a sigh,

Ryuzu: “No, the me who brought Gar-bo out of the Tomb will show up in two days. The me who went in, and the me who had not, are on a two-by-two rotation.”

She said, with a somewhat exhausted expression on her face.

Arc 4 Chapter 89 - Memories of Snow

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 3 “Straight Bet”, Part 4 (greatly abridged)

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

—After concluding his secret talk with Ryuzu, Subaru walked through the forest alone.

He told her that he needed to think and left her behind with the crystal. To be standing there before a girl with the same face as her own— her original, no less. How pensive a thing. While Subaru’s interest in all this was inexhaustible, he wasn’t sure how far he wanted to delve into this topic. But, in any case, the Ryuzu he just spoke to was on his side.

These four Ryuzu duplicates. Judging by Ryuzu’s words, two of them had been inside the Tomb. That is to say, two Ryuzus had taken the Trial. As such, Subaru suspected that the one filling Garfiel with these ideas would be one of those two who had taken the Trial.

Seeing how there were four of them, it’s possible that not all their opinions were uniform. Since they all played the same character, all four of them must be the same person; that was Subaru’s assumption, and it had backfired. While those four were indeed playing the same person, they were each individual existences with their own thoughts and ideals.

And so, it wouldn’t be too strange if one Ryuzu had experienced something the others had not, that caused her thinking to diverge from the rest’s.

For convenience’s sake, Subaru decided to label these four Ryuzus Alpha, Beta, Theta, and Sigma. Ryuzu Alpha and Ryuzu Beta do not know about the Trial, while Ryuzu Theta and Ryuzu Sigma do.

What he actually wanted to do was the German Eins, Zwei, Drei, but he couldn’t remember the fourth one so that had to be scrapped. Anyway,

Subaru: “Problem is, meeting with Theta and Sigma will be at least two days from now...”

The timing of the Great Rabbit's attack on the Sanctuary— Or, strictly speaking, the deadline is the moment large-scale snow magic entices the nearby Great Rabbit over, which will be in five days' time. Assuming he probably couldn't come up with a counterplan immediately after talking with those Ryuzus, the remaining three days will offer very little leeway.

In the end, Garfiel would massacre every last villager if it meant preventing the Sanctuary's liberation. If they were the ones who convinced him to do this, Ryuzus Theta and Sigma will not be easily swayed. Considering the prospects of persuading them, the road ahead was indeed looking dark.

Subaru: "But in exchange for the mounting obstacles... there's now an opening for dealing with Garfiel, huh. If I can just persuade the two interfering Ryuzus, then the problem's solved..."

If Theta and Sigma were the ones inciting Garfiel to violence, persuading them would be the equivalent of clearing the Garfiel route. Since Subaru could see no way of working things out with Garfiel directly, this was certainly a glimmer of hope, albeit a fragile and feeble one.

Right now, Garfiel's power was not limited to himself but extended to the twenty-odd non-representative Ryuzus— That is, the empty copies without wills of their own. Without regard for their own individual lives, each copy was a fighting force akin to a machine, and there was not much Subaru could do should Garfiel choose to use them.

Whichever way you look at it, Subaru's situation was beyond challenging. But leaving sentimentalities aside, Subaru would rather avoid coming into conflict with Garfiel. It was all too clear that neutralizing Garfiel with force would be impossible.

If Subaru really had to take on Garfiel, spurred on by Theta and Sigma, and with those girls at his command, Subaru's already slim chances would just drop even lower.

Subaru: "After the flashy way I sealed that Contract with Roswaal, I cannot fail. Not planning to, either. Disregarding whether the insurance will work or not, when standing my ground I gotta do it by my own strength."

Subaru tightened his cheeks just as they were beginning to falter, and shook his head, reminding himself. Then, looking straight ahead once more,

Subaru: “Either way, I’ll have to wing it when dealing with Theta and Sigma. Could also try taking a shot with Garfiel and feel him out early, but... maybe later.”

Coming out of the forest, Subaru returned to the center of the Sanctuary.

The sun had completely risen, and the residents and the Arlam villagers had begun setting about their daily activities around the settlement. Giving them glances as he passed, answering the occasional hellos with waves of his hand, Subaru’s legs carried him straight towards a place separated from the bustle.

To a place a little further away from the cathedral and the center of the village.

—The place where Emilia was sleeping.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Whenever she closed her eyes, the memories would come back vivid, even now.

White. A world of white. In that landscape coated in silver, the young Emilia walked alone.

—You mustn’t remember this!

A soundless voice cried, but young Emilia, walking with her head downcast, did not hear.

Anxiously glancing around her, only to be disappointed by the betrayal of her hopes, she went on dragging her feet through the snow.

—Go back! Please! Don’t do anything more!

Young Emilia exhaled a white breath and gazed curiously at the mist expelled from her mouth. Over and over, she went on huffing. Her only clothing were undergarments crafted from thin cloth and a cloak-like garment that covered the whole of her body.

It was not an outfit one would wear with traversing this frigid world in mind, but there was nothing to be done. After all, this was the first time Emilia had experienced a landscape this cold, or had ever seen snow.

The world she knew was a verdant forest abound in warmth and light, one that bore no resemblance to this world buried under ice and snow.

This all-so-familiar place had taken on an unfamiliar face. And this mystified the young Emilia, such that she was even neglecting to react in the way she intrinsically should have.

—No! Don't go any further! Go back! If you don't, you'll...!

Pleading enough to shred its throat, to destroy it, to spit blood, but young Emilia's legs do not stop. The voice would not reach her as the girl's legs heartlessly carried her forward.

Her gait as she traversed barefoot over the unknown snowscape was pitiful. Having lost all sensation of coldness or pain, her feet, cut by stones and branches hidden beneath the snow, marked her tracks with droplets of blood.

Yet, earnestly pressing on, forgetting her pain, and hiding her terror of this unfamiliar world, for what purpose was she pushing forward alone?

—Stop, please... I don't want to watch anymore... Please...

Her pleas would reach no one. Her wish would go unfulfilled. Her hopes would be utterly shot down.

Though she already knew this fact, even in this world of dreams must this cruel fact be thrust upon her— By manner of showing her past self, and her greatest mistake.

Young Emilia: “———Hk.”

Young Emilia's amethyst eyes, as if sighting hope beyond the haze of the obscuring snow, sparkled.

Her eyes had landed on, as far as young Emilia knew, the trunk of the tallest tree in the world. The great tree they called the Tree of Prayers was the sacred channel through which they poured their prayers to the divine and unknown. An existence treasured and revered by all who lived in the village.

Young Emilia, too, obstinately believed that by touching the great tree's trunk she could feel its tremendous blessing upon her skin.

How reassuring it must have been in that moment to see that great tree in all its grandeur exactly where it should be.

How much of a salvation it must have been to see, amidst that familiar setting transformed into this strange and alien world, that great tree persevering as a token of her everyday life.

Huffing breath after white breath, Emilia clumsily rushed over to the great tree. The piling snow buried young Emilia up to her knees, so although the tree wasn't far away, the girl tumbled time after time, leaving imprints of herself upon pure white snow.

And, after falling face-first multiple times, with her nose red from the cold of the snow, Emilia reached the base of the tree. Her tensed expression slightly relaxed with relief. Although, since her muscles had grown rigid in the cold, a twitch was all it amounted to.

Young Emilia: “———?”

Then, as she reached her hand towards one of the roots of the tree, young Emilia seemed to have noticed something. Sliding her hand along the root, with frozen fingers she began digging at its snow-buried tip.

—Stop!!

She dug, and dug. With singular purpose, spurred by burning impatience, young Emilia dug through the snow.

—Stop! Stop stop stopstopstop!

Not wanting to watch. Not wanting to remember.

Wishing she could look away, shut her eyes, block her ears, and scream to tear this world asunder.

But her non-existent face, non-existent eyes, and non-existent ears could not be dissuaded.

Young Emilia's fingertips touched something.

Slowly, with her own hands, the girl peeled away the last patch of snow—

—STOP IT!!

...

.....

.....

???: “—You are truly beyond saving.”

Emilia: “——”

???: “Proof of sin. Proof of impurity. Be cursed and cursed and cursed, and at the end of your suffering...”

Emilia: “——”

???: “*Just die— Daughter of the Witch*¹⁴⁹.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “—Emilia? Emilia? Oy, are you alright!?”

Emilia: “Ah, eh... Uh... Suba... ru...?”

Woken by someone shaking her shoulders calling to her, Emilia opened her eyes and muttered Subaru’s name. She shook her head to recover her hazy consciousness, but,

Emilia: “Subaru, why... are you here...?”

Subaru: “Do I need a reason to be? If it’s Emilia-tan’s face, I can keep staring for a whole day without getting bored.”

Emilia: “Not that, I mean... Umm.”

¹⁴⁹ Translation note by SummaryAnon: “This term (魔女の娘) can mean either «Daughter of a/the Witch» or «Young Girl who is a Witch». Though my instinct says it’s 9:1 odds the former, it’s not perfectly clear which one is it supposed to mean.”

Perhaps because her consciousness hadn't fully cleared, Emilia's response was still somewhat unsettled.

To wipe away her anxiety, Subaru patted his knees as he stood up with a smile,

Subaru: "Can't have you letting down your guard around me. I'm really happy you trust me, but I'm still a guy holding a ravenous wolf hiding under this cloak of rationality. I'd like you to be a little more mindful of the kind of person I am, Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "...? I didn't forget about you, Subaru. I said something strange while I was waking up, that's all... But, dozing off without even realizing it..."

Although it didn't sound like she understood what Subaru was telling her, Emilia's voice as she replied indicated that she was more or less properly awake. Having confirmed this, Subaru gave the troubled-looking Emilia a nod,

Subaru: "I get that the exhaustion's piling up, but if you are gonna sleep it's better to sleep on the bed. If you keep sleeping on the floor like this, it's gonna give me a heart attack every time I come in here."

Emilia: "...Ah, I'm sorry. I made you worry, didn't I?"

Subaru: "And I just when I had renewed my resolve as well, seeing this and thinking some new *dekikoto*¹⁵⁰ was triggered and had ruined everything got me in a panic, you know. You can even say that seeing your sleeping face today was even more emotional than usual..."

In fact, the shock that struck Subaru when he walked into the room and saw Emilia was beyond description. Getting no response when he knocked and thinking maybe she had gone out, he entered the room to find Emilia lying in front of the bed, her silver hair sprawled across the floor.

Surely, no one could blame Subaru for falling into instant despair at that bloodcurdling sight.

That said, the warmth of her body when he held her up and the unmistakable rhythm of her breathing and pulse quickly dispelled those worries. However, ¹⁵⁰ English flip. Means "incident/event" (出来事), originally "イベント" (event). Can also be pronounced "dekigoto". Wow, it's been a while since we've last had English, hasn't it?

Subaru: “If that was all of it, I would rather have let you keep sleeping, but... you looked like you were having a really bad nightmare. Was it wrong of me to have woken you up?”

Asleep in his arms, Emilia’s brows were covered in sweat while her face and body twisted in agony. Subaru had personal experience of this himself, and he knew that there is no way to escape from a truly terrifying nightmare. The only way to be swiftly released from the pain was to be called from outside the dream. To Subaru, who did exactly this, Emilia shook her head,

Emilia: “No, I’m reeaally glad you woke me. I was having a pretty... No, a really terrible dream... So, thank you.”

Subaru: “A terrible dream, haunting Emilia-tan... I kinda wanna ask what it’s about, but... I can tell it’s not something that’ll be pleasant to talk about.”

Emilia: “———”

Seeing the wry smile following her silence, Subaru pondered over the cause of Emilia’s nightmare. Most likely, it was the result of the negative circumstances piling around her. He wasn’t sure what specific images she saw, but,

Subaru: “...Alright, I won’t push you to tell me.”

Seeing Emilia look away as if trying to avoid the topic, Subaru figured it was probably the vivid kind of nightmare. If it were vague, it’d be easy to talk about. But the fact that she couldn’t, meant that it must’ve been something lifelike and real.

This interaction with Emilia was getting off to a bad start, and it wouldn’t make it any easier to carry on the conversation to come.

With a troubled expression, Subaru scratched the tip of his nose, deliberating over how to broach the topic, when Emilia looked up.

Emilia: “So... What is it, Subaru? You couldn’t possibly have come here just to look at my face for no reason, right?”

Subaru: “«Couldn’t possibly»... I don’t think it’s that implausible of a thing for me to do?”

Emilia: “No, you wouldn’t. I mean, you are always busy running around trying your hardest. You can’t use up your time just on me like that.”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, just how diligent a guy am I in your imagination? You do know that I’m such a slacker that I’d wholeheartedly support the establishment of a Blob-Out Appreciation Day, right?”

No exaggeration and no joke, Subaru was well-aware of his nature as a hopeless layabout. When you see a person with no role or purpose in endless descent into depravity, you’d call that person Natsuki Subaru. And that was why he never slacked on his daily workouts and pointless skill and hobby training back in the old world. Because he knew he’d become an utterly hopeless human being the moment he did.

—You can’t really call someone who puts in persistent effort, even without any goal, a slacker. But Subaru didn’t seem to realize that rather obvious fact.

Perhaps wanting to say something about Subaru’s overly critical appraisal of himself, Emilia’s gaze warmed as she heard his reply. Seeing this, Subaru furrowed his brows, but Emilia didn’t remark on it in the end.

Emilia: “It’s fine. Anyway, tell me why you are here already. Huuurryyyyyy uuuuuuup~”

Subaru: “What’s with the sudden bout of cuteness...! Uhhh, but, right. I was thinking maybe we could go outside for a walk to lighten up the mood a bit...”

Emilia: “———”

Subaru: “Though, that wouldn’t really lighten it up, would it...”

Seeing Emilia fall silent, Subaru realized he misspoke and scratched his head.

It was obvious from the fact that Emilia’s residence was placed apart from the village center that she wasn’t well-received in the Sanctuary.

Being fellow outcasts of their respective races, there really should be a sense of fellowship between them, but it would seem that the negative image surrounding half-elves was a special case. For the refugees from Arlam, their safe escape from the Witch Cult did not directly improve their opinions of Emilia as well.

Emilia's treatment in the Sanctuary was no different from her treatment in the Capital— Like that of a tumor.

She acted strong when she was with Subaru, but that didn't mean it was easy for her. And just how did she deal with all those gazes when she was alone?

Being that the situation still hadn't improved, bringing Emilia outside would only place an unnecessary burden on her.

Subaru: "It's because of stuff like this that I..."

Aggravated at his own thoughtlessness, Subaru punched himself in the forehead. Feeling the pain flood over from his knuckles to his skull, Subaru turned to face Emilia, who had widened her eyes at his inexplicable act,

Subaru: "Emilia."

Emilia: "—Mm."

Seeing the change in Subaru's expression, Emilia sensed that the atmosphere had shifted. She corrected her posture, and, with a calm emotion in her amethyst eyes, she looked back at Subaru.

Her expression told Subaru that it'd be pointless to broach the topic in a roundabout manner. But just how should he say it? He puzzled over his opening line for only an instant, and,

Subaru: "Do you... feel like talking with me about what you saw in the Trial?"

—Subaru could plainly see the horror and anguish washing over her tearing, amethyst eyes.

Arc 4 Chapter 90 - —I’m Sorry

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 3 “Straight Bet”, Part 4, and Volume 14, Chapter 1
“—Journey of Memories”, Part 1

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

—Though he was supposed to have confirmed his resolve, the moment Subaru saw the waves of emotion in her tearing eyes, he felt himself struck with regret.

Asking her that question was no different from ripping open the scars inside Emilia’s heart— clawing at her unhealed wounds while using concern as his justification.

The pain of this realization was no less than the pain he must have made her feel.

Subaru: “The Tomb’s Trial shows you the past... That’s what everyone told me.”

Emilia: “———Hk.”

But, in search of what lay beyond that pain, Subaru treaded even deeper.

Biting down on her lips, a tremor flashed across Emilia’s expression, but her trembling pupils did not look away from Subaru.

For now, he decided it’d be best to avoid mentioning that he had taken the Trial. He wasn’t going to make the sort of frivolous comment like “If I can beat it, you can beat it too”, especially not now that his Qualifications had been revoked. Besides, even if he did, she might very well mistake it for a comforting lie.

If that’s how it’s going to turn out, then he might as well just tell Emilia his honest feelings.

Subaru: "I'm guessing that's why you came back like this... You are agonizing and hurting, yet you keep it all to yourself, and... you are going to challenge the Trial again tonight, aren't you?"

Emilia: "———"

Through those four repeating worlds, Emilia had never conveyed the details of her Trial to Subaru. This was partly because Subaru had been practically ignoring her right to challenge the Trials by deciding that she didn't need to be the one to clear them, but also because Emilia never had a chance to talk about it with Subaru.

The former had been resolved by the fact that Emilia was now the only one who could challenge the Trials, and ideally, the latter was in the process of being resolved this very moment.

Hearing this, Emilia's cheeks stiffened as she cast down her gaze. But before her eyes and their long lashes completely left him, Subaru continued.

Subaru: "But, still."

Emilia: "———"

Subaru: "The crushing burden you are carrying, won't you share some of it with me? If you are afraid to look back on past, how about letting me stand by your side as you meet it?"

The downward tilt of her head halted as she timidly looked up at Subaru once more.

He mustn't let her see the weak, indecisive self that he was. And so, with entirely unwarranted abounding confidence, Subaru puffed out his chest as he accepted Emilia's gaze. After all, bluffing and baseless self-confidence were precisely Subaru's specialties.

Subaru: "Come to think of it, I barely know anything about you, Emilia. I like you... and part of it's because I really like the way you look, but in the time we spent together, everything that I've seen of what you are like on the inside has made me fall unbearably in love with you..."

Emilia: "———"

Subaru: "And that's why I can say with my head held high that I like you just the way you are now. But, as for what you went through, how you felt, and what you thought before you became the person you are now... I don't know a thing about that. Because I didn't feel I needed to know. Because the present and future are more important than the past... But."

Emilia: "...But?"

Subaru: "Now, you are in a situation where you need to look back on your past, and you are saying you are afraid to face it alone... Will you give me permission to stand beside you, so we can face what must be faced together?"

His permission to suffer Emilia's hardships for her had already been revoked.

So now, Subaru was asking for the permission to support Emilia from her side, and give her his shoulder to lean on when she is exhausted and close to collapse. It might only amount to a superficial consolation, but surely, there will be a time when that consolation means all the difference.

Emilia: "——"

Subaru waited intently for Emilia's reply.

The wavering of her eyes spoke volumes of the intense conflict inside her. Hesitation and indecision, guilt and self-loathing. The various emotions raged inside Emilia's slender body in a voracious frenzy.

Until finally, Emilia quietly muttered,

Emilia: "J—just, by being here... you are already helping me just by being here for me... and so, to trouble you any further would..."

Subaru: "Being troubled by Emilia isn't trouble for me at all. It makes me happy to be able to do something for you. And when you are in trouble and want someone to offer you a hand... I want to be the first person to reach out and help you."

Emilia: "—Hk."

Subaru proclaimed once more as Emilia weakly tried to dismiss his proposal.

As long as Emilia doesn't refuse him outright, Subaru had no intention of withdrawing. He was well aware that he was treading on a topic she didn't want to talk about, and no amount of half-hearted refusals was going to dissuade him. Subaru had not forced that Contract upon Roswaal with such flimsy resolve.

Still conflicted, Emilia firmly closed her eyes and drooped her head.

Emilia: "Subaru..."

Subaru: "——"

Emilia: "Subaru, do you really believe..."

The words that were supposed to follow did not leave Emilia's lips. Her nobility would not allow her to give voice to those cowardly words. She could not do something as disgraceful as to doubt the person appealing to her with sincerity. If she did, she'd be making the same mistake as when Subaru tried to impose his selfishness upon her.

Even when cornered, Emilia's spirit did not lose its dignity.

And so, Subaru did not pursue the matter further while Emilia slumped her shoulders, regretting those words.

Emilia: "...Ask me what you want to know, Subaru."

Subaru: "..."

Emilia: "If I'm the one explaining it, it'll just turn into an incoherent mess... So, it'll be better if you ask the questions."

Subaru: "...Is that alright?"

Emilia: "—Mhm. I'll just think of it as another one of my Trials."

Emilia said resignedly, her smile fleeting, and for a moment, Subaru was left at a loss for words. Then, shaking his head to compose himself, Subaru pointed at the bed, suggesting a change of location.

Subaru: "Anyway, this might be a long conversation, so how about we sit down?"

Emilia: "...Yeah, you are right."

Correcting her posture, Emilia seated herself on the bed. Subaru pulled over a chair, and sat down facing Emilia.

Smoothing out the wrinkles on her clothes, Emilia waited for Subaru to speak. Having reached that crucial juncture, Subaru hesitated for only a few seconds on what to ask first, before coming up with the words.

Subaru: "What kind of past did you see in the Trial, Emilia? Going by what I heard from someone in the know... it's something like the memories of your regrets?"

Subaru asked, carefully choosing his words so that she wouldn't notice that he had taken it.

The First Trial was facing your past. But that doesn't mean the past that Subaru saw was a past that actually happened. It was a fresh theatrical production based on his guilt and regrets towards his family in his original world.

So then, just what was the Trial like for Emilia?

Listening to Subaru's question, Emilia remoistened her parched lips, and,

Emilia: "The... past that I saw, was... probably a memory from before I went to sleep."

Subaru: "—? Before you went to sleep...?"

Emilia: "Yes, before I went to sleep. The memory is vague, and not very clear, but... I was still small in it, so that's only to be expected."

Emilia closed her eyes as she searched through her memories, while Subaru seemed to be confused by her explanation.

He could understand what she meant by "I was still small". Most likely, the Trial was showing her past from when she was young. But, "before I went to sleep" was the part Subaru couldn't understand.

Subaru: "Hold on... What do you mean before you went to sleep? It's not like when you go to bed at night, right?"

Emilia: “No, it’s not. Before I went to sleep means... before I fell asleep inside the ice in a great tree in the forest. That was reeaally, really long ago.”

Subaru: “«Inside the ice»... what’s that supposed to mean?”

With no context being given, Subaru wasn’t sure if she was making it impossible to understand on purpose.

But regardless, Subaru’s imagination brandished its claws, dragging its chilling edges down his spine. Feeling the burning impatience pounding against his chest, Subaru tried to keep himself calm as best as he could.

Subaru: “Please answer me... Emilia. What do you mean by «inside the ice in a great tree»?”

Emilia: “...It’s exactly what it sounds like.”

Subaru: “———”

Pausing for a beat, Emilia looked up and told Subaru.

Emilia: “All that time, I was frozen with the great tree in the forest. And it was only after a reeaally, really long time... that Puck found me.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Puck: “—I’ve finally found you.”

—Who’s there?

Puck: “Sorry... I’m sorry. I’m so sorry... for leaving you here alone. I’ve been searching forever. Constantly, and constantly, I’ve been searching and searching for you}

—Where... am I? It’s so... cold.

Puck: “I’ll get you out right away... Such a lonely place, all by yourself... Why did a child have to go through... Why did it take me so long to...”

—Say... who are you? Why... are you crying?

Puck: “—Because you are the loveliest thing in this world. Because I’m so happy to see you again.”

—You are... that glad?

Puck: “Yes. It was for you... It was to see you again, that I was reborn.”

—Who are you?

Puck: “I... I’m your greatest companion. Your one greatest, truest companion.”

—Then, you are my...

Puck: “—Yes, that’s right. From this day forth, I will be your family. From this moment onward, you’ll never be alone again— This, I promise you.”

—Really? Then, I’m...

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Emilia: “—Reeeeeeaally glad.”

Emilia held her hands to her chest, reminiscing on a happier time. Listening to her words, Subaru felt his mouth rapidly drying.

Emilia, sleeping inside the ice. Inside the Great Tree of Prayers of her homeland. Frozen within its trunk, Emilia remained there until Puck saved her.

Just how long a time was it—?

Subaru: “Emilia... the place you lived in would be Elio Forest, right? The one that was frozen a long time ago, where the ice is gradually spreading even now?”

Emilia: “Mhm, it is. By the time I woke up, they were calling it the Forest of Ice— But it used to be a bright and luscious place, bathed in sunlight, before I went to sleep. It never snowed when I lived there with everyone.”

Subaru: “Luscious... No, more importantly... who’s everyone?”

Subaru didn’t know much about that place, so the before-and-after of Elixir Forest was unknown to him. But here, it was something else that caught his attention.

Emilia: “Everyone is everyone. Everyone I lived with in the forest... all the elves.”

Subaru: “The elves... Then, your family was there too? Your mom and dad, and... maybe siblings, too.”

Emilia: “———”

However, seeing Emilia’s eyes filled with sadness, Subaru once again realized that he had misspoken.

Emilia must’ve said it at some point before. That Puck was like her foster parent, and her only family. Subaru was supposed to have known that Emilia had lost her family in one fashion or another.

Subaru: “I’m sor... I didn’t mean...”

Emilia: “It’s fine. You are just worried for me, Subaru... But my family wasn’t in the forest. Everyone in the village was very kind to me, and always smiled at me, but... There was nobody in that forest I could call my blood family.”

Subaru: “...If there was no one, then, your parents were...?”

At that question, Emilia quietly shook her head. She fiddled with the ends of her braid as if to distract herself, then,

Emilia: “They were both gone by the time I was self-aware. I didn’t think it was all that strange at the time... I did have someone who was like a mother to me... who was reeaally kind, and strong, and cool... I had someone like that.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “But that person, and everyone else... When I fell asleep, they all went to sleep as well. Even now, deep in Elio Forest, so many people remain there in slumber, without waking up.”

Subaru: “Haaaa—!?”

Speaking in a dispassionate voice, Emilia seemed to be tasking herself to state only the facts. Subaru's throat clogged up at the content of her words, but Emilia paid it no mind as she continued.

Emilia: “After I woke up, Puck and I went on watching over everyone sleeping. So that someday, when someone wakes up like I did, they wouldn't feel lost, not knowing anything... Thinking this, we stayed there.”

Subaru: “...Hold on a second.”

The information load was so dense that Subaru's brain was struggling to keep up.

What on earth happened in Elio Forest on the day Emilia first saw it snow?

Subaru: “From what I know, Elio Forest began freezing... a little over a hundred years ago... I mean, I must've heard it while I was in the Royal Selection Hall or something.”

Emilia: “Mm. I was reeaally surprised too when I went to study at the mansion and learned of this.”

Subaru: “So, you were there when Elio Forest first froze, right? Do you know how it happened?”

Emilia: “—No, I don't.”

Emilia shook her head to Subaru's question. Seeing Subaru furrow his brows, she looked down with a pained expression.

Emilia: “I really don't. Whatever happened back then... I can't remember it clearly at all. All I remember is that I was little, and I was terribly scared. But since I went on sleeping for so long, those memories are vague too...”

Subaru: “You mentioned that you were little... but about how old were you back then?”

Emilia: “...I think... I was around seven.”

Subaru: "Seven... and it's safe to assume that elves count their age the same way as humans, right?"

At this, Emilia nodded.

If elves count their age the way people normally do, then it'd increment by one every passing year. Elves are well known to be a long-living race, and Emilia, being a half-elf, should be the same. On the other hand, even long-living elves must go through childhood, so the seven-year-old Emilia was beyond any blame.

Although, with some simple arithmetic, this means that Emilia's current age would be seven plus a-hundred-odd years.

Subaru: "The age gap's nothing to worry about at this point... And considering we are from different worlds to begin with, that's nothing, really..."

Emilia: "...Subaru, what's wrong? Did I say something funny, or..."

Subaru: "Nope, nope. I was just thinking that you and I have a really serious age gap, that's all."

While putting his thoughts in order and catching his breath, Subaru threw in a joke to lighten the mood. Although the joke was probably lost on her, Emilia's tense cheeks did relax somewhat as she let out a small sigh,

Emilia: "We do... But since I was asleep and unconscious for so long, I'm not really sure I've matured to my real age..."

Subaru: "Really? I don't exactly know how fast elves grow, but if it's anything like humans, I'd say you are pretty matured."

Subaru casually looked over Emilia on the bed before snorting off her worries.

Her limbs are fully grown, and her body hosts the curvature of womanhood. Her gloomy, amethyst eyes and uncertain features prominently give her a mysterious beauty, somewhere between that of a girl and woman. Emilia was plenty enough matured already.

But it seems Subaru was missing the point of Emilia's worries, while with a "No", she shook her head.

Emilia: "Sleeping in the ice did not stop time for me, but only put my consciousness to sleep. So my body kept growing even inside the ice. Controlling my body felt so different from when I went to sleep that, for a time after I woke, I stumbled over so many things."

Subaru: "So being in that ice... Also had its flaws, huh."

Having her seven-year-old body when she fell asleep turned into a fully-grown woman when she woke must have been bewildering for her.

It happens quite a lot in anime and manga for children to have their bodies suddenly turned into adults, and the adaptation must not be easy. It's only natural that Emilia would've been distressed by the discrepancy between her mind and body.

Emilia: "When Roswaal brought me out of the forest to study outside... and I learned that I had slept for nearly a hundred years, I was reeaally shocked. To find out that I had been sleeping for so long..."

Subaru: "If people age normally inside the ice... Then for anyone other than long-living elves it'd be all ov..."

"Over", was what he was about to say, when he noticed that he had just been told an incredible fact.

Shutting his eyes, Subaru quietly put the numbers together in his head. Adding and subtracting, and then rechecking it several times just to be sure, his doubts turned into definite suspicion.

Subaru: "Hey, Emilia... you just said you slept for nearly a hundred years?"

Emilia: "I did, yeah...?"

Subaru: "And you were about seven before you went to sleep, right?"

Emilia: "I was. Subaru, what's..."

Subaru: "Emilia. How long has it been since Puck woke you up?"

At least, from what he had heard, Roswaal brought Emilia out of the forest about half a year ago. Which means Emilia would have lived with Puck in Elixir Forest until then. The question is, how much time had passed between her falling asleep, waking, and meeting Roswaal?

Still with a troubled expression, Emilia placed her finger to her lips.

Emilia: "...About, six or seven years... Give or take."

Subaru: "-----"

Hearing Emilia's answer, Subaru's suspicion turned into absolute conviction.

The fact shocked through Subaru's body like a lightning bolt.

Seven years after she was born, she spent nearly one hundred years sleeping, then spent another seven years awake. Which would mean that---

---Emilia is around a hundred and seven years old. Looks like she's eighteen. While mentally, she's fourteen.

Subaru: "Her actual age, apparent age, and mental age... are all messed up..."

That kind of discrepancy was only possible because she is an elf.

So many questions Subaru had about Emilia's behavior up to now suddenly made sense. Subaru had found her rather ignorant to flattery for an over-a-century-old elf, and he couldn't help noticing her disproportionate lack of experience of being around people, plus the cuteness of her occasionally childlike demeanor was always quite conspicuous.

So all of it was the result of having spent the majority of her life in the ice...

Subaru: "Fourteen... No different than Felt..."

Why did a girl this young have to shoulder such great responsibility? Subaru's irritation towards the Royal Selection and for Roswaal was only mounting.

Then, reflecting on how the topic he brought up to lighten the mood had completely derailed, Subaru cut into another certainly-not-unrelated topic.

Subaru: "Earlier, you said you don't know why the forest was frozen. So then what did you see in the Trial? That vague memory of before you were frozen... That's what you saw, right?"

Emilia: "...I think so. The scenery was definitely from before I went to sleep... So I think it's a memory of a time that really existed."

Subaru: "So then, maybe the fact that you are so terrified of the memory is because in it you encountered whatever froze you and the other elves, and you are subconsciously rejecting it..."

Emilia: "—That's not..."

Subaru: "I mean, it doesn't get scarier than that, right? The Trial shows you your greatest regret. So maybe what you are seeing is..."

Emilia: "I said you are wrong!"

Emilia shouted, shattering Subaru's overheated train of thought. But she immediately blinked in a show of regret for raising her voice, and then closed her eyes to shake off her hesitation as she turned her watery eyes to Subaru.

Emilia: "That's not... what I saw in the Trial. It wasn't anything like that... What I saw was..."

Subaru: "E—Emil..."

Emilia: "—Devil Child."

A chill like an icy spear pierced into Subaru's spine.

Emilia buried her face in her hands, hiding her expression. From beyond her covered face, her voice continued quietly, without emotion.

Emilia: "Seed of calamity. Silver bastard. Creature best unborn. Source of hatred. Unforgivable soul. Devil— Daughter of the Witch."

Subaru: "——"

Emilia: "Everyone who was kind to me, who smiled at me, said those things to me in the freezing snow, and..."

Emilia's limbs, and her entire body, was faintly trembling.

Emilia: “I don’t remember anything that happened after I was inside the ice. But I can’t forget how everyone must have cursed me, frozen there. And how they must continue to curse me still.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “And so, I want to free everyone from the ice... and apologize.”

Absently, with her face in tears, Emilia looked up, as if seeing them, before quietly bowing her head.

Emilia: “I’m sorry I caused you trouble— Everyone, I love you all.”

Arc 4 Chapter 91 - False Sleep

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 3 “Straight Bet”, Part 4 (greatly abridged)

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

Listening to Emilia’s tearful wish, Subaru felt his entire body stabbed by pangs of remorse. The guilt of digging up her painful memories to the point that he made her cry tormented his heart to no end.

From Emilia’s faltering words, he could sense the love and gratitude she felt for the people she had lived with in Elixir Forest. Yet, it all changed on the day the snow first fell, when her fond memories were replaced by their voices, filled with hatred and malice.

Subaru couldn’t possibly know what they really thought, trapped inside the ice. But regardless, Emilia’s days of warmth and happiness had been sealed along with them inside that thick, never-melting ice.

Subaru: “...But why did they say those things to you? From what you just told me... it’d only make sense if the one who froze the forest in ice was... you. But, were you really powerful enough to do something that incredible when you were that little?”

Emilia: “—I don’t know. Back then, I knew far less of the world than I do now. I knew nothing of what I could or couldn’t do, and I was always taking advantage of everyone’s kindness. But... without Puck, I doubt I have the power to freeze an entire forest by myself, even now.”

Subaru: “But if you had Puck... could you do it?”

Emilia: “———”

At Subaru’s question, Emilia wordlessly nodded. Her half-hearted affirmation was probably because she was afraid Subaru would mistake her for the culprit who had frozen the forest. But that wasn’t what Subaru was thinking at all.

Not because he was biased, but because of a simple matter of sequence.

Subaru: “You don’t have to look so worried, I’m not gonna misunderstand. You met Puck way after the Forest had already been frozen... almost a hundred years before that, right? You and the ice and Puck are backwards in the sequence.”

Emilia: “Mmm... Yes, but...”

Sensing her unease, Subaru gave her his conclusion. Receiving this, Emilia nodded, though her expression was too tense to be called relieved. Resisting the urge to furrow his brows at her reaction, Subaru strained himself to keep his expression composed in front of her as he folded his arms.

—He had a vague feeling that something was off even while he was listening to Emilia’s story. But it was here, in this instant, that he felt this sense of incongruity more intensely than ever.

It’s only natural. Natsuki Subaru had never trespassed into Emilia’s past or inner thoughts before, and had been content to love her while coddling her superficial traits like a princess.

And so, this is Subaru’s Trial— one essential for him to undergo.

Now that Subaru had lost his qualification to challenge the Trials of the Tomb, this will be the Trial that will determine whether he has the right to stand before Emilia, and to support her at her side.

Subaru: “I understand what kind of scene you saw in the Trial now... So, if we flip this around, what do you think you’ll have to do to beat it?”

Emilia: “That’s... Um, it’s...”

Emilia’s gaze wandered. Not because she was hesitating whether to answer, but because it was so vague that she was struggling to find the words.

Emilia had no clear insights about how to break through the Trial. On her very first attempt, she was abruptly presented with a long-held quandary, and now she was being asked to give a perfect answer.

But, the First Trial only requires the challenger to give an answer to the past they’ve been avoiding— Do this, and they will pass the Trial, that’s what Echidna had told him.

Affirm it, or deny it, either would suffice as an answer.

Emilia had already accepted the sad memory of being rejected by all those who had been kind to her. So, does that mean she'd have to get over it in order to pass the Trial?

To get over something you've left behind in your past— how does one do such a thing?

Subaru had no clear answers to give her. But, having overcome the First Trial and experienced the Second, Subaru did know some things. Just through the few interactions he'd had with that character named Echidna, he did know this.

—Chances are, the Trial would not present its challenger with an impossible problem.

That's only natural, considering its creator, Echidna's, goals. What Echidna desires are the results to sate her curiosity, a treasure which shines the brightest when attained as a Trial is overcome. At least, that should be what that Witch is thinking.

In this case, the result would be whether the challenger affirms or denies their past. In other words, Emilia should already have everything she needs to pass the Trial. If she could just figure out what the conditions are and give her reply, that would be her solution. So then, the obstacle here isn't the Trial itself, but—

Subaru: "If you keep challenging without having an answer... it's always going to turn out the same way."

Emilia: "—So, what do you think, Subaru?"

Subaru: "..."

Emilia: "Having heard my story... about my Trial and my past... What do you think? Do you have any ideas on how to beat it? I'm still wondering what I should do..."

Last night after her Trial, Emilia must've spent the whole night asking herself this question instead of sleeping. It must've been like this, trapped in this vortex of soul-abrading thoughts, that she passed out in the end.

Subaru: "Emilia... Earlier you said that you wanted to melt the ice and thank everyone..."

Emilia: “Mm.”

Subaru: “But why do you feel this way?”

Emilia had been cruelly treated by those people who were closest to her.

So for what reason would she want to save those men and women, trapped beneath the ice?

Subaru: “Your last memories of them were how they cursed and rejected you, right? After those cruel and hateful things they said to you... why do you still want to help them?”

Emilia: “—Subaru... If I directed a bunch of awful things towards you right now, would you no longer want to help me?”

Subaru: “———”

Subaru was speechless.

Emilia’s amethyst eyes were gazing at Subaru, full of sincerity, and the indecisive weakness in her pupils had vanished as she answered.

Emilia: “Yes, my last memories of everyone are painful... But just because that was what happened at the end, that doesn’t invalidate all the time we’ve spent together. We’ve shared many good memories, too.”

Subaru: “...”

Emilia: “I don’t want to forget those, while only remembering how they hurt me... I want to save everyone so we can laugh and smile together again... I know it’s greedy of me, but that’s how I feel...”

Saying this, Emilia held her hands to her lips as she peeked at Subaru’s reaction. She looked as though she had just accidentally voiced some ugly part of herself and was afraid of being despised for it.

Perceiving Emilia’s unease, Subaru thought to himself,

—She’s just the kind of person who couldn’t go without finding that wish greedy, huh.

Emilia: “—Subaru?”

Subaru: “Nothing, I was just thinking... that you are completely right.”

Even if they only wanted to hurt her in the end, that didn’t mean all the bonds and memories they’ve shared had disappeared.

Rem and Ram had both killed Subaru in the past, but that didn’t stop him from striving his best to save them, and it was those same feelings that had kept him going during those loops starting from the Capital.

What Emilia felt was just what Subaru himself had felt— that’s all.

Subaru: “———”

But just when he felt this sense of relief, Subaru noticed the greatest incongruity yet. Just how could he have overlooked such an astoundingly obvious discrepancy?

Emilia: “—Subaru?”

Seeing Subaru staring at her with his face frozen stiff, Emilia’s eyes wavered with confusion. Yet, despite realizing that he was worrying her, Subaru still couldn’t pull himself together. Because, —Inside Emilia’s heart, she had already reached her answer to her past.

Subaru: “———”

Deep in Great Forest of Elinor, the elven tribe she had once spent her days together with are presently sleeping, frozen in ice. In the past she remembered, on the day the forest was buried by snow, Emilia had endured all the malice of the people she had trusted, and yet, she proclaimed without hesitation that she wanted to save them, and thank them.

That is the decisive answer to the past she had tried to avoid.

If Subaru’s resolve to admit his stupidity and say goodbye to his parents in his past met the conditions for passing the First Trial, then Emilia’s determination here should be deemed just as worthy. And yet, the Trial refused to recognize that she had fulfilled its conditions.

Perhaps, it was because Subaru had woken her and interrupted the Trial. But even in the previous loops after the first night, when Subaru wasn’t there to wake her, never once had she passed the Trial.

Was Emilia's answer just not suited for the Trial that was given to her?

Subaru: "But, that's..."

If Echidna is the one ruling on the Trials, could the answer's worth simply depend on the Witch's mood at the time? Yet, Echidna herself had declared that it doesn't matter what answer she is given, but merely that she receives an answer.

It's unlike her to reject an answer given by a challenger. Yet, assuming that's true— it did occur to Subaru that maybe, for whatever reason, she was rejecting Emilia's answer, and only hers. It tormented his heart to consider it.

Because to consider it would be to recognize the possibility that only Emilia was completely unable to ever break through the Trials.

Subaru: "As if I could just accept that... I'm begging you, Echidna..."

Emilia: "Subaru, what's wrong? Did I say something strange again...?"

Subaru: "No... it's not you, Emilia. If anything, it's a problem with the examiner... Now, you said you wanted to melt the ice and save everyone, but... were you not able to? Before Roswaal brought you outside, you and Puck were living inside the forest, right? There must've been plenty of time to try..."

Although he knew it was a cruel question, Subaru still asked it.

Being that he's heard Emilia's past, then attempting such a thing and unsealing them from the ice would mean the freed people would again shower Emilia in curses. Emilia herself must've agonized about this exact thing many times over. Her nails dug into her arms as she cast down her eyes,

Emilia: "I've tried with Puck many times, but... I couldn't melt the ice."

Subaru: "When you say you couldn't melt it... do you mean mentally couldn't or... physically couldn't...?"

Even if it was a mental reason, Subaru had no intention of blaming her. It's not easy to do something that you know for a fact will hurt you, that's the same for anyone.

However, at Subaru's question, Emilia weakly replied.

Emilia: “Physically... I think. That ice is special... It wouldn’t melt no matter what we tried from the outside. Maybe only the one who cast the spell could reverse it, or we’ll need something even more powerful... That’s why I accepted Roswaal’s proposal and...”

Subaru: “Proposal...?”

Emilia: “Ah...”

Seeing Subaru’s brows furrow, Emilia covered her mouth as if she had just said something she shouldn’t have. However, faced with Subaru’s silent gaze, Emilia’s shoulders immediately dropped,

Emilia: “Roswaal, we... made an agreement.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “He came with an insignia, asked me to hold it... And once he saw the gem glow red, he told me about the Royal Selection... and he said...”

Perhaps, the fact that he’d find Emilia in the forest and that the emblem would glow when she held it were also written in the Gospel. In his mental picture, Subaru could almost see Roswaal’s strange smile as he reached out towards Emilia and proclaimed,

Emilia: “—«If you can ascend to the throne, then surely, your wish to melt the ice in this forest can also be fulfilled».”

Subaru: “...And you believed him?”

Emilia: “I was pretty desperate, I guess. He didn’t tell me the details of how to melt the ice, but... I accepted his offer, and left the forest with Roswaal. Puck... He didn’t object, but just came with me without saying anything.”

Subaru: “So that’s why you decided to participate in the Royal Selection... Before, when you said you had a selfish reason... that’s what you meant?”

Emilia once said that, unlike the other candidates, she was participating in the Royal Selection for a very selfish reason. Subaru had avoided prying into the details thus far, but now everything was finally coming together.

Emilia: "...You must think I'm terrible, right?"

While Subaru pieced this together in his mind, Emilia quietly murmured.

When he looked up, he saw Emilia timidly watching him with her lips quivering.

Emilia: "The others... Everyone has amazing goals and resolve as their reason for competing in the Royal Selection, but mine's just a reeaally personal problem."

Subaru: "But I think wanting to help everyone in that village is really amazing as well. The number of people you are helping doesn't diminish just how great your cause is... And you weren't lying when you said what you said in the Royal Selection Hall, right?"

Emilia: "What I said in the Royal Selection Hall..."

Subaru: "That you want to see everyone treated as equals... I don't think those words were a lie."

At first, maybe she was just seeking some resolution to circumstances which were beyond her control. But, as Emilia learned of the outside world and the scale of a hundred years' worth of time, surely, she would have had a chance to think.

Subaru didn't feel that the words she spoke at the Royal Selection Hall were just insincere, superficial varnish. If those were her genuine thoughts, and her reasons for wanting to win the Royal Selection remain the same even now, Subaru would have no reason to look down on her.

Subaru: "So it's alright, you don't have to look so worried. I'm on your side and you can rely on me, that hasn't changed since last night. Even if you say you are okay, and refuse leaning on my shoulder."

Emilia: "Ah... Um, about last night..."

Subaru: "Don't, I'll feel horrible if you apologize. But well, what I can tell you is that I'm always gonna be right where you can lean on me, Emilia-tan. Even though I'm happy to see you stand on your own, it's fine to be a little weak once in a while as well."

Thumping his hand to his chest, Subaru relaxed his lips, and saw Emilia let out a relieved sigh. Then instantly, as if being overtaken by that relief, her upper body began swaying,

Emilia: “Now that I feel relieved... Suddenly, I...”

Subaru: “That’s because you just had a terrible dream and didn’t get much sleep. Don’t push yourself, it’s alright to take a little nap. I won’t do anything, just stay here and watch over you.”

Emilia: “That part about «won’t do anything» reeaally bothers me though...”

While somewhat minding by that unnecessary statement that had been appended, Emilia’s silver hair went on swaying as she fought the temptation to sleep. Subaru placed his fingers on her forehead, and gently pushed her slender body down.

Emilia: “Aah...”

Subaru: “Don’t worry, just get to sleep.”

Without leaving any room for debate, he laid her down on the bed. Drawing the sheets over her delicate figure, Subaru pulled the chair closer to the bed and sat himself down where he could better observe Emilia’s face as she slept.

Subaru: “You’ve been talking non-stop, and your head must be exhausted, so if what I said could relax you a little... then get some nice rest. Because we’ll need you to do your best again tonight.”

Emilia: “...Is it really alright to spoil me like this?”

Subaru: “Of course it is. Just keep getting more and more spoiled. I’ll pamper you till you are so spoiled that you are all rotten inside.”

Seeing Subaru give her a shrug, Emilia quietly laughed as she lay on the bed. Then, still keeping her gaze on Subaru, Emilia slowly reached out her arm from under the sheets,

Emilia: “—hand.”

Subaru: “Hm?”

Emilia: “If you are going to spoil me, will you... hold my hand? Just until I fall asleep, please?”

Subaru: “Hoho, leave it to me.”

Subaru took her small, delicate hand, smiling as he savored the luxurious smoothness of her palm. Emilia smiled in return as she followed Subaru's advice and softly closed her eyes.

It didn't take long before she exhaled a quiet breath of sleep.

Subaru: "...I hope you can have some good dreams, for just a little while."

Watching Emilia as she lay quietly in bed, Subaru gently brushed aside the few strands of silver hair on her forehead and dropped his eyes to the hand still holding his.

If feeling someone else's existence like this could free her from the loneliness of her dreams, then he'd be glad. Because to be left alone in this room, endlessly tormented by nightmares, would be far too cruel for her.

Subaru: "Well, anyway... Sure learned a lot today."

Sitting there, holding her hand, Subaru straightened his back as he chewed over the details of their conversation.

Emilia's past, and her reason for competing in the Royal Selection. Roswaal's proposal as he brought her outside, and why Emilia had no choice but to accept it.

And most importantly, Emilia's Trial, and its true motives for rejecting her even though she should have already reached her answer— Leaving those loose ends untied, and having put Emilia to sleep, here he was.

Subaru: "——"

Quietly, he gazed at Emilia as she slept.

It might've been that it pained him to see her so frail, and so he decided to postpone it for now— But that was not the reason. Subaru put off getting those essential answers and practically forced her to go to sleep with a purpose.

Something that would've been impossible to do, if Emilia was still awake.

Subaru: "But, all things considered... this is all I can think of."

Over the past loops, the details that tugged at him and other circumstantial evidence all forced him to consider this possibility. But there was only one way to be sure, and it can be easily done now.

And, if he is right, it would definitely be the light to break through this darkness---

He breathed in, and held his breath.

While listening to the thumping of his own heart and the rushing of his blood, Subaru reached out to confirm it. His left hand, not the right which clutches Emilia's, reaches towards the center of her slender, pale neck while she soundly slept, and,

Subaru: "You aren't really sleeping, are you?"

He felt its cold, hard touch at his fingertips. Straining his voice as he said these words, they nevertheless came out.

A few moments passed in silence, and just when Subaru's heart began to blaze with burning impatience--- suddenly,

???: "Ah, so you've noticed--- I'm so glad, Subaru."

From inside the green crystal at his fingertips, the androgynous voice of a Spirit echoed directly within Subaru's skull.

Arc 4 Chapter 92 - Lie

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Puck: “Feels like it’s been ages since we talked like this.”

Subaru: “Well it has been... Right, nearly two weeks since you’ve gone missing. Your owner’s been worried sick looking all over for you, and you were nowhere to be found.”

It was a strange sensation, hearing the words steep directly into his skull instead of vibrating through the air¹⁵¹. Nevertheless, listening to Puck’s voice, still as carefree as ever, Subaru was struggling to keep his inner rage from seeping into his reply.

More infuriated than elated to get his expected—or rather, hoped-for reaction, it was too much for Subaru to take lying down.

Puck: “It seems, over the two weeks we haven’t talked... you’ve built up quite a bit of resentment towards me.”

Subaru: “You know why that is, yeah? Don’t make me spell it out for you.”

Puck: “Right. The things I said in front of the blue-haired girl before I stopped coming out... Now that I think about it, it was pretty thoughtless of me. I really did reflect on it.”

Subaru: “...! That’s not what we are talking about!”

¹⁵¹ Throughout this whole conversation, Puck and Subaru are talking telepathically (one of Puck’s abilities). This also happens earlier on in the story, just before Julius is first introduced; however, it was cut from the anime, remaining in both the Light Novel and Web Novel formats. You might have noticed by now, but lines in italics start for “mental”, or you could say unspoken, lines.

What was thoughtless was digging up something Subaru had already forgotten he was angry about. And to top it off, it completely derailed the conversation from what they ought to be discussing.

“Don’t get so angry...”, Puck pouted at Subaru’s outburst,

Puck: “I know that. I just wanted to apologize. If we don’t clear up some of the bad blood between us before moving onto the main topic, we wouldn’t be having a real heart-to-heart, now would we...? Especially now that I’m in a position where there is so much I’ll need to ask of you.”

Subaru: “Okay, you good? If you are done stroking your self-satisfaction, let’s get on with the conversation. You know, the one you want to have, about the main topic.”

Acknowledging Puck’s apology with some perfunctory acceptance, Subaru glared at the crystal as he pushed the conversation forward. Reflecting Subaru’s gaze in its translucent gleam, the stone at Emilia’s chest was glowing with a dark-green luminescence.

Subaru clicked his tongue, and,

Subaru: “Anyway, this isn’t a good place to talk. For now, let’s go outside. We don’t know when Emilia’ll wake up. Better change locations befor...”

Puck: “I am sorry, but I can’t— And that would count as a part of our main topic as well.”

While gazing at the sleeping Emilia, Subaru heard his proposal shot down by Puck’s telepathic words. For a moment, Subaru made an expression as if his nose had been pinched,

Subaru: “That wasn’t a «don’t wanna» kind of rejection... You can’t? What’s that supposed to mean?”

Puck: “Only what it sounds like. In my present state, going outside the crystal... Or rather, manifesting in the external world is currently impossible for me. If it weren’t, did you really think I would ever let Lia feel this sad and alone?”

Subaru: “———”

Hearing Puck say this as if were a matter of course, Subaru’s mind fell into silence.

The fact is, considering everything that's happened between Subaru and this Spirit up to now, Subaru honestly felt like doubting the credibility of Puck's words.

But aside from Puck's tendency to always show up late when it actually matters, fundamentally— he exists solely for Emilia's sake, and his feelings for Emilia are genuine. Subaru considered these points to be beyond any doubt. Which means,

Subaru: "Some circumstance, or some reason... is preventing you from coming outside?"

Puck: "That's right. I haven't even been able to reach out through thoughts like this. So it was very fortunate that you suspected this and called to me in the crystal. I doubt anyone else could have secured such an opportunity."

Subaru: "Anyone else...?"

Puck: "It's very simple, the only one who could be this close to Lia while she's unconscious would be you. Besides, even if by chance someone did touch the crystal, there was the problem of whether our affinity would allow us to communicate through thoughts. But we've done this before, so I knew I could speak to you this way."

Subaru: "...Now that you mention it, we have, haven't we? So, what is it you want from me?"

Puck: "Hm...?"

Subaru: "Now that someone has finally met these preconditions and, by some divine chance, called out to you... You must've been prepared to not let this million-to-one chance slip away. So, with the short time that we have, what do you have to tell me?"

Puck: "———"

Subaru's words were met with a meaningful silence. In his mind, he could almost imagine the unseen cat Spirit smiling a wide and humanlike grin. Without betraying Subaru's imaginings, Puck laughed, his voice unable to conceal his delight.

Puck: "So I was right to expect great things from you after all... Though it pains me to think that I would have to entrust Lia to someone other than myself."

Subaru: "...I can pass on what you are thinking to Emilia, if you want."

The latter part of Puck's joyful words became laced with gloom. Sensing this change about him, Subaru lowered his eyes. His suggestion had been no more than a reassuring thought. But that being said, it might actually be a good idea.

After losing Puck, who had been holding up the core of her heart, Emilia was in a perilous state. She was enduring it for now, but as the passage of time and her repeated failures in the Trial abrade away her body and mind, her weakness will begin to show through. If that's how it will turn out, then maybe offering her some relief here would—

Puck: "Better not. If she learns that I've been talking to someone behind her back, in the worst case, Lia's mind could break."

But, before Subaru could go any further with that thought, he was stopped by Puck's dejected voice. Trying to take in the meaning of those words, Subaru expelled a dry sigh in the physical world,

Subaru: "And... what's that supposed to mean?"

Puck: "It means exactly what it sounds like. If you act as an intermediary and convey my words to Lia, she will find out that I am not truly asleep inside the crystal. If she realizes that, despite preventing me from manifesting and from contacting anyone, I am not actually silenced, it would likely cause her precarious mental balance to collapse."

Subaru: "Wa—wait a minute—!"

Subaru shook his head, calling for Puck's piling words to stop.

Since he had no body, with only the crystal's sheen for Subaru to look on, Puck's expression was imperceptible. But, at least from Puck's voice, Subaru judged that this was no attempt at deception.

Subaru: "Do you... realize what you are saying? Just now... it's like you were saying that it's Emilia herself who's preventing you from coming outside..."

Puck: "..."

Subaru: "And silence you...? What are you talking about? Emilia's been calling out for you, wailing and in tears, asking for your help... So how can you...! It wasn't mine, it wasn't anyone else's, it was your name that she was calling when she was exhausted and about to crumble! So why are you...!"

Puck: "...Ah, that's right. You would be the first person to be upset to hear Lia call someone else's name before yours, Subaru."

Subaru: "——Tch!!"

Those words were utterly beside the point, but realizing how they accurately captured the core of his thoughts, Subaru's throat clamped shut with an incomprehensible and violent emotion.

It was in hopes of becoming the foremost in Emilia's heart that he had toiled and struggled thus far. And the fact that he didn't hold that place in her heart bothered him to no end. That was the truth.

At the same time, it drove him mad with rage to see that the one who did occupy that spot in Emilia's heart, despite possessing far more power than Subaru and professing to hold Emilia above all the world, was failing to take any action for her sake.

And so, when he was told that it was not him, not Puck, but Emilia herself who was responsible for that fact, how could he possibly just accept it?

Subaru: "So, what... You mean to say that every time Emilia is broken by the Trials, worn down by loneliness, smiling in tears reminiscing on her painful past, every bit of that is just a performance and a lie? —You expect me to believe that!?"

If those tears, those cries, and those laments had all been an act to deceive the people around her, then Emilia must certainly be some gifted actress. Rather than aiming for the throne, she should be aiming for an Oscar instead.

If one could ignore the obvious fact that Emilia had neither the talent nor reason to deceive Subaru and the others, that is.

Subaru: "There's no way... Never mind constantly fooling everyone around her, she gets crushed by guilt just over telling the tiniest lie. That's the kind of girl Emilia is..."

Puck: "Subaru, calm down. I'm not speaking ill of Emilia like in your worst-case thoughts. So just calm down."

Subaru: "Worst-case thoughts...? What worst-case thoughts... You bastard, stop peeking into my head! That's got nothing to do with this...! No matter what happens, I'll never think of Emilia like..."

Puck: "—NATSUKI SUBARU!"

Puck's penetrating voice struck through the roiled and agitated Subaru.

The intense emotion packed within that brief call was enough to, for a moment, freeze Subaru's trembling body still. Yet at the end of Subaru's timid gaze was not the figure of the small cat, but the stone quietly resting on Emilia's chest, glowing with its inorganic light.

Puck: "...Have you calmed down?"

Subaru: "...So you can raise your voice after all... I always thought you are just a carefree fluffy furball who never gives a damn about the seriousness of the situation."

Puck: "It is very rare for me to shout like this. It's only when it's Lia... or when I need to scold some disobedient brat, that I raise my voice this way."

Subaru: "Disobedient brat, huh."

At that unforgiving description, Subaru spilled a small sigh.

He couldn't deny it. He could see that his unsightly attitude was problematic here.

How many times since the start of this long-awaited conversation had Subaru failed to remain calm? And how many times did Puck have to rebuke him to get the conversation back on track?

It's pathetic how he couldn't restrain himself. And that heart of steel he had so yearned for, was there not even a scrap of it inside him?

Puck: "But, to be honest, I am glad there is someone who can get so emotional over Lia this way. You must be providing Lia with no small amount of strength as well."

Subaru: “—Huh?”

Puck: “No one has managed to step this far into Lia’s heart before. Not even Roswaal, who brought Lia out of the forest for the Royal Selection, has ever touched the deepest core of her thoughts. But, since that man only intends to place Lia on the throne as a means to another end, that is not so surprising.”

Subaru: “—Do you... know what Roswaal’s goals are?”

Puck: “To follow the Gospel, right? Perhaps he’s a lot like Betty in that respect. Though, one has a lot written in his, while the other has nothing written in hers. Similar yet different, might be a better way to put it.”

It seems Puck already knew the details about Roswaal and Beatrice’s circumstances. Subaru doubted that the information would have been passed to Emilia, and that only made him even more unsettled about Puck’s reasons for keeping those facts to himself. But Subaru could already imagine what Puck would say if he had asked him about it.

Subaru: “Since it’s unrelated to Emilia, you were in no hurry to do anything... Huh.”

Puck: “If you mean Betty, I would have liked to do everything I could for her. But... now that Lia is tangled up with Roswaal, I have no choice but to focus on that.”

Subaru: “Well that’s your own damn fault for not saying anything when you knew what was going to happen, isn’t it?”

Puck: “I have nothing to say to that. Though I do think it’s unfair of me to make you deal with the consequences.”

Regardless of intention, it seems his refusal to prioritize anything besides Emilia was the primary reason behind all this. If his inaction was what brought about Emilia’s present hardships, then that would be far too great a blunder to be laughed off as a simple mistake.

Subaru: “I’ll be wrecking Roswaal’s plans so let’s disregard that for now. And Beatrice... I have no intention of leaving her to you. The only thing I’m conspiring with you about is Emilia.”

Puck: "That's fine. Right now, I don't have the strength to spend on anyone besides Lia. Expending my efforts on anything other than what is dearest to me would be going about it backwards."

Subaru: "Then tell me. What do you mean Emilia is preventing you from coming outside? I won't believe for a second that she's been lying to everyone."

Last time, he had been running off his emotions, but those thoughts remain the same even now. Although there was no way he could possibly know everything inside Emilia's heart, she was certainly not the kind of person who would deceive those around her and discard their thoughtfulness like this.

Hearing this thought, Puck transmitted what felt like a relieved sigh into Subaru's mind.

Puck: "I'm not in a position to say anything like «you needn't worry». But while it is by Lia's will that I am prevented from going outside... it isn't because Lia herself is trying to keep me from doing so."

Subaru: "...Sorry, I don't understand what you are saying."

Puck: "It's hard to explain. Lia seeking my help, calling to the crystal, and being unable to hear my voice, all of it is real. The fact that she is scared to be alone and trembling without her support is also true. But..."

Subaru: "-----"

Puck: "Lia's subconscious is refusing to let me materialize or communicate with her. The front and back-ends of her heart are at odds... might be a way to describe it."

The front and back ends of her heart. Subaru gulped down a breath at those words. Surely, he couldn't be talking about split personalities? That said, every time crisis has borne down on Subaru in this world, it came along with multiple experiences of his own thoughts betraying him.

If this was the same with Emilia, then,

Subaru: "You can't influence Emilia from your end?"

Puck: "It's tricky. The back-end's persistence is far stronger than the front end. And even if I do manage to get through to the front, it will only spell trouble for Lia's mind."

Subaru: "What makes you think it'll be trouble? Like, would something upset her if you were to come out..."

Puck: "But you already know the answer, don't you?"

Interrupting Subaru's trailing question, there was almost a hint of ridicule in Puck's voice. Receiving this thought, Subaru fell into a momentary silence before lowering his eyes,

Subaru: "—It's just a guess."

Puck: "Hm, go on. Let's hear it. I did say this, didn't I? I'm expecting great things from you, Subaru."

At Subaru's mutter, Puck gave this entirely ungratifying stamp of approval. Feeling his mood lighten somewhat even from that meagre assurance, Subaru continued,

Subaru: "If you are present, then Emilia..."

Puck: "Mhm, mhm?"

Subaru: "...Will have to accept some inconvenient part of her past— That's why Emilia's subconsciously stopping you from interfering."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Puck: "———"

Receiving Subaru's thought-waves, Puck's reaction was neither rejection nor laughter, but silence.

If that unseen cat Spirit was here in form, he'd probably be floating there with his leisurely air and carefree expression, swaying his long tail back and forth.

Puck: "Amazing, Subaru. That's a better answer than I expected."

Puck said after a moment of silence with an impressed tone in his voice. At this, Subaru exhaled a sigh through his nostrils.

Subaru: "Seriously, your compliments don't make me happy at all, you know."

Puck: "It's honest praise. You didn't have much information to go on, so the fact that you've deduced this far really is surprising. You know Lia's heart well."

Saying so with an air of deep compassion, Puck's consciousness was probably watching the sleeping Emilia. As if lured by that voice, Subaru turned his gaze to her pale, sleeping face as well. Lying there, sound asleep, it was impossible to tell whether she was having a good dream or a nightmare.

The Trial and its accompanying past whittling at her heart— Subaru had his doubts about the accuracy of the recreated compared was to the past that actually took place.

The past that Subaru saw in his Trial was about him parting with his parents, who were the symbols of his past regrets. It was only natural. The past Subaru needed to overcome was not a single great event, but the environment in which he had languished during that time he had spent in sloth. And so, for Subaru, the Trial created a time and space that never truly existed, and gave him a pleasant reprieve to be with his parents while urging him to make his farewells.

Subaru: "Those pasts aren't necessarily faithful to what happened in the real world. They are just mental images drawn from the challenger's mind assembled into a form suited for the Trials."

At the end of the Trial, Echidna had told Subaru the rough outlines of how the Trial worked. Having collected pieces of memories that even Subaru didn't know he remembered, the Trial had used them to craft an elaborately fabricated world.

In other words, none of Subaru's parting from his parents was real, and it had been no more than self-satisfaction.

—"But so what?", were Subaru's present thoughts.

Subaru: "The past you see in the Tomb is a forgery disguised as the real thing. And the asshole who set up the Trials did it so that the challenger will reach whatever answer satisfies her the most."

Echidna hadn't stated as much, but from what he had seen of that Witch's deviousness first-hand, Subaru was sure it was just the kind of thing she would do. And so,

Subaru: "The past that Emilia saw would be part reality and part fabrication. And you... must know something that would be decisive in correcting that discrepancy. That's why Emilia's subconscious is blocking her attempts to summon you."

Puck: "...Which begs the question. If I'm with her, Lia would see the past as it really was. So why would Lia's heart reject me, knowing this?"

Subaru: "That's s..."

"Simple", Subaru was about to say when he hesitated.

The reason for his hesitation was just as basic. If the next words came out of his mouth, it would mean exposing the reality of Emilia's past— as well as the fact that the cruel and aversive scene she had described was only a cover for the truth buried in her heart.

Puck: "...Because the truth that Lia has forgotten is far more unforgiving than the false memories she had spoken of."

Puck finished Subaru's sentence for him. Recognizing what he had failed to recognize until the words came out, Subaru's face twisted in grief as he looked towards Emilia.

The warm, friendly times she spent with the elves— to have those same people turn on her with all their hate and malice, showering her with their spite inside the ice as she bade her long, long farewell. That past which tore at Subaru's body and soul just thinking about was, in fact, a gentle cradle to shield her from an even crueler truth.

Subaru: "Do you... know what Emilia actually saw?"

Puck: "...Unfortunately, I don't. When I first met Lia, it was already after she had been frozen alongside the forest. So I don't know why Lia would be afraid of my presence. And I have no idea how I play into Lia's past."

Listening to Puck's mutters of genuine regret, Subaru bit down on his lip.

Emilia's real past was the reason she couldn't pass the Trial. Grasping this, he was now one step closer to the answer.

Each time Emilia was inside the Trial, she saw both her real and her fabricated past. And she herself wanted that fabricated past to be her real one. As long as she fails to find an answer to her actual past, she will not pass the Trial. And so long as Emilia continues lying to her own heart, those sweet knives of her past would continue shredding away at her mind.

Subaru: "What should I do?"

Puck: "I don't know."

Subaru: "I want to help Emilia... and become her strength."

Puck: "It is the same for me. I exist only for her sake. If I cannot be her strength, then there is no reason for me to exist."

Subaru: "I want to support her in everything she wishes to do... and I want to be at her side."

Puck: "———"

Faced with Subaru's appeals, Puck fell silent as he sank into thought. All the while, Subaru intently waited for the Spirit's reply. Then, with a voice laced with determination,

Puck: "Subaru—— There is only one possibility."

Subaru: "Possibility...?"

Puck: "It is a solution that would've been absolutely unthinkable if I were on my own, and, even now, I am strongly averse to it. This is something I never imagined I would suggest, even if I did consider it."

Listening to Puck's consternation, Subaru braced himself for the words to come. At least, this was the first time Subaru had heard Puck speak in a voice this serious in his normal form.

Subaru: "What do you need me to do?"

Puck: "It is something that I will have to do. Though you will be the one left with all the cleanup afterwards."

Subaru: "...You sound like you are gonna say something insane next, I'm kinda scared."

Puck: "I never thought I'd end up leaving it all in someone else's hands, either. But, well... I believe you are the only person who'd be willing to stake your life for Lia's sake, if need be."

Sensing that Puck was repressing some great emotion as he spoke, Subaru sucked in a small breath.

No doubt— Puck's assessment was correct. For Emilia, Natsuki Subaru would gladly lay down his life.

Seeing Subaru give his silent assent, Puck must've nodded inside the crystal as well. And then, in a quiet voice,

Puck: "Tomorrow morning, I will break my Contract with Lia— And once the relationship between Lia and me is severed, I'm sure that when she cries, you will do what you can to comfort her."

Arc 4 Chapter 93 - Mutual Proposals

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Complete

Puck: “Once the Contract between me and Lia is terminated, can I trust you to take care of everything that comes after?”

Subaru: “...That’ll depend on what your reasons are.”

Licking his lips, Subaru held back his urge to challenge those words as he looked at Puck straight on. Inside the crystal, Puck’s expression remained indiscernible. But, from the vortex of emotions in his voice, Subaru could tell that he did not say this lightly.

But they are talking about Contracts here. What’s more, it’s a Contract between a Spirit and a Spiritual Arts User, which are to be valued above all else. To speak of one-sidedly breaking such a Contract—Subaru couldn’t possibly fathom what he might be thinking.

Subaru: “The Contract between you and Emilia... Simply put, it’s an agreement between a Spirit and its contractor, right? Breaking it would come with its corresponding penalty, wouldn’t it?”

Puck: “Yes, naturally.”

Subaru: “If I’m imagining this correctly, the contractor abides by the Contract in exchange for the power they borrow from the Spirit... And without a Contract, there would be no pretext for the Spirit to lend its power to the contractor... So breaking your Contract would...”

Puck: “Essentially, the link between Lia and myself would be severed.”

Without denying or amending Subaru’s speculations, Puck merely affirmed his thoughts.

Yet, that affirmation would mean—

Subaru: "Without being able to draw from your power... Emilia won't be able to fight at all. Left alone, she'll just be no different than an ordinary girl."

Puck: "That shouldn't worry you too much, should it? Whether Lia has the strength for it or not, you are the one who doesn't want her to fight. Though I can't say the same for what Lia herself will think."

Subaru: "Guh... You are... not wrong about that. But my feelings aren't the problem here. And all this talk about fighting strength isn't the point either. What's important right now... is what'll happen to Emilia without you by her side."

For Emilia, losing Puck would be the same as losing the supporting beam of her heart. If what Puck has said so far is truth, then the deep parts of Emilia's heart have noticed that Puck isn't actually sleeping. The delicate bond between them has not been severed.

Yet, even with their bond still barely intact, Emilia was cornered and faltering to the point that she was relying entirely on Subaru, pleading for him not to leave her. But if her bond with Puck was truly severed—

Subaru: "I wouldn't be surprised if that shattered Emilia's mental stability on the spot... That has to be one of the last things you want to see. So just what are you plotting..."

Puck: "I'm not plotting anything. I would only be supporting Lia in a way that would be best for her. I will not, and cannot, do anything that child doesn't want me to."

Subaru: "And... Emilia wants you to terminate the Contract?"

Puck: "No, Subaru. Losing her Contract with me is only the byproduct of what Lia desires. What Lia presently desires is to pass the Trials of the Tomb. You can rest assured, there is no doubt about that."

Subaru never doubted it, either.

According to Puck's hypothesis— the reason why Emilia was unable to face her past was that she was repeatedly stumbling on the fabricated past in her Trials. However, she definitely isn't the kind of person who would merely pretend to overcome her past. Of that, Subaru was confident.

That conviction within Subaru's mind was never conveyed to Puck through words. But, as if that thought had successfully reached him regardless, the tone of Puck's telepathic voice sank,

Puck: "When Lia finds out that I am gone, she will probably fall apart. Crying like a child, wailing, inconsolable and afraid."

Subaru: "-----"

Puck: "But that's for the best, I think. This state where the surface of her heart believes I am gone while the depths of her heart know that I am still here is unnatural. Once both the surface and the depths of her heart realize that I am gone... the shackles keeping her from her past will be undone, and, for the first time, Lia will be ready to face her own heart."

Puck's words were quiet, but packed with a multitude of emotions. There was compassion, grief, joy, and, above all, abounding willingness to sacrifice everything for the one he loved most.

Subaru: "So she must lose her bond with you... in order to face herself and move forward?"

Puck: "Yes, I believe so. I'm sure it will cause her much pain, but I know Lia is a girl who can persevere through them."

Subaru: "But you won't be there for her anymore. Aren't you worried? Don't you want to stay with her and protect that too-kind-for-her-own-good daughter of yours? Isn't that what you want?"

Subaru wasn't sure what he was saying anymore. If Puck's proposal could really deliver the results they desired, then it would be far better than anything Subaru could have hoped for. Just as Puck pointed out, Emilia's ability to fight is irrelevant, as Subaru already intends to do everything in his power to keep her as far away from the battlefield as possible.

So Subaru should, by all means, be welcoming Puck's proposal rather than trying to dissuade him.

Puck: "And here I thought you'd been pretty unhappy lately about me being at Lia's side?"

Subaru: "You aren't wrong about that... For all that's happened between us, my opinion of you is as low as it can get right now, and it's not gonna turn up any time soon. One decision to sacrifice yourself for Emilia isn't gonna wipe away all the bad impressions you've left behind, you know."

Puck: "That's quite a harsh thing to say... Makes me kind of sad."

Subaru: "But."

Their mutual impressions were already kind of set, so even if Subaru accepted everything Puck said, it still wouldn't change those negative impressions so easily. Subaru wasn't lying when he said that. However,

Subaru: "I can envision the sad look on Emilia's face after you are gone. And, as much as I hate it, I know better than anyone just how much you mean to Emilia. It's because you are... that I..."

Puck: "-----"

His words continued no further, but the indeterminate thought would not leave him. Puck preserved the mental silence as well, quietly waiting for Subaru's vague concepts to take shape. But, the more agitated he got, the less certain his answer became.

Subaru: "That I—I'm..."

Puck: "Your existence played a huge part in helping me come to this decision, Subaru."

Puck muttered before Subaru could finish his thought. Hearing that sound directly inside his skull, Subaru raised his head, staring stupidly at the glowing green crystal.

Puck: "Like you said, Lia means more to me than anything in this world. I would've wanted to always watch over her and provide her with strength at her side. But, even so, I still believe that the best thing I could do for her now is to leave her."

Subaru: "But, why is th..."

Puck: "Because you are here for her."

Subaru: "-----"

Suddenly, Subaru felt his breath stop.

Puck: "In this place... No, in this world, you and I are the only ones who would risk our lives for Lia. Through the time we've spent together, you have proved this. Lia, she... Other than I, you are the person she trusts the most. That is beyond doubt. You can be sure of it."

Subaru: "S—still... I don't have the kind of power that you do, and I can't blast away the obstacles in front of her with force. The best I can do is worry alongside her and listen to her talk about her troubles... That's all. Knowing that, you really want to leave me with everything after you are gone?"

Puck: "You seem to be misunderstanding something. I'm not saying that I want you to replace me. The things that only I can do are things that only I can do. The reverse is also true, and I expect that you will be helping Lia by doing the things that only you can do."

In front of the speechless Subaru, Puck piled on his words.

Closing off all escape, Puck wasted no time in forcing the decision on Subaru.

Puck: "Even without me, Lia will still be much stronger than you. No doubt, that would be the kind of strength you spoke of. But, as you know, that child is also weak. And this weakness I speak of certainly exists. What I want you to do is to support her because of that weakness."

Subaru: "...After you break the Contract and sever your bond with Emilia, what will happen to you?"

Puck: "The fact that I was able to materialize as I had been was owing to my connection with Lia. Once that connection is cut, I will need to stay constantly materialized so I may preserve my existence... But to remain materialized, I would endlessly drink the atmospheric Mana around me dry. If you saw my true form, it would probably shock you, Subaru."

This true form spoken of by Puck must be the towering figure that Subaru had to tilt back his head to see. The apex of four-legged beasts, that monster of raging blizzards. The Beast of the End.

Indeed, if he had to maintain that form indefinitely, there was simply no way it could be sustainable.

Subaru: "So then... Do you mean you'll be erased?"

Puck: "It is a little different from being erased. I will return to the small existence I once was before my Contract with Lia. It'd be someplace with a deep connection to me... most likely in the Great Elior Forest. There, I will go to sleep inside something as my Anchor and wait for the time when I will be awakened again."

Subaru: "Awakened...?"

Puck: "By Lia, of course— This is where the Contract between me and that child ends. But if a time comes when she needs a new Contract and is in search of a Spirit to forge it with... I know she'll choose me again. That's what I believe."

Hearing a sense of cheerfulness in Puck's voice, Subaru swallowed his breath.

It was a decision which could mean he would disappear, but there was not a single trace of unease in Puck's tone. His personality had always been naturally optimistic, but, somehow, that didn't seem to be the reason for the lack of concern in his voice.

He did not have the slightest doubt that Emilia will choose him again.

Once her Contract with Puck is broken, Emilia will be forced to face her past. And he did not imagine for a second that Emilia might fail to fully accept that past. Only, after Emilia has overcome her past and is in need of another Contract, she will surely choose him again.

As far as Puck was concerned, that was definite. He never doubted Emilia's strength, nor did he doubt everything they'd shared in the time they spent together. And because of this, he was able to make the choice to sever his connection with her.

Subaru: "——"

For the always-wavering Subaru, it was a bond so strong and firm that it was dazzling.

Because it was Puck's deep love and trust in Emilia that has forged his heart of iron.

Subaru: "And you'll leave the task of comforting the heartbroken Emilia to me?"

And that was why Subaru's reply was so laced with desperation and resentment. Receiving those words, Puck softly cleared his throat, and, with a tone that was almost smiling,

Puck: "It pains my heart to do this, truly. But... since I'm entrusting my beloved daughter to you, it's my hope that you two can overcome it together."

Subaru: "...Can I take that as your implicit consent for me and Emilia-tan to be together?"

Puck: "If I annihilate you here and now, I'll have to rethink all sorts of things again."

Subaru: "Why do your comebacks always have to be that scary, you goddamn cat!!"

Blasting back at that extremely extreme reply, Subaru let slip the faintest glimpse of a smirk.

Puck's deep feelings for Emilia were immaculate, and the fact that they could have this back-and-forth despite their misgivings relaxed Subaru's mind, if only just a little.

And then, there was also something that Subaru thought of just now when he heard that severing Puck's Contract with Emilia would mean distancing him from this place. Supposing it could work— it would certainly tilt the odds of the bet in his favor.

Subaru: "I understand your plan now. Though I'm still a bit worried about whether it'll really go as planned... I'll put on some feigned ignorance and help you along with your ruse."

Puck: "I wonder what it feels like... to manipulate the girl you love."

Subaru: "I'm getting crushed by guilt here, so stop that. And besides, Emilia actually understands all sorts of things deep down... So when this is all over and done, she'll probably realize she's been tricked."

Puck: "If that happens, you and I will both be hated as fellow conspirators. You scared?"

Subaru: "Like hell! Compared to the «don't wash my laundry with daddy's dirty laundry» kind of angsty-teenage-girl hate, her hate towards me will be on a totally different level, you know."

If her resentment towards Puck could count as a familial issue, her resentment towards Subaru would be far more fatal. Although, she'd probably understand if Subaru explained it to her with complete sincerity. Yet, even if Emilia could understand the true motivations behind it, she still wouldn't be happy that her heart had been manipulated— Surely, he would not be forgiven for that.

Subaru: "But it's a bit late for that, huh— After all the unforgivable things I've done and all the times I've made her cry... how can I say I don't have the resolve to bear that guilt now?"

Puck: "———"

Subaru: "I'll accept your terms, Puck. I'll be cleaning up your mess for you. Tomorrow morning, when Emilia breaks down crying... She'll be doing it being held by my arms."

Puck: "—Good. In that case, I'll leave it to you. Though I realize this will be causing you a great deal of trouble down the road."

Seeing Subaru accept his proposal, there was almost a sense of shame in Puck's reply. At this, Subaru closed his eyes, and with "Now then...", he began again,

Subaru: "Are you open to considering a proposal from me as well?"

Puck: "...A proposal?"

Subaru: "Yeah, a proposal. Don't worry though. Just like you, I only act with Emilia's best future interests in mind."

Thumping his own chest, and taking Puck's silence as his assent, Subaru continued,

Subaru: "There are still some things I wanna ask, and some things I wanna try depending on the answers— Emilia could wake up at any moment, so let's keep this short."

Arc 4 Chapter 94 - Abandoned

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 4 “Lies, Liars, and Con Artists”, Part 1

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Complete

—The first thing she felt upon waking was the loneliness in her empty right hand.

Having just awoken, her head was still drowsy from the lack of blood flow. But, realizing along with her returning consciousness what a selfish sentiment that was, her cheeks flushed red with anger and shame.

Instead of sitting up, she shrank into a ball on the bed and rolled the blankets around her. Reflecting on her own shallowness as she lay there, she was already chastising herself first thing in the morning.

???: “—Selfish, selfish, selfish. I’m... so selfish.”

The girl who had curled up on the bed— Emilia, muttered, exhaling a long, long sigh at her wretched state.

She opened and closed her hand beneath the sheets, remembering the sensation it held just before falling asleep. His fingers were thick and uneven, the skin slightly firmer at the tips, entirely unlike her own which were slender and frail— Every time she had the opportunity to hold his hand, she thought this.

It was the touch of the boy who cared for her, who said those gentle words to her, and who had sat at her bedside, holding her hand until she fell asleep— the touch of Subaru’s clumsy, delicate hand.

Her first unconscious thought upon waking was of the loss of the touch of that hand. To feel so much loneliness from the emptiness of her fingers, just how hopeless is she?

Always wanting to lean on him, was her nature so eager to pile more burdens on that boy? Had she no regard for the irreparable troubles her own weakness and sins have brought to everyone around her?

This was already the fourth day since their arrival in the Sanctuary— and after the first day, and Emilia had devoted both yesterday and the day before to the Trials deep inside the Tomb.

For Emilia, who was aiming to win the Royal Selection and ascend to the throne of Lugunica, acquiring the support of the Sanctuary was the indispensable first step. The governor of this land, Roswaal, was Emilia's backer, and all the residents here were in circumstances similar to herself, being a half-elf. If she couldn't gain their acceptance even with the conditions so stacked in her favor, what could she possibly expect to do from here on out?

Compared to the other candidates of the Royal Selection, Emilia's disadvantages were undeniable. Powerless as she is, she would need the help of those around her to win. And the trust required to secure that help would have to be earned through her own actions.

Fully understanding her position, what Emilia needed to do and to prove in the Sanctuary were clear. She had no doubts in that regard. But, what was casting this shadow over her eyes was—

Emilia: "...the Trials."

The single non-negotiable condition for gaining the Sanctuary's residents' approval was to break through the Trials.

Thanks to the barrier erected by the Tomb, none of the Sanctuary's residents could venture beyond the surrounding forests. In order to bring them into the outside world to fight alongside her, she would need to remove that barrier by overcoming the Trials. And it was also an issue of sentiment, because how could she ask them to support her if she couldn't even do this much for them?

Be it physical or sentimental, everything would be solved by simply passing the Trials. And when a matter is this straightforward, there is no room for arguments or excuses.

However, right now, the problem was the content of the Trial, which was like deadly poison to Emilia.

—The unfeeling voice inside the Tomb told her to face her past.

Whenever she closed her eyes, she would see that world of white. Instantly, as if being thrown naked into that absolute cold, she'd shiver at the unstoppable chill.

Was this dread coursing through her body because she was remembering the cold of that day or because she still hadn't forgotten her fear from back then, even now?

What did Subaru think when he heard her faltering story of her past?

It was yesterday around noon when she revealed it to Subaru—the unforgettable past which still chains her down in guilt to this day.

The night before that, she made her first attempt on the Trial where her heart was soundly beaten. She had been crying in Subaru's arms after he shook her awake, wailing, breaking, until his voice and his gentle strokes on her back managed to calm her. After that, Emilia announced to everyone waiting outside that she had failed her Trial.

She could not remember what expression came onto everyone's faces when they heard this.

The composure for her to check everyone's faces one-by-one was absent. Whether those were gazes of disappointment or disdain, it didn't really matter. She merely put on a strong face, said her good nights, and headed into the residence assigned to her. And when she realized that she was completely alone, she was swallowed by unendurable terror.

Unable to stay holed up like that, she rushed out of the building. While shivering in the night wind, she ran into Subaru walking under the moonlight. Then, when Subaru confessed his resolve and what he would do for her sake, Emilia dismissed him with some idealistic excuses and ran away.

Just how stricken must Subaru have been when he heard what she said? Equally appalled by her own words, Emilia had no idea.

She couldn't remember how she got back to her residence after that. The next time she woke, it was to the sound of Subaru calling her, his face pale as he saw her collapsed on the floor.

She told the worried Subaru about the Trial— And inevitably, it turned into a conversation about her past.

There, she related her past to Subaru without the slightest tampering or fabrication. The way she had been made to witness the crimes she committed, peeling off the scar of those unforgettable memories, as if exposing her raw wounds to the wind, she revealed it all to Subaru. At the same time, Emilia also confessed her selfish motive for participating in the Royal Selection.

It was not that she was unafraid.

As consequence of the mistake she made in her youth, Emilia had made victims of far too many people. Yet she never paid the price, and even now she was enjoying the time that only she possessed. Even worse, the means she chose for her atonement only wound up dragging even more people into her mess.

Being reviled, despised, and shunned all came natural to Emilia.

And yet, somehow, she believed with the utmost conviction that Subaru would never abandon her. No matter how wretched her past, or how selfishly she yearned for redemption, Natsuki Subaru would never, ever, abandon her.

No matter how badly he got hurt, no matter how much he cried, Subaru would continue to protect her. Over and over and over and over, Emilia had seen this in his actions. This kind, faithful, sentimental youth. Who, despite carrying so many burdens, still refuses to cast anything aside, would continue struggling regardless of his wounds.

Assuming that she herself was a piece of the baggage he carried, then surely, no matter how grotesque her nature may be, he will never let her go.

—It was, in the truest sense, a cruel and abominable thought.

Even if she shook her head, professing to have never thought this way, it'd be a lie to say that it never crossed her mind. And if there a part of her that hoped for this outcome existed, then that was equivalent to the entirety of Emilia affirming the thought.

And so, placing her faith in someone who could never despise her, she confessed to her despicable past. When all is said and done, that's all it was.

Subaru ultimately showed no shock or dismay after hearing Emilia's past, and did not do anything to fault her for her sins. When she was exhausted by her confession and overcome with drowsiness, his touch was still abounding in thoughtfulness as he held her hand, no different than before.

The fact that Subaru did everything just as the repulsive part of herself expected vexed her to no end.

Subaru's usually sharp eyes were softened in worry, concerned for her body and mind. His kindness was like sweet poison to Emilia. It melted her heart, her resolve, and laid every ugliness within herself bare.

If only she could leave it all to him and let him help bear the pain whittling at her heart. If she could say it out loud like some whining child looking away from every unpleasant thing, Subaru would not hesitate for a second to devote his entire being for her sake.

—But that would be unforgivable.

Ever since they first met, Emilia had been receiving Subaru's help. From the loot house in the Capital, to the Witchbeasts threatening the domain, to the gazes in the Royal Selection Hall, to the unknown assailants besieging the village and the mansion, it has been this way.

Emilia was always clinging to Subaru's hand. Unable to bear to see him hurt, believing herself not to be deserving of his kindness, she had once cast his hand aside. But even so, Natsuki Subaru never abandoned Emilia. Not only that, when he finally told her his reason for saving her, he said,

Subaru: "I love you, and so I want to be your strength."

Never once had Emilia received such a wholehearted and entirely baseless confession of love.

The only people who had ever shown Emilia affection had been the elves she lived with in Elixir Forest, and, after her long slumber, the one who became her family, Puck.

Being lured out of the forest by Roswaal, she was once again reminded of the vicious reality of being a half-elf, and her two visits to the Capital only deepened that awareness. While she had accepted Roswaal's plan with the objective of fulfilling her goals, Emilia had also hoped that she could perhaps change the deep-rooted prejudice against half-elves, if only by a little. Yet that hope felt so faint and distant that she hardly believed that it was possible.

And so, just how massive an impact must it have been on Emilia when Subaru, that single-minded youth, ignored the fact she was a half-elf, along with all her hopeless defects, and told her that he loved her?

He wasn't of the same race, nor was it decided at birth that he existed solely to accompany her. He was just someone she had met by chance, grown close to, and, after all they've shared together, came to care for— Just how much of a salvation must this have been for Emilia?

And precisely because of this, Emilia mustn't rely on Subaru anymore.

Every hardship he bears for Emilia would mean another wound carved into his body. Not only wounds of the flesh, but of the heart as well.

Subaru was not particularly strong in body nor mind, Emilia knew this. Even with a heart abounding in resolve and the will to care for those around him, he was no one special at all. He could be wounded by sadness, he'd cry when he's hurt, and if he bled too much he'd die.

He was just that kind of ordinary person.

Emilia didn't want that ordinary youth to bear any more pain on her behalf.

She desired nothing further than for him to keep supporting her back, standing at her side, while she proceeded forward. Though it was such a selfish wish that Emilia couldn't help but feel ashamed. Should he support her frail resolve, then surely Emilia could overcome her obstacles without folding.

And she must be the one to fight those obstacles ahead of her. Herself.

Emilia: "After all, if I don't..."

If she continues relying on him, leaving everything to him, clinging to him, pushing everything on him, eventually, Subaru will come to think of her as a burden.

Just the thought that that day would come filled her with dread.

It was something she had avoided believing she wanted. It was something she had given up on, reasoning that even should she desire it, she would never get it. It was something she had kept out of her awareness, but something she had always wished for deep inside.

And because she had gotten it, because it had been bestowed to her, because she had taken the hand offered to her— Emilia couldn't bear the thought of losing it.

Emilia: “———”

Emilia’s sins had painted the forest in white and sealed all her friends and family beneath ice and snow.

Emilia herself also fell asleep within that ice, and nearly a hundred years went by before Puck woke her, all without being aware of her crime.

That grave and abhorrent sin was only made worse by the fact that Emilia herself could not remember a single tangible detail about her deed. Everything in-between was blank, and, aside from the knowledge that her act had plunged everyone into white stagnation, she could not remember a thing as to why, or what she was thinking in those moments.

Witch’s Daughter. That name felt natural to Emilia.

After Puck woke her from the ice, she spent seven years in the Great Eltor Forest. Unable to find or cultivate any food inside the frozen woods, she would walk to the nearby villages outside the forest and rely on them for most of her food.

She could not forget their terrified gazes or how they called her the Witch of the Frozen Forest.

Witch. That insult suited her.

She had been stuttering about having the resolve necessary to overcome the Trials, but even she felt that those words were hollow. Emilia could not even imagine how she might defeat her past. So she merely evaded Subaru’s questions with pleasant words and chose to shut herself in her cask of dreams.

Assured by the unmistakable touch of Subaru’s palm, she fell asleep not long after.

—She doubted she dreamed anything back then.

When she woke, Subaru was still in the same posture as before, watching over her as she slept. An unbearable emotion overran her chest as she saw this, and, as he led her by the hand, they stepped out into the Sanctuary, to challenge the Trial.

The outcome was obvious. She didn’t pass her Trial.

Subaru and Ram saw her off just outside the Tomb. And with Garfiel, Ryuzu, and the Sanctuary's residents' gazes at her back, she walked in. But without a single clue as to what she should do, the Trial heartlessly rejected her.

After being tormented, corroded, trampled by her unchangeable past, Emilia was tossed back once more. When she returned to consciousness on the cold, hard floor of the Tomb, Emilia noticed that her cheeks were wet. This crying was ridiculous, and her wretchedness was loathsome.

Unable to grasp a single clue to overcoming the Trials, Emilia left the Tomb haggard and frail, only to be welcomed by the worried Subaru and the others. Then, just like the night before, she was lulled into sleep in this building, losing consciousness just after tumbling into bed— Which she only realized this morning.

Emilia: "In the end, there's no progress at all... I'm so useless..."

If she learned anything yesterday, it would be that she is a hopeless, spoiled child who is always causing trouble for Subaru and everyone around her— And, yet, does not possess the slightest hope of getting better. That's the kind of weak existence she is.

Emilia: "Puck..."

The pendant hanging at her chest— and the green luster of the stone adorning its tip, is the Anchor of Emilia's spiritual Contract with Puck. Whenever she softly calls his name, he'd answer in his carefree tone, "What is it?" in accordance to the Contract.

But it's been almost two weeks since he stopped responding.

At first, she thought he was merely in his hibernation period, which he goes into once every few months. There were also times before when Puck would suddenly stop responding, and every time it happened, Emilia would try to endure the loneliness as she waited for him to wake.

However, his hibernation periods usually ended after three or four days, and this is the first time it has been this long. What's more, even if Puck were to be in his hibernation, if Emilia truly tried to call him, he would interrupt his sleep and answer her. But now, she couldn't even sense that reaction from the distant Puck.

Could something have happened to him? Did something change during his hibernation that would prevent him from manifesting again? And if that's the case, what should she do?

Even after the long, long time Emilia had spent with Puck, she still couldn't think of a way to reach him once he left her like this.

Whether it was about the Trials, Subaru, the resolution of her past, or the missing Puck, Emilia did not have a single solution to any of her problems.

Emilia: "...I'm, so stupid."

Faced with this dead end, just when she was about to complain about the absence of the one who should be there for her, she stopped herself.

Because, if she did that, then she would truly be lost beyond saving— Even though Emilia's opinion of herself was already lower than ever before, she didn't want to think that she could sink even lower than this.

Emilia: "Mmm, stop it. Even if I keep thinking like this... He's not going to show up today. But Puck must have his reasons. And there's been no progress on the Trials yet. I need to keep it together."

She lifted her hands and gave her white cheeks a few pats, as if to pump some willpower into herself. Then, looking up, she picked up a comb and ran it through her messy hair. It pained her that she had to do this herself. That was because this part had always been tasked to Puck, and Emilia never had to take the initiative to look after her own grooming.

Running her hand through her hair, she confirmed that the knots are gone. She doesn't use a mirror. The one originally there was already wrapped up in cloth and placed in a corner of the room so that it would not reflect anything.

As her fingers fiddle with the ends of her hair, Emilia determines that she has succeeded in the bare minimum of arrangements. She then sweeps her fingers up through her silver tresses, bunching it together as she begins to plait.

This was in preparation for her braid— Puck was the one in charge of Emilia's daily hairstyles and it was especially important that she obeyed it, since it was an clause in their Contract. That was why, over the two weeks since Puck gave her his pick for her hairstyle, Emilia had continued adhering to the last instruction he had given her.

And of course, she also continued attending to the other tedious and miscellaneous articles like exercising before and after bathing and talking to Micro Spirits daily. After all, if she stopped abiding by those terms, her connection with the missing Puck would be lost, and that terrified her to no end.

Emilia: “———There.”

Dividing her hair down the middle and weaving them into two braids had been how she had always done it. But today, she wove it into a single long braid running down her back.

Having kept that part of her Contract with Puck for the day, she prayed for the Contract’s continuance. Confirming the definite connection inside her, she——

Emilia: “...Huh?”

Intending to change her clothes before Ram shows up with a bucket of water, Emilia spilled a small cry. Her amethyst eyes widened in shock as her gaze landed on the pendant at her chest.

Just as she checked before, the green crystal was still hanging at the end of the pendant as proof of Puck’s existence—— except a crack had formed on its surface.

Emilia: “Wh... No, huh...? Wait... Wh—what...?”

Clenching the crystal that had begun cracking of its own accord, Emilia let slip sounds that could not be considered words.

Her pupils shook with a violent jolt as she timidly stroked her trembling fingers over the crystal’s surface. From her fingertips came the sensation of the crack widening, prompting her to relinquish a small, strangled cry.

Emilia: “N—n—no... No, don’t... Please, wait... No, Puck, wait...”

As much as she shook her head in rejection, it did not stem the crystal’s fracture.

She applied all her effort into keeping her hand steady so as not to disturb it further, but her uncontrollable trembling only hastened the crystal's collapse as it began to disintegrate in her hand.

What will happen if the damage spreads to the whole crystal?

Faced with this unprecedented scenario, this never-imagined situation, Emilia's head went perfectly blank. But there was one thing she did know. And that is,

Emilia: "If this keeps going... Puck will...!"

It would mean the goodbye between Emilia and the being who was like her only family.

Emilia: "———!"

She raised her head. Looked around. There was no one there. It was early morning, and there were no signs of activity from people who had woken. Even if she screamed, likely no one would hear her. If she ran outside for help, the shaking would likely instantly spell the end, and so, Emilia did not move.

Stifling her voice, stopping her breath, Emilia gazed at the disintegrating crystal in her hand.

She had no solution. At this point, rather than preventing the impending end, all she could do was frantically try to delay it all the while being horrified by her decision.

Emilia: "—Ah."

As the reward for her slothfulness, the crisp sound of the crystal cracking rang out.

In her palms, as her eyes widened in stupefaction, the green crystal lost all semblance of shape. The stone shattered in all directions, the fragments lost their color, and, devoid of life's rhythms, its luster gradually faded.

Emilia: "Sa... y... Puck, you are... just kidding, right?"

As if clinging to the last strand of hope, Emilia went on calling to her palm in her faltering voice.

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Under_The_Bedsheets (source)

But the jewel in her hand, having lost its form, was now nothing more than a pile of turquoise-colored sand. Never mind a Spirit, even its capacity to store the slightest load of Mana was gone. All that was left was green-colored dust, waiting to be cast to the wind.

Anyone could see that Emilia's fleeting hopes were in vain. The only one who did not accept the reality of their futility was Emilia herself.

Emilia: "N—no, no, this can't... This can't be happening... After, after all, Puck... when we first met, you said... you'll be my family... and I'll never be alone anymore..."

Evoking their agreement, muttering back his promise under her breath, Emilia repeated those words like a small child.

—But before her pleading appeals, the powdered rock only answered with silence.

Emilia: "—Li... ar."

Presented with that unacceptable reality, as if unable to bear the silence, and with eyes that seemed to be beginning to understand, she turned up to the ceiling with her amethyst gaze wavering and in tears,

Emilia: "Puck... Daddy, YOU LIAR!!"

Falling to her knees, she hurled the scattered fragments against the wall. The sound of stone shards striking the wooden surface had sealed Emilia and Puck's overly abrupt parting.

Emilia buried her face in her hands while sobs went on leaking from her palms.

No tears flowed out.

Weighing on her chest was only a hollow sense of emptiness where something should be.

Arc 4 Chapter 95 - Sigma

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

Ram: “Barusu. Have you made any progress with your nefarious plotting?”

Leaving Emilia after she had cried herself to sleep, Subaru ran into Ram as soon as he exited the building. His hand still on the door, Subaru squinted his eyes at Ram, who was apparently waiting for him to come out.

Subaru: “«Nefarious plotting» sounds super disreputable and kinda scary, so could you please stop it?”

Ram: “You two men are stealthily hiding things from everyone else as you design your plans, yes? Since Roswaal-sama has given his consent, I won’t say anything about that merchant doing as he pleases around the Sanctuary, but...”

This “merchant” Ram spoke of was probably Otto. Although they were both living inside the Sanctuary, Ram, who spent most of her time tending to Roswaal, had only very brief interactions with Otto. Most likely, their best talking opportunity would be during the periods during which Emilia is facing the Trial, as they wait outside for her.

As for Otto, he was really only here because Subaru brought him along. So, without having much information regarding his personality, he was no doubt lacking in credibility as far as Ram was concerned.

And even for Subaru, personality aside, Otto’s competence as a travelling merchant was still up for debate. Just from his meeting with Roswaal, it was obvious that he was more suited for the role of a straight man¹⁵² than a merchant.

¹⁵² The serious man in a duo of characters in a comedy performance (for more info, see here).

Nevertheless, it was true that Roswaal had given Otto permission to stay in the Sanctuary. Unable to openly expel him, Ram's opinion of Otto had always been harsh.

Subaru: "Well, that's something he'll have to work hard towards on his own. I won't try to change your mind about that."

Ram: "That doesn't sound like something a friend should say. When he's so intent on helping you, shouldn't you at least make some effort to repay him, Barusu?"

Subaru: "Friend... Huh. I mean, I won't say anything to contradict that, but does it look like we are friends to you?"

Ram: "When you've abandoned all restraint and are interacting with such familiarity... Do you intend to suggest it is not the case? If that's just how you interact with anyone regardless of your relationship, that's quite a horrifying thought."

Ram hugged her shoulders and made a show of shuddering. At her words and her reaction, Subaru's cheeks slightly softened as he chuckled from the depths of his throat.

As if creeped out by Subaru's stifled laugh, Ram backed up a step while still holding her shoulders, putting some distance between them,

Ram: "Now, Barusu, I'll repeat my question— Have you made any progress with your nefarious plotting?"

Subaru: "Well you... could say it's slowly coming along, but there are still some kinks to work out."

Regardless of the details, her true intentions were obvious. This was Ram, a card in the hand of Subaru's contracted opponent, Roswaal. Although Subaru wasn't sure to what extent he could trust her, chances were, she was carrying out the task of acting as the eyes and ears of the bedridden Roswaal. Because of that, it was inevitable she would take an interest in their movements. As for the way she was grilling him directly on the matter, that was just the kind of thing Ram would do.

Subaru: "And what about you? You came here for Emilia, right? You shouldn't be wasting time talking to me."

Ram: "Since Barusu already came out, you must've made sure that she'd fallen asleep, correct? Falling asleep after so much bawling, she won't wake up anytime soon."

Subaru: "...That's a pretty harsh opinion."

Ram: "It's a frank and objective opinion. You should keep that in mind for reference."

Tossing out that blunt remark, Ram stared at the side of Subaru's lowered face. Feeling the pressure of her gaze, Subaru pressed back a sigh inside his chest.

—The termination of Emilia and Puck's Contract had happened about two and a half hours ago.

Despite having discussed the matter with Puck beforehand and having prepared himself for the confusion, grief, and shock that would strike Emilia in its wake, the regret he felt was indescribable when he actually saw her.

As if having lost the only lynchpin holding her together, Emilia was half-crazed and wailing. Her beautiful silver hair was a mess, her nails had scratched her fair skin, and she was indiscriminately hurling all the objects around her, laying her emotions bare like a child in the middle of a tantrum.

It was fortune amidst misfortune that she did not have the option of using magic in her rampage, both for herself and for those around her.

In any case, knowing what was going to happen, Subaru had been waiting outside, and when he heard her shrieking, he flew in and took her tightly into his arms. Then, for the next two and a half hours, he alone tended to her faltering cries, laments, and her frail acts of destruction, until at last he had set her in bed and left.

And then, just when he wanted to ask Ram to help change Emilia's clothes and wipe down her body, he ran into her right outside the door. Perhaps she was thinking the same thing and had been waiting for him to come out. When he saw her there with her water bucket and towel, Subaru certainly felt some sense of relief.

While Subaru was occupied with such thoughts, Ram quietly whispered,

Ram: "Barusu— Are you really putting your hopes in her?"

Subaru: "..."

Ram: "Just considering Emilia-sama's state up until last night, there was not a single indication that would lead one to believe she would overcome the Trials. And to compound on this, a situation I believed could not degrade any further, worsened. The Great Spirit-sama has left Emilia-sama's side, correct?"

Subaru: "...So you know that too, huh."

Ram: "When it's being screamed, repeatedly, so loud that you can clearly hear it from outside the building, even an idiot could figure it out. And if Barusu could figure it out, then Ram could figure it out. Isn't that obvious?"

Subaru: "I'm getting the feeling that I'm being equated to an idiot here, but I can't dispute what you are saying. Emilia's situation has just worsened, there's no getting around that fact..."

Honestly, Ram's voiced concerns precisely mirrored Subaru's own anxieties.

Though he didn't go so far as to swallow Puck's words whole, Subaru did agree to his proposal. That was the truth.

Puck claimed his presence was the factor stopping Emilia from facing her genuine past.

Those more-than-minor changes between the loops and Subaru's misgivings about Roswaal's Gospel, Beatrice's screams, Emilia's testimonies, and Puck's existence— All of these factors combined led Subaru to accept Puck's proposal, condemning Emilia into that prison of solitude. The result was that, for the first time in her life, she was truly and unequivocally alone.

The necessary factors for her to escape this are time, and an opportunity, yet she had neither of those things right now. Her circumstances would not give her any reprieve to sort out her feelings, and the strength to jumpstart the process existed only within herself.

It was up to Emilia to find her way out. Ram understood this, and did not believe that any such change was coming. And aside that last part, Subaru agreed with Ram completely.

Subaru: "Even so, I'm still placing my hopes in her, and I still believe in her."

Ram: "...That's an optimistic expression. And what are you basing your high hopes on, exactly?"

Subaru: “I’ve decided to believe in what I feel I should believe in, that’s all. And thanks to the friend who’s trying so hard to help me and the dragon who’s always saving me... I’ve come to believe in myself a little more.”

Ram: “And what does that have to do with believing in Emilia-sama...”

Subaru: “Since I’ve already come to believe in myself, what’s so wrong with believing in the one I have a crush on? I like Emilia, and I want to become her strength. I like her, partly because she’s super pretty and all... but the real reason... is something else.”

Looking back at Ram’s suspicious gaze, Subaru shrugged.

The first time Subaru began having feelings for Emilia was when he was first summoned to this parallel world— left hopeless and with nothing to cling to, she was the first person who was kind to him. She saved his life, and over the time he’d spent with her, Subaru came to know the girl named Emilia and began wanting to help her. Part of it was justified as wanting to repay a debt, but, at the time, even Subaru wasn’t fully aware of the truth behind it.

And then he lost her, Returned by Death and in doing so, reset the world, but the shared memories of their meeting were gone. But still, Subaru changed the future and saved her from the fate of death. Everything that happened at the mansion, at the Capital, and in the battles against the Witch Cult— all of it had started from the passion of that very first feeling which continued to burn at his back every step of the way.

She saved him in the Capital. She saved him in the mansion when he was about to crumble.

And for saving his life and his heart, he had wanted to repay her, but, in his conceit, he only wounded her.

In the time they’d spent apart, a mutual gap developed between them. But, given the chance to reflect on his actions, he stood up once more.

Felling the White Whale, defeating Petelgeuse, and fighting on even now, what was it all for?

Having let go of his past and bid his parents farewell, having realized his deep connection to the Witch, why was he still striving, spurred on by an incomprehensible power even now?

Subaru: "It's because I love her."

Ram: "———"

Subaru: "The girl I fell in love with... is persevering, stubborn, not honest with her feelings at all, and won't admit that she wants to cry even when she does... She's the kind of girl who wouldn't hesitate to risk her life for someone else's."

Ram: "You are the one convincing yourself of that, Barusu. Yes, Emilia-sama has the tendency to put others before herself... but that's just her way of safeguarding her own heart, isn't it? It's a mechanism to protect herself from the contempt of those around her, isn't it? You fell for it through and through, so does it not bother you that you are being used?"

Subaru: "No."

Hearing her lengthy question answered with a single syllable, Ram was left speechless.

Feeling some satisfaction at this rare reaction, Subaru looked back at the building behind him. His thoughts turned to Emilia, presently asleep in her bed.

Subaru: "I don't mind being used as she pleases. And even if, deep down, she thinks of me as a tool that won't break no matter how much I'm used, I'm fine with that."

Ram: "You don't mind being treated as a tool?"

Subaru: "It's not that. It's because as long as she has a use for me, it means she still has the will to keep standing and move forward... and that makes me glad. As long as she still has the strength to lift her head... I will do anything I can to help her. So she can use me however she likes."

Ram: "———"

At Subaru's proclamation, Ram narrowed her eyes in displeasure.

It was a rather fresh experience for Subaru to see this from a girl who seldom showed emotion. To unhesitatingly accept being used as a tool, that's almost like how she herself—

Subaru: "And here I thought you of all people would understand."

Ram: “—What makes you think that?”

Subaru: “I just figured, from what I’ve seen of your attitude and behavior up to now... you aren’t much different yourself. I thought you’d understand when other people feel the same way.”

Ram: “When you are projecting your own unresolved issues onto other people, you’ll think everyone feels the same way you do. Especially when you realize that the other person has settled the issues you yourself couldn’t resolve.”

Throwing back that rapid-fire retort, Ram looked away, as if embarrassed by what she had just said. Then, she let out a small sigh and waved for Subaru to move away from the door,

Ram: “Well, enough. If you want to be a tool, then be a tool and do your utmost for your master. Meanwhile, Ram will conduct herself as Ram sees fit. That is Ram’s freedom, is it not?”

Subaru: “Yeah. You do what you want— It’s just.”

As Ram passed beside him and put her hand to the door, Subaru called to the back of her head. Ram stopped and turned him a glance, nodding as if prompting him to continue,

Subaru: “I’m not devoting myself to Emilia without expecting anything in return, you know.”

Ram: “...”

Subaru: “There are things that I’m looking for from Emilia. The things I want won’t happen without Emilia’s help. Earlier, I said I’m fine with her using me, but... I’m definitely planning on using her as well.”

It’s a bad way of putting it, but interacting with people with motives in mind is inevitable.

Ultimately, the future Subaru desired was one which everyone here would reach. In other words, by the time Subaru would have reached that future, he would have to have used every single one of them to the fullest.

He wanted to be used by Emilia. Just like how, to reach his perfect future, he would use Emilia, hold her close, and never let go.

Ram: “———”

Without a word, Ram turned away and walked into the house.

But just before the closing door completely concealed her small figure from behind——

Subaru: “Things have already diverged from the Gospel’s writ—— In this world, Roswaal’s already free.”

No answer came to confirm whether she had heard those final words. With the sound of the door closing, Subaru was now cut off from everything that was happening inside.

That said, it was highly improbable that Emilia would wake up and get rough with Ram. This was partly because he judged that, having cried herself to sleep, Emilia shouldn’t have the energy to do anything of the sort. But more importantly, he judged it would take much, much longer before her body would be ready to wake up.

Subaru: “Tomorrow’s my big day. The day after’s a spare... Either way, it’s cutting it close.”

At the end of his time limit, Roswaal will bring about the snowfall, and the Great Rabbit will come. It will spell the end of the Sanctuary. This loop will end in failure, and, most importantly, Subaru will be bound by his Contract.

In accordance with his Contract with Roswaal L. Mathers, Natsuki Subaru will be forced to sacrifice everyone else to save the one thing most important to him.

——And, at that thought, Subaru wondered why he only realized it this late.

Subaru: “Fighting for the one future that I couldn’t give up on... That’s what I’m already doing, isn’t it?”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

——Subaru’s battle inside the Sanctuary has now entered its third day.

The deadline of his Contract with Roswaal is on the sixth day. However, the calamities simultaneously threatening the Sanctuary and the mansion will be unstoppable by that time, so his actual deadline is the night of the fifth day. Which means, tonight included, Emilia has only three chances left to challenge the Trials. However, the first of those three scant opportunities——

Subaru: “Tonight’s probably gonna be a bust.”

After Puck’s disappearance and then breaking down crying through the morning, by the time Emilia fainted from exhaustion, it was already almost noon. Her sleep was so deep that she wasn’t showing the slightest indication of waking.

Even if she could wake up before nightfall, how much more time would she need before she could face the reality that Puck was gone? ——The bond she had with Puck wasn’t shallow to the point it could be processed away in a few hours.

Just when they had no time to spare, a problem like this showed up that could only be solved with time. While aware of the pointlessness of cursing an insidious god’s decrees, Subaru still rather wants to curse them.

Subaru: “Seeing her cry so much from losing you... I’m actually a little jealous, but I still hate you a hundred times more, Puck.”

With the little grey cat briefly popping into his mind, Subaru shook his head and looked forward once more. For now, there was nothing he could do for the sleeping Emilia. The very best he can do is hold her hand. If it could protect her from her nightmares, then he would gladly do it for as long as necessary.

But, just like how Emilia had no time to spare, neither did Subaru. He has not gotten everything in place for the bet yet. His plan involved several uncertain factors to begin with, and even after assembling all potential resources and bolstering his hand to its absolute limit, his chances would still only stand at fifty-fifty. Or rather, even that was probably optimistic.

Subaru: “And so, I’m banking a lot on this conversation, Ryuzu-san.”

???: “And I have high expectations of you too, Su-bo... The two before me have told me a great deal about you, after all.”

With the sound of gravel crunching underfoot, a small figure— Ryuzu, appeared at the door of their meeting place. Making a sour face quite unbecoming of her youthful features, she looked around the locale Subaru had selected, and then, with “Although...”,

Ryuzu: “Choosing this place for our meeting... You can be pretty unkind, Su-bo.”

Subaru: “I figured it’d be a good choice if we don’t want to be interrupted. If we met in front of the crystal, I might be too distracted to talk. And no matter how many times I go back there, I don’t think I can ever get used to that smell.”

He pinched his nose, expressing his disdain for the Experimental Grounds’ nose-wrenching stench. Ryuzu did mention it was her home, but it was very likely she also shared his sentiment. Giving a small chuckle at Subaru’s words, admitting “You might be right”, Ryuzu nodded.

Ryuzu: “But I can’t say I’m pleased that you chose Gar-bo’s secret base as the substitute. If you wanted somewhere secret... there should’ve been plenty of other options.”

Subaru: “But if it were to happen in the village, we wouldn’t know who’d be listening in. Garfiel and Frederica’s childhood house, though... It might be a little mean, but I’m sure you’d be just as troubled as I’d be if someone were to overhear us?”

Ryuzu: “No doubt.”

Subaru shrugged, seeking her agreement, while Ryuzu nodded with a slight grin. With this, Ryuzu stepped into the small, shoddy cabin made from scraps and dilapidated wood.

Subaru: “Sorry I didn’t prepare a comfy sofa beforehand. Despite my profound consideration for the elderly, it pains me that I don’t even have a chair to offer you.”

Ryuzu: “Goodness, so you are going to make me stand here and talk? Taking the whip to the elderly, kids today really aren’t what they used to be.”

Subaru: “Ugh, that line really sounded like an old person just now. You don’t miss a beat on the elderly appeal, huh.”

Subaru wryly smiled at the sight of Ryuzu knocking on her perfectly straight back as if it were creaking all over. Then, Subaru invited her into the center of the small cabin while he crossed his arms and leaned against a wall.

Subaru: “Actually, as far as I’m concerned, just going on gossiping with a cute girl doesn’t sound too bad.”

Ryuzu: “Humbug. I’m a tad too advanced in the years to be called a girl, don’t you think?”

Subaru: “If we are talking about age, my main heroine’s quite a bit my senior, too. Though her apparent age and mental age don’t line up with her real age at all, as I found out recently.”

Actual age— a hundred years old. Apparent age— eighteen years old. Mental age— fourteen years old. Emilia’s genre is so deliciously complicated that Subaru could never get tired of flaunting that fact. At first, he thought she should be classified as a loli-granny but turns out she’s a granny-loli.

Now Subaru could finally understand why Emilia seemed so immature, timid, and idealistic for her appearance yet tended to say such granny-like things.

Subaru: “And for Emilia’s sake too, I want to do everything I can— So, I’ll be asking you all kinds of things, Ryuzu Sigma-san.”

Ryuzu: “Sig... what?”

Subaru: “Sorry, just something I came up with. It can get kinda confusing if I call all four of you Ryuzu-san, so I conveniently labeled you Alpha, Beta, Sigma, Theta to keep track.”

Ryuzu: “...”

Hearing Subaru’s explanation, Ryuzu placed her hand to her lips in thought.

Subaru furrowed his brows at the reaction that couldn’t exactly be called displeased, and, seeing that she wasn’t raising any objections, he held up a single finger,

Subaru: “Anyway, I’m glad we finally got a chance to talk. After all, considering your position, Sig... today’s Ryuzu-san, I figured you might not have wanted to talk.”

Ryuzu: “Sigma’s fine if you are having trouble. Seeing how you want to refer to us as individuals, it’s only fitting that you call us different things... Though there’s never been a need for that until now.”

Subaru: “Really? Then I’ll happily oblige. If you want a cuter name, though, I could work something out with the other three as well.”

Ryuzu: “—No, Sigma’s fine. In fact, please just use Sigma.”

Ryuzu revised her answer with a slight change in nuance.

Blinking at that response, Subaru figured that Ryuzu wasn’t interested in continuing with that topic. “Now”, Ryuzu continued, changing the subject,

Sigma: “I’m pretty sure I already know, but... what would you like to talk about, Su-bo? How much do you know about the circumstances the Sanctuary’s wrapped up in?”

Subaru: “Well, I guess I want to know everything I don’t know already... But, for now, I want to know what you saw in the Tomb, Sigma-san. Yesterday I heard from Alpha-san there were two Ryuzu-sans who challenged the Trials. Sigma-san is one of them, correct?”

Sigma: “Correct. I am one of the two Ryuzus to have entered the Tomb. But that said, I only went in once, and briefly... It was nothing more than stepping inside to bring Gar-bo out after he ignored the agreement and went in the Tomb.”

What Ryuzu Sigma was relating was just what Subaru had heard from Frederica before. Hoping to liberate the Sanctuary, Garfiel entered the Tomb, but when he didn’t come back, his sister went to ask Ryuzu for help. The one Frederica fetched must have been Sigma, who was standing before him now.

Subaru: “It was just stepping inside... But you must have seen something after you went in, right? Like, your... Your past, maybe.”

Sigma: “———”

Subaru: “If the Tomb totally hates you like it hates Roswaal, your body would’ve been repulsed the moment you went inside. Roswaal almost exploded, and Patrasche got riddled with wounds when she went in to drag me out. So going in there without qualification must've required just as much resolve as someone challenging the Trial."

Sigma: "It's entirely possible that I was prepared to be wounded when I went in, isn't it?"

Subaru: "That would've made a beautiful story... but then how do you explain the fact that Sigma-san is opposed to liberating the Sanctuary? That doesn't make much sense."

Sigma: "———"

It was information she had never confessed to— neither Ryuzu Sigma nor Theta had ever openly expressed opposition to liberating the Sanctuary. But Sigma chose to react with silence without denying it.

And, in practice, her silence was equivalent to affirmation.

Subaru: "You saw your past inside the Tomb. And because of that, you've come to abhor the possibility of liberating the Sanctuary. So, what exactly did you see?"

Sigma: "———"

Subaru: "In terms of possibilities... you saw the circumstances of your birth, maybe? It could be when you were born from the crystal, or it could even be..."

Sigma: "Ryuzu Meyer's past, you mean?"

Before Subaru could finish, Sigma struck the core of the matter. Wordlessly, Subaru tightened his lips, silently acknowledging that continuation.

Going by the name of Ryuzu Meyer ever since they were born, these four Ryuzu replicants have taken up the role of the representative of the Sanctuary. If there was anything in their past worth regretting, Subaru imagined it would have to be before this life— before they became the Ryuzus they were now.

And he could now see from Sigma's reaction that he wasn't mistaken in this thought.

Subaru: “If the past you saw was the past of the original Ryuzu-san inside the crystal... I can imagine why you’d be afraid, Sigma-san. The reason she was sealed inside the crystal must also be the reason behind this, right?”

Sigma: “...”

The one who sealed Ryuzu Meyer inside the crystal was the Witch of Greed, Echidna. Remembering the event of being sealed by the Witch should have been more than enough to make Sigma give up on the Trials. But,

Sigma: “My, my, Su-bo, just how much do you know?”

Subaru: “...”

Sigma: “What happened to the Ryuzu Meyer inside the crystal is known to only a few select people in the Sanctuary. And I highly doubt that any of those who knew would have revealed it to you, Su-bo.”

There was a certain hesitation on the side of Sigma’s expression. Without turning her gaze to the speechless Subaru, Sigma looked up to the ceiling.

Sigma: “I don’t think even Ros-bo, or the other Ryuzu who knows about the Tomb... would have told you. So just where did you hear this from, Su-bo?”

Subaru: “———”

Subaru wasn’t sure how he should respond. It was a rather basic question, but far from simple.

A tingle ran up the back of his neck as he sensed the shift in the air. It was the perilous atmosphere that Subaru had experienced many times before— Although the matter wasn’t one of life-or-death, it was a moment which would determine the outcomes of the life-or-death crossroads to be faced afterwards.

It was a sensation reminiscent of the scene in Crusch’s mansion at the time he asked her for her help in the battle against the White Whale.

In other words, the outcome of the exchange this instant will tilt the entire future of the Sanctuary.

Subaru: “———”

Falling into silence once more, Subaru painstakingly contemplated his response.

The answer Sigma requested of him will shape everything that comes after.

Subaru was never good at reading other people's emotions. In fact, he was overwhelmingly ignorant when it came to subtleties. So it wasn't just a matter of turning a few gears in his head, but a mental task requiring setting every brain cell aflame just for him to reach the level of a normal person.

In this case, the answer Subaru chose to give was—

Subaru: "I heard it from Echidna. In the Tomb."

Sigma: "—From the Witch-sama?"

Hearing the name of the Witch, Sigma's expression slightly tensed.

Over the time he'd spent in the Sanctuary, Subaru had come to painfully understand the heavy significance of Echidna's name. Roswaal hated hearing her being referred to as Witch of Greed, while Garfiel and Ryuzu both avoided calling her Echidna.

Echidna's name was most likely a taboo to them. And as for whether it was in a good or a bad sense, it would certainly depend on what kind of shock they had experienced in their past. He was taking a chance on how she would react when he violated that taboo, but Subaru had made his choice.

Subaru: "Well, my Qualification has been revoked now, but I was qualified to challenge the Trials at one point. So I know a thing or two about what it's like inside the Trial. Same goes for what Echidna's planning, why she created the Sanctuary, and why she made replicants like Sigma-san."

Sigma: "...I did have a feeling you knew too much to have heard it from Ros-bo."

Subaru: "And that's why I know a bit more than what you expected, Sigma-san. Now that I've told you all I know, I was kinda hoping it would help you decide what to reveal or withhold from me."

Sigma: "Always the flatterer."

Sigma wryly smiled at Subaru's backpedaling statement. Then, she placed her small palm to her forehead and exhaled a long sigh. It was a necessary ritual for her to make up her mind.

Sigma: “Since you already know the Witch-sama’s connection to the Sanctuary and about me and Ryuzu Meyer, it’d probably be strange if I kept hiding it from you...”

Subaru: “So then...”

Sigma: “Don’t rush. I understand how you feel, Su-bo... but it’s not that simple— What you want to ask me is «What did Ryuzu see inside the Trial», correct?”

Subaru was about to confirm with a “Yes” when a subtle sense of awryness led him to hold his words.

Sigma said “Ryuzu” rather than “I” just now. But just when Subaru furrowed his brows, contemplating her true intentions, Sigma simultaneously muttered “Sharp one”,

Sigma: “If the question was about the past I saw in the Tomb, my answer would be «I don’t know». After all, I did not take the Trial inside the Tomb. Although I was certainly the one who returned from the Tomb.”

Subaru: “...And what... does that mean?”

Sigma: “It’s simple. Don’t you think it strange, Su-bo? There should only have been one chance for Ryuzu to enter the Tomb to bring Gar-bo out. And yet, there were two Ryuzu Meyer replicants who had entered the Tomb. The number of chances and people don’t match up at all.”

Subaru: “Ah...”

Only when it was pointed out for him did Subaru realize what an idiot he had been. Indeed, she was completely right. There were two Ryuzus who entered the Tomb, yet only one chance to enter— There could only be one explanation to eliminate this contradiction.

Subaru: “The Ryuzu-san who went in... is not the Ryuzu-san who came out...”

Sigma: “Precisely. According to your arrangement... the Ryuzu who came out would be Ryuzu Sigma, myself. And the Ryuzu who went in, that would be Ryuzu Theta. The one who saw her past was Ryuzu Theta, while I merely brought Gar-bo outside. As for my stance, rather than being opposed to the Sanctuary’s liberation, the process of elimination should leave me at neutral.”

And so, she looked to the near-dejected Subaru and continued.

Sigma: “—If there is anything I can tell you, it would be what Gar-bo had been so desperately hiding. The past that child saw... or rather, fragments of it, anyway.”

Arc 4 Chapter 96 - Red Drawn at the Lips

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Complete

Subaru: “Fragments... of the past Garfiel saw...”

Sigma: “Just as it sounds, they are no more than fragments. It was me who carried him out of the Tomb while he muttered, delirious and sobbing. As such I know the rough outlines.”

Swallowing his breath, Subaru turned to Sigma.

Garfiel’s past was not what he had expected to talk about with Sigma, but it was nonetheless one of the issues Subaru needed to sort out. Though it was out of order, he had no complaints about getting this information now.

Subaru: “Can you tell me? What did that gu... What did Garfiel see in his past that made him want to give up on freeing the Sanctuary? What could he have seen to have made him so opposed to letting the residents go outside?”

Sigma: “—What that child saw... was his mother’s farewell.”

Subaru: “Her, farewell?”

Subaru felt something gouge at his chest.

Garfiel’s parting with his mother— It didn’t sound unrelated to Subaru’s own Trial at all. But unlike Subaru, who could look back on his parting with a happy heart, Garfiel’s probably wasn’t so pleasant. And that must be why he was so obsessively bound to the Sanctuary.

Sigma: “Su-bo, do you know about that child’s mother?”

Subaru: "...I heard a little from Frederica before. Their mother was an ordinary human, and there were some half-bloods... Well, stuff happened, and those two were born... And then she left them in the Sanctuary."

Sigma: "Heartlessly, she left by herself to find her own happiness... That's the gist of it."

Filling in the part that Subaru had trouble voicing, a fleeting smile rose on Sigma's face. Her statement is exactly what Frederica had told him about their mother. As well as saying that their mother's turbulent life was likely the providence of her proportionally poor luck.

If he remembered correctly, Frederica and Garfiel each took one of their parent's surnames. Frederica took her father's, Baumann. While Garfiel took his mother's, Tinzal.

Subaru: "But, Frederica said their mother left them when they were still very little... If he saw his memories from back then, just how vivid could those memories have been?"

Sigma: "Have you forgotten that the Trial was created by Echidna, who holds the Book of Wisdom? Rather than from the vague, unreliable memories that remain, it shapes the world using the memories that are closer to what actually happened... It shouldn't have been much different from the scene he saw as a young child."

Subaru: "..."

Without any basis to refute her, Subaru pondered about Sigma's words.

Indeed, by drawing from Subaru's memories, Echidna was able to recreate the town and the school from Subaru's original universe, none of which existed in this world. On the matter of having one's deepest memories tapped into, this concept would be personified by none other than Subaru, who had experienced it first-hand.

Subaru: "Right. I guess that makes sense. But the problem is... when Garfiel saw the scene of his parting with his mother again, why did it hurt him so much that he broke down crying?"

Sigma: "..."

Subaru: "It might sound harsh, but she left him when he was still very little, so he's spent far more time without his mother than with her. Getting stuck on something that's already long passed just doesn't sound like him at..."

Sigma: "Su-bo, do you really think a wound from being abandoned by your mother as a child could be so shallow?"

Pointing out to Subaru what he had trouble understanding, Sigma's words cut like a knife. Feeling his throat struck by those words, Subaru unwittingly fell silent. And, seeing this, Sigma lowered her grieving gaze.

Sigma: "Of course, his sister Frederica and I were aware of how large a thorn had been lodged into that child's heart. But Gar-bo might not have been aware of it himself until his Trial brought it to the surface... I think his excessive conservatism is precisely because of that."

Subaru: "...But, why? So that guy's rejection of liberating the Sanctuary and his fears of the outside world are all because of his negative feelings towards his mother... for choosing the outside world over him?"

Sigma: "It's more like hatred of the outside world. Hatred of the world that stole his mother but left him behind. And as much as he wanted to go after her, the barrier barred the rest of us from coming with him. Between his mother and the Sanctuary's residents, both of which are irreplaceable to him, it was far too cruel a choice."

Subaru: "Does he maybe hate his mother? The mother who deserted him and went into the outside world alone?"

For Subaru, who had never been abandoned by his parents, it was a pain he could not understand.

No matter how shamelessly he abandoned himself, no matter how worthless he showed them he was, they never once considered giving up on him. He was saved by that warmth, yet that same warmth tormented him even now.

Sigma: "Well, who could say..."

Sigma avoided giving an immediate answer. Her gaze wandered, as if in search of her words, before she spilled a small sigh.

Sigma: “I’ve never been able to ask him what he truly felt about his mother. I was a coward, after all. Every time I wanted to ask... I thought of that child crying in the Tomb, and I just couldn’t say the words.”

Subaru: “Sigma-san...”

Sigma: “And yet, even after that child learned of his past, he’d still say Garfiel Tinsel whenever he was asked for his name. My thinking is that surely, he does it so he does not forget.”

Subaru: “Doesn’t forget...”

Giving a nod to Subaru’s words, Sigma lovingly looked over the crummy shed that Garfiel, with his own hands, had worked so hard to build.

Sigma: “It’s so he doesn’t forget the emotion he felt when he saw his past— Whether it was anger, or grief, I’m not sure even now.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Otto: “You look terrible, Natsuki-san. You know that?”

Spotting Subaru in the center of the village, Otto called out with a wry smile. Hearing that unsparing remark, Subaru shrugged his shoulders and looked towards him.

Subaru: “I could say the same about you. It’s been half a day since I saw you and you are already covered in mud. Still tumbling around in woods at your age, aren’t you a bit old for that?”

Otto: “It’s not like I was trying to get covered in mud!”

Subaru: “Don’t shout, it’s rattling my sleep-deprived brain. Speaking of sleep deprivation, you’ve got some circles under your eyes as well. Frolicking in mud when you should be sleeping... Could it be that you are struck with the urge to rectify as many regrets as you can in the limited time you have left?”

Otto: “Could you stop sticking me with that kind of outdated popular-fiction plotline!?”

From Otto's objections, it sounds like this world has had its fad of fictions about terminally ill patients trying to live their last days to the fullest as well. Just more useless knowledge to add to the collection. In fact, once this is all over, it might be quite profitable to import all sorts of stories from his original world into this one. That said, Subaru continued,

Subaru: "Anyway, enough of joking around for now... How are things actually going?"

Otto: "I can't deny that it was a lot harder without your presence, Natsuki-san... But still, I think it's safe to call it a success. You can go ahead and praise me now."

Subaru: "Good job good job, you are my only hope, go for it!"

Otto: "What's with those uninspired encouragements! I can feel the air drying up!"

Watching Otto flap his arms up and down, Subaru secretly acknowledged his endless gratitude for his help. But since it'd be way too embarrassing to say it out loud, Subaru was determined to take that secret to his grave.

Subaru: "Well, good to hear those preparations are coming along. By the way, how are things progressing on the other front? Do you think it's amount to something?"

Otto: "That one... is a bit tricky with the limited timeframe that we have. There's simply not enough time. I guess if I cut into my sleeping hours, I might be able to manage it by the day after tomorrow, but..."

Subaru: "You'll cut into your sleeping hours for me? Your diligence leaves me speechless."

Otto: "Nnghaah! Can of worms...!"

Hugging his head, Otto lamented his slip of the tongue. But, even if Subaru hadn't insisted on it, Otto would probably still have chosen to forsake his sleep to make up for the needed time.

It was precisely because of this sincerity that Subaru trusted him as a friend.

Without ever realizing how thankful Subaru actually felt, with "So then.", Otto wiped off his anguished expression and turned to Subaru,

Otto: “Has the stage been set on your end, Natsuki-san? Honestly, considering the trouble with Emilia-sama, I’ve been wondering if I should be packing my bags and scuttling away in the night.”

Subaru: “I’m confident I can get all the missing pieces together. It’s still a bit worrying, though, not knowing what the final picture will look like.”

Otto: “A—are we going to be alright? There isn’t much time left...”

Subaru: “If I can’t fill in the pieces before the time limit, we’ll just have to make up for it with love, courage, and friendship. At least, going from the books I’ve read, it’ll definitely work out somehow.”

Otto: “You know, Natsuki-san. While I did say I was willing to go against the odds, that’s assuming there’s a fighting chance. Taking on a bet with zero chance of winning isn’t just idiotic, it’s more like courting death...”

Otto went on mumbling, but Subaru started walking without paying him much mind. Reluctantly, Otto followed and matched his steps.

Not feeling very concerned about dispelling Otto’s anxiety, Subaru headed towards the building where Roswaal was waiting— while not necessary, he thought he ought to update him on their progress thus far.

Having concluded his conversation with Ryuzu Sigma, Subaru had learned fragments of Garfiel’s past. Even though Sigma had no further information to give him, she did clarify her disinterest in the Sanctuary’s liberation, Garfiel’s rejection of his past, and the fact that she switched with Theta during the chaotic situation in the Tomb.

According to the replicants’ rotation schedule, Theta should show up tomorrow. What Theta saw in the Trial must have been the memories of Ryuzu Meyer’s interactions with Echidna, but just what could she have seen to make her so averse to liberating the Sanctuary?

Only by knowing this could he understand the reason for Theta’s obstinance. And, once he does, he could finally try to remove the existence that had been feeding Garfiel his instructions, and get a chance to talk to him without setting off his rage.

Despite Garfiel's rough and reckless facade, his nature wasn't irrational nor wholly inclined to violence. At least, that was Subaru's inkling. If he were irrational and approved of solving every problem with brute force, all he had to do was to simply eliminate everything that was a potential threat to the Sanctuary.

Without Puck at Emilia's side and considering Roswaal below his full capacity, no one present had the power to contend with a beastified Garfiel. He was now, without a doubt, the most powerful force within the Sanctuary, and were he to chose to bare his fangs and attack, he could have solved everything with violence alone.

Yet he didn't do this, precisely because, beneath the surface, his nature was still willing to search for a rational solution.

Subaru: "Basically, we are taking advantage of his softness to plot behind his back, huh. Almost makes us sound like the bad guys."

Otto: "I don't have a problem with using anything we can get our hands on, but I agree with the idea we are not exactly fairy tale protagonists here."

Picking up on Subaru's mutters, the self-professed Scoundrel B shrugged to his accomplice, Scoundrel A. Hearing this, Scoundrel A was sincerely gladdened by that sentiment from B.

In any case, Garfiel was the convergence point of the many problems surrounding the Sanctuary. If they could successfully persuade him, it would be the same as cleaning up Big Problem B. And as for Big Problem A, the Trial— or rather, Emilia.

Subaru: "I'll have to go see her one more time after this."

It was already well into the evening, and night-time lights were now illuminating the Sanctuary. The sun had sunken halfway down the western sky, coloring the world in a sunset hue of orange and violet. Night was approaching, and, assuming nothing happens, the time to challenge the Trial would soon arrive.

But Subaru had yet to hear any report of Emilia waking. Even in the case she was able to wake in time for the Trial, considering the time she would need in order to sort through her emotions, no doubt tonight's challenge was clearly a no-go. In fact, if worst comes to worst, she might even miss the challenge on Subaru's critical day tomorrow.

Even Puck, who served as the trigger of Emilia's collapse, spoke only of the extent of her initial shock, and hadn't said a peep on how long it would take for her to recover.

Subaru: "I know it depends on how well I support her after she wakes up, but... since I can't know how much damage she's taken, I can't help but feel like I'm just letting it lie."

Otto: "Do you think you'll be able to console her... or something to that effect? I'm just an outsider, so I can't really say anything."

Subaru: "For the moment, all I know is that she's so confused that she can barely recognize the people around her. It's the first time I've seen her throw a child-like tantrum like this. If you are asking me if I can do it or not... honestly, I can only try."

Otto: "So we are still walking on a tightrope, then..."

Hearing Subaru's unreliable answer, Otto sighed, but made no move to flee. Realizing that he was making Otto join him in his near-hopeless fight, Subaru genuinely wanted to apologize.

Nevertheless, the fact that Otto did not abandon him even now was truly a saving grace for Subaru.

Otto: "If that's the situation for Emilia-sama, how are things going with Garfiel? Have you acquired the bargaining material to soften him up a bit?"

Subaru: "I'm pretty sure I got the key piece we need, yeah. The problem is I'll still need some time before I can get him to the negotiation table."

How he deals with Garfiel will depend on how his conversation goes with Theta tomorrow. He would have to base his strategy upon whatever happens in his talk with her. As frustrating as it was, the only method available to his negotiations would be to repeat whatever information he had accumulated so far.

For now, there was no choice but to keep walking those tightropes one after the other.

Subaru: "—We are here. You are going in with me this time."

Subaru said to Otto beside him as they arrived in front of Roswaal's residence. Otto made an uncomfortable face at Subaru's words, but,

Otto: “Ehhh, well, alright. I guess there’s no reason for me stay outside this time. If I go in with you... Uwaaaaaagh, isn’t that the same as declaring war on the Margrave!? You sure my head will still be on my body after all this is over?”

Subaru: “Don’t worry. If your head goes flying, my head will go flying or get turned to rabbit food. I’m never gonna let you die alone!”

Otto: “There’s nothing reassuring about that at all!”

Seeing Subaru shoot him a thumbs up, Otto wailed in reply. And as they went on bantering outside the building’s doorway, the door opened from the inside— revealing a maid, casting them a cold stare.

Ram: “What are you two chattering about so loudly so late in the day, right outside the door? People will come to doubt your master, Roswaal-sama’s integrity. Conduct yourselves with more dignity.”

Subaru: “Sorry... But, what are you doing here? You left Emilia by herself?”

Apologizing to Ram’s scathing criticism, Subaru pointed out the strangeness of her presence. Giving a small sigh, Ram shrugged with feigned bafflement, and,

Ram: “You needn’t worry, I’m going back now. Since you were coming to visit, I was called here to help Roswaal-sama prepare— What a nuisance you are, placing this burden on Emilia-sama.”

Subaru: “Did you just spin that around so it’s my fault...? And what did Roswaal need to prepare for, anyway? He can’t get out of the bed, so there’s not much to be done, right?”

While Subaru knew that Roswaal was actually able to get out of bed, and was even healthy enough to kick Garfiel’s head to pieces, he was pretending he doesn’t know for now.

Seeing this, Ram squinted one of her eyes with an annoyed “Enough”, before walking right through the space between Subaru and Otto.

Ram: “Roswaal-sama is waiting, so hurry inside. Take care not to trouble Roswaal-sama by dragging the conversation on for too long... After you are done, promptly come take my place at Emilia’s side.”

Subaru: “Busy lady. I’m surprised you are so worried about Roswaal when he’s pretty much healthy right now. I still wish you could prioritize Emilia a bit more. If no one’s there once she wakes up, she...”

Ram: “The one she should find at her side when she wakes up cannot be Ram. Don’t you even understand that much?”

Walking away, Ram leaves a dumbstruck Subaru with that statement, her expression one of observing a genuine idiot. Silently watching her back as she left, Subaru felt Otto give him a light jab with his elbow.

Otto: “Unless you were intentionally trying to make her mad just now, that was a pretty terrible exchange, you know.”

Subaru: “...Yeah, I know. I was just wondering what her reaction would be.”

Otto: “You are rotten right down to the very core, you know that?”

Shoving Otto’s elbow away, Subaru went through the open door. Otto followed behind him, and together, they headed to the innermost room in the building. Lightly knocking on the door,

Subaru: “Roswaal, it’s me. Can I come in?”

Roswaal: “Ooooooooooya, you are here. Doooo come in, dooooooooooooo come in.”

The clown’s voice from beyond the door restored to its usual intonation slightly surprised Subaru as he opened the door. And---

Subaru: “Aah, so that’s what it was.”

Seeing Roswaal on the bed, Subaru faintly nodded as if understanding something. That must be the preparation Ram had mentioned.

At the comprehending Subaru’s side, Otto made a “Hgg” sound when he saw Roswaal’s face. It must be the first time he’s seen his face like this, after all.

Roswaal: “Taaaaking the time to come report on your proooooogress, how commendable. I am rather foooond of that part abooout you.”

Snickering in his clownish, drawn-out tone with the long-absent make-up back on his face, Roswaal spread out his arms, welcoming their arrival.

Arc 4 Chapter 97 - Before the Dawn

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 4 “Lies, Liars, and Con Artists”, Parts 3-4

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Roswaal: “Make yourselves at home. Whether it be a long conversation or a short conversation, we should get coooomfortable, no?”

Closing a single eye, Roswaal shot his yellow gaze towards the two standing at the door.

Tangled within that viscous gaze, Otto gulped as if drowning in its devilishness. Although the same demonic hand also reached for Subaru, having braced himself beforehand, by taking a single cough he managed to stand his ground without allowing himself to be swallowed.

Subaru: “You put on your makeup and got all dressed up just for us? I’m gonna blush.”

Roswaal: “Dooon’t worry about it. After all, you were the one who tooold me to put on my makeup agaaain.”

Subaru: “Ah right... I did.”

After sealing their Contract and bet, that was indeed what Subaru had told Roswaal before leaving the room. Though he never thought Roswaal would actually do it.

Roswaal: “You see, for me, these cosmetics are like my warpaint. To advance the world in accordance with the Gospel, I must never let down viiigilance. That’s why I wear this makeup, to constantly remiiind myself of that.”

Unexpectedly hearing this backstory, Subaru couldn’t help but gawk at Roswaal’s face.

The bewitching eyeliners on that white-powdered face. The red-painted lips and the peculiar shape around his left eye. Apparently, all of it had some significance other than screwing with his conversation partner.

Subaru: “Or, are you just saying that to screw with me?”

Roswaal: “You can beliiieve me, you know? Weeell, I’ll leave it to your imaginations. Since things have already diverged from the Gospel’s writ, I was ready to give up on this world and had stopped putting on my cosmetics... But now I’m wearing them once more. You can aaalso interpret that however you liiike.”

Listening to Roswaal’s roundabout words, Subaru gritted his teeth to keep his expression steady.

If it was indeed warpaint as Roswaal suggested, then the reason he put them on once more was clear. Chances were, it meant that he has regained his motivation and his will to live.

Even if his justification was his intention to bring this world to an end and leave everything to the self in the next world. Not unlike the hope Subaru himself once harbored.

Roswaal: “Would it have been better for you if I had continued wiiiithout motivation?”

Subaru: “Not really. We’ll still need your reputation, position, and influence to put Emilia-tan on the throne. It’ll be a problem if you suddenly start playing dead. So I’ll be crushing what motivation you have and making you see a different kind of hope before dragging you into our team.”

Roswaal: “Promising words... Feel free to tryyyyy it, if you can.”

Faced with Subaru’s brazen declaration of war, Roswaal’s lips twisted in delight. Then, keeping up that irritating smile, Roswaal turned to the one standing beside Subaru with an “Anyway”,

Roswaal: “This one spaaacing out next to you... must be the Otto-kun previously introduuuuced to me? Compared to how lively he was before, he’s looking awwwfully glum, iiisn’t he?”

Subaru: “He’s not gloomy, it’s more like he’s just freaking out. Just when he was hoping to do some bootlicking, he got to see a creepy clown face waiting for him. It’s only natural that he peed himself a little, right?”

Otto: “What are you doing suggesting that someone else peed themselves!? And don’t make it sound like I came here to shamelessly curry favor! You are making my impression even worse!”

Subaru: “The moment you decided to go against him and help me, any impression you might have caused was already the worst it could possibly be, you know. At least try establishing yourself as a formidable opponent so you can hope for a higher placing in the popularity polls.”

Otto: “I have precisely no idea what you are talking about!?”

Exchanging their rowdy banter as usual, Subaru could see Otto’s tension loosening. And, as if realizing that back and forth was meant to relax him, Otto’s face took on a complicated expression.

Watching the expressive gazes exchanged between the two, Roswaal held a finger to his cheek and gave a meaningful laugh.

Roswaal: “Conveying everything to each other through eyes alone, whaaat a great bond you twoooo must have. And when the relationship between Subaru-kun and I was supposed to have been longer, too. I’m kind of jeeeeeealous.”

Subaru: “Stop saying gross stuff. The number one and two places in my heart are already sold out. There’s absolutely no gap for you guys to... Especially for this asshole, to slip into, you asshole.”

Roswaal: “Unfortunate. But, doooesn’t that mean... there’s no place left for Beeeeeatrice? Just how do you feel about her?”

Subaru: “———”

No single word could have checked Subaru more effectively than that. He had never expected Roswaal to bring up Beatrice’s name here, so Subaru’s shock was as if he had just been slapped across the face.

Subaru: “Beatrice is...”

Roswaal: “That child follows her Gospel’s guidance. Iin that sense, you could say that we are rather like-miinded. Although, seeing how I am actively pursuing my Gospel’s writ, while she is passively keeping hers, there is a difference in our approooaches.”

Subaru: “You are saying if she can get results just by waiting, there’s no need to trouble herself? While I agree... in this case, the order for her to keep waiting is way too much of a curse.”

Roswaal: “That would perhaps beeeeeeeee the case here.”

On the instruction of her creator, Echidna, Beatrice had been waiting in the Forbidden Library inside Roswaal’s mansion for a person that does not exist. As a Spirit who was given this single purpose from the moment she was born, clinging mindlessly to this order was the only thing that gave her life meaning.

In terms of stubbornness, Beatrice is indeed very much like Roswaal.

Her pleas to be allowed to die remained vivid in Subaru’s memory, still. So did her expression at the very end, after all that had transpired in the mansion. That’s why—

Subaru: “I will undo that curse myself. I’ll drag her out of that stinking room and take her and her book and her dress out to dry in the sun— As for her feelings or whatever, I’ll leave that up to her.”

Roswaal: “———”

Listening to Subaru’s proclamation, Roswaal narrowed his eyes, as if looking at something dazzling. Then, he expelled a short sigh and turned his gaze to Otto, who had been waiting to join the conversation.

Roswaal: “Weeeell then? Seeing how you brought him here, and judging by that exchange between you two... Otto-kun would be the card you’ve been hiiiding?”

Otto: “N—no, I’m only here to arbitrate between the two sides. I would never have the gall to challenge your intentions, Margrave...”

Subaru: “Why are you backpedalling at this point! Just come out and say it! You are pissed off about his clown makeup and wanna paint it red and white Kumadori-style as soon as he’s defeated!”

Otto: “I don’t remember saying that! And what on earth is a *Kumadori*¹⁵³!”

¹⁵³ Translator note by SummaryAnon: “It’s Kabuki makeup”. For more information, see here.

Sticking Otto with something that he didn't remember saying, Subaru shot him a pointless thumbs-up. But, watching Subaru from the side, Roswaal closed one of his eyes in thought before turning a meaningful gaze to Otto.

Roswaal: "My impression... is that Subaru-kun only managed to regain his confidence because of you. I'm sure that must've been a sight to behold."

Subaru: "I can't exactly deny that, but... Now that I think about it story-wise, isn't it kinda weird to recover thanks to a male character's help? Normally, shouldn't it be the heroine who gets me back on my feet?"

Otto: "Even if you look at me like that, I wouldn't know what to say to you!"

Subaru dismissed Otto's defiant gaze with a flap of his hand and accepted that there was no helping it. Having been lent the strength to stand up again, it was now Subaru's turn to take his heroine by the hand and pull her to her feet. At least, that was what his heart had decided to do.

Subaru closed his eyes and opened them once more. And, sensing a change in the sharpness of that gaze, Roswaal adjusted his posture on the bed as the atmosphere in the room shifted.

Upon the bed, Roswaal twined his fingers, with "Nooow then" as his opening salvo,

Roswaal: "When you are locked away in isolation for the sake of convalescence, you simply must find something to do. I couldn't help but get bored otherwise. And because of that... I've been keeping my ears very open."

Subaru: "Well ain't that a tasteless hobby."

Roswaal: "You may say that, but it looks like you've been making progress with those nefarious ploys of yours... How this Sanctuary came to be, and what complicated circumstances it's tangled in, have you gotten a little feel of those things yet?"

Subaru: "Yeah, with all the convoluted details going on, it's really a headache. If you add your problems and Emilia's Trials into the mix, «getting screwed on all sides» would be an understatement."

Subaru plainly admitted to the difficulty of his circumstances, but he had already taken his slim chances into consideration. Telling Roswaal the same thing he had told Otto, Subaru held up a single finger, indicating the lack of any intention to give up on his situation just yet,

Subaru: “The deadline for our Contract and bet is in three days. I intend to get things moving significantly tomorrow and the day after... So you better not get in the way too much.”

Roswaal: “Iiii’m afraid I must. Fulfilling the Gospel is my dearest wish. I thought I’ve already told you this many tiiiimes before?”

Subaru: “Within three days, I’ll have Emilia pass the Trials and convince Garfiel to join me. Strengthening our faction should not be a bad deal for you either. I can guarantee you my chosen future will be brighter compared to what relying on your Gospel will get you.”

Roswaal: “If it is as you say, perhaps that future has soooome merit after all.”

As futile as it was at this point, Subaru nevertheless made the attempt to persuade him. Suddenly, Roswaal looked down, muttering as if pondering over the future Subaru spoke of.

But, when he lifted his head once more, there was no more indecision in his mismatched eyes.

Roswaal: “Yet it isn’t certain— That is all the reason I need to reject your proposed future. If I obey my Gospel, my desired future is guaranteed. Even if it means making countless sacrifices to obtain it, what of it? After all, there is only one thing I desire.”

Subaru: “For the one thing most important to you, you would abandon everyone who is watching over you? Everyone who’s helping you... and Ram... What’ll become of them?”

Roswaal: “Noooooow now, that’s enough of that, Subaru-kun— What do you think quuuuestioning my resolve will achieve at this point? My answer remains unchanged, as are the tasks you must accomplish.”

Subaru: “———”

It was the anticipated outcome and rejection.

Roswaal had no intention of listening to Subaru. And just as Subaru rejected Roswaal’s proposal and Echidna’s Contract, Roswaal already had his optimal solution in mind.

Subaru: "...But you know, I'll never become you, Roswaal."

Roswaal: "Is that so... That is truly unfortunate, Subaru-kun."

Leaning his weight into the pillow at his back, Roswaal spilled a quiet sigh. His disappointment must be because of the expectations he had for Subaru—

—That, once all roads are cut, no doubt Natsuki Subaru would become just like him, fighting with all his life.

Otto: "We should return to the topic at hand. Is that alright with you, Margrave?"

Otto stepped forward and broke the silence that had descended upon the room. Roswaal turned his yellow gaze to the grey-haired youth and wordlessly assented. Then, Otto looked back at Subaru, who also nodded,

Otto: "It seems both sides have agreed on the deadline of three days for reshaping the circumstances of the Sanctuary. So even if the Margrave intends to influence Natsuki-san, it will amount to nothing more than quietly observing from the sidelines until then, correct?"

Roswaal: "Quietly observing... I don't recall making any promises of thaaaat sort?"

Otto: "And yet, the fact that you haven't burned me to cinders by now is an indication of that intention, right? I assume the Head Magician of the Kingdom of Lugunica's Court, Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers, would be able to incinerate me in the blink of an eye. Wouldn't that be the easiest, most straightforward method to foil Natsuki-san's plans while staying within the limitations of the bet?"

Roswaal: "Ooooooooooh?"

Subaru held his breath as he watched Otto build up his measured and fluent logic. Though they never rehearsed this beforehand, his delivery shot fire with every syllable. Even Roswaal looked surprised as he read the intention of Otto's words.

Roswaal: "You are an amusing one. Though I've given you a similar appraisal before... let me revise it— You are a rare talent, far more amusing than I thought."

Otto: "I humble myself with your praise, but... That was a compliment, right?"

Roswaal: "It is pure and unadulterated praise. Aahaaaaaa, how splendid. Standing there at Subaru-kun's side, you proved your argument at the peril of your own life. That is truly an admirable determination, very much to my liking. Not everyone could have done what you've just done."

Otto: "That's... Thank you."

Though somewhat overwhelmed by Roswaal's boldness, Otto nevertheless fearlessly faced him. As Otto himself had said, he was standing in front of a sorcerer who could incinerate him with the snap of a finger.

In fact, if Roswaal truly wanted to abandon all pretenses and enforce his Contract with Subaru, then all he had to do was resort to the treacherous methods Otto had described. And even if he didn't do that, but instead simply set fire to the Sanctuary or prematurely caused the snowfall to lure the Great Rabbit, there would be nothing Subaru could do to stop him. Subaru's bet would certainly be lost.

For Otto, who knew nothing about Return by Death, he had assumed that Subaru's survival was a necessary condition of the bet, but for Subaru and Roswaal, who did know about Return by Death, Subaru's survival was in fact irrelevant. As they sealed their Contract, that had been Subaru's greatest concern, whether Roswaal would burn him to death the moment he turned his back¹⁵⁴.

So what could it mean, if Roswaal would neither resort to violence nor simply watch from the sidelines?

Otto: "In any case, I'd like your assurance, Margrave. That regardless of what we plan or do... you will not take any extreme measures until the three days' deadline is up."

Roswaal: "Asking me for assurances, how audacious you are."

Otto: "I doubt we'd have a chance of winning this bet if we had to constantly watch our backs. And besides, if you are so sure that Natsuki-san will fail and that this bet is as good as won, then not doing anything to interfere shouldn't be a problem, should it?"

¹⁵⁴ In Arc 4 Chapter 67, we get this: "Roswaal knew that Subaru could rewind time, but he didn't know that it was through Return by Death, with death acting as the trigger". However, in this situation, Subaru seems to think that Roswaal could have torched his ass to win the bet easily, which is a bit of a plot hole. Either that or he forgot a very important detail, and is a gigantic dumbass. However, Summary did seem to be unsure if this paragraph was narrated from Subaru's point of view or from Tappei's omniscient point of view.

Roswaal: “———”

Gesturing with his body alongside his words, the corners of Otto’s mouth rose as he spoke. Seeing this, Roswaal’s gaze sharpened. Swallowing his breath while watching the negotiations, Subaru could sense that the critical moment had arrived. If Roswaal simply accepted Otto’s provocation, they would lose.

A heavy, breathtaking silence descended upon the room. However,

Roswaal: “liiiiii see. Subaru-kun, you are blessed to have such a woooooonderful friend.”

Subaru: “...Yeah, you are right. He’s the kind of buddy who’ll give me a good beating when I go astray, you know.”

Answering the grinning Roswaal, Subaru’s gaze was looking somewhere far away.

Then suddenly, he realized it. Roswaal probably never had a friend like Otto. When Subaru was about to go down the very same path, Otto’s punches brought him back again. Most likely, Roswaal had no one around to correct his stubborn and twisted ideas like that.

Subaru: “No helping it, then—— It’s four-hundred years late, but we’ll be doing that now.”

Roswaal: “———”

Subaru: “Roswaal! Safe to call that attitude from before agreement, right!”

Roswaal wryly smiled at Subaru’s pursuit, then tilted his clownish face,

Roswaal: “Very well, I’ll promise. Either way, I’ll need to store up my Mana for the snowfall in three days. Just so you know, even for someone as poooooweful as me, it is a strenuous effort to controoooool the weather. Even if only temporarily, and in a confiiiiined area.”

Subaru: “So then, you’ll spend your time meditating from now on? Just for reference, if you can tell me what annoys you the most when you are meditating, that’ll help a lot.”

Roswaal: “liiii’m not in the habit of being so charitable to my enemies—— In any case, there is no need for me to do anything, since I knooooow that your plans will not succeed.”

No concessions to be had on that one, apparently.

Subaru snorted at those taunting words, while Otto sighed with an exhausted expression. Nevertheless, they have safely secured their biggest goal in coming here.

While they throw everything into the bet, Roswaal will not do anything to interfere. Getting that assurance alone was a triumph. And the fact that Otto's oration proved even more effective than anything they could've planned was huge.

Roswaal: "Incidentally, Subaru-kun."

Subaru: "—Ah?"

Roswaal: "I hear that the Great Spirit-sama has leeeeft Emilia-sama's side?"

That change of topic came like a punch from above just when Subaru's mind began to relax. Straightening his back, Subaru acknowledged Roswaal's question with "Yeah",

Subaru: "Something happened with Emilia and Puck's Contract and their link's been severed. Right now, Emilia can't be called a Spiritual Arts User anymore."

Roswaal: "I also heard that she's terribly aggrieved... With matters as precarious as they are, for her heart to receive such a wound now, will it really be alright?"

Subaru: "...Who knows. At least, tonight's Trial has gone out the window. As for how that'll affect things tomorrow and onwards, we won't know until Emilia wakes up."

The truth is, even though Puck had warned him beforehand of how anguished Emilia would be, her sorrow was such that he still couldn't help but want to cover his eyes. With just two days remaining, cornering Emilia like this had made his slim chances even slimmer, closing off the gates of success.

But as long as some wind blows through the hole in the supposedly-shut gate, Subaru will keep his present, faint hope.

Subaru: "That said, it really is a headache. But, one way or another, I..."

Roswaal: "That's, rather intriiiiiguing..."

Interrupting Subaru's words, Roswaal wagged his lifted finger left and right. Subaru unwittingly fell silent at this gesture, while Roswaal continued.

Roswaal: "After all, while you do seem troubled about how to get Emilia-sama back on her feet... you don't appear to be at all surprised by the fact the Great Spirit-sama broke his coooooontract with Emilia-sama. Just why would thaaaaaat be?"

Subaru: "———"

Roswaal's nonchalant question made Subaru instantly lose his words.

Subaru didn't seem surprised because Subaru already knew it was going to happen. If he hadn't discussed it with Puck beforehand, he would probably have been helplessly paralyzed in front of the screaming and wailing Emilia. That said, that's not exactly a huge difference from what actually happened.

Roswaal: "Did you... perhaps know about this situation beforehand? The fact that the Great Spirit-sama would leave Emilia-sama's side? Leaving aside the manner of how you came to leeeeeearn of it."

Subaru: "Even if, hypothetically, I did... it'd make no sense for you to complain about it. I'm just doing everything I can to win this bet. So even if you..."

Roswaal: "Nooooono, that's enough— That's all I needed to hear."

Roswall held up his palm with a satisfied nod. At this, Subaru stopped mid-sentence, expelling a rueful snort through his nostrils.

Roswaal: "liiiin any case... If the Great Spirit-sama has indeed left Emilia-sama's side, thaaaaat would present something of a proooooblem for me."

Subaru: "...Really? Considering your objectives, shouldn't this be a turn for the b..."

Roswaal: "Not at all. If the unbearable sight of Emilia-sama breaking could set your heart aflame, that would indeed be suitable for my needs... But if Emilia-sama loses her powers as a Spiritual Arts User, then she cannot be the culprit behind the snowfall upon the Saaaaanctuary. That would be a heeeeeeavy blow to me."

Subaru: "Ah..."

Roswaal was talking about the Gospel's discrepancy with reality.

In three days, the snowfall in Sanctuary will draw the Great Rabbit here. In order to match the content of the writ, Roswaal would have to bury the Sanctuary in snow. But, that means—

Subaru: “Roswaal, I’ve been thinking this for a while now...”

Roswaal: “Hm? Whaaaaaat is it?”

Subaru: “About how this perfect Gospel of yours also has its failings.”

Roswaal: “———”

The thin smile on Roswaal's lips disappeared at Subaru's words. The air dried up and goosebumps rose on Subaru's skin as he felt the warlock's gaze upon him. At his side, Otto shriveled his shoulders, and for a moment, Subaru felt his throat being choked by the pressure. All the while, the warlock focused his mismatched pupils on Subaru.

Roswaal: “Go on, Subaru-kun. About these failings of the Gospel... thaaaaaat you mentioned.”

Reaching into the pillow at his back, Roswaal produced a book with black binding— the Gospel. Just like the one belonging to Beatrice in the Forbidden Library, its mere appearance burdened the atmosphere with a strange and oppressive heaviness.

Subaru: “T—there's always... been something off about the way you talked about the Gospel's writ. Since I had too much on my plate, I never really gave it much thought... But now that I had a chance to settle down and think about it... I noticed something.”

Roswaal: “Well, let's hear it?”

Subaru: “The Gospels that the Witch Cultists have... are incomplete and not very reader-friendly, but leaving that aside for now, there's also a decisive flaw about the Gospel that you have.”

Roswaal: “———”

Roswaal's brows twitched as he heard that word, "flaw". That he nevertheless remains silent is maybe because he holds unending interest in what Subaru is talking about. Roswaal's Gospel was literally the lifeline feeding his goals. He had no reason not to listen when he hears words like "failing" and "flaw".

Taking a small breath, with his intestines trembling from the pressure clogging his throat, Subaru focused his glare onto Roswaal and spoke.

Subaru: "Going by what you said, it sounds like the Gospel has described the chains of events that would take place in the Sanctuary right up to the end. In your mind, this means a route where I conquer the Tomb in place of Emilia, who fails to beat it, comes to fruition. To corner Emilia and make sure she fails, you'll bring snowfall upon the Sanctuary, luring the Great Rabbit here. Meanwhile, you push the mansion into an impossible situation to force me to steel my resolve and let go of the useless parts of me— Is that right?"

Roswaal: "More or less, thaaaat's correct. And the defect?"

Subaru: "...You didn't know that the snowfall will bring the Great Rabbit here. Which means your Gospel didn't mention what the result of bringing the snowfall will be. So if all it says is «it will snow», and you take it as your creed and move to make it reality— then you are really just the book's puppet."

Roswaal: "I am aware. Even so, I don't mind. As long as I follow this book, I will receive the future I desire. As such, why should I hesitate to dance to its heartless and formless words?"

Calmly, Roswaal confirmed Subaru's reasoning.

Subaru's eyes wavered, unsure of what he should say next. But now that his reasoning had been confirmed, it brought a definite sense of reality to the hypothesis in his mind— And if his hypothesis was correct, then,

Subaru: "We really are both clowns."

Roswaal: "—Oh?"

Roswaal narrowed his eyes as the room's atmosphere thickened. Subaru's sensation of his body temperature dropping must be because of the warlock's waves of quiet emotion displacing the Mana in the atmosphere.

Regardless, even if it meant irking Roswaal, addressing the problem of the Gospel was necessary. Both to dispel Subaru's doubts—and to cast doubt into Roswaal's obstinate heart.

Subaru: "Back to the point. If the Gospel's record states that it will snow, I would assume this was originally supposed to be done by Emilia. But since Emilia couldn't, or otherwise wouldn't, you must cause the snowfall in her place. In order to follow the Gospel's writ."

Roswaal: "You are repeating yourself. Hasten to the conclusion. Where is the failing, the defect in..."

Subaru: "Basically, if Emilia wasn't able to cause the snowfall, and if the Gospel telling you to cause the snowfall did not instruct you so... it would never snow in the Sanctuary."

That would be the simple conclusion.

Roswaal was only going to cause the snowfall because the Gospel said it would happen. So had it never been written in the Gospel, or if the Gospel never existed, then Roswaal would have had no reason to take such an action.

It was unclear why Emilia would bring snow to the Sanctuary in the first place, but if the Gospel was correct, Emilia would need to have some reason or another to cover the Sanctuary in snow. Without knowing what that reason may be, the snowfall itself is pointless. Not to mention this development would not occur if the Gospel simply never existed—

Subaru: "Prophecies that wouldn't come true unless prophesied— What kind of prophecies are those?"

Roswaal: "———"

Subaru: "Prophecies are supposed to predict events no matter how unbelievable or seemingly impossible they are. The imperfect ones the Witch Cultists get updated as things unfold to match the progression of the world. But what about your Gospel? The one crowned with the splendid designation of «perfect»?"

Roswaal: "———"

Subaru: "If you need to bend the world just to make sure things match its contents, what's the point? If you are the one who must make it happen at the expense of absolutely everything else, how do you know it was supposed to happen in the first place? Smart as you are, you must have noticed it?"

Roswaal: “———”

Subaru: “You are just in denial, Roswaal.”

Subaru jabbed out his finger and declared.

Showered by those words, Roswaal didn’t say a word. But the pressure encasing the room had disappeared, while Otto, released from its hold, drew quick short breaths to settle the pounding of his heart.

Closing both eyes, Roswaal sank into thoughtful silence. Subaru thought he saw a slight twitch in Roswaal’s red-painted lips, but it may have been wishful thinking in the hopes that his words had swayed him. However, he would be given no time to confirm this.

Roswaal: “History... presumes the existence of the prophecy... of the gospel. It heeds that there is someone... who will act exactly according to the gospel’s writ as it progresses, that is the natural conclusion...”

Subaru: “Yeah. I knew you’d make that kind of rebuttal— So I’ve prepared a rebuttal to that as well.”

In front of Roswaal’s uncharacteristically faltering speech, Subaru cut him off, having already expected this reaction beforehand.

Closing a single eye, Roswaal peered his yellow pupil into Subaru, emitting the same eerie gleam he had poured onto Subaru so many times before. But this may have been the faintest Subaru had ever seen of that gleam.

Vaguely noticing this, Subaru continued.

Subaru: “Show me your Gospel. If I could see what sort of entries are written in it, I’ll agree with you.”

Roswaal: “——Guh. I’m afraid that is impossible. The Gospel would never reveal its contents to anyone other than its recognized owner. I am the owner of this Gospel. Even should you see it, you would not be able to understand the text, and there is even possibility for the mind of those not recognized by the Gospel to be scorched should they touch it...”

Subaru: “You are getting awfully talkative, Roswaal. Is it really so much of a problem for you if I see the book?”

Seeing Roswaal getting stuck for words, Subaru’s eyes widened in surprise.

Though the white cosmetics kept the color of his face from showing through, Roswaal’s refusal was so intense that it could be called an overreaction. This rapid shift in Roswaal’s attitude told Subaru that he had cornered him even more than he had imagined.

There was something in the Gospel’s text that Roswaal was hiding, that he couldn’t allow anyone else to know. Was his stubborn adherence to its prophecies originally spurred by that hidden something?

If not, then how could someone like Roswaal have failed to notice the contradictions within the Gospel?

Otto: “Natsuki-san, any further would be...”

Sensing the shift in Roswaal’s attitude and judging it was time to drive the point home, Subaru was suddenly stopped by Otto, who had been quietly observing them. Subaru looked back, intending to reject Otto’s advice, but when he saw the seriousness of Otto’s gaze, he was dissuaded from pushing the matter further.

Otto saw something that he, in his passion, had failed to see. And those eyes were clearly telling him that it was time to bring this conversation to an end. Recklessly forcing the issue now would only ruin everything they’ve gained here.

Subaru: “—Roswaal, there’s three days left. Tomorrow, and the day after. And, the final day. We’ll put an end to everything before then. You just sit tight and think about what I said.”

Roswaal: “Are you thinking to put me in your debt, I wonder? —You should thank Otto-kun, your friend. He avoided a watershed which would have been unfavorable for both of us.”

With his face still devoid of emotion, Roswaal hid the Gospel behind his back once more. Then, as if to put in his final word as Subaru and Otto turned towards the door with a shrug,

Roswaal: “I will now begin preparing for my weather manipulation spell. And I will consecrate the Gospel’s writ into reality— Doing so is my only guiding compass.”

Subaru: “Do whatever you want. Go ahead and stubbornly cling to it if you like...”

With his hand on the doorknob, Subaru turned around, taking Roswaal into his view. And, when his gaze met the warlock’s,

Subaru: “Once all this is over, I’ll dip that Gospel of yours in ink until it’s all ruined and black— And then you’ll finally be able to see in front of you with your own damn eyes.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Having concluded their conversation with Roswaal, though it was hard to say whether it was meaningful or not, Subaru parted with Otto and headed to Emilia’s residence.

Ram: “—You are here, Barusu.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I’m here. Sorry for troubling you with this for so long.”

Seeing Subaru enter the room, Ram, who had been watching over Emilia, turned him a listless expression. While this kind of lackluster expression was quite usual for her, Subaru thought he caught a glimpse of something darker from the side of her face, though he might be just imagining it.

Subaru: “We are done talking with Roswaal. I’ll watch over Emilia now, so you can go.”

Without delving into the topic, Subaru pulled up a chair next to Ram where he could watch over Emilia. Ram gave Subaru a glance as he sat down beside her, and,

Ram: “It’s worrying, wondering whether Barusu will do something filthy to Emilia-sama while she’s sleeping.”

Subaru: “I didn’t wanna think your faith in me is so low that you’d suspect me of doing something inappropriate in this situation, you know.”

Ram: “Why would I trust you? You’ve revolted against Roswaal-sama, your master, and raised your banner against him in the confined space of this Sanctuary.”

Subaru: "..."

It was rather obvious, but it seems Ram knew about the Contract between Subaru and Roswaal, as well as the details of their bet.

After all, this was Ram, Roswaal's loyal servant to whom she was willing to devote everything to the very, very end. Even if, to Roswaal, she was just a pawn for actualizing the Gospel's writ and the only person he could use without suspicion.

Subaru: "And, what do you think?"

Ram: "———"

Ram did not reply to that question without a subject. She only turned her body towards Subaru, waiting for him to continue, while Subaru sorted through his emotions and chose his words,

Subaru: "I'm not sure how much you know about the Gospel's contents. But, if Roswaal makes those contents reality, the Sanctuary will be in ruins. We won't know if Garfiel or Ryuzu-san or anyone else will safely..."

Ram: "If you think that's going to persuade me, then you are far too shallow, Barusu."

Sternly cutting him off, Ram reflected Subaru within her pale-red eyes, piercing him with her unwavering gaze.

Ram: "There is only one precious person occupying the highest place in my heart. That fact will never waver. Nothing could ever sway that position. Do not expect such words to change my mind."

Subaru: "..."

Ram: "Besides—— Ram's problems are already entrusted elsewhere."

While Subaru regretted his poor choice of words, Ram quietly muttered. Subaru looked up as he heard this, intending to ask her what she meant, but Ram stood up before he could. Smoothing out her skirt, Ram took one last look at the sleeping Emilia before turning back to Subaru,

Ram: "I'll leave Emilia-sama to you. I will visit again in the morning to wait on her."

Subaru: “Y—yeah... Alright. Um, what did you mean just n...”

Ram: “...Well, who knows.”

Giving the most “I’m not going to answer” kind of answer as her reply, Ram left the room. As much as he wanted to call out to her, Subaru couldn’t think of what to say and only watched her as she left.

She closed the door behind her, leaving Subaru and Emilia alone in the room.

As Emilia was still asleep in her bed, all that was left for Subaru to do was watch over her in her slumber. It’s been some ten hours since Subaru held the disoriented, wailing Emilia until she practically slipped out of consciousness— The only relief was that Emilia’s expression seemed untroubled by nightmares as she slept.

If her past hounded her even into her dreams, then her heart would truly lose its final refuge.

The moment she wakes, she would once again be faced with the fact that her bond with Puck had been cut. Just how much time would she need before she could come to terms with that?

Subaru didn’t know how much his presence could help to alleviate that pain. And though, without a doubt, he wanted to be her strength— just how much would he amount to?

Emilia: “...Ru.”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

Submerged in that sea of thought, suddenly, Subaru’s consciousness picked up a faint call. Looking over, he saw Emilia’s head softly tilting with her open amethyst eyes gazing at him— She was awake.

Subaru: “You are, up... Emilia, are you alright?”

Emilia: “—Subaru.”

Subaru: “Yeah, it’s me. How are you feeling? You’ve been asleep for... Hold on, I’ll bring some water.”

Emilia: “It’s fine.”

Subaru stood up, intending to rush outside, but Emilia’s call stopped him.

Startled by the surprising forcefulness of her words, Subaru unwittingly sat back into his chair.

Subaru: "...Emilia?"

Emilia: "It's fine. I'm okay... Stay here."

Subaru lowered his voice, and Emilia gave her firm reply.

The events over the past few days had led Subaru to believe that Emilia would be light-headed and fragile in the mornings. After waking, her mind would usually need some time to recover, especially after such a prolonged slumber— yet Emilia's amethyst eyes did not give the slightest indication of that fatigue.

Subaru: "Do you... know what happened?"

Emilia: "...Mm. I slept for the whole day today. Even though everybody has been waiting for me, what am I doing... I'm sorry."

Subaru: "That's...! No one is going to fault you for that. What I meant was..."

Facing the apologizing Emilia, Subaru was at a loss as to whether to bring up Puck. It should've been the first topic to come to mind as she recovered her bearings after waking. But instead of that, her only concern was for everyone else's sake. Unless, could it be that the shock was so great that she forgot that her Contract with Puck was broken—

Emilia: "Don't worry, Subaru."

Subaru: "Uh, eh...?"

Emilia: "I haven't... forgotten that Puck is gone. I remember. I'm not going to forget that and run away."

Subaru: "You, won't...?"

Emilia: "Mm..."

Emilia gave a small nod, and Subaru realized that Emilia hadn't forgotten that fact. But, in that case, why was Emilia's expression so calm right now?

For Subaru, who had seen Emilia's state immediately after she learned that she had lost Puck, seeing her calmness now felt almost surreal. But, while Subaru was having trouble accepting that it was as simple as it seemed,

Emilia: "I'm sorry, Subaru. I showed you so many unsightly sides of myself... You must be reeaally worried."

Subaru: "No, you can worry me as much as you want. I don't mind. I don't, but... right now, you are the one t..."

Emilia: "—There were lots. Of things I thought about. They happened... in the dream."

Emilia quietly interrupted Subaru's tangled words. In front of her downcast eyes, Subaru inadvertently swallowed his breath without looking away. He saw her long eyelashes quiver as she looked back at him once more,

Emilia: "I'll definitely be fine in the morning... I want to believe that, so... Subaru, please."

Subaru: "...Ah, mhm."

Emilia: "Hold my hand. Can you please stay here until the morning? If you do, then I'll definitely..."

Emilia's white fingertips timidly reached out from under the sheets. Seeing that offered hand, Subaru immediately gripped it in his own, wrapping her delicate, silken fingers firmly in his palms,

Subaru: "If that's all you need, then it's no problem at all. But, Emilia..."

Emilia: "I'm sorry, Subaru. I know there must be lots of things you want to say and ask about. But... please, wait for morning. Because then, I can do my best."

Subaru: "——"

Emilia: "So please, just stay like this until it's morning— Subaru."

Faced with Emilia's near-pleading voice, Subaru had nothing more to say. He merely brought his chair closer to the bed and placed her enveloped hand beside her pillow. Having done so, he nodded to Emilia, who was watching him with her wavering eyes,

Subaru: “Understood. I will, Emilia.”

Emilia: “Mm... Thank you.”

With that short exchange, Emilia’s eyes closed once more. Unlike her swooning loss of consciousness that morning, this time, she was falling into restful, self-willed sleep. When she wakes from it again, just what would he say to her then?

By her own strength, Emilia had conquered the worst of what Subaru had envisioned. Thoroughly relieved by this fact, Subaru watched over Emilia’s sleeping visage.

Emilia: “...I trust you.”

Suddenly hearing Emilia’s half-asleep mutter, Subaru let slip a small sigh.

—The situation will start moving again come morning.

That fateful morning was only hours away. And—

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Ram: “Did anything come of the conversation with Barusu?”

Roswaal: “A painful tie... would be an apt description. It seems both him and I had our gains and compromises. Though, I had planned to avoid interfering in the first place.”

In the dark room, the master and servant conversed at a distance closer than necessary. Holding Ram close at his bedside with her head resting on his chest, Roswaal reminisced on the conversation earlier.

The fact is, it would be no easy task to sway Subaru once he had hardened his resolve. Although it was unclear what Subaru’s future would hold, Roswaal could clearly sense the iron will at its core.

Otto’s presence at his side also caused no small problems for Roswaal. By objectively grasping the situation and effectively reining in Subaru when he did, Otto perfectly fulfilled his role as a force of balance by keeping both Subaru and Roswaal from going too far. Had Otto not been present, Roswaal could very well have twisted Subaru's thinking through persuasion alone---

Roswaal: "He looked like a spectator who'd never take the stage... but he was surpriiisingly cunning and caaaapable. Subaru-kun has found himself a wonderful friend."

Ram: "...If he's getting in the way, would you like me to do something about it?"

Roswaal: "No need. If I was going to make that decision, I should've made it during that conversation. Once I missed that chance, I've lost my excuse anyway. More importantly... About my request?"

Closing a single eye, Roswaal looked down at Ram through his yellow pupil. In her master's arm and embrace, Ram shook her head, looking up from his chest,

Ram: "Without complications. I've delivered it as you wished, Roswaal-sama."

Roswaal: "I see. I'd hoped that the timing would align... What will happen now, I wonder."

Hearing Ram's affirmation, Roswaal gave a satisfied nod and patted the girl's head with his palm while Ram accepted it with an expression of intoxication and entrancement. For an instant, Roswaal's gaze towards the adoring girl in his arms was almost one of pity.

Roswaal: "Don't think badly of me, Subaru-kun. I did promise not to interfere directly. I did, but... I should at least be allowed to cause some mischief from the comfort of my bed liiiiiiike this?"

Ram: "----"

Roswaal: "Now just what will happen..."

An elated smile crept onto Roswaal's lips.

Roswaal: "When he learns that that virtue-loving girl had heard that insidious conversation and all its underhanded plotting... just what will Subaru-kun's face looooooooooooooooook like?"

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—The room was dark.

With all the lights extinguished, the room had fallen into darkness and would remain abundant in the tracks of dreams and night until the arrival of dawn beyond the window.

The closed door separated this room from the rest of the world, preserving this silent space within. There, amid the darkness, stood a bed in the center of the room, and on it, lay a girl with closed eyes.

When the silence devoid of even the sleeper's breathing— was broken by a sound.

???: "...Liar."

A weak and hazy whisper. An all too minuscule complaint from the lips of the girl on the bed.

???: "Subaru, you liar."

Again, the murmur repeated.

Clenching her empty hand, left all alone in the room, Emilia denounced the lies of the boy who wasn't there.

—The arrival of the fateful morning was only a few hours away.

Arc 4 Chapter 98 - A Bed Lost of Warmth

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 4 “Lies, Liars, and Con Artists”, Part 5 (loosely adapted)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken – Part 1, Part 2

—Whenever she closed her eyes, the memories would come back vivid, even now.

White. A world of white.

Waking, exhaling puffs of white, young Emilia found herself within a snowscape.

“Why”, asked her heart. But no answer came.

There was no memory before this, and her consciousness was hazy.

Getting out of bed, she ran to see the scene outside the window. Her familiar village amid the lush green forests was now completely covered in the freezing, world-ending white.

Since it was the first time Emilia had ever seen snow, she didn’t even recognize that this was the phenomenon called snow. But the vivid instincts of cold and fear nevertheless seared the image into her young memory.

Still without knowing what was happening, Emilia tensed her cheeks and tightened her throat as she broke into a run. The moment she dashed out of the old house built within the great, hollow tree, her body was cut through by the frigid wind as piercing cold stabbed her soles like knives in her baptism by ice.

The snow immediately grabbed her foot as she tumbled face-first into the ground. A freezing embrace of white, powdery, crystallized snow. The very first contact with those icy flakes instilled horror into the young Emilia. They were so astoundingly beautiful, yet so horrifyingly cold.

Her simple garments were no better than a thin cloth around her body against the frigid chill and her body began trembling to the core from both cold and terror. The snow pillaged her body's warmth as the white crystals tore away at her heart. But Emilia, groaning as she swiped away the snow, began running once more.

Falling snowflakes danced endlessly from the sky. Looking up as she panted, flakes of snow stuck to the back of her throat. She coughed it away as she ran, tears trailing down the sides of her cheeks.

She didn't know why she was crying.

She was scared. She was afraid. Why was she here alone? Where did everyone else go? Everyone who was kind to her, who smiled at her, and who would offer her their hand, where did they all go?

She tried to remember their faces, but something clogged up her thoughts. The faces of everyone in her mind— Their faces, their smiles, were painted over by black shadows as if depriving them of their very existence in her brain.

Emilia: “———Hk.”

Shaking her head frantically, tears poured down her face as she ran.

She mustn't think. If she thinks about them, those black shadows will consume them. Everyone precious to her will disappear from her mind.

But if she doesn't think about them, she will be all alone. In a cold, impenetrable world of white, alone— This was a terror the young Emilia could not bear. Powerless and ignorant, the only thing young Emilia could do in the world-ending white was struggle.

But as if mocking her futile struggles, the falling snow wrapped around her until her tiny body sank into its inevitable, pure-white abyss.

—There's no one here. There's no one in sight. Now, she couldn't even  everyone anymore.

Emilia: “—No!!”

Trapped in this white world, her limbs growing numb and unmoving, Emilia fell to the ground crying like a newborn. Her knees sank into the tender snow, and though it should have been cold, she could not feel the cold at all. Her skin so often called “white as snow” now burned pure red in the cold of true snow.

Just like that, running from everything, Emilia hugged her head as she sank into the snow.

Falling snow mercilessly piled upon the little girl as Emilia’s small body disappeared into the white—

???: “—Emilia!!”

As she closed her eyes, falling into wakeless sleep, a scream tearing through the silence woke her.

Forcing open her long-lashed eyelids, Emilia sprang up. And instantly, her lightweight body was pulled out of the snow and into an embrace.

Emilia: “———Ah.”

???: “You are okay, Emilia. It’s okay, everything’s okay. Thank goodness... I’ve found you...”

She wanted to speak, but her throat, frozen by the absolute cold, only managed a groan. However, understanding Emilia’s condition, the person only held the young Emilia in their embrace, their voice trembling with joy at her safety.

Emilia, her nose red and sniffing, rubbed her face against the person’s short silver hair, trying to communicate her emotion through her entire body. Conveying through action that, just like the boundless love directed towards her, she felt exactly the same in return.

This happiness again, of being cradled in their arms, and to speak there with them.

In the white, despairing snow that made little Emilia wonder if everything was over, that warmth certainly existed here and now.

Still hugging Emilia, shivering from both joy and cold, the woman with short silver hair looked around her as her relieved expression tensed and she started to run. She drew her lips next to Emilia’s ear in her arms, exhaling breaths of white,

???: “Emilia, can you hear me? I know you are worried, and I know you don’t understand, but... Everything is alright. One way or another, I’ll make it alright. Even if we get separated here, I will never leave you alone...”

Emilia could not understand those resolute words, but just the thought of being separated from the person before her eyes filled her with dread. Her numb fingers grasped the woman’s collar, her eyes teared as she frantically shook her head.

For the young, ignorant Emilia, appealing to the other’s emotion was all she could think to do. For as long as she did this, Emilia had been loved and adored by all those around her. It had always been this way. So here at this junction, or from this moment forth—

Emilia: “———!”

???: “No, you must not do that, Emilia. Even if it was fine up until now, you mustn’t do this anymore. You must become a strong, smart, and brave girl. Unless you do, you won’t be able to accept yourself, and you’ll inevitably meet a tragic end. And that will make me... my brother, and everyone, very, very sad.”

Emilia: “———Guh.”

She desperately shook her head.

Nevertheless, the woman heartlessly disregarded her appeals. Telling her she mustn’t do this, she rebuked Emilia’s reliance on others.

Emilia couldn’t believe it. Of course she would find it painful.

Even when she was told she couldn’t, one way or another, she would always have gotten her way in the end. But why wasn’t it working this time?

Why must it start failing now, when she was facing the most painful, difficult, and frightening moment of her life? If there was a more correct way of doing this, how come no one ever told her about it? —She was starting to resent everyone.

Emilia: “———!”

???: “I’m sorry, Emilia. I’m so sorry. For never teaching you even a single important thing, for hiding everything from you... For letting you remain an adorable little princess, please forgive me... Forgive us...”

—I don’t want to forgive. Don’t want to forgive. Don’t want to forgive. Don’t want to forgive. Don’t want to forgive. Don’t want to forgive. Don’t want to forgive. Don’t want to forgive.

???: “Everyone around you who cherished your smile, and the gentle lies they told... Please don’t hate them...”

—Hate them. I hate them. I hate them. I hate them. I hate them. I hate them. I hate them. I hate them. I hate them.

Emilia: “———”

She hated lies. She detested lies. Lies only lead to sadness. Lies were the reason everything turned upside down. Lies were what left Emilia alone. And so, she detested lies. Because she hated lies. Because she hated liars. Everyone is just a stupid .

???: “Our beloved Emilia... Someday, you’ll...”

Emilia: “———!”

Emilia let out a wordless scream. She didn’t want to hear any more. No matter what she hears, it wouldn’t change a thing. The howling gale and Emilia’s shriek drowned out the woman’s final words from this world.

The silver-haired woman looked sadly at Emilia’s rejection and her violent struggle in her arms, but casting all emotions aside, she faced forward once more—

???: “—Ah.”

—That was when the true end arrived.

The woman running with Emilia in her arms caught sight of the presence before her and stopped. Prompted by that faint jolt, Emilia looked up, and at the top of her vision she saw the face of the woman holding her, looking more tense than Emilia had ever seen.

In her expression was surprise and sorrow, rage and grief, disgust and awe— and even a tinge of relief.

Battering at Emilia's cheeks, the cold, white gale intensified. In a blizzard so strong that even opening her eyes was difficult, overwhelmed by terror, Emilia held her near-frozen ears and screamed.

And—

And—

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The morning of the fifth day at the Sanctuary— the vital day that would determine whether Natsuki Subaru will break through this loop, opened with the worst possible news.

Ram: “Barusu— Where did Emilia-sama go?”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

After washing his face at the pond and wiping down his body with a wet cloth, only to see Ram unabashedly appear amidst the throng of half-naked men, Subaru answered her question with a stupid groan.

It was slightly after sunrise, around what would have been eight o'clock in his original world. Waking up one after another, the men among the residents and refugees gathered around the pond to wash away their sweat from the night.

And then, brazenly barging into the men's washing area, the first thing out of Ram's mouth was the question concerning Emilia's whereabouts. Seeing a woman show up like it was a matter of course, some of the men hurriedly scuttled away in shame, but Subaru had no time to tease them for it.

After all, he couldn't understand what she meant at all.

Subaru: "Emilia... What are you talking about?"

Ram: "Just what it sounds like. When I went to Emilia-sama's room to wait on her, there was no one there. I thought she might be with you, Barusu..."

Subaru: "No one's there... How's that possible? I mean, I made sure to say good morning to her when she woke up before I left... and I came here after that."

Unable to hide his shock at what Ram had just told him, Subaru thought back to the events of that morning.

He had held her hand through the night just as she had asked, and when Emilia woke in the morning and saw him watching over her at her bedside, she gave him a quiet smile. At the time, Subaru thought it was just another uncharacteristically good awakening without her usual drowsiness. Emilia looked down to find her hand still enveloped in his, and softly confirmed her intention to continue their conversation from last night.

Emilia: "I'd like to talk... as soon as everything's sorted out in my head. After Ram helps me get dressed, I'm sure I'll be ready to talk about it."

And with this, she drove Subaru out of her room.

As impatient as Subaru was, considering Emilia's feelings, it would've been cruel to hurry her. More importantly, Emilia seemed calm. Pushing her further would only have had the opposite effect. At least, that was what Subaru had judged, but,

Subaru: "With that, I left, thinking you'd take care of the rest..."

Ram: "So you left the building before I arrived... That's what happened. I see— You screwed up, Barusu."

Subaru: "——"

Subaru had no rebuttal against Ram's icy verdict. The fact is, he did mess up by letting down his guard without waiting for Ram to take over. But he never thought Emilia, of all people, would do something like this.

Subaru: "Maybe... she had to use the bathroom, or...?"

Ram: “Do you think I would be careless enough to come here without checking the perimeters first?”

Subaru: “That’s, not what I was... But, what else could it be...?”

Ram: “You really don’t understand?”

Ram relentlessly pursued as Subaru’s voice choked up. Her gaze was cold as usual, but, for just an instant, that coldness seemed to have intensified. The listlessness in her eyes was the same as when she cast him that glance last night. Seeing the disappointment and dejection in her eyes, Subaru lowered his gaze.

Subaru: “—You are saying... Emilia ran away?”

Ram: “What else could it be? Maybe the forces against the liberation of the Sanctuary had been waiting for precisely this opportunity where neither of us is at Emilia-sama’s side and finally got their chance this morning to make their move... But is that what you’d rather believe?”

Subaru: “—It’s... not impossible.”

Ram: “If you actually want to cling to that, then you are more hopeless than I thought. Either way, that does not change the fact that Emilia-sama is missing. Despite the fact that she has no way of leaving the Sanctuary, this is bad.”

Though her attitude was harsh, Ram still took care to lower her voice so that no one would overhear them. She too recognized the need to keep Emilia’s disappearance under wraps, lest it shine badly on Roswaal’s reputation. As such, she must’ve judged this to be a matter to be handled discreetly.

Subaru: “Emilia...”

Looking up, Subaru muttered that girl’s name under his breath.

As Ram pointed out, even if Emilia wanted to abandon everything and run away, there was no way she could leave the Sanctuary’s barrier, being a half-elf. Emilia was still trapped in the Sanctuary, and no matter how she tries to run, she could not get away. She wasn’t so foolish as to fail in recognizing that. But if she was feeling so cornered that she tried to flee anyway, then...

Subaru: “It’s all me and Puck’s fault...”

It was Puck's fault for failing to imagine the extent of the shock Emilia would feel upon losing her bond with him. And it was Subaru's fault for underestimating Emilia's wounds and mistaking her feigned calmness to be genuine.

If Emilia really chose to escape, then it would only be the consequence of their compounded failures.

Ram: "Assuming Emilia-sama ran away and is hiding somewhere... Barusu, any ideas?"

Subaru: "Hold on. Don't just decide that she's run off. I mean, there's nowhere she can go in the Sanctuary without someone seeing her. And there aren't many places Emilia could've wandered to."

Subaru appealed, flapping his hand to stave off Ram's conclusion. Seeing this, Ram expelled a sigh and slightly nodded.

Ram: "I admit that may have been hasty of me, but what do you suggest? The men obviously didn't see anything. Then we'll have to put our hopes on the off-chance that one of the women in the cathedral spotted her?"

Subaru: "The Arlam villagers will say something if they saw Emilia wandering around by herself. Or worse, one of the residents of the Sanctuary might've seen her... We should try them first before jumping to any conclusions."

Even while hurriedly brainstorming ideas, Subaru more or less understood that he was only delaying that conclusion. And though Ram was listening to his proposals, she was most likely thinking the same thing. Their only point of agreement was that it'd be bad if the news got around that Emilia intentionally went into hiding.

But whether they were concerned because of Emilia or because of Roswaal was another story.

Ram: "If either of us can find her soon, we might just hang on by the skin of our necks. But it's best to keep the worst possibility in mind. You do understand, Barusu?"

Subaru: "...Really rather not think about it, though."

Ram's reminder was also a warning for him not to avert his eyes from the worst-case scenario. If they fail to find Emilia before the Trial, and her disappearance becomes common knowledge throughout the Sanctuary— there would be no recovering from this.

And so, they must do everything in their power before that happens.

Subaru: "If we ask around and still can't find her..."

Ram: "Then we'll have to exhaust all efforts to search through the forest."

Subaru: "...That isn't something that is possible to do in one or two days."

Lifting his head, Subaru looked to the forests surrounding the Sanctuary and furrowed his brows. Although blocked off by the barrier, the Sanctuary was still more than wide enough to hide one single person. If Emilia was hiding in the forest, she wouldn't even necessarily stay in one place.

Today, and tomorrow. There were at most forty-eight hours remaining before the bet and Contract's deadline. Within that time frame, he would have to find Emilia, make her challenge the Trials, and have her beat them.

—But is that even possible?

Could he, of all people, after pushing Emilia to her limits without noticing the toll it was taking on her heart, really give her that strength to move forward?

Subaru: "You seriously overestimated me, Puck..."

Ram: "...This would have something to do with the loss of her Contract with the Great Spirit-sama, I suppose?"

Subaru: "Losing the primary support in her heart couldn't be totally unrelated to it. But... neither of us thought she'd snap like this."

There must have been something that pushed her over the limit.

Thinking back on Emilia's calmness last night and this morning, that was the only way he could explain it.

Subaru: “———”

“No way”, he thinks.

He had surely acted after confirming it properly.

But, just hypothetically, supposing that Emilia had noticed——

???: “——Natsuki-san!”

While brooding, the sharp call made Subaru’s shoulders jump in surprise.

Looking over to the village center—— he saw a grey-haired youth, frantically running over with great waves of his arm.

It was Otto, who hadn’t joined them in the morning bath but stayed behind with the villagers in the cathedral to help with the breakfast preparations. He reached Subaru, pale-faced and panting with his hands on his knees,

Otto: “Th—there are several things I need to report. Well, quite a lot more if I go into the details, but... for now, two major things. There’s good news and bad news.”

Subaru: “That sounds important, but I have a question first. Did Emilia show up at the cathedral by any chance? Or was anyone talking about her?”

Otto: “——? No, I haven’t seen her this morning. I didn’t hear anything at the cathedral, either.”

Otto frowned at the apparently unrelated question that couldn’t wait until after the news, while, hearing his obliging answer, both Subaru and Ram’s faces darkened. Otto seemed to have sensed their unease, but, judging that his report was more important,

Otto: “So, good news and bad news... which one would you rather hear first?”

Subaru: “Kinda hate having them bundled like that... Okay, good news I guess?”

When he hears bad news, he'd need time to think of countermeasures. With Emilia's disappearance, the situation was already the worst it could possibly get. He'd rather not get plunged into head-clutching despair by having more bad news piled on top of that.

Receiving Subaru's decision, Otto crossed his arms with a nod,

Otto: "Good news, then. I've finished talking with the refugees as we discussed. They've made their preparations and are ready to leave today at any time you want. I've asked them to stay alert so they can go as soon as you give the order."

Subaru: "—I see. Sorry. I really should've been the one to talk to them and ask this of them."

Otto: "Luckily, they've warmed up to me over the last few days. Considering what we'll be doing together, it's a good thing I had that opportunity. Anyway, they are ready without any problems."

Otto's voice was confident, but, despite his impressive achievement, his face was far from bright. Chances were, that good news was being overshadowed by whatever problem had arisen.

Yielding to Otto's silent gaze, Subaru prompted for the other report—

Subaru: "So, what's the bad news?"

Otto: "Just now, Garfiel came storming into the cathedral in a rage, looking for you, Natsuki-san."

Subaru: "Looking for me...? Why? I don't think I pissed him off that much this time..."

Persuading Garfiel was supposed to have been the final confrontation of this loop. Subaru had taken extra care in his interactions with Garfiel, and even after sealing his bet with Roswaal, Subaru had avoided talking to Garfiel as best as he could.

So far it had paid off, and Subaru managed to reach the critical day without facing off against Garfiel, but—

Subaru: "Ideally, I would've liked to have talked with Ryuzu Theta before dealing with him..."

Otto: "That's just the thing."

As Subaru muttered about the sequence he had hoped for, Otto raised a single finger.

Subaru's eyes widened at this gesture, not knowing what Otto was referring to. But, seeing the question mark pop up over Subaru's head, Otto's face darkened as he said,

Otto: "That Ryuzu-san apparently went missing this morning. Garfiel's been searching all over the village, looking desperate. That's why he's looking for you, Natsuki-san."

Arc 4 Chapter 99 - Alone in a Confined Space

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 4 “Lies, Liars, and Con Artists”, Part 5 (loosely adapted), and in Volume 14, Chapter 1 “—Journey of Memories”, Parts 2-3

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3, Part 4

—Two vital characters have simultaneously gone missing.

Naturally, facing a situation that had never come up in these loops, Subaru’s insides were burning with panic. Sprinting through the Sanctuary, Subaru headed for Ryuzu’s residence—the small cabin on the outskirts of the village, in which she had been living in after lending her home to Emilia.

Garfiel: “...Look who decided t’come.”

When Subaru belted open the door and stormed inside, he found Garfiel standing there imposingly, waiting for him. With arms crossed, nose furrowed, and irritation in plain view, he glared at Subaru,

Garfiel: “Took y’long enough. How long were y’plannin’ t’keep my amazin’ self waitin’?”

Subaru: “Well I got here as fast as I could... But never mind that, what’s this about Ryuzu-san being missing?”

Garfiel: “Can’t y’see for yerself?”

Garfiel jerked his chin, indicating the cramped room. Looking over the space, were it wide enough to be called that, Ryuzu’s temporary lodging was a simple shack with no furniture other than a bed. And if Ryuzu is not present upon that bed, then without any doubt she is absent from this house.

Composing his breathing, Subaru roughly wiped the sweat off his forehead with a sleeve.

Subaru: “It’s obvious she’s not here, but... isn’t calling that missing a bit too much? Ryuzu-san may not look like it, but she’s a proper adult already. Maybe she’s just out for a walk or something, there’s no need to...”

Garfiel: “Shut up! Th’fuck d’you know!? Granny ain’t never missed showin’ up at breakfast fer no fuckin’ reason. My amazin’ self’s never seen her oversleep or stay sick in bed either, y’sayin’ she’s takin’ a walk? Y’want me t’eat ya!?”

Subaru: “That was a rough way of putting it, but your life with Ryuzu-san sounds pretty cozy, huh...”

Circumstances are circumstances, but the basis for the idea that Ryuzu has gone missing is incredibly weak. Pointing this out, Subaru slumped, but Garfiel didn’t seem to share in Subaru’s sentiment. He walked up to Subaru, who finally straightened his back, and bared his fangs,

Garfiel: “It never happened before, yet it’s happenin’ this mornin’. If anythin’s happenin’ now that ain’t happened here before, it’s ‘cause you people are involved, even an idiot knows that— Y’bastard did somethin’ with Granny, didn’t ya?”

Though Garfiel seemed to have an incredible knack for making baseless accusations, this time, his suspicion hit right on the mark. Ryuzu’s, or currently Ryuzu Theta’s, disappearance was almost certainly because of Subaru. It was hard to imagine that someone would have kidnapped her and Emilia simultaneously.

She left willingly without saying anything to Garfiel. Just like Emilia, she should be obstructed by the Sanctuary’s barrier, so she couldn’t have fled outside. In other words, it was her intention to go into hiding— And the time-limit for finding her was even more pressing than Emilia’s.

Subaru: “If I don’t find Theta-san by the end of today...”

The rotation schedule will switch her into tomorrow’s Ryuzu— Alpha, Beta, or Sigma will take her place. If that happens, he will not have another chance to speak with Theta within the two-day limit, and his perfect run of the Sanctuary route will be thwarted.

Garfiel: “Thee... ter?”

Hearing Subaru call Ryuzu this, a question mark floated onto Garfiel’s face.

Subaru was about to ask for Garfiel's help in finding Theta, but he gave up on that idea the moment he saw Garfiel's expression. The question surging up inside Subaru prevented him from saying a word.

Subaru: "-----"

It was a simple question, but one he had never confirmed.

—Does Garfiel actually know about the four representative Ryuzu personalities?

Garfiel certainly knew about the Ryuzu Meyer inside the crystal in the abandoned Experimental Grounds deep within the forest. He had challenged the Trial, met Echidna, and qualified as an Apostle of Greed. Naturally, holding the command right over the replicants, Garfiel was aware of the existence of the identical-looking Ryuzu clones.

But, what about the rest? Does Garfiel know about the four Ryuzu personalities, Alpha, Beta, Sigma and Theta?

Garfiel: "Th'hell's that? Y'stopped talkin' all of a sudden. If y'got some kinda clue, fuckin' spit it out now. «Straight 'n honest Lib-Lib's happy even when he's swindled», they say."

Subaru: "Sounds like Lib-Lib's going to be swindled forever, like that..."

Imagining the story of some random happy prince, Subaru wasn't sure how best to answer Garfiel.

His confrontation with Garfiel was supposed to be the final barricade to completing the Sanctuary route. Honestly, Subaru wasn't nearly prepared enough to face him without having heard what Theta has to say. And yet, whatever answer he gives here could inadvertently influence the outcome.

—Just how should he respond? After much deliberation, Subaru,

Subaru: "Say, Garfiel. Couldn't you just summon Ryuzu-san if you wanted to?"

Garfiel: "-----Guh!!"

Immediately, Subaru saw Garfiel's expression violently shift. Garfiel's eyes wavered in discomposure as he lunged forward, grabbing Subaru by the collar. At a distance so close that their foreheads almost touched, Garfiel's golden pupils seethed with rage—a rage so intense that it could burn its target to nothing with that gaze alone.

Garfiel: “Th’fuck y’talking about... My amazin’ self ain’t got a shred of fuckin Milfram’s clue th’fuck yer talkin about, oy!”

Subaru: “I—I don’t know what a Milfram is, but... that’s not exactly the reaction of someone who doesn’t have the shred of a clue, is it... Let go, dumbass.”

Perhaps flipping out and grabbing Subaru was just his way of calming himself. Garfiel’s words as he tried to cover it up was inherent nonsense.

Hit right on the mark by Subaru’s observation, Garfiel’s grip loosened as Subaru used the opportunity to escape. Smoothing out his crumpled clothing, Subaru took a step back to put some distance between them,

Subaru: “I meant exactly what I said. I know you are not too stupid to understand. You have a way to do it. You have the quickest, simplest solution on hand. Why aren’t you using it?”

Garfiel: “Y’say it like it’s fuckin’ easy... Tch.”

Garfiel’s cheeks twisted in disgust as he glared at Subaru with utmost hatred.

But despite the intensity of the rage and hostility harbored in those eyes, Subaru could clearly discern a shadow of grief mixed within it. Noticing that hint of sorrow, Subaru’s expression shifted, but Garfiel, sensing that the depths of his emotion had been seen through, clicked his tongue and looked away.

Garfiel: “That’s why my amazin’ self can’t let down my guard with a qualified bastard standin’ here. No idea what that fuckin’ Witch filled yer head with. Fuck off, fucking fuck off.”

Subaru: “———”

Garfiel: “So y’know about Granny’s Experimental Grounds? Then y’must know ‘bout Granny’s original in th’rock as well... It ain’t something y’can just use.”

Clutching his chest with his right hand, it was as if Garfiel was trying to hide it from Subaru's view. Even though it probably wasn't physically there, Subaru figured he must be indicating the invisible command right he possessed.

And with his arm still holding his chest,

Garfiel: "My amazin' self ain't anythin' like you 'n Roswaal. I ain't gonna use somethin' just because I can... I ain't never gonna think like that."

Subaru: "...Garfiel."

Garfiel: "Just me alone is enough. Long as I got myself, I don't need anythin' else. I ain't fuckin' usin' this power unless it's the last of the last of the last resort— She... she's my nanna."

Those last words fell to a whisper.

Subaru had heard him call her "nanna" once before. But this time, it was far tender than he had ever heard him speak. Without any intention behind it, what slipped out must have been Garfiel's true thoughts.

Garfiel: "—Tch."

Noticing his own slip-up, Garfiel kicked at the floor in frustration. The exorbitant force caused the whole shack to lurch, sending down specks of dust tickling Subaru's head as he waited for Garfiel's next move.

Realizing that he was the only one getting worked up, Garfiel's expression twisted in even further discomfort as he shoved Subaru out of the way.

Garfiel: "Move. My amazin' self ain't talkin' with you anymore. If you ain't tellin' me where Granny is, my amazin' self'll just look for her. When I do, I ain't letting y'touch her ever again."

Subaru: "Why does that... Why does that kinda sound like it's all my fault?"

Garfiel: "Before you... Before y'fuckers came, everythin' was peaceful 'n nothin' ever happened here. My amazin' self'm bringin' us back to that time. My amazin' self doesn't need anythin' whether it's in here or out there... I don't need nothin'."

Leaving those faltering words behind, Garfiel marched out of the small shack. Bending his knees as soon as he was out of the door, he bounced using the bestial strength of his legs—and although his path was straight, he disappeared from view in only a matter of seconds.

Batting away the dust that Garfiel's departure had kicked up, Subaru decided to check over the room once more before leaving. Regardless of Garfiel's hasty conclusions, would Ryuzu really disappear without leaving a trace? Or at least, she might have left some hints about where she was going—

Subaru: "But then again, if left any hints behind, the guy who's known her for ages would've noticed it. My nose isn't as sharp as his and my eyes aren't any better..."

After five minutes of searching and finding nothing, Subaru sighed with that self-deprecating lament. Heading out of the cabin, he gazed in the direction of the village, in thought.

Subaru: "———"

Emilia and Ryuzu Theta, those two had almost simultaneously disappeared. Chances were, both of them left their buildings of their own accord and were trying to hide from Subaru and everyone else. There was even a possibility that they were working together.

Subaru: "I don't remember Emilia and Ryuzu-san being close, but..."

Ever since arriving in the Sanctuary, Emilia's mind had been occupied by the Trials and the Royal Selection. Subaru couldn't recall a single instance where she casually interacted with anyone here. At most, she had some conversations with Subaru, Ram, Otto, but she seldom spoke with Ryuzu or Garfiel.

Thinking about it now, her lack of interaction with others might've been the reason she was so fixated on her lonely sense of duty, and it was Subaru's fault for not paying enough attention to her. If Subaru had done more to smooth things out, Emilia would not have had so many emotions pent up inside, and perhaps they would have found a clearer solution to their problems.

Subaru: "But it's a bit late for that, isn't it...?"

This wasn't the time to be thinking about the underlying causes of Emilia's disappearance. More importantly, delving into it would only push Subaru further into blaming himself. There was no time to wallow in self-loathing now.

Subaru: "It's a good thing Garfiel doesn't know that Emilia's also missing... Not that he'd prioritize looking for her before looking for Ryuzu-san, but there's no knowing what he'd say if given the pretext."

Even this small relief would be pointless if he doesn't find Emilia soon. But finding Ryuzu Theta was not a matter he could put off, either. And if he doesn't find Theta before Garfiel does, it wouldn't be easy getting past the overprotective Garfiel afterwards.

In other words, what Subaru needed to do could be summed up as follows,

Subaru: "Secure Emilia and Ryuzu Theta before Garfiel does, figure out Theta's reasons for opposing the Sanctuary's liberation, get Emilia back on her feet, have her challenge the Trials, and do all of that within half a day... Huh."

???: "...Natsuki-san, just how thorny does the path have to be before you are satisfied?"

As Subaru came to that rather bleak conclusion, Otto showed up by the door just in time to butt in.

Arriving quite a bit later than Subaru, who sprinted here, Otto looked around the shack's disheveled interior and furrowed his brows.

Otto: "Even if you are rummaging through a house, you could've been more elegant about it. Though, your conversation with Garfiel seems to have concluded safely."

Subaru: "Concluded safely, sure, but can't say I got anything out of it. Anyway, I've reaffirmed the situation and our next course of action is just as I mumbled."

Otto: "All I got from those mumbles was that new problems are now piled on top of the old ones and now it's all a jumbled mess, more or less."

Subaru: "...."

Unable to weasel around Otto's accurate impression, Subaru slumped his shoulders.

Nevertheless, the fact that Subaru was feeling more at ease than before was no doubt because Otto's presence meant he would no longer have to agonize over it alone.

Otto: "...I'll feel troubled if you keep giving me that blatantly-relieved look, you know."

Subaru: “—? What?”

Otto: “...Forget I said anything. You don’t seem to realize it, huh. No way you do. Aaaaagh but if you do and you are doing this to me on purpose, then I’m totally getting led by the nose here, aren’t I...?”

Watching Otto messing up his gray hair, Subaru tilted his head. But, without answering Subaru’s confused expression, Otto shouted,

Otto: “Anyway! There is no doubt that the already hopeless situation just got even worse. So what do we do? Now that the circumstances that made me want to run for it already managed to plummet even further, how are we getting out of this? I have a feeling that if we hurry now, we could still dump everything and make a run for it.”

Subaru: “After everything you’ve seen and heard, you still think we can drop everything and run away? Neither of us is the kind of people who can do something that irresponsible, right?”

Otto: “...But it looks like Emilia-sama has done exactly that.”

Looking away, Otto muttered with a sigh.

It was not done out of spite. Otto was simply venting the dissatisfaction pent up in his chest. Realizing this, Subaru did not blame him for it. Subaru only lightly shook his head,

Subaru: “Emilia isn’t the kind of girl who’d turn tail and run in the face of her problems...”

Otto: “But, how can you say that, Natsuki-san? I’ve been meaning to say this for a while now, but are you sure you are not too fixated on only Emilia-sama’s attractive side?”

Subaru: “...What’s that supposed to mean. Well, yeah, Emilia is so beautiful that my eyes could explode.”

Otto: “While I definitely agree with that, I’m sure you know that’s not what I meant.”

Seeing his lame joke easily swept aside, Subaru twisted his lips under Otto’s gaze.

As if finding it a bit too painful to watch, Otto raised a finger.

Otto: “Are you listening? I understand why you’d only want to see the good side of someone you have a crush on. I’m sure that kind of thing is very common. And so I don’t blame you for projecting your ideals on her.”

Subaru: “———”

Otto: “But Emilia-sama is not a perfect person. In fact, she has quite a few problems. And that includes the factors that are totally outside of her control. Her origin, her standing, and all the other issues that come with it.”

Listening to Otto’s fluent speech, Subaru figured Otto must’ve wanted to lecture him on this for quite some time now and had prepared those words beforehand. And indeed, his words were sound and left no room for rebuttal.

Otto: “Naturally, those external factors are unrelated to Emilia-sama’s inner purity. And her outward beauty only compounds to her charm. But, Natsuki-san, Emilia-sama is only a mortal... She’s just an ordinary girl. And just like ordinary girls, she has her share of worries, weaknesses, and unattractive aspects to her as well.”

Subaru: “No but, only Emilia...”

Otto: “That you blindly regard Emilia-sama as extraordinary like this is truly odd. Natsuki-san, since coming to the Sanctuary, you must have seen plenty of Emilia-sama’s shortcomings first-hand, right? Those shortcomings won’t be limited to this place. They will come up again and again in the future as well. Emilia-sama’s aspirations are too high above the reach of ordinary people, after all.”

That was Otto’s opinion of the height of Emilia’s aspirations—— the Throne.

A pinnacle which many others, just like Emilia, were also aspiring to reach.

Crusch Karsten, noble and sincere, of high-minded ideals and undeniable ability.

Priscilla Barielle, arrogant and insidious, and consequently unshakable in her will.

Anastasia Hoshin, greedy and calculating, devoting everything to realizing her dream, having reached her current station by her unmatched competitive spirit.

Felt, poor and weak in initial position, but nonetheless possessing ambition which would not permit her to stagnate, having exhibited capabilities disproportionate to her age.

Every other Royal Selection candidate was in possession of peerless determination and virtue.

Faced with these worthy opponents, was Emilia really fit to stand among them?

She was kind, kinder than anyone else. But was that really enough?

Otto: “Right now, Emilia-sama is still lacking in all sorts of things. She is not ready. And the way she is now, she’ll probably want to flinch and run away in the face of hardships. This would be one of those times she chose to flee. Why can’t you see it, Natsuki-san?”

Subaru: “...But that’s... I don’t... Emilia would...”

Never. But as much as Subaru wanted to continue, he couldn’t. He couldn’t find the words. The feeling was certainly there, his feelings about Emilia. But how could he form it into words here so Otto would understand?

Subaru: “———”

Otto: “...You are really stubborn, you know that?”

Subaru bit down on his lip and could only stare at Otto with resistance in his eyes. But, seeing that gaze, Otto looked away. Shrugging with an astounded shake of his head, he turned his eyes towards the village,

Otto: “We don’t have to reach a conclusion on this right now. Just talking about it won’t change the situation, anyway. We’ll still have to find Emilia-sama and Ryuzu-san.”

Subaru: “...Sorry. I know there are lots of things we should properly talk about.”

Otto: “I’ll overlook it since we are friends— So, what do we do now?”

Jerking his chin— indicating the Sanctuary, Otto left the next course of action up to Subaru. Should they run, or should they fight? And which one of the two missing people should they search for first? The fact that he’d leave those decisions to Subaru was just proof of how much Otto trusted him.

Though he had no intention of taking that trust lightly, Subaru couldn't help but smile to himself for the blessing he'd been given. And,

Subaru: "Garfiel doesn't know that Emilia's missing. And even if Garfiel does find Emilia, it's not too much of an issue— The worst case would be that Garfiel finds Ryuzu-san before we do. If we lose the chance to talk with Ryuzu-san, we'll be getting even further away from the perfect ending."

Otto: "...In other words?"

Subaru: "—We'll search for Ryuzu-san first. We find her before Garfiel, and hear what she has to say."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: "—Emilia. Everyone's about to have an important talk. So be a good girl and wait in your usual spot, okay?"

With this, young Emilia was shoved into the hollow of the great tree deep within the forest, the so-called Princess Room, which was one of the things in life she wasn't particularly happy about.

In the village in the forest where the elves lived in secret, Emilia grew up loved by everyone.

All the adults adored her and would indulge her little whims without the slightest complaint. While the fact that she rarely got to play with other children made her feel a little lonely, she had to follow her instructions. Rules like that must be firmly kept— that was what her foster mother, Fortuna, had told her.

Fortuna was the one who took care of Emilia in the elven village, a person who was like a mother to her. She had silver hair and amethyst eyes just like Emilia, but she'd cut her hair short since she found long hair too much of a hassle, and the sharpness of her eyes set them far apart from each other.

Emilia could no longer remember when she first started living with Fortuna. All she knew was that Fortuna wasn't her real mother but a blood-relative somewhere in the vicinity of an aunt.

Fortuna: "I'm your father's younger sister, you know. My brother... your dad and your mom are busy right now and can't be here with you... so they've asked me to look after you."

Illustration from Volume 14, coloring by DdukaE (source)

Fortuna's explanation came as a great shock to Emilia. But that said, the shock was not a negative one. Even though she kept insisting that she wasn't her real mother, as far as Emilia was concerned, Fortuna was undoubtedly her mother.

And, on top of having mommy Fortuna, she had a father and a real mother as well. Normally, people only had two parents, a mom and a dad, but Emilia had a dad and two moms. She thought it was something to be happy about.

Fortuna: "Your silver hair is from my brother. And the color of your eyes too, it really runs in the family... Your gentle face is from your mother, though. Everyone on our side has scary-looking eyes."

Emilia: "...But I like your eyes, mommy Fortuna?"

Fortuna's eyes were usually harsh and stern. And occasionally, when Emilia made her mad, the sharpness of her eyes would intensify, causing Emilia to shudder tremendously. But, aside from those times when she got angry, Fortuna was Emilia's ideal mother, and Emilia received her sharp eyes with emotions of love.

As a mother, Fortuna was strict but kind. Although the young Emilia sometimes thought the rigid discipline imposed by her to be a bit excessive, Emilia understood that it was all with her best interests in mind, even at her young age.

Her discipline was never accompanied by violence, and she never scolded Emilia for anything unreasonable. Even on the rare occasions she would make Emilia cry because of her reproaches, they would reconcile the same night and fall asleep in each other's arms.

Fortuna: "If there's one thing I reeaally regret, it's that I wasn't kinder to people. If I had realized that sooner, my brother wouldn't have waited till the end to rely on me."

A loneliness would rise on Fortuna's face whenever she said "Reeally". This left such a strong impression on Emilia's mind that she made a special effort to imitate it. Except she would use it not when she was sad, but when she was happy and laughing. Perhaps it was the shallow wish of a child to paint over the memories of her mother's loneliness and sadness by using it for something uplifting and joyous instead.

Emilia: "Mmuuu... so boring."

Back to where our story began, Emilia was shut up in the Princess Room alone.

She didn't like being called "Princess" very much, but since that was what everyone in the village called her, she had grown used to it by now.

Because she knew they weren't making fun of her but instead saying it with affection, she never requested that they stop. But the fact that they had stuck that moniker on the room she was being shut up in was one of young Emilia's few dissatisfactions in life.

Emilia: "What could everyone be doing..."

If Emilia was shut inside the Princess Room, it meant there must be visitors from outside the village. Quite a large group of outsiders would occasionally enter the forest to visit the hidden elven community. And while no one ever told Emilia this, she could always sense it on her skin.

Actually, this sixth sense of sorts was due to Emilia subconsciously interfering with the Micro Spirits in the forest which informed her of those people's presence, but Emilia didn't know this at the time.

Hugging her knees in the narrow room, Emilia usually passed her time flipping through the pages of the books she'd been given or playing with the shabby doll Fortuna had made for her.

Although she had been told that those were secret talks that only adults could understand, there seemed to be plenty of children present as well, which only added to Emilia's dissatisfaction. She mustn't tell lies or keep secrets, that was what mommy Fortuna had taught her. But wasn't it wrong for mommy Fortuna and the adults to lie and keep secrets from Emilia?

Every ten days or so, Emilia would be stuffed inside the Princess Room. Though Emilia wasn't happy about it, she wasn't as naughty a girl as to let it show on her face.

But by now, she had already lost count how many times she had been put in here, not to mention that she'd just had a fight with Fortuna the night before. Most of all, she forgot to bring the doll that Fortuna had made for her, having left it in her bedroom, which proved to be the decisive blow.

Emilia: "I wanna go outside..."

It was but a passing murmur that no one was supposed to hear.

But, while Emilia didn't say it to anyone she knew, those who knew her had heard it loud and clear.

Emilia: “—?”

Inside the hollow, in the room lit by the white glow of lagmite ores¹⁵⁵, there now mingled floating spots of pale-blue phosphorescence. She blinked as the sudden gushes of light captivated her attention. Dancing before her eyes, the lights kept the young girl's curiosity captive as they migrated to a corner of the Princess Room— where they disappeared as if sucked into the wall.

Emilia: “——”

Standing up, Emilia tottered to the spot where the lights had vanished. She was a little scared, but curiosity burned even hotter inside her chest. Standing before the wall that had sucked in the lights, Emilia reached out her hand as if to confirm the feel of the wood, and there, she found an opening just large enough for her little arm to fit through.

Just now, the pale-blue lights had escaped through that gap.

The front door of the Princess Room was bolted from the outside and could not be opened from within. It was designed so that Emilia couldn't escape even if she wanted to. Thinking about it now, this treatment was definitely a tad too excessive to be considered normal, but Emilia, who took it for granted at the time, never questioned it.

However, now that she had discovered the possibility of escaping the place that should've been impossible to escape, Emilia's heart wavered between her curiosity and her mother's instructions.

She wanted to know what everyone in the village was doing while she was gone.

Mommy Fortuna had taught her to strictly follow her instructions, and Emilia needed to stay here in the Princess Room until Fortuna came back for her.

But what if she tested out this escape route and, once she had a peek of what everyone was doing, sneaked back here?

¹⁵⁵ In case you don't remember, these are minerals that produce light. Subaru uses one on the very first episode to enter the Loot House after dark.

Besides, it was the adults who first broke the rule not to lie and keep secrets. If they broke one, and Emilia broke one as well, then wouldn't they just be even?

Emilia: "———"

The little girl thought with all her might and came up with that little justification.

Taking a closer look at the hole she had stuck her arm into, it was one of the gaps between the tree's tangled roots. If she put all her strength into it, she felt certain she could widen the gap, if only just a little.

Hinging on that feeling, young Emilia pushed away at the roots to secure a space large enough for her to pass through. Sweat dripped from her brows, and mud soiled her clothes. There was no way she could tell Fortuna "I didn't do anything" now, but even so, the gap between the roots continued to grow until, at last, she succeeded in crawling outside.

Emilia: "———Ah."

A strange sense of accomplishment rose in Emilia's chest as the outside breeze washed over her.

Even though she had just done something that would earn her a scolding if she were found out, she still felt the compelling urge to run up to Fortuna and brag "Ahem, I did it". Of course, Fortuna's scolding would be as vicious as flame, so Emilia quickly stopped herself before she could start running. Whew, crisis averted.

But then again, Emilia thought,

—Had I followed my idiotic logic back then, gone to get praise from Fortuna, gotten vehemently scolded, cried and wailed and regretted it, and forgotten all about that gap in the tree roots, everything would've been so much better.

Because had I done that, I would never have set the subsequent tragedy in motion.

———But what was that tragedy?

The question did not reach the young Emilia who had just escaped the Princess Room, now triumphantly dashing towards where everyone should be. The realization that she was doing something naughty soon forced Emilia to sneak from cover to cover, and, thanks to the help of the Micro Spirits, she got a vague sense of where everyone was.

Before long, Emilia found everyone gathered in the village square. While, alongside them, she saw a group of people in strange black garbs.

Emilia: “———”

Emilia hid herself behind a large tree before nimbly climbing up its branches. Sometimes, when little Emilia was feeling mischievous, she’d scamper from tree to tree like a little animal to make the adults jump around to catch her. The acrobatics she learned from those activities now allowed her to watch over the conversation unseen.

The population of the elven village numbered forty in all. And it seemed all the adults and children, aside from Emilia, were gathered there. The black robes were fewer in number, with only about twenty members.

A few of them were in the middle of the assembly, participating in the discussion, while the rest were unloading luggage. The black robes seem to have arrived on wagons, and as they transferred their cargo to the villagers, the villagers’ faces would brighten while bowing their heads.

???: “—We can’t thank you enough for the care you’ve always shown us.”

What are they doing? What are they talking about?

Wondering this, Emilia wanted to lean out to see, when she heard a voice as close as a whisper against her ear.

She jerked back in surprise but saw no one around who could have been the source of that voice. Nevertheless, that voice undoubtedly belonged to Fortuna. In fact, Fortuna was directly below Emilia—speaking with a black-robed figure who seemed to be the leader of the group.

Fortuna: “It really does help everyone that you’re procuring us this stuff we can’t get in the forest. We are glad for your help.”

Robed Man: “You are too kind. It vexes us greatly that this is the only way we could repay you. We are always laying burdens on you, Fortuna-sama.”

Fortuna: “We could say the same as well.”

Emilia could clearly make out the contents of their conversation and the wry smiles exchanged between them. Fortuna’s gestures below her left no doubt that they were the ones talking this very moment. But somehow, it was as if Emilia’s sense of hearing was amplified.

This was actually the handiwork of the Micro Spirits obeying Emilia’s will, but naturally, the young Emilia did not notice their diligence.

Standing in front of Fortuna was a man with bold features, garbed in a black robe. His muscular physique and stature made him stand out among the mostly slender elves. Because of that, it was almost unimaginable that, despite his martial appearance, he would bow so low while interacting with Fortuna.

Seeing such an imposing man showing such unreserved respect towards Fortuna filled the peeking Emilia with pride. To think, that the amazing person making this big man grovel was actually her mother.

Robed Man: “Now, I ask this every single time, but... how is the seal?”

Emilia was puffing up her chest in her somewhat misdirected pride, but that sentiment instantly dispersed the moment the man changed the subject.

Such was the heaviness of the complex emotions imbued within that man’s words.

Fortuna: “I suppose I can’t just laugh it off as you being a worrier. Rest assured, it’s as stable as ever. There isn’t even a million-to-one chance it could come undone— I’d never be able to face my brother and sister-in-law, otherwise.”

Robed Man: “It’s a terrible shame, about your older brother and his wife.”

Fortuna: “...My brother must certainly have been resolved for this. As for my sister-in-law, I’m not quite sure even now. But I do understand the weight of the responsibility entrusted to me. I don’t intend to abandon it or treat it half-heartedly. I’m sure you feel the same?”

Robed Man: “I... I have no choice in the matter. I’m afraid it’s not the same as the sense of duty and responsibility you bear, Fortuna-sama. Obsession, attachment... Perhaps something along those lines.”

The man gave a breathy laugh as Fortuna watched him with a pained expression.

All the while, the meaning of their little exchange completely eluded the present Emilia.

—“It’s a terrible shame, about your older brother and his wife”, what was that supposed to mean?

Fortuna’s brother was Emilia’s father. Then his wife would be the person he married. His bride. And Emilia’s mother. “It’s a terrible shame”, what could that possibly mean? And when Fortuna heard this, why didn’t she ask any questions?

Hugging her branch tight, Emilia stretched out her neck and perked up her ears so she could hear their conversation more clearly. Unaware of the Micro Spirits’ blessing and the fact that her gesture was completely pointless, Emilia desperately kept up that posture so as not to miss a single word.

Fortuna: “Motivations have nothing to do with the nobility of an action. What you are doing deserves to be praised by tens of thousands. It’s reeeaally unfortunate that it can’t become common knowledge.”

Robed Man: “Haaahaha. I appreciate the words of comfort. But it is onerous, nonetheless. If our true intentions were revealed to the world, I suspect society, currently stable as it is, would once again be plunged into chaos. I’m sure neither you nor I... and least of all, her, would want to see this.”

Fortuna: “...Hm, I suppose not.”

Fortuna agreed with a nod.

After that, the topic seemed to drift away from what Emilia wanted to hear, and their subsequent conversation consisted mainly of casual small talk. While Fortuna and the man conversed, the rest of the group had finished distributing the cargo. One of the adults called to Fortuna, and Fortuna nodded in reply before turning back to the robed man.

Fortuna: “Thanks to the Spirits’ protection, the changing seasons don’t have much of an impact on the forests... But still, these clothes and blankets are a great help. Thank you.”

Robed Man: “Because of your deeds, you and everyone here should deserve better than this. You shouldn’t be forced to live in such a place.”

Fortuna: “What are you calling «such a place»? We love living in the forest, you know.”

Saying this jokingly, a faint smile emerged on Fortuna’s face. The man also smiled in return as the two shared an amicable moment together. And then,

???: “Archbishop-sama. The items have been transferred, we are ready to depart. Please make haste.”

Robed Man: “Mhm, understood.”

Hearing the black-robed figure’s report, the man reluctantly took one last look at the village. Then, he gave Fortuna a bow, while Fortuna and the other adults put their hands to their chests and bowed to the group of black robes in response.

The man turned away to follow behind the departing wagon train— but then, he halted,

Robed Man: “Right, there was one more thing I wanted to ask.”

Fortuna: “...”

The man turned around and lifted a finger, while Fortuna urged him to continue with her silence.

Seeing Fortuna’s attitude, for a moment, the man closed his eyes, before gazing into the depths of the forest,

Robed Man: “—Emilia-sama, is she well?”

Emilia: “—Eek!”

Hearing the man mention her name, Emilia unwittingly squeaked on the tree branch. But luckily, since she had just exhaled, it only came out as a little groan. Luckily, no one seemed to have heard it, and Fortuna only slowly nodded to the man’s question,

Fortuna: “She’s fine. Emilia is healthy and growing up to be a good girl. A good girl who’s... wasted on me... But, I’m sorry. I cannot let you meet her.”

Robed Man: “That’s all I needed to hear. I understand. As long as Emilia-sama is safe and well, that’s more than enough. A sinner like me cannot dare covet anything beyond that.”

Fortuna: “...”

Rather than self-deprecation, it sounded more like he was cautioning himself. But either way, no easy words of comfort escaped Fortuna’s lips as she heard this.

The man looked up with an expression as if he was relieved by Fortuna’s silence. And, after a while of staring at each other without either of them breaking the stillness,

???: “Archbishop-sama, is something the matter? —Archbishop Romanée-Conti-sama?”

Someone ran back from the party that had gone on ahead. Hearing his name, the robed man spread out his arms,

Robed Man: “Not at all. Well, I best be going. Fortuna-sama, I’ll see you soon.”

Fortuna: “Thank you for everything, as always... And sorry, Juice.”

Faintly smiling at Fortuna’s parting words, the man she called Juice rejoined the party as they gradually left the forest.

Seeing them off until the last of them was out of view, Fortuna dropped her shoulders with a sigh. Then, she clapped her hands, drawing the attention of everyone present onto herself,

Fortuna: “Now, let’s hurry and get everything distributed. Please distribute them in the usual manner. I’ll go fetch Emilia and bring her out.”

Emilia: “———!”

Seeing the adults and children proceeding to transport the goods as per Fortuna’s orders, Emilia practically flew down the tree and sprinted towards the Princess Room as fast as her legs could take her.

She squeezed her tiny body through the gap she’d used to escape, and despite getting cuts all over her skin, Emilia managed to get inside. But, once inside, she was horrified to realize that her wretched appearance looked nothing like that of a good girl who had obediently waited in her room.

Until recently, Emilia had thought that even if Fortuna discovered that she'd went outside and reprimanded her because of her actions, she'd be forgiven if she apologized and sincerely reflected.

But, after hearing what she had just heard, that optimism had all but vanished. In fact, Emilia was certain that she had just heard something she was never supposed to hear.

Emilia: "What do I do, what do I do what do I do whatdoldo—"

Mommy Fortuna could come back and unlock the door any moment now. One good look at her, and it wouldn't take much to figure out that Emilia had sneaked outside. If Fortuna found out that she had heard that conversation, it'd mean complete and utter ruin for the young Emilia.

Emilia: "At least, I've got to hide the scratches..."

There were cuts all over her skin, her knees and elbows were scraped, and blood was oozing out of some of the wounds. There was no way those injuries could escape Fortuna's sharp eyes, and just the thought of how they'd hurt in a bath was frightening.

She had to do something, but, just when she was immersed in that thought—

Emilia: "—Huh?"

—Emilia saw the pale-blue lights appear in the Princess Room once more, their glow a sign of salvation. The shining particles drifted in Emilia's vision, captivating her consciousness with their movements before sprinkling onto her body.

Emilia: "—Ah, aaaaah."

Just like when they were sucked into the wall, the pale-blue lights sank into Emilia's skin. As if attacking the young girl's wounds, they gathered at the various scratches, staining the wounds white with their faint glow— and, by the time the lights disappeared, only a vague redness remained where the cuts used to be.

Emilia: "——"

The inexplicable transformation of her body left Emilia petrified and speechless. The painful wounds on her elbows, knees, and skin had vanished, and Emilia's body was restored to the state before her escape.

Realizing this, Emilia took off her clothes and changed into a spare dress in the Princess Room. But then, the torn and shabby clothes she'd just taken became a problem.

Emilia: "I know...!"

Tipping over the bottles of colorful drawing ink, she smudged them all over her torn clothes. And when she had stained them so thoroughly that they could never be washed clean again,

Fortuna: "—Emilia? Are you awake?"

She heard Fortuna's voice outside the door and quickly straightened her back. Feeling her heart pounding violently at the extremely tight timing, she tried to give some kind of reply, but her throat couldn't utter a sound.

Fortuna: "Emilia? Did you fall asleep?"

Emilia: "I—I'm up? I'm up, mommy Fortuna. It's just, I..."

Fortuna: "Oh, so you are awake. Sorry for making you wait for so long..."

As if relieved to hear Emilia's reply, Fortuna unlocked the door and entered the room. But the moment she walked in, Fortuna's smile disappeared as she wrinkled up her pretty nose,

Fortuna: "...What happened? Smells like ink in here."

Emilia: "Uhhm, sorry. I accidentally spilled all the paint... I got it all over my clothes, too."

Looking at the toppled paint jars in the center of the room, then at the befuddled Emilia behind it, Fortuna held her palm to her face with "Ah geez...",

Fortuna: "Well, there's no helping it now. Good thing we had spare clothes in here. Otherwise, I'd have to carry you back naked, you know."

Emilia: "Um, mommy Fortuna... I..."

Fortuna: "It's alright, Emilia. There's no need to be scared, I know you didn't mean to, so I'm not angry at you. More importantly, are you hurt?"

Crouching down to match Emilia's height, Fortuna looked her beloved daughter up and down just to be sure. And when she saw there were no obvious injuries, Fortuna spilled a relieved sigh and gently took Emilia into her embrace.

Emilia: "Mommy?"

Fortuna: "No, it's nothing. I just... reeeaaally missed you, Emilia. I'm sorry. Just let me hug you for a little longer."

Keeping Emilia in her embrace, Fortuna pressed her cheek against Emilia's.

Normally, Fortuna would always be too embarrassed to make such gestures of affection, so this was very rare for Emilia. Perhaps, it was an indication that Fortuna was truly worried. And,

Fortuna: "...Such cheek."

Fortuna softly opened her eyes and muttered as, wrapped in her embrace, Emilia stroked her short silver hair. But, without paying heed to Fortuna's objection, Emilia went on caressing Fortuna's hair to her heart's content.

There were so many things she wanted to ask her. But young Emilia lacked in too much and knew of too little for her to be able to put them into words. She proceeded, saying nothing.

Fortuna: "Hey, Emilia."

Emilia: "...Hm?"

Watching as Emilia quietly stroked her head, Fortuna narrowed her eyes. Suddenly, in her amethyst eyes that were the same color as Emilia's, a teardrop appeared.

In a blink of a moment, the teardrop rolled down and dripped off Fortuna's cheek, but without wiping it off, Fortuna only looked at Emilia, smiling.

Fortuna: "—I love you, you know."

There were still so many things she wanted to ask.

—But, right now, those words from her mother was enough, she thought.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Dragging her feet in the darkness with pale-blue lights drifting around her, Emilia marched on.

Exhausted, sapped of even the strength to walk, she could barely lift her feet off the ground. But her still-persevering consciousness did not allow her to stop but only continue forward.

Memories from her childhood flashed across her mind. But why was she remembering them now?

The past Emilia saw in her Trial was slightly different from the past she'd just remembered. The past she remembered was a bit earlier than the events shown in her Trials.

If she could return to that time, somehow— surely, everything would be different.

Emilia: “Mommy, Fortuna...”

Kind, warm, and strong, Fortuna was Emilia's ideal woman, even now.

She wanted to grow up to be mommy Fortuna, to be just like mommy Fortuna. But every time she was faced with the slightest adversity, she'd grow hesitant, vexed, and afraid until it resulted in consequences beyond the possibility of repair.

Emilia: “Uh... guh... Hk.”

Whenever she thought about those consequences that could not be repaired, Emilia's chest would be wracked by unendurable pain.

Sorrow, regret, and agony, overwhelmed by these tangled emotions, Emilia was brought to the verge of tears by her own stupidity, inadequacy, and shame.

Always. She's always like this. Frantically, desperately, unreservedly giving her all, Emilia would nevertheless fail to obtain what she truly wanted, or to even touch it.

Even the things she should have had, should have held safely in her hands, slipped through her fingers like sand, enchanting Emilia with their transient glimmer before vanishing into nothing.

Fortuna, Puck, Subaru, it was the same with all of them.

Emilia: "It's all... my fault. All because I'm... a bad girl... who couldn't keep her word... Everyone..."

Sobbing under her breath, Emilia's feet dragged on.

Amidst the thick brambles of green, sluggish and slow, she pressed on nonetheless.

Emilia: "Everyone tried to hide it from me... Hide it... But, no. If I could've gone on without knowing, if I never learned of it... If I never found out, how much better that would be, and yet... Yet..."

In the forest. The pale-blue lights. The men in black robes. Mommy Fortuna. The gigantic Black Serpent. The closed door. The snow. The world of white. The silvery-white world. The end, the world that was ending. Father, mother.

Emilia: "Yet I..."

The endless maelstrom of words raced through her head. Tossed and tormented in its wake, Emilia raised her head and pressed forward.

Emilia: "-----"

With feeble voice. And faltering steps.

— But eyes wet not with a single tear.

Arc 4 Chapter 100 - Memories Buried in Dust

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 1 “—Journey of Memories”, Parts 3 & 5, and Volume 14, Chapter 2 “The Beginning of the Sanctuary and of Ruin”, Part 1

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken – Part 1, Part 2+3

—Blindly searching like this wasn’t going to get them anywhere.

That was the conclusion Subaru came to after looking for Ryuzu all over the village and straining his cardiac and respiratory functions to the point that his lungs were aching.

Subaru: “—Haa, ha, haa.”

Holding his knees, he heaved his shoulders up and down to pump oxygen into his lungs.

The mental fatigue that had accumulated over the past few days flooded back all at once, and his limbs felt heavy as if they’d been injected with lead. Even breathing was difficult.

Otto: “Natsuki-san, you alright? But seriously, you run out of steam way too quickly, you know.”

Subaru: “Sh—shut up... I, just suddenly, remembered... I was still undergoing medical treatment when all these things came up, and my exhaustion’s just about reaching its peak...”

Otto: “Okay okay, I get that you are a sore loser, you just sit here and rest a while. Give your body a break and take some time to think. I’ll go fetch some water.”

Seeing the exhausted Subaru, Otto spilled a small sigh, pointed to the shade of a tree, and left him there.

Watching Otto leave while scowling at how pathetic he is, Subaru sat down under the tree and focused on restoring his breathing.

Subaru: “———”

Almost an hour had passed since he parted with Garfiel and started searching for Ryuzu Theta.

His and Otto's two-man human-wave tactic hadn't yielded any results so far. Yet, just like with Emilia, they couldn't exactly go around recruiting helpers.

Because of her position as representative of the Sanctuary, the Sanctuary's residents and refugees shouldn't be allowed to hear about Ryuzu abandoning her duties and going missing. Garfiel must've had similar thoughts when he went on to search for her alone.

Subaru: "Emilia..."

If Subaru was honest about his feelings, he was more worried about Emilia's safety than Ryuzu's. He doubted she would do anything rash, but knowing how lost and lonely she must be feeling, he couldn't help but want to rush to her side and console her.

But the cruel reality was just as he told Otto— Finding Ryuzu was more urgent. There was no room to be sentimental about this.

Still, Subaru hoped that Ram's separate efforts could manage to find Emilia.

Subaru: "Kinda feels like I'm conceding something to Roswaal, though."

Ram clearly belonged to Roswaal's faction. She was only searching for Emilia out of concern for Roswaal's reputation, not to help Subaru or Otto. It was just that her present efforts to serve Roswaal happened to be aligned with Subaru's.

The optimal flow would be for Subaru and Otto to find Ryuzu then go on to find Emilia. If Subaru could nail both of those conversations back to back, that would be best.

But ideals were ideals. Only empty rhetoric. Making plans for a tanuki's hide before it has been captured¹⁵⁶.

¹⁵⁶ The original expression is “とらぬ狸のなんとやら”, an expression similar to “counting chickens before they've hatched”, which was the original translation by both SummaryAnon and TranslationChicken. If you can read Japanese, perhaps this will be of use to you.

Subaru: “At this rate, we’ll run out of time before we find either of them. That’s the worst case and absolutely cannot be allowed to happen... But we have to do something...”

Panicking wasn’t going to help. Instead of standing still, thinking, wouldn’t it be more reliable to just comb through every corner of the Sanctuary?

Subaru: “If doing that would find them, then Garfiel would’ve gotten to them first. It’s been an hour already. That guy can move twice as fast as me and Otto, so if he hasn’t found her yet, that means...”

—Ryuzu was trying to elude them so that even Garfiel couldn’t find her.

Subaru: “———”

At this thought, Subaru felt a tug in his mind as he held his breath.

Something was off. Ryuzu was trying to elude Garfiel. That much was right. But, that’s not right at all. Why would Ryuzu want to run from Garfiel? Wasn’t Ryuzu Theta running because she wished to avoid confronting Subaru? Subaru figured she didn’t want to answer his questions about the Trial and decided to go into hiding until her rotation ended.

But that wouldn’t make any sense. If Theta really just wanted to avoid talking to Subaru, all she had to do was communicate her desire to Garfiel. He would not hesitate to eliminate Subaru when given a clear reason to. And in the case Garfiel decided to attack him, Subaru would have no means of fighting back.

If Theta truly wanted to keep her past hidden, she could have incited Garfiel to do this. So why hadn’t she done this, and why wouldn’t she do this—?

Subaru: “She’s running... because she wants to be chased...?”

???: “Well surely the whole point of running is to not get caught. So what are you talking about?”

Subaru was holding his chin, muttering, when someone else butted in. Looking up, it was a perplexed Otto handing him a pitcher full of water,

Otto: “I can understand getting a little overwhelmed with so many things to think about. Back when I had to stay awake for four days straight going around doing business deals, I felt pretty unhinged by the last day too.”

Subaru: "Setting aside that story of your past hardships for another time, it's not like I'm going crazy... I'm not... I don't think."

Otto: "You are sounding less and less confident about that."

Accepting the pitcher, Subaru held the spout to his mouth and poured. Relishing the cool sensation sliding down his throat, he organized his tangled words,

Subaru: "What's your take on why Ryuzu-san disappeared?"

Otto: "...Well, she probably wants to avoid an inconvenient conversation, I'm guessing? If she runs into you today, she'll have to talk whether she wants to or not... but, considering how she can't leave this place, I can't deny that it feels like a stopgap measure."

Subaru: "Exactly, it's a stopgap. But if she really wanted to solve the fundamental problem, you know how she could easily do it?"

Otto: "—You mean Garfiel?"

Otto effortlessly deduced the conclusion Subaru had come to from the few hints given. Furrowing his brows, he crossed his arms as if in thought.

Otto: "Right, by that line of reasoning... then maybe Ryuzu-san doesn't want Garfiel to know about her disagreements with you?"

Subaru: "Still, Garfiel is already suspecting that we have something to do with it. When he said that nothing ever went wrong in the Sanctuary until we came along and set it off, I didn't know what to say."

Garfiel had hit it right on the mark. Either way, Garfiel had found the indirect cause of Ryuzu's disappearance. And there was no way Ryuzu could have failed to consider how Garfiel would react to her being missing.

Subaru: "Which means, there are only two conceivable possibilities."

Otto: "Either she wants to avoid both Natsuki-san and Garfiel and decided to go into hiding, or..."

Subaru: "Knowing that we'll be looking for her, she's waiting to be found...?"

If it was the former, then Subaru and Otto might as well give up here. If petite Ryuzu really wanted to hide, she could easily hold out for half a day. The only one who'd have a chance of finding her would be the sharp-nosed and agile Garfiel.

But, if it was the latter, then Subaru and Otto's chances against Garfiel were fifty-fifty. In that case, Ryuzu must certainly have made her arrangements accordingly.

—There must be another way to find her besides blindly searching.

Subaru: "We should search somewhere related to Ryuzu-san."

Otto: "But we've already searched her home... And her actual home is where Emilia-sama went missing, so that doesn't..."

Subaru: "Yes, right. I doubt she would've gone to Roswaal, or to the Experimental Grounds... That was probably the first place Garfiel looked. Which means..."

If Theta had to choose a place that Subaru and Garfiel would have an equal chance of finding, one which Garfiel wouldn't immediately investigate—

—If such a place existed, it would be,

Subaru: "...Otto, I think I got it."

Otto: "R—really? You got it from our little exchange just now? You sure you aren't jumping the gun here?"

Subaru: "Don't know why you are being so negative with me, the likelihood is pretty high. In fact, if this isn't it, then it'll be time to throw in the towel."

Nodding to the stumped-looking Otto, Subaru drank down the remaining water in a single gulp. He wiped off his lips, stood up from the ground, and gazed in the direction of the place he had in mind.

If Theta was there, then she wasn't running away. She was simply waiting in the spot most appropriate for this conversation.

Waiting for Subaru, or perhaps waiting for Garfiel.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Fortuna: “We are about to have an important talk, so just wait here for a bit, okay?”

Emilia: “Yes, mommy Fortuna.”

Emilia obediently replied to Fortuna, who had brought her to the Princess Room and told her to wait there.

Seeing the smile on Emilia’s face as she saw her off, Fortuna couldn’t help but slightly widen her eyes. She patted Emilia’s long silver hair and relinquished a worried sigh. Before, Emilia would always look a little upset about being left behind in the Princess Room. As much as she tried to hide it, the way she puffed up her blushing cheeks and turned her face away left no doubt that she was pouting.

It’s been a while since she saw that obvious attitude on Emilia’s face, so, naturally, Fortuna was worried.

Fortuna: “...Emilia.”

Emilia: “Huuuuuh?”

Fortuna: “—Hmmm, never mind.”

She stroked her hand through her daughter’s hair as if wanting to ask her something, but, seeing Emilia’s innocent eyes gazing back at her, Fortuna only shook her head, smiling.

Though she still couldn’t help but worry, Fortuna figured she should just be glad that Emilia wasn’t making a fuss. And since there were visitors waiting for her, Fortuna decided to leave well enough alone. Waving her little hand, Emilia said goodbye to Fortuna as the door closed behind her, the sound of the door’s bar clunking into place echoing. With the door safely locked, Emilia was left in the Princess Room alone.

—Or not. Lately, that hasn’t been the case.

Emilia: “Okay, you can come out now.”

Waiting a whole minute to make sure that Fortuna had left for good, Emilia returned to the center of the room and called out in a whisper. Naturally, she was the only person in the room, and no one was supposed to answer— but little specks of pale-blue phosphorescence drifted into the slightly lit chamber.

Seeing their dull, faint glow, Emilia's amethyst eyes quivered with joy. Over the time she spent in the Princess Room, she seemed to have inexplicably acquired the ability to communicate with them. She called them Fairies— though they were actually Micro Spirits, and while Emilia's name for them was close, the nuance was a little bit off.

Regardless, the Micro Spirits did not fault young Emilia for her rudeness,

Emilia: "Fairy-san, Fairy-san, thanks for coming today."

The little girl said, thanking them for not letting her be alone. Hearing this, the lights glowed bright, dancing in reply.

Emilia: "——"

Watching the dancing Micro Spirits, Emilia intensely recognized their good will towards her. They were not only here to dispel her loneliness, but to help her to the best of their ability. And whenever Emilia grew too lax while walking around outside, they would promptly warn her before anyone spotted her.

—She had escaped the Princess Room many times after that.

No one seemed to have noticed the gap in the tree roots leading outside, and Emilia continued using it for her escape. At first, she had gotten cuts over body and clothes while trying to force herself through, but now that she'd acquired the knack for it, it was no longer a concern.

Until then, she had to apologize for getting her clothes dirty over and over, and Fortuna had nearly thought it to be suspicious. It was really a close call.

Emilia: "She was definitely reeeaaally suspicious. But it all worked out in the end. Heehee."

Emilia puffed up her chest, bragging about her improvements, while the pale-blue lights swirled around her head as if praising her. Soon, she was feeling giddy from the dazzling light show.

Nevertheless, while she had become a regular escapist, her grand adventures outside were all composed of cute little mischiefs. She'd listen in on the adults' conversations like the first time, eat ripe fruits from the trees without permission, or rearrange the furniture in someone's home to confuse them, but nothing more than that.

Yet, mischief is a thing that compounds in intensity every time, and the pure and innocent Emilia was no exception to that progression.

Emilia: "Alright. It's time to head out."

Fairies: "———"

The lights swayed as if in agreement, and, encouraged by her reinforcements, Emilia beautifully escaped the Princess Room. Spreading the roots that had been loosened by her numerous escapes, she slid her small body into the gap and then pulled herself outside. She rolled down the moment she was free and landed on a bed of leaves which softened the blow. This was something she had prepared after the lessons she learned from all the tumbling in her previous attempts.

Emilia: "What should I do today?"

Picking off the leaves that had stuck onto her hair, Emilia asked the lights around her. Though she knew they couldn't answer, seeing them respond with their oscillating brightness assured her that she wasn't alone.

It was good that she could come outside, but soon, she'll be running out of things to do. If she kept repeating the same mischief, people would figure out that she was behind it and conclude she could escape the Princess Room. And if they plugged up the hole, it'd be all over.

Emilia: "Let's take it slow until things cool off."

Muttering like a wily, crafty criminal, Emilia wandered aimlessly towards the village. Most likely, the adults would be gathering in the village center as usual, conversing with the black-robed figures and receiving their gifts.

Meanwhile, mommy Fortuna would be chatting with the tall man, whom Emilia had heard being called "Romanée-Conti", or, by her mother, "Juice". Emilia secretly decided to go with Juice. But while she found the adults' conversations fascinating at first, after repeatedly eavesdropping on them, they eventually lost their freshness and Emilia was growing tired of it.

Fortuna and Juice would talk about all sorts of topics that went over Emilia's head. The only reason she still frequently listened was in the hopes that they would bring up her mother and father like they did the first time so she could hear a little more about them.

Unfortunately, that hasn't happened so far.

Emilia: "Maybe..."

She could sneak into one of Juice's wagons?

If Emilia slipped her little body in between the crates on one of those covered wagons, they could stow her outside the forest, just like that. She had never seen Juice's friends check the wagons before leaving. But, even with the fairies' help, it'd be impossible to sneak in unnoticed.

Emilia: "...Mmmmuu."

Thinking along those lines and realizing that it wouldn't work, she gave up on that idea. After all, leaving the forest would be the worst possible way she could break her promise to Fortuna.

—She absolutely must not leave the forest. There are things outside that would be scary for Emilia, and it'd be too dangerous before she turns into an adult. At least, that was what she'd always been told. And even though she was already breaking the rules, she wasn't going to break all of them. Perhaps that too was young Emilia's virtue showing through.

And so, the plan to hide in the wagon and get stowed away was scrapped in the drafting phase. Instead, she figured she'd find some other way to learn more about her parents.

Emilia: "—Hup, hup."

In the time she spent thinking, she had reached the village square where the adults and Juice's companions were meeting. Emilia nimbly darted up a nearby tree, laid flat on her belly, and perked up her ears.

As always, Fortuna and Juice were happily chatting off to the side while the others unloaded the cargo. Except today, Fortuna's expression was especially warm,

Fortuna: "Emilia's been cheerful lately, and reeeaaally full of energy. I just wish she'd stop getting mud all over her clothes."

Juice: "My, my... It's good to hear that she's doing well. We could bring some more clothes for her if you wish. It'll be winter soon outside the forest, and we'll have lots of out-of-season clothes to spare."

Fortuna: "We are always imposing on you, I'm sorry to further burden you like this... But would that include clothes for adults as well?"

Juice: "Yes, certainly. I'm sure you'll look very nice in them, Fortuna-sama."

Juice said with a tender expression, while a complicated hue rose on Fortuna's face. She scratched her cheeks, as if embarrassed,

Fortuna: "...Now where did you learn to speak like that? We've known each other for ages, but since when did you start telling jokes?"

Juice: "It was just the first thing that came to mind. Did I say something strange just now?"

Fortuna: "I know you are not one to tell lies, which only makes this even more impossible..."

Fortuna pressed her hand to her forehead, looking baffled. But the unmistakable smile on her lips proved that she wasn't upset.

Actually, far from being upset, she seemed to be thoroughly enjoying their exchange.

Emilia: "...Hmph."

For some reason, seeing her mother like this was making Emilia feel all icky inside. Fortuna's expression was usually stern, and she rarely showed her gentle side in front of people other than Emilia.

But now, it was like something important to her mother was being stolen, and that stinks.

Emilia: "Hrmp, stupid Juice."

She lashed out at her one-sided acquaintance. Puffing up her cheeks, Emilia decided that if Juice doesn't say something interesting soon, she's going to pull some mischief on his wagons today. Maybe clog the wheels with cloth or pour oil all over the cargo bed. Such were Emilia's vows of petty revenge, but these dramatic retributions would never come to pass.

Juice: "—Now, is the seal still safe?"

Lowering his voice, Juice asked Fortuna the usual question. Fortuna replied with a nod, and said,

Fortuna: "Nothing's changed. Every single time, you ask me this, you know."

Juice: "That is my duty, after all. Besides, this season's that season. While this problem may be cyclical, there have been especially many moonless nights this year, so the circulation of Mana has been insufficient. I'm worried this might have a negative impact on the seal deep in the forest... I can't help but feel anxious."

Fortuna: "The moon, huh... Right, I see. So that's why the Micro Spirits in the forest have been acting strange lately... I understand. Afterwards, I will go check on the seal myself to make sure it hasn't come loose."

Juice: "Then I'll leave it to you."

Saying this, Juice bowed low, while Fortuna turned him a serious gaze and nodded.

Eavesdropping on their exchange, Emilia muttered "Deep in the forest..." under her breath.

Emilia had already explored the village in its entirety. And naturally, she had conquered every corner of the forest that Fortuna had allowed her to play in. Although she never said it out loud, she saw the forest as her own backyard.

Yet, Emilia knew nothing about this place located deep in the forest they had mentioned. She figured it must be somewhere in the depths of the forest where entry is forbidden— Another one of those things they had specifically hidden from her. The more she thought of it like that, the more dissatisfied she became.

And before she knew it, all her pent-up dissatisfaction was about to boil over.

As usual, she didn't learn anything useful about her parents, and her exciting grand adventures outside the Princess Room were becoming routine and stale. Worse, the same adults who talked their tongues off about the things Emilia mustn't do were lying and keeping secrets behind her back. So many examples of this had surfaced in so short a time.

—Maybe it's time she got back at them a little.

Who could blame Emilia for thinking this?

Back then, no one ever chastised Emilia's budding mischievous spirit and only allowed it to swell and grow, which only hastened the coming of that time. And that was why, so many years later, the only person left to blame Emilia was no one but Emilia herself. She would endlessly fault herself for her own stupidity back then, though it would not be enough to lighten the weight of her sin.

—But that belated regret did not reach the young Emilia.

While Emilia was rolling up her sleeves with misdirected motivation, Juice and Fortuna's conversation had come to an end. After unloading all the goods without a hitch, Juice's group bowed farewell as the adults saluted their departure.

Seeing this, Emilia swiftly flew down from the tree branch and rushed back to the Princess Room. Quickly squeezing through the gap in the roots and into the hollow, Emilia hurriedly set about composing her alibi. She made some quick drawings, changed her dolls' clothes, and gobbled up her sweets. Once all that was done, she swiped off the sweat on her forehead and heard Fortuna's voice outside the door.

Fortuna: "Emilia, sorry you had to wait. Have you been a good girl today?"

Emilia: "Eh... H—have I been a good girl? I have. Mhm, yep, I have."

Fortuna: "——"

Convinced that she was fooling Fortuna with her expert performance, a satisfied expression rose on Emilia's face. But, seeing Emilia like this, Fortuna silently narrowed her eyes.

Getting a bad feeling about that sharp gaze locking onto her, Emilia figured any misstep here would only deepen her suspicion.

Emilia: “Wh—what is it, mommy Fortuna? Even if you stare at me like that, I didn’t do anything. I just ate some sweets, drew some pictures, and played with my doll a little. I didn’t go outside at all. Really.”

Fortuna: “—Is that so... Well, alright.”

It seems Fortuna was completely deceived by Emilia’s acting. Although she felt guilty about lying to her mother, Emilia reminded herself not to be bothered by it too much, and instead focused on plotting her ruthless revenge instead. Fortuna and Juice were talking about a Seal deep in the forest. As far as Emilia could remember, a Seal should be a place used for hiding something.

That is, for hiding something that’ll be trouble if it got out.

—And so, the manner of Emilia’s revenge on Fortuna and the adults was decided.

She will find the location of this Seal deep in the forest, and whenever Fortuna or anyone else wants to scold her, she could use it in her rebuttal as her bargaining chip.

Should they ever catch her slipping out of the Princess Room, the location of the Seal would be her trump card.

Emilia was so excited about her ingenious plan that she completely failed to notice the irony of trying to escape the guilt of leaving her room by sullyng her hands with something even worse.

Holding her mother’s hand, they left the Princess Room. Once she had brought Emilia home, Fortuna said she had some things to do. Going by her conversation with Juice, Fortuna must be going to check the Seal. And so,

Emilia: “—I’m counting on you guys.”

Emilia winked to the pale-blue lights, bidding them to follow her mother.

A glimpse of Emilia’s later beauty that could enchant a person with a smile alone had already begun to bud on the little girl’s cheeks.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

This was the second time Subaru visited this place, but the first in this loop.

The lonely building stood atop a small hill. It wasn't especially run-down, instead looking more like an average home with no notable characteristics. Comprised of a bedroom and a living room, the lounge hosting a simple kitchen, divided much like a small apartment unit in Subaru's original world. It was enough for a single person to comfortably live in, but it must've been cramped for an adult and two kids.

That was the sentiment Subaru held as he ruminated on the significance of this building.

Standing outside the door, he gave it a few knocks. Then, after a brief silence, he heard "Come in" from inside and was relieved to know that he was right.

But he immediately put away that sense of relief as he placed his hand on the knob and opened the door. The faint fragrance of old wood grazed his nostrils. And, feeling the lukewarm air meeting his skin, Subaru stepped inside,

???: "It took you longer than I thought."

In the back of the room, there sat a figure on the austere bed. Apparently, they were just getting a refill of tea, pouring boiling water into their cup.

That was probably the reason behind the dampness pervading the room. Subaru confirmed that there were three cups on the table— but only one was filled.

Subaru: "So I'm the first guest to arrive?"

Theta: "That's right. You are the first, Su-bo. Hope you like your tea a bit strong."

Subaru: "Doesn't really matter. Weak or strong, leaves just taste like leaves."

Theta: "A comment like that makes me wonder why I even bother brewing for you. Now I understand what Ram's always grumbling about."

Wryly smiling at Subaru, Ryuzu— Theta took an empty cup and proceeded to fill it with boiling water. After throwing in some tea leaves to soak, she pushed it over to Subaru.

Theta: "Here, you must be thirsty. Go on, drink up."

Subaru: "I think if I down the whole cup like this, my remaining HP's gonna drop straight to zero. But... thanks."

Theta furrowed her brows, a bit confused by his joke, while Subaru blew on his tea to cool it before bringing it to his lips for a sip. The thick flavor of grass passed over his tongue and down his throat.

No matter what name they're called or who brewed them, leaves are still just leaves.

Subaru: "I couldn't even get used to Rem's tea... My body really doesn't accept this stuff, seriously."

Theta: "I should've guessed... Well, that settles it. I'm never gonna brew tea for you again."

Watching Subaru scrunch up his face and stick out his tongue, Theta gulped down her cup of tea in a single breath. Then, giving her own hair a few pats through her dangling sleeves, she plonked herself back on the bed and faced Subaru once again,

Theta: "I was hoping to lighten the mood a bit before our talk, but I didn't expect we'd end up with even more disagreements."

Subaru: "When you put stuff from the side stories into the main text, readers who happened to skip them will get confused so let's have no more of that. Switch gears switch gears, let's just get to our conversation."

Theta: "You say these things like it's no effort at all..."

Giving an astounded sigh, Theta held her little palms to her forehead. Then, her gaze passed through Subaru, as if to stare beyond the door.

Theta: "Setting that aside... So it was you, Su-bo. I thought as much. Rather than Gar-bo, chances were, either you'd come here alone, or neither of you would think of this place before my rotation ended."

Subaru: "...The odds were pretty stacked against Garfiel, huh. If that guy hears what you just said, he'll probably be wailing."

Theta: "Wailing, bawling, is that all it'll be...? I was imagining a reaction more serious than that. If Garfiel finds me here, that is. But I'm not too worried about that."

With a lonely smile on her face, Theta looked towards the living room wall. Subaru followed her gaze and saw the metal shields hanging there, gleaming with their silvery sheen—the two shields crossed over each other, adorning the wall just as he had seen them last time.

When they were little, the siblings Garfiel and Frederica would play ramming at each other with those shields, filling each dent and crevice with memories— Simply put, this was Garfiel and Frederica's childhood home.

Subaru couldn't quite understand why Theta chose this place for their final conversation. But he did remember from a previous loop that this place held a special significance for both Ryuzu and Garfiel. And trusting that memory, Subaru came here and found Theta waiting for him, just as he thought.

Theta: "It's good you came alone, Su-bo. After all, this isn't something I'd want people to hear."

Subaru: "Yeah, I left Otto behind. Didn't think I should bring him along for what we are about to discuss here."

While the statement sounded like he was leaving a warrior behind for a fight that was out of his league, that was not Subaru's intention at all. It was just that Ryuzu's past was a subject that would necessarily involve the Witch. It was enough for Subaru to have to bear this alone.

And so, he had tasked Otto with another role.

Subaru: "Theta-san, is it safe to say that you are the only Ryuzu-san who's been inside the Tomb?"

Theta: "Thee... ter?"

Subaru: "Ah, my bad. That's what I've been calling you for convenience's sake. Yesterday was Sigma-san, and the other two are Alpha and Beta. If you don't like it, I'll stop..."

Theta: "...No, it's fine. I see, so that's what it meant. Aah, I see, I see... Surprisingly, I don't dislike it."

Muttering "Theeter, Theeter" over and over under her breath, Theta's face softened as if embarrassed. She closed her eyes, and, after several seconds of silence, opened them again,

Theta: "What I'm about to tell you is everything I have seen of the Sanctuary's creation... And a part of the events leading up to Ryuzu Meyer being sealed inside the crystal."

Subaru: “—Right.”

Theta: “As for what you’ll think once you’ve heard it, and what you’ll want to ask me... As one of the four representative Ryuzus of the Sanctuary, I will leave that up to fate.”

Declaring this weighty responsibility, Theta smiled as Subaru held his breath,

Theta: “Is your heart up to the challenge?”

Arc 4 Chapter 101 - Theta Part 1

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 2 “The Beginning of the Sanctuary and of Ruin”,
Parts 2-3

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken – Complete

One of Ryuzu’s representative personalities, whom Subaru called Theta—

—Had entered the Tomb and touched the past of her progenitor, Ryuzu Meyer, but the memories were incredibly fragmented, and even the chronology of events was indefinite.

Theta figured this must be because her existence was created from various fragments severed from the original Ryuzu Meyer’s soul.

In which case, the other Ryuzus— Alpha, Beta, Sigma, and perhaps even the replicants that never developed a personality, would all see different glimpses of the past.

But even if that hypothesis was correct, Theta would not want them to enter the Tomb.

—Because for Theta, just the thought of the other Ryuzus witnessing the past that she saw was accompanied by unbearable and intolerable agony.

???: “—What do you want, I suppose? Staring at me isn’t going to make me give you anything.”

The memory began with a girl, her hair faintly hued, who glared at her.

A girl with a lovely face.

Her hair, so fair it seemed to meld into the light, and her skin, so white it looked nearly transparent. With big, round light-blue eyes, her appearance could be described simply with the word “sweet”. Her hair was tied into two long, swirling pigtails, the mere sight of which revealed their smooth, silky texture and springy softness. She wore a dress of a subdued hue that gave the young girl a mature look. But, considering the splendor of the girl herself, the color of her dress was in perfect harmony with her appearance.

Ryuzu: “———”

Pierced by the adorable girl’s perilous gaze, Ryuzu recoiled a little.

Compared to this girl, Ryuzu’s own attire and appearance were the very definition of shabby. They were of about the same age, which made her own wretchedness even more conspicuous, and just standing here in this spot was incredibly embarrassing for her because of it.

Girl: “Hmph. A coward, I suppose.”

In front of the speechless Ryuzu, the girl let out a snort of displeasure.

Although her adorable appearance made even that gesture come off as cute, for Ryuzu, the feeling tugging at her heart pained her even more than being rebuked. But before she could realize that it was something akin to fear of upsetting this girl—

???: “Beatrice. What’s with that attitude? I don’t remember teaching you to behave like that.”

There came a mild voice that made the girl’s expression tense up. The voice came from behind the girl, and in front of Ryuzu’s view.

Coming out of a small shed in the back of the village was a woman of true white. Her hair flowed long and fair, and not even light could match the translucence of her skin. Only her irises and lips, as well as the long-sleeved gown she was wearing, adorned her with contrast, conveying her existence was indeed reality to those around her.

The person walking towards Ryuzu and the girl was the great benefactor of this village— the revered Witch, Echidna.

It was to Echidna’s voice that the girl named Beatrice reacted so dramatically. She turned around with her expression still tense, and,

Beatrice: “Aah, ehm... It’s not what you think, Mother! It wasn’t Betty who’s... It’s just, this girl was...”

Echidna: “I don’t remember teaching you to make disgraceful excuses, either. Be honest and speak the truth. If you are confident that you are not at fault, then you shouldn’t be tripping over yourself. Am I wrong?”

Beatrice: “You are not... wrong, I suppose...”

Echidna’s voice harbored no sharp emotions, but was laden with a silent, pressuring strictness.

Beatrice slumped her shoulders and brought her hands together, looking timid,

Beatrice: “Betty was quietly waiting outside just as you told me to, in fact, and this girl came over, I suppose. Staring at me from way over there... it was incredibly rude, in fact. So I called out to her and asked what she wanted, I suppose.”

Echidna: “Hm. I see. You there, do you agree with that account?”

Ryuzu: “Ah... Ah. Y—yes, I do. Please forgive me. I—it was very rude of me, and...”

Beatrice’s description was accurate. Ryuzu had been standing in the village outskirts, vacantly staring at the small girl leaning against the fence. Beatrice was probably waiting there for Echidna to finish whatever she was doing. Her posture and her eyes seemed almost lonely, and Ryuzu felt a tug at her chest as she saw this.

But if she had said that out loud, they would probably snort and laugh at her. So Ryuzu only shrunk her little body even smaller, hoping to outlast the storm by keeping her head down.

Echidna: “You don’t deny it? Then it would seem that Beatrice was right, and you were a little rude, Ryuzu.”

Beatrice: “That’s right, Mother. So Betty didn’t do anything wrong at...”

Echidna: “However, it is your fault that your imperious attitude frightened her so much, Beatrice. I’m sure I’m always telling you this. You are indeed special, but that doesn’t mean you can look down on others.”

Beatrice: “Uh, muuuuh...”

Beatrice's gloating at Echidna's affirmation was immediately met with her rebuke.

While listening to their exchange, Ryuzu suddenly realized that Echidna had remembered her name, a fact which moved her so much her insides trembled all over.

It was a small village, yet she was just an insignificant child.

Yet the revered Witch, their great benefactor, remembered her name nonetheless. This was an indescribable honor for a resident of the Sanctuary who idolized the Witch of Greed with their utmost gratitude and respect.

Echidna: "I'll have Juice straighten you up when we get back to the mansion. I expect he'll be very enthusiastic."

Beatrice: "...I don't like Juice very much, I suppose."

Echidna: "He says himself that it's his duty to be disliked, so that's exactly what he's going for, I'd say."

Giving the grimacing Beatrice a light smile, Echidna turned her face towards Ryuzu.

Ryuzu's heart unwittingly jolted. Figuring that she'd missed the timing to join the conversation, Ryuzu was just about to slip away when Echidna's attention caught her completely by surprise. And just like this, Echidna walked up to Ryuzu, whose shoulders remained hitched and rigid.

Echidna: "Sorry for startling you, Ryuzu. Her name is Beatrice... She's something like a daughter to me. As you can see, her discipline isn't quite up to par, which is a little embarrassing."

Beatrice: "I'm not «something like» your daughter, I am your daughter, in fact!"

Echidna: "Well, I guess. She'll be accompanying me on my visits to the Sanctuary rather often now. You'll have more chances to interact with each other from now on, so I would like you two to get along."

Ryuzu: "U—understood. You can leave it to me, Echidna-sama."

With Echidna's hand on her shoulder, Ryuzu's heart fluttered with joy as she nodded.

Receiving Ryuzu's promise, Echidna nodded back in satisfaction, while behind her, Beatrice muttered "...Hmpf, Betty's just fine on her own, I suppose." under her breath.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: "You there, excuse me. I'm certain that Echidna-sama should be somewhere around here, have you seen her?"

Stopped by that call, Ryuzu turned around with a basket of laundry in her arms.

And, realizing who the person calling her was, she just about yelped. She was just on the verge of fumbling the basket of laundry in her arms when an outstretched arm reached out and propped it back in place.

???: "Ah, hup—"

Ryuzu: "Uuuwaah, I am so sorry!"

Facing the youth who practically skated up to her to stop her basket from dropping, Ryuzu quickly bowed her head. Seeing this, the boy raked his fingers through his long, navy hair.

Youth: "No, don't worry about it. I'm the one who should apologize, for failing to notice that you were carrying something. That was very inconsiderate of me."

Ryuzu: "N—no, not at all... I don't deserve your apology, Mathers-sama."

Youth: "Whoever it may be, no one should forget to be considerate towards a lady... Just one correction, though, I don't especially favor being called by my surname. You can just call me Roswaal."

Saying this to the flustered Ryuzu, the youth— Roswaal, winked.

He was about four or five years older than Ryuzu, and one head taller. His limbs still had some room to grow, and his sonorous voice hadn't fully become an adult's. He possessed that sensual appeal only attainable in the short interlude between boy and man, and his bearing was so abounding in natural dignity that even the young Ryuzu was feeling his charms.

And who could blame her? Roswaal, despite his youth, was head of the House of Mathers, which governed multiple domains, an associate of Echidna the Witch, and the governor of the Sanctuary, all combined into one remarkable man.

He was contributing to the Sanctuary's preservation in a different way than Echidna's, and everyone had always told Ryuzu not to be rude to him.

Feeling her cheeks reddening from Roswaal's wink, Ryuzu frantically grappled for the topic he had stopped her for,

Ryuzu: "Well, um, so, Echidna-sama... I've not yet seen her today. Beatrice-sama wasn't at the usual place, either."

Roswaal: "I, see. Then she might be delayed. But Echidna-sama aside, it's inconceivable that Beatrice would fail to immediately come to see you."

Ryuzu: "Erm, um... I think... it's really just a coincidence that Beatrice-sama and I run into each other so often..."

Roswaal: "You are saying it's a coincidence because that's what Beatrice calls it, yes?"

At Roswaal's question, Ryuzu only wordlessly nodded.

She had interacted with Echidna's daughter, Beatrice, countless times since they were introduced. Beatrice would come alongside Echidna on her visits to the Sanctuary which she worked into her busy schedule, and Beatrice would often loiter about the place while Echidna tended to her business. In the meantime, she and Ryuzu would meet with surprising frequency. Time and time again, they'd run into each other while Ryuzu was gathering the laundry or out picking wild vegetables,

Seeing Ryuzu's reaction, Roswaal laughed, unable to hold it in.

Roswaal: "Beatrice isn't honest with her feelings at all. I hope she isn't too much for you to handle."

Ryuzu: "But she is too much for me. She's being so kind to someone like me. And I'm the one who's always making Beatrice-sama upset... I even worry if she might hate me."

Roswaal: “You are fine. Beatrice’s complaints aren’t credible at all. If she truly hated you, she wouldn’t be finding all sorts of excuses to come along.”

“Would she?”, Ryuzu thought, tilting her head. Whenever Beatrice was with Ryuzu, she’d always be complaining, and she’d always have something to say about everything Ryuzu did. That was all Ryuzu saw of her, so even when someone told her that Beatrice didn’t actually hate her, she had trouble believing it.

Ryuzu and most of the residents of the Sanctuary were often chosen as the targets of the hatred and malice of the outside world. Beatrice’s attitude was overwhelmingly tender compared to what Ryuzu knew, and it was even laced with a certain warmth, but mean was still mean.

Roswaal: “...I hope someday, you two would understand that as well.”

Seeing Ryuzu fall silent, Roswaal muttered sadly.

At the sight of the sad smile rising onto Roswaal’s lips, Ryuzu shuddered, wondering if she had upset him. But before she could say anything to salvage the situation, Roswaal blinked his yellow eyes as if having spotted something.

Roswaal: “Ah! Teacher! I heard you were here and came flying over in a heartbeat!”

Flinging up his hands and utterly discarding his previously mature attitude, Roswaal started running with an expression of childish glee. Ryuzu only watched as he ran right past her and towards a woman standing in the distance— Echidna. Seeing Roswaal dashing towards her with his face beaming with glee, Echidna slightly raised her brows.

Echidna: “Roswaal, huh? I don’t remember ever allowing you to call me Teacher.”

Roswaal: “Today, I’ll definitely change your mind about that. I can now confidently perform the assignment you gave me last time, balancing four types of Mana at equal concentration and producing rainbow-colored Mana— And by my own efforts, I’ve reached the point where I can add the remaining two as well. What do you think?”

Echidna: “You self-studied to the point where you can bind all six? My, my... I guess you can call that a foreboding rate of progression and nothing short of obsession. I’m sure in a bind now.”

It was a rare sight to see Echidna surprised.

At least, this was the first time Ryuzu had ever seen it. Roswaal pumped up his chest in pride as he waited for Echidna's response. Even Ryuzu, who was younger than him, found this adorable. His attitude and gaze, no matter how you looked at it, was overflowing with unreserved admiration for Echidna—as well as sentiments that went beyond admiration.

Beatrice: “Why are you just standing there doing nothing, I suppose?”

Ryuzu: “Ah... Beatrice-sama.”

While watching those two from a distance, Ryuzu suddenly found Beatrice next to her, staring at the side of her face. Unwittingly taking a step back, she saw Beatrice with her arms folded as usual, giving her a snort.

Beatrice: “You are gawking again. Just as rude as ever, in fact.”

Ryuzu: “P—please forgive me. I apologize for my insolence.”

Berated like this, Ryuzu shrank up, ashamed of her own shameless behavior. But seeing Ryuzu's apology, Beatrice's brows furrowed even further.

If only she smiled, or relaxed her lips, Beatrice's face would give off a gentle impression. And so, the fact that her callous behavior was putting such an expression on Beatrice's face was truly inexcusable.

Beatrice: “How long do you intend to keep sulking like that, I suppose? It's dismal. If you have time to space out toting that laundry basket, you ought to hurry up and get to your next chore.”

Ryuzu: “Y—yes. That's what I'll do. Please excuse me.”

Giving the unsparing Beatrice a bow, Ryuzu scrambled to leave the scene. But just as she began to speedily walk off, she noticed Beatrice picking up her dress, following behind her.

Ryuzu: “Beatrice-sama...?”

Beatrice: “It's nothing, I suppose. Just killing time, in fact.”

Seeing Ryuzu turn around, Beatrice gave a nonchalant reply. But just as Ryuzu was about to turn away, she remembered her conversation with Roswaal. That youth had insisted that Beatrice didn't dislike talking with her at all, but—

Ryuzu: "Beatrice-sama... Would you like to help me fold the laundry?"

Beatrice: "...Wha—?"

At Ryuzu's abrupt request for her to help with her chores, Beatrice let out a displeased groan.

Seeing Beatrice's eyes open wide and her expression shift into shock and even indignation, Ryuzu immediately regretted trusting Roswaal.

Beatrice: "—But well, if you absolutely can't handle it by yourself... then Betty has no choice but to help you, I suppose."

Ryuzu: "Huh?"

Beatrice: "I'm not saying it again, in fact. Come on, get going, I suppose."

Saying this, Beatrice scuttled past Ryuzu, who had unwittingly stopped in her tracks. The moment Beatrice passed her, Ryuzu saw that her lips were half softened because of astonishment, and half because of some other emotion.

Suddenly feeling a gush of warmth inside, Ryuzu caught up to Beatrice who had purposefully slowed her steps. Then, peeking at Beatrice's face,

Ryuzu: "Would you... like to hold a small amount of the laundry?"

Beatrice: "Don't push your luck— But since I've no choice... just a small amount, I suppose."

Saying this with a somewhat unwilling expression, Beatrice offered Ryuzu her hand.

Arc 4 Chapter 102 - Recollections Lost to Memory

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 4 “Lies, Liars, and Con Artists”, Part 7 (loosely adapted), and Volume 14, Chapter 1 “—Journey of Memories”, Part 6

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Complete

—Finding the seal turned out to be a lot easier than expected.

Emilia: “So... this is the *Siel*¹⁵⁷?”

Young Emilia, seeing the strange object before her, blinked her amethyst eyes and tilted her head.

In front of Emilia’s eyes, deep in the depths of the depths of the forest, was a peculiar door standing in the middle of a clearing surrounded by trees. Though it was certainly a door, it was not connected to any building, and even when she circled behind it, there was nothing there. It was merely a door standing in the middle of the forest, towering over the young Emilia.

Emilia: “Why doesn’t it fall over...?”

Finding this strange, she pushed on the door, but it did not open, nor moved a single inch. Naturally, Emilia’s scrawny arms weren’t strong enough to topple it, and the door effortlessly withstood her push as it would a light breeze.

The double-door seemed to be made of wood, but the cold it conveyed by touch was closer to that of ice. The feel of its surface was smooth, inexplicably like polished stone. In the center of the double-door was an ancient lock with a keyhole as wide as Emilia’s palm. She couldn’t imagine who could fit a key that big inside their pockets.

¹⁵⁷ Emilia mispronounces “fuuin” (封印) as “fu-in” (フーイン). Let’s keep that adorable childish mispronunciation because why not.

Emilia: “Weird...”

Tapping the door with the back of her hand, she confirmed that despite its firmness, the noise it made was dull. So now that she actually found it, what does it mean? Emilia tilted her head.

Emilia: “Say... What could it be...?”

???: “———”

The dim specks of light circled around Emilia’s head as she sought their advice. Since encountering them in the Princess Room, Emilia had been confiding in the fairies of the forest, and when she told them she wanted to find the Siel, they found this place in no time.

Though they were the ones who led her here, they didn’t seem to know the seal’s significance either. And even if they did know, they couldn’t speak, so they’d still have no way of communicating it to Emilia.

Emilia: “Don’t know... So boring. But at least I found it. Clap clap clap.”

Clapping her hands applauding herself, Emilia gave a big nod and looked the seal over front and back.

Now, if they ever find out that she was slipping out of the Princess Room, she’ll have her trump card ready. On the unlikely possibility mommy Fortuna and the adults catch onto Emilia’s great escapes, she’ll tell them she knows about the seal, and although she doesn’t really understand how, that’ll probably put them on equal footing.

Not that she could remember what compelled her to come up with this plan in the first place.

Emilia: “Hmph. It’s all Mommy Fortuna and everyone’s fault. It’s all Juice’s fault.”

Remembering that tall, black-robed man, Emilia stuck out her tongue in his absence.

He was the only person other than Emilia who could elicit that secret expression from Fortuna. Although she knew he wasn’t a bad person, he was her enemy, nonetheless. So far, she had never faced him directly, but should Fortuna ever present her with an opportunity to meet him, Emilia was determined to give his feet a good stomping.

Emilia: “The fairies will fly at his face, then when he’s confused, I’ll stomp at his feet. And I’ll stomp with both feet at once. And I’ll stomp with my heels... But that’ll probably hurt, I better use my toes.”

Even in war, she didn’t forget to insert a wisp of kindness into her ruthless plans.

Having the fairies watch for any signs of the enemy while she brooded on her cold-blooded battleplans, Emilia left the forests’ depths and began sneaking back to the village.

Unlike when she was slipping out of the Princess Room, this was Emilia’s free playtime. Fortuna would be away at this hour, checking on the forest’s barrier, leaving the elderly and the children of Emilia’s age in the village.

The elders couldn’t follow Emilia on her great adventures, and, for some reason, the children would always avoid coming near her. This did make Emilia feel a little lonely, but whenever she felt this way, Fortuna would put all her energy into playing with her to help her forget all about it. And so, it didn’t bother her too much that she couldn’t play with the other children.

Emilia: “And I bet I’m the only one who knows about the Siel.”

She alone knew something that nobody else did.

With that petty sense of superiority propping up Emilia’s petty sense of self-importance, she pumped out her chest and pressed on towards the village with the fairies leading the way.

Her destination was home. Today, she’ll draw to her heart’s content and run her brush all over the abnormally large stack of paper mommy Fortuna had prepared for her.

Emilia: “The artist feels like drawing a red sky, and a white forest today— Huh?”

While miming the motion of slapping paint onto her canvas, Emilia suddenly noticed the fairies’ movements becoming irregular. She squinted one of her eyes, following their movements as they veered off the path and disappeared into the bushes.

Emilia: “I sense trouble’s afoot...!”

The fairies would usually disappear into particles of light, but this time, they chose to hide in the undergrowth. Emilia determined that this either meant trouble was coming, or they wanted her to follow them.

Going off the path and into the shrubs, she slid through the foliage a little taller than she was. And after passing between the trees with her long silver hair catching again and again in the branches, there—

???: “Well this is quite the predicament... The promised time will end up being delayed¹⁵⁸.”

—In the dark forest, on a narrow trail, she saw a distressed man leaning against a skinny tree.

Emilia: “—Ah!”

Emilia unwittingly yelped and immediately covered her hands over her mouth. But it was a high-pitched voice in a silent forest. The sound reached the man’s ears and drew his attention.

???: “Who is there?”

The man tilted his head and looked towards Emilia’s thicket.

He had meek features and evenly trimmed green hair. His face was skinny, while his body gave off a lean but sturdy impression. He was tall, taller than Fortuna, someone who Emilia had to look up to get a gaze of, and taller than the foliage Emilia would have to desperately jump to take a peek at him.

This familiar man was none other than Emilia’s detested foe, Juice.

Juice: “———”

As he wordlessly stared at the thicket, Emilia clutched her head, resigned to the fact that he was not going to let this pass.

¹⁵⁸ It is unclear if this phrase has a deeper meaning, as it could also mean “I/It’ll be late for the appointed time”, which was how TranslationChicken did it. If anyone has Japanese skills, the original phrase is “約束の時間に遅れてしまう”.

What was actually happening was, with her clutching her head and so facing backwards, Emilia's bum was protruding from the thicket and Juice could see it entirely. But Emilia did not realize this, and Juice did not point it out.

Dejected, Emilia awkwardly poked her face out of the thicket.

Juice: "My my, a darling young lady has app... Hk!"

A gentle smile rose on Juice's face as he saw Emilia, when his shock cut off his sentence half-way.

His eyes shot open and his lips trembled as he stared at Emilia. Being watched by that gaze was strangely uncomfortable. Part of it was because Emilia still saw him as an enemy, and part of it because she could not decipher the complex emotions instilled within his gaze.

Juice: "Young miss, would... No, you couldn't be, that's impossib..."

Emilia: "——"

His voice trembled as he shook his head as if witnessing something unbelievable. Emilia timidly looked up at him, saw the fragile expression on his face, and found it heartbreaking.

He looked like a lost child, or someone who had been walking through pitch darkness, only now seeing the light— He held an expression at once precarious and dream-like, which made Emilia forget everything she had ever felt towards him.

Emilia: "...Juice, are you alright?"

Juice: "—! Aaah, aaaaah, AAAAAAAAAAAHH..."

Emilia walked up to him, clutched the hem of his black robe, and asked him.

That same instant, Juice's expression further disintegrated. His spine trembled as if a bolt of lightning had passed through him from Emilia's fingertips, and he fell to his knees.

Emilia couldn't help but shudder as she saw this. Juice was on his knees, bent over, at the same eye-level as Emilia's. From his eyes, an endless flood of tears spouted. The unstoppable stream of tears birthed rivers on Juice's face. This was the first time Emilia had seen a grown-up cry, and all she could do was hold her breath and watch.

Taking hold of Emilia's petrified hand, Juice looked straight into her amethyst eyes.

Juice: "I... I'm fine... Yes, yes! I'm more than alright. There isn't... any problem at all... I—I... I've just, I've just been saved more than I could ever have dreamed."

Emilia: "You, have...? If you feel saved, why are you crying?"

Juice: "I'm not... crying because I'm sad... These are tears of joy, of happiness, of bliss... Such tears of happiness... do exist. That's s—s—something you... you guys have t—taught me... and so..."

His trembling fingers spoke volumes of his overwhelming emotions, and Emilia felt no urge to shake them away. She merely placed her free hand over the hand that was grasping hers. Juice bowed his head low, sending teardrops dripping to the ground. Irresistible sobs repeated in his throat, while the tears of bliss he spoke of continued to flow.

—So people could also cry because they are happy? Then, does that mean he's happy right now?

Emilia: "You are crying, because you are happy...?"

She felt like she could understand. Some nights, Emilia would find herself sleepless and alone. Whenever that happened, she would climb into Fortuna's bed, cradle herself in her mother's arms, and pass the time in warmth until the dawn came. Emilia would be liberated from her unease, wrapped in happiness, even come close to tears. What Juice was feeling now must be similar to what she had felt back then.

Maybe Emilia was doing for him what mommy Fortuna had done for her.

Emilia: "It's alright, Juice. It's alright. Everything's alright."

Juice: "———Hk."

Consolingly, Emilia patted Juice's head. A quake shocked through his body as Emilia held the downcast Juice against her little chest. His sobs transmitted into her bosom, their heat passing into her body.

She had been planning to stomp on his toes before, but somehow, they wound up here.

What an impossible guy. What a hopeless enemy. How could she bring herself to do something awful to someone who's crying? Surely, Fortuna would forgive her and understand that there was no helping it.

Emilia: "It's too lonely to cry all by yourself."

Once Juice finishes crying, they'll return to the village hand-in-hand, and she'll have no choice but to tell mommy Fortuna.

About her stroll in the depths of the forest, and about the grown-up who was crying.

Illustration from Volume 14, coloring by Setowi (source)

Because once two people have shared a secret together, they are no longer enemies, but something like friends.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Leaning against the hard surface at her back, Emilia returned from her momentary lapse of consciousness. She shook her head, passed her fingers through her silver hair, and grimaced at the shrill, incessant ringing in her ears.

What was that brief dream she just had? Those scenes never existed in Emilia's memory. At least they shouldn't have.

Yet that unfamiliar sight had burst out as if she had actually witnessed it before. The cast were all people she knew, and she herself definitely participated in the production, but the scenes they were performing were entirely unknown to her.

She knew Fortuna, knew Juice, knew the fairies, and knew her young self.

But she did not remember those scenes, those unknown episodes, nor those conversations absent from her memory.

Spattering, overflowing, images Emilia could not recognize. The Sealing Door. Her escapes from the Princess Room. The fairies' guidance. Juice and his black-robos' true identities. Fortuna's last words to Emilia.

Emilia: "—Aah, hk."

A sudden, splitting pain sliced into Emilia's brain. Roughly wiping her tears with her sleeve, the pale skin around her eyes swelled red as she sighed.

Ever since her Contract with Puck terminated, those memories have been surfacing one after another in Emilia's mind. She had absolutely no idea what they meant. But she knew they weren't just meaningless, baseless delusions.

In fact, the core of Emilia's heart was neither rejecting nor distancing itself from those memories.

Because she did know. Deep in Emilia's heart, she knew those scenes.

Does that mean those scenes really happened? And, if so, why weren't they in Emilia's head before?

The past she had witnessed in her Trial—

—The memory of the forest buried in snow, where the insults and malice Fortuna flung upon her made her want to shriek and scream... Something that linked decisively to that moment was missing from Emilia's memory.

Was that missing link hidden somewhere in this sea of memories? If so, then Emilia would have to delve deeper, dredge the depths, and discover what had drowned.

Emilia: "Have to... find it fast..."

Her head was aching. Her body was heavy. Her vision was failing, and her every muscle was sapped of strength.

But still, Emilia must lean against the wall, prop herself back up, and keep going.

Slowly, steadily, dragging her heavy body, heading deeper and deeper into the darkness, on the verge of tears and alone, she pressed on.

All alone.

Arc 4 Chapter 103 - Genesis of Sanctuary and the Beginning of Collapse

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 1 “—Journey of Memories”, Parts 4-9

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Theta: “These memories are fragmented, but I did my best to sort out the chronology. I think... that this is how they flow together, more or less...”

Subaru: “...”

Subaru met Theta’s uncertain words with silence.

For he could only choose silence. The information-load was far too heavy, and he needed to organize it before he could come up with anything to say.

The founding of Sanctuary, and the era in which the girl named Ryuzu Meyer still lived— would have been four-hundred years ago, when beings called Witches roamed free. And when the Witch of Greed, Echidna, still walked this earth.

Subaru: “Honestly, I can’t imagine a time when Echidna was just wandering around the place like a normal person.”

Theta: “The Witch-sama’s presence must feel distant to you, Su-bo, because you have never lived in that era. But actually, even for me, I can’t say I truly knew her despite feeling like I’ve spent all that time around her.”

Subaru: “When you talk about things you vaguely know about as if you actually lived them, it feels like you’re on the first step to senility. But anyway... did Echidna visit the Sanctuary often?”

Theta: “Those aren’t my real memories, but judging from the scenes I witnessed and the conversations we had, her visits must’ve been rather frequent.”

Unlike Theta, who had seen those memories, all of it still lacked a sense of reality for Subaru who was merely hearing about them second-hand.

But if there were anything about what Theta said that was bothering him, it would of course be—

Subaru: “Beatrice and Roswaal... were in the Sanctuary 400 years ago...?”

Theta: “Beatrice-sama, as I said, was like Echidna-sama’s daughter. And as for Ros-bo, the Ros-bo in my story was the founder of the House of Mathers... the first-generation Roswaal who had set the rise of the Mathers household in motion. The name Roswaal was just inherited down the line.”

Subaru: “...Was he close with Beako?”

Theta: “From what I could tell, he had a charming relationship with her.”

While listening to Theta’s account, Subaru’s thoughts turned to Beatrice.

Perhaps that girl hadn’t changed a bit at all during the course of four-hundred years and had always been curt and dishonest with her feelings. Even now, four-hundred years later, that attitude remained the same. Never allowing anyone to peek into her world, she continued to hide everything inside that little body of hers.

Thinking of that girl lingering alone in the Forbidden Library, a keen pain sliced across Subaru’s chest. Pressing a hand to his breast to hold back that pain, Subaru shook his head.

Subaru: “I’m surprised Echidna would bring Beatrice along with her. Judging from our conversations, I didn’t think she felt any kind of maternal love for Beatrice.”

Theta: “I’ve never had a chance to meet the Witch-sama myself. But from what I’ve seen of Ryuzu Meyer’s memories, I feel that there’s a sense of humanity to the great Witch-sama.”

Subaru: “Somehow, I kinda agree with you there.”

It was indeed quite different from Subaru's impression of Echidna. Yet, four-hundred years had gone by, and life and death stood between then and now. Maybe it wouldn't be too strange if her perspective on life had changed during her time in that Citadel of Dreams.

Subaru: "I thought our break-up was pretty final... but I'm still placing my hopes in her, huh..."

Once again, he was reminded of his own hopelessness.

This was different from Rem and Ram. Echidna understood Subaru's feelings and hopes and knowingly trampled over them all the same. There can be no future in which he'd take her hand now.

Subaru: "Anyway, your stories so far have just been charming reminiscences of the past. That doesn't sound like the kind of terrible secret you'd go out of your way to hide from everyone."

Theta: "-----"

Subaru: "So, please tell me what came next. What on earth happened in that seemingly idyllic Sanctuary?"

Subaru lowered his voice, asking, as Theta brought her already-cold tea to her lips. She mumbled "Tastes terrible..." under her breath, and,

Theta: "What happened, is it...?"

Subaru: "-----"

Theta: "What happened was collapse. And then, I learned the true reason the Sanctuary was created."

Subaru: "The true... reason...?"

Subaru unwittingly swallowed his breath at those words, while Theta merely nodded. And, as if once again opening the lid on her memories, she narrowed her eyes.

Theta: "Both the great Witch-sama and the first Roswaal were inside the Sanctuary at the time. Something ominous and strange was approaching, and not just myself, but everyone inside the Sanctuary had sensed this."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—The air hung taut and heavy, giving Ryuzu the illusion her throat was parched.

Roswaal: “We have to get out of this place, now. The preparations aren’t ready— If that thing finds the Sanctuary’s location, all our plans will be for naught.”

Echidna: “———”

Roswaal: “Teacher! We are wasting valuable time here! That thing... That thing will be here any moment!”

Anxiously slamming his hand on the table in the little cabin, the slender-faced youth shouted. An urgent apprehension was carved into that usually temperate and graceful youth’s expression.

Hearing his plea, the Witch Echidna quietly closed her eyes and folded her arms. Faced with her silence, the youth lunged forward, waving his arms to reiterate his petition.

Roswaal: “There’s no time to hesitate! That thing’s power is overwhelming! I’m still not strong enough to protect you, Teacher...! If you ask me to be your shield, I will gladly be your shield. But when we have no means of fighting against that thing, even if I defend you with my life, it’d be completely futile...”

Echidna: “There is a way— To a certain extent, I had prepared for this.”

Cutting off the youth— Roswaal’s words, Echidna opened her eyes, staring at the grains of the wooden tabletop.

Hearing this, “Guh...” Roswaal spilled an astounded sigh while Echidna quietly shook her head.

Echidna: “Judging by my repeated inspections of the Sanctuary, I believe the conditions are in place for the barrier to hold with a high probability of success.”

Roswaal: “Th—then...!”

Echidna: “—But we are missing the core to activate the barrier.”

Roswaal: “———”

For a moment, a flash of hope brightened Roswaal’s expression before it was extinguished by Echidna’s pained voice once more.

Echidna: “The barrier cannot be activate without its core. And without the barrier, we cannot repel that thing from this place. If we can’t secure a safe zone, we’ll be annihilated as soon as we are found.”

Roswaal: “We spent all this time preparing the Sanctuary... we’ve come so far, and yet... with just one step away!”

Overwhelmed with vexation, Roswaal slammed his fist on the table.

The legs of the old table creaked as blood seeped from Roswaal’s hand.

Silence descended on the small cabin. Time slowed to a standstill as a viscous, heavy atmosphere permeated the room.

And it was there, that a girl timidly raised her hand.

Ryuzu: “Um, would I be any good... as the barrier’s core?”

Echidna: “———”

Ryuzu: “I heard before that this is possible. That I meet the conditions for your barrier, Echidna-sama... And that was why you’ve been paying special attention to me.”

Echidna: “——Did Beatrice tell you this?”

Ryuzu: “Yes.”

Ryuzu Meyer nodded in quiet determination with her long, pink hair flowing. The girl’s face was tense with resolve as she stared straight at the expressionless Echidna.

Ryuzu: “Beatrice-sama said that you’ve already confirmed that I’m a perfect match. All the Mana you have extracted over these past few months was precisely for this purpose, was it not?”

After a brief silence, Echidna drew in her chin and nodded to Ryuzu’s question.

Echidna: “Indeed, you are very suitable for the creation of the barrier. It’d be possible to maintain the barrier if we keep you inside the Sanctuary. That much is well established. With just a little more time to adapt the Sanctuary’s lands to your Mana, it would’ve been possible.”

Ryuzu: “In other words, it isn’t possible now?”

Roswaal: “It’s not just a simple barrier. This barrier must be indestructible. We need to proceed with the utmost caution and discretion. Years of effort have gone into gathering half-bloods inside the Sanctuary to provide the conditions for the barrier. And you... were the decisive lynchpin of this plan. But...”

Trailing off there, Roswaal ruefully gritted his teeth.

Though Ryuzu didn’t know the details, she could tell that even this ingenious duo of Echidna and Roswaal were helpless in the face of such obstacles. Is there really nothing they can do?

—There has to be something. That was what Ryuzu’s brief life-experience told her.

Ryuzu: “Isn’t there something more drastic we can try?”

Echidna: “———”

Ryuzu: “...You saved me, Echidna-sama and Roswaal-sama. Coming to this land, I was given a life where I wouldn’t have to be afraid of being persecuted or shunned, and I was happy. If I could do anything to repay you for the time I was given, I’m certain that’s my life’s purpose.”

Little-by-little, she spilled the contents of her heart.

Watching Ryuzu squeeze her little white hands even whiter as she spoke, Echidna’s black irises froze, losing all of their warmth. Instead, it was Roswaal, standing beside her, who found himself beset by a torrent of complex emotions.

Roswaal: “T—Teacher...”

It wasn’t a call asking Echidna for her decision. Rather, it was a call filled with the slightly different nuance of “you couldn’t possibly do this”. Whatever it may have been, it was like the pulling of a trigger.

Echidna: “—If we crystallize your Od and make it the core of the Sanctuary, we can drastically shorten the process for the land to adapt to your Mana. And the barrier will be complete.”

Ryuzu: “If we do this, will the Sanctuary be saved?”

Echidna: “It’ll give us a chance to survive the violence of the impending threat. If that could buy us some time, I should be able to devise some countermeasures.”

Ryuzu: “———”

Echidna did not give a consolatory answer. She neither made any wishful predictions, nor offered any words of comfort.

But if Echidna judged that it was possible, then, for sure, it can be done. In other words, by offering her life here, she would be able to protect this place. By sacrificing herself as the repayment of her debt, they will certainly succeed.

Ryuzu: “...When do we start?”

Echidna: “—I’d like to start preparing immediately, if possible. I will ready the Anchor for the crystallization process and assemble the spell. As for delaying the approaching threat...”

Roswaal: “Leave that to me. I will do everything in my power to stall it... And, Ryuzu-kun.”

Roswaal lifted his face, lined with tragic resolve. Not a hint of weakness or hesitation remained on his expression. He merely stared into Ryuzu’s determined eyes, and,

Roswaal: “I’m sorry. Please help Teacher. do what I cannot do for her.”

Ryuzu: “Don’t be, Roswaal-sama. you’ve already given me a life of irreplaceable happiness. For that, I have nothing but gratitude, so how could I resent you?”

Holding her hand to her chest, Ryuzu shook her head.

Roswaal drew in a small breath, and, sighing, he looked to Echidna.

Roswaal: “I’ll be off. Please make the preparations... And please summon Beatrice, Teacher.”

Echidna: "...Maybe it'd be better if Beatrice doesn't know about this?"

Roswaal: "If we don't call her here now, she will resent us for the rest of her life, Teacher... Although, she probably still will even if we do call her."

Echidna: "Is that right... I see. I'll call her in a moment."

Seeing Echidna's nod, Roswaal headed out of the cabin. On the way, he placed his hand on Ryuzu's shoulder and gave a single, firm squeeze. The dull pain from his grip conveyed the entirety of Roswaal's regrets and reluctance. And, sensing this, Ryuzu shut her eyes.

Ryuzu: "...Beatrice-sama."

She softly whispered.

As the thought of that girl who wasn't here tenderly tormented Ryuzu's heart.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Again, the scene changed.

Ryuzu: "——"

—Witnessing such overwhelming power, an emotion more terrifying than imminent death budded in Ryuzu's chest.

Roswaal: "—Kh, puh."

Accompanied by excruciating coughs, clots of blood came spraying from Roswaal's lips as his body flew parallel to the ground. Watching him land on his shoulder, sweeping up dust clouds as he tumbled, Ryuzu could only stand there, forgetting to breathe.

Wielding six-colored magic, Roswaal A. Mathers had reached the highest level of the magic arts in only his mid-teens. He could scour the earth with devastating flames, cut into stone cliffs with blades of wind, birth water to force back the flow of great rivers, and command soil and stone to raise castles from the ground.

Yet, even with his immense powers, he stood no chance against this overwhelming existence.

???: "...Still want to keep going?"

A youth with auburn hair and sluggish bearing walked towards him, shaking his head.

He seemed about the same age as Roswaal. His blackish-auburn bangs reached down to his eyebrows, and one might even mistake his attractive features for a woman's. His dark-hued eyes were squinting as if sleepy, and a white shirt with black pants formed his simple attire.

—With every step he took, he'd playfully kick a pebble, each one shooting towards Roswaal sending blood spraying from his body. Then another. And another.

Roswaal: "Kh! Gah! Pfu!"

???: "Annoying. Meddlesome. Dismal. Irritating. Wretched. Depressing."

The youth gloomily grumbled, but with every mutter and every step forward, Roswaal's cries intensified as the sound of cracking bones were heard by the distant Ryuzu. Roswaal's body, collapsed on the ground, looked as if it was being crushed into the earth by the air itself. In fact, his limbs were already half buried in the ground, their flesh rupturing as his bloodshot eyes overflowed with crimson tears.

???: "Can you stop already? You've tried. You can't win against me, but you've tried and tried. Trying is enough, isn't it...? No matter how hard you try, it's pointless."

Roswaal: "Wh... at are y... blathering about... I'll definitely... stop you here... Kha! Aaaaagh! Ghaaaaaagh!!"

???: "Haaa... My head's killing me. Nauseates my chest. Dampens my soul."

Hearing Roswaal reject his call to surrender, the youth bent his knees and squatted down. Expelling a deep sigh, he touched the ground as if caressing it. And, with the motion of the youth's fingertips, Roswaal's limbs creaked to the sound of tearing flesh and harrowing shrieks.

???: “I didn’t want this. I was trying to avoid this. I never tried to avoid anything so badly in my life. It’s just the worst, the worst, the worst of the worst of the worst— Truly, depressing.”

Roswaal: “Gaaaaah, aaaaaaaaaaaaaaagh— Hk!”

At the end of the youth’s contagiously despairing speech, with the utterance of that decisive word, Roswaal’s body caved under the unbearable pressure.

The center of his body was flattened, sending profuse blood gushing from his mouth as if he was going to cough out his organs. Roswaal’s eyes rolled white to the convulsion of his limbs. The young wizard’s life now hung by a thread as the price for fighting on to the end.

???: “Aaaa, aaa, aaaaaah? What is this? Whaaaat is this? Look at this. Just look at this. Aaaaah, I really didn’t want to do this. I feel sick. I feel dismal. My head feels heavy. How depressing. Depressing, depressing, depress depress depress depress depress depressing—”

Roswaal was no longer screaming, and all that remained was the sound of dripping blood. Taking a languid glance at Roswaal’s mangled body, the youth went on gloomily grumbling.

All the while, Ryuzu, watching Roswaal’s gruesome end and the uncanny youth who had brought it about, only now remembered to breathe.

Ryuzu: “—Haaaaa.”

Her lungs, strained to their limits, scrambled to pump oxygen to her brain. After replenishing her body’s oxygen by drawing a single breath, she forced herself to fall silent once more, afraid that even the slightest disturbance in the air might elicit the youth’s attention.

Despite watching her benefactor being cruelly mutilated before her eyes, she chose self-preservation over revenge, even though she had no idea why she was so attached to her worthless life.

???: “Ooooooh? Is there maybe someone there?”

Ryuzu: “—Hk!”

As if proving Ryuzu’s worries, the youth tilted his head and looked in her direction.

A short distance away from the battle, on the other side of the village square, Ryuzu was watching from a small cabin, peeking through a knot in one of the boards of the wooden wall. She shuddered at the thought that the youth might've seen her behind such a small gap so far away. The knot was no bigger than the forehead of a cat. There was no way he could have noticed her.

Yet, the youth was walking over without the slightest hint of uncertainty.

???: "Iiiii'm not a quarrelsome person. I don't think any gooooood is going to come from killing everyone... If you could save me the trouble, I'd really appreciate it."

Ryuzu: "...Eep."

???: "Hmmmmmm. Well somewhere in that direction... Should I just demolish the whole thing? Ugh, I really just want to drop everything and go home. So nauseating. So dismal. So depressing."

The youth reached his hand towards the cabin and pronounced this lurid death-sentence.

A chill instantly crawled up Ryuzu's spine as a piercing pain wracked through her head like her skull was being stabbed by needles. Tears swelled in the corners of her eyes as she desperately held back the unbearable shriek stuck in her throat. At this rate, an invisible weight would crush every bone in Ryuzu's little body—

Roswaal: "AL... GOA!!"

Literally spewing blood as he roared, an explosion of flame covered the entire village square in crimson. Feeling its heat roasting her face despite being some distance away, Ryuzu watched the searing flames charge from Roswaal's palm straight for the youth's back.

???: "———"

Even this youth was compelled to turn around as he sensed the overwhelming wave of heat. But what he saw as he turned was an inferno far beyond the realm of human understanding.

Without offering the slightest resistance, the youth's body was swallowed by the onslaught of those blinding flames—

???: "I hate sweating— It's depressing."

—Or he would have been, if the youth hadn't shot down the converging scarlet Mana just an instant before he could be engulfed.

The sweltering fireball that should have incinerated the youth was wiped from the world without even a fiery burst to mark its demise, merely shrinking into a small red orb and rolling onto the ground.

Roswaal: "Ah... Uh... Guh..."

???: "It's still not gone, just how much power did you put into this? Don't keep making me use my powers. The more I do, the more I feel like I want to die."

The youth grumbled and tightly clenched his outstretched hand. As if obeying his gesture, the condensed red orb on the ground collapsed into itself. And, with a loud crack ringing through the broiling air, its energy dissipated into nothing.

Even the highest class of fire magic, Al Goa, did not damage him.

Roswaal, who had returned from the precipice of death for that final strike, fell speechless at this outcome. His desperate struggle was, as anyone could see, futile.

And Ryuzu, who had just narrowly escaped with her life, keenly understood that all this had accomplished was briefly postpone Roswaal's and her own inevitable death.

Roswaal: "You... demon... no... Warlock...!"

???: "I hate that name, it's dismal. You think I'm liiiiiike this because I enjoy it?"

Roswaal: "No matter how distorted your life is... or how limited your choices are... you are still the one who chose them. So don't play the victim here... Hector of Tristitia!¹⁵⁹"

Hector: "Ouch, the truth hurts, you know. I hooooooooonestly don't know what to do with you."

Walking to the fallen Roswaal's side, the youth crouched down and reached his hand towards Roswaal's head.

¹⁵⁹ Alternatives are Acedia, and Melancholy. The latter is boring, and the former is apparently wrong, being another name for Sloth.

Illustration from Volume 14, coloring by Setowi (source)

Without touching him, he had already dealt this overwhelming damage. But if his fingertip were to touch him now, the invisible devastation would cause Roswaal's physical integrity to collapse.

Roswaal: "Guh... Ul—"

Hector: "You are too late, you won't make it, and I won't let you."

Watching Roswaal concentrate his Mana preparing to cast another spell, the youth callously pronounced. Then, his morbid fingertip made contact, sending irrevocable death into Roswaal's dying body.

Roswaal: "...Ul— guuuuuuuuuuuuh..."

Hector: "Bones, crushed. Organs, squashed. Heart, shattered. Hooooooooow do you lllllllike it?"

With that brief groan, Roswaal relinquished his final sigh.

Looking down at the completely motionless Roswaal, the youth patted his knees and stood up. Then, he turned around, directly facing the petrified Ryuzu.

And this time, without a warning, he held out his palm and released the invisible weight.

Ryuzu: "—Hk."

The cabin didn't even withstand it for a second.

The immense pressure from above easily overwhelmed the little cabin's resistance. If Ryuzu hadn't made her timely plunge to the ground, she would've been crushed to the ground with every joint in her body bending in a direction it was never meant to be bent.

Hector: "No resistance... So it's not Echidna, then? If it iiiiiisn't her... whateeeeeever."

Ryuzu: "—Uh, uuuuugh."

Hector: "Be crushed and drown in the dirt. Save me the trouble of digging your grave—"

Ryuzu felt the illusion of invisible hands pulling her up by her skin, peeling her off the ground. And just when she thought that this youth's distant utterance would be the last words she ever heard in this life, the pressure abruptly dissipated.

Roughly panting with profuse tears and saliva drenching her face, Ryuzu looked up, confused. And there, she saw, at the other end of her vision,

Echidna: "Guess I can't exactly say I made it just in time."

Hector: "Nooooooooope. Your disciple did his best to stall me and buy you time, though. Thanks to him, I got totally thrown off rhythm, and that really ruined my mood."

Echidna: "Your way of speaking really hasn't changed at all. You are just the same as when we last parted."

Hector: "Your know-it-all airs haven't changed either, I see. Why do you insist on such an uncuuuuute attitude? You were really cute once."

The youth shook his head, lamenting. Directly in front of him, standing between the youth and Ryuzu, was a lady of white dressed all in black— Echidna.

The Witch looked down at the fallen Roswaal and slightly narrowed her eyes.

Echidna: "This sight pains me more than I expected... As much as I hate to let anything interfere with my objectivity towards results."

Hector: "He'd be disappointed if you didn't show some emoouoooootions for him. Not that I care. But if you want to cry, I can give you some time. Even I am not that cruel."

Echidna: "Where did you get the gall to say such things?"

Their barbed exchange suggested that they knew each other, but their relationship was clearly not an amicable one. They steadily gauged their distance as they faced each other. Ryuzu did not doubt Echidna's strength, but she had equally believed in Roswaal, and he was easily crushed in the face of that overwhelming power.

With that established, Ryuzu could not assert that Echidna's backing gave her any peace of mind.

???: "—How long do you plan to keep lying there in that graceless position, I suppose?"

Ryuzu: "...Huh?"

Suddenly hearing this, Ryuzu looked up from the ground when a hand grabbed her from behind and pulled her up. Dragged by that force, Ryuzu squeaked as she turned around.

Behind her, was an adorable girl wearing her familiar, sour expression.

Ryuzu: “Bea... trice-sama...”

Beatrice: “This isn’t the time to be stammering in surprise. Let’s get out of here quickly while Mother is buying us time, I suppose.”

Ryuzu: “B—but... Roswaal-sama and Echidna-sama ordered me to wait here.”

Beatrice: “It was thanks to said Roswaal’s bungling that he realized you’re here, in fact. Enough, just follow Betty, I suppose. Mother was the one who instructed me to fetch you, in fact.”

Ryuzu: “Echidna-sama...”

Beatrice’s brows furrowed in irritation, but her expression remained tense. Even her usual haughty confidence seemed diminished in front of this inexplicable youth.

Nevertheless, she was still infinitely stronger than Ryuzu, who was even now curling into a little trembling ball.

Beatrice: “The preparations are in place. That’s what Mother said, I suppose. She said you’d understand if I told you that.”

Ryuzu: “—I... understand.”

Ryuzu held her breath and nodded at Echidna’s message. Beatrice narrowed her eyes, puzzled by Ryuzu’s reaction, but had no mind to probe into it.

A torrent of Mana was peaking behind them. The clash between Echidna and the youth was only a matter of time. No one could predict how this battle would go. And the only means to secure certain victory rested in Ryuzu’s choice.

Ryuzu: “Let’s go. Beatrice-sama, where are the preparations set?”

Beatrice: "...It's inside an old, decaying stone room, I suppose. I moved it there as Mother instructed me to, even with Betty's Door Crossing, it was no easy task, in fact."

Sticking an extra boast at the end, Beatrice led Ryuzu by the hand as they moved out. Following behind Beatrice's bouncing pigtails, Ryuzu took one last look at Echidna and bowed her head to the Witch's back.

—Surely, they would never speak again.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The crystal was blue and transparent, so beautiful that Ryuzu trembled.

Beatrice: "Even if you think it's pretty, just don't touch it like an idiot. You'll be swallowed up if you do and become a part of the crystal, I suppose."

Momentarily forgetting where they were, Ryuzu spilled an amazed sigh. Next to her, Beatrice crossed her arms at Ryuzu's out-of-place demeanor and gave this warning. Suddenly called back from her daze, Ryuzu quickly pulled back her fingers.

Ryuzu: "Ah, s—sorry."

Beatrice: "Not like there's anything to apologize for... So, what do we do now, I suppose? Betty was only told to move the crystal and bring you here. Mother didn't say anything beyond that."

Ryuzu: "Beatrice-sama, how did you get this crystal here...?"

Beatrice: "For Betty, moving something without touching it is nothing at all, I suppose. Mother herself has praised the precision and range of my Door Crossing, in fact."

Beatrice's expression was dispassionate as always, but, sensing a hint of pride within, Ryuzu softened her cheeks. She had already grown accustomed to talking to Beatrice like this. In the beginning, she'd always take Beatrice at her word and feel like she wanted to crawl into a hole somewhere.

But over the time they've spent together, Ryuzu learned that this seemingly-imperious girl was actually surprisingly easy to get along with, and in fact, she was every bit the adorable girl she appeared to be, and someone she could smile and laugh with.

How nice it would be if she could just keep talking with Beatrice like this.

If only she could forget all about the calamity befalling the Sanctuary and the fate awaiting her— but that would be impossible.

Beatrice: "...? Your smile is incredibly unpleasant right now, in fact."

Beatrice pointed out, perhaps sensing the sadness that had slipped onto Ryuzu's face.

The fact that Beatrice could tell that her smile was different from usual was evidence that she'd been paying attention to her. As soon as Ryuzu realized this, tears popped out of the corners of her eyes.

Beatrice's eyes widened, and Ryuzu frantically wiped the tears off with her sleeve,

Ryuzu: "S—sorry... A grain... of sand got into my eye..."

Beatrice: "N—not that I care, I suppose— With things as they are, Betty can see this is not the place to be saying «don't worry», in fact."

Although Beatrice had misunderstood her, they were words of compassion all the same.

Ryuzu felt a warmth swell in the depths of her chest. Such was the strength Beatrice had given her, and it felt so grand that she could burst.

Ryuzu: "Beatrice-sama."

Beatrice: "What is it, I suppose. If you are going to take a while, Betty will go help Mother, in fact. And that Roswaal seems to be on the verge of death right now, guess if I don't help him, he's..."

Ryuzu: "Thank you, for always taking care of me. But— this is goodbye."

Beatrice: "—Huh?"

Listening to those vague words, Beatrice blinked her eyes, confused.

Inside the cold stone chamber, the two girls— Beatrice and Ryuzu stared at each other.

Beatrice blinked over and over, intently gazing back at Ryuzu. Beatrice's gaze was intense but warm, and Ryuzu did not look away.

Beatrice: "Goodbye? What do you mean, I suppose? Are you going to run away, in fact?"

Ryuzu: "No, that's not it. If I do run away and live, maybe someday I could still see you again. But this will be our final farewell. We'll probably never have another chance to talk to each other again."

Beatrice: "..."

Beatrice pursed her lips and peered deep into Ryuzu's eyes, searching for her true intentions. Seeing her confused for the first time, Ryuzu quietly chose her words.

Ryuzu: "Echidna-sama's preparations were for the barrier that will cover the Sanctuary. More time was needed for the barrier to take entrench itself in the Sanctuary's soil... But right now, we don't have enough time for that."

Beatrice: "Not enough time... Then the barrier can't be completed? Isn't that barrier the only way to drive that guy off, I suppose?"

Ryuzu: "That's right. I've seen with my own eyes how dangerous that man is. He's beyond dangerous. I know that's why Echidna-sama is risking everything to defeat him. And I think Roswaal-sama sacrificed himself because he knew it was the only way to save Echidna-sama."

Such was that youth's overwhelming power.

Ryuzu didn't know how the barrier's activation would help Echidna, or whether it'd be able to wipe out that monster's existence.

But there was one thing Echidna had assured her.

Ryuzu: "Echidna-sama promised me that if the barrier is activated, we'll be able to protect the Sanctuary... And so, I'm willing to give my life for that."

Beatrice: “D—don’t say such stupid things. Even if you give up your life... without any background in magic, what could you possibly...”

Beatrice’s eyes filled with panic as she hurriedly blurted out. But clever as she was, she had already reached the answer to her own question halfway through her sentence. Her eyes shot open in shock as she turned to the blue crystal looming beside them,

Beatrice: “If you bind yourself with the core of this crystal... with your Od as the centerpiece, spreading the barrier over the Sanctuary... it’ll no longer be necessary to acclimatize the soil...”

Ryuzu: “Yes. That’s what Echidna-sama said.”

It was the same conclusion that Echidna and Roswaal had reached before the attack.

Beatrice only stood there without a word. Ryuzu circled around her until she was in front of Beatrice’s view, and smiled.

Ryuzu: “You’ve confirmed my affinity to the Sanctuary’s Mana yourself... Beatrice-sama.”

Beatrice: “———Hk!”

Beatrice’s face sprang up at Ryuzu’s words.

She bit into her peach-colored lip until blood seeped from her flesh,

Beatrice: “N... No. Betty... Betty didn’t... Wait, that’s not, just wait, I suppose. Just wait here, in fact. B—Betty will speak to Mother, I suppose. Mother might act like that, but she absolutely coddles Betty, she’ll listen if I...”

Ryuzu: “There’s no time for that right now. We have to decide this very moment.”

Beatrice: “In that case, Betty will go help Mother straight away, in fact. If Mother and Betty team up, we can easily dispose of that guy, I suppose. Roswaal too, once I heal him it’ll be three of us...”

Beatrice shook her head in childish denial, but her words trailed off towards the end. Even she realized how unconvincing her own words were.

Beatrice was indeed amazing. Ryuzu was genuinely in awe of how this girl around her age could have reached such heights in magic, never slacking in her daily studies. She could juggle doting over her mother, quarrelling with Roswaal, practicing magic, and doing laundry and sewing and cooking with Ryuzu, all without a hitch.

This same Beatrice would understand the extent of her own abilities, as well as the unbridgeable gap between the enemy and herself.

She could not place her mother's life in danger for such a callous boast.

Beatrice: "—Or, we could use Betty's Door Crossing to get everyone away from here, in fact."

Ryuzu: "..."

Beatrice: "Right? That'll be enough, I suppose. It'll be a little hard, but Betty can definitely pull it off, in fact. While Mother holds him off, we'll gather up everyone in the Sanctuary and escape to Mother's mansion together, I suppose. We'll pick up Roswaal when we get the chance and close the door once Mother's through, then we'll have slipped away right under that guy's nose... Yeah, that's what we should do."

Ryuzu: "And once we've slipped away, won't we live in fear of being pursued by that person for the rest of our lives? If we abandon this place, where people who'd been ostracized by the entire world could finally live in safety and peace... To then go somewhere new, how long will it be before we can live happily like this again?"

Ryuzu shook her head at Beatrice's plan, her words gentle but stern.

Seeing the wounded look spreading across Beatrice's face, an intense pain ran through Ryuzu's chest. But she must trample over this girl's considerations and force her own way through.

Even if this cruel and selfish decision meant betraying the days they've spent together.

—As well as betraying all the memories they've shared.

Ryuzu: "Beatrice-sama. I love the Sanctuary. I'm truly glad I was able to live here. And I love seeing the smiles on the faces of everyone who lives here. So I don't want all of this to disappear."

Beatrice: “———”

Ryuzu: “I had a wonderful time here. So wonderful that I wondered if someone like myself, with tainted blood flowing through my veins, truly deserved this. And so, I’m already satisfied.”

Beatrice: “It’s not like that, I suppose... N—no matter what you think this place is, the real purpose of this place isn’t what you think at all...”

Ryuzu: “Yes. I know.”

Beatrice: “———Ah.”

Ryuzu nodded, as Beatrice suddenly looked as if she regretted saying what she did.

Ryuzu knew the true purpose of the Sanctuary. At least, she knew it wasn’t out of altruistic kindness that Echidna and Roswaal had gathered these persecuted people here.

This paradise where ostracized and despised people could live with their heads held high— did not exist for their sake, but, deep down, everyone still wanted to believe it. And now, it was no longer possible to see the bright facade of this place exclusively. She understood this, as much as it pained her.

Ryuzu: “The true purpose of this place is to deal with the person pursuing Echidna-sama, isn’t it?”

Beatrice: “...”

Ryuzu: “That is why this place exists, and why we were brought here, I understand that now.”

Beatrice: “Then...! If you already know, then why...”

Unable to understand, Beatrice shook her head.

In front of Beatrice’s pleading gaze, Ryuzu’s lips softened.

Ryuzu: “I don’t mind. In the beginning, that might’ve been all it was. But those happy days we’ve spent here weren’t just a part of Echidna-sama’s plans. The time I spent here, and all the conversations we’ve had, none of that was a part of some plan.”

Beatrice: “———”

Ryuzu: “What’s important isn’t how it began. It’s how it ends, and what we felt along the way.”

Beatrice: “———”

Ryuzu: “I was truly happy here. So I will do anything to protect this happiness. Please let me express my gratitude for everything you’ve done for me, Beatrice-sama.”

A distant boom echoed through the stone chamber. The ground shook and the atmosphere trembled in the wake of the clashes between Echidna and the youth in the center of the Sanctuary.

The fact it was steadily approaching made it clear Echidna was not succeeding.

Ryuzu: “———”

Closing her eyes, Ryuzu quietly confirmed her resolve. In front of her, Beatrice’s shoulders heaved up and down as she wracked her brain for something to say. Some magical words that would dissuade Ryuzu from her intention, overturn her decision, and change her mind.

But no such convenient magic existed in this world.

Ryuzu: “Beatrice-sama.”

Beatrice: “...What is it, I suppose.”

Ryuzu: “Please take care not to eat too many sweets.”

Beatrice: “———”

During tea-time, Beatrice would be shoving sweets into her mouth constantly. It’d be a shame if her adorable looks were ruined because she got fat. And she’d have to take care of her teeth as well.

Although she rarely showed it, she really is adorable when she smiles.

Turning around, Ryuzu wordlessly approached the blue crystal. The crystal was giving off a deep, alluring glow. If she touched it, she really would be swallowed by that light.

Would it hurt, and would she suffer?

Despite being prepared for the end, she had no idea in what form it would come. Simply put, it was an emotion known as fear.

Once she is swallowed by this light, she will make this place a true Sanctuary.

And if that genuine world would be a place where everyone was kind, and could live their lives in peace...

If Echidna and Beatrice would continue to watch over that Sanctuary for her...

Ryuzu: “———”

Suddenly, she felt a tug on her sleeve.

Ryuzu turned around and saw Beatrice standing right beside her. She was gazing at Ryuzu with an expression she had never seen from her before, her fingertips were clinging to her sleeve.

The strength in those clinging fingers was weak, and not even Beatrice knew what she was trying to do with this touch. She had merely reached out without thinking, and for a girl who would never be honest with her emotions, perhaps this was the only way to express her true feelings,

Ryuzu: “———”

Gently, Ryuzu picked off the fingers holding onto her sleeve. Feeling the warmth passing between their touching fingertips, Ryuzu smiled at the end.

Ryuzu: “Thank you— Goodbye, Betty.”

—With those final words, Ryuzu’s consciousness was swallowed into the blue light.

And vanished.

Illustration from Volume 14, coloring by DdukaE (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 104 - Theta Part 2

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 1 “—Journey of Memories”, Part 10

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

Theta: “And that’s all the pieces of the past I saw in the Tomb.”

Ending her story there, Theta brought the already cold tea to her lips and took a sip.

Sitting on the bed, meekly listening to her tale, Subaru held his breath as Theta announced that it was over. Then, with a long, deep sigh, he expelled everything that had pent up inside him.

He strained his lungs to their limit, spewing out all the air and indescribable emotions in his chest—and raised his head.

Subaru: “So that’s... the actual foundation of the Sanctuary, and Ryuzu Meyer’s memories.”

Theta: “I’m sure you already know what happened to Ryuzu after she was swallowed by the crystal. She’s still preserved exactly as she was back then, deep in the Witch-sama’s research facility.”

Subaru: “But, this doesn’t match what I know about the crystal’s purpose at all. Echidna never mentioned that the Ryuzu Meyer in the crystal had anything to do with the Sanctuary’s barrier, but said that it was for something else...”

According to Echidna in the Citadel of Dreams, Ryuzu Meyer was sealed in the crystal for Echidna’s experiments towards attaining immortality.

By sealing Ryuzu in the crystal, cloning her, and then filling the clones with Echidna’s own memories, she would’ve been able to achieve a kind of pseudo-immortality. But either Echidna’s death or some kind of technical error meant the experiment failed to bear fruit, while, over time, the mechanism continued to automatically create more and more Ryuzu replicants.

Theta's story had mentioned nothing about this pursuit of immortality.

Instead, what Subaru heard were multiple pieces of information which he simply could not let slide.

Subaru: "Then the real reason Echidna created the Sanctuary... that guy they were trying to keep out... who is he?"

Ryuzu: "..."

Subaru: "In the story, Roswaal called him Tristitia, but I've never seen or heard anything about this guy before. I didn't even know he existed until now. This whole time, I believed the person chasing Echidna was the Witch of Envy."

The Witch of Envy, who destroyed the six Witches of Sin.

Subaru had been convinced that the being he'd met in the dream was the one who cornered Echidna. But the character in the story turned out to be someone else entirely, someone Subaru had not heard even the vaguest mention of until now. His confusion was only natural.

However, the fact that he was called Tristitia did give Subaru some ideas, as much as he wished that they weren't true.

Subaru: "The Seven Deadly Sins are Pride, Envy, Wrath, Sloth, Greed, Gluttony, and Lust... But I heard it used to be different, and there were a few sins that got absorbed."

The Seven Deadly Sins was a term that made the heart of those of someone of Subaru's ilk flutter. And so, Subaru had naturally dabbled in some of this trivia, and after mobilizing his memories, he found what he was looking for.

Subaru: "If I remember correctly... Tristitia and Vainglory used to be counted among the Deadly Sins."

Before they were excluded from the other seven, Tristitia and Vainglory were once considered Deadly Sins. And if Tristitia existed, then it wouldn't be strange for Vainglory to exist as well. If other Sins aside from the widely known Witches existed...

Theta: "It'd help me a lot if you could figure out on your own why I couldn't talk about some of these memories freely."

Subaru: “Why you couldn’t...?”

Subaru furrowed his brows as a wily grin unbefitting of Theta’s appearance rose onto her face.

Theta: “It was just like you said, Su-bo. Outside of these memories, I haven’t heard a lick about anyone called Tristitia, either. Anyone else you ask would give you the same answer. Though the world may have forgotten the names of the Witches of Sin, their existence is still told in legends. But the fact that no one knows that a being with such immense power even existed... is simply terrifying.”

Subaru: “———”

Theta’s downcast gaze spoke volumes of her apprehension.

Indeed, something was strange about all this. The Witch of Envy had been passed down through the generations as a synonym of horror and hate. Although the memories of the other Witches had been reduced to nothing but beings who were consumed by the Witch of Envy, their existence still remained in history.

Yet, not even a single shadow of Tristitia’s existence remained. Was it only a coincidence that the topic never came up around Subaru or Theta?

—Was it really possible that Subaru, who had attended the Witches’ tea party and met all those Witches, had not picked up even a whiff of this person’s existence?

Subaru: “—That first-generation Roswaal... did he die? If he did, then what’s with his descendant, the current Roswaal? Is he from a different branch of the family?”

Theta: “He did not die in battle. That’s what I heard, at least. From just the memories I saw, he must’ve been on the verge of death, but somehow managed to hang onto life. Although, I assume he would not have recovered to live a normal life... After what happened, this first-generation Roswaal, who should have gone on to reach the pinnacle of the magical arts, instead delved deeper and deeper into more sinister magic.”

Surely, Theta must’ve done everything she could in order to learn the truth. She alone would have had the most reason to want to verify whether those memories about Tristitia were genuine.

But, judging from the vagueness of her answer, it would seem that she did not succeed in her efforts.

Subaru: “If the original purpose of the Sanctuary was to keep Tristitia away from Echidna, and Ryuzu Meyer assented to Echidna’s plan and sacrificed herself to protect the Sanctuary... Then the crystal’s function to create replicants was something that came later...?”

Theta: “The ability to generate replicants is unnecessary for a system only meant to create a barrier. Most likely, you are right. The question is, what would be the motive for installing an additional function for generating clones afterwards?”

Subaru: “If Echidna was the one behind it... then the motive would be immortality. But if it was... then I have no idea what she was thinking when she came up with that idea.”

What must Echidna have felt when she saw Ryuzu Meyer sleeping in the crystal?

Echidna knew about Tristitia. Based on Theta’s memories, that much was certain. And yet, if she did, then there was something terribly unnatural about her behavior during her conversations with Subaru.

—Just what could be the answer to this newborn, isolated awryness?

Subaru: “Am I seriously still missing pieces...?”

Gritting his teeth, Subaru vexed over the missing piece keeping him from seeing the picture.

Finally, he scratched his head, deciding to postpone answering this question for now. And, the last part of Ryuzu’s story that Subaru could not let slide was,

Subaru: “—Beatrice lost her friend in the end.”

Theta: “...She did.”

Ryuzu Meyer was bashful and timid. Beatrice proud and stubborn.

Chances are, Ryuzu Meyer and Beatrice never even recognized their friendship until their very, very last moment together.

When Ryuzu Meyer melted into that crystal, just how much did that final, curse-like show of love wound Beatrice's heart?

Was it because of this parting that Beatrice rejected everyone for all of four-hundred years?

Subaru: "She lost someone in a painful way, and she's too afraid to hope again... It's not like I can't understand that feeling."

He could still remember Beatrice as she rejected his hand and begged him to let her die.

Was her reluctance to place hope in others the result of her four-hundred years of loneliness, of the memory of her parting with Ryuzu that first incited this isolation, and of the deep, cutting wound it had left?

Subaru felt like he could finally understand why she had become so reliant on Echidna's instruction to wait for that person, and just how much the passage of time had whittled down her heart.

The wound in Beatrice's heart from the loss of her only friend had remained an unhealable scar. If she could finally meet that person and fulfill Echidna's instruction, then perhaps her heart could be healed. But the absurd passage of time had caused the wound to fester and swell to a point it could burst.

And so, that girl felt like she was nearing her limit.

Subaru: "...Ryuzu-san, have any of you ever met Beatrice?"

Theta: "No, never. By the time the first of us were born, Beatrice-sama had already stopped coming to the Sanctuary, and she never visited since. None of the other replicants know about these memories, so I think it's best that we don't meet her."

Subaru: "-----"

Ultimately, Subaru agreed with Theta.

The real Ryuzu Meyer was sleeping inside the crystal. Although Theta looked exactly the same as the Ryuzu Meyer back then, she had no genuine memories of her time together with Beatrice. If Beatrice met Theta and the other replicants now, her wound would only widen and bring her nothing but anguish. But—

Subaru: "She absolutely needs to meet you guys."

This is necessary to get the girl, present at the moment of Sanctuary's creation, and inheritor of Ryuzu Meyer's wish, to start walking again.

Subaru: "So can I take that as all the reasons you went into hiding and tried to conceal the past?"

Theta: "...Yes. That is all. The Warlock they called Tristitia that seemed to exist nowhere outside of Ryuzu Meyer's memories... That thing existed, but the truth remains nowhere. It's overwhelmingly odd."

Subaru: "I agree. There must be something more to this, and to Echidna's attitude as well."

Theta: "And actually... there is one more thing."

Subaru furrowed his brows as Ryuzu interrupted, lowering her gaze. She kept her eyes off Subaru as she continued,

Theta: "If this Sanctuary was created by Ryuzu Meyer... by the wish of our progenitor... how could we break this barrier erected using her life as a sacrifice? I lack the courage to do it."

Subaru: "-----"

Theta: "The times have changed. We are separated by centuries from Ryuzu Meyer's era. The treatment of half-bloods, the persecution and ostracism experienced by the generation who lived through the Witch of Envy's reign of terror, must have improved somewhat by now... I understand why people would urge for this place to be liberated so they could set their sights to the outside world..."

Subaru: "...Of course, I can't say that everything is perfect. Discrimination is still around everywhere. And I'm sure you'll face a lot of unpleasantness if you leave. But..."

Subaru's thoughts turned to the scene in the Royal Palace. To Emilia, in the Royal Selection Hall, who put her thoughts and ideals into words while she withstood the malevolence directed at her in turn.

Surely, a world where Emilia's ideals are achieved would be a world where the people of the Sanctuary would be safe, and where Ryuzu Meyer's wish would be fulfilled.

Subaru: “When Emilia’s dream is realized, this ended Sanctuary will be born anew. Because once all her dreams come true... everyone in this world would be able to call it their Sanctuary.”

Theta: “———”

No doubt, Emilia would endeavor to make it happen. And though he couldn’t say for sure, at least half of the other Royal Selection candidates must also strive for such a world.

After all, no person’s value should be determined by their race. One day, this idea which comes so naturally to Subaru would certainly be accepted far and wide.

Theta: “It’s only a dream. But it certainly is pleasant to the ears.”

Subaru: “Yeah. So, does that mean I’ve got your heart fluttering?”

Theta: “Flirting with an old hag like myself, what a sinful man you are, Su-bo.”

Holding back the chuckles in the back of her throat, Theta’s youthful features instantly took on an elderly hue. Then, watching Subaru’s tongue-in-cheek shrug, Theta’s expression brightened once more,

Theta: “Seeing how much I want to be duped by those pleasant words, I guess I’m really getting old.”

Subaru: “Or maybe it’s just the little girl inside you falling for my dangerous charms.”

Theta: “Pfft.”

Subaru: “That’s the first time I got scoffed off by a Ryuzu-san, you know!”

Flinging his hands into the air and then down again, Subaru slumped in defeat. Theta only shook her head at Subaru’s strange behavior and set her empty cup on the table. Then, looking up at the crisscrossed silver shields on the wall,

Theta: “A time when the world outside this Sanctuary—— also becomes a Sanctuary, huh.”

Subaru: “That time will come. And when it does, it’ll be a shame if you are still holed up in here. There’s nothing more fun than flipping the middle finger at all these assholes telling you to give up, after all.”

True worth comes from overcoming something that no one else thought you could.

That's what all challenges and battles are.

Because the most magnificent struggle is one chasing after an impossible dream.

Theta: “—Alright, Su-bo. I'll go along with you and Emilia-sama's dreams.”

Subaru: “Theta-san...”

Theta: “I've already decided from the start. Were you to be the first one to reach me, I'd tell you the story and leave the decision to you. Now that you've heard the story, I see you still want to liberate the Sanctuary... and you even managed to laugh off my concerns.”

Subaru: “I don't think I can muster enough bravado to actually laugh it off though...”

Theta: “Even so, that's fine. Mm, that's fine.”

As if letting go of some heavy burden, Theta nodded several times to Subaru's answer.

From her reaction, Subaru could sense that she had finally reached out her hand from the prison of those memories which, she had no one to share with during all those years. Whether or not to take that hand and bring her to the outside world—that was the decision she had left to him.

Subaru: “So now, there's no longer any Ryuzu-sans opposed to liberating the Sanctuary, right?”

Theta: “Right... But this won't mean anything until the Sanctuary's barrier is released. It is still up to Emilia-sama to pass the Trials, that much hasn't changed.”

Just when Subaru gave himself a relieved pat on the chest for eliminating one outstanding issue, Theta pulled him back to reality. Hearing this, Subaru's relaxed cheeks tensed once more.

It was certainly a relief that he found Theta. But the fact that many more problems remain unresolved hadn't changed.

He managed to find Theta before Garfiel could. But Emilia is still missing, even now.

Theta: “You are confident in Emilia-sama's chances of overcoming the Trial, then?”

Subaru: “I’ve tried all sorts of things to encourage her... rather, hoped would encourage her. But the medicine might’ve been too strong and now I’m having a bit of trouble tracking her down. We are hoping for a quick solution.”

Theta: “Y—you don’t know where she is!? Y—you sure this is going to work!? After everything I’ve told you about my past just now, you realize if Emilia bungles this, all of my resolve is going to waste!?”

Subaru: “You are totally right to be worried so I can’t exactly complain, but... Well, after hearing your story, I thought of something.”

Ryuzu Meyer sacrificed her life in order to protect the Sanctuary. The way she placed others before herself to the very, very end was a lot like that girl who always prioritized others to her own detriment. Even if her heart was being withered by endless anguish and mounting hardships, Subaru would not believe for a second that that girl would lose sight of her responsibility and of the hopes placed in her.

Subaru: “I think I might know where she is.”

Theta: “———”

Subaru: “And even if that’s not it, we’ll turn this little Sanctuary upside down to find her. Even now, my buddy must be half in tears looking all over the place. And if that still isn’t enough to find her, then that just leaves the one place we couldn’t look.”

Seeing Subaru’s conviction, the slightly panicked Theta relinquished a long sigh. Without asking for further confirmation, she only continued with “In that case...”,

Theta: “If you are saying you will be able to find Emilia and have her pass the Trials... then Gar-bo would be the last hurdle.”

Subaru: “Just from the fragments I heard from Sigma-san, his past was about his parting with his mother. You were also in the Tomb at the time, do you know anything about that?”

Theta: “It’s only to be expected... That child is extremely averse to talking about his family. Maybe part of it is because he’s worried how I’d feel... And he’s had a hard time dealing with what happened with Frederica.”

Frederica and Garfiel's parting became final when he swiped away her hand as she left for the outside world.

As for why Garfiel stayed behind in the Sanctuary, perhaps it was to protect the residents who couldn't leave, unlike his quarter-blood sister and himself, from the potential threats that might endanger them.

—And then, consistent with Echidna's hint about Garfiel's fear of the outside world, there was,

Subaru: "The trauma of his parting with his mother, huh. He must hate the outside world. I was really kinda hoping he'd be able to help me out with a few things outside, though."

Theta: "Su-bo and Gar-bo fighting side-by-side... hm. Mm, that does sound nice."

When she thinks of Garfiel, Theta's smiling visage would lose all its youthful impression, but simply overflow with maternal compassion for her grandson.

Perhaps, for the four of them playing the role of Ryuzu, even if it resided within each of them separately, the emotion of familial love for Garfiel certainly existed. And surely, Garfiel felt the same towards them.

Subaru: "...Well, first I'll need to find Emilia."

He must continue to prepare for the worst case regarding Garfiel.

Now that he had sealed the Contract with Roswaal— with this being one of the victory conditions of the bet, his final confrontation with Garfiel was inevitable.

And the same went for Emilia breaking through the Trials, which Roswaal had deemed impossible, but aside from providing encouragements, Subaru would have to let her overcome that on her own. When she lost her bond with Puck, Emilia had lost the supporting beam of her heart. And in exchange, the lid on her inadmissible memories preventing her from truly facing the First Trial was now gone.

Or at least it should be, provided everything was going according to Puck's plan. Once she accepts this fact and faces the Trial once more, she should be presented with a different scene than what she has been seeing thus far.

Would Emilia still be able to give the same answer when that happens?

—Even though Natsuki Subaru could not be there with her in that moment, he had made it his duty to do everything in his power to make sure she does when the time comes.

Subaru: “I know you probably want to give Garfiel a hug right now, but could you stay here for a bit, Theta-san? Since that guy doesn’t want to come close to this place, we can keep him distracted for a little longer.”

Theta: “And while Gar-bo’s attention is elsewhere, you’ll be up to some clever mischief, I assume?”

Subaru: “Why does everyone wanna refer to what I’m doing as «mischief» and «nefarious plotting»? Do you guys really see me as that kind of conniving scoundrel?”

Seeing Subaru tilt his head, Theta didn’t give an answer.

Slightly irritated by her silence, Subaru sighed and scratched his head.

Subaru: “So... am I still right to think that today’s the decisive day and tomorrow’s an extra...? If Emilia’s where I think she is, all that’s left to deal with is Garfiel and Roswaal.”

Those two would be the final bottlenecks to achieving the Sanctuary’s victory conditions.

He and Otto had carefully planned to keep those two out of the way. But now, everything will depend on their timing, preparations, and how well they’ve done their job. Their chances increase in proportion to the perfection of their timing and length of their prep time— That much was obvious.

Subaru: “Whether we are laughing or crying, we have to settle everything by the day after tomorrow. We can’t mess up at the critical moment... Right, Theta-san?”

Theta: “Even if you look at me for agreement, what do you want me to say? —When a man’s resolve is all over his face, all that’s left is to go for it. I’ll be waiting with great expectations.”

Without sharing in Subaru’s enthusiasm, Theta affirmed his intentions all the same.

The awkward smile on her face might very well have been something which often adorned Ryuzu Meyer’s face. Surely, that expression was one Beatrice knew well.

He would persuade Garfiel, support Emilia, and fetch Beatrice.

There was still much to be done, and many more obstacles to stand in his way. Storm clouds were gathering overhead, with no easy answer to clear them all away.

Nevertheless, Subaru's heart was strangely optimistic.

That's because the things he needed to do were the same as the things he wanted to do.

No matter how difficult it would be to surmount the towering obstacles before his eyes, it was infinitely better than the time he'd spent utterly lost as to what to do. At last, Subaru was ready to reach out towards that intangible thing named fate.

He pulled on his own cheeks, letting go with a peal as he pumped himself up. Giving the wide-eyed Theta a smile and a little wave, Subaru headed for the building's exit.

Then, with his hand on the door, he glanced back as if suddenly remembering something, and,

Subaru: "Actually, Ryuzu Meyer talked in a way that's pretty normal for her age, so how come the replica Ryuzu-sans all talk like grannies? Is that like an acquired trait?"

Theta: "What are you talking about? —Do I not talk in a way that's completely normal for my age?"

With an indignant snort, Theta placed her hands on her hips and puffed out her flat chest.

But calling that a gesture suited for her age would surely be impossible.

Picturing the other girl in a dress who had passed the ages without the slightest growth in her body, Subaru left the building, bathed in the wind.

Holding onto that somewhat uplifting feeling, he turned to his final challenge.

—Natsuki Subaru's fight to end the Sanctuary, and to birth it anew, had begun.

Arc 4 Chapter 105 - The Travelling Merchant's Trap

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 4 “Lies, Liars, and Con Artists”, Part 6

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Garfiel: “———”

Crumpling his nose, an abrupt sense of awryness compelled Garfiel to stop.

His wind-like figure carried by ground-breaking strides broke to a sudden halt. Jamming his right foot into the soft earth, sweeping up clouds of dust, Garfiel stooped his posture low, turning his head to and fro, sniffing and scrutinizing the scents in the air.

He was in the forest surrounding the Sanctuary, searching for the missing Ryuzu within the barrier's bounds. He'd already checked all the places he thought she could be and had gone back and forth more times than he could count in search of her small, familiar figure.

All the while, his heart raced in panic from an ominous sense of foreboding.

He could sense that things weren't going his way. Outsiders were throwing their weight around in the Sanctuary, and even Ryuzu was acting strangely— She wasn't even consulting him before making decisions anymore.

Garfiel: “Damn it... The hell's goin' on.”

Clawing at his short blond hair, Garfiel traced his finger over the white scar on his forehead.

Garfiel had a habit to touch this scar whenever he was confused, lost, or when his heart had lost its calm, as a reminder to compose himself. Tracing his finger over the scar, he'd remember the time when he was at his most foolish, when he received this life-long wound— and immediately regain his composure.

Most people who knew Garfiel would judge his personality to be crude and hasty. They would've gotten this impression from Garfiel's outlandish conduct and appearance, but actually, that would be a mistake.

In reality, Garfiel Tinsel was surprisingly coolheaded and self-assured, constantly urging himself to think. Garfiel made this a matter of discipline— because he was keenly aware that brute strength alone isn't enough to get what he wants.

What does he need to know and do to see his wish fulfilled? It was to answer this question that Garfiel single-mindedly cultivated his unshakable code. But—

Garfiel: "Still... everyone's goin' around doin' whatever th'fuck they like... Tch."

In frustration and anguish, Garfiel bared his sharp canine teeth, grunting.

Indeed, the situation was slipping further and further out of his grip. But since unshakable codes required unshakable conviction, Garfiel was terrible when it came to flexible thinking.

All along, Garfiel had only one answer, and one stance, towards the Sanctuary's liberation. Regardless of the countless branching routes along the way, it was the one point which he must never concede. And so, he had taken every possible care to think everything through to the end.

But Ryuzu's unilateral decisions and the outsiders' underhanded tactics never figured into his considerations.

Sadly, although Garfiel never stopped thinking, he had neither experience nor any exceptional intellect to draw on. All he had was desperate tenacity, and nothing more.

Garfiel: "———Hk."

Taking a sharp sniff, Garfiel's golden pupils narrowed into slits.

Catching the scent, the hair on his back stood on end as he swiftly bent his knees, leapt— and resumed his prowling. Stepping on tree branches and using them to launch himself ever faster and higher, he soared unbound through the foliage, chasing that scent.

Garfiel: "All clumped together... The hell are they planning, hah!?"

Clicking his fangs, he put his agitation to voice as he roared. Expelling a growl like that of a feline beast, Garfiel's eyes blazed with rage.

What his nose had caught was the stench of an exceedingly large assembly of many living beings. The stench of sweat, the stench of trodden grass and soil, the stench of tension seeping out of anxious human bodies, the stench, the stench, the stench—

Garfiel: “———!!”

It was nothing less than the stench of a mass of humans on the move. More than ten, closer to fifty. There was only one group in the Sanctuary capable of fielding such numbers at this time.

—The refugees from the village near Roswaal's mansion.

The same ingrates who had fled here seeking refuge. What are they planning, mobilizing at a time like this? Is this how they repay the people who took them in?

Garfiel: “That son of’a bitch... Told him not to fuck with me...!”

That contemptible youth with short black hair appeared in Garfiel mind.

That boy, whose sharp eyes stood in stark contrast to his conspicuous frivolousness. And yet his gaze was also occasionally lucid and piercing, as if he could see right through Garfiel.

That gaze, which always seemed to be looking towards some indeterminable place, reminded Garfiel of another man he despised. And Garfiel loathed him because of it.

No doubt, this youth whom he had never liked was behind all this.

The refugees were moving at his instigation, that much was clear. For some inexplicable reason, they placed their overwhelming trust in this youth.

He had no strength, no apparent special powers, and his only proficiency seemed to be his ability to prattle. As far as Garfiel was concerned, he was the most loathsome, weak, foolish, and selfish creature in the world.

But now, Garfiel couldn't help but think that he should have dealt with him sooner. There had been plenty of chances, that boy had left himself wide open, and yet his eerie, unnerving resolve in the face of overwhelming odds caused Garfiel to stay his hand.

The reward for his hesitation was the current predicament.

And above all, the forces threatening the stability of the Sanctuary were now taking advantage of the fact that he'd lost sight of Ryuzu, his only family, to do whatever they pleased. No matter what, he will not allow a single refugee to leave the Sanctuary.

A different stance would have been taken if this were to happen a couple of days ago, but the situation had changed by now.

Garfiel: "...Does that bastard know 'bout Granny?"

In the place Garfiel called the Experimental Grounds and Ryuzu called the progenitor's room, was a crystal in which a girl named Ryuzu Meyer was sleeping.

Honestly, Garfiel had very little interest in that crystal. Although the girl sleeping there looks exactly like his only family, if what laid inside her was different, then she was someone else entirely. If any entity that looked like Ryuzu should be considered Ryuzu, then Garfiel already had over twenty of them at hand.

It would be impossible for Garfiel to harbor the same love and attachment towards the girl in the crystal, and he had no intention to try.

Garfiel held an absolute ability to command the replicants sharing his grandmother's face. Nevertheless, his temperament dictated he would do everything to avoid using it. Garfiel didn't enjoy ordering others around and seeing someone obeying his every command would give him an indescribable sense of irritation.

That was all he felt about the girl inside the crystal. He held no other sentiment towards her beyond that. Although Garfiel liked to think of himself as broad-minded, being broad-hearted was a different matter.

He never had much to give. He was just two arms, two legs, and a body.

There was only so much he could offer, and it was important to choose whom he offered it to. And so, Garfiel only cared for the people he loved.

Garfiel: "So... If y'think I'm gonna go gentle on ya, y'couldn't be more mistaken, y'naive fucks."

Kicking hard into the trunk of a tree, Garfiel leapt high above the forest. He hugged his knees as he somersaulted through the air before touching down and sending up a torrent of fallen leaves in his wake. The earth caved beneath his feet, and the screeching brays of ground dragons filled the gaps between the trees. The impact of his landing spread over the earth, as Garfiel slowly straightened his back.

This time, Garfiel crumpled his nose not to trace a scent, but to display his fury. Clicking his neck and gritting his razor fangs, he glared straight ahead with eyes alight with wrath. Standing before Garfiel were two carriages, arranged in a line.

The dragons pulling the carriages are shocked by Garfiel and his murderous presence, going into a state of extreme agitation as the coachman frantically calls out to calm them. Said coachman was a familiar face to Garfiel.

Garfiel: "Just when I was wonderin' who it is, if it ain't th'noisy bro. Hah! Should've guessed. If that bastard's dupin' anyone into this, it'd be you."

Otto: "That statement is awfully... Oh, never mind, I know all too well what people think of me..."

Garfiel stuck his hands into his trousers' pockets, while the driver, a troubled-looking youth with longish grey hair, Otto, gave him a wry smile. Skillfully controlling the reins, once he had managed to calm the agitated dragons, Otto let out a small sigh.

Garfiel: "Y'act like it's no big deal, but ground dragon usually pack their bags 'n run off when I'm serious 'bout threatenin' 'em."

Otto: "I had to persuade them pretty hard to make sure that didn't happen, you know. And besides, I've informed them beforehand that you'd be coming."

Garfiel: "Hah—?"

Unable to believe what he'd just heard, Garfiel's ears twitched at Otto's statement. His fingers unconsciously reached for his forehead as he stepped forward, intending to ask Otto what he was trying to say.

Garfiel: "What's that supposed t'mean? You thought y'could slip outta here thanks t'the chaos and then got yerself caught when I found ya. Ain't that what happened here?"

Otto: "Yeah, you are exactly right. Taking advantage of chaotic situations is bread and butter for us merchants. But just when I'd been promised a handsome reward and was about to succeed without incident..."

Garfiel: "..."

Otto buried his face in his hands, his schemes ruined. But, sensing a certain calmness in Otto's gestures and words, Garfiel's confusion only deepened.

This isn't the attitude of someone whose plans had just been foiled. In fact, doesn't his expression look just like Roswaal's when everything was playing right into his hands?

Garfiel: "That attitude and that fuckin' expression... Y'look just like the fuckin' asshole I hate th'most in this world."

Otto: "That's yet another horrible appraisal... But, just for reference's sake, mind if I ask which one you are referring to? I really want to be improving our relationship from now on."

Garfiel: "Hah! Me 'n you? Don't make me laugh, moron— The asshole I hate th'most in this world is loungin' in th'nicest room in th'Sanctuary, bein' waited on by a professional this very fuckin' moment."

Otto: "I see, I see... Must be tough, when the one you have your heart set on is falling head over heels for your love rival. I do sympathize with your plight."

Garfiel: "Y'want me t'force yer fuckin' mouth shut? Oy!?"

Garfiel smacked his tongue in annoyance as Otto mocked his feelings for Ram.

Indeed, Garfiel could have settled this with force if such was his wish. This escape attempt had already failed the moment Garfiel found out about it.

They were not going anywhere. But as long as they didn't try to force their way through, Garfiel saw no need for any unnecessary violence.

His first order of business should be settling this matter quickly and returning to the Sanctuary.

His priority was to preserve the Sanctuary, and this was nothing but a minor distraction.

Garfiel: "Anyway, now yer escape plan has failed. If that son of'a bitch is here, tell him t'come out. He better start apologizin' for pullin' this shit, or there's gonna be pain."

Garfiel needed somewhere to vent his pent-up frustration. And besides, Garfiel needed to know just what that youth, what Natsuki Subaru was thinking, pulling a stunt like this.

He'd boasted that he would break through the Trials and liberate the Sanctuary only a couple of days ago. Even considering the possibility he had lost heart, it had happened excessively quickly. Said more frankly, it was an excessive lack of willpower. Garfiel would take those screwy ideas of his, slap them into better order, and—

Otto: "Ehh, unfortunately, I'm afraid I won't be able to meet that request."

Garfiel: "Ahhhh?"

Otto: "Haven't you noticed? You said it yourself, I'm wearing the face of the man you hate the most in this world. Then surely, you don't expect me to do something that hated man wouldn't do?"

Garfiel: "——"

Ambiguous and roundabout, Garfiel couldn't understand what Otto was insinuating.

But Garfiel could tell that those were not statements he could just let slide. And above all, the fact that he was wearing the same face as that man he despised, Roswaal's face, meant that everything was going to plan.

Garfiel: "...Th'fuck are you plottin', oy."

Otto: "Oh right. Speaking of that face you and I both know, I guess you can call it the «I'm totally plotting something» face?"

Otto rubbed his nose as he said this, looking like he had just done something mischievous. Garfiel narrowed his eyes, and only now noticed the strangeness of this scene. There were two carriages, Otto, and two ground dragons before him— But there was no driver on the driver's platform in the rear carriage.

Rather, the full extent of the abnormality was far greater than that.

Garfiel: "How come... when th'dragon freaked and jolted the carriages... none of the bastards inside showed their fuckin' faces?"

Otto: "Hmm, I wonder why that would be?"

Otto shrugged, playing dumb, while doing nothing to stop the pale-faced Garfiel from approaching the carriages. Garfiel swiftly hopped onto the back of the carriage and wrenched open the flap to the passenger deck.

And, when he saw what was inside, Garfiel made a deafening clench of his teeth.

Otto: "—There's no one there, you know?"

Garfiel: "No shit... Guh. Th'fuck is going on! I smelled th'stENCH of a whole fuckin' crowd of'em movin' with the carriage...!"

Sending spit flying as he stepped into the passenger deck, Garfiel's sentence abruptly trailed off halfway.

At his feet, strewn all over the passer deck, were piles of clothing. Countless articles— men's, women's, adults' and children's, all dumped together. Meanwhile, faced with this sight, Garfiel's cheeks contorted as he realized that his nose had been deceived by this remarkably simple trick.

Garfiel: "Kh... It's a fuckin' trick...!"

Otto: "I told the other carriages to wait a bit before setting out, and they should all be leaving the Sanctuary by different routes right about now. Not even your legs will be able to catch them in time."

Garfiel: "Different routes? Th'fuck you talkin' about. There ain't another easy way outta here except this fuckin' path! They'll get lost on the way like sittin' ducks waitin' for me t'fetch'em. And I can cross through th'barrier, if y'didn't know."

Otto: "You are right, I don't know a whole lot about you. But..."

Jumping off the carriage and landing directly in front of Otto, Garfiel lunged a step forward upon hearing Otto's reply as agitation surged in his chest.

Otto: "...I doubt you know much about me, either."

Garfiel: "-----"

Otto: "You are the kind of guy who doesn't give a damn about someone like me. And you have nothing but contempt for people like Natsuki-san and myself, who do nothing but talk. And so, you paid no attention to what I was doing, or even what I'm doing right now."

Garfiel: "Th'fuck are you sayin'?"

Otto: "What I'm trying to say is, I wasn't just wandering around the forest over the past few days and spending my nights in the stables with the ground dragons for no reason at all. I was uncovering escape routes that don't rely on this road and teaching it to them!"

Otto flung up both his arms and announced this with a triumphant expression.

Hearing this, Garfiel's jaw dropped as his sharp eyes widened.

Teaching? Teaching it to who? The carriage drivers? That doesn't connect with what he was saying just now. Unless, did he mean he was in the stables talking to the ground dragons? If that was the case, then,

Garfiel: "That bastard's duped ya pretty hard, huh..."

Otto: "Wha—!? I'm having a bit of trouble accepting that interpretation just now!"

Garfiel gives a sympathetic gaze as Otto kicks up a noisy fuss. This is his usual behavior, the kind of thing he's always doing when Garfiel spots him around Sanctuary.

But, seeing normal behavior in this context was, indeed, abnormal.

Garfiel: "Either way, yer headin' back now. I'll find th'others 'n drag 'em back as well."

Otto: "They would've dispersed in different directions by now, so you won't catch them. But if you still want to go after them, I was told to tell you this— «The refugees know nothing about the truth of Sanctuary, nor about Ryuzu-san. You lose nothing by letting them go». So, what do you say?"

Garfiel: "He's planned this from th'start...?"

The message almost certainly came from Subaru. He had perfectly grasped the reason why Garfiel didn't want anyone to leave. The feeling of being more and more entangled in another person's plots does ignite Garfiel's irritation, but if what Otto said was true, he has lost his reason to go chasing after the evacuees.

Garfiel: "But y'expect me t'just believe that...?"

Otto: "Suspicious one, aren't you? But I'll just say this. None of us, Natsuki-san included, wants to worsen our relations with the people of the Sanctuary. In fact, we'd like to see the Sanctuary liberated under the most amicable conditions... and right now, it looks like you are the one getting in the way of that."

Garfiel: "...I've no interest in makin' friends or gettin' in th'way of it. 'Slong as y'stay inside."

Otto: "Why get so caught up on the details?"

Garfiel: "That's not fuckin' negotiable."

Otto showed an expression of astonishment while Garfiel exhaled a heavy sigh.

Although he voiced his suspicions, Garfiel judged that it was probably the truth. The fact that Subaru left this message meant he knew Garfiel's reasons for wanting to keep everyone inside— And so, naturally, it would've made sense for Subaru to keep whatever secrets he'd uncovered hidden from the refugees.

Garfiel: "But just... Why go t'the effort of pulling all these stunts to get 'em out of th'Sanctuary? What makes him think they're gonna get hurt if they stay here? What happened t'trustin' the people y'wanna be friends with?"

Otto: "In that case, I can think of a name that'd be pretty high on the list. But I asked him as well, and Natsuki-san said it's insurance. And... for buying time as well."

Garfiel: “———”

The moment Garfiel heard the words “buying time”, his expression stiffened. Why on earth would they need to be “buying time”? Garfiel wet his lips with his tongue, and,

Garfiel: “What th’hell are you tryin’ t’do...?”

Otto: “Just making sure that a boy and girl can have some private time together without getting bothered by nosy peepers, you know.”

With an exhausted yet accomplished expression, Otto slowly shook his head.

Garfiel was just about to object to this frivolous reply when he saw Otto’s expression and stopped. Because it was not the face of someone telling a lie.

That means he was speaking the truth. And the boy and the girl must be Subaru and Emilia.

Garfiel: “———”

A gut feeling immediately told him that those two must not be allowed to meet.

The bestial blood coursing through his veins instinctively knew this.

Garfiel’s face sprang up as he turned to the direction of the village. If he allows Subaru and Emilia to meet, something unthinkable is going to happen. The Sanctuary will be liberated, and——

Garfiel: “———”

There’s no way they can do it, Garfiel’s rationality told him. He himself had seen how Emilia was broken by the merciless Trial. And just yesterday she had lost the primary support of her heart.

How could that girl, crushed and beaten by her own nightmare, recover in the span of a day?

Yet Garfiel’s instinct screamed for him to rush over there and stop them.

In the Trial of the Past, even considering they were shown different pasts, all challengers are presented with their most unpleasant memories.

Garfiel was shown his when he foolishly stepped into the Tomb.

Just thinking back on it made all the blood drain from his body as an unbearable hollowness breached into his heart. From that point onwards, he had always told himself to be strong, so strong that he would never have to betray his decision. That was how deep the Trial had cut into his heart.

Garfiel: "Th'situation's changed. I'm goin' back to th'Sanctuary. I gotta find 'em and change their minds before they..."

Otto: "And you think I'm just going to let you go?"

Garfiel: "-----"

Just as Garfiel turned to head towards the village, Otto called out to stop him.

But Garfiel's response was fierce.

Otto: "—Ugh, kh."

Garfiel: "Shut up 'n take a nap. I ain't got time t'play with you."

Closing the distance with a single step, Garfiel drove his fist into Otto's stomach. Avoiding the ribs, Garfiel aimed straight for Otto's gut, sending him flying backwards, foaming at the mouth as he crashed to the ground.

Garfiel had gone easy on him. He had put in more than enough force to knock Otto unconscious, but in terms of payback for the trick he'd played on him, Garfiel was being more than merciful.

Clicking his tongue at the fallen Otto, Garfiel lightly dug his heels into the earth, and—

Otto: "—Whe... re do you think you're... going?"

Garfiel: "—!?"

—Just when he was about to launch into his sprint, Garfiel stopped.

Dumbstruck, he glanced back and saw that Otto was standing. He was holding his stomach, coughing and drooling, but conscious, nonetheless.

Garfiel: "Th'fuck? I wasn't tryin' t'kill ya, but that punch should'a knocked y'clean out, oy!"

Otto: "Is that right...? Then... I guess I'm... tougher than you thought. Yeah... looks like the daily workouts were worth it after all... A travelling merchant's body is their greatest capital, they say... It pays to stay healthy..."

Otto gave a painful chuckle while an ominous feeling compelled Garfiel to properly turn around.

One more blow and he'll definitely go down. No more going easy this time. He'll aim for the head instead. It'll probably leave a scar, but it'll knock him out for sure.

Garfiel: "This one's gonna hurt, so better clench yer teeth 'n..."

Otto: "You are still... going easy on me...? You know... that half-assed attitude is exactly why you are gonna lose!"

As Garfiel leaned forward preparing his next strike, Otto screamed back. Glaring at Garfiel with bloodshot eyes, Otto swung his arm with all the strength he could muster.

The next instant, a screen of leaves was flung up, covering Garfiel's vision, creating a momentary opening.

Garfiel: "What th—!?"

Startled by the sudden reversal, Garfiel's body froze still. And—

Otto: "Eat this—!!"

Alongside Otto's throat-tearing shriek, a burst of light pierced through the screen of dancing leaves—

—Swallowing Garfiel's body into a radiance of blinding red.

Arc 4 Chapter 106 - Otto Suwen

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 4 “Lies, Liars, and Con Artists”, Part 8, and Volume 13, Chapter 5 “Otto Suwen”, Parts 3

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken – Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Grimacing at the blistering heat on his skin, Garfiel violently kicked at the fallen leaves around him.

Garfiel: “Th’guy’s got guts, I’ll give’em that.”

It was a growl of irritation, but also of honest praise.

“Your half-assed attitude is why you are going to lose”— That was what Otto told him. And he was absolutely right. Thinking Otto had no combat capabilities, Garfiel had completely underestimated him.

Garfiel: “Fire stones... The hell’s he tryin’ t’do’ with somethin’ as biteless as that?”

A momentary, vision-obscuring screen of flames.

With his annoyance still fresh on his mind, Garfiel thought back on that flash of searing heat. All smoke and mirrors, it stung, but its damage was no more than that of a sunburn. Yet, one thing was certain,

Garfiel: “If he’d used somethin’ more deadly I wouldn’t ‘ve gotten off this easy...”

In that fatal moment, his opponent made an unexpected choice.

What else to call it if not an act of mercy? The opponent he held back on and failed to knock unconscious turned around and taught him a lesson instead.

That was just way too wretched and stupid.

Garfiel: “Gotta be fuckin’ kiddin’ me...!”

What was even more infuriating was how his opponent completely ignored him while he was blinded by the flames and just straight-up ran away. By the time Garfiel thought to chase him, Otto was already nowhere to be found.

soft soil and fallen leaves. He certainly managed a skillful escape on what should've been unfamiliar terrain. Otto wasn't lying about scouting around the forest at night.

Nevertheless, if this turned into a genuine chase scene, there would be no way he could escape Garfiel. Every ten steps that Otto ran, Garfiel was able to cover in two. Such was the enormity of the physical difference between their bloodlines.

But Otto had this covered as well.

Garfiel: “—Gh! Th'hell!? This... Argh! Fuck, my nose ain't workin'!”

The moment Garfiel tried to sniff for Otto's scent, an intense, painful stench pierced his nostrils. Recoiling from the stench, Garfiel shook his head as his vision strobed from the penetrating pain.

And that was when he saw a clear glass bottle lying on the spot where Otto had been standing. He could immediately tell that the colorless liquid flowing from the uncapped bottle was the source of that pungent scent. But that was all his nose could tell him.

Garfiel: “Son of'a bitch...! Does'he think he can beat me just by cloggin' my nose?”

Baring his fangs, Garfiel flushed with rage at his dwindling options.

Just how many traps had Otto set against him? Every step of the way, these tricks had perfectly held him in check.

Garfiel: “———”

Touching the scar on his forehead, panting, Garfiel repeated his ritual to calm himself. He drew in a deep breath to settle his heart and lungs, wrestling back his senses from being consumed by rage. Thinking about it now, there is no way Otto could keep him subdued indefinitely.

So why would Otto risk himself in such a reckless battle?

Besides, Otto challenging Garfiel in the first place was a strange development. He said his goal was to buy time—to draw Garfiel's attention, while the refugees escaped the Sanctuary via other routes.

If what he said was true, then it'd be impossible for Garfiel to stop all the carriages now.

The thought of sending the Ryuzu clones to chase them had briefly crossed Garfiel's mind, but as he does not know any of the carriages' current locations, it would amount to a futile effort. The replicants lack knowledge and experience and could only carry out very crude commands. They didn't even know when to eat their meals unless instructed to, and if they were pushed beyond their limits, they would just curl up into little balls and give up on life.

Garfiel was too sick and tired of having to run around looking for them when that happens.

Garfiel: "And in th'end, th'only one I can rely on 's myself. Hah! Same as it's always been."

He was out of options, and his nose was disabled.

But Garfiel wasn't pessimistic. He still had his powerful body. And it still had more than enough strength left to carry him through the forest and achieve his goal. No matter what Otto's objectives may have been, he dared to stand against Garfiel. Surely, when he decided to oppose him, he must've been prepared to taste Garfiel's claws and fangs.

As far as Garfiel was concerned, Otto was no simple prey any longer. This was now a hunt that would require his efforts in full, and he would not stop until he had Otto completely at his mercy.

—By the time Garfiel thought this, he had already forgotten his original intent and didn't even realize that he was falling right into Otto's plans.

Garfiel: "Where'd y'get th'fuckin' gall. That bastard left y'instructions, didn't he... Th'hell did he say?"

Just before setting out into the forest in pursuit of Otto, Garfiel turned his head, looking to the carriages Otto left behind. The carriages were decoys pretending to be carrying fleeing refugees. Yet the two ground dragons drawing them were real, and they had been quietly sitting there like it was none of their business during the entirety of Otto and Garfiel's standoff.

Garfiel: “Y’think if y’just sit there I won’t hurt ya? Cheeky bastards. Yer lucky I don’t like t’kill unless I need to.”

Shaking his head, Garfiel passed by the dragons and reached for the passenger car once more.

Countless items of clothing had been heaped inside the car to mimic the scent of fleeing villagers. Last time, Garfiel left it as soon as he confirmed this, but there might’ve been something else he’d missed. Pushing apart the piles of clothes with his feet, Garfiel scanned his eyes over the seats and walls. Nothing really stood out, and after searching a little more, he was about to descend the carriage when,

Garfiel: “—Huh?”

He saw something sticking to the back of the carriage door as he turned.

A white piece of paper fluttering in the wind, as if placed there specifically to be visible from the inside.

—Feeling a sense of foreboding, Garfiel walked up to the fluttering note, tore it off, and opened it in his hands. And, written on it was “—If you are really this gullible, then it was totally worth the trouble”.

Reading the message, Garfiel’s vision flashed furious red.

The next instant— the seats of the carriage shot up as black lumps underneath exploded in that cramped space, expelling a violent gale in the form of a storm of winged insects, drowning Garfiel’s roars to nothing.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—For the young Otto Suwen, the world was like hell’s cradle.

???: “———”

???: “xxxxxxxxx”

???: “※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※”

???: “* * * * * ! * ! *¹⁶⁰”

Day and night, without end, Otto’s ears were flooded with words that made no sense to him.

He’d sit on the floor in a daze, and the voices would come, sometimes like close-by whispers, sometimes like distant cries, sometimes like pleasant songs, and sometimes like shrieks of death, the world constantly reminded Otto of their connection.

No matter where he went in the world, the voices chased young Otto without end. Day after day without respite, the eternal echo of their discordant chorus, that useless infernal concerto, remained Otto’s constant companion.

—How could everyone live in such a noisy world like it was nothing?

In a hell where he couldn’t properly understand anyone around him, Otto asked himself that question.

His parents would hold him up and cast him words of affection, smiling. But no matter how much love was abound in those words, the dissonant clamor would consume them, never allowing them to reach Otto’s ears.

When his parents noticed that something was different about their son, they took him immediately to a doctor. He would not laugh, would not scream, and would not cry. This utter lack of emotional expression was because all external stimulus felt the same to Otto. And so, despite his worried parents, Otto spent his early childhood in emotionless indifference.

Perhaps it was fortunate the Suwens were a middle-class merchant family, wealthy enough to send their son to doctor. But no doctor could figure out what was wrong with Otto. Well, naturally. Since all Otto had in terms of symptoms was deafness from the excessive noise.

A brother two years his elder, and a brother two years his junior. Unlike Otto, his brothers grew up healthy, nourished by their parents’ love. Their parents’ attention to Otto gradually faded as the love initially portioned for three was eventually divided between two, and Otto grew distant from his parents’ warmth.

¹⁶⁰ That’s really how it is in the Web Novel.

Otto held no grudge or jealousy towards his brothers or parents. At the time, he felt no hate nor envy, nor any discernible emotion for that matter. Although Otto couldn't understand a thing they were saying, his brothers still interacted with him as patiently as they could. And besides, it was only natural that his parents would be emotionally exhausted.

If he were in his brothers' shoes back then, Otto wasn't sure that he would've been so kind to such a strange family member. For that, he was grateful.

While sounds could not reach him, written words still made communication possible. It was his older brother who first discovered this while reading a book out loud to Otto. Of course, learning to read and write proved extremely difficult. Otto could not register the sounds needed to understand those words, so it took him ten times longer than an ordinary child to memorize the sequences of letters.

Nevertheless, it did not bother him. And sadly, this was because Otto lacked the sensibility to be distressed by that fact, having no concept of what life was supposed to be like for normal children.

"Thank you, for everything"— He could still vividly remember the tears streaming down his parents' faces as they hugged him when he wrote these words on a piece of paper and showed it to them.

He didn't completely understand the concept of gratitude, but he figured it was something he ought to do. That was young Otto's decision, and when he wrote down these words out of that sense of obligation, a wave rose in his heart.

—That might've been the first time since birth that he'd cried so loudly. And indeed, it was like his second birth-wail.

???: "Ffaghatkgaoytajijijiji."

???: "Agategatagfatttetaadaertera."

???: "Miiimiiimuuumiiimeemiiimiii."

Not long after Otto's second birth-cry, he started discovering patterns within the once incomprehensible chorus of hell. And, little-by-little, Otto found that he was able to sort and selectively block out the myriad of noises assailing his eardrums.

It was around Otto's eighth birthday when he became capable of completely separating himself from the ambient noises at will. Otto was now practically a healthy child, and, like rain falling on an arid desert, he greedily soaked up everything he could.

Otto had already lost the chance to learn most of the things an eight-year-old would need to know, so although he had diligently poured his time into learning how to read and write, his comprehension level was still far behind other children his age. But, using his newfound concentration as his weapon, Otto closed that gap in no time.

From there, Otto Suwen's hidden potential bloomed. He was no longer falling behind his brothers. Or rather, his comprehension and intelligence surpassed even them. With his exceptional ability to learn, Otto soon distinguished himself among his peers—

—And spectacularly botched his interpersonal relationships, leaving him friendless.

Otto: "How does everyone live in this difficult world like it's nothing?"

Otto muttered, hugging his knees, his cheeks red and swollen courtesy of the girl he had a crush on.

At ten-years-old, Otto was diligently studying so he would not shame himself as a merchant's son. Most children of that era did not have access to education at such an early age. So Otto was certainly privileged to be able to spend his days alongside his peers this way.

The only problem was that Otto's emotional and mental age were both seven years behind other children his age.

Otto never had a chance to make the mistakes most children should have made, so, now he was able to, naturally, he erred everything he could. While he would've been forgiven had he done this when he was younger, as Otto was way past the age to be making such mistakes, everyone around him was baffled.

To make matters worse, Otto Suwen was a boy perfectly blessed with bad luck.

If you were to ask his parents, then Otto's misfortune began immediately after birth, when he nearly drowned during his first bath. And despite everyone's best efforts, he'd end up tumbling downstairs, hit by bird poop, drowning in puddles, and being generally beset by misfortune.

The reason he was not aware of this at the time was because he had never developed a concept of what misfortune was.

Looking back on it now, however, Otto shuddered at his own history. What in the world had he done in his past life, to be so abandoned by fortune?

???: “Big one, gone, gone now, it’s gone.”

???: “Shiny, shinied, shine is, faraway, shiny, shiny, shining.”

???: “Hey, monster’s coming. Hey, monster’s coming.”

It was around this time that the noises Otto was consciously blocking began to change, and the once senseless chorus became imbued with meaning. Although he still was not able to understand most of what he heard, in his efforts to transform confusion into comprehension, Otto discovered the true nature of the hell he had experienced in his early childhood.

Apparently, he could communicate with non-human creatures. Eleven years after its manifestation, Otto Suwen realized that he had this ability called the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language.

After that, hoping to discover the limits of the power bestowed upon him, Otto went all around town testing his Divine Protection. Over repeated bouts of trial and error, he found that the more intelligent the creature, the more clearly ideas could be communicated between them.

Then, he spoke with the family ground dragon in front of his older brother and confided that he’d had this ability since he was an infant.

Older Brother: “Uuh, okay. Right... So, um... Otto. That power is, um, something. Yeah, it’s really something, but... Well, just. Don’t use it where anyone can see you, okay?”

Possessing such a Divine Protection meant being blessed by the world, but not everyone welcomed the holders of such powers. It’d be one thing if the Divine Protection benefited many others, but Otto’s ability only applied to himself, and one could easily imagine all the childish mischief it could be used for.

Indeed, Otto agreed to his worried brother's suggestion. After promising his older brother, who had gone pale and was averting his eyes, Otto resolved to let no one else know about his Divine Protection.

His power was dangerous, not only to him, but to those around him as well.

A sense of duty lit up inside young Otto's heart: he must protect his beloved family.

Only three days after making his promise to his older brother, his Divine Protection of the Soul of Language became common knowledge, and all his peers shunned him entirely.

His younger brother caught him talking with the family ground dragon, and Otto reluctantly told him about his Divine Protection. Otto also told him about his older brother's concerns and that the power was incredibly dangerous.

The next day, his younger brother dragged him in front of a huge group of kids to brag about him. They watched him talk to a bug, and, for the first time in years, Otto saw hell again.

The downside to the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language was the use of the other creature's language was necessary for communication. Simply put, for Otto to talk to a ground dragon, he would have to bray like a ground dragon, and, to speak to a bug, he'd have to chirp like a bug.

It took only an instant for the name Zodda-Bug Boy to stick. From that point on, Otto sealed away his Divine Protection, never to use it again. Several years would pass before he managed to undo his tainted reputation and erase that accursed memory from everyone's minds.

When he finally achieved this, Otto was the delicate age of fourteen.

Being fourteen, all excuses for his mental immaturity stopped working. His body was steadily entering adulthood, and when his limbs had fully grown out, Otto could even be described as rather handsome.

Grey hair, and somewhat luckless, tender features. Mild eyes, and a disposition to put his all into everything he did. Young Otto had grown to possess surprisingly many characteristics that tickled the maternal instinct, and just when he began taking interest in romance, like any boy his age —

He made an enemy of the daughter of the most powerful figure in town using his Divine Protection of the Soul of Language and was banished from his hometown.

It was the winter he turned fifteen. Long story short, Otto had gotten himself involved in someone else's love scandal.

On the night of the powerful man's daughter's birthday party, the girl's boyfriend came storming in, roaring about her being with another man. His crosshairs immediately landed on Otto, who had been talking with her only moments earlier. Otto protested that he was honestly just asking her for the time, but the red-faced man lashing him with Zodda Bug Boy would hear none of it.

And when Otto heard his long-buried past suddenly dug up, even he lost his composure.

So, in order to completely clear his name, Otto unsealed his Divine Protection, and after listening to nearly every creature in town, he learned that the girl in question had been with seven different men that night and triumphantly told her hapless boyfriend— "Looks like you were the eighth!".

After the man gave him a thorough beating, the girl who had her romantic trysts exposed hired an assassin, and Otto was forced to flee the town that had seen his birth. Relying on his father's connections, he wound up working for an acquaintance's merchant company.

There, once he had learned the trade— Otto Suwen set out on his own as a travelling merchant at the age of sixteen.

Otto's journey as a travelling merchant could only be described as an uninterrupted series of misfortunes. His affinity for bad luck had not diminished over the years. He would be hit with bad weather whenever he transported fragile cargo, attacked by mountain bandits whenever he took shortcuts through the hills, and whenever he camped with other merchants, Otto would be the only one swarmed by blood-sucking insects.

The only reason Otto managed to survive these calamities was because his exceptional business ability counterbalanced his tragically poor luck.

He wasn't netting big profits, but he wasn't suffering debilitating losses either. With an uncanny sense of balance known as the bane of merchants, he managed to break exactly even, four years passing in the blink of an eye to land him at twenty years old.

The fact he never lost heart nor turned back was thanks to Frufoo, the ground dragon he'd known since he was little, whom he brought along when he was expelled from his hometown.

Honestly, Otto did have some complicated feelings about Frufoo, who was the reason his brothers found out his Divine Protection of the Soul of Language in the first place. But, for the present Otto, Frufoo was nothing less than his cherished and inseparable family.

For whatever reason, other merchants tended to shy away from teaming up with Otto, so he spent many sleepless nights speaking with Frufoo to keep his loneliness at bay. “Lad, lemme sleep already”, Frufoo would say, but Otto’s imploring always got him to stay awake for a little longer. Perhaps it was only natural that other merchants stayed well away when they saw Otto braying with his ground dragon by his fire in the dead of night.

While to a bystander, those days might seem rather uneventful, for Otto, it was a constant life and death struggle. Then one day, there came a turning point.

—He misjudged a business opportunity and utterly screwed up.

This time, Otto decided to peddle oil. It was nearly winter, so oil would sell for an outrageously high price up north in Gusteko, or so he heard from a red-faced man with a beard and an eyepatch. Otto traded all his metal wares for oil and triumphantly set his sights on Gusteko— when a sudden breakdown in diplomatic relations utterly destroyed any hope of selling his goods.

And to rub salt into his wounded heart, he quickly found out that the metal wares that he had previously struggled to sell were fetching exorbitant prices in the Capital.

Realizing that he’d been duped, Otto sensed that his travelling merchant’s life was in peril. Unless he could find a way to reverse his circumstances, he’d have no choice but to sell Frufoo. Not only that—it could even wind up with him come crying back to his family.

Otto could never allow that to happen.

It had been over five years since he last saw his family, but his love for them had not faded in the least. The fact that he could live his present life, as difficult as it may be, was all owing to his family, who never abandoned him as a child.

In the first ten years of his life, Otto had already given them a lifetime’s worth of trouble. So for those ten years of kindness, he was determined to spend the rest of his life to repay them. It was only right that debts should be repaid. After all, Otto Suwen was a merchant’s son.

—And so, when a trader he knew told him of an opportunity to make a quick profit, Otto took it.

This job wouldn't involve any merchandise, only his ground dragon's legwork. Someone was hiring dragon carriages to transport a large number of people from one place to another.

Without a second thought, Otto activated his Divine Protection of the Soul of Language and told Frufoo to rush there at full speed before anyone else. Zooming through shoddy roads, travelling along unmarked paths, and ignoring Frufoo's protests of "Let's stop already, wee bub", Otto managed to be the first to arrive. And,

???: "My my my... Just where are you going with such haste... DESU!?"

He fucked up.

A bunch of guys with deranged eyes tied him up and rolled him up in a mat, and it was then Otto realized that his misfortunes had truly, truly reached its peak. He was separated from Frufoo, stripped of his belongings, tossed into a cold cavern, and left there to wait for his joke of a life to be brought to an end.

Who could possibly understand the depth of the despair that submerged Otto's heart back then? Surely, no one.

In hopes of finding some way to escape from their evil clutches, Otto completely released the restraints on his Divine Protection of the Soul of Language as his last resort. But he was greeted by nothing but soul-crushing silence— For despite unleashing the full power of his Divine Protection of the Soul of Language and expecting to be met with the hell of early childhood...

That nostalgic, loathsome cacophony did not come.

The insects and small creatures that were supposed to be dwelling in these forests and caves were all hiding from that same evil presence— Witnessing a hell of an entirely different nature compared to his usual, Otto's heart fractured. His eyes lost their vigor, and all strength drained from his body. He knew that it was all over.

There was nothing he could do, and this cold cavern would be his end.

The despair was too great for tears. And, it was when he had grown numb to the passage of those empty hours, that Otto Suwen's fate was unexpectedly saved.

???: "What the! Those Witch Cult nutjobs really don't discriminate, huh! Wouldn't a expected any less, though!"

A booming voice reverberated through the cave, bringing Otto out of his trance, jolting him back to reality. Lifting his head, he feebly called for help. And it was a large, dog-faced beastman with a heavy Kararagi accent who heard his pleas.

Beastman: "Happy luck ya got, fella! Say we weren't coming, and no question that bunch'd had you slaughtered! Be thankful we weren't a lil' bit slower! Y'got saved by a hair! By a hair, boy! And o'course, give your thanks for the boss-kid!"

Otto: "B—Boss, kid?"

Rotating his once-bound limbs, Otto tilted his head at the boisterous beastman.

His eyes widened in response to Otto's doubts, before he smacked him in the back with his enormous palm, earning a wail from Otto.

Beastman: "Boss's a boss! Kid's a kid! Smack 'em both togetha'nd ya get a boss-kid! That is, the head-honcho, the guy ordering us to go up this far! He doesn't look like his head's chugging much anyways, but it looked like the people trusted him straigh'! Ghahahahaaha!"

Otto: "Ha, haa... U—understood. Anyway, thank you very much. And, right, I also have to..."

...Thank him as well, is how Otto meant to continue, when he noticed something.

The beastman was looking at him, and had scrunched his face up in surprise. Otto had no clue as to what this meant. The beastman withdrew a shockingly white napkin from his pocket and handed it over.

Beastman: "Whaddaya doin', say you're 'bout to cry, then go cry where ya can't be seen. Kinda pathetic if a man's there bawlin' in public."

Otto: "Wha, eh... C—crying?"

Beastman: “Yer eyes are filled o’teardrops! Whaddaya mean yer not cryin’! Is it sweat ya say!? Heart-sweat!? Fella, even us Kararagi folk have long quit usin’ that joke!”

The beastman turned his back to Otto, taking distance from him in a gesture of consideration. Otto put the cloth to his face, incredulous, to then witness the great volume of tears that the handkerchief caught— which sincerely surprised him.

The moment he realized he was crying, more and more did the tears overflow.

Otto: “Auh, shit... wh—what is, this... this... hk”

Otto clenched his teeth at the unstoppable torrent of tears as he pressed the cloth to his face. He could not understand why he was crying, a stream of incoherent curses fully filling his head.

—He’d been released from despair so intense his tears had dried up, and so perhaps accordingly, he was in tears now.

Otto: “I—I’m so glad, I... didn’t, die...”

He hadn’t achieved anything yet. He had not repaid a single one of his debts.

If he had died there, he would have ended, his life devoid of any meaning. As it never had.

It was because he survived it that he now recognized that fact.

—With every single teardrop shed, Otto keenly felt his life beginning again.

His first birthing cry, upon being given life in this world.

His second birthing cry, upon learning of his parents’ love, and the whereabouts of his own heart.

And his third, upon bypassing the death he had supposedly resolved himself for and comprehending what it meant to live for a purpose.

—Otto Suwen, on that day, screamed a birthing cry once again.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Otto: “—It’s not like anyone asked me to buy time like this...”

Single-mindedly driving his overtaxed feet into the ground step after step, a wry smile rose on Otto’s face. As much as he wished to forget those memories of his unsightly bawling, every memory in which he was crying was far too important, and he could not forget them even if he tried.

Otto: “But I’ll repay my debts, no matter what— Because I’m a merchant, after all.”

—That youth who saved his life.

Otto Suwen owed Natsuki Subaru a debt that must be repaid.

For saving his life, Otto would move heaven and earth to repay him.

It was only natural for a merchant to think this way. And, more importantly—

Otto: “—Because he’s my friend!!”

Both as a merchant and an independent human being, Otto ordered himself to stay true here and now.

It was a battle he was unlikely to win. Nevertheless, against all odds, Otto Suwen chose to wager his very existence on Natsuki Subaru’s victory.

That was the will of his merchant soul, and a testament to their friendship.

—Far off in the distance, from the direction of the abandoned carriages, Otto heard the raging roars of a beast.

Sensing that the true battle had now begun, Otto unleashed his Divine Protection— and, offering himself to that all-familiar hell, intent on giving this fight his all, he ran.

Arc 4 Chapter 107 - The Final Trap

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 5 “Otto Suwen”, Part 4

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Subaru: “Alright, then I’ll count on you to delay him like we planned.”

After safely finding Ryuzu and rejoining Otto, Subaru gave the signal to put the plans they’ve been preparing for over the past few days into motion.

Otto: “I’ve no problem with that, but do you have any idea where Emilia-sama is? If you cannot find her before time runs out, everything we’ve done will be for naught...”

Subaru: “Can’t say it’ll go without a hitch... I mean, it’s because of all the hitches that we are in this situation. But, well, you don’t need to worry about it.”

Scratching his head, Subaru’s face stiffened into a rather miserable expression.

Whenever Subaru’s eyes sharpened into a serious expression, it gave off the impression that he was mad about something.

While Otto hadn’t known him for long, he knew him well enough not to misunderstand that expression, but it didn’t stop him from feeling some pity for the owner of those unfortunate features. And actually, Subaru felt the same about Otto. The fact that Otto didn’t realize this was just one of the subtle things they have in common.

Subaru: “I think I have an idea where Emilia might be. Honestly, I panicked pretty hard when I found out she was gone, but... now that I’ve calmed down, I’m pretty confident I can find her.”

Otto: “Is, that right. So where do y... Or, maybe it’s better if I don’t know.”

Subaru: “You sure? You know I wouldn’t mind bragging some more and having you fawn over my deductive abilities?”

Otto: “No, I’m good. I don’t feel like fawning today, and if Garfiel manages to catch me, it wouldn’t be good if I start spilling everything, now would it?”

Otto pointed out with a shrug, while Subaru nodded.

Indeed, it would be rather worrying. Otto doesn’t have a great deal of tolerance towards pain, and he hadn’t experienced a whole lot of extreme pain in his past. If Garfiel corners him and starts hurting him, chances are Otto will spill everything he knows. And Otto didn’t want to sabotage Subaru like that.

Subaru: “Well, if you are sure you are gonna spill it, I guess it can’t be helped.”

Otto: “———”

Without much ceremony, Subaru simply said “No worries, I have complete faith in you.”.

Just what is a person supposed to think when they hear something like that?

Receiving this kind of blind trust, who could bring themselves to betray it?

And, saying such things without regard to how the listener might feel, Subaru truly is an outrageous friend.

Otto: “Either way... I’ll definitely do my best. I’m banking my entire future on you pulling this off, you know.”

Subaru: “Yeah. If I royally screw this up, your future’s going straight to rock bottom... But if it gets too dangerous, just run away. That guy’s not gonna play around today.”

Otto: “...Mm, I’ll keep that in mind.”

Otto answered those considerate words with a faint grin.

Everything was ready according to plan. The Arlam refugees have been instructed to board their respective dragon carriages and to leave shortly after the bait, Otto, departs. Otto had loaded two carriages with the villagers' spare clothing in order to convince Garfiel's nose that the villagers are with him, and he would be travelling on the most conspicuous path to draw his attention. The refugee escape routes that he had spent those sleepless nights scouting had also been firmly drilled into the ground dragons.

Nothing should be amiss now. All that was left was to be the bait until the refugees escape the Sanctuary.

That would put them a safe distance away from the Great Rabbit's attack two days from now. Meanwhile, Subaru and Emilia would have a chance to talk, and Garfiel would return to the village, find Subaru, and probably turn the whole place into a battleground---

Otto: "-----"

Except, Otto was determined not to let that happen.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Physical prowess was never Otto Suwen's strong suit. He had learned some self-defense techniques to keep himself safe on his travels, but, compared to someone who lives and breathes combat, Otto wasn't just one or two steps behind.

He never neglected to hire bodyguards when transporting valuable cargo, and when he was attacked by mountain bandits while taking a shortcut through the hills, he tearfully abandoned his luggage and fled.

Everyone knew Otto lacked the aptitude to solve anything through brute force.

Otto: "So what on earth am I doing picking a fight with a guy like this..."

Wiping the cold sweat from his forehead, Otto wrenched his rigid cheeks into a smile. As a rule, merchants always smile in the face of adversity. Born into a merchant family, Otto was raised on that precept, though he only had the latter half of his life to live by it. Nevertheless, it was not the kind of custom to be broken lightly.

If he could smile and convince himself that this was no different from any of the challenges he'd faced before, then his body would come to accept this stress as something good.

His arms were moving, so were his legs. He could still run some more.

It's a mystery how he has managed to keep running across such terrible ground, and not be out of breath. The lightness of his sobered heart allows yet another unseen ability of Otto's to bloom.

Otto: "Still, I cannot get complacent. Conceit is useless, and carelessness is the enemy."

Speeding through the gaps between the trees, Otto reminded himself to stay ever vigilant.

He had left Garfiel a long way behind him. But Otto can't keep running away like this. His job was to draw Garfiel's attention and prevent him from returning to the Sanctuary. Garfiel must not be allowed to realize the pointlessness of chasing him.

By hiding in the forest and hitting Garfiel with one trap after another, Otto must work to keep himself at the forefront of Garfiel's mind.

Indeed, Garfiel had no need to chase after Otto. Achieving his objective of preventing the Sanctuary's liberation was easily attainable by suppressing Subaru and Emilia. Otto was only a distraction. The fact that Garfiel hadn't paid Otto any attention thus far was precisely because he understood this better than anyone.

A screen of leaves and a fire stone. And the swarm of winged insects bursting from the carriage. With these flashy yet harmless traps, Otto had perfectly succeeded in enraging Garfiel. And so, the present Garfiel had lost his composure and was focusing his sights on Otto alone, completely forgetting he had no need to do so.

Otto: "That said, it won't take him long to notice it if given the chance."

And so, without risking getting too close to Garfiel, Otto must keep provoking him from a distance.

With Garfiel's nose disabled, Otto should be able to avoid any life-threatening situations provided he keeps out of sight. But, if he's spotted, Garfiel would be able to close the distance in an instant—the discrepancy in ability between them was far too overwhelming.

Indeed, it would require the caution of walking a tightrope.

Otto: "———"

Hidden in the foliage, Otto peered out at the scene before him.

Some twenty meters away was Garfiel, leering over his surroundings. It seems his sense of smell was completely gone thanks to the pungent Kisin oil spilled near the carriage wheels. He was searching for Otto relying on vision alone, frustrated, and carrying the air of a wounded beast.

It'd be playing with fire to draw his attention now, just asking to be burned.

Otto: "Now, I'm counting on you!"

???: "Rightright~~"

Otto lightly whispered and heard the reply upon his eardrums instantly transformed into meaning. Heeding Otto's signal, the trees began to stir.

Garfiel: "Ahh...?"

Hearing the rustling of leaves and sensing that something was afoot, Garfiel looked up—

—And saw a massive barrage of globs of mud and excrement flying straight at his face from the surrounding trees.

It was a show of force by the little critters living high in those trees— the wood mice.

Of course, the projectiles themselves dealt no damage whatsoever, but seeing feces flying at him from all directions, even Garfiel tried to leap out of the way in a panic. He couldn't avoid them all, however, as several projectiles splashed on his legs, prompting clicks of his tongue.

Garfiel: "Th'fuck is this! Shit! Why are th... That lil'fucker's behind this, isn't he..."

Scraping off the filth on his feet on a nearby tree, Garfiel immediately wondered if this was Otto's doing. But then, Garfiel scrunched his nose mid-sentence as if having noticed something.

—The wood mice's poop balls were pretty much harmless. They were just staining his clothes and making them stink. But the scent of their droppings has a tendency to attract the insects of this forest.

Garfiel: "———Guh!"

Something wriggled up to Garfiel from beneath the ground before leaping out of the earth and tangling itself around his foot. When he saw that it was a long, black, centipede-like insect crawling up his leg—his breathing stopped. As long as a regular human's arm, the centipede wound its way up Garfiel's left knee as its grotesque mandibles slurped greedily over the traces of wood mice droppings.

Garfiel: "Gaah! Gross!"

Brandishing his claws, Garfiel swiped the centipede off him. But more and more crawled out of the ground, not only leaping onto Garfiel's legs, but fighting over the puddle of droppings that had missed him, covering the entire area in a hellish brawl.

Centipedes love the fruit seeds inside wood mice droppings, that was one of the useful facts Otto had learned over his conversations with the woodland creatures during his treks through the forest. Contrary to their repulsive appearance, the centipedes aren't carnivores and aren't venomous at all, but being swarmed by them was still more than enough to constitute a threat. And, by now—

Garfiel: "—Kh! Agh! Get th'fuck off!!"

—Garfiel was screaming hysterically at the horde of centipedes, sending spit flying. Then, he raised his right leg and drove it into the ground with all his strength.

The next instant, a square plot of earth with Garfiel at its center sprang into the air.

Otto: "——"

Witnessing this preposterous sight, Otto unwittingly gulped.

Furiously swiping his claws and legs upon the airborne soil, Garfiel made short work of the stunned centipedes left and right. And, when the floating platform crashed back to the ground, all the centipedes around him had been neutralized while the rest scurried into the earth in fear.

The trees that were the wood mice's homes toppled towards the uprooted earth as the inhabitants who had aided Otto scrambled to flee.

It seems they wound up paying quite a high price for the sugar water they got.

Otto: “Well, I suppose that’s just another outcome of trade... or really, being that it depends on the negotiator’s abilities whether or not a business deal is a profitable deal, I’d prefer I not be resented here.

Bearing witness to this glimpse of Garfiel’s strength, Otto quietly apologized in an effort to calm himself. Then, silencing himself once more, Otto retreated to keep his distance from the approaching Garfiel and prepared to lure him to the next trap.

He hadn’t gone two and a half days without sleeping scouting around this forest for nothing.

—And once all this is over, he plans to sleep so furiously that not a dream could disturb him.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “A big one’s coming.”

—I know, yes, I know already.

???: “Behind you, big one, coming, coming now.”

—I said I know already, I assure you I’m keeping that in mind.

???: “You’ll die. You are so dead. Poor thing.”

—You mind not being so pessimistic!?

With his Divine Protection of the Soul of Language unleashed, a din of discordant noises flooded Otto’s ears as he ran. These were the voices of the bugs, the critters, and indeed all sentient creatures living within the forest, while, with extreme difficulty, Otto sifted for the ones most relevant to himself.

It’s been twenty years since he first discovered his Divine Protection, and ten years since he became proficient with it. And, in all that time, he had never used it so recklessly. The time he unleashed it in order to clear his name, he was inside a city where the number of creatures was limited.

But here, inside the expansive forest, the volume far exceeded Otto’s capacity to endure.

In the air, in the trees, in the leaves, in the soil and in the rocks, there were countless dwelling places for the critters and bugs. Listening to the noises of all these hidden creatures was like having over a hundred human voices simultaneously assailing his mind.

It wasn't just hearing, either. The Divine Protection of the Soul of Language demanded comprehension from Otto. Which meant that Otto's brain had to expend itself to process everything his Divine Protection was picking up.

Otto: "Buh... Ugh."

A sharp pain raced through his head causing his body to sway. He leaned against a tree, wiping the sweat from his face, and saw drops of blood soaking into his sleeve. A nosebleed. The blood leaking from his face was proof that his brain was working beyond its limit. The intermittent migraines and the ringing in his ears were showing no signs of dwindling.

Otto: "Ah... I didn't know. So this is what happens if I keep using it, this Divine Protection of mine. Gets pretty unwieldy, doesn't it... It isn't all nice and convenient, that's for sure. What a pain..."

Roughly wiping away his nosebleed and rubbing his brow, Otto resumed his faltering run.

His ears continued to ring, but he had no intention of shutting off his Divine Protection. Otto cannot keep up this chase scene by himself. As mentioned before, the voices keep him informed of Garfiel's movements. They serve as Otto's eyes since he couldn't constantly look behind him.

He wasn't sure what other people thought about enlisting the help of bugs and mammals, creatures whose wills differ from humans, but it was no easy task.

Their thought patterns are different from that of humans, after all. Different things delight and upset them. What one finds normal another might find outrageous. And there is no way to know which weapons to use when negotiating with them. Even with insects and animals, the greater their intelligence, the greater were the individual differences between them. Just depending on the region, bugs of the same species could have completely different preferences.

It was thanks to all the effort he'd put into his short but vital preparation beforehand that Otto was able keep up his imperfect but successful evasion of Garfiel.

—“Has Subaru found Emilia, and have they properly talked yet?”, he wondered.

The purpose was to give them time to talk—and, in order to prolong it for just a little longer, that Otto was putting himself through this hardship.

If Subaru’s guess was wrong, and he hadn’t gotten any closer to finding Emilia, then all of this would have been for nothing.

Just why was he doing all this for Subaru?

As his mind wandered to distract itself from the pain, Otto landed on this thought.

Subaru saved his life, and Otto was helping him in order to repay that debt. That was the truth.

Subaru accepted him as a friend and requested his aid, so it was only natural that Otto chose to help him. That was also the truth.

But was Otto truly such a zealous man that, off only those reasons alone, he would achieve more than what was demanded of him?

Otto: “...Ahh, I see.”

Something flashed across his mind in that instant, then suddenly everything made sense.

It’s all very simple. Otto’s reason for having faith in Subaru, and helping him, was ludicrously superficial.

Otto: “Clutching your head, giving up, thinking that no one could understand you... I was supposed to know that feeling better than anyone.”

The Divine Protection of the Soul of Language was the power to hear what others could not.

Because he could hear the voices of other creatures and know things he normally shouldn’t, Otto was seen as a nuisance by many people. He lost the people who were once his friends, and he could no longer see his family. To Otto, his Divine Protection was nothing more than a superfluous tool that was useless outside of emergencies.

But, because he had this Divine Protection, his experiences changed. The experience of being excluded due to his Divine Protection taught Otto the pain of being misunderstood by others. He knew the frustration of knowing something but being unable to communicate it to anyone. And it had conferred him the resigned outlook that no one would understand anyway.

All of this was the same for Subaru before he revealed everything to Otto.

That was why Otto trusted him. And, reflecting on just how much that youth and his past self overlapped, Otto started running once more.

That's all there is to it.

Otto didn't just want to save Natsuki Subaru. Through him, Otto wanted to save his own past self, to save Otto Suwen.

???: "Fin'lly, fuckin'... found ya!!"

Otto: "—Guh!?"

The moment he recognized yet another one of his truest thoughts, Otto heard a voice outside his Divine Protection of the Soul of Language as an impact struck his shoulder, sending him tumbling across the ground.

Rolling sideways, he eventually came to a stop on the soft earth.

Otto: "Buh, pffff! Wh—what... guh!"

Garfiel: "Too fuckin' bad, ain't it!"

Spitting out the leaves in his mouth, Otto tried to push himself up, when a foot drove into his torso. Another kick, wrenching all the air from his lungs, sent him violently skidding over the earth.

Up and down jumbled into one as his head spun so fast that his thoughts grew vague. No oxygen cycled through his brain, the blood in his body congealed, while his veins dispensed only pain throughout his being.

Garfiel: “My nose may be broke, but I still got ears. Whatever trick yer pullin’, th’goddamn bugs are chirpin’ wherever y’go... But this ends here, yeah?”

Otto: “I—I wonder... Just because you caught up, doesn’t mean you’ve won...”

Garfiel: “Don’t be a smartass. Y’put up a good fight... but I ain’t gonna waste my time no more.”

Garfiel set his foot on Otto’s stomach and leaned in. Ribs creaked as the foot pressed down with a force greater than the weight of Garfiel’s scrawny figure, prompting wails of pain as Otto’s limbs convulsed helplessly.

Garfiel: “If I step on ya with all I’ve got, you’ll be squashed t’smithereens. Y’saw me launch th’ground into th’air back there, yeah? Same shit’s gonna happen to yer body. Wanna try?”

Otto: “—Sorry, but I’d rather not.”

Seeing Otto answer his threat with a defiant smile, Garfiel was slightly taken aback.

Garfiel: “Hell, y’got some guts, don’t ya. If I knew that before y’pulled this shit, we wouldn’t’ve needed this goddamn runaround.”

Otto: “...”

Garfiel’s words could almost be called a compliment.

Hearing this, Otto rolled his head and spilled a small sigh. Watching Otto faintly breathing, Garfiel narrowed his eyes.

Garfiel: “If there weren’t so goddamn many of’em, I probably wouldn’t’ve thought anythin’ of it...”

Otto: “———”

Garfiel: “But soon as I was chasin’ ya, it’s like th’whole forest’s turned’gainst me. Even at the start when y’threw those leaves, the bugs under’em all flew at me. Th’bugs in th’dragon carriage, those squirrels throwin’ shit at me, th’centipedes, th’snakes swarmin’ outta dead trees, th’birds lurin’ me to a field of poison flowers, there’s gotta be some way t’explain it.”

One-by-one, Garfiel recounted the traps he had encountered in the forest. While, listening, Otto only continued faintly breathing.

Those were all traps Otto had set during his treks through the forest, designed to hinder Garfiel and to stall for time. None of them missed their mark, and all of them succeeded in drawing Garfiel here. If it weren't for the fact that there were too many of those natural anomalies for it to be mere coincidence, Garfiel would never have believed that Otto was behind it.

Garfiel: "Thinkin' ain't my strong suit, but t'survive, I gotta think anyway. So I thought. And thought, and thought, and here's what I got. When inexplicable things happen in this world, it's usually 'cause some Divine Protection's involved— Y'got one of those Divine Protections, don't ya."

Otto: "...Uff."

Garfiel: "D'vine Protection of th'Forest, Divine Protection of Dirt or whatever th'fuck y'call it, if y'got one then this all makes sense. 'n ya really weren't holdin' back, were ya... So."

Striking the silent Otto with these words, Garfiel gave his trembling body a kick, then glanced behind him, his sharp eyes narrowing in pity.

Garfiel: "Don't think I haven't noticed what yer plannin' behind those stubborn eyes of yer's."

Otto: "———"

Garfiel's eyes landed on an open clearing where a mass of white light had gathered.

It was not sunlight that had filtered through the trees, but a radiant mass of Mana so dense it was visible to the naked eye. Gazing at the swelling mass that could drive a person mad should they wander too close, Garfiel scowled and looked back down at Otto.

Garfiel: "That's yer trump card, ain't it. It ain't like th'empty threats you've been throwin' around so far. That's somethin' that can do me in... If ya were th'one who's got me on th'ground, y'might even be able to shove me into it."

Otto: "...Ah, ugh."

Squatting down, Garfiel picked up the groaning Otto by the collar.

Blood from Otto's overworked brain poured from his nostrils, staining the bottom half of his face grisly red. Seeing this, Garfiel shook his head.

Garfiel: "Y'tried, but yer way outta yer league. Shoulda known yer place like a good boy."

Otto: "My... place, you say..."

Garfiel: "Yeah. Y'ain't got no chance against me— Whatever that trap's supposed t'be, yer th'one who's gonna be eatin' it."

With that, Garfiel gave Otto's body a gentle toss.

Following a brief weightless sensation of falling through the air, Otto's body crashed to the ground and rolled into the pool of dense, white Mana. Inside the thick, drifting cloud, the Mana began to infect Otto's already vague consciousness.

His eyes rolled, his tongue numbed, and his nosebleed streamed without end.

The trap. The final trap. Now that he was tossed inside—

Garfiel: "I'll watch till it's over."

Crossing his arms, Garfiel waited to see Otto's end.

Where am I? What am I doing here? Lying on his stomach, catching Garfiel in the corner of his vision, Otto gathered his scattered thoughts. And then, he understood.

—The final trap was ready.

Otto: "...Mind if I ask you something?"

Garfiel: "Hah?"

Pressing his hands to the ground, Otto desperately pushed himself up.

Not expecting him to still be able to move, Garfiel's eyes widened in shock. It gave Otto some small satisfaction to see this, and indeed, Subaru was right.

Doing something no one believed you could really is fun. That is a fact. It truly was unkind, but this delight shows no signs of stopping.

Otto: “On your way here, Garfiel-san... how many trees have you felled, and how much earth have you gouged open?”

Garfiel: “Th’fuck are y’talkin’ about?”

Otto: “All this Mana floating around me... is just how much you’ve angered the forest.”

The sense of accomplishment made him forget all about his fatigue and pain.

Sitting himself up on the ground, Otto’s faltering voice grew firm as he looked up at Garfiel.

Garfiel uncrossed his arms, his face twitching as realized he had done exactly what Otto wanted him to, and immediately tried to move— But it was too late.

Otto: “—Al, Dona.”

Abounding Mana coursed through Otto’s entire body, taking shape in the world at the sound of his chant.

—With overwhelming speed and momentum, a torrent of earth poured forth, slamming into Garfiel’s body as he belatedly tried to dodge, sending him flying to the other edge of the forest.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Otto: “Haa... haa... haa... Ah.”

His outstretched arms still trembling, Otto’s labored breaths were thick with exhaustion and blood. All the Mana drifting around him had been siphoned into his spell. The sensation of being intoxicated by Mana had faded, replaced by fatigue and all-encompassing agony.

—Otto’s final trap was the essence of all the traps that came before it.

To enlist the help of the bugs and animals of the forest, Otto proposed that they punish the evil presence tyrannizing these woods.

It seems the wanton devastation left by Garfiel's daily strolls had raised the ire of the forest's inhabitants. Cutting down trees to sharpen his claws and train his body, or even just going around collecting firewood for the village, taken from a wider perspective, these were acts of destruction upon the animals' home.

Little-by-little, these heinous deeds piled up until Garfiel was eventually considered an archenemy by the majority of the creatures in this forest.

So Otto negotiated with those creatures, offering to punish Garfiel with their help. As trap after trap was sprung and Garfiel inflicted more and more damage upon the forest—the forest's residents pooled their Mana into one location, lending Otto their utmost support as promised.

The giant mass of Mana was so conspicuous that it could only be a trap.

After triggering so many traps on his way to this place, Garfiel instinctively avoided this one and tossed Otto into it instead. With the aid of the forest's creatures, Otto was able to cast magic he'd otherwise have no way of casting.

The resulting torrent of earth and debris slammed into Garfiel, dealing decisive damage to his thus-far unscathed body.

Garfiel believed that Otto had no strength to oppose him, got careless, and facilitated his own downfall.

Everything had gone as Otto planned. Which means,

Otto: "This time..."

???: "—Yer outta moves."

Otto spilled a despondent sigh as Garfiel's figure emerged from the tree line, glaring back at him.

His clothes were torn, and his exposed skin was marked by cuts made by jagged rocks. But his head and other vital places were unharmed, and there was no obvious impact on his gait. The sheer disparity in strength far transcended Otto's imaginings.

Garfiel: "Honesty, I'm damn surprised."

Otto: "...Are you, now?"

Garfiel: "I really didn't think you had it in ya. Hell, I looked down on ya, thinkin' you've given up—
Forgive me. I pulled some stupid shit while I'm actually dealin' with a man."

Garfiel said with a meek expression. But Otto shook his head, indicating there was no need to apologize. All he wanted to hear was "I concede". But, despite giving it his all and fulfilling his role perfectly, he still failed to defeat Garfiel.

And so, this is where Otto's resistance ends.

Garfiel felt his hands, then flashed his razor claws. He would not show Otto mercy this time. Their sharp edges shall reflect his sincerity. They would strike true, carve into Otto's flesh, and extinguish his life.

—I did everything I could, right?

Otto was sure he had played every card he had.

His Divine Protection, his debts of friendship, he had used all of it. If he still fell short in the end, there was nothing he could do. Otto's capabilities ended here.

And so—

Garfiel: "See ya— When y'wake up, you'll start all over."

Otto: "This is where my solo fight ends, I guess..."

Garfiel: "——"

Muttering under his breath, Otto closed his eyes, exhausted.

Yet his attitude was nothing like resignation towards death—

Garfiel: "No way..."

Is there more? Garfiel shuddered with all the hair on his body standing on end as he warily scanned his surroundings.

There was no sign of anything in any direction. If there is more to it, then—

Garfiel: “———Hk!”

Baring his fangs, Garfiel swiped his claws upwards. Drawing in a breath, he expanded his lung so he may howl. But there, he hesitated. His eyes widened, yet no roar escaped his open lips.

What escaped was not bloodlust, not hostility, but a name.

???: “Garf——!!”

A shadow leapt from the treetop overhead, falling towards him.

Its short skirt fluttering in the air, the point of its wand aimed straight for Garfiel’s head.

Watching the shining Mana gathering at the tip of the wand, Garfiel expelled his shriek.

Garfiel: “Why th’fuck are y... RaaaaaaaaaAAAAAAMMMMMM!!”

The next instant, blades of wind burst forth, scattering the Sanctuary’s forest to the gales.

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 108 - A Man of Only Good Timing

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 5 “Otto Suwen”, Part 4 (until halfway)

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2

Through the Mana congregating at the tip of the wand, the chant rewrote the world—

Whistling wind became blades, cycling towards the eye of the storm, dispensing destruction in its wake.

Garfiel: “———!!”

At the center of the maelstrom— the target of the whirling blades, Garfiel roared into the sky.

The razors struck at Garfiel’s torso, shearing at his adamant flesh. Blood spilled from the gashes, but his timely leap saved him from being cut in twain.

Presented with a choice between counterattacking and evading, Garfiel immediately chose to flee. Even as hesitation flickered in his eyes, he shielded his head with his arms and slid out of the wind blades’ path.

But these ambushing blades had been launched with the intent to decide the fight.

The wind did not allow Garfiel an easy escape as it vigorously hounded his retreat. Kicking off the ground, he clicked his tongue at the invisible slashes.

Garfiel: “Fuckin’, damn it——!”

The moment he landed, Garfiel screamed as he met the incoming wind blades head on.

Driving his heels into the ground, his foot as the axle, a rectangular section of ground tilted upwards and sprung into the air. The wind blades crashed into the uprooted soil and took a layer off its surface before dispersing.

Obeying gravity, the floating platform collapsed to the ground, sending up billows of dust. Witnessing such a ludicrous scene, any average person would have fallen speechless and dumb.

But the attacker was no average person, and this wasn't the first time she'd seen Garfiel do this.

Ram: "Sh!"

Garfiel: "Tch!"

Bursting out of the plumes of dust was a girl, her short skirt fluttering. Beneath her neat, peach-colored hair, cerise irises gleamed with indomitable resolve. Mana exuded from the tip of her wand, warping the very atmosphere and sending out blades of wind.

It extends to greater length than one glance would suggest, handled with precision befitting a maestro of Wind Magic. Contrary to their fragile appearance, the wind blades' slashes are more powerful than that of an average sword blade. Garfiel readied his claws at his hips, preparing to intercept, but even his claws would be at a disadvantage against those blades.

Keeping this pose, Garfiel lowered his stance in preparation for another backward leap. But his movement was interrupted by Ram's off-hand strike.

Ram: "Fula!"

Garfiel: "Ghk!?"

A short chant. A strike from the lowest class of Wind Magic. The attack struck Garfiel from behind, staggering him before he could take a single step backwards. It dealt no damage. But it had stopped him.

Garfiel looked up just in time to see Ram swinging down her blade—

Garfiel: "——"

What's the best course of action here? Before he could consider this question, Garfiel's body moved.

His claws and fangs, his innate weapons, would not be enough to counter the wind blades. And, being caught off guard, it was too late to dodge now. Which left him only one option.

Garfiel: “Rrrrrrraaaaaaaaghhhh!!”

Roaring, Garfiel lunged forward, clamping his hands together to catch the invisible sword between his palms. Catching a sword bare-handed works against regular swords, but when facing an invisible and incorporeal blade, it’s not so clear whether it’ll do any good.

Nevertheless, although the blade was made of wind, it certainly existed in the physical realm. Clamping the blade’s edge between his palms, Garfiel disrupted its course, and instead of being sliced clean in half, he got away with only a few lacerations on his skin.

“The attack has been foiled”, Ram judged belatedly.

Garfiel: “Too... fuckin’ close!”

Garfiel shot out a front kick aimed straight for Ram’s torso as she landed.

His leg pierced through the air with force enough to shatter a mountainside, but it would not reach Ram, who bent back her body to dodge. Reclining so far that she might as well be lying on the ground, Ram whipped out another wind blade aimed at Garfiel’s foot.

Garfiel: “———Hkk!”

On one foot, Garfiel leapt up, avoiding the strike that would’ve severed his limb from the ankle down. He successfully dodged Ram’s blade, but,

Ram: “Your feet are off the ground.”

The instant her whisper grazed his ears, a heel struck Garfiel’s body from above, knocking him back to the ground. This offbeat attack came from Ram, who dove out of her post-swing stance, launching herself and her leg out forward while rotating on the vertical.

Unable to avoid the strike in mid-air, all Garfiel could do was hold up his arms to shield himself. The bones in his arm creaked as he was sent shooting back, bouncing off the earth and crashing to a stop against a tree trunk.

With the air knocked out of his lungs, Garfiel glared at Ram, his golden pupils burning with rage. But,

Ram: “Ul Fula.”

An overwhelming windstorm capable of crushing a whole region of the forest swept up— with Garfiel at its center, lashing him and the woodlands alike with its invisible fury.

Garfiel: “Guh, gah— Hk!”

The raging wind stuck at Garfiel’s body, cutting him, tossing him, smashing him against the ravaged trees.

Tossed to the point that he could no longer tell up from down and left from right, being separated from the ground left Garfiel devoid of means to defend himself, and devoid of options but to be helplessly trounced by Ram’s magic.

When the wind had stopped and the violence of the storm had passed, Garfiel was left barely able to stand. Covered in blood, his head tilted back as he fell to his knees, his consciousness halfway gone.

Caught by perfect traps, he had taken two hits of ultimate-tier magic.

The very fact that he was still alive was a testament to his surprising vitality. His opponent must have expected this and so neglected to show any mercy.

Confirming the damage on Garfiel, Ram relinquished a small sigh. Then, she turned her gaze to Otto behind her, who had watched the entire surprise attack unfold.

Ram: “I already knew this, but you look so pathetic it’s painful to watch.”

Otto: “Surely that’s not something you say to someone who had just fought with his whole heart and soul...”

Ram: “Results are the only thing that matter. Did your efforts succeed or fail? The process you took to get here is secondary... So I’ll say it again, you look so pathetic it’s painful to watch.”

Otto: “Oof, she really is merciless... It’s just as Natsuki-san said.”

Without showing the slightest appreciation for Otto’s efforts, Ram gave him a wry smile and a little snort instead.

As the result of his fierce battle, Otto did manage to do some damage to Garfiel. Aside from the string of minor traps that only served to aggravate him, that final strike did carry enough force to conceivably defeat Garfiel. But, if there was one thing Otto miscalculated,

Ram: "It seems you forgot about Garf's Divine Protection of Earth Spirits."

Otto: "Earth Spirits... what's that?"

Hearing that question, Ram let out a small sigh. She shook her head as if appalled, looked down on Otto with a gaze of heartfelt contempt, and then sighed again.

Otto: "How much disappointment are you going to show!? I'm feeling seriously wounded here!"

Ram: "Garf's Divine Protection of Earth Spirits is just as its name suggests, it is a Divine Protection that bestows him the earth's blessing. As long as his feet are touching the ground, his body is protected by a shield of resilient soil— And even if not for that, Earth Magic has terrible affinity against him. You used an A1-class spell, and it just had to be Dona..."

Pressing her hand to her forehead, Ram closed her eyes and dropped her head.

Ram: "Your luck is so poor that I don't even feel pity anymore."

Otto: "So my lifelong misfortune finally detonated at this point!? That's super terrifying! Or actually, Ram-san, if you knew about this beforehand, wouldn't it have helped a lot more if you told me this beforehand!?"

Ram: "Don't you mean, Ram-sama?"

Otto: "Why is everyone trying to kick me to the lowest possible stratum!?"

Ignoring the raving Otto, Ram swished the tip of her wand as she turned back to deal with Garfiel.

He should be unconscious, but his limitless stamina was truly worthy of admiration. Without a doubt, he was the greatest obstacle to the Sanctuary's liberation. He must be restrained immediately and kept under strict supervision until matters can be—

Ram: "..."

Ram stopped in her approach, her brows slightly furrowed. Her pursed lips felt the dry air, her red tongue peeked out for just a glimpse.

Ram: "Garf."

Garfiel: "...I'll be damned. Ya really, truly are a merciless woman, you."

Garfiel lifted his slumped head in response to Ram's call. His sharp, opening eyes blazed with fury and hate, and his bared canine fangs were quietly rattling, indicating his will to fight hadn't waned.

The surprise attack should have been a perfect success. It couldn't have possibly gone any better.

And yet, it nevertheless failed to defeat this monster known as Garfiel.

Blood was pouring from his body profusely, yet he hopped to his feet without the faintest suggestion of injury or fatigue. Everything the wind blades had done to him was entirely superficial. Shallow gashes riddled his skin, and his non-vital areas had taken countless blows, but none of the damage was enough to decisively incapacitate him.

Garfiel: "When y'had me pressed against'a tree and sang that chant, I thought I was absolutely done for. My mind was turnin' with all its might that moment. But I couldn't come up with a single goddamn answer... so, I stopped thinkin'."

No longer fussing over his trifling thoughts, he trusted his body to evade for him. His instincts greedily elected to survive and magnificently operated his body to take minimal damage in that inescapable storm.

This was the fruition of the racial instincts of a lifeform fit for war.

Even Ram gave an imperceptible gulp at his remarkable battle-sense behind her deadpan expression.

For Ram, who took pride in always being able to prevail with better judgement even when at a disadvantage in terms of pure ability, it was a rare experience to face an opponent who was her equal.

And the fact that it was Garfiel only contributed to the indescribable emotion rising inside her.

Garfiel: "Say, Ram. Why are y'takin their side? What's gone 'n made y'do that?"

Ram: “———”

Garfiel: “Ya realize, right? Yer takin’ th’side of the ones plottin’ t’liberate th’Sanctuary. Ain’t that goin’ against that bastard Roswaal’s will? That asshole... at least, right now, he shouldn’t be wantin’ the Sanctuary t’be liberated.”

Ram: “Do you mean to suggest you’ve a better understanding of Roswaal-sama’s will in my presence, Garf? We’ve known each other for a long time, so surely you would know. I will not stand and listen to such insolent drivel.”

Garfiel: “I know how stubborn y’are. It’s why I fell in love with ya. And that’s why I just can’t accept this. If y’ain’t givin’ up on idolizin’ Roswaal, why are y’takin their side? How’d they talk y’into it?”

Listening to Garfiel’s words, Ram closed her eyes.

It was rare to see Ram’s lips tremble like this as if she was suppressing some inexplicable emotion. Garfiel’s eyes widened at this sight, but the expression vanished in only an instant.

Ram: “Ram... Ram is merely acting in the most meaningful manner for her wish. That is all.”

Garfiel: “And yer wish... is?”

Ram: “To fulfill Roswaal-sama’s most earnest desire, of course—— And nothing else.”

Hearing this answer, Garfiel expelled a deep sigh.

Ram had no interest in discussing this apparent contradiction any further. No one could possibly understand what was going through Ram’s mind. Except perhaps the one man who had read the deepest core of her heart, and convinced her to do this——

Ram: “He truly is an aggravating man, that Barusu... Though not even I understand why that is.”

Ram harbored an indescribable aggravation towards Subaru. Perhaps it was physiological revulsion, or perhaps disdain fostered over the time they’d spent together, or perhaps a little of both, but Ram had to think that it was ingrained in something deeper.

Almost as if he were a hated enemy who stole something precious from her— That was the inexplicable emotion Ram felt towards Subaru.

Nevertheless, Ram accepted Subaru's invitation, for that was just how deeply his proposal shook the core of her heart.

Ram: "Surely you've recovered enough to stand?"

Otto: "T—that's a pretty harsh thing to ask... I mean, I wouldn't mind if you could hit me with some healing magic..."

Ram: "Don't worry. Healing magic is outside my abilities. As there had never been necessity for me to learn it."

Otto: "You are the first maid I've met who's so unconcerned about healing!"

Wailing, Otto strained his trembling legs to stand. His body was swaying, though his nosebleed had finally stopped. Being able to stand obviously didn't make him a reliable fighting force in any sense of the word.

But, seeing that his will to fight hadn't diminished, Garfiel let out an irritated snort.

Garfiel: "Ya fuckin'... I thought our last bout would'a taught ya pretty good that y'got no chance against me. Y'used up yer trump card, and don't y'see me still pr'tty lively? Y'should know when t'give up. It ain't manly bein' a sore loser, oy."

Otto: "Too bad, I don't recall ever abandoning my grimy nature to become some clean-faced kid who'd surrender without a fight. Even if I lose my last cent, as long as I still have my body, I'll keep going. Or at least, that's what I imagine a friend of mine would say, right before he starts charging."

Garfiel: "...Again with that bastard?"

Garfiel clicked his tongue as Otto uttered the word "friend".

Garfiel: "How can y'put so much trust in that sweet-talkin' asshole? He's powerless. He's weak. He knows how t'work his tongue, and that's it. How's a man like that worth helpin', hah!?"

Otto: "Worth it? You'd have to wonder. I wouldn't really say that the present Natsuki-san is worth it."

Garfiel: "...Huh?"

Otto: "But the future, that's a different story."

Garfiel tilted his head at the unexpected answer, while Otto's grin deepened.

He had exhausted his stamina and spent all his tricks, but even now, without the faintest hope remaining, there was not a speck of unease in Otto's eyes,

Otto: "It's because I'm a merchant. I don't think it's such a bad deal to invest in someone who could greatly benefit me in the future. You see, Natsuki-san is... someone who, just maybe, might end up doing something huge."

Garfiel: "-----"

Otto: "But that's assuming he doesn't get snuffed out here. So, just what would this sprouting Natsuki-san eventually bloom into, and what kind of a price would it fetch...? I'll have to keep picking off the bugs and pruning the leaves to find out."

"Such a pain in the ass", Otto thought, as he scratched his head with a wry smile. Listening on the side, Ram expelled a bored sigh.

Ram: "Honestly, I don't know if anything about Barusu merits that impression. Barusu is weak, useless, and can't even brew a proper cup of tea or do a single thing right. I agree with Garf there."

Otto: "That's... actually that's a pretty balanced assessment."

Ram: "But, Barusu is a man with strangely good timing when it matters."

Ram asserted, paying no mind to Otto's timid attempt to support Subaru.

Seeing the two men tilt their heads at the word "timing", Ram nodded.

Ram: "Timing. A man with only good timing, that's what Barusu is."

He's a man who's often useless, who makes you wonder what role could he possibly serve, but this man named Natsuki Subaru has the mysterious tendency to always be there just when you need him.

When Emilia got away from Ram in the Capital, Subaru protected her in Ram's place.

When he was brought to the mansion wounded, within days, the Witchbeasts' upheaval followed. And again, it ended with Subaru saving the village's children after playing his part in eradicating the Witchbeasts. He was never the greatest contributor, but his presence certainly helped.

When Emilia returned from the Capital and ominous forces began closing in on the lands around the village, Subaru came with reinforcements and beautifully saved them from danger.

This man named Natsuki Subaru is a man with absurdly good timing.

There is not a single attractive thing about him, nor does he exude the slightest masculine charm. Ram had nothing positive to say about him, and at times she even felt sorry for him, though she couldn't remember why she felt this way, or what it was that was tugging at her.

Regardless, Natsuki Subaru was just that kind of man. And that was why this time, Ram—

Ram: "It's safe to trust in Barusu's timing— Once Barusu thinks he sees a chance and acts on that belief, then that must be the only way to seize victory."

Otto: "Sounds like you put a lot of faith in Natsuki-san, Ram-san."

Ram: "It's Ram-sama."

Otto: "Is this really the time to be bringing that up!?"

Displeased by the scoffing man beside her, Ram shot him a silencing glare.

They both placed their faith in Subaru's intentions. And they both agreed to fight at each other's side, and to say nothing about this to Subaru. They were aware that they had already bought more than enough time, but—

Otto: "It's strange, but somehow I still wanna keep going."

Ram: "That's because the fact that he hasn't gone down after those traps and that beautiful surprise attack is just insulting. Such impudence is unseemly, Garf— We ought to make you remember that."

Otto: “Woah, that was scary. This big sis is super scary. I’m actually starting to wonder if Natsuki-san lied about that sleeping girl being a gentle person...”

Otto muttered his irrelevant observation.

Ram confirmed the grip of the wand in her hand, and concentrated Mana at its tip once more.

Facing the two readying for battle, Garfiel kept his silence. He listened to their voices with his head downcast before finally, he took a sluggish step forward.

Garfiel: “———”

Sensing that battle would begin again, Otto and Ram’s bodies tensed. But, in the face of their resolve,

Garfiel: “——Enough, already.”

Came a scraping whisper.

Causing Otto and Ram to simultaneously furrow their brows.

Garfiel: “Thinkin’, is too much of a fuckin’ pain——”

Muttered Garfiel in an exhausted voice. And then,

???: “—————WRRRR!!”

A bestial roar echoed out, shaking the forests of the Sanctuary.

Every creature in the forests trembled and bowed their heads before its dominance.

——The great beast hath come.

Arc 4 Chapter 109 - Misstep

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 4 “Lies, Liars, and Con Artists”, Part 9, and Volume 13, Chapter 5 “Otto Suwen”, Part 4 (until halfway)

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Part 1, Part 2, Part 3

Otto: “Just like we discussed, the villagers will evacuate while I distract Garfiel. Natsuki-san said not to worry too much about buying time, but I’m feeling a bit greedier than that... So, can I count on your help?”

After parting with Subaru, and before setting out with the two bait carriages, Otto spoke with Ram in a corner of the village. Ram crossed her arms at Otto’s rather unconfident query, then leaned into a wall and closed her eyes. Met with her silence, Otto tried to suppress his impatient agitation at the urgency of the imminent battle.

Otto: “Uhm, sorry, but... we really don’t have much time...”

Ram: “Impatient men are repulsive. As I said before, it would depend on the conditions.”

Opening a single eye, Ram promptly rebuffed Otto’s imploring gaze.

This “before” she mentioned was referring to three days ago—the night Subaru challenged Roswaal to a bet, and Otto asked Ram to fight alongside him.

Roswaal had asked Ram to leave the room so he and Subaru could be alone.

And as Ram came out of the building, Otto was waiting for her outside. He had accurately predicted that Roswaal would ask her to leave before discussing the crucial matters of the Gospel, and so he managed to catch her in a moment when she was free.

Simply put, three days ago, Ram and Otto had been no more than shallow acquaintances.

They could count their interactions on the fingers of a single hand, and Ram did not possess a shred of interest in any man except for Roswaal. Other than the familiar faces from Roswaal's mansion, Ryuzu and Garfiel were probably the only people she talked to in the Sanctuary.

And so, when Otto called out to Ram, and she looked at him as if she was looking at a pebble on the side of the road, he had to start by building their cordial relations from scratch.

Otto: "Greetings, uhm... Ram-san. It sure is a nice night out."

Ram: "——"

Otto: "Hello?"

Ram: "—Ah, I was wondering who you were. So you are that lackey who follows Barusu around everywhere. I wasn't used to seeing you without him, so I had some trouble identifying what creature you were."

Otto: "So I'm even less than human!? The fact that you have that impression seriously hurts! Although, well, I can kind of understand why I'd be treated like Natsuki-san's accessory..."

Ram: "A man who accepts being anyone's accessory is worthless. Begone."

Otto: "So harsh!?"

Ram's unapproachable attitude swiftly tore Otto's friendly overture to pieces. Without showing the slightest interest in Otto, Ram leaned against the side of the door and crossed her arms.

Otto: "So, uh... Do you have a minute to talk?"

Ram: "Regardless whether I'll remember it, but haven't you even considered starting a conversation by presenting your name? Regardless whether I'll remember it."

Otto: “Why’d you remind me twice that you might not remember it? Haaaa... my name is Otto Suwen. I’m just a humble travelling merchant, but I’d appreciate it if you could memorize my face and name.”

Ram: “That would depend on how interesting this talk is.”

Otto despondently gave his name, while Ram refused to concede any of her domineering attitude.

Although she indicated that she was willing to listen, she would immediately put a stop to it should it turn out to be pointless. Otto pumped himself up once more and decided to broach it from a different angle.

Otto: “This would be related to what Natsuki-san and the Margrave are currently discussing, but... Ram-san. Would you be interested in helping Natsuki-san and myself release the Sanctuary from its barrier?”

Ram: “—That’s enough. Ram’s only desire is to fulfill Roswaal-sama’s most earnest wish. For as long as I respect Roswaal-sama’s will, liberating the Sanctuary that way would be pointless.”

Otto: “But that’s assuming everything proceeds as the Margrave intended... correct? Ram-san, are you aware that events have already diverged from that path?”

Ram: “———”

It was Otto who proposed, at the end of his conversation with Subaru, that they drag Ram in as an ally. Subaru was overwhelmingly reluctant about it, but going from what he said, Otto judged that it was a bet with good chances of victory.

Opening her eyes, Ram’s emotionless, pink irises fell on Otto. She uncrossed her arms, as the fingers of her lowered right hand grazed against what must’ve been her wand beneath her skirt.

How he chooses his next words would decide whether he incurs her wrath in the form of her wind blades.

Holding his breath and wetting his lips with his tongue, Otto showed the same fearless smile as he would when making a challenging business deal.

The stiffness of his body disappeared as his accelerated pulse fell to a more comfortable pace.

Now, just as always, it was time to stand firm.

Otto: “Events have diverged from the Margrave’s plans— and for the first time, you have a chance to realize your true wish. And I believe Natsuki-san and I can help you with that.”

Ram’s fingers wavered, hesitating— and then left her wand. Seeing this, Otto determined that his sales pitch was nothing to be scoffed at.

After she had heard Otto’s proposal and learned the details of his plan, Ram presented several conditions.

Honestly, revealing their entire plan to Ram was a rather huge gamble for Otto and Subaru. If they misjudged their proposal’s impact on Ram’s heart, then all their plans would be leaked to Roswaal. But there was enough value in getting Ram on their side to take this risk.

Ram laid out several conditions in exchange for her cooperation, and finding them entirely reasonable, Otto accepted.

He did not mention the details of her terms to Subaru. Because he needed her maximum cooperation, and because it was necessary to keep secret some of the actions he had to take. If Otto had told him, Subaru would have stopped them. If Subaru gave in to his emotions and ruled out this plan, it would’ve meant leaving the rest of their fate to chance.

Ram: “You have an unfortunate personality, you know that? I have no idea what you do for a living, but you’d make a terrible merchant.”

Otto: “You totally remember I was a travelling merchant, right!?”

Ram remarked with a snort at Otto’s secret determination, as a pained wail echoed throughout the Sanctuary.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Faced with the pressure of the beast’s overwhelming aura, Otto was surprised that his body was not trembling.

The abhorrent figure looming before him was a colossal monster four meters in length. Crooked, razor fangs extended like sabers from its enormous mouth, as its claws curved in brutal crescents, shaped like life-reaping scythes. Every strand of golden fur coating its body was a wire thick enough to tangle any mortal blade that struck it.

Only the glint in its eyes, golden as its fur, retained vestiges of what it was before its transformation. But the lack of common points between now and what was there only moments before made it seem wholly unreal.

It was Garfiel, after he'd shed his human body for the form of a ferocious tiger.

Vile smelling breaths escaped his throat in growls, exuding a pressure enough to freeze the hearts of every creature in the forest.

Otto: "——"

Consciously forcing his lips to smile, Otto wished he could say something, anything, to lighten the mood.

But no voice escaped his frozen throat, and even his supposedly smiling cheeks ignored him and remained rigid. And, belatedly, Otto realized why he wasn't trembling.

—It was not because he was unafraid. Rather, it was because, in the face of certain death, Otto's body had given up on improving his chance of survival.

After all, trembling in the face of fear is the body's mechanism to ignite its instinct to survive.

It is the soul screaming "Do not give up!" towards the body— but, in a situation where this would be entirely pointless, it was only natural that his body wouldn't tremble.

He had heard about it. And he had imagined it.

He knew that Garfiel possessed both beastman and human blood alike, and that he could transform into a monster.

But reality surpassed Otto's flimsy imagination and manifested a creature so far beyond human understanding, it devoured his spirit to its core.

To think that, in the presence of such a creature, he could have uttered something so foolish as “We bought enough time, but why don’t we try and beat him?”. Of course he shouldn’t try to beat him. As if he stood a chance. And yet,

Ram: “Garf transformed... We’ve met all the conditions now.”

Muttered the small girl beside him, her voice entirely unchanged in the face of the overwhelming presence before her.

He hadn’t even the mind to ask, “What conditions?”. But, with a movement so mechanical that his neck creaked as it turned, Otto looked to the girl— to Ram.

Ram’s lips relaxed slightly, and, for the first time, she showed Otto something like a smile.

Ram: “Garf made a mistake by picking this obvious choice— We’ve won this fight.”

Otto: “———”

“You damn sure about that?”, Otto quipped in his mind, forgetting his usual politeness.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Ram gave Otto roughly three conditions for her cooperation.

Ram: “Regardless of the divergence from Roswaal-sama’s plans... and from the Gospel’s writ, you must preserve Roswaal-sama’s will to live in this world, whatever it takes.”

This term was already fulfilled when Subaru challenged Roswaal to their bet. Roswaal, who had been ready to abandon everything, again donned his war-paint and, with eyes brimming with life, resolved to take on the world once more.

Ram: “Secondly, Emilia-sama must not lose her determination to challenge the Trials. If this world is to continue despite diverging from Roswaal-sama’s plans, then she will inevitably have to stand for herself... She must be tested before the day of reckoning comes.”

This one would have to be left entirely to Subaru and Emilia, but judging from the fact Ram was willing to hear his proposal, she probably considered this condition as good as cleared.

When Otto heard Emilia had gone missing, his initial thought was “we are completely doomed”, but Ram did not seem to think so. However, since Otto was afraid she might change her mind if he asked her why, he decided to leave well enough alone.

Ram: “If you can guarantee these two things, I will be willing to help you... But regarding the part that will be kept secret from Barusu, I still have a few finer requirements.”

Otto: “Let’s hear it, as long as it’s something I can do.”

Ram: “If I am to join the fight against Garf, you’ll have to at least broaden the prospects of victory. First, you must disable Garf’s nose. Then, deal a certain amount of damage to make him lose his composure. I will not enter the fight until the decisive moment, so you’ll have to accomplish these things yourself. Surely, seeing you’ve gone out of your way to propose this plan, you must have at least one trump card hidden up your sleeve?”

Otto: “Well... There is a little something, yeah.”

Ram: “I see, just as I thought. In that case, here’s the last condition...”

Otto: “Right.”

Ram: “Make Garf transform— This is the final requirement for attaining victory.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Ram: “His sense of smell, is it still disabled?”

Otto: “...”

Ram: “Pathetic.”

Otto: “Guehuh!”

Seeing Otto so stricken that he couldn't even answer her question, Ram mercilessly jabbed her elbow into the side of his waist. Wailing at the sharp, gouging pain, Otto gasped as he suddenly remembered to start breathing.

Otto: "Ah, aaaargh... I—I thought I was gonna die... Just now, I thought I was gonna die from that pressure!"

Ram: "Even a soft and flimsy meat shield is better than nothing, so snap out of it. His sense of smell, is it disabled?"

Otto: "I'll pretend I didn't hear that first part, but, yeah, it is. Makoil pollen is an extremely powerful animal repellent, even humans pass out if they smell it from up close."

Ram: "And even more so for Garfiel, with his nose that is many times more sensitive. Then that's one of the benefits of his beast-form nullified. The timing and the damage dealt to him before his transformation... is all going according to plan."

Exhaling a light breath, Ram tipped her heels off the ground as she shifted onto her toes. From there, she dropped her heels, lifted them, and began repeating that motion in a simple leg exercise.

Otto furrowed his brows at Ram's strange behavior, and with "U—uhm?", he tilted his head.

Otto: "R—Ram-san? What are you doing?"

Ram: "I'm warming up. Slightly loosening my body before I start. As much I loathe to admit it, Barusu is right about this being efficient."

Otto: "Uhm, no, that's not... I meant, what are you doing these exercises for?"

Ram: "That's simple."

Casting the stuttering Otto a glance from the corner of her vision, Ram finished her warm-up exercise and closed her eyes. Then, opening her eyes again, her feet carried her forward— With a casual gait, as if she were taking a leisurely stroll, she began closing distance with the beast.

Otto: "W—wait!?"

Ram: “Be silent.”

Otto’s eyes bulged as he watched her bold advance. But Ram rejected his call, not slowing her speed in the slightest as she headed towards the tiger.

The beast stooped low as it glowered at the prey before its eyes. Surprised by the little creature’s action, its body stiffened for a moment, but immediately, it judged the behavior to be an insult to itself. Rage arose in its golden eyes as it raised its hefty fore paw, thicker than Ram’s torso, and swiped with vicious claws outstretched. A single strike from these claws, each as wide as the delicate girl’s arms, would carry enough force to instantly transfigure her limbs into shreds of gore with a graze.

The wind screamed as the reaper’s scythe swung to claim Ram’s life from this world, under the guise of claws.

—But, just before that could happen,

Ram: “You are too soft, Garf— Who do you think you are facing?”

Crouching down and letting the mighty claws pass overhead, Ram said to the tiger with pity.

Having thrown its entire body behind that swing, the tiger floundered as Ram’s tiny figure dived for its chest. Bending her knees, Ram sprung out her body as she shot out her readied fist—

Ram: “When have you ever won in a fist-fight against me?”

Garfiel: “———WRR!”

The fist lunging into its torso from below sent the several-hundred-kilogram beast into the air. Its body arching from the force of the strike, a pained wail spilled from the beast’s gaping maw. Shock waves crashed against the forest as Otto heard the sound of the air bursting.

Otto: “No, way.”

A girl a head shorter than he was had just punched a beast so tall that looking up wasn’t enough to see the whole thing. And just like that, with her fist still buried in the tiger’s torso, Ram used her offhand to slap the animal around even further.

Blows alternated from one hand to the other, as they beat the enormous beast shrieking in retreat. With fangs bared, it lunged its great jaw at Ram, but the girl leaped, setting her foot upon the tiger's nose, and, with a forceful kick, she sent the beast's face slamming down to the ground.

Scraping against the earth, its roar cut off, the colossal beast writhed, frantically attempting to tear apart the limbs of the girl toying with him. But Ram danced through the air like leaves in the wind, mockingly evading the tiger's strikes, driving attack after piercing attack into the shallow points in its fur.

Her heel into its throat. Her hand into its flank. Her fist punching aside its paw, opening the way for a direct kick to the beast's unguarded face.

Witnessing her dominate the vicious tiger in close-quarter combat, a surreal sensation as if he were reading a picture-book gripped at Otto's heart.

What on earth was he watching?

Seeing Garfiel shed away his human form had stricken Otto with so much despair that his body gave up on living. And yet, what on earth was he watching here?

With every swing of the girl's arm, the beast's body bounced back from the force of the blow. This colossal monster, whose very roars could slaughter a living creature, was unable to land a single hit on her. Its furious paws blindly mowed through the trees, gouged into the earth, transforming the forest with chaotic violence, and yet the constantly changing landscape caused Ram no issue at all.

They could win, like this.

He felt stupid now for having doubted Ram's pre-battle remarks. Her statements about purposely getting Garfiel to transform now held definite credibility.

As a beast, the power of the transformed Garfiel is overwhelming, but its advantage lay in situations where he's fighting multiple opponents. His very mass is a weapon in itself, and even against single individuals, there was no reason he should lose.

But, when his opponent is someone with inhuman combat abilities, it's a different story. His cumbersome body becomes a target, his powerful, tree-felling claws are fraught with openings, and his devastating strength leaves him clumsy and unbalanced, unable to shift between attack and defense.

Calmly analyzing the situation would make all of this become clear.

However, this simple solution would only be valid if an overwhelming individual was present to carry it out.

A friendly wildcard who could counter a transformed Garfiel— securing this precious resource for their team was Otto's greatest contribution to this fight.

Otto: "We can... we can do it! At this rate, Garfiel can be...!"

Clenching his fists, Otto cheered as he saw the first hope of victory. As if propping up that hope, Ram's fist slammed into the side of the ferocious tiger's face, sending the creature skidding magnificently across the ground, scraping up plumes of dust. And—

Ram: "—Blugh."

Unable to suppress her groan, and with profuse blood streaming from her forehead, Ram's body swayed as if about to fall.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

With the streaming blood dyeing her vision in crimson, Ram's frantic steps barely managed to keep her body from collapsing.

Sharp, piercing pain flashed just above her brow— at the very center of her forehead. Clicking her tongue, she rued the throbbing ache emanating from the faint-white scar.

Behind her, Otto's broken voice shrieked. So annoying.

Ram didn't need anyone to tell her how much the situation had deteriorated. It wasn't as if any of Garfiel's attacks had hit her. Against those thoughtless, wide-open swings, it would actually be harder to try to get hit. Those screams are annoying. Wanna hit him.

Ram: "—Huuuuuuu."

Expelling a short breath, Ram's unsteady feet kicked off the ground.

Immediately, the tiger's claws gouged into the earth where she'd just been standing. Clods of dirt sprang up like a shotgun blast, mingling with vivid red droplets as Ram spun, dancing to evade.

She was clearly on borrowed time, but somehow, she could still move. Sighting an opening, she kicked the tiger's jaw from below, sending the beast wailing in pain as she followed with another kick from her other leg. She rode on the momentum to backflip out of harm's way, but the instant she landed, her stance immediately crumbled.

Ram: "—Ah."

Garfiel: "———WRR!"

Literally by a hair's breadth, Ram evaded the claws late enough for them to shear off a tuft of her hair, sending strands of pink dancing through the air. She had dodged that strike by pure coincidence. If her feet hadn't just happened to slip, Ram's head would have doubtlessly exploded like a red fruit.

Tasting the closeness of death, feeling something indescribable rushing up her spine, Ram's red lips opened into a grin as she snarled.

The exhilaration of battle. The scar on her forehead throbbed, sending something between pain and an itch flooding down her entire body.

Her broken horn. Her proof of being an Oni. To release her full potential, Ram needed her horn to draw Mana from the inexhaustible supply within the atmosphere around her. After losing that organ, her body could not unleash even a tenth of its true power.

She knew beforehand that she'd be punished for overtaxing her body like this. Still, she had thought that if the conditions were right and she managed to end the fight quickly, there was no reason she'd lose. And yet—

Ram: “—You've gotten stronger, Garf.”

Ram's murmur was overflowing with an emotion she rarely showed to others.

Naturally, Otto had never seen it, and even Subaru only saw it on a few occasions. It was the kind of emotion she'd show to her only family, the one who had vanished from her memory.

With the tender smile still etched upon her lips, her lunging fist mercilessly smashed into the tiger's face.

She felt its tough skin bouncing off her knuckles. Her fist, having lost its firmness, directly felt the recoil of the impact, breaking the bones in her hand. It felt good. She was fighting. She was living. The exhilaration of killing and being killed flooded her with overwhelming euphoria. More, more. There's more after this. There is yet another dimension to reach.

Her right hand shattered, no longer capable of forming a fist. The tiger with its crushed face bellowed. Breath like a windstorm pressed towards her as her left hand sliced through the wind and gouged into the thin hide on the tiger's neck. Blood spouted, and her fingers tore out chunks of flesh as more blood spouted forth. Gory specks sprayed onto her white cheeks as she savored the intoxicating taste of iron on her tongue.

If her shattered right hand was useless, then she'll choke him with her arms. One arm wasn't nearly enough to wrap around the neck far wider than her own body. Soaring, grappling, throwing in her legs as well to strangle the beast's arteries, she dodged the claws closing in to swipe her away. Shifting with all her weight, one of her fingers snapped. The shriek felt good, like she was back home.

Ram: “Buh, puh, agh.”

The dance was so much fun, yet the haziness of her head was too aggravating. The blood streaming from her forehead showed no signs of stopping, and it began to overflow from her nose and mouth as well.

She was past her limit, and her body was beginning to break. Her nerves were controlling her body based on its full potential, but with no Mana to sustain it, her body was gradually failing to keep up. Ram continued to move at blazing speeds, still evading Garfiel's claws. So overwhelming was her combat ability, not even a single strike could graze her. But the wicked hands of collapse continued gorging upon her body, and the end would come before any claws or fangs could reach her.

Ram: "—Guh, phh."

After pausing for a deep breath, overflowing liquid burst from her mouth. Clots of blood splashed to the ground, and, as if it'd been Ram's very life force, her body instantly lost its strength.

Her shoulders slumped, her legs collapsed. The beast would surely not overlook this moment. Its beaten and enraged visage bared its fangs as it swung its paw towards Ram's slender body. But—

Otto: "Uwaaaah! DONA!!"

Alongside that throat-tearing chant, a wall of earth shot up from the ground. It cut into the space between Ram and the tiger's paw, dulling the attack's force for just an instant before immediately being smashed to dust.

But in that single instant, a hand dragged Ram's body back and, with all its strength, flung her backwards.

—Somehow, she had a feeling that this was the second time she'd been thrown like this.

Soaring through the air, she stared at the sky in a daze as that out-of-place sentiment popped into her mind. The impact of crashing back-first into the ground robbed her of her breath, but she swiftly raised her head to register the situation.

There, in front of her, in the spot where she'd just been tossed from, now stood Otto who should've been cowering on the side. It seems he saw that Ram was in danger and threw himself in. But even so, surely, there is nothing he can do—

Garfiel: "———WRRRR!"

The beast, enraged by this powerless creature who had intruded into its battle with Ram, blasted the pale-faced youth with a forest-shaking roar. If he froze here, he would surely become food for those fangs. At this juncture demanding immediate action, Otto clenched his hands into fists, stomped his foot into the ground, and—

Otto: “———WRRRR!”

——From his slender throat came a roar exactly like the beast’s.

This was the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language, which Ram had heard so much about. Otto had always boasted that as long as it was an intelligent life form, whether it be dragon, critter, or even insect, he could speak with it. It seems to also allow him to communicate with Garfiel who’d transformed into this irrational beast.

Ram couldn’t tell what Otto must’ve heard from Garfiel’s roar.

And she couldn’t tell what Garfiel thought of Otto’s reply.

But this exchange of roars did create a brief delay before the beast resorted to its claws and fangs. That opening was more than enough for Ram to understand Otto’s true reason for throwing her.

Garfiel: “———WRRRR!”

Otto: “——WRRRR! Aaakh! That’s, my throat’s limit...!”

Struggling to sustain the literally blood-spewing shriek, Otto held his throat as he coughed.

With the conversation at an end, the tiger lifted its paw, aiming to annihilate Otto with a single strike. Otto raised his hands before him, and with a determined expression, he unleashed a desperate scream.

Otto: “EL DONAAA!!”

A thick wall of earth spread out in front of Otto, and, without waiting to watch it rise, he turned and began sprinting backwards. The tiger’s paw crashed through the wall behind him, sweeping up a whirling plume of dust as it closed in on Otto’s fleeing figure—— A direct hit knocked the thin body, flying like a dead twig, plunging nonstop through the bushes and trees.

Whether he lived or died would depend entirely on Otto’s endurance.

Ram paid no attention to the results of his decision and actions. She determined that to pay it no heed was the most appropriate way to repay Otto for what he had done.

Ram: “Garf— Transforming was a mistake after all.”

Ram announced to the tiger who was turning to attack her next.

Leaning against a tree, freed from the exhilaration of bloodlust, Ram’s head steadily cleared. Gripping her wand in her barely-operational left hand, she aimed its tip at Garfiel.

Mana began to shift.

Ram: “If you had even a speck of sense left, you wouldn’t have overlooked me.”

Garfiel: “———”

The tiger warily scrunched its nose.

But did nothing further. It had no idea what was coming.

The eyes of that senseless beast did not understand what it meant that Ram was standing in a mass of white light.

To the residents of this forest, this man, who transformed into a monster and ravaged the earth, the trees, and the forest in its attempts to strike Ram, was a violent and irredeemable villain—

Ram: “I’m not bungling this the way he did.”

Garfiel: “———!”

Realizing something, the tiger stooped low and charged towards Ram.

But it was too late.

Ram: “—AL FULA!”

Mana from the rage of the forest’s residents converged at the tip of Ram’s wand, exploding into a burst of light.

—Thus, the curtain was drawn on the battle taking place in the forest of Sanctuary.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Getting the feeling that he'd just heard a beast's roar, Subaru stopped and glanced behind him.

Subaru: "Nah, no way."

It's way too early for that, Subaru naively decided.

It had been perhaps twenty minutes since he asked Otto to buy time and left him. It was doubtful whether Otto had even departed with the carriages yet, and there was no way the situation could've progressed that far.

He figured his anxiety must be making him hallucinate, but that was actually the most terrifying thought. Just how anxious was he, subconsciously?

Subaru: "Gotta believe, gotta believe. Otto's doing his best to buy time. He did say he'll spill everything once Garfiel catches him... We didn't tell the Arlam villagers anything they didn't need to know either, so they shouldn't become targets."

Each time Garfiel attacked Subaru or the villagers as they tried to leave, Subaru had confronted Garfiel about the Ryuzu clones beforehand. Which meant, by Subaru's speculation, that Garfiel didn't want the truth about the Ryuzu replicants to be leaked outside.

Subaru didn't know what the underlying reason for this would be, but it seems Garfiel could not be at ease until he had eradicated everyone who knew that fact. The loop in which he had slaughtered all the villagers except Subaru was probably the result of his inability to determine whether Subaru had divulged it to any of his fellow escapees.

Whether Garfiel would believe him when he says he never told them would be yet another gamble, but somehow, Subaru had a mysterious conviction that if he sincerely emphasized that fact, Garfiel would accept it.

Garfiel doesn't seem to be the type who could handle complicated concepts very well, so Subaru figured he would just have to present him with something he wouldn't need to think too hard about.

Subaru: "And if Otto's right, then we've got Ram on our side. Worst case, as long as he's not cornered, he shouldn't lay his hands on her..."

If there was anything to worry about, it's that Ram would provoke Garfiel more than necessary. The two have known each other for a long time, and they share a past of which Subaru knew nothing about. If something fractures between them because of that shared past, it could lead to unimaginable consequences.

But the reason Ram had agreed to help them was so Roswaal would keep living in a world that had diverged from his Gospel, and she would tirelessly work to forge that path. Or at least, that was how Subaru interpreted it, and he figured she needed his and Otto's help to achieve it.

Even were she not to be impressed by Otto's sales pitch, she would surely go along with it.

Subaru: "I believe in you, nee-sama! No matter how useless Otto is, please work with him!"

Clapping his palms together, Subaru prayed his utmost for their safety. Unaware that the two had gone off and made a decision to skirt the boundaries of life and death, Subaru concluded his prayer, and,

Subaru: "Well then, time for me to do my part."

Tugging his own cheeks to psych himself up, Subaru gave his head a shake and resumed his stride. The moment his foot stepped inside the gaping entrance, the unpleasant feeling of free-falling through the air and his guts floating upwards assaulted him.

Subaru: "Ugh..."

Holding his hand to his mouth, Subaru forced back the surging nausea as he pressed onward.

That unshakable floating sensation made every step he took feel like the phantom step at the end of a staircase. His organs churned as his blood seemed to flow backwards, and it was as if the air was slathering its tongue around his eyeballs.

Savoring the sense of rejection as if the entire world was refusing Natsuki Subaru, he drew deep breath after deep breath, his face pale, pressing his hands to the wall as he dragged his feet forward.

Subaru: “Don’t... be so cold... I’ll... feel hurt, you know...”

Having anticipated this, Subaru had emptied his stomach beforehand. Nevertheless, this gut-wrenching nausea caused stomach acid to surge to his mouth. Subaru pushed the feeling down and forced his eyes to open, as he desperately crept step after step through the darkness. And—

Subaru: “Ah, thank goodness— I’ve finally found you.”

Having proceeded entirely down the short distance of what felt like an endless path, Subaru's shoulders slump in relief.

In front of him, leaning against the ancient wall of the dusty corridor, the girl sitting there hugging her knees looked up at him with an astonished expression.

???: “Su... baru?”

Albeit her voice was faltering the fact she called his name filled him with satisfaction. Then, Subaru bent down beside the girl on the ground—

Subaru: “Well now— Let’s talk, Emilia-tan.”

Using the same icebreaker from back then when he couldn’t bear to face his mistakes, this time, it was Subaru who spoke the words.

Arc 4 Chapter 110 - Reason to Believe

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 6 “The Reason I Trust You”

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by TranslationChicken — Complete

When he saw Emilia huddled up, hugging her knees, Subaru was washed over by an inopportune sense of relief.

Part of it was because he found Emilia, and part of it was because he found her here. He was convinced this was the only place she could be, and he had hoped this was where she'd be. Being right on both accounts, he felt a weight fall in the pit of his stomach.

Subaru: “Actually, come to think of it, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “...”

Subaru: “This really is a nice place to hole up if you don't want anyone to find you. There's only so many people who can get in here, and all the people who can get in wouldn't want to, anyway.”

Besides Emilia, only three other people could enter Echidna's Tomb.

One rejected the Trials and despised the Tomb, one witnessed another's past and chose to entrust the Sanctuary's future to someone else, whereas the last one roused the Witch's ire halfway through his Trial and had his qualification revoked.

All other qualified people were barred by severe restrictions not to enter. So indeed, this hiding place had “Emilia Only” written all over it.

Emilia did not reply to Subaru's honest praise. She only remained curled up, silently looking up at Subaru.

Subaru: “—Mind if I sit beside you? Standing is... honestly pretty exhausting.”

Emilia: "..."

Subaru: "Where I come from, silence means yes. So, 'scuse me."

Bathed in Emilia's focused stare, Subaru magnificently proclaimed this and sat down at her side.

Two fists was the closest distance as Subaru's manly courage could muster. Before he could get any closer, he'd have to use his words and appeals to shorten the emotional distance between them.

Because, right now, the distance separating their hearts was likely far greater than the widths of their fists.

Subaru: "-----"

Emilia: "-----"

Sitting next to each other, a brief silence fell between them.

Subaru patiently waited for Emilia to speak, while Emilia watched him as he waited. Her lips quivered several times, until finally, with some hesitation,

Emilia: "Subaru..."

Subaru: "-----"

Emilia: "How... are you here?"

Subaru: "How, huh... That's a tricky one. Since you are always on my mind, Emilia-tan, I managed to find you in no time, I guess."

He was rather proud of that fact. Since it meant that he was the only one, at least in the Sanctuary, who knew Emilia well enough to accurately divine her feelings.

Although, if he were truly attuned to Emilia's feelings, he wouldn't be speaking to her inside the Tomb right now.

At Subaru's answer, Emilia's eyes widened. But then, she shook her head as if that wasn't the answer she was looking for.

Emilia: “No. That’s not it, Subaru. I wasn’t asking how you got here... I meant... I thought only people who were granted the qualification could enter the Tomb.”

Subaru: “You sure you didn’t forget, Emilia-tan? The first day we got here, when you fainted inside, I rushed straight in here to bring you out. Apparently, if the Witch hates me like she hates Roswaal, I would’ve exploded the instant I walked in. But, turns out it wasn’t that bad for me. Just feels floaty like I’m in an elevator that’s constantly a second before stopping. Nothing I can’t handle.”

Emilia: “...I, see.”

Emilia muttered with apparent disappointment, as this place wasn’t as exclusive as she thought. Then, she cast a worried gaze over Subaru, who seemed increasingly wracked by nausea.

Even though she must be desperately trying to put the mess inside her head in order, the fact she was still thinking of others even now was at once admirable, heartbreaking, and sweet.

Emilia: “So then... how did you know I was here?”

Rather than silence, Subaru seemed more at ease when distracted by conversation.

Perhaps having noticed this over the course of their exchange, when she saw him heaving with labored breaths, Emilia presented Subaru with a new question. Her words were laced with suspicion and resignation, intermixed with some complex, indecipherable emotion.

The resignation was cavalier, and the suspicion needlessly paranoid. Both traits which Emilia rarely ever showed— In fact, this might be the first time Subaru had ever seen them.

Emilia: “...Subaru?”

Subaru: “Aah, sorry, sorry. Let’s see, how did I know you were here, well, uh, pr—probably because there’s nothing about Emilia-tan that I don’t know, so...”

Emilia: “Liar.”

He wasn’t trying to joke around, but his frivolous answer was nevertheless promptly rejected.

Setting her chin on her knees, Emilia tilted her head as she looked at Subaru. The emotions fluttering within her amethyst eyes were of the pinnacle of chaotic turmoil, as if on the precipice of engulfing her.

Hating the fact that the look of her eyes betrayed her emotions, Emilia turned away, pouting, so that Subaru could no longer see them.

Emilia: “You won’t fool me even if you say that— When I don’t even properly know myself, how could you possibly know?”

Subaru: “It’s surprising how little people can see of themselves. Even when others around them can see all the way to their weak points.”

He wouldn’t call it personal experience, but it did seem to happen to him over and over.

Each time, he’d get all fired up, unaware of how thoughtless, reckless, and senseless he was being. And only when someone finally spells it out for him, would he start to notice it himself. Once, someone had pointed this out to Subaru, and for the very first time—

Subaru: “I figured you’d be here, Emilia-tan, half out of faith, and half out of hope.”

Emilia: “Half, and half...”

Subaru: “I looked all over the village but couldn’t find you anywhere. So instead of thinking about where you might have gone, I thought as hard as I could about why you left in the first place. And when I did, I figured you must be here. And when I found you, I was relieved like you wouldn’t believe.”

Emilia: “...You were relieved, that’s all?”

Subaru: “Huh?”

As Subaru relaxed his lips into a relieved smile, Emilia asked.

Her voice was quiet, almost inaudible. Subaru raised his brows when he heard this, while Emilia locked her gaze onto his as if to peer into the depths of his eyes.

Emilia: “When you found me here, you were just relieved...? You weren’t angry?”

Subaru: “What, Emilia-tan... No way, were you scared I’d be mad at you?”

Her timid attitude almost made Subaru burst out chuckling.

Running off without telling anyone where she was going, only to get scared of reprimands when she was found, that’s exactly what a child would do.

Although that attitude somewhat made sense now that he’s learned about her actual and mental age, it was still incredibly unlike her. But Subaru decided to pay the strangeness no heed and only shook his head.

Subaru: “I’m not angry at all. I was anxious, and honestly super panicked, but not mad. And considering I found you here, I’m really glad.”

Emilia: “...I see.”

The emotions Subaru felt for the missing Emilia was something other than anger.

And even if there was any anger, it’d be at himself for missing the warning signs and failing to anticipate Emilia’s actions. But that anxious, panicked feeling of all his plans coming to ruin was all drowned beneath the flood of relief when he found her.

And so, Emilia’s worries were needless. At least, that’s what he was trying to tell her.

Emilia: “You are not... angry.”

That’s what he tried to tell her, yet her mutter was not one of relief.

Subaru: “—Emilia?”

Emilia: “You are not... angry at me— You won’t... even get angry at me.”

Her voice was quiet, hoarse, and trembling.

By the time Subaru furrowed his brows in astonishment, it was already too late.

Looking down, biting her lip, Emilia’s eyes opened wide.

Tears welled under her eyelids as she tried to keep them from spilling.

Emilia: “Why... won’t you be mad?”

Subaru: “Emili—”

Emilia: “I did something selfish... didn’t I? I did something that distressed you, didn’t I? I disappeared without saying a word, and I worried you, didn’t I? I made you anxious, wondering if I’d run away... That’s the sort of thing I did, wasn’t it? And when someone does that to you, shouldn’t you be angry? Or are not you that kind of person, Subaru?”

Drowning out Subaru’s voice, Emilia spouted her feelings like a torrent. Emphasizing the selfishness of her actions, she closed in on Subaru as if pressing him to condemn her.

Overwhelmed by her unrelenting pressure, Subaru finally realized that he had made a decisive error in choosing his words.

Emilia wasn’t scared that Subaru would be angry at her.

Emilia was scared that Subaru wouldn’t reproach her for her actions.

As to why—

Emilia: “Why aren’t you angry...? You are not angry... because you never expected anything from me in the first place, right? You saw how I failed, but you are still being kind to me... because you aren’t even disappointed in me, right? Because you never thought I could’ve done it... right?”

Subaru: “———”

Perhaps those were the fears that Emilia had always harbored, but was never able to voice, like a darkness wallowing in the depths of her heart.

How many times had she challenged the Trials, only to be sent back with her spirit broken?

She hated herself for it, and the others showed their disappointment at her failure, but there were also those among them who would never fault her, like Subaru and Puck.

While the presence of Subaru and Puck did relieve her, she also, always, had been fighting with this persistent anxiety.

Disappointment meant that there was expectation.

She hated herself because she was disgusted with how she couldn't put up a fight. But no matter how many times she repeatedly failed, she was kindly consoled regardless, and while that worked as a temporary reprieve, it exacerbated a larger, greater sense of anxiety.

For Emilia had always dreaded Subaru and Puck's kindness.

Subaru: "No, Emilia. That's not what I think..."

Belatedly realizing the height of the waves surging in Emilia's heart, Subaru spoke up.

If he does not capture Emilia right here, right now, something terrible is going to happen. Should she continue to reject him, then even if he reaches out, he will never seize her again.

And so, with no time to consider his words, he raised his voice,

Subaru: "I can't get mad at you, but it's not because of anything like that..."

Emilia: "If that's true, then...! Why! Why... didn't you keep your promise...?"

Subaru: "-----Hk!"

Having his knee-jerk reaction shot down, the change of topic caused Subaru's face to stiffen. The promise Emilia spoke of was the one he'd made to her the night before. And as for whether it was fulfilled—

Emilia: "I asked you to hold my hand until morning! And you promised me you would, Subaru... so why did you let go of my hand? Why didn't you keep your promise...?"

Subaru: "-----"

Emilia: "B—both you, and Puck, broke... your promises, and disappeared. You left me behind, and went away... You liars. Subaru you liar. Puck you liar... You liars, liars... liars..."

Her tearful voice lashed out, condemning their broken promises.

Her face downcast and tears streaming from her eyes, Emilia butted her head into Subaru's shoulder before weakly slapping her hand against his chest. The force was equivalent to nothing. But even so, it hurt as though he'd been punched clean through.

This was the accumulation of all the pain which Subaru had overlooked, which Emilia had endured.

And all the pain Subaru and Puck had so callously showered upon her.

Emilia: "P—promises are important... I told you that, I told you, didn't I!? That for Spiritual Arts Users, for me, promises are important... and so I wanted you to keep them... But when you are supposed to have just apologized to me for not having kept one... you broke, a promise again..."

Subaru: "...Emilia."

Emilia: "Never break promises... Never tell lies... You must keep your promises... Because if you don't... If I don't, then... Mother and Juice..."

With her face still pressed against Subaru's shoulder, Emilia's emotions wandered, aimless and lost. The upheavals of her emotions and the grief at his betrayal had torn her thoughts into a thousand disjointed shreds.

Her faltering words grew incoherent, until Emilia was sobbing like a bawling child.

Emilia: "Never tell lies... Never..."

Listening to her voice shaking with grief, Subaru felt a clawing pain tearing at the insides of his chest.

"Promise" was a word that carried different meanings for Subaru and Emilia. Once, Subaru had made light of their promise and wounded her and opened a mutual rift between them in the process. After their reunion, they reaffirmed the significance of promises, and sealed one in the form of a bond.

And regardless the word "Promise" again echoes without kindness, instead binding the two with overwhelming weight.

More than anything, whenever she talked about promises, Emilia would seem different than usual— as if something, some integral part of Emilia's being, tethered her to promises.

Emilia: “———”

With her head buried between her knees, Emilia was weeping. And every second Subaru spent watching her cut another gash of guilt into his heart. Her sobs echoed into his ears as he frantically considered what to say.

Should he apologize? Should he pretend to understand? Should he desperately try to console her? How much consideration is safe for him to convey?

Subaru’s head spun and spun as he thought, unable to grasp any hint of a solution.

What to do, what could he, what should he, what ought he, what would be the best course of action?

Subaru: “———”

Think, think, think, Subaru closed his eyes amidst his whirling thoughts, and then—

He felt he’d reached the answer on what to do.

Subaru: “Emilia— I love you.”

Emilia: “———”

Those words had no business being spoken in this situation.

Emilia: “...Huh?”

Hearing this, Emilia slipped an astonished groan and looked up. Her teary amethyst eyes opened wide as she caught Subaru in her gaze. Seeing his own twisted visage reflected on her teardrop— all he could do was steady himself to confront his own heart.

After all, he no longer had any doubt on what he wanted to say.

Subaru: “Night after night... you throw yourself at the same exact Trial over and over again. And what is this Trial, anyway? It’s just the goddamn past, isn’t it? Well quit dawdling around getting caught up on things that’ve already passed!”

Emilia: “...Ah, guh.”

Subaru: “And just when I figured I’d do it for you, you start saying it’s something you have to do yourself and got so goddamn stubborn about it. It’d be one thing if it helped you get past it, but if you are just getting the same results anyway, then it was all just talk, wasn’t it? How about taking a moment to consider what it feels like, having to watch you fall down over and over again?”

Emilia: “S—Subaru...”

Subaru: ““And to top it off when your pet-slash-guardian goes missing, you can’t even stand for yourself anymore? You throw a tantrum and cry your heart out, making everybody worried about you, then you shirk your responsibilities to go sulk in bed. Well how lovely for you, but enough’s enough, I’m sick of it!”

Emilia’s eyes bulged in disbelief as she listened to Subaru’s tirade. Her damp eyes forgot their tears thanks to the shock, while her lips weakly quivered, unable to pronounce any meaningful words.

Without a doubt, more than ever before, Emilia’s heart was being deeply wounded.

Faced with Natsuki Subaru’s scorn and contempt, never once directed at her before, her heart was torn to pieces.

Emilia’s face contorted.

This was not tearful grief, nor tantrum-inciting rage, nor the hollowness of resignation and defeat. Showered by abuses she’d never heard before, Emilia’s expression changed. Not to any of the more fitting emotions, but to something else entirely.

—On Emilia’s lips rose a horrifically dry smile.

Emilia: “That’s... right, isn’t it? O—of course... you’d, think this about me too, Subaru...”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “There’s no way to dress it up, is there... I’m awful. Ever since I came to the Sanctuary... No, even long before that... all I ever did was cause trouble... and so, I...”

Subaru: “Yeah. You honestly haven’t done a single good thing since you came to the Sanctuary. I know I’m not one to talk here, but this is just way too horrendous to ignore. There’s no getting around it.”

Subaru affirmed the trembling Emilia's self-negations.

Hearing this, Emilia's throat made a choked groan. Swallowing a sob, or something close to it, and with her pained smile still upon her face,

Emilia: "And that's why... both you, and Puck... ab—abandoned me, of course..."

Subaru: "Yes. You've pulled a lot of crap, and you are still showing no signs of getting better. Rather than wanting to do something about it at this point, the only natural conclusion is that you are hopeless no matter what."

Emilia tried to answer Subaru's rebukes. But Subaru snatched the tail of her reply and slammed her with this merciless critique.

Subaru: "—But."

Just before reaching the end, Subaru's denouncements ceased.

Emilia looked up at Subaru. Rising in her eyes was an emotion which only Subaru would understand.

—For it was the same emotion that Subaru had once felt himself.

Subaru: "I love you— Emilia."

Using the same words which he had been unable to escape from, Subaru blocked off Emilia's escape.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The long lashes bordering her eyes trembled as Subaru's words robbed her of her consciousness.

Seeing her frozen there, with even her thoughts ground to a halt, Subaru's cheeks slightly softened. It was not relief, and certainly not ridicule. If one must give it a name, it would have to be nostalgia.

So nostalgic that he wanted to shout out everything inside him, alongside everything Emilia wanted to hear.

Subaru: “I love you. I love you, love you, love you, so much that I can’t help myself but love you.”

Emilia: “W—what are you... saying, all of a sudden...”

Subaru: “I love your super-pretty silver hair, I love your amethyst eyes and how they look like jewels when they are wet, I super-love your voice and how I get dreamy just from hearing it, and there’s your slender long legs and your fair-white skin, and our crazy-ideal height difference, and the fact that just being with you makes my heart race uncontrollably, and all of it makes me fall head-over-heels in love with you.”

Emilia: “———”

Subaru: “I love how you are just a little dopey, and it’s adorable how you put your best into everything, I admire how fervent you get for other people’s sakes, and the way you disregard yourself makes me feel like I just can’t leave you alone, and nothing would make me happier than to be able to watch all of your expressions and all of your emotions from here at your side... That’s what I’ve always felt.”

Emilia: “This isn’t the time to...! Stop messing with me!”

All his feelings for Emilia flowed from his mouth like a flood.

But Emilia shook Subaru’s words away with a shriek. Heaving her shoulders, her brows shot up, Emilia bared her fury at the back-peddalling Subaru, who was acting as though he hadn’t said any of those hurtful things to her.

Emilia: “Why are you saying this all of a sudden! This isn’t what we were talking about! S—Subaru... you just said that I’m utterly useless, that I’m completely lacking, that’s what you were saying! You are sick of it, you can’t bear watching anymore... y—you said, that, I...”

Subaru: “Yeah, I did. Was subject to seeing all that uselessness, and how the results are always something where you just want to sigh over how it was all insubstantial talk, considering how impatient I am in the first place, I should’ve stopped loving you a long time ago. And I would have, if it was anyone but you, Emilia.”

Emilia: “But why!!”

While acknowledging her worthless record, Subaru held off on the most important judgment.

Unable to accept this, unable to allow this omission, Emilia screamed.

Emilia: “All that uselessness and hopelessness, that’s who I am, isn’t it!? So why are you trying to overlook it? Why are you trying to forgive me? Why...”

Subaru: “If that’s what you are asking, then I’ve told you countless times already! IT’S BECAUSE I LOVE YOU!!!”

Emilia: “———Hk.”

Met with Emilia’s tearful protests, Subaru pushed his face into hers and shouted.

Overwhelmed by his advance, Emilia flinched back, but for each inch she retreated, Subaru closed the same distance. The fact that they were gazing into each other’s eyes, close enough for their breaths to intertwine, did not change.

Subaru: “I love you. So no matter how disappointing you are, I will think of it as discovering another side of you, even when you’re lacking, I will wind up supporting you thinking it’s a barrier for you to overcome, and no matter how fed up you are with yourself, I will never dislike you.”

Emilia: “———”

Subaru: “Even if you hate how weak and pathetic you are, and worry that everyone’ll give up on you... I am going to keep expecting things from you. I am never going to use your weakness as a reason to desert or to abandon you.”

Emilia’s eyes wavered. The gaze which she’d fixed upon Subaru—— was filled with a weakness that was yearning to receive his rebukes, to indulge in its own resignation, and to drown in a pool of her own sorrow and grief.

Emilia wanted to be condemned. Perhaps because it is only when everyone has given up on you, and when you recognize that you are entirely beyond saving, that, for the first time, you’d truly feel saved. Subaru knew that feeling, but he also knew what it was like to be guided out of it.

Because Natsuki Subaru had once tried to abandon himself as well, but nevertheless failed to make everyone else abandon him.

Subaru: “I’ve fallen madly in love with you. Everything good about you shines brilliantly for me. And of course, I know not everything about you is good. You are... You are not an angel, nor a goddess, but just an ordinary girl. Pain and hardship make you want to cry, and you want to avoid the things you don’t like, and, if possible, you’d much rather choose only the easy and enjoyable paths.”

Emilia: “———”

Subaru: “But despite those weak, or even ugly parts of you, I love the entire person that is Emilia. And so... even now, I’m not disappointed in you at all.”

Emilia: “...Th—that’s— Don’t you think that’s too selfish!?”

Subaru’s lips weaved his longing into words.

Listening to them in sequence, Emilia couldn’t suppress her turmoil as she objected.

Emilia: “You’ve just denounced me, and said time and time again that I’m useless, and now you are saying you love me anyway... How can you expect me to believe that! Subaru, why would you have that kind of faith in me...? It makes no sense at all!!”

Subaru: “Wrong! You got it all wrong! It’s not because I believe in you that I love you! —It’s because I love you that I believe in you! It’s that way around!”

Emilia: “Love isn’t a reason to believe in someone!”

Subaru: “——Guh! If love alone weren’t reason enough to believe, then who the hell would willingly go through all this suffering to help a pain in the ass woman like you!?”

Voices peaking, the two’s emotions crashed into each other.

Subaru pressed his hand to the wall and dragged himself up to stand while Emilia also stood up to face him. Close enough to butt heads, each with their brows raised, Subaru and Emilia barked out their emotions.

Sending spit flying, faces red, shouting “No you are wrong!”, were the two of them who’d never screamed at each other before.

Subaru: “I love you! I love you so much it drives me crazy, so much that I could die for you. That’s why I put up with all the pain and the suffering and why I’m standing in front of you now even though I’m close to puking!”

Emilia: “That’s— I never asked for that! Going off saying whatever selfish things you want... You are the one who’s never thought about my feelings, Subaru! Just like now... You are putting yourself in harm’s way and always getting hurt because of me... do you have any idea how that makes me feel!?”

Subaru: “Like I could have any goddamn clue, and I’m not going to think about it, either! Everything I ever think about is how to look cool in front of you! What will make you think the best of me, what will make you happy... I’m here working my ass off, how about going with the plan and giving me a cute look once in a while!”

Emilia: “Don’t treat me like I’m a doll! If all you want is for me to be happy... th—then, why did you break your promise! All you had to do was stay with me like I asked you to! So why didn’t you! I bet you actually hate me, don’t you!”

Subaru: “I love you!!”

Emilia: “You are lying!!”

Subaru spewed forth all his emotions in desperation, only for Emilia to yell over him.

How much of a detour had he once taken just to voice these very feelings? How many obstacles had Subaru had to overcome just for the sake of conveying those words to her?

These confessions of love, thrown around so much that they begin to feel cheap, were all Subaru’s truest sentiments, fused with the whole of his being, seeping through every portion of his soul.

Subaru: “I’m not lying! I love you! How about you talk, what do you think of me!? You’ve always got this attitude where you’re always making these goddamn insinuations! Do you have any fucking idea what a jolt it is to my heart every time you make these cute expressions and it looks like there’s hope!? Stop fucking around with me!”

Emilia: “I—I’m not messing with you! I’m just being normal, stop saying weird things! I have so many things to think about right now and I’m facing such serious problems, and you are asking me how I feel about you... I can’t think about those kinds of things! Stop it! Stop bullying me!”

Subaru: “Who’s bullying who here! It’s you! You are the one bullying me!”

Emilia: “It’s you! Bullying me! Subaru!”

Without a shred of logic, it was a clash of emotions. Like two children throwing tantrums showering insults at each other, Subaru and Emilia loudly asserted their respective feelings.

Their voices echoed through the dim, narrow Tomb, shattering the long silence that had existed since the Tomb’s construction. The intensity of their argument could practically slap the one resting inside this Tomb awake, the two of them raggedly panting as they guided their fruitless quarrel towards its conclusion.

Emilia: “I can’t trust anything you say anymore! You are a liar! You broke your promise, and then you just show up in front of me again like nothing happened... Y—you thought I wouldn’t notice, didn’t you! But I was watching! I was watching to see whether you’d keep your promise to me!”

Subaru: “Ain’t that the asshole thing to do!? Don’t you feel embarrassed pulling this crap, pretending to be weak so you can test people!”

Emilia: “I shouldn’t have to hear this from a promise-breaking liar!”

Subaru: “Me breaking my promise has nothing to do with this!”

Emilia’s cheeks blushed with fury as Subaru callously tried to sidestep the issue.

So overwhelmed by emotion that she couldn’t even speak, Emilia took several ragged breaths before finally wrenching out the words,

Emilia: “Why... Why did you break your promise?”

Subaru: “...I’m sorry I broke my promise, I am. I wanted to keep holding your hand and stay with you until morning, I really wanted to.”

Emilia: “That’s not what I asked— Why did you break your promise?”

Subaru: “...I can’t say it.”

Gritting his teeth, Subaru replied to Emilia’s question with an anguished groan.

Seeing him trying to dodge the question even now, Emilia expelled a long sigh.

Emilia: “You won’t keep your promises. And you won’t tell me why you broke them, either... And now you’re yelling at me to do something. If you’re going to tell me you love me... then act like it! Otherwise, I... can’t, believe you...”

Subaru: “Emilia.”

Emilia: “If you’d kept your promise and stayed with me until morning! Then I would’ve definitely believed you! I would’ve believed you and entrusted everything to you! But you broke your promise... And so I, can’t anymore... Whether it’s you or Puck, you both left me behind...”

Grimacing, Emilia stuck her fingers into her silver hair and lowered her face. The heat of her fervor shifted and changed directions as Emilia tightly grasped herself.

Emilia: “Now that Puck is gone, these scenes have been going through my head... They are in my head, scenes I’ve never seen before, conversations I don’t remember, they just keep flowing and flowing...”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “I thought I remembered everything, but these are memories I never knew existed... Yet, they really are my memories... And every time I remember, whenever something that’s meant to be there, something which I’ve forgotten re-emerges, I get so afraid...”

These memories Emilia spoke of— which Puck had sacrificed his bond with her to unseal, were all the genuine memories which she had once tried to forget.

When her Contract with Puck was terminated, the uncorked memories began to overflow, flooding Emilia’s interior with her true recollections.

But this dramatic shift could transform her very being.

Emilia: “I finally realized that I’ve been leaning on Puck while running away from all sorts of things... I’m certain that Puck left so he could tell me that. But I’m scared. I’m scared. Puck’s gone, and my real memories are coming out... And I... I feel like I’m steadily losing myself.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “Once all the memories come back... I know I won’t be the same me anymore. My present self is built upon memories that aren’t my real memories... but, once I remember where I really started... I know that this me who’s come all this way is going to disappear...”

All of Emilia’s resolve and determination had false memories as their basis.

And so, once she regains her true memories, once her origin changes form, just what will happen to Emilia’s present resolve, and to the path she has walked thus far?

???: “—What’s important isn’t the beginning or the middle, it’s the end.”

Subaru: “———”

Suddenly, a voice echoed through Subaru’s mind. This familiar yet distant voice felt so incredibly close to Subaru, though it belonged to someone who he would likely never see again. At the very end of the end of their parting, she gave him these words as his homework.

“Ahh, that’s right”, he thought.

No matter how it began, regardless of which path you took, until you reach the end of the end of the end, who has the right to say whether it had all been a mistake or not?

Subaru: “No matter what you remember, nothing will change. I love you. And I’ll always love you.”

Emilia: “—Hk. I don’t, believe you. This me, you say you love... o—once she’s gone, will you, still...”

Subaru: “I’ll say this now. No matter what happens, you are not going anywhere. And I’ll continue to love you.”

Emilia: “...You are a liar. How do you, expect me to... believe you...”

Subaru: “—Then, I’ll make you believe.”

With her voice trembling and her eyes wavering, Emilia tried to reject Subaru.

His words could not reach her. And his appeals could not convince her. In that case, the only way left to convey his feelings was through action. And so,

Emilia: “Suba...”

Subaru: “If you don’t want it, dodge.”

Within breathing distance— or rather, so close that not even their breaths could stand between them—

Subaru reached for Emilia’s shoulder, and drew his face closer. Watching Subaru’s approach, confusion rose in Emilia’s eyes as her body tensed.

For one second, he waited. If she was going to push him away, this was the moment.

Emilia: “——”

But Emilia closed her eyes.

Whether it was resignation, or the result of hesitation, Subaru couldn’t tell.

Subaru: “—Mmh.”

Emilia: “——Ngh.”

Their breathing intertwined, Emilia held her breath, Subaru’s brows furrowed in pain.

A quiet noise came from the force of their teeth striking together. It started with that slight, aching pain, but it soon vanished from even the crevices of their minds, drowned out by the intensity of that heat.

Soft lips. A kiss, barely more than a touch.

For Emilia, it was her first, and for Subaru, it was his second time kissing her.

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Setowi (source)

Unlike the first time, filled with the cold taste of death. This second kiss was of the burning taste of life.

With neither being the first to move, their lips parted. They drew their faces away from each other, both forgetting to breathe as they gazed at the other.

Flushed cheeks. Watery eyes. The person reflected within Emilia's irises looked utterly entranced.

That pathetic expression made Subaru return to his senses first, and, while finally remembering to breathe—

Subaru: “—I love you.”

Emilia: “———”

Subaru: “No matter what useless side of you I see, and no matter what kinds of fights we get into, I will never stop loving you, Emilia. That shall not change no matter what— So I'll always believe in you. And if you ask me why, it's...”

Emilia: “Because, you love me...”

Finishing the end of Subaru's sentence as if in a daze, Emilia touched her lips. Tracing her fingers over them, as if confirming the lingering tenderness of their touch, tears welled in her eyes.

A droplet travelled down her fair-white cheek, glimmering like a drop of the moon.

Subaru: “It's only natural that you'd be anxious when unknown memories start flowing back. And I understand being scared when it feels like you are becoming someone you don't know. But that doesn't mean the path you've walked will vanish, or that your feelings will change.”

Emilia: “How could you... say this like you are sure...?”

Subaru: “What's important isn't the beginning. It's the end— The woman I respect most in the world told me that.”

His mother may be the most air-headed person in the world, but somehow, she still managed to teach him his single most important lesson in that world.

Though he couldn't be sure if he understands it completely, he nevertheless intends to try. Because there is a girl right in front of him, with whom he wishes to figure this out together.

Watching Emilia stand there, weighed by anxiety, Subaru gave her a lighthearted shrug, as if to tell her that it's no big deal, and to blast her worries away.

Subaru: "It's alright, Emilia. No matter what you remember, I'll be on your side. Go ahead and recall every memory you've forgotten. And if you are still afraid, then go find it."

Emilia: "Find... Find what...?"

Subaru: "Just like how my feelings for you allow me to charge ahead without a fear in the world, you should find your most cherished feeling that'll let you sprint forward without worrying about anything going on around you."

Emilia never hesitated to expend herself for another's sake. The way she placed others before herself was noble and beautiful, and Subaru loved it to no end, but——The expression "for another's sake" is horrifically kind, and horrifically sad. Because the feelings one may hold towards an unknown stranger could surely never rival the feelings one held for someone familiar and close.

Subaru: "I'm kinda sorta hoping that cherished feeling would be directed towards me, though."

Emilia: "My... cherished feeling..."

Perhaps she was not listening to Subaru, for Emilia raised her hand to her chest and lowered her eyes. Her fingers reached for where Puck's crystal would have been.

With their bond shattered, there was nothing for her to touch. Her fingertips scraped at empty air. But Emilia clenched her hand firm.

Emilia: "Once I've recovered all of my memories... maybe it'll be there, my cherished feeling."

Subaru: "Yeah. It'll be there. Your reason to keep walking."

Emilia: "—Mhm."

Her expression was not exactly doubtful, nor was it entirely one of acceptance.

After seeing Emilia give a slight nod, Subaru closed his eyes as he turned his face up to the ceiling.

He gets the sense that the words which had similarly uplifted him had been more powerful. Gets the sense that it had been kinder words, stricter words, stronger words that saved him.

—But will he really become Emilia's strength?

Subaru: "——"

It'd be way too lame to ask that now.

He sighed, and the instant he let go of his strength, the nausea he'd forgotten about jolted him to his core. Instinctively putting his hand to the wall, he barely managed to keep himself from puking.

Emilia: "Subaru?"

Subaru: "It's nothing... Or really, as much as I wanna man up and say that, it's not nothing. I'm pretty bad right now. Anyway, if you wanna keep arguing or fighting, we could pick it up once we are outside."

Emilia: "Geez... That's not what I want at all."

In front of the pale-faced Subaru, Emilia's lips formed into a faint smile. But she was too weak to resume her usual determined facade. She hasn't yet reached a clear-cut answer. And her anxiety wasn't fully dispelled.

His hand against the wall, Subaru started walking towards the Tomb's exit. Behind Subaru's unsteady steps, Emilia reached out her hand, but hesitated, indecisive about whether to touch him. The meeting of their lips just now must've affected her considerably.

Just thinking back on it made Subaru's face flush red-hot at how brazen he had been.

But all those sentiments would have to be left behind for now.

Subaru: "——"

So he could show her he is on her side, and willing to do anything for her—

In order to fulfill the role that he had taken upon himself. To protect her, and to protect all his feelings for her—

Subaru: “I’ll have to see this through to the end.”

They came out of the Tomb. Bright sunlight greeted them as they stepped from the darkness. And,

Subaru: “—Kept you waiting, huh.”

???: “Tch.”

The person clicked his tongue in irritation as Subaru gave him a wave.

???: “—I wasn’t waitin’.”

—His entire body drenched in blood, eyes ablaze in hostility, Garfiel stood there.

Arc 4 Chapter 111 - Garfiel's Barrier

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 7 "None Can Lift the Quain Stone Alone", Parts 1-2
(halfway)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 153

Watching Garfiel stand there, even Subaru could see that he was riddled with injuries.

Countless wounds dyed Garfiel's body crimson-red while his shoulders heaved drawing ragged breaths. Blood seeped from the numerous lacerations and, except for the loincloth covering the lower portion of his scrawny figure, he was entirely exposed.

Having lost even his shoes, he stood there barefoot while Subaru lowered his lifted hand,

Subaru: "...Sure isn't the welcome I was expecting. I figured you'd be pissed, but never thought you'd wind up looking like that."

Garfiel: "Don't y'worry 'bout me. Just had'a slip'n fall, that's all."

Garfiel shot a glare of displeasure at Subaru's stiff remarks.

Of course, Garfiel was joking, but seeing him so wounded, Subaru couldn't help but imagine the worst. Garfiel had been running around the Sanctuary looking for Ryuzu, and he must've been held up by Otto's delaying efforts just as Subaru had planned.

So Subaru could think of only one possible scenario where Garfiel could've wound up in this state. And that is,

Subaru: "Otto you moron, I told you to just spill everything and run...!"

Garfiel: "Lil' bro was brave. Ain't made for fightin' though, probably never been in a real fight either. But he kept goin' on about doin' this fer a friend... Gave me a pretty hard time."

His cheeks ruefully twisted, Garfiel touched the white scar on his forehead.

He already had that wound before this, but does that mean every other wound on his body was from his fight with Otto?

Although, "fight" probably isn't the word for something this one-sided. Otto may be more adept at brawling than Subaru, but in a world overrun with ludicrously overpowered people, Otto ought to be classified as a non-combatant. When pitted against a real fighter like Garfiel, one of the strongest people Subaru knew, Otto should stand no chance of winning.

Not to mention that Subaru had only asked Otto to buy some time through petty tricks. Nothing more.

Subaru: "—He's not... dead, is he?"

A line of cold sweat rolled down Subaru's forehead. The worst possible scenario would be that the scene ended with Garfiel's claws tearing Otto apart. It'd be nice if he could laugh it off as some silly thought, but he couldn't. Not after seeing Garfiel in this state.

For Garfiel to have sustained these kinds of injuries, he must've been forced into a difficult fight. To hope that Garfiel had gone easy on Otto in the end would be too optimistic a thought.

But still, if Otto was dead, then it would all be pointless.

Not Otto's death— but Subaru's life would lose all meaning.

Emilia: "...Subaru."

Just as Subaru gulped down a breath, his thoughts descending towards despair, a voice like a silver chime called his name from behind. Those fingertips which had hesitated to touch him previously, now rested on his slumping shoulders. The weightless touch caused Subaru's deteriorating thoughts to stop.

He glanced behind him to find Emilia standing there, looking at him with worry in her eyes. It was clear that she had yet to sort out the emotions churning inside her.

This scene with Garfiel standing there, furious and slathered in blood, must've been incomprehensible from her perspective, though she could probably tell that this was no mundane affair. Yet, within those eyes gazing at Subaru, there was more concern than there was fear.

Subaru: "I'm fine, Emilia. I'm sorry you had to see me like this... Just now, I remembered who I have standing behind me, so I've calmed down now."

As if revived by her gaze, Subaru spilled a deep breath before turning back to Garfiel.

The entrance of the Tomb sat on a small slope, so Subaru was looking down to face him. Meanwhile, the brooding, slouching figure returned a piercing leer sharp enough to kill.

Garfiel: "Looks like while I was busy runnin' around, y'bastards were doin' whatever th'fuck y'wanted. Sneakin' sneakin' sneakin' sneakin', eh? Don't y'know how much I hate these dirty fuckin' tricks?"

Subaru: "I didn't know we needed your permission to do stuff around here. But you are a pretty easy person to read, so I could tell just from a glance. I figured you'd be mad, but also that you won't do anything more than that."

Garfiel: "Hah?"

In front of Garfiel's intimidation, Subaru only replied with a shrug. Perhaps because Subaru's tone didn't sound any more excited than usual, Garfiel scrunched his nose. Meanwhile, looking down at Garfiel's annoyed expression, Subaru's face tensed.

Subaru: "Garfiel. What did you do with Otto?"

Garfiel: "He pulled some shit on me... fer that, I chewed him to bits, 'n now his body's out fertilizin' th'forests."

Subaru: "———"

With a click of his razor fangs, Garfiel licked his lips, causing Emilia to swallow her breath. Overwhelming rage emanated from Garfiel's body. That alone conveyed how tough of a fight Otto had given him— as well as the fact that Garfiel could not have held back while fighting him.

And so,

Subaru: "Whew, so he's alive then. Hell, you had me seriously worried there... My guts had gone cold thinking that everything's ruined, no joke."

Garfiel: "...Ahh?"

Subaru: "But what the hell was he thinking... Well, he did say he managed to get Ram's help, so maybe she was the one putting weird ideas in his head? That does sound like something Ram would do... I mean, she never told us what she plans to do when push comes to shove."

Garfiel: "Oy, oy, th'fuck are y'doin'!?"

Subaru: "Which means, Ram's the reason you got all beat up, huh? Ahhhhh, that makes sense. No way Otto could've done this by himself. Hell, I almost thought Otto had been hiding some secret powers from me, that'd sorta fracture our friendship..."

Garfiel: "—M'therfucker! Th'fuck are you goin' on about! Huh?!?"

Garfiel barked in rage, stomping his surging emotions into the ground, rupturing it.

The earth caved beneath Garfiel's heel, creating a crater with him at its center. Fissures spread across the pit of the crater, sending up billowing dust around him as he bared his fangs.

Garfiel: "I said I fuckin' killed him! Th'guy's gone! He used his weird fuckin' D'vine Protection t'get th'forest on his side, screwed with me usin' fuckin' bugs and rats. 'n at th'end, he hit me with some huge magic he couldn't've cast by himself. So I respected his fightin' spirit— with my claws 'n fangs!"

Subaru: "Got the forest on his side... huh. Didn't know the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language could be used like that. That asshole, hiding something this important from me..."

Garfiel: "N' same goes fer Ram he got taggin' along with him! Fuckin' Ram came buttin' into our fight 'n attacked me wit'everythin' she's got... So I chewed her dead too."

Subaru: "..."

Gritting his teeth, Garfiel buried his face in his hands and looked up to the sky.

Meanwhile, wordlessly watching Garfiel's laments, Subaru ruminated over his statements.

So indeed, Ram and Otto had joined forces and decided to take on Garfiel. With Ram's assistance, perhaps they managed to drive Garfiel to the very brink of defeat. But still, the barricade presented by this beastman proved too thick.

Garfiel: "I don't feel like chasin' after th'fuckers who got away while he kept me distracted. But I ain't about t'overlook the shit yer pullin' here. Now step away from there. No one's goin' in th'Tomb anymore. I'm tearin' the fuckin' thing down."

Subaru: "If you do that, there'll be no way to break the barrier... The Sanctuary'll be closed off forever. Are you seriously okay with that?"

Garfiel: "I'm good with that. Everything except that's bad."

Saying this, Garfiel stepped out of the crater and towards the Tomb. His gait lost all trace of doubt, as if proclaiming he would not hesitate for an instant to act on his words.

His body was bloody and riddled with wounds, but even in this state, an unfathomable gap existed between them. Even with all his injuries, Garfiel's strength was leagues ahead of Subaru's. Both the crater at his heels and the ghastly aura emanating from his body made this clear. However,

Emilia: "I... I won't let you do that."

Here, aside from Subaru, there was yet another person standing in Garfiel's way.

Stepping up beside Subaru, Emilia placed herself between Garfiel and the Tomb. Seeing this, Garfiel looked up at her, unimpressed.

Garfiel: "What's this, oy. Weak lil' girls shouldn't get in my way."

Emilia: "No, I will stop you. I won't let you destroy the Tomb. Because I must pass the Trials, no matter what."

Garfiel: "It's obvious y'can't do it. Day after day, yer fuckin' bawlin' 'n cryin' all over th'place. 'n now yer sad 'cause y'lost yer lil' friend, yeah? Go curl up in bed'n keep cryin'. Do that, 'n I won't touch ya."

Emilia: "———Gh."

Sorrow flashed across Emilia's expression as she listened to Garfiel's cruel statements. But that expression only lasted for an instant as Emilia immediately swallowed down the pain.

Emilia: "Too bad, but no matter what you say, I cannot step away. I need to challenge the Trials. I need to face my past, and..."

Garfiel: "Every, fuckin', one of y... Tch!"

Cutting off Emilia's words, Garfiel clicked his tongue in irritation, his eyes blazing with fury.

The blood-curdling pressure emanating from his presence jolted in intensity, causing Emilia's shoulders to shudder. Noticing her frightened reaction, Garfiel sneered.

Garfiel: "What happened t'that bluster 'bout yer past? Th'second yer scared of my amazin' self, all goddamn chance yer ever gonna get over what yer most afraid of is out the window— No one can fuckin' do it. 'Tis just a malicious fuckin' ruse the Witch came up with so she can watch us 'n laugh."

Subaru: "Say, you have a pretty poor opinion of the Witch, huh."

Garfiel: "Huh?"

Hearing Subaru interrupt him, Garfiel turned his fiery glare from Emilia and jabbed his finger at Subaru.

Garfiel: "Th'fuck? Yer actually defendin' that fuckin' Witch? «No mornin' nor dusk for Potosk», they say, but what are ya, that fuckin' Witch's slave? Huh!?"

Subaru: "——"

Subaru fell silent at Garfiel's question.

Seeing this, Garfiel furrowed his brows in astonishment, as if he could not understand Subaru's silence.

The Witch sleeping inside the Tomb was Echidna. But the Miasma enshrouding Subaru's body belonged to the Witch of Envy. Only informed of its existence, but unable to smell the Miasma himself, Garfiel didn't know enough to tell the difference.

And naturally, with his willpower broken after only a single attempt, Garfiel had no real concept of Echidna's Trials, either.

Subaru: "You really are just half-assing everything, Garfiel."

Garfiel: "...Th'fuck d'ya just say?"

Putting together all of Garfiel's words and actions thus far, Subaru gave him this appraisal.

Hearing Subaru's unsparing assessment, Garfiel quietly muttered his threat. But despite Garfiel's menacing presence, Subaru looked him in the eyes without fear.

Subaru: "Just because you can't do it yourself, you think no one else can do it either. «This is how I think, so that guy must be the same as well»—— How complacent can you get?"

Garfiel: "..."

Subaru: "You are right, Emilia has failed the Trial multiple times. She was forced to watch a past she doesn't want to see and every time she came out crying, I won't deny that. When Puck left, she lost it so bad it was hard to watch, and I can't even confidently say that she's gotten over it yet."

In front of the silent Garfiel, Subaru jerked his chin at Emilia beside him.

Emilia looked at Subaru in surprise as she heard these sudden comments. But perhaps because she saw Subaru's expression as he said this, she did not interrupt him.

After all, Subaru was only voicing what Emilia already accepted herself. While certainly embarrassing, she could not ignore those facts. The fact she could face these judgements head-on was precisely what made her splendid despite her weakness. And so,

Subaru: "Maybe the results of the Trials won't change, even now. And she might still fail tonight and come back crying."

Garfiel: "If y'fuckin' know that, why are y'still doin' this over 'n ov..."

Subaru: "But Emilia will continue challenging it. Countless times—— Unlike you."

Garfiel: “———Hk.”

Garfiel swallowed his breath. Seeing the flash of doubt flickering through his razor-sharp gaze, Subaru fearlessly proclaimed his piece.

And then, looking him straight in the eyes once more,

Subaru: “Garfiel. You failed and ran away, but Emilia is nothing like you.”

Garfiel: “——Tch! Don’t you fuckin’ get cocky!!”

At the fall of Subaru’s words, Garfiel bellowed in rage, his right foot shattering the earth. The impact of his stomp sent the ground flying upwards. By some unknown mechanism, it took the shape of a square slab the size of a tatami mat as Garfiel kicked with his left foot.

The chunk of earth spun vertically, shrouding itself in a whirlwind as it zoomed past Subaru’s left ribs—— straight into the side of the Tomb’s entrance, crashing against the ancient structure.

Dust and a section of tangling ivy peeled from the rumbling wall of the Tomb. Yet, paying no heed to the debris raining onto his head, Subaru remained unflinching. Beside him, Emilia’s shoulders shuddered for only an instant, but, having heard Subaru’s previous words, she did not move from her spot.

Seeing the faint but definite trust between them, Garfiel’s eyes shot wide open the ferocious gleam in his bloodshot eyes intensifying.

Garfiel: “Th’fuck! I’ve had enough! Aaaaagh! I’ve had enough! Enough of yer fuckin’ smug, know-it-all faces! If I want I can tear ya to pieces so mutilated no one’ll be able t’tell th’two of y’apart! Don’t y’fuckin’ know that, huh!?”

Subaru: “I do know—— that you are incapable of doing that.”

Drawing ragged breaths, kicking at the earth, Garfiel barked out threat after threat. But his intimidations no longer had any impact on Subaru’s heart.

It was only natural. After everything that’s happened, with his conversation with Ryuzu and this present situation—— Subaru could finally understand what lay at Garfiel’s core.

Despite flaunting all his rage and hostility towards Subaru and Emilia, Garfiel—

Subaru: “You won’t kill me or Emilia. Or rather, you can’t. After all, Garfiel... you’ve never killed anyone before, have you?”

Garfiel: “———”

Subaru: “You fought with Otto and Ram, but you couldn’t have killed them. Otto’s one thing, but there’s no way you’d kill Ram. They aren’t showing up because you immobilized them somehow... and stopped there.”

At this, Garfiel’s aggravated behavior came to a halt. He stifled his breathing as he stared at Subaru. Meanwhile, hearing Subaru say this to Garfiel, a look of confusion rose in Emilia’s eyes. As she had only seen Garfiel’s usual self, Subaru’s declarations must’ve been rather difficult for her to understand.

But Subaru was confident.

Garfiel, at least while in humanoid form and possessing of his will, could not consciously decide to kill anyone.

—Subaru had had several confrontations with Garfiel in the loops up till now.

They’d been either due to differences in opinion, or to Garfiel abruptly viewing Subaru with hostility. Once, Subaru had taken a blow from Garfiel when he tried to murder Roswaal, losing an eye in the process. But it was also Garfiel who healed the one-eyed Subaru afterwards, and even when he turned completely hostile, he had never once killed Subaru.

There was a single exception— when Garfiel transformed into a tiger and slaughtered the refugees. It was a memory Subaru would rather not recall, but it was also a memory he could not forget, having been seared into his mind; that event which made him feel such hard to swallow emotions towards Garfiel, even now.

But thinking back on that day, there was something that Subaru had noticed.

Garfiel could not speak while in beast form. Swinging his claws and fangs according to his instincts, he'd become no more than an animal. So even when he turned his weapons on the villagers, he was merely acting on instincts.

But, back then, that first villager, when he killed that first person who marked the beginning of slaughter, Garfiel hesitated right up to the very, very end.

At the time, the excess of rage and panic had kept Subaru from understanding.

When Garfiel fell upon that very first person, Subaru thought adrenaline was making everything happen in slow-motion. But that was not the case. It was genuine hesitation. It was only once he killed him, when he finally lost that hesitation, that Garfiel truly became a beast.

Subaru could still remember the hatred he felt when he saw the great tiger's eyes as it had its taste of blood and life.

Subaru: "Your eyes aren't like those eyes back then. You haven't killed anyone, yet."

Garfiel: "Th'fuck's that's supposed t'mean? Ram's one thing, but I got no reason t'hesitate chewin' yer lil' lackey t'death."

Subaru: "Yeah, Ram's one thing."

Emilia: "H—hey, um... Do you two have some kind of grudge against Otto-kun...?"

Emilia timidly cut in to comment about Otto's unfortunate treatment in this conversation. But, perhaps for the first time ever, Subaru consciously ignored Emilia and jabbed his finger at the fuming Garfiel.

Subaru: "If you wanted to hit me, you would've. But you weren't trying to hit me. You were only barking threats. Your bloodlust is just for show. Makes you wonder which of us is the scared one."

Garfiel: "Oy, oy, oy... Mind what y'say, asshole. Keep goin', 'n those words might just be yer last."

Subaru: "Quit making threats you can't follow through on. I've already seen enough of cowards trying to act tough after those three idiots in that back alley. Though, at least they had the guts to stab me."

Garfiel: "Sh—shut up..."

Gritting his teeth, Garfiel shot Subaru an expression of fury.

But he was facing Natsuki Subaru. There was no better stage for this man's talents to shine than trying to piss off his opponent. And so,

Subaru: "Every day you groom those claws and fangs you are so proud of and keep'em nice and tidy, but they are just decoration, aren't they? In fact, how about putting on some nail stickers while you're at it? Girls are really into that stuff where I come from. Suits your sissy attitude nicely, don't you think?"

Garfiel: "I told y'ta fuckin' SHUT UP—!!"

Another impact.

The gouged-out earth shot through the air, skimming over Subaru's head, and crashing into the Tomb. There was no need to dodge. Garfiel never had any intention of hitting him.

Subaru: "If you wanna play with mud, go find a sandbox. You realize this thing behind me is a priceless historical artifact, right? Didn't you call yourself the Sanctuary's Guardian or something? This is the grave of your local Witch, you know. You shouldn't discriminate between friends."

Garfiel: "She ain't! My fuckin'! Friend! It's all because of that Witch buried here that... I... I... Tch!"

His glib tongue was in perfect form. Faced with Subaru's provocations, Garfiel's breaths grew faltering and feeble. He had pushed his wounded body to get here. On top of that, he had to endure this exhausting conversation and waste his stamina on meaningless shows of force. His blood flow had accelerated in tune with his emotions, reopening his previously-sealed wounds.

Standing there, drawing ragged breaths, Garfiel glared at Subaru. Then suddenly, his gaze turned to Emilia at Subaru's side. He furrowed his nose, as if having noticed something,

Garfiel: "Oy... th'fuck are y'doin'. Th'fuck's with those eyes."

Emilia: "..."

Garfiel: "If y'got somethin' t'say, say it! It's pissin' me off gettin' looked at like that!"

Perhaps seeing something inside Emilia's wordless gaze, Garfiel howled.

Watching him with complex emotions resting in her amethyst eyes, Emilia shook her head at Garfiel's request,

Emilia: "Garfiel... Just, what are you so afraid of?"

Garfiel: "I'm, afraid... yer sayin'?"

Emilia: "Well you are afraid. You are talking loud, reaching out as best you can, and stomping the ground to cheer yourself up, aren't you?"

Garfiel: "Like ya fuckin' know anything 'bout me..."

Emilia: "I do know. After all—"

Cutting off Garfiel's quieter statement, Emilia took a single breath.

Emilia: "—I've also been living in constant fear of many things."

Garfiel's breathing froze. Emilia touched her chest, her fingers confirming the absence of the crystal, a fleeting sense arising in her eyes.

Emilia: "I managed to get to this moment, while always scared of lots of things. I left lots of things to Puck, I leaned on him... I didn't notice I was doing it, and yet I made it here. But today, since just a moment ago, I feel like I finally understand it a little."

Garfiel: "Shut up."

Emilia: "I don't clearly know what's right yet, nor what it is I have to do. But I feel like I know that there's something. And I can find that something inside the Tomb. I cannot move out of your path."

Garfiel: "Shut it. Disappear. Don't talk to me."

Emilia: "...But don't you truly already have that something?"

Garfiel: "—Hk!"

Past his limit, Garfiel's head sprung up. His knees bent slightly, his petite frame to go bounding off like a shot right after. He leapt for Emilia with horrifying speed— But just before he is able to reach her, Subaru cut in between them.

Subaru: "Garfiel!"

Garfiel: "—Tch!"

Reaching his arms out towards the oncoming Garfiel, Subaru charged while simultaneously protecting Emilia.

The strike connected, and Subaru was sent tumbling, wincing in pain at the battering. After rolling several times from the momentum, he stopped face-up on the ground. Garfiel put his claws to the fallen Subaru's neck as he bares his fangs at Emilia.

Garfiel: "Right now! Right fuckin' now, get away from here! Don't, 'n I'm paintin' yer clothes red with th'blood from his dismembered neck!"

Emilia: "Subaru—"

Emilia prepared for battle. She may have lost Puck, but she was still a practitioner of Spiritual Arts. She could enlist help from her contracted Micro Spirits to use magic. Leaving aside whether she would win, she was in a position to fight Garfiel.

And thus Emilia immediately moves to build up mana—

Subaru: "Emilia, stop! I'm fine! He won't do anything anyway!"

Garfiel: "Shut it! Fuckin' enough, I'm sick of this crap! My ears are rottin' off listenin' t'th'bullshit from you 'n that woman! If I rip open that loose mouth'ov yers 'n cut off yer jaw, maybe ya ain't gonna talk 'bout this shit no more?"

Subaru: "—Guh."

Leaning down on the fallen Subaru, Garfiel ran his sharp claws over his left cheek. Their points gouge into his flesh, Subaru wailing quietly at the burning pain.

But even still, his eyes do not yield.

Subaru: “You get us out of the way, destroy the Tomb, and then what...? You think running and running and running is going to let you get away?”

Garfiel: “It’s yer own regret. Who can do anythin’ ‘bout it? That thing ain’t got th’slightest inclination to let us get away. Why don’t’cha get that!”

Subaru: “No, I don’t get it, Garfiel— Since your past, and your regrets, can be overcome.”

Garfiel: “———”

Subaru’s assertion.

And simultaneously, Garfiel and Emilia swallowed their breath.

Subaru: “It was painful, it was suffering, it was so overwhelmingly pathetic that I couldn’t face anyone, and I gave up. But the only who thought it was hopeless was me, and actually, nothing was beyond hope at all.”

Say those were fake events, false parents, and created from memories, Subaru faced his biggest regret, and got a single answer out of it, as well as a goodbye.

The Trial assuredly did confer Subaru with pain. Just remembering it made his insides creak perpetually, and it branded Subaru with both his past and his suffering.

Subaru: “But, including that pain and absolutely everything, I swallowed my past. Swallowed it whole. While yes, that Witch is an asshole, and I’ll never forget how she betrayed me when I tried to trust her.”

The visage of the white-haired Witch, always smiling mysteriously, passed through his mind. No matter how much time passed, Subaru would never unravel his complicated feelings about her. But there should be no need to betray even the feeling that he acquired back then.

Subaru: “I’m grateful to the Witch. I’m glad I could face my past. I ran, I ran, I ran, and I ran. But I’m glad I couldn’t escape.”

Garfiel: “———”

Subaru: "Garfiel— Are you seriously still running from your past with your family?"

Garfiel: "Wh—!?"

Garfiel's face changed colors. It reddened in rage, paled in astonishment, and now, turns pallid. The clicking of his fangs resulted from the trembling of his chattering teeth. With chills, or perhaps in dread, Garfiel looked down at Subaru.

Garfiel: "Who... told you... about my past?"

Subaru: "Basically everyone you are thinking of. Do you think that's a betrayal? Or do you think it's something else?"

Garfiel: "Uh, ah... Huh—"

The overwhelming fury kept Garfiel from doing as much as speaking as he let out choppy, faltering breaths. His breathing was intermittent. Witnessing this violent shock happening immediately before his face, Subaru continued.

Subaru: "The Witch told me you are afraid of the outside world."

Garfiel's reply was nowhere to be found.

Subaru: "Frederica told me when she offered you to leave with her, you denied her."

Garfiel's reply was nowhere to be found.

Subaru: "Ryuzu-san told me the thing you saw in the Tomb, was your goodbye with your mother."

Garfiel's reply was—

Garfiel: "Mo... ther."

Subaru: "I heard the superficial outline of your and Frederica's circumstances. You are siblings from a human mother, and two different half-blood demi-human fathers. You two quarter-bloods aren't bound by Sanctuary's barrier. Frederica left Sanctuary so she could create a place to receive the people from here, for when the barrier is eventually broken."

Garfiel: "Sister..."

Subaru: "But you didn't take Frederica's hand, and stayed inside. Why did you? What is it you want to do, for what purpose is it, that you are still here?"

His breathing was labored.

Garfiel's hand slowly put in more force, as it pressed Subaru to the ground. He was not doing this to silence Subaru. Garfiel was entirely exhausted, to the point that if did not put his strength into something, cling to something, he would imminently break down.

Subaru: "In the Tomb you saw your past. You saw your mother leaving you and Frederica behind in Sanctuary... Didn't you?"

Garfiel: "-----"

Subaru: "Is that the reason you are avoiding the outside world?"

Silence is golden— An admission.

Garfiel remained silent, looking at Subaru with weakest gaze he has given yet. It could not even be called a glare, this powerless look.

His expression was that of a small child, scared of his secrets being exposed.

Guilt for cutting into another's wounds arose in Subaru's chest. He subdued the feeling, grappling it down, as he pressed Garfiel for the truth. And so, he stabbed his finger into the faintly visible wound, forcing the hole wider, letting the blood flow out in droves.

Subaru: "Because your mother abandoned you. Because you hate your mother who abandoned you, because you hate the outside world that took your mother, you detest the outside world!?"

His theories from speaking with Ryuzu. His advice from Echidna, and her statement that Garfiel fears the outside world. The reason his goodbye with his family remained in Garfiel's heart, and even now stung him like barbs.

Hearing the assertive tone of Subaru's statement, Garfiel frantically shook his head.

Garfiel: “No! No, nonononononono, yer wrong!! The fuck’d you goddamn understand! Stop runnin’ yer mouth like ya know shit!”

Subaru: “That’s right! What I said are my imaginings, and what my mouth’s running is nothing but know-it-all nonsense. The only one who can say what you are really thinking is you. If I’m wrong, then what are your actual feelings on this!?”

Force pressed down on his lungs. Subaru showed no pained expression as he raises his voice. Showered in Subaru’s voice from below him, Garfiel’s face stiffened, and looked away.

Subaru: “You rejected Frederica who left for the outside, you bound yourself with the duty to protect Sanctuary, and you are interfering with people who challenge the Trial while they attempt to break the barrier! What is it you are scared of! What is it you fear! So you just hate the outside world!?”

Garfiel: “Yer, all wrong...!”

Subaru: “So you just hate your mother who abandoned you! You challenged the Trial, saw yourself being abandoned, and so that’s what you are afraid of!!”

Garfiel’s expression twisted in grief.

He lifted his hand from Subaru, up-righting himself in an attempt to escape Subaru’s verbal pursuit. But he would not get away.

Subaru reached out, grabbed the back of Garfiel’s neck, and pulled him to a stop. With Garfiel’s gruesome, blood-soaked face within breathing range, Subaru glared at him, pressing further.

Subaru: “Answer me, Garfiel! What is it you are afraid of!”

His theory, crafted from speaking with Ryuzu, Echidna’s words, Roswaal and Frederica’s attitudes, Ram’s expression when she looks at Garfiel— Subaru saw an answer, different from all of theirs. If he was right, if this was the truth, then...

Garfiel: “No, my amazin’ self’s... my amazin’...”

Subaru: “What is it, what do you truly think!?!?”

Garfiel: "My amazing... My, mother..."

Garfiel swallowed his breath, gazing up at the sky, his fangs chattering---

Garfiel: "-----I WANTED HER TO BE HAPPY!!"

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Garfiel: "We were in the way, weren't we!? Myself and my sister, we were in the way of her happiness, weren't we!?"

Overflowing. This had been everything that Garfiel had been holding in until now.

Garfiel: "Well I knew that! She abandoned me and sis. And o'course she would!"

Garfiel's reasoning, which he had kept in his heart, never revealed to anybody.

Garfiel: "Couple of goddamn brats she couldn't've wanted, 'n ones with demi-human blood at that... O'fuckin' course we'd hold'er back from living in the outside world! Leaving us behind, throwing us away, what is weird about that... There's nothing... wrong in that!"

Unable to hide his wavering voice, he buried his face in his hands to hide his wavering eyes.

Garfiel: "I get why we were abandoned. So I don't resent mom for abandoning us! 'Tis goddamn obvious! Myself and my sis, we were holdin' our mom's life back! She threw us away, and left Sanctuary so she could be happy!"

While still young, Garfiel had seen his mother off as she left the two of them behind and exited Sanctuary. He could not have understood what he felt back then. But the feeling had laid its roots in him, grown inside him over a long span of time, and bloomed into a single answer--- His mother had just abandoned them. However.

Garfiel: "But y'know, that night... I, saw it. There in th'Tomb, in th'Trial, I saw it. I saw it. S--she, left us, and left Sanctuary, and... Right there, right after she left, her carriage got caught in a landslide, swallowed in the dirt and she just died..."

Subaru: “———!”

Garfiel: “Sis doesn’t know... Sis thinks mom’s off somewhere, forgotten ‘bout us and livin’ a happy life. That’s not what really happened! Mom, the second she abandoned us! She died!”

Fragments of the truth, sobbed out of Garfiel’s mouth. Their harshness overwhelmed both Subaru, who was already aware of the circumstances, and Emilia, who was completely caught off-guard.

Garfiel remained before the silenced two, head still buried in his hands, his breathing ragged with his weeping.

Garfiel: “She just damn died... She never got to be happy!!”

Subaru could not possibly reply to that.

Garfiel: “Why? You know she left for th’outside so she could be happy, don’t’cha?”

Emilia could not possibly reply to that.

Garfiel: “You know she left us because she wanted to be happy, don’t’cha?”

Neither Subaru nor Emilia could possibly reply to that.

Garfiel: “She abandoned us, but if she never got to be happy and just died immediately, then...”

The unanswerable questions stream from Garfiel’s mouth. And surely——

Garfiel: “...What are we meant to do ‘bout our sadness, about this feeling o’bein’ thrown away?”

——These questions had always, always chorused eternally inside his heart.

Garfiel: “I wanted mom to be happy!”

Strength came to his teary voice. Garfiel drew his hands away from his face, gritting his teeth as he pauses. His fangs could crack. His canines could tear through his lips.

Garfiel: “All the sadness we felt! And all the loneliness of being disowned! It was meaningful because it was for her happiness, that’s what I wanted to think! I wanted to be able to hate mom!”

Having lost a target for his feelings about his mother, Garfiel's heart had been trapped inside Sanctuary. Without anything to strike against, his emotions had been the fuel to keep aflame the blaze consuming his soul.

Garfiel: "But mom just died! Me and sis, we had a sad experience and that was it. Mom didn't get to be happy at all, heavy rocks and sand buried her, and she fuckin' died in agony."

Having reached this conclusion, amid the smoldering ashes inside him, Garfiel decided. Standing up, he then drew away from Subaru. Looking up at the Tomb, in a low voice he proclaimed,

Garfiel: "— I ain't ever going t'the outside world."

His voice shook.

In rage, in sorrow, in vestiges of fury, the flame still blazing, even now.

Garfiel turned around.

He looked down at the fallen Subaru, and clicks his sharp fangs.

Garfiel: "Desertin' th'place and going outside ain't going to give you happiness! Trying to change anything comes with pain, and not everybody can withstand that hurt!"

Subaru: "——"

Garfiel: "There's tons of hopeless people out there! This place's full'o'them! What'm I meant to do!? Just make'm sacrifices for happiness, and give'm sad experiences?! Just be like my sis!?"

Subaru: "——"

Garfiel: "I will... My amazin' self will... protect them."

He clenched his fists. His howling was brought to a close, his eyes hosting quiet determination as he paused.

Garfiel: "My amazin' self'll protect'em. Everythin' my hands can reach, my amazin' self'll protect. Protect, protect, protect... Never ever lose anybody... Never let anyone experience anythin' like what my mom did!"

Not anger, not sadness, prompted Garfiel's heart to tremble.

Neither Subaru, nor Emilia, was able to move when faced with these feelings of Garfiel's. And so, Garfiel spread his arms wide, turning his back to the Tomb, and shouted.

Garfiel: "I'll be the barrier! A real one, dividing inside and outside, a barrier!"

Subaru: "Garfiel..."

Garfiel: "I! Will! Protect Sanctuary, protect everyone! Protect nanna! My amazin' self's the only one who can do it! My amazin' self's the only one who knows it! And it's fine for them not to know!!"

Garfiel's high bloody scream, his resolve, his determination. Faced with that, they cannot speak.

Garfiel has steeled his resolve entirely. And so—

Emilia: "—Subaru."

Subaru: "It's okay, Emilia."

Emilia called out to Subaru as he stood up, stepping forth.

He waved his hand to her concerned voice in dismissal, as he approaches Garfiel. The two faced each other, mutually between an arm's reach. Words would no longer stop Garfiel.

And so, there was only one thing left to do.

Subaru: "You goddamn stubborn, oblivious bastard..."

Garfiel: "———"

Subaru: "I understand your resolve. My assumptions were wrong. And your assumptions are wrong too. And so... I'll go and rectify them."

Garfiel stooped down slightly, his arms dangling at his sides. Although he may look undefended, an abnormal and ghastly aura emanated from him as he took a serious battle stance.

And in response, Subaru raised his hands to take his own battle stance, as well. With Garfiel as his opponent, having determined that words will not work, he will fight him on his own turf.

Subaru: "I'll force you into absolute surrender, and teach you— That you are a kind, weak, stupid idiot!"

Arc 4 Chapter 112 - Instinct to Reject Weakness

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 7 “None Can Lift the Quain Stone Alone”, Part 2
(halfway, heavily abridged)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 169

—The fight peaked with unimaginable severity.

Two men faced each other, trading fists head-on.

Hard bones battering into flesh, muscles bursting, blood dripping. Along come the wails, the unpleasant heaving of frothy respiration, the wretchedness of the sloppy fistfight as it burned into the eyes of the lone observer.

Emilia: “...Subaru.”

Standing before the Tomb’s entrance, Emilia put her hand to her chest, looking over the duel. Her eyes hosted confusion, her fingers wavered in search of something to cling to. Despite being aware of its absence, the warmth of the perpetually reliable presence at her chest still bound her heart.

Subaru had told her things inside the Tomb. Subaru asserted that he loved her, cherished her, and so he believed in her. Indeed, a part of her did feel saved by these words. However, anxiety compounded within her heart.

As the seconds ticked, her true memories were being resurrected.

She had believed that those false memories were where she began, and holding that belief, reached this point. Once her beginnings changed, once her starting point changed; just how would it change her?

Her truest feelings conflicted with each other in discord, and unease rooted deep within Emilia. Subaru had shouted that even if Emilia were to change, his love for her would remain unfazed. This boy who had been hurt, who had suffered for her, and who attempted to fight to the end for her— She did not possess a speck of doubt about his feelings. He had proved them continuously.

—The one thing she was not able to trust was her own self.

She had walked along a path which had its foundations set in an incorrect beginning, and although she thought she had the end of this road in sight, she stopped. She wondered whether she might have been walking in the wrong direction, and hesitated despite having her target in sight.

Her feet had stopped moving. Would she be permitted to start walking again?

Would the road from on be a new one, or the same she has walked down so far?

Emilia: “———”

She wandered within a labyrinth of unanswerable, impenetrable questions.

Even now, unable to speak up, and aware that she lacked any right to stop them, Emilia watched the two men fight.

???: “———!”

A scream. Reaching great heights, blood splattered.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Cutting through the air, the swing of a fist.

Knuckles came looming for his face— at depressingly slow velocity.

???: “Tch!”

No need for an excessive dodge. He tilted his head in the barest minimum, evading the fist without sustaining even a graze. His opponent’s stance disintegrated due to that big swing, and his knee jabbed into the adversary’s undefended stomach, aiming to their bowels.

His knee felt their rib-bones and flimsy muscles, the attack's force transmitted to the depths of their gut. Their mouth, already subject to expelling fluids multiple times, vomited up blood unrelenting.

???: "Gah!"

They held their stomach, movements faltering, visage atrocious. He pounded his uplifted arms into their slouched back, a combination that followed his frontal attack, to now scramble their innards from behind.

They had managed to withstand the kick, but they failed to endure the strike from behind and easily collapsed. He kicked them to rotate their fallen body upwards, then followed up his attack by driving his toes into their left flank.

Their screams echoed.

Their breathing heaved, mixed with vomit and blood.

His fists, his knee, his toes. With every strike, the sensation of their skin, of their flesh paring away, rebounded on to him.

Usually that would jubilate him, but presently he only felt incredible discomfort.

These actions repeated, over and over and over and over— What in the world was the point?

Garfiel: "Enough's goddamn 'nough, fuckin' give up already."

He cast jeers on his coughing, unsightly opponent as they spit up blood.

He was failing to take their consciousness. He could strike their head, kick their stomach, but they quite detestably would not concede. Especially detestable, considering he was attempting to make them understand the disparity in strength between them.

Garfiel: "Ya sure a fuckin' brainless bastard, oy! Ya ain't gotta hint of a chance of winnin'! Yer back's slouched! Yer swings're pointlessly big! Yer balance's wobblin' everywhere, 'tis a goddamn tragedy!"

Subaru: "...My bad."

Garfiel: “Aaargh, ya fuckin’ pile o’shit! Do ya know what it feels like, t’have t’entertain this pointless, pigheaded game of yers? Get outta ‘ere, fuck off.”

Garfiel spat his insults at Subaru, who was attempting, with laborious breaths, to upright himself.

Subaru’s hands contacted the ground in a struggle to push himself up. Having been the recipient to punches, his face was swollen, and his nosebleed coated the lower portion of his face in red. Some of his teeth were surely broken or missing. Between his guts and ribs, it wouldn’t be strange for some of them to be busted. Considering the violent pain ravaging his body, he should not have been able to even remain conscious. And yet.

Garfiel: “What’s th’damn point! Didn’t ya challenge me ‘cause ya thought ya had hopes of winnin’! All yer fuckin’ doin’ is showin’ off how ragged ‘n beaten ya’re, I can’t even watch it...! Take a nap!”

Subaru: “—Guh!”

Call it obstinacy, call it stubbornness, yet those words could not describe the tenacity Garfiel sensed, as he once again brutalized Subaru.

He swept Subaru’s legs out from under him, and drove his foot into Subaru’s flank as he collapsed. Blood spewed from Subaru’s mouth as Garfiel kicks his tumbling form skyward, then drove his elbow into his suspended frame to shunt him back to the ground.

Ricocheting off the earth, he comes to lie spread-out on the floor. His eyes open wide, he exhaled an airy breath, and this time for sure would remain motionless— finally knocked into unconsciousness. Garfiel breathed out a long sigh.

Subaru: “Why are you, looking like it’s, over...”

Garfiel: “—Hk!”

Garfiel’s shoulders heaved as he drew ragged breaths, as a voice from below prompted his eyes to shoot open in shock. The man he surely had knocked unconscious somehow, wavering, managed to stand.

Garfiel: “Don’t, you joke...”

Subaru: “Yeah... This is, no joke here. With how beaten up I am, I... can’t think of a... single, funny quip...”

Garfiel: “That ain’t what I m—”

Subaru: “—Haaaaaaa!”

Exhibiting nightmarish doggedness, Subaru spat a sharp breath and swung his fist.

Naturally, no matter how desperate the punch is, from Garfiel’s perspective it would amount to something equivalent to being assaulted by a child. His hand easily caught and diverted the oncoming fist, and he drives the heel of his palm into Subaru’s guts as compensation. The strike drilled into a space between his organs, the impact rippling through his body and reaching his internal fluids— his already-vacant stomach constricted, and blood and yellowy bile flowed out.

Subaru: “Guh, buh...”

Garfiel: “It’s th’same thing no matter how many times ya try, how many times do—”

Subaru held his stomach and crumbled on the spot as Garfiel once again urged him to surrender. He could not bear to watch this disgusting atrocity. Averting his gaze, Garfiel clicked his tongue.

Garfiel: “———!”

Subaru’s right fist then roared past the tip of his nose.

Garfiel: “Wh——!?”

Subaru: “Hey, Garfiel. Who gave you permission to just ditch me?”

Left arm forward, right arm back.

Seeing Subaru readied in combat stance, his will to fight not abolished in the least, Garfiel felt something near a shiver.

He did not consider Subaru a threat for even a moment. Anyone could tell Subaru was making empty threats, as between him and Garfiel existed a disparity in power too great for any amount of struggling to compensate. He could keep sending Garfiel these reckless punches, but be it a thousand times or a million times, the unsurmountable strength gap meant Garfiel would simply dodge every attempt.

All of Subaru's struggling, every single moment of it, was futile.

No matter how many times Garfiel punched, kicked, threw him, no matter how much pain he sustained, his overstressed body would never, ever, touch Garfiel.

Garfiel: "You bastard, stop kiddin'round!"

Subaru: "Haaa?"

Facing an opponent who could not win, he nevertheless lofted stubbornness alone as his weapon. His spirit alone would not fold, his feelings alone would not falter. Perhaps that mentality ought to be called strength, a strength unbound by the flesh.

Seeing him stand up after falling again and again perhaps did jolt Garfiel's heart to some degree.

But, if he expected this display would make Garfiel change his mind, that constituted an insult beyond parallel.

His spirit alone would not fold and would not bend. And what in the world was the point in those concepts, exactly?

Garfiel: "Do ya really think that if ya keep bein' bullhead'd, even knowin' ya won't win, my amazin' self's eventually gonna stay my fists? Really think that my amazin' self's gonna get sick of punchin' 'n kickin' ya, acknowledge yer determination, 'n stand down... that I'm gonna lose by concedin' to emotions, is that what yer trying to say!?"

Subaru: "-----"

Garfiel: "Don't joke around. This fight between me and you ain't a fuckin' game! Ya beat'em down, er ya get beat down. There ain't any other endings to this!"

He stomped the ground. The power of his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits filled him, the earth supplying his body with overflowing vitality. Compared to when he had finished fighting Ram and Otto in the forest, and then pushed his ruined body to venture here, his flesh was now in better condition. This not-even-a-fistfight with Subaru was not exacerbating his fatigue; in fact, he may as well be sitting under a tree, relaxing in its shadow, and having a pleasant reprieve.

And this minuscule influence of Subaru's was meant to sway Garfiel's heart just how?

Garfiel: "Yer goddamn said it, didn't you! That yer gonna teach my amazin' self that I'm weak, that's what yer goddamn said! Well th'fuck is this, then! The fuck is weak! The fuck are you teachin'! The one who ain't got th'strength and 's gettin' forced into surrender, the brainl'ss idiot here is goddamn you!"

Garfiel remembered every syllable of Subaru's pre-battle declaration. It was ripe in utter buffoonery. Entirely farcical. Every inch of this man was a definition of the word "fraudulent".

Garfiel: "That guy 'n Ram too! Both of them battled me and at least had th'guts to try 'n win! That's why I fought them back with everythin' I had. They worked their brains comin' up with plans, compensatin' for their weaknesses by usin' their smarts... Those two had guts enough for me t'acknowledge them. But what about you!"

While he did not know the exact details of how it worked, Otto had used his Divine Protection to get the forest on his side, and cornered Garfiel. His methods of herding Garfiel into that final blast of incredible magic illustrated that he had utilized all his vitality and intellect, his fighting spirit so great that Garfiel would gladly commend it as the apex of what the weak were able to do.

Ram's offensive had begun with her surprise attack, and although it made him feel agony equivalent to betrayal, was indeed a fight perfectly befitting of Ram. Merciless, no punches pulled, a battle between those of genuine strength.

Both had made their most desperate efforts while fighting Garfiel, and fully intended to steal victory. Their methods deserved esteem. So much that Garfiel had to recognize them as glorious foes.

Garfiel: "Compared to them... There's no way ya could be more obscene. Ya get done in 'n done in 'n ya have the gall to still stand up... So what? No matter how much yer beaten, yer spirit won't yield... So fuckin' what? Even sayin' yer hopes of winnin' are zero, ya ain't ever fleein' the fight... What's so commendable 'bout that!?"

Subaru: "-----"

Garfiel: "Ya think I'm impressed? That yer bloodsoaked, wobbly-legged, can't even open yer eyes right, still standin' up show is gonna stir my feelings 'n I'm gonna stand down? I'm gonna churn you to mincemeat... What kinda idiot do ya wanna make of me, 'n of th'people who acted for yer sake?"

The greatest indignation Garfiel has ever felt in his life was blazing within his chest.

The purity of the fight has been defiled. He has been insulted. And not only that, but this man's methods were attempting to pollute the nobility, the resolute will, of those whose fights Garfiel had acknowledged.

Garfiel: "Take a nap. Give up. Yer disgustin', a miserable pile of pile of pile of shit. Yer best answer's to accept you've lost. Go curl up and take a nap in yer cot, you halfwit."

Subaru: "..."

Still in his fighting stance, Subaru bathed in Garfiel's curses.

His head slumps unsteadily, his eyes nearly swollen shut but somehow managing to capture Garfiel. His will to fight had not waned, which made his filthiness an eyesore.

If all these words, these blows, these punches were not managing to bend his spirit, then what did he have to do to break him?

If pain will not achieve it, then only one solution remains.

Garfiel: "How 'bout you try tellin' him, huh!?"

Turning around, Garfiel called out to Emilia, who was observing the fight from the Tomb's entrance. Her shoulders trembled minutely as the conversation is suddenly aimed at her. The display of weakness made Garfiel click his tongue in irritation.

Garfiel: "Ya can't bear to watch, now you tell him that! He ain't listenin' when I say it. Have th'girl he loves tell him he looks disgustin' 'n lame, that his efforts ain't achievin' nothin', that he's absolutely worthless!"

Emilia: "I—I..."

Garfiel: "What!? Yer sayin' y'can't do it? Does it look t'you he still has any hope of winnin'? Or do ya like watchin' this? Ya watch the guy who loves you get torn up 'n broken down for yer sake, 'n does that deceive you into feelin' yer loved, are you for real, oy!"

Emilia: “—Hk!”

Emilia froze rigid, her eyes wide open, as spite showered upon her. Garfiel’s merciless statements thrust daggers into the onlooking Emilia.

If Garfiel’s fists would not stop Subaru, then Emilia’s words were the only option. His body would be broken by Garfiel, his heart would be broken by Emilia, and then even Subaru would surely yield.

Over the course of watching the fight, Emilia’s face had twisted in pain multiple times as she witnessed Subaru be beaten. Unlike Subaru, fueled by his mysterious resolve, Emilia’s heart has not steeled itself for anything yet. She is still the same girl who lost the Trial and sobbed wailing afterwards.

Garfiel had no intention to lambaste her for that.

To be overwhelmed by the Trial, by your past, was natural. Who on earth could negate the memory of their greatest regret?

The concept that you could overcome your past, your regrets, was utter bullshit.

Subaru had mixed up realistic ideals and unattainable fantasies. Lunatic. This boy who was persistently standing before him chased entirely after fantasies, and demanded that others do the same. He was legitimately insane.

He was the same breed as Roswaal, an imbecile whose vision encompassed one thing and nothing more.

Garfiel: “Stop him, ‘n end this! Both me, ‘n you! We are dancin’ to th’tune of that Witch’s bullshit. That’s what’s really happenin’ here.”

Emilia: “I—”

Emilia’s back straightened as if struck by lightning, her eyes shooting open. Her captivating eyes were damp with tears as she looks at Subaru. Her lips quivered, Garfiel’s gaze still fixed on her, as she moved to plead Subaru to stop. Everything would be over then. But—

Subaru: “—Emilia.”

Emilia: “———”

Before she could speak, Subaru was the one to call out.

She closed her mouth as she listened intently to Subaru's faint voice. Frantic, so as not to miss whatever he may say to her. To her, Subaru stated merely one, single thing.

Subaru: "...Witness me."

Nothing more.

Spoken with a frail voice, practically nothing but a whisper to himself.

But Emilia heard it. She looked up in astonishment, and after several seconds of hesitation—

Emilia: "—Mhm."

— She put her hand to her chest and nodded.

Garfiel: "...Hah!?"

Faced with their entirely incomprehensible exchange, Garfiel shouted in confusion. His eyes widened in fury, only for Subaru to jab his finger towards his opponent.

Subaru: "...So you've been going on complaining for a while now, but you got it all wrong, Garfiel."

Garfiel: "What?"

Subaru: "To you, I may look like an idiot putting in their all despite having no chance of winning... But I'm not joking around. I've learned my lesson on knowingly getting into fights I can't win, after withstanding this pain. Thanks to you, I'm never doing it again."

Subaru's face was a swollen mess, yet it still managed to twist into a scowl.

This event that Subaru is referring to is nothing that Garfiel could ever know about, but apparently it related to some overwhelmingly detested memory of his. But even pitted against that sentiment, there was something he said. Something which Garfiel must not overlook.

Garfiel: "Ridiculous. It ain't even ideals or fantasy anymore, yer not seein' reality at all. If ya stopped challengin' opponents ya can't beat... If this is okay... then what's with this, oy!?"

Subaru: "Isn't it obvious, you idiot? I still... haven't given up the fight for even a moment."

Perhaps his consciousness was compounding in clarity as he speaks, for strength began to return to Subaru's voice as he made his assertion. His baseless vitality sealed Garfiel's throat mute with blinding rage.

Subaru: "As long as I can still stand, I haven't given up the fight. And the point where I stop standing back up only happens once I'm dead."

Garfiel: "-----"

Subaru: "And with how you chicken out during the decisive moments, you can't kill me. Meaning you can't stop me. It might only be bit-by-bit, but I'm inching toward my win. My victory is certain."

Garfiel: "Ya imbecile! This ain't about bein' able to kill or not. How the fuck! By doing nothin' but struggle! Are you fuckin' possibly goin' to beat me!?"

When wounded head to toe and as ragged as an old dishcloth, any amount of words would ring hollow. Subaru's statements equated to nothing more than extravagant prate. "You can't stop me unless you kill me", was merely an expression of his volition. And assuming that claim was legitimate, he was then meaning to state that unless killed, he was able to keep on fighting, and eventually manage to land a fatal blow on Garfiel?

That would not happen, for it would need incredible quantities of time and miracles to ever happen.

Garfiel: "If my amazin' self breaks yer limbs, then ya can't do nothin', it's over! Whether yer conscious, or whether ya wanna win! None of that matters anymore!"

Garfiel roared in furious rage. His feet siphoned vitality from the ground, his once-fatigued body regaining strength halfway to his usual. This was more than enough power to mutilate Natsuki Subaru.

He stomped off the earth, flying in the direction of Subaru.

Faced with Garfiel's approach, Subaru jabbed out his fist as if happy about this turn of events. It's moronic. Slow. Unequivocally insufficient. Garfiel easily dodged it, and struck him in the abdomen. Drove his knee into his chin, grabbed Subaru as he recoiled and threw him plunging to the ground. For good measure, Garfiel buried his heel into his fallen form, wresting out two or three screams of agony.

A merciless series of attacks. And with this---

Subaru: "It's over, you think?"

Garfiel: "---!! What the fuck is this!?"

Supposedly sustaining even more grievous bodily wounds, Subaru stood up. Witnessing it, an unknown, arcane feeling began to seize Garfiel's heart.

Was he unable to defeat him? Was he unable to win? No, those were not the sources of his anxiety.

It was the suspicion that maybe, truly, exactly as this man stated, merely the accumulation of physical damage would not be enough to stop him.

Garfiel: "What th'hell is the point in riskin' yer life for this! Say you somehow manage to beat my amazin' self, do ya really think that half-devil can beat the Trial! You seriously think that's the case here, huh!?"

Subaru: "-----"

Garfiel: "Like such a miracle could happen! Like that convenient patter could happen! Million to one, billion to one chance, sayin' you'll beat my amazin' self, doing that ain't gonna change anythin' 'bout that woman! 'n it's the same for anyone! When ya got a messed up, hopeless past... When ya see how yer regrets have been cooked for years, ya can't do goddamn anything about it! Why don't'cha understand this!"

Subaru: "You are the one who should be hearing that question!!"

Garfiel: "-----!?"

It was devoid of enough momentum to be a burst of outrage and possessed too much emotion to be an appeal. The cracks skirting through Garfiel's words barren of logic, fractured further beneath Natsuki Subaru's yell.

Subaru: "Stop going off deciding everything on your own, Garfiel!"

Garfiel: "What are you..."

Subaru: "Stop going off deciding what Emilia's limits are. She isn't that weak."

Distant, standing before the Tomb, Emilia swallowed her breath.

Subaru: "Stop going off, deciding what my limits are. No one tells me to fold, or to abandon everything and cower. I shall never surrender."

Spitting blood, the glint in Subaru's eyes grew stronger. And,

Subaru: "Fucker, don't go off giving up on yourself. You can do a lot more. There is a lot more out there for you. You were a damn kid, you weren't even fully grown yet. How long are you gonna cling to a stubborn idea you came up with at a time you didn't even have pubic hair!"

Subaru straight-out informed Garfiel that the belief he stubbornly held, the creed which had kept his heart bound to Sanctuary, is imbecilic.

Garfiel: "-----"

Garfiel immediately opened his mouth to reply. But feeling something akin to a stab in his chest, no speech exited his throat.

He could not say anything. Nothing was coming out.

His head was blazing white. It isn't that he thought Subaru was correct. There is no possible way Garfiel could be wrong. The way of life he had adopted after knowing he was wrong, could not be wrong.

He must not be wrong.

And so, this man claiming Garfiel was wrong, must not be allowed to claim such a thing.

Garfiel: "Hah... Ahhhhhhh... Got it..."

Subaru: "..."

Garfiel: "I need to stop you. I ain't got any idea of anythin' yer sayin'. But it's makin' me feel sick. 'n so, I'm stoppin' you."

He must stop him. And the way to stop him was surely, the exact way the man had previously stated.

—So long as the man draws breath, this man could not possibly be stopped.

Garfiel: “Then... I’ll, kill you...”

Subaru: “Can you?”

Garfiel: “Buzz off— the method to do it was right here all along.”

If he would not stop unless killed, Garfiel would kill and stop him, assuredly. In this place, at this juncture, he would make that choice.

—Make the choice to entrust himself to the abhorrent, vile blood of the beast sleeping inside him.

Garfiel: “—Ooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooh!”

He held himself, all the blood in his body seething with incendiary heat.

The inferno felt as if his every exhale had been superheated to the point of being colored red. His cells squirmed, his muscles swelled, his mass exploded in size. His limbs grew thick as logs, his abdomen bloating to snap off his loincloth. Golden fur sprouted across his whole body, as his sharp fangs matured instantly into elongated sabers. His face protruded into a snout, the world changing color alongside the slitting of his pupils. His thoughts solder.

And the mind of the once-present Garfiel Tinsel drowned.

The exhilaration of transformation, and the feeling of his bestial instincts drowned out his rationality. Once everything’s done and he returned to himself, what would remain before him would amount to ravaged chunks of scattered gore. The final appearance of Natsuki Subaru.

He had not been able to stop him short of doing this. He had neither intent to lament, nor to repent for that.

People who lacked strength were bad. The weak could suggest nothing. That was all there was to it.

His consciousness was fading.

His bestial instincts screeched in jubilation, jaws opening to devour their miserable prey—

—The dimwitted animal's vision drowns beneath an eruption of ink-black fog.

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 113 - None Can Lift the Quain Stone Alone

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 7 “None Can Lift the Quain Stone Alone”, Part 2
(halfway)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 180

His eyes wouldn't fully open. Blood was flowing through him so poorly his veins might as well be clogged. But the scarlet dripping from his nose and from his wounds showed no signs of dampening— was he or was he not wanting for blood? Bleeding some of it out might actually be perfect for his boiling brain.

With all the punches he had withstood, Subaru's recognition of the world was just a smidgen delayed as he shook his head.

It really felt he had been standing up solely for the purpose of getting punched again.

He did not mean to stand there doing nothing, but even supposing he punched or kicked back, his attacks would not connect. With every blow he sustained, he spat blood, suppressed his pain, made himself smile a cryptic smile which screamed “your attacks are entirely ineffective!” and stood back up. And repeated this.

This was not ineffective

Both the insides and outsides of his body groaned, the entirety of his guts practically burst and mashed together. The bones supporting his body conveyed the erroneous sensation of having crumbled to dust, and the fact all his limbs were still moving according to his will could only be described with the word “miracle”.

However, not a single one of these things resulted from a miracle.

Every time his consciousness seemed about to fall, about to falter, his fading awareness would be grabbed by the neck and dragged back to him in stern reprimand. From inside his pocket, crackles a hot, sharp pain— an excessively spartan policy which practically cooked his brain.

While it's something he had requested himself, his cheeks still twisted at how relentless it was. After all, these were tricks to keep himself from losing consciousness. Regardless, Garfiel possessed numerous other strategies to stop Subaru.

The fact that Subaru, despite recklessly managing to stand up, never sustained damage which would perfectly incapacitate him, was entirely due to Garfiel's own judgement. If he took a real hit from Garfiel in top form, then Subaru would be done in a flash. Just one hit would transform him into sloppy chunks of gore.

The exorbitant damage Garfiel had sustained from Otto and Ram's fight did contribute to why this had not happened so far. But Garfiel, who strained his wounded body to get here, was still in possession of fangs able to kill Subaru in one bite and claws able to shred him apart with one swing.

The fact this had not happened so far was due to Garfiel's judgement— he was unable to fatally injury another, no matter what his own condition is.

Ultimately, Garfiel was far too kind— that would be an accurate assessment of the situation.

The Ryuzus, Frederica, even Ram, all of them had appraised Garfiel accordingly. His usual crude disposition and boorish behavior made unimaginable how sensitive his heart truly was. Although he spoke of violence, internally, he constantly nurtured and focused his strength with the objective to protect.

He found someone unforgivable, someone liable to destroy Sanctuary. But even with such a person as his opponent, he could not make the decision to take their life.

Subaru: “———”

Subaru knew he was taking advantage of Garfiel's disposition and kindness.

Utilizing Garfiel's personality had been Subaru's principle for fighting him all along. With Garfiel as his opponent, too kind to give it his all, then Subaru was somewhat convicted he would not be killed.

But even said, Garfiel facing him despite his previous grievous wounds, and yet he was wiping the floor with Subaru. If Garfiel had been in peak condition, Subaru surely would not be getting away with so little. For that he felt grateful to Otto and Ram, who had endeavored for him while ignoring his plans.

—Was it possible they were dead?

Being that Garfiel's personality kept him from killing Subaru, it was inconceivable he would have killed Otto and Ram. Even if it had progressed that far, Garfiel's attitude would give it away. And most importantly, if Garfiel had killed Ram, then no reason existed for him to show up and stop Subaru in human form. To rationalize and remain in bestial shape would be natural.

Garfiel had not denied Subaru's statements about neglecting to kill them. That meant that the conclusion to Otto, Ram, and Garfiel's fight amounted to nothing more than a conclusion of the fight.

Garfiel: "—Ooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooh!"

Garfiel cradled himself as his body starts transforming.

His arms, his legs, enlarged not one but two times over, his torso's thickness and size shifting into something overpowering. His claws and fangs became sharp as blades while his face morphed from that of a human to that of a feline. Golden fur coated his bare skin. Four feet contacting the ground carried his great body.

—What had just materialized here, Subaru reflected in its slit-pupil eyes, was a golden tiger. He needed to kill Subaru to stop him.

After countless swings of his fists, Garfiel finally reached that conclusion. And so, to kill the Subaru that needed to be killed, Garfiel made his decision. He would call to the blood sleeping within him, to his bestial instincts, become a tiger and reap Subaru's life.

All while in the shape of a dimwitted animal. So he would end this without witnessing anything.

Subaru: "But that's where you are wrong, Garfiel."

His inability to kill his opponent, and inability to strike them down with his fists, amounted to kindness. Making the decision to protect Sanctuary, to protect himself and those around him, also amounted to kindness.

But running away to a place he would not witness his actions, all for the sake of killing of someone he was not able to kill, had nothing to do with kindness. It was Garfiel's weakness.

And Natsuki Subaru would not hesitate to take advantage of it.

Subaru: "Begging you, body of mine. Don't break down from this!"

Hostility filled the transfigured Garfiel's eyes, Subaru present in their reflection. His limbs bent, an omen that the beast would come charging to rip Subaru apart.

This is the sole juncture he has for decision. Subaru gritted his teeth once before focusing on the center of his body— on the gateway tied to the point just below his navel, and raised his voice.

Subaru: "—Shamaaaaaaaaaaaaaaac!!"

Garfiel: "———"

The very instant the tiger opens its mouth, the world answered to the fervid call. Ink-black fog erupted in the space between Subaru and the beast, drowning away the form of the towering creature. Moments before it got swallowed, an outstretched paw struck, but it did not reach anything before vanishing beneath the smoke.

Once the spreading dark abyss swallowed the beast, expanding confusion dragged the creature's existence into an end.

Subaru: "Uh, ah..."

The very instant he finished watching the events through, an impact like a blow to his head assaulted Subaru's skull.

The sharp pain of a drill boring into his cranium from both inside and outside made his vision strobe in crimson, with lights dancing all around. Unlike the dull pain of Garfiel's punches, this was an unsparing sharp pain, as if shaving away at his soul— an agony he manages to swallow down.

Overexertion of his gate, which he had been warned not to use. The Capital's greatest healer had cautioned that the possibility of never being able to use magic again was real. Betraying that advice, Subaru called upon it once more.

He felt his imperceptible gate burn. The foundations of this gateway within his center swayed tremendously, and somewhere far and distant and separate from his body, something was severed.

This pain of something violently, messily, being wrested away from him. Alongside a sense of loss, a sense that it will never be recovered, it brought Subaru's heart understanding.

Subaru: "Thank you."

A strand he had continuously relied upon was cut.

He did not mind. An option he supposedly lacked in the first place had merely been eliminated for good. Regardless, it was because of that power that he managed to get this far, and for that he was grateful. For this was farewell.

Subaru: "———"

He looked forward. His last cast of magic had failed to fully enshroud Garfiel's tremendous form. While crucially his head was covered by the smoke, the right flank of its gigantic body was peeking out. He put in his absolute best, and still managed only this.

He sighed out his nose. A clot of blood stuck there dislodged. He wiped it away rigorously with his sleeve, as he led his unsteady legs forward.

He reached for his pocket. Subaru felt something firm and was secretly yet intensely relieved that it had not broken over the course of this battle. Should this thing be gone, he didn't have a fuck of a chance.

Subaru: "———"

The inky fog was steadily beginning to thin. How many seconds had passed since he cast his magic? Ten? Five? Might even be shorter. He seriously had not a single speck of magical talent in him. But right now, he was grateful he could use it.

The tiger's right flank was visible. Captured in a world of obfuscation, body immobile. While the magic had been imperfect, it conversely robbed Subaru of any need to deliberate.

And so, there is no deliberation in his course. Right foot, left foot. Far too slow to be called running. But a laggard, momentum-driven sprint, nonetheless.

And there, once he had gotten close enough to touch this immense frame—

Subaru: "Get back down into my court, Garfiel."

—Into that thick shoulder, Subaru took the shining blue crystal from his pocket and pushed it, stabbing. Light spilled over.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: "After your Contract with Emilia's broken, you are back to being a free Spirit... yeah?"

Puck: "Well, I suppose that's what it would be. But, even calling me free, I got plenty of power on my own. Your run-of-the-mill person wouldn't be able to provide the Mana to maintain me. And besides, no matter who it is, I have no urge to enter a Contract with anyone but Lia."

Subaru: "So that Mana to maintain you... Does it seriously have to be a lot?"

Puck: "Yup. For example's sake, Subaru, we'll pretend that you tried to contract me, and even borrowed power from the ambient mana... Hmmm, I suppose you'd dry up in say, a day."

Subaru: "Uh...? Sounds tighter than I thought. But is that enough for you to be able to fight?"

Puck: "We are talking about a day in which I'm not materialized. You'd just be carrying me around. If I materialized that would be, hmm... I guess it'd take five seconds before you are out. Want to try it?"

Subaru: "How about no. But man, seriously, what happened to that thing about me having affinity with Spirits?"

Puck: "So long as we are talking about these Spirits over here, then that claim is correct. But even if that wasn't what it meant... my situation comes with special circumstances. I seriously am a Spirit specially for Lia."

Subaru: "-----"

Puck: "The plan to employ me after my Contract's broken and freak out Lia is hitting some setbacks."

Subaru: "I wasn't asking you about this as a plan to shock or freak her out. But... are you kidding me? Guess my ideas were off, then."

Puck: "Sorry. And even if we pretend it would probably work without a hitch, there's also the problem of the Anchor... Actually, since we are here, we might be able to manage something about that."

Subaru: "Anchor... Something like the crystal hanging around Emilia's neck?"

Puck: "That one really is special. But fortunately, there should be something made of the same material around here, and we could at least figure something out if we borrow just a bit of that. But either way, even if I'm stuck inside a crystal, and remain being just stuck inside that crystal, there's still the problem of Mana..."

Subaru: "--So, something I wanna ask."

Puck: "Hm? Yes?"

Subaru: "Leaving aside whether it's a Contract, is it possible to have you inside a crystal if you agree to it? Let's say, as long as the Mana supply's there."

Puck: "That'd be correct. But, securing that Mana supply would be incredibly difficult. Because I'm literally draining the mana, in my case. Sucking and sucking, until you are incapacitated..."

Subaru: "-----"

Puck: "...Subaru?"

Subaru: "Say, Puck."

Puck: “Mhm?”

Subaru: “So those replacements you mentioned for the crystal, where are they?”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Stabbing into the tiger’s right shoulder, expelling a terrific light, was a blue crystal.

Neither polished nor sanded, the jewel’s sharp point dug into the animal’s skin, grabbing the creature’s vitality and siphoning it away.

Subaru: “—Ghh!”

Dazzled by the light, Subaru toppled backwards as if assaulted by forceful winds. He fell on his behind, retreating as he watched the scene before him, where the tiger swallowed in smog had yet to notice the changes to its own body.

That crystal, big enough to grasp in one’s hand, would voraciously drain the Mana of creatures it stabbed. Just keeping it stored in his pocket had exhausted Subaru incredibly. What would happen when that effect was applied directly to the body? The answer laid right in front of him.

Garfiel: “—Ah, aaaargh!?”

The smoke cleared. So did the visual obstruction from the fog, and the forced confusion from the spell.

By the time he was released from both of those constraints, the tiger— Garfiel had lost the majority of his animal flesh and was returning to his original shape as a young humanoid man.

His fur flaked away and fell to the ground, limbs once the width of many logs tied together returned to normal thickness. His fangs and claws shrank, his body cracking and creaking as it reverted to human form.

The one looking most baffled by this transfiguration was none other than Garfiel himself. His eyes shot open in shock at the loss of his bestial shape and return to his original body. He raised his arms, staring at his human hands with quivering, golden eyes.

Garfiel: “Th— Ridicu... what the hell...”

Subaru: “I did tell you, Garfiel— I don’t get in fights I can’t win.”

Garfiel’s head sprang back up to look at Subaru.

Subaru wipes off his rear as he moved to stand up, his face swollen but smiling insidiously nonetheless. Garfiel now understood the changes to his body, and the fact he remains severely wounded. He turned his head, only to notice the foreign object stabbing into his shoulder.

Garfiel: “The hell’s... this? No, this thing is...”

Subaru: “Pretty sure you recognize that light. Me and you should both know it.”

Garfiel: “Yer bastard, where’d you... get...”

Subaru: “It’s obvious— from Ryuzu Meyer’s crystal. It’s one of the jewels from the stock to keep it going.”

—The laboratory deep in the woods.

Ryuzu Meyer, who had become the core of the barrier to protect Sanctuary. The crystal which held her trapped and eternally crystallized depended on some fraction of the duplicates to maintain its functions.

At regular intervals, Ryuzu clones would exchange the driving mechanisms inside the glowing crystal’s lower base. And of course, those crystals were not infinite in quantity. The supply in Sanctuary would eventually run dry, and no longer work to maintain its faculties.

Subaru: “Which means they must be brought here regularly with food and stuff. Being one of Roswaal’s backers, there’s more than enough opportunity to pinch one of them, let’s put it like that.”

Garfiel: “But, just doin’ that... Just stabbin’ me, ain’t gonna, drain my strength like this... What goddamn, trick did ya put...”

Subaru: “Well... maybe there’s a preposterous and starving monster inside that crystal?”

His breath faltering, Garfiel struggled to speak. He reached for his shoulder, attempting to somehow pull the jewel out— But the blue crystal was basically rejecting Garfiel's fingers as it remained unyielding in his flesh.

Giving a deep sigh, Subaru let his body untense as he turned to look behind him. He looked up to where Emilia had been quietly looking down upon him. Subaru's situation must have appeared doomed, even to her.

Regardless, she never attempted to stop Subaru's battle. This girl who, when he fought battles while running off unreasonable stubbornness either of their sakes, had once attempted to stop him zealously.

Even Subaru could understand that there was something, which he could not quite assert as being trust, between them. That something between them, surely, was something which they had yet to put into either words or form.

For now though, the crystal had pinned Garfiel's actions to a stop.

Emilia must have noticed something, upon seeing that glow. She did not know what. But it was fine that she did not know, for now.

Subaru: "Witness me, Garfiel."

Garfiel: "Eh...?"

Subaru: "If you want to stop me, then do it by your own hands. Don't leave yourself to that blood inside you, where you can't tell what you are doing. You are the one who's making idiots of people."

He stepped forth. His body creaked, blood dripping without pause from somewhere.

His life was flowing out. But he possessed no intent to either stop or let himself be stopped.

Subaru: "You are trying to stop us. We will stop you— Emilia will challenge the Tomb. Sanctuary will be freed. We don't have time to sit around at stalemate."

Garfiel: "Jus' spoutin' whatever fuckin' bullshit ya like! Who asked! Who gave you permission! This place, just as it is, stayin' as it is, without any change, is fine!"

Subaru: “Not like it can possibly stay unchanged and stagnant forever. That’s something that centuries ago someone ought to have realized, before the place wound up like this.”

Garfiel: “There are people! Who don’t want it to change! Who want it to stay the same!”

Subaru: “I figure it would be fine if you could keep reigning as the place’s guardian eternally, keeping things entirely unchanged. But, y’see, there are things you cannot achieve alone, no matter how hard you try.”

Time, and the coming generations would both leave Garfiel behind, eventually. And ultimately, he would lose enough strength to not be able to keep protecting this unchanging Sanctuary.

Subaru: “Just like how we all ganged up to corner you, there’s going to be a time where you can’t manage it on your own. Any second now.”

Subaru walked, arriving before Garfiel.

Garfiel clutched the crystal in his shoulder, his breathing unsteady, but his eyes nevertheless strong as he glared at Subaru. Subaru reciprocated the glare head-on.

They both knew that merely slinging words at each other would not suffice. And so---

Subaru: “Stand down, Garfiel. Behold the power of numbers.”

Garfiel: “There had t’be other goddamn ways t’say that!”

Garfiel roared. A fist came swinging from below. But sluggishly. As the crystal was still draining his energy, barely any strength remained in Garfiel. Subaru tilted his head aside with plenty of time— And fails to move as intended, eating a fist to the face in the process, causing his vision to swim.

Garfiel: “Take a fuckin’ nap, ya bastard! Then my amazin’ self’s bringin’ that Tomb down! You ‘n the others, I’m keepin’ all of ya here ‘til yer dead!”

Subaru: “So that’s what you were planning, huh!?”

Subaru responded by stretching out his faltering legs and slamming his fist upwards. Unavoidable, the punch smashed into Garfiel’s face. For the first time during this whole fight, Subaru landed a clean hit.

Terrible posture, his body's core unsteady, his arm not even fully extended; it was a terrible excuse of a punch. He naturally could not expect the strike to be as powerful as he hoped, but against the present Garfiel, it was more than enough.

Garfiel: "—Guh, gah."

Now accompanying his bodily wounds, the Mana supporting his body was being leeched from his core. Garfiel was already close to being incapacitated to the point he could not fight any longer, and Subaru's strike would be the decisive blow to send him hurtling off. But—

Garfiel: "That ain't gonna work!"

Subaru: "Geh!"

Both of Garfiel's feet stomped the ground as hard as they could, his posture lowering as he spiked his elbow into Subaru's solar plexus. Subaru screamed, using his lowered head to strike Garfiel's forehead with a headbutt in reply. Both recoiled at the numb pain to their skulls, both sent out their fists as they right their heads, and both landed their hit.

With fists mutually driven into the other's cheek, blood began to flow from both of their noses. Subaru was situated at the limit for physical damage, while Garfiel was, mental factors included, sitting in critical territory.

The glow of the crystal in Garfiel's shoulder was steadily growing dimmer. That perhaps proved that Garfiel was nearly exhausted of Mana, or rather, proved the battle was nearing its conclusion.

Subaru: "—Guh!"

Garfiel: "Fuck are you dozin' off for!"

The instant he dropped his guard, the fist at his cheek flicked open, sending his face rebounding with a smack. For a moment, the strike sent his consciousness soaring off to elsewhere. He immediately gritted his teeth, hard, the pain of his cracked tooth as it shatters guiding him back to consciousness.

He could not rely on trickery any more to keep himself from falling unconscious. Now the crystal was contributing in a different form, in a fashion without any greater parallel. Subaru needed to withstand all the pain on his own.

Negligence. Conceit. Idiocy.

Subaru would always be weak and would never sincerely be the superior party in a fight.

Subaru: “And so... I can’t be slacking off!”

Garfiel: “Gah!”

He swung his left arm down to hook Garfiel by the neck, sending the two of them toppling to the ground. His body battered, Subaru grimaced in pain as he attempted to upright himself. When a different, new vicious pain speared across his left arm, pinned to the ground as it is.

He looked to find Garfiel’s fangs biting down on the upper portion of his arm.

Subaru: “Geeeh!”

Garfiel: “Ggggh—”

Subaru: “Aaah! Get off! That hurts, you stupid!”

Subaru punched Garfiel in the face to make him let go. His arm was squelched into freedom as the fangs released, but a limb pierced to the bone has no hope of moving. And his right arm—

Garfiel: “Gotcha!”

Subaru reached out his right arm in an attempt to reclaim his left, and it is at that time Garfiel grabbed his shoulder. While he may have lost the strength to throw a swing or a kick, he had yet to lose the strength to grasp. And so, constrictive force enough to shatter a boulder destroyed Subaru’s right shoulder, bones and everything.

A dull cracking resounded through the air alongside Subaru’s silent shrieks.

His upper left arm has been mutilated and his right shoulder has had its bones destroyed, both in a nonfunctional state. Both his arms robbed of their capabilities, Subaru's eyes shot open as Garfiel kicked him down.

Garfiel: "It's the end! Now there's nothin' y'can do! I should've done this from the start... turn ya into a floppin' fish!"

Seeing Subaru writhe on the ground, Garfiel's cheeks twisted in victorious jubilation. He got on his unsteady feet before turning his head to the sky, letting loose his voice. The howl of an animal, an hymn of triumph. Now all Subaru could do was to wait to be stepped on, finished off, and—

Subaru: "...How many times do I have to tell you, don't decide my end!"

The blow of the headbutt thrust up from below bashed Garfiel in the nose, sending his eyes spinning.

Subaru stood with his arms hanging limp. It's impossible. Ridiculous. This wasn't even a question of strength of will, but an issue that rested on an entirely different dimension.

Subaru: "My end, and your end... Neither are here yet."

Garfiel: "G—goddamn... Don't yer dare stand. Quit standing... I..."

Garfiel's face twisted in agony as he took a single step in retreat from the standing Subaru. Even though he was unable to use his arms and capable only of standing, it was as if Garfiel was scared of him.

Garfiel: "What's this persistence gonna do! The people here, every last one of 'em! Every single one's a hopeless dreg! The outside rejected 'em, and here's the only place they have! They go outside, and what! What happens!"

Subaru: "Go outside and be something. If you are going to be here to end peacefully, then do it. Neither one of those options are available here anymore."

No matter how much strength Garfiel flaunted, and no matter how hard he fought, it would not change the coming future.

Garfiel by himself could not hope to stop the threat the Great Rabbit presents. No matter how hard he tried, he would fail to save some people. And each time that count increased, he would lose his strength, until he would eventually be defeated in the face of insatiable hunger.

If Subaru could communicate that future to him, perhaps he could be encouraged into action at this juncture. But that would not mean that he would change his mind.

It would only be a temporary push. His heart would remain sealed inside Sanctuary. Once he knew the danger had passed, he would return here, still pretending the place was a paradise while he submerged into stagnation.

Ignoring the push at his back, ignoring the hands offered to him, disregarding all of it, Garfiel Tinsel would feign his mourning of his mother's death while unceasingly consoling himself.

Subaru: "Leave this place, Garfiel. This barrier you fear does not exist."

Garfiel: "There is a barrier! It's me! I'm an unfailing barrier, separatin' inside and outside! Me, 'n nanna, 'n the others! We all stopped still! It's already the end for us!"

They had given up once. The people of Sanctuary feared connection with the outside, retreated into their paradise, and had given up on contacting the world outside the forest. And so Garfiel was trying to protect that enclosed paradise. Asserted he would.

That was equivalent to letting their lives be completed as they were. Because of one person, going off doing things on his own.

Subaru: "Then we'll break that barrier... Right here and right now, us!"

Garfiel: "That guy! And Ram! They're bitin' the dust right now! And yer gonna be gettin' yer peace too soon enough! There's no «us» for you bastards! Here's the end for me and for all of ya!"

Subaru: "Do you think it's fucking smart to give up? It's damn obvious it's cooler not to! You think that when you give up on everything and stop, walking means the end for you? Just take a little rest and walk again! The opportunity for it visited you goddamn ages ago!"

The Trial which had resulted in him fearing the outside world. Garfiel had experienced that Trial, and Ryuzu and Frederica nevertheless loved him.

Frederica chose to step into that outside world, to create a place where the people of Sanctuary could live, once the barrier was someday broken.

She would have turned to look back, and offered Garfiel her hand. She would have seen Garfiel stopped still, and offered that he walk again. Of course. After all, Frederica was Garfiel's sister.

When a little brother cries themselves stuck, it's their big sis who would reach out for them.

Subaru: "You said Frederica left for the outside world and left you behind. But you are wrong. You are absolutely wrong, Garfiel. You are not bound to the barrier. If you wanted to follow her, you could have done so at any time. You are the one who neglected to!"

Garfiel: "—I..."

Subaru: "You are the one who drew away first, Garfiel! Then you cry and cry and cry about it being your sister's fault! You don't think it's fucking pathetic!?"

The pit of his chest burned. What on earth was he saying? He was starting to lose track of himself. Deep in his gut, in that very core, something dark wriggled.

The supernatural gateway beneath his navel, connecting Subaru to the outside world, had lost its function.

So then, right now, this thing deep inside this body, asserting its presence, was what, exactly?

Still unsure of his head, of his body, of this man before him, he screamed.

Subaru: "Any time! Any moment! When you want to act! When you want to change! The instant you think that marks the starting line!!"

Suffer failure, lose everything, wallow in resignation and stop, hug your knees and cower.

When you're despondent toward yourself, disappointed with others, despairing from feelings of loneliness by being abandoned by those precious to you, even if you feel burdened by all those, and even if you believe yourself to be worthless...

Subaru: "Raise your head again, walk the path in front of you. And how can anyone order you to give up on that!"

Give up! Relinquish! Surrender!

Idiocy. All of it, an insipid joke warranting no heed.

If there was someone hugging their knees, and you felt the whim to call out, you should support them.

Do your best! You can do it! I don't know what's up, but if you stand and keep running, you'll reach somewhere.

—His chest, burning.

Subaru: "Isn't that right, Garfiel!"

He called the name of the man before him, his eyes wavering feebly, his visage small.

—His guts, blazing.

Subaru: "Isn't that right, Emilia!"

He called of the name of the girl behind him, her gaze looking down at him, as she stood on the threshold between weakness and something else.

—His eyes, something spilling over.

Subaru: "Hey— Isn't that right, Rem!!"

His head raised, mouth open, eyes wide, he called the name of the person who gave him the motivation to stand.

He had been taught that giving up and coming to a stop should surely not mean the end.

Natsuki Subaru desired the power he was given that day reach every single person there was.

Subaru: “———”

A power which did not not belong to Subaru squirmed within his core, shrieking its birthing cry. Cheering at its own birth, and welcoming its own birth. With Natsuki Subaru as a medium, it again connects to the world.

Heat, spilling over. At the center of Subaru’s body, a conflagration burned.

It swirled in the space before Subaru, scarlet flowing out his bloodshot eyes, and takes form, tampering with the world.

Garfiel: “I——”

Garfiel soared.

He raised his claws to swing, bared his teeth to show, and was no longer using words, but actions to deny Subaru’s assertions.

Unable to spin words, unable to put his feelings to form, this was the only conceivable method. He knows not of anything else. And so Garfiel reached for Subaru with his claws.

The heat spilling from the bleeding Subaru congregated right in front of him, but Garfiel did not notice. Right in front of Subaru, there spawned a warp in space, an inconceivable fissure in the world, but Garfiel did not notice.

—He did not notice the overwhelming force extending from that fissure.

Well, that was only natural. He could not see it. Or rather, nobody except Subaru could see it. Because this thing, which only Subaru can negotiate, is Unseen Hand.

Subaru: “———”

The world looked as if it moved in slow motion. This sensation was far too familiar for Subaru. While on the brink of dying, or in the instant before sustaining a fatal wound, or when suffering punishment for voicing the taboo, this sensation was always accompanied by pain, and depressed him.

But unlike those times, this illusory sensation was presently here for Subaru's sake. He could see the oncoming Garfiel very clearly.

Pure hostility— But, it also carried the wisps of a child's tantrum.

Subaru focused his gaze on the tip of Garfiel's chin.

Somehow, he knew. Before he made it happen, he attained comprehension. All that was necessary was to fix his aim and unleash this thing he was restraining. That alone, and it would surely be accomplished.

—And so, Subaru did exactly that.

Garfiel: “———!?”

The unleashed power shouted in glee, sniping defenseless Garfiel from below. The outstretched torrent of force took the shape of a fist, extended to the shape of an arm, and slammed a punch into Garfiel's face midway through his leap, shooting him high skyward.

Garfiel: “...Wh—wha!?!?”

Struck by a completely unanticipated attack, Garfiel failed to catch himself as he slammed back to the ground. He tumbled to a stop, splayed out on the earth. Subaru understood that he had just fired the decisive blow. And simultaneously, an incredible load of something is wrested away from inside him.

Subaru: “Ugh, agh... Ahhhhhhh—”

He fell to his knees, his body folding as he vomited all he could. But not a single drop of blood or bile came out. Not a drop of scarlet or saliva, for nothing extraneous remained within him.

That was the sort of final strike it was, at the end of so much effort.

The torrent of power unraveled and dispersed immediately after sniping Garfiel. Its fountain likely remained inside Subaru even at that point, but he did not sense that he could draw on it again. Subaru lacked anything to forfeit further.

If he used that arm any more than he just has, he would need to sacrifice more. But, being that the fight was over, for the moment was not necessary—

Subaru: “Come on... you’re kidding.”

Garfiel: “—Don’t, under... estimate...”

Broken down, bordering on unconsciousness. His vision was white at its edges, so exhausted any blink could be his last. He had expended such incredible efforts, and still.

Garfiel Tinsel, with an outrageous nosebleed streaming down his face, was standing.

Subaru: “Seriously, just how tough are you...”

Garfiel: “If I ain’t, ain’t foldin’, it... Ain’t, ain’t over, endin’...”

Garfiel’s consciousness was halfway gone. His unfocused gaze appeared to look at Subaru while not looking at him at all. Tenacity alone was driving Garfiel to stand, rejecting that final push.

Almost surely, Subaru could shove him and that would topple Garfiel.

But the strength to enact that attack was equally lacking in Subaru. Never mind taking a hit, Subaru was ten seconds away from losing consciousness too.

They had both done their absolute best, having used up every power in their possession to reach this conclusion. This was true for Garfiel, but unmistakably for Subaru too; all of their strategies were done at this point.

If Otto and Ram had not worn Garfiel down, Subaru probably would not have been able to get this far.

The idea he could do something provided he had the blue crystal as his hidden ace had been naive. To help in maintaining consciousness, to debilitate Garfiel to the utmost. Even with both aspects, Subaru surely would not have managed it.

The blue crystal on Garfiel’s shoulder flickered.

It seemed to be encouragement and reproach towards Subaru, on the verge of sinking into failure. Unwittingly, he finds himself close to giving a wry smile.

Subaru, the crystal, Otto, Ram. All this power combined, and they still had not been able to beat Garfiel. He was, without a doubt, strong. Subaru would sincerely acknowledge that. And so---

Garfiel: "And now, yer..."

Subaru: "Don't... think bad of this, Garfiel. I did say we are breaking that barrier."

Garfiel: "There ain't nobody..."

With unsteady steps, Garfiel closed in on Subaru. His arm hung aloft, and at its tip, dirtied with blood, dull claws were present. Should they reach him, Subaru would reach his end.

Garfiel put the entirety of his focus into this attack.

And so he did not notice. The tremors, the noise, that was approaching.

---The final push, to secure Garfiel's defeat.

Garfiel: "O, ver!?"

???: "-----!!"

Drowning out his shout, the dignified roar of an ground dragon echoed. The charging black dragon rammed head-first into the undefended Garfiel, striking him in the side and sending him flying.

Garfiel: "---Guh!?"

Stricken with an impact that had literally carted him away, Garfiel shot off as easily as a kicked pebble, wide-eyed. He bounced once, twice, three times off the earth, kicking up dust plumes and caking himself in dirt before coming to lie face-down on the ground.

He does not twitch an inch. Seeing this, the author of that merciless final attack arches her head, roaring.

Subaru: "What do you think, Garfiel..."

At the side of Patrasche as she proclaims her victory, Subaru called out to the fallen Garfiel. In a voice so frail, it's questionable whether he heard it.

The key which decided this battle. What was it?

Well, that was simple. In a fight against strong Garfiel, weak Subaru did not fight alone. Meaning—

Subaru: “This... is the power of numbers.”

Garfiel: “There’s gotta be, other... goddamn, way to, say that...”

Motionless, Garfiel responds sourly to Subaru’s words. Subaru’s cheeks relax slightly in hearing it.

Subaru: “Okay then, it’s the accumulation of everyone’s feelings, forming bonds of victory.”

Garfiel: “Haa... it’s as they say, «none can lift the Quain Stone alone»...”

With that, Garfiel fell silent. Seeing that fact through, Subaru grasped their definite victory, before looking up at the sky.

Subaru: “Finally heard a saying that worked...”

With that satisfied statement, he abandoned all consciousness and allowed himself to fall.

Arc 4 Chapter 114 - Lies into Wishes

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 7 “None Can Lift the Quain Stone Alone”, Part 3, and Volume 14, Chapter 6 “Lies to Hope”, Parts 1-2 (different context)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 196

Carried by the roar of a ground dragon, the battle’s end echoed throughout the skies of Sanctuary.

A jet-black dragon, which had rammed into the wounded Garfiel, had landed the decisive blow for the fight. This dragon, Patrasche, had run to the scene as if sharing a telepathic link with Subaru, and had beautifully given an unparalleled assist in the final stage of the combat.

Patrasche: “———!”

This was the second confrontation between Garfiel and Patrasche in Sanctuary.

On the day they arrived here, Patrasche, who had been pulling a dragon carriage, had gotten into combat with Garfiel when he arrived to repel the invaders, and suffered a doubtless defeat.

Of course, there was a boundary separating the two, one a warrior, the other a non-combatant. Patrasche could not be blamed for being made to eat dirt. Naturally, Subaru did not fault his steed either.

But Patrasche’s thoughts on it were an entirely different matter. She had failed to protect her master and felt disgraced. For a member of the proud Diana bloodline, this was dishonor that needed to be overturned. Being that Patrasche and Subaru could not communicate verbally, the swift arrival of this opportunity was not a topic they could discuss with mutually perfect comprehension.

And so, she demonstrated her thoughts by action. This dragon’s roar was devoted both to her master and to her ancestors.

Surely anyone would understand that, as the sound came mingled with accomplishment and satisfaction, and the dragon drew her snout close to Subaru, who was unconscious.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Listening to Patrasche's roar in her restored honor, Emilia exhaled a deep sigh.

It felt like breathing had been forbidden. Or rather, the fight had been the kind any bystander would forget about breathing entirely.

Emilia, being told to Subaru to witness its conclusion, did not avert her eyes from the men's gruesome confrontation, while keenly perceiving her own powerlessness.

Subaru had spat blood, moaned in pain, broken down.

How many times did Emilia wish to call out and run over?

But every time Emilia's weak heart nearly wished to discard that, Subaru's words, "witness me", and his nigh-perfectly timed gaze stopped her.

Neither her action, nor her speech, would be forgiven. It frustrated her, and she found it hard to bear, but she must not allow herself to avert her gaze.

It's not that anyone told her.

But Emilia's heart quietly perceived that she absolutely must not do those things. She did not understand this feeling revolving around her chest, this feeling which had kept her stopped.

Subaru had exhibited incredible stubbornness, Garfiel had howled with such incredible ferocity, and the confrontation came to its end following the two men's sloppy fistfight— What was the reason for such a fight? Being an outsider to the situation, and a woman who struggled to understand male logic, Emilia was only able to grasp fragments of the situation.

But Subaru had demonstrated his perseverance and faith with this fight, enlisting much aid to defeat Garfiel.

And that fact did indeed cause an indescribable feeling to swell within Emilia's heart. Still driven by that feeling, Emilia recognized that the fight that had taken place between the pair was one worthy of commendation.

That meant the significance of their battle absolutely must not be tarnished. And so---

Emilia: "...Roswaal."

With a single blink of her eyes, Emilia abandoned her hesitation and turned to face forward. Her gaze was directed beyond Subaru and Garfiel toppled on the ground before her, reaching to the gaps in the trees yonder.

---There stands a warlock¹⁶¹, in silence.

Emilia: "It makes people uneasy if you are just quiet like that. They'll start to think you are up to something."

Roswaal: "Myyyyyyyyy goodness, that certainly does sting. Doing that after I came here, pushing my wounded body, for the sake of yooooooooourself and Subaru-kun..."

Emilia: "If those are your real intentions, then I wish I'd be more relaxed, but..."

Out from the bushes in front of Emilia, someone tall emerged--- Roswaal.

During several days, ever since their arrival in Sanctuary, Emilia had only seen him in bed. The fact he was outside and loitering around here made her somewhat wary.

Roswaal was basically Emilia's sponsor in the Royal Selection and her only ally, politically speaking. The one who brought Emilia out of the forest and presented her the path to the throne, and suggested that the villagers sleeping in ice could be saved, was also him.

And so, leaving his peculiarities aside, Emilia had never truly viewed Roswaal as hostile, scornful, or dangerous so far.

¹⁶¹ Not to be confused with Warlock. What's the difference, you say? One's a title for Hector, the other's just a descriptor. But just for curiosity's sake, the Japanese for both situations is the same (魔人).

But that was up until just a few seconds previously.

Emilia: “The Micro Spirits have been noisy and restless for a while now.”

Roswaal: “...HMMMMMMMMMMMMM.”

Emilia: “Everybody’s saying they sense something soooo menacing. And right now, even I can see it too.”

Her voice low and tense, Emilia slowly descended from the Tomb’s entrance down to the open square. Subaru’s face as he rested there was satisfied, while Garfiel’s was twisted in regret. Emilia placed herself at Patrasche’s side, as the dragon stood between Subaru and Garfiel, putting herself in position to protect the three of them should anything happen.

Protect the three— That must have been the one goal in her mind, considering the irregular vibe that was currently emanating from Roswaal.

A dense, abnormally thick concentration of Mana warped the atmosphere around Roswaal. Just how concentrated was the Mana inside this man? This was Roswaal L. Mathers, who commanded all six types of magic, known as the greatest magician in the country.

If this man were to detonate his magic to its greatest limit, just what miracles could happen?

Emilia: “———”

Feeling tipsy off the dense mana, Emilia swallowed her breath.

Patrasche moved to a place blocking Roswaal’s line of sight to Subaru, stretching out her neck as she growled intimidatingly at the warlock. She had also sensed a threat in Roswaal’s anomalous atmosphere. Seeing the two’s caution, Roswaal shrugged, his attitude entirely the same as always.

Roswaal: “How scary. I woouooooould prefer if you could abstain frooooooom looking at me like that. Aaaaaaaalthough, my nature is one ridiculously disfavored by animals, ground dragons included. Should the same apply for Spirits, that does explain why Beatrice won’t be cordial wiiiiiiiith me.”

Emilia: “Stop fooling around. And I’m certain she’s unhappy with you because of something else... I don’t know if it was always like that, though.”

Roswaal: “Noooooooooooo. A long time ago... A long time ago indeed, it waaaaaaaaasn’t like that. When there were no ground dragons, people would usually ride Grim Oxen Falos.”

Emilia: “When, there were no ground dragons...?”

Emilia’s brows furrowed. While she was not exactly the most knowledgeable on the topic, ground dragons were creatures firmly joined to everyday living, and the culture and history surrounding them, as well as their connection with humanity, has supposedly gone on for a long time.

What Roswaal must have meant is “in Lugunica”. Emilia’s studies were too lacking for her to pinpoint just when ground dragons started being densely used in Lugunica, though.

Roswaal exhaled a small sigh at Emilia’s confusion. Somehow, it gave off the feeling of pre-anticipated disappointment.

Roswaal: “Then you would not know either, Emilia-sama. Weeeeeell, I suppose you wouldn’t. While you may have inherited blood from the long-lived elves, your age only amounts to a century and a few years... Considering you have spent the most of that time asleep, surely you wouldn’t remember the world aaaaaaaaaaas it was then.”

Emilia: “...You are saying weird things, Roswaal. If we are going to talk about this, then you are way younger than me. Hm, but I lose if we mean time spent awake.”

The fact Emilia spent up to a century inside the ice, abandoned by the world and the passage of time, was history that Emilia found embarrassing. Even with the world at large considered, she should have been accounted as an elder among the populace. But she lacked the experience and knowledge fitting to her age. Including her inability to beat the Trial, her time in Sanctuary has made her recognize there are many areas in which she lacks— including this.

But Roswaal responded to Emilia’s worries with just a snort, laughing them off. The reaction was unanticipated, so Emilia’s brows shot up in surprise.

Emilia: “Wait, Roswaal. Why are you laughing like that?”

Roswaal: “—Please excuse me. It truly was noooooothing important. Merely reflecting that ignorance occasionally does create situations so humorous it’s sad.”

Emilia: “You mean, you are making fun of me. I can at least understand that much.”

Roswaal’s rather insolent statement led Emilia’s brows to rise, her wariness compounding. Strange Mana encircled Roswaal, and his attitude toward Emilia was different compared to how it had always been.

Emilia had never experienced clear spite from Roswaal before. The Roswaal that Emilia knew was someone who was always screwing around, often spoke mockingly, and told jokes that were just as stupid as Subaru and Puck’s, but like them he had never said anything disparaging towards Emilia.

Because Roswaal needed to cooperate with Emilia for the sake of his goals, and it was necessary to treat her as a partner who had to be placed superior position of Ruler.

Tracing the logic backwards, Roswaal did not see the merit in acting such with Emilia, presently. He had probably lost his temper with her and her constant inability to beat the Trial, and given up on her. And that was okay. Because if that were to be the situation, she could at least understand and agree with it.

But something else scared Emilia more than that, at this moment.

Emilia: “Roswaal. Since when were you watching Subaru and Garfiel fight?”

Roswaal: “—Since when, which is to say?”

Emilia: “I noticed your presence there... just a minute ago. When Subaru and Garfiel were hitting each other... Right after Subaru used Shamac.”

Taxing his ragged gate, Subaru had used magic for the who-knows-what’t time.

He strained the dregs of Mana he had and used magic as if mustering the absolute last of his power. It resulted in a rather ineffective spell, which soon dispersed.

Thinking back on it, that had been the exact moment where Emilia truly wanted to run over to Subaru. Subaru once strained the last of his power to cast Shamac in Emilia’s presence before, and it had ended in his overwhelming and unquestionable loss.

Surely no one would fault her for envisioning his image back then overlaid atop his image at that moment, and come close to interfering. But when Subaru jabbed his hidden ace, the crystal, into Garfiel and the odds shifted to fifty-fifty, an emotion other than panic sprouted in Emilia’s heart.

And having lost that pressing sense of urgency, Emilia noticed it for the first time— the irregular signs of someone watching the battle, just like her.

Emilia: “At first, I thought you were there to help Subaru in case he reached his limit. It looks like Ram and Otto-kun did something to try and stop Garfiel, so I wondered if you were here as reinforcement for Subaru too. But...”

Roswaal: “Yooooooooou are exactly correct, I indeed came here as reinforcement for Subaru-kun. That’s what I could say, but you wouldn’t beeeeeeeeeelieve me.”

Emilia: “Even without Puck, I can at least figure out Mana currents. You were watching the fight so you could intervene at any time... But the one you were aiming for was...”

Roswaal: “———”

Roswaal’s odd-colored eyes narrowed as he looked at Emilia.

His eyes had been narrowed like this while he was watching the fight. His magic at its peak and always ready to fire, his aim fixed on Subaru.

Emilia: “Answer me, Roswaal— What were you thinking to do to Subaru?”

Emilia faced her palm out toward Roswaal. Puck was not at her side. There was also some anxiety over her Mana control. The Micro Spirits were trying to warn Emilia, terrified of Roswaal and the ominous magic he uses. If she was unable to depend on them to help her entirely, then it was all up to herself.

Emilia: “Please, answer. If you don’t, I...”

Roswaal: “We are far past the point of asking question, and you are stiiiiiiiiiiiiill hesitant in your decisions. No end exists for your thoughtlessness. Or perhaps you place too much expectation in the goodwill of others? I believe you were recipient to malice only in your days thus far. How is it that you manage to be so incredibly exposed?”

Emilia: “—Hk.”

Roswaal overpowered Emilia's pleading words with unrestrained spite. His heterochromatic eyes hosted equal animosity, his being not conceding Emilia an inch. The same applied to the multiple forms of Mana churning chaotically inside him.

Matters were proceeding in a questionable direction. Emilia unwittingly reached for her chest, then being remembered of the absent familiar touch she would normally find there, and gritted her teeth.

Her weakness, unconsciously trying to entrust her worries to Puck, frustrated her. To obfuscate that weakness, Emilia increased the strength in her glare as she gazed at Roswaal.

Emilia: "You don't want to answer my question. Then, I won't— Eek."

—Hold back either, was how she meant to continue.

The instant she resolved herself, and began to build a concentration of mana, something bumped the side of her head. Surprised at the dishevelment of her silver hair, Emilia looked to her side, to see the snout of a ground dragon.

It's Patrasche. Her push, or really strike, being that it had been too forceful of a shove to be described otherwise, prompted Emilia's eyes to widen. The snout of the black dragon's elegant face once again butted into Emilia's forehead.

Emilia: "You..."

They could not speak with each other, but even still, it seemed like Patrasche was supporting her.

—Calm down. With composure, do what you ought to.

Feeling Patrasche was sternly telling her this, Emilia realized she had gotten fired up. She closed her eyes and, by the time she turned back to face Roswaal, her hand was no longer touching her chest.

Roswaal: "Truly... I have noooooooo good memories with ground dragons."

Seeing the change in Emilia's expression, Roswaal gave his irritated opinion of Patrasche. Patrasche's care had so effectively destroyed Roswaal's plans. Meaning that just then, Roswaal wished Emilia had used violence on him.

Emilia: "I don't know what you are thinking right now at all. If she hadn't stopped me just then, I know I would've... But, it's almost like you wanted me to."

Roswaal: "I will simply mention this, just in case. It's because I dooooo dislike being hurt."

Emilia: "...? But everyone dislikes that."

Emilia furrowed her brows. Roswaal's lips looked like they slackened sardonically. Emilia could not figure what that smile meant in the least.

Either way, she concludes brute force was not the option she should be picking here.

Emilia: "Tell me, Roswaal. It's obvious that you are beside yourself right now. How come you are... being desperate like this, tell me."

Roswaal: "...Desperate, you say. Hmm, goodness, my goodness, how surprising."

Emilia: "It's like you are abandoning everything, you could've been hit with magic and you didn't care... You could tell me it's not desperation, but I wouldn't believe you."

Emilia could understand that sort of destructive behavior in which you would grow sick of yourself, and let yourself act like an absolute insane wreck. The question was whether it would be directed inside, or outside. Emilia was the type to direct it inside. Perhaps Roswaal was the same.

Emilia: "If you are, then talk to me. I don't know what I can do for you, but I can help. I mean, up until now you've helped me with so many things, and..."

Roswaal: "—No. That is enough, Emilia-sama."

But Roswaal's frail voice rejects Emilia's offered hand.

He spoke with the most level voice he had spoken with thus far, his eyes numb as he looked down at Emilia. His clown makeup— beneath those cosmetics that seemed to be laughing, Emilia could tell he was suppressing his emotions to a painful extent. She gulped.

Roswaal's expression looked like he had given up on absolutely every single thing.

Emilia: “Enough... What do you mean?”

Roswaal: “It means just as it sounds like. I do not intend to have you understand my plots, as these two’s wounds and the Trial... and even the Royal Selection dooooooon’t matter for a second anymore— For already this world is an ending one.”

Emilia: “An ending world... Or, what’s this about it not mattering? The Royal Selection and the Trial don’t matter... Roswaal, what are you saying!?”

Emilia yelled in anger, unable to comprehend what Roswaal was saying.

Roswaal was bathing in suspiciousness. But the hollowness of his expression, and the Mana encircling his form, abound in such emptiness they would make anyone’s body tense up. Roswaal’s heart was presently hitting the peak of instability.

While Emilia did understand that, his claims were not something she could accept. Roswaal wanted to abandon everything important to Emilia, and abandon something that Subaru could not put into words.

Garfiel’s shouts had clearly illustrated what his stance was. He wanted to destroy the Tomb, and keep the Trial from existing any further. What did he seek by making Sanctuary’s barrier unbreakable? Probably an unchanging daily life, was Emilia’s conclusion.

And Emilia could sympathize with Garfiel’s stance.

Going without changes, being able to go unchanged. That path was a tranquil, comfortable path. If one could have a mundane life, spending your time in a peaceful place with those you cherish, then nobody could deny the desire to remain submerged in that environment.

But Subaru denied that desire at point-blank, demonstrated his stubbornness, and cast the concept aside.

Emilia’s stance was identical to Subaru’s own, for she was urging change to arrive at Sanctuary. But her reasoning was not as definite as Subaru’s, nor did she understand the feelings of Sanctuary’s people as thoroughly as he did.

This place was a necessary step along the path to achieve her goals, nothing more than a spot she had trampled upon. What would those around her think of the changes her interference brought? Being entirely focused on her own interior, Emilia had failed to ask this entirely obvious question.

The one who asked it had been Subaru, instead. Once again, she had made Subaru shoulder her burden, and overlooked everything. And this present had come to existence because she keenly realized that.

But, at this juncture, Roswaal was trying to discard the present Subaru's life-threatening gamble had wrought.

Emilia: "Roswaal... What are you trying to abandon? It's what... What started with you and me, right? And halfway through, you are... This is something that cannot be forgiven!"

Emilia snarled, for Roswaal's brows to react.

A wisp of strength returned to him as he covered his blue eye with his hand, his yellow eye trembling.

Roswaal: "It started with me and you? What are you talking about?"

Emilia: "Huh...?"

Roswaal: "It started with me and my Teacher— Assuredly, noooooooooot you. And so, allowing it to end should be within my own and my Teacher's liberty. As is logical."

Emilia: "You can't just do that!"

Even facing the incredible aura overpowering her, Emilia raised his voice. She glared at the clown, swinging her arms up.

Emilia: "So maybe it did start with you and this person... but the issue isn't just about you two anymore. It's not just my issue either. We dragged lots of people into it, caused problems for lots of people, and we kept going just like that! You can't just end it whenever you want!"

Roswaal: "The road is already leading towards its end and nothing more. So whaaaaaaaat would be inconvenient about letting it all end beeeeeeeefore we reach the end of the line? Indeed, it's hopeless for us... So we'll place our expectations in our next selves, and Subaru-kun."

Emilia: “In Subaru?”

Put expectations in Subaru, meaning what, exactly?

Emilia glanced at the fallen Subaru, renewing her awareness that Roswaal’s words must not be materialized to reality.

Of course.

Subaru had already done more than enough. If expectations were put in him, he would answer them excessively. No more should be sought from him than what he had already done.

When something is given, it naturally ought to be repaid.

Emilia: “How can you say that the path Subaru opened leads to the end? Subaru’s group all worked together to open a closed path. Isn’t that what this battle was?”

Roswaal: “To go either left or right will lead to a dead end. When faced with this crossroads, aaaaaaaaany struggle is in vain. For the entirety of the truly correct course is written here.”

Roswaal withdrew a black tome from his pocket. Seeing this unfamiliar thing, an impulse rose inside Emilia, clawing at her chest. Her eyes were open wide.

That book instilled in her a terribly bad feeling. It had no title nor cover-wrap, looked like an entirely mundane book, but, for some reason, just looking at the tome made Emilia feel oppressive pressure.

Emilia: “That book is...”

Roswaal: “A replica of the Book of Wisdom. Or perhaps it could be called a superior Gospel. To all except myself, its writing appears to be illegible scribbles. It is a text which divulges the correct path of, one that should be followed.”

Emilia: “History which should be followed... You mean like the Dragon Stone?”

Roswaal: “They follow the same principles should you trace back their roots, is what Teacher told me.”

Only when Roswaal spoke the word “Teacher” did emotion return to his eyes. His tone was one of envisioning someone darling, as if that simple two-syllable word carried emotion he could not fully suppress, diction which allowed for such supposition. It was natural for Roswaal to be capable of thinking of someone this way. Even though he was attempting to deem everything else he saw as worthless.

Emilia: “You mean, because we are going a different course than what that book says, you’ll ruin everything? But what will doing that accomplish? If we look for a different path, different from the book, which isn’t a dead end...”

Roswaal: “You are saying the exact same things as Subaru-kun. Is this another second-hand idea from him?”

Emilia: “—Hk!”

Roswaal laughed slightly. Feeling she had been struck by a star, Emilia’s throat caught. Her expression prompted Roswaal to give a bored sigh.

Roswaal: “Borrowed words, pre-prepared opinions. Even the idea you should challenge the Trial was something imposed upon you... Weeeeeeeell, I will not fault you. It was I and those around you who demanded you do it, not yourself. Words spoken with the knowledge that your empty, insignificant self can do nothing other than this... Subaru-kun encourages suuuuuuuch cruel things.”

Emilia: “Cruel things...”

Roswaal: “We’re talking about him, so ooooooof course he went without explaining the logical necessity of challenging the Trial, and merely gave you a motivating speech, yes? He pushed his complacency onto you and claimed that you could do it if you resolved yourself to. Indeed. llllll indeed I know. Aaaaaaaaafter all, he and I are ooooooof the same breed.”

Emilia: “You and Subaru are the same? What do you mean?”

Roswaal: “It means we impose our ideals upon the women we love.”

An assertion.

Roswaal closed one eye, gazing at Emilia with the yellow. His smile was strong as he threw statement upon statement at the silenced Emilia.

Roswaal: “What words did he use accost you? Nothing but statements pleasant to the ear, yes? He spoiled you, imposed ideals upon you, treated you so tenderly and carefully as if he were handling a fragile object. He did not consider for a second you are actually weak and brittle, that you are fearful and desire to flee, that you possess such a mundane breed of heart. He has not a shred of interest in the real you. The thing he’s infatuated with is a sparkling version of you living inside his head— Cooooooooorrec?”

Emilia: “———”

Roswaal: “I am also that way. With her, I only saw the ideal. You are wonderful, you are brilliant, there’s no one greater than you. That’s how I consoled her, what I kept telling her, focusing my love as if handling a work of glass... even though those things do not carry even the slightest of meaning.”

Speaking quickly, Roswaal averted his gaze, seemingly irritated.

Was he talking about Subaru, or was he discussing himself? Perhaps not even Roswaal himself could distinguish it clearly.

Overwhelmed by his momentum, Emilia took a small breath. So that she would be able to say what she had to say, even though Roswaal’s attitude intimidated her

Emilia: “...Is that all?”

Roswaal: “———”

Emilia: “Are those all the common points you think there are between you and Subaru?”

Roswaal looked suspiciously at Emilia. Doubt has rose within him. His neglect to say anything was obviously his answer to Emilia’s query. Which means yeah, she had to spell it out for him. She had to correct his idea.

Emilia: “If that’s all you were trying to say, then——”

Roswaal: “———”

Emilia: “—You and Subaru are nothing alike.”

Indeed, Subaru had spoken lines upon lines of idealism, and did not explain the significance of liberating Sanctuary to Emilia. But Subaru’s argument assuredly did not consist entirely of niceties and Emilia-focused lip-service.

Emilia: “—So, Subaru called me a pain in the ass of a woman.”

Roswaal: “—What?”

Emilia: “He said, who do I think I am, doing so much crap but causing so many problems. Always fussing over what’s already gone, stop giving others these empty expectations. Every word out your mouth is just insincere talk, you are lacking in everything, it’s unbearable to watch— Subaru said all of this for me.”

Roswaal: “———”

Emilia: “Subaru is paying proper attention to me. Now I’m thinking that I can’t keep showing him only my lame parts. You pretend you are looking ahead, while you are not really looking at anything at all. You are nothing like Subaru.”

If Natsuki Subaru were someone who would only envision an idealized image of Emilia, then surely she would still be hugging her knees inside the Tomb.

And Garfiel, too. If his opponent had not been Subaru, someone who knew more than just ideals but nonetheless opted to argue with idealism, then Garfiel would not have listened.

Subaru saw Emilia’s weakness, but still told her he loved her. Subaru knew Garfiel’s kindness, but still demanded he change.

No matter who they were, if they wished to stay stuck in one place, Subaru would run over and reprimand them.

You cannot stay here, you can do more, raise your head, look forward, swing up your fists, you don’t have time to be staying put.

—You are not allowed to stay standing still forever.

Illustration from Volume 14, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Roswaal: “Natsuki Subaru, made the correct choice in this Sanctuary...? That kind of ludicrous thing couldn’t... That would mean, the writ of this Book of Wisdom...”

Emilia: “My memories were revived, and I was anxious. Puck went away, and I was close to being crushed.”

The discrepancy between what he supposed, and the answer Subaru gave, confused Roswaal.

Emilia put her hand to her chest, not to feel for the presence there, but to feel the thumping of her heartbeat.

Emilia: “I thought that, once I remembered everything, I’d turn into somebody else. I thought that, once that happened, it’d wind up that the person I’ve been until now was wrong.”

Even now, inside her mind, there was a girl lost in memories. Once that girl attained a definite image, someone irreversible would appear. Once that happens, Emilia’s world would change completely.

Emilia feared that change, leaned toward rejecting it, but she knew this change was necessary. No matter what would change, that would not make the path she had walked thus far disappear. No matter how Emilia would change from hereon, and were she to become someone with a different origin, that would not make the feelings she held presently a mistake.

She could be facing a stalemate, she may have stopped still, but she would walk again. She would notice what direction seems forward, and proceed.

Emilia: “When I want to do something, when I want to change something, when that’s what I want to do— I have someone who will tell me it’s okay, and lead me forward. That’s what I learned.”

Roswaal: “That is a lie!”

Emilia: “It’s not a lie at all. Subaru told me he believes in me, and I want to believe in him. Though what he said might look like baseless nonsense. Though I might want to say it was a lie... I have to make it so that it isn’t a lie.”

She did not want to let the label of “liar who went around preaching about the insubstantial hopes there are in useless unsalvageable Emilia” fall onto Subaru.

Natsuki Subaru had asserted Emilia could do it. And presently, Emilia was making that statement a lie.

But if she broke through her shell, and achieved what she could do, his lie would not be a lie. That would be what people called “wishes”.

Emilia: “Turning lies into wishes, by doing these things I have to do now, is what I want to do.”

As Subaru had frantically, desperately taught her.

What rested inside Emilia, previously beyond her ability to put into form, finally takes shape as words.

She could not tell whether that was truly the correct answer. But what would change from something indefinite into something correct would be Emilia’s actions. And she would like to proceed without hesitating to do it, without indecision about it.

Roswaal: “—! Absurd!”

Roswaal’s face paled as he drew backwards. His usual composure had been cast away, and the emptiness he had until now, strangling out his voice with his expression one of despair, shivered in fear at Emilia’s answer.

He swung his arm, pointing at Emilia, his voice cracking as he shouted—

Roswaal: “Why, how! How did you wind up reaching that answer now, here!? How did Natsuki Subaru earlier communicate to you something I couldn’t tell Teacher!? Him, right now! At this stage! It’s not okay for him to achieve those feelings!”

Emilia: “I remember what I was afraid of. Right now, I’m in the middle of steeling myself to face it... What is it you are afraid of?”

Roswaal: “It’s obvious! Deviations from the writ! Going on without history proceeding as it is written here, and no longer being able to achieve our promised reunion! What else would I be!”

Emilia: “But it feels like that isn’t what you are having a problem with right now.”

Roswaal: “———!”

A fire of rage ignited in Roswaal's eyes. He had been voicing his wrath at the fact he could not sympathize with Subaru's mentality. Roswaal wanted Subaru to feel something which he had experienced in the past himself.

Most likely, what he said before about him and Subaru being the same breed had not been idle bantering, but what Roswaal was convinced should be the way of things. Perhaps he thought that himself and Subaru should follow down the same stream in how they confronted their lovers, and come to suffer the same wounds.

His unshakeable conviction was now close to crumbling. That was how Emilia perceived Roswaal's present turmoil.

Roswaal: "Aaaargh, what is happening! How is this happening to me, of all people!"

Roswaal put his hand to his mouth, disregarding his paint as it fell away, his cheeks twisting.

Roswaal: "Have I been dancing on strings since the moment of the bet? Garfiel's loss, and Emilia's recovery, was all of it calculated...? Did I err from the moment I started making plots in counter to a sage's ability to preclude¹⁶²...? But then, for what purpose am I..."

Emilia: "Roswaal?"

Emilia's presence flew out of Roswaal's awareness, as he absorbed himself in a dizzying storm of thought. What he was thinking about so frantically was probably how to correct a world deviated from his plans.

But no method to achieve such a thing existed in this world anymore.

Emilia did not know what kind of prophecies were written in his book. Roswaal had been cornered to such a degree, however. The deviation must have been incredible. So much you would have been already able to call this place a different world—

Roswaal: "—Ahh, I see."

¹⁶² Translation note from SummaryAnon: "Ability to preclude, more literally an ability to stop action from happening, an ability to make someone give up on their plans, or to deter".

Roswaal muttered. His voice had regained its intelligent tone, making Emilia anticipate that he has temporarily dealt with his discomposure. Through a logical conversation, they could find a point of compromise and—

Roswaal: “There’s nooooo need to worry about anything. After all, there’s the Contract. There was no puzzling to be had about whether or not he would reach legitimacy¹⁶³.”

Emilia: “What are you talking about? Roswaal, what is it...?”

Roswaal: “Nothing. It’s nothing at all, Emilia-sama. My deepest apologies for worrying and troubling you. You best proceed in the way that is desired of you, and that I expect of you.”

Bowing, Roswaal cast away his clownish demeanor as he flashed Emilia a smile.

Of course, Emilia could not simply agree with this. In a complete change from his previous hysteria, he was already back to his usual attitude. The fact that the previous disarray looked like considerably more genuine behavior was completely insane.

Emilia: “...Acting in a way you expect. What are you expecting from me?”

Roswaal: “It’s natural— That you challenge the Trial as you please, and that results be reached.”

However, Roswaal did not mention exactly who those results would favor. Perhaps he was desiring it no matter which way it goes, is the feeling Emilia had. She did not understand why would Roswaal desire that. Nor did she understand the reason behind his earlier cavalier attitude, nor why he swallowed it down and settled down. It was all just a sea of things she did not understand. But—

Emilia: “Right now, you... definitely won’t tell me about them, will you?”

Roswaal: “———”

Emilia: “It’s okay. I will not try to force you to say it. I know I’m not qualified to do that right now— But don’t get the idea that you can keep hiding it forever.”

¹⁶³ Translation note from SummaryAnon: “Could also be «no puzzling to be had about whether or not he would reach the legitimate X», where X is unspecified.”

Roswaal: “—Heartening, indeed. Knowing the truth, and now recovering yourself, we’ll see if you can stay true to your bluffs.”

He finished the dispute with a rather spiteful statement, but also a statement Emilia found to be a plea.

With that, Roswaal turned his back to her and walked. He was likely heading back to the lodgings where he was recuperating.

In the end, she had no idea why he came here and watched the fight. But the churning dense mass of Mana remained inside Roswaal’s body, as it longed for a miracle.

Roswaal: “Yes— Emilia-sama, a warning.”

Emilia: “Yes?”

Roswaal stopped, raising his finger. Emilia’s brows raised.

Roswaal smiled wryly at the fact that Emilia was one to display a far too undefended attitude when facing someone she had just finished having what effectively was an hostile conversation with.

Roswaal: “About Garfiel... It’s better not to underestimate how deep are the roots of hiiiiiiiiis nature. His obsession is not so shallow that simple defeat in a fistfight would change his mind.”

Emilia: “—Got it.”

Emilia accepted it. With that, Roswaal left the scene.

She saw him off, to realize that the only things remaining were Emilia’s breathing, and the breathing of the black dragon glaring at Roswaal’s retreating back until it vanished from view. And then the deep breathing of the two unconscious men.

Emilia: “Haaaaaaaaaaa...”

Emilia’s brows trembled as she let out a deep sigh. Noticing that Patrasche’s eyes had widened in response to this, Emilia smiled wryly.

Emilia: “No, it’s okay. It’s thanks to you that I kept my composure. But that was sooo tense. That could’ve turned into a fight with Roswaal.”

Patrasche: “———”

Emilia: “Mhm. I hate fighting when I don’t even know why we are fighting. And why was Roswaal being like that? Maybe Subaru would know.”

Emilia replied to Patrasche’s caring gaze as she kneeled beside the bloodstained Subaru, and gently lifted him up. Her fingers rubbed away the drying blood as she patted his swollen face. His expression twitched, as if feeling the tickle of the pain.

Emilia: “I need to heal them. Subaru and Garfiel both hate pain.”

Patrasche: “———”

Emilia: “Ah, it’s okay, you needn’t look so concerned. I’m a little worried about my control since Puck’s not here, but if it’s just some simple healing, I can have the Micro Spirits help.”

Emilia spoke to the surrounding Spirits, their dull glow shrouding her form as she enlisted their aid. The tender lights veiled Subaru and Garfiel both, their injuries beginning to mend. Subaru’s expression looked as if it had relaxed.

Emilia smiled ever so slightly, as she gently placed his head upon her lap.

How many times had she lent Subaru her lap, now? She had been given far too many things, so many she had no idea what to do to repay them.

Emilia: “When you wake up, there are really soooo many things I want to ask you.”

With that whisper, Emilia twined her finger into Subaru’s bangs. Subaru’s face scrunched up, and Emilia’s cheeks relaxed slightly.

—Ten minutes later, Otto emerged from the forest, Ram shouldered on his back, reconvening with them all.

Arc 4 Chapter 115 - You Are No Match for Your Childhood Friend

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 8 “Love Letter”, Parts 1-2

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 211

He felt something precious shedding away inside him.

The sensation was unlike that of his gate, whose existence had reached its finality. Something entirely separate and different, squirmed within Subaru.

Was it hot? Cold? The fever it carried gave indication of neither.

Did it possess a shape? Was it devoid of one? Its nebulousness indicated not even that.

The dingy muck had coursed through Natsuki Subaru, cheering in joy for its release outside, to demonstrate its power and disperse.

But its vestiges remained, fluctuating through Subaru even now.

The abnormal sensation gave Subaru a feeling he could not put into words. This was not something he recognized, or something he had felt before. But he did possess both knowledge and understanding of its nature.

So while he was indeed questioning both “why” and “how”, he did not question “what” or “what for”.

There was no need to deliberate over the identity of this thing. Subaru would be best off questioning “why”, but presently his query would not reach anyone who could answer.

Meaning that Subaru only had only one thing to consider.

—Invisible Strike, Unseen Palm, Unnoticeable Blow.

All of them sounded either lame or rehashed, lacking in style.

A black hand which only Subaru was able to see. That which only Subaru could control, would be—

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “The Imperceptible Will of the Gods ... We’ll call it Invisible Providence...”

???: “...Huh? What did you say?”

Squinting open his eyes, his consciousness still fuzzy, a fragment of his thoughts slipped out of his mouth.

On that instant, the silver-haired visage immediately in front of him opened its eyes wide.

After several blinks, Subaru recognized his return from the world of unconsciousness back to reality and only then noticed the connection between the soft sensation beneath his head and Emilia’s proximity.

Subaru: “Oh. I’m getting a lap pillow from Emilia-tan again.”

Emilia: “You are. What’s the count for me lending you my lap when you are unconscious now?”

Subaru: “Take some conditions into account and maybe three. Have to win a big bout to reach this paradise.”

Emilia: “Y—you are reeeeeeally not drowsy at all... Do you remember what happened before you fainted?”

Subaru: “Yeah, clearly. I’ll reminisce on it nice and slow, as we chat and I gaze at your face...”

Subaru joked around while he pushed aside the thoughts in his weighty head and got his ideas into order. He then remembered the shower of furious blows he sustained before fainting, and realizes, immediately putting his hands to his face, kneading his cheeks as he looked up at Emilia.

Subaru: “Crap. Actually, I think I got beat up pretty bad. Emilia-tan, am I okay? My face isn’t so messed up it makes you wanna not look at me?”

Emilia: “Don’t worry. It doesn’t look that weird.”

Subaru: “Spoken without a bit of malevolence!”

Emilia tilted her head in mystification. Subaru removed his hands from his cheeks, promptly checking the state of his joints. The area around his shoulders, lower body, and neck region felt vaguely numb. But most of his wounds are sealed and healed.

Emilia: “Subaru, it tickles if you move around on my lap too much.”

Subaru: “Ah, sorry. No! I wasn’t trying anything dirty with that! I mean I wasn’t but, how about I double check just to be sure?”

Emilia: “Don’t. I’m going to shove you off my lap if you keep saying this stuff. Stop being so saucy.”

Subaru: “Who still says saucy anymore?”

After responding to Emilia’s harsh gaze with a wry smile, Subaru righted himself up from her lap. While it did hurt to part with it, he couldn’t impose on her forever. His physical status, compared to his top form, was sitting at about sixty percent. Definitely not perfect, but he was thankful for Emilia’s healing.

Subaru: “Thanks for healing me. You managed to heal without Puck?”

Emilia: “My Contract with Puck might be broken, but my Contract with the Micro Spirits isn’t. And... I don’t know how this will sound, but it’s not like I can’t use magic.”

Subaru: “Really? My knowledge was that Magicians and Spiritual Arts Users have different structures in how they handle Mana... That you can’t have both.”

Those were lessons he had learned in the mansion from Puck and Roswaal. Magicians were only able to use magic proportionate to their internal store of mana, while Spiritual Arts Users needed to establish communication with a Spirit so they can utilize the inexhaustible ambient supply.

For that reason, Emilia’s ability to use magic surprised Subaru, differing from his perception.

Emilia lowered her gaze. Subaru’s brows furrowed at her strange reaction and she sighed silently.

Emilia: “I didn’t think I could either... But, I did mention that my memories are coming back. Part of them was knowledge on how to use magic... Which I think got sealed as well.”

Subaru: “Your memories sealed your ability to use magic?”

Emilia: “Yes.”

She nodded. Her failure to articulate was probably because she could not tell its true meaning. Subaru did not understand why her ability to use magic had been sealed in the recesses of her memory either. And his present information load was too scarce for speculation.

Either way, she had used her newly usable magic to heal Subaru.

Subaru: “Never mind the circumstances, if it meant you were able to heal me, it’s a huge help. How is everyone—” —Else, is how he intended to continue, when he realized that it was not the time for him to be relaxing. He should have recognized this fact the moment he remembered why he fell unconscious. Subaru’s opponent, Garfiel, and Otto and Ram who had apparently opposed said Garfiel. Were they safe?

Subaru: “Don’t think the situation’s too risky, but I’m gonna go before they end up as forest fertilizer and help—”

???: “I appreciate the fact you are worried about me, but I would manage well without having to hear your imaginings about these worst-case scenarios.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Forcing his wavering body to stand, Subaru started running away from the Tomb and into the forest, when the astonished voice of a young man stopped him in his tracks. He screeched to a halt and glanced behind him, to see someone sitting on the Tomb’s stone steps— Otto Suwen, with his hand raised.

Subaru: “Aaah, aaah!?”

Otto: “I’m so glad to see your surprise. I apologize for worrying you, but seeing as the worries go both ways, we’ll agree not to mention them, and...

Subaru: “Hi-yah!”

Otto: “Gah!?”

Having confirmed their mutual safety, a rather satisfied smile arose on Otto’s face— and Subaru charged. Riding the momentum, he leapt and acquainted Otto with his flying kick.

Stuck between the stairs and Subaru, Otto cried out.

Otto: “Ow! Ouch! The stairs are, grinding my head— Ow! M—my hair! I’m going bald! Wh—what on earth are you doing, Natsuki-san!?”

Subaru: “Shut it, stupid! Stop trying to be cool. What’s going on with this vibe where it’s like you did something big? Who told you to do anything more than buy time? You know how close my plans were to getting thrown out of the window because of that? But if you hadn’t helped, I don’t think I would’ve beat Garfiel, so I can’t say I’m not thankful!”

Otto: “I have no idea what you are even saying anymore!!”

Unable to give a sincere thanks, Subaru scuffled with Otto on the stairs while he speaks, when Otto finally kicked him away. Subaru rolled down the steps, landing on his backside before standing up.

Subaru: “Either way, glad you are safe. If you died, you’d make for an annoying visitant bedside.”

Otto: “I’d rather we leave these eccentric customs undiscussed. Or, actually, why didn’t those feelings of yours show up nicely at the start?”

Subaru: “Don’t let that praise get to your head, we are talking me here!”

Otto: “I am aware of that, yes!”

Otto put his hand to his brow, before noticing that Emilia had been quietly watching their exchange.

Otto: “Ah, Emilia-sama. I apologize for excluding you. Though it’s all Natsuki-san’s fault.”

Emilia: “Mhm, I was watching so I know. Don’t worry.”

Subaru: “No friends in sight... No, I mean, I’m drowning in friends and that’s why I’m in this situation—
Anyway, you being safe means Ram’s okay too?”

Emilia and Otto looked at each other and nodded. Subaru stuck his tongue out at them before inquiring them on safety of their unseen and final collaborator. Otto nodded once again—

Otto: “Considering her condition after I woke up and found her, I must say my blood froze... Fortunately however, her situation wasn’t as horrendous as it first looked. Although, she awoke while I was carrying her to our reunion, and did speak some rather potent venom.”

Subaru: “You have my sympathy, she really is harsh with people outside her circle. It’s impressive you managed to talk her into this. How’d you do it?”

Otto: “One of the terms for securing her cooperation would be that I do not tell you that.”

Otto put his hand to his mouth, indicating that he is not going to talk.

Subaru’s lips pursed, eager to say something, but he determined speech would not get Otto to bend, so he promptly abandoned any further questions. If some vaguely harsh questioning was enough to get him talking, then he wouldn’t have risked his life going along with Subaru’s practically-nonsense plots.

Stubborn, a nuisance, and a great friend.

Subaru: “Crap!”

Otto: “Ow! Why am I getting hit!?”

Subaru: “Just be quiet.”

Subaru shoved Otto’s shoulders, paying no heed to his complaints before turning to face Emilia. He found that Patrasche had appeared beside her at some unknown point, and was pressing her snout into Emilia’s silver hair, the two of them smiling.

Subaru: “What’s this? Since when’ve you been such good friends?”

Emilia: “Some things happened while you were sleeping... and she really helped me. She’s reeeeeeally amazing.”

Subaru: “Right? She’s my pride and my partner, no joke. Yeah, Patrasche?”

Subaru approached and reached out to stroke her back. But the dragon dodged away before his fingertips were able to touch her, avoiding his hand.

Subaru: “Ugh!?”

Patrasche: “———”

The swing of her tail struck Subaru in the ass, leaving him half in-tears from pain as he jumped. He looked at her, questioning and defiant, to see her sharp eyes had sharpened further and to find her growling in displeasure at him, with her neck stooped low.

Otto: “Would you like a translation?”

Subaru: “No, even I can figure this one out.”

Subaru replies to Otto’s considerations with a shake of his head. He gives a small sigh.

Subaru: “—It’s «don’t make me worry», isn’t it?”

Otto: “Additionally, «don’t get carried away, I’m not doing it again, imagine what it’s like for me». But with a «yes, fine you can come in» nuance amidst that anger.”

Subaru: “Seriously, what’s with your heroine power? Are you throwing your name into the heroine race?”

Subaru smiled wryly and reached out. This time his fingers did touch Patrasche’s tough hide. She closed her eyes, accepting it as if inevitable. Subaru’s gratitude for the tolerant dragon was unending. Patrasche’s assistance in the Garfiel fight, having provided the decisive blow, occurred as a factor of her incredible and unhesitating trust.

As always, flimsy Subaru needed to indebt himself to many people every time he wanted to scale any mountain. Would the day in which he would settle those debts ever come? He doubted it, but it had to do be done.

Subaru: “So what’s going on with that conquered and debt-producing mountain, Garfiel?”

Emilia: “Garfiel’s recovering, he’s over there. But it might be better not to interrupt.”

Subaru: “Interrupt?”

Subaru tilted his head, and Emilia puts her finger to her lips.

Emilia: “Ram’s looking after him right now, you see.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Ram: “Are you awake, Garf?”

What Garfiel saw once he woke up was the face of a familiar girl. This was someone he wanted to see upon waking, someone he did not want to see upon waking. It was a complicated feeling.

But he could not deny that his chest had begun to beat faintly faster. Garfiel snorted and—

Garfiel: “Yeah... I’m up.”

Ram: “I see. Then go ahead and move. This has gone for too long, my legs are numb.”

Garfiel: “Agh!”

On the instant they established communication, Garfiel was expelled from the soft touch, his head falling to the ground. He had not expected a kind reaction, but that kind of coldness did hurt, nonetheless. And even more so at a time his pride was already wounded, and his crush was the one being icy.

He rubbed his head and gazed bitterly at Ram. She sat on the grass with her legs folded, patting at the spot where Garfiel’s head had been resting, her thighs. She responded to Garfiel’s gaze with a displeased “What?”.

Garfiel: “It’s nothin’... Same as always, yer a lady without a scrap of kindness.”

Ram: “If the moment requires kindness and the recipient merits kindness, then of course I would be kind. The fact I’m not being kind right now means this isn’t one of those moments.”

Garfiel: "...My amazin' self has that merit?"

Ram: "It's completely clear what you want me to say. You must not be like Barusu, Garf. If you wish to know what a woman truly feels, devise a cleverer scheme."

Garfiel lowered his gaze, his head springing right back up because of Ram's poke to his forehead. That shock had hit just above the scar Garfiel always found himself touching. And accordingly, his fingers brushed across the scar on his brow as he sighed.

Garfiel: "Thinkin' back... yer the one who gave me this injury."

Ram: "—I had to act frantically to settle your shenanigans. Do you think I did something as drastic as knocking your face into the stone because I wanted to?"

Garfiel: "Feels th'same as today as ya were beatin' me down, ya were smilin' like crazy..."

Ram: "My life is not unlimited. If I'm merely doing something that I'm reluctant to do, smiling and convincing myself it's enjoyable is a better option. Desperate measures."

Garfiel: "How 'bout thinkin of the mental scars that leaves for th'guy who gets his head cracked open, oy!"

Ram's reply was a mere sigh, her expression looking even more bored.

Of course. She would never accept she was wrong, and her stubborn mentality was one to never bend. She was proud, noble, tough, and tenacious. That was why Garfiel admired her and desired her.

Garfiel: "...Do you have any wounds, Ram?"

Ram: "Who knows. I have had Emilia-sama mend the conspicuous injuries, but it might be impossible to remove all of them entirely. How are you going to take responsibility for them?"

Garfiel: "Make you my wife..."

Ram: "You'll fail. Think of a different method— And that was audacious of you, Garf, daring to abandon the losing side."

Garfiel: “———”

Ram’s harsh gaze silenced Garfiel. The anger in her eyes was condemnation of the fact he had been lenient right at the end of the battle. Garfiel neglected to finish off both Ram, defeated, and Otto, upside-down in the shrubs. Indeed, he had elected to let them live, possibly sully the glory of the fight.

But Garfiel was completely unable to brandish his claws at the unconscious girl. Even if he disregarded his feelings for her, even if he disregarded other different and varied factors, he surely would not have managed to do it.

After all, he lacked the brand of courage most important for a warrior.

Ram: “At the last minute... you avoided my last cast of magic. Impressive”

Garfiel: “...It’s not like I was tryin’ to. When I was beaten down ‘n started reversin’ my transformation, I got this menacin’ feelin’. Then my body moved quicker than my head. That’s all.”

The forest’s Mana had been assembled, and Ram cast the most advanced Wind Magic in existence. And, rather than think, Garfiel left everything to his survival instinct and evaded the blades of wind. The invisible gale passed his skin just a few millimeters away, and utilizing that sensation, he managed to flee from its range with rather artistic dodges, as the attack ravaged every tree in sight down to nothing.

Once he returned to the scene, he found Ram and Otto collapsed. Were Garfiel a true warrior, he would have boasted of his survival and taken their lives. But Garfiel could not do it, needing to surrender himself to his animal blood to take a life.

Garfiel: “I’m——”

Ram: “———”

——Not a warrior. Merely someone who puts on the airs of a warrior, spoke empty threats, a fake.

He had held himself to the stubborn belief that even a fake like him, provided he had the power, could subdue everything and protect those he wished to protect without taking any lives. But his ideas were largely invalidated. He believed he possessed enough strength to defeat even great groups of outsiders.

But, in reality, he had lost to merely three people and a ground dragon. And all those people were practically non-combatants, each with its own reason.

If a hostile warrior were to arrive at Sanctuary, they would have destroyed Garfiel easily. That was all he amounted to, after running his pompous mouth on being Sanctuary's barrier.

—He thought many things over, in that deficient head of his.

Throughout that battle, and even outside of battle, Garfiel had never stopped using his assuredly poor brain. What strategy would be the best? What action would best help everyone? Was there a way to do this without hurting anybody? And even if someone were to be hurt, it was fine if only him got injured.

All those days he had spent holding these beliefs and doing his best had been entirely superficial, and amounted to an act that only concealed his weakness.

Ram: "Garf."

Garfiel: "——"

Ram: "I'm going to give you a word of advice. Listen well."

Garfiel: "—Yeah."

Still looking down, Garfiel nodded. What words would Ram, his crush, shower upon him? Her usual statements were harsh, but she had probably never truly washed her hands of him.

Ram's personality was the kind to be soft to people inside her circle. And although their relationship was not without its faults, she and Garfiel had known each other for a long time, and she considered him as part of that count.

But her hostility was clear now. Probably, he was not included in that category anymore. Her imminent announcement would be Ram's parting with Garfiel in earnest, and—

Ram: "Garf, you are stupid, so thinking is utterly pointless. A waste of time. Otherwise said, a waste of life."

Garfiel: "...Eh?"

Ram: “You are the one who said it. Garf, when you acted without thinking, you dodged my magic. That is exactly the case. You may not have noticed it, but when you discard thinking you are considerably stronger in fights. Garf is strong, but the barefaced idiot is considerably stronger.”

Unable to comprehend what he was hearing, Garfiel’s eyes widened. While he expected her to find him useless, her statements were aiming somewhere entirely unanticipated.

Ram: “I don’t mean you should abandon all rationality and transform. In fact, I will mention your transformation makes you even weaker compared to when you’re thinking. You become a bigger target, and your weapons are slow. Stay in human form, focus on your opponent, and fight without thinking.”

Garfiel: “Th—th’hell’s this!? Since when was this the topic of—”

Ram: “This is important— Because now you are going to fight on many occasions as an ally to me and Emilia-sama.”

Garfiel: “———!!”

Emotion clogged Garfiel’s throat. His face flashed red, his sharp fangs clicking as he spoke.

Garfiel: “Buzz off! Ya play ‘round with me, make an enemy of me, crush my ideas, ‘n yer still forgivin’ me, ‘n tellin’ me to forgive ya!?”

Ram: “Don’t be stupid. I’m not forgiving you, I’m demanding you serve us. If we forgive you and our standings become equal, we will need to make requests to gain your cooperation. Stop being foolish. We are the victors and you are the loser. I don’t forgive you and so I am ordering you. Do you understand?”

Garfiel: “That’s all messed up!”

Garfiel bared his fangs as he stood up. His body swayed for an instant, but considering most his wounds had been healed, it was not a problem. Realizing the fact that he had been healed, further humiliation clawed at his heart.

Garfiel: “I accept I lost! Because I did! But that doesn’t mean I’m gonna back down! I lost, ya got me, got it! But my amazin’ self’s still alive ‘n kickin’! If ya were really gonna move things along without askin’ me, then what ya shouldda done was kill me! The second you didn't do that, it's the exact second yer cowardice's the same as mine!"

Ram: "That is carriage before ground dragon¹⁶⁴. If we let you die when we need your strength, that contradicts our goals."

Garfiel: "But, I—!!"

Ram: "Annoying sniveling!"

Before Garfiel could roar in anger, Ram got to her feet and howled. Her cerise eyes hosted fury as she glared at Garfiel.

Menacing. Overwhelmed, Garfiel ended up closing his mouth shut.

Ram: "You lost. You have lost. Then act like the loser you are and heed the commands of the victor. How wretched must you be in presence of a woman you like, flaunting your absurd and girlish temperament as a sore loser to your own satisfaction, Garf? The other party's punishment becomes your own the moment you lose. All you have changed is the aim of your idiotic barking."

Garfiel: "Uh... ah."

Her statements were spot-on. Garfiel could not manage a single word edgewise.

Before the fight, he had imposed certain issues onto other people. Now he had lost, and he was imposing his own weakness. It proved nothing had changed about his wretchedness, yelling at whatever he deemed weak. He had stopped yelling about the outside which he thought weak, and had started yelling about his own self, who he had to acknowledge as weak instead.

Garfiel: "But what am I meant t'do!? Laugh like a stupid idiot 'n stand in line with all of ya!? I can't do that! I accept I lost... But that doesn't mean I accept yer words as bein' right!"

That was not a dodge, but Garfiel's true thoughts. He acknowledged his loss. His opponents being numerous was an irrelevant matter. Were he to start venting why he had lost, he would never end.

¹⁶⁴ Not literal translation, but who doesn't like to localize expressions? Original is "cart before horse" (本末転倒).

The problem was nothing instilling in him firm conviction in Subaru's claims had sprouted in the depths of Garfiel's heart. Ultimately, the ideas he had been convinced of until this point remained unchanged, and even if someone demanded he fight alongside them, he could not simply nod in agreement.

Garfiel: "What am I meant to do, with this, half-way situation..."

Ram: "If you do not wish to remain half-hearted, then all you need to do is prove you are moving."

Garfiel: "...What?"

His breathing still ragged, Garfiel looked at Ram. Her expression had regained its usual composure as she faced Garfiel straight in the eye. In her eyes, he saw the reflection of his own feeble face. He would have preferred to look away, but Ram's gaze did not permit this of him.

Ram: "I do not know what Barusu said, but I can almost imagine it. And so, Garf... you should confirm it for yourself."

Garfiel: "Confirm it myself... confirm what?"

Ram: "Whether you are capable of changing, or whether you are still a petrified, whimpering child."

Garfiel finally recognized what she was telling him. And the instant he understood it, his heartbeat assaulted him, thumping at an unprecedented speed. Cold sweat streamed down his back, sticking to him, spreading inside him. His pulse grew wild, and a ringing was reverberating endlessly in his skull.

This was his trauma, its barbed chains constricting his heart, trauma great enough to bring these abnormalities all across his body.

He felt a chill and looked behind him. The Tomb loomed there, same as ever.

—Confirm. Something, in there.

Even supposing he went in, what could he confirm? What new answer did Ram expect him to find there?

Nothing would change. Nothing could change. But why, even knowing this, was Garfiel failing to assert "I won't go", and instead wavering between "I will" and "I won't"?

Garfiel: "...What'll I learn by goin' in?"

He was getting on board with the idea, completely so.

He did not believe anything would change, but he also desired to confirm it. He stiffened in terror, his heart wailing in rejection, but his soul howling.

He wanted to confirm. He needed to confirm. Confirm whether the bloody shrieks of the boy who had been blocking his path, whether the assertions of Natsuki Subaru, were correct. Confirm whether everything he had lived up to that point had been mistaken.

Ram: "You look resolved."

The chattering of his teeth, and the unrest of his heart, had calmed. All signs of his cold sweat were gone. Garfiel wordlessly turned to face Ram.

Garfiel could not tell what were the expectations she had put in him, with her stern words of encouragement. And perhaps Ram was not focusing on whether Garfiel would ally with them.

They had known each other for a long time. He was able to understand some things in vague terms.

What Ram sought was not for Garfiel to join them. What she sought, was that Garfiel would reach a conclusion on how to live his life. Everything else was secondary.

"She's a good lady, someone to be thankful for", thought Garfiel.

Ram: "Don't worry, Garf."

Perhaps unsettled by Garfiel's silence, a rare warmth peeked through in Ram's tone. She gave Garfiel's bare shoulders a light tap.

Ram: "If anything frightening enough to cry happens, I will comfort you— Our relationship goes back a long way, after all.

Arc 4 Chapter 116 - With Grandmother, With Mother, With Sister; As Grandson, As Son, As Brother

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 8 “Love Letter”, Parts 3-5

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 223

Ram: “Apologies for interrupting when you are motivated, Emilia-sama, but Garf is entering the Tomb first.”

That was Ram’s first line after finishing her chat and returning to the group with Garfiel in tow. Upon hearing that, Subaru’s eyes widened, and Emilia and Otto were also surprised.

Subaru: “Garfiel’s doing the Trial... Seriously?”

Ram: “Most seriously of seriously. Hey, Garf?”

Ram nodded and glanced up to Garfiel, standing beside her. Their height difference was not that significant, but Garfiel was slightly taller than Ram regardless. He stuck his fingers in his bangs matted with dry blood, and averted his gaze so he would not enter the conversation.

However, Ram grabbed that unengaged ear of his and yanked it.

Ram: “Are you listening, Garf? What nerve you have, ignoring us.”

Garfiel: “Aagh! Daaaaaaa!?! Oy, Ram!? My amazin’ ear’s barely hangin’ on to my head right now! It’s seconds from comin’ off... it’s bleedin’!”

Ram: “It seems that introspection you had after that beatdown from us isn’t working. I’ll mention now that our side still has Emilia-sama left, who has not exhausted her stamina in the slightest. You do recognize what will happen if you rebel?”

Emilia: “I—I... wasn’t thinking to do anything violent...”

Everyone was drowning in wounds and sitting at the limit of exhaustion— except for Emilia, who had not participated in the fight and remained in top condition. They had just ended a battle where the whole point was to not get Emilia involved, and yet Ram’s backbone instantly using her to start making threats was terrifying.

Garfiel: “Yeah, yeah, got it. We start fightin’ again here and my amazin’ self ain’t gonna win. Divine Protection of Earth Spirits’s given me plenty of my strength back... but it ain’t enough for a fight.”

Subaru: “That’s a relief to hear. I’d seriously rather not get into any more fistfights with you. Thought I was gonna die. You’re second or third place in this month’s rankings.”

Otto: “Natsuki-san, just how many slaughters have you squeaked through? It’s scary.”

Subaru recollected on his fistfight with Garfiel and shivered. Otto envisioned the grisliness of the scene and shivered too.

This ranked in second or third place for his experiences in almost dying— but considering that he had also actually died, perhaps the danger he had faced here was not really that serious.

Garfiel: “...How am I the second or third?”

Subaru: “Well, that’s where you are. Second or third. If we go outside, there’ll be more of it.”

Garfiel: “Ha! Yer smooth talk ain’t gonna bait me. «Derderde lurks in the shadows of quick riches», as they say.”

Garfiel snorted away Subaru’s challenge, and traced his fingers over the scar on his forehead. His sharp gold eyes wondered towards the sight behind Subaru and the others— at the Tomb, looming.

Garfiel: “Persuasion, ‘n actual force... Still can’t believe ya used both. My amazin’ self’s makin’ a decision after lookin’ at it with my own eyes.”

Emilia: “What are you deciding?”

Emilia asked Garfiel, lowering her voice.

He looked at her, and she looked back at him head-on. That might have been the first time they had ever faced each other in earnest. Emilia was being the recipient of Garfiel's horrifically violent gaze, but even so, her amethyst eyes did not waver in the least.

Perhaps seeing something in the eyes of the other, both smiled. Garfiel clicked his fangs, while Emilia's fingers reached for her chest, before seemingly remembering something and stopping.

Seeing that, Garfiel reached for his left shoulder.

Garfiel: "Gh, haaa...!"

The blue crystal protruding from his shoulder came out with a dull noise. For a moment, blood ran down Garfiel's right shoulder, but he forced the flow to stop by tightening his muscles. Emilia's eyes widened at this action as Garfiel lightly cleaned the crystal and tossed it to her.

Emilia: "Ah, oh..."

Garfiel: "Just take it. It's probably right for you to be the one holdin' on to this thing."

Emilia promptly caught the crystal, looking at it while Garfiel spoke bluntly.

She accepted Garfiel's statements, while the brilliance of the crystal in her hands caused her to gulp. The jewel glowed dimly, strobing, almost as it seemed overjoyed Emilia had caught it.

Subaru crossed his arms as he watched on from aside. "Still the same even though he can't speak", he thought.

Emilia: "Thank you, Garfiel."

Garfiel: "I just chucked away somethin' annoyin' for me, that's all. No reason for ya t'thank me."

Garfiel looked up at the sky with no particular intention. Tangerine hues crept across the scene, and night would soon arrive. Before long, the Trial would be ready to start.

Garfiel: "—I'm gonna be checking. Whether my amazin' self is in the wrong, or you are."

Garfiel's shoulders sliced the wind as he turned around. His path led him towards the Tomb— that nightmarish place which had carved abhorrent memories into him in childhood.

After all this time, what would he see there this time?

Subaru: "Hey, Garfiel."

A call from behind stopped Garfiel, who was supposedly determined. He clicked his tongue and glanced behind him, to find Subaru is the one who had halted him, his hand raised.

Garfiel: "What?"

Subaru: "I mean, not trying to rain on your parade or anything. But seeing as there's still some time before the Trial starts..."

While entirely raining on Garfiel's parade, Subaru scratched his head. It looked like he was having difficulty saying something. Garfiel clicked his fangs to urge Subaru on, who then sighed to this encouragement.

Subaru: "At the very least, please change your clothes. You are in only a loincloth that's ready to fall off any second, there's a line for tawdry here and you've crossed it."

Barbarian style with the breeze tickling his privates.

A vein pulsed on Garfiel head. Ram sighed in astonishment.

Ram: "What a tawdry episode."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—After getting dressed and entering the Tomb, Garfiel sensed he had met the conditions for the Trial.

The air was damp within the stone structure. A chilly breeze blew past, carrying the scent of dust, making Garfiel grimace. His nose was far too keen, and the stench from the enclosed chamber was an assault to his senses.

Garfiel: “Don’t wanna be stayin’ ‘round here too long.”

His mutter echoed down the corridor. Nothing replied.

He repeatedly felt firm ground beneath his feet, as he intruded deeper and deeper into the Tomb. Unknowingly, Garfiel noticed his pulse had accelerated.

He would challenge the Trial, and he would see its results by himself. He was ready for that. Yet, he was unable to calm down, because the memory of the Trial, for Garfiel, was one which evoked intense and irremovable dread.

His heart insisted that experiencing it again would make something change.

What the hell about Garfiel would change from witnessing that debacle again? He had never forgotten it for even an instant, in the first place. The vivid memory had been burned into his brain far too vividly.

What would be accomplished by seeing it again? Wouldn’t it reinforce that memory further?

Garfiel: “...Pathetic. I’m here because that’s what I wanna check.”

Garfiel mocked himself as he came up with untenable justifications, for his intent to flee. He could agree with Ram’s scolding and derision of him and his girlishness. He had never wanted to know or to realize he was such a cowardly man.

—What would he do if he were the kind of man who would submit himself to frailty and girlishness?

Garfiel: “———”

His feet stopped atop the stone-paved path. He focused his attention on the ground below him. A warm wave of power coursed up from his feet, the gift of the earth to Garfiel and his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits. He may have been wounded, brutalized, and exhausted, but merely contacting the ground was enough to restore Garfiel’s body, his strength building up.

Never mind his state instants after being beaten, now he had had a short rest, he was at forty percent of his top capacity. He should have been capable of destroying the Tomb if he wanted to.

And Subaru and Ram and the others would not have been able to stop Garfiel's destruction. It would utterly eliminate the point of their spirited efforts towards defeating Garfiel. He was able to eliminate the point, right now. Had they been so stupid that they had not considered that?

Garfiel: "Fuckin'..."

Of course they had. Emilia was probably ignorant to the concept of doubting people, and Otto was probably missing a few important screws, but never mind them. Subaru and Ram, calculating as they were, would surely not have overlooked the possibility.

They were thinking that even if Garfiel were to regain his strength, he would not destroy the Tomb. Did they think he was too cowardly to do it, or did they just trust him? Garfiel could tell which option was it.

Would the solution to that arrive after he defeated the Trial too?

Garfiel: "...Stupid."

With that, Garfiel resumed walking. Thinking about complicated stuff was not his specialty. His poorness at using his head remained the same, both in his daily life and during battle. He frantically worked his brain regardless because someone, long ago, had told him to.

Ram: "Think more while you are fighting, Garf. It'd make me happy if you did."

Garfiel: "—Eh."

He remembered who had told him to think while living. Which was why he had so earnestly, with silly sincerity, remained engrossed to the idea.

The exact person who had told Garfiel to think while fighting had ended up informing him he was better at fighting while neglecting to think. That was crossing the line for absurdity.

Garfiel: "That's bullshit, oy... Huh?"

A smile welled up inside him. Just when he attempted to stifle the smile dead, Garfiel noticed the end of the corridor.

A rectangular space welcomed him. The Trial room.

Pale ghostly lights phased the chamber in from darkness. Garfiel stepped inside, his stress somewhat calmed, and looked at the stone door at the back of the room. That door would open after the three Trials were cleared. He did not know if that was the truth, though, as he had never seen it open before. Nothing gave any indication of what was inside, either.

If he remained here, standing still and waiting, the Trial would start.

Garfiel: “—Eh?”

Garfiel crossed his arms, bored as he glanced around the chamber, and his brows rose. A sense of incongruity about that room sneaked into Garfiel’s nocturnal vision. He strained his eyes in an attempt to confirm exactly what it was, and—

???: “—First, you must face your past.”

A voice.

Instantaneously, his vision wavered, his consciousness blurring. The past was here.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “I didn’t think at all that you’d be coming here again— It makes me feel very happy.”

Once his consciousness awakened, Garfiel realized he was standing in a forest.

He turned his head, to see the sight of a familiar woods— but compared to the scenery Garfiel knew, those woodlands were somewhat younger. Garfiel was able to easily notice a few years’ difference, being that it was a place he interacted with daily.

It was the past.

And he was in a dream, challenging the Trial.

After smoothly accepting these facts, Garfiel checked his current state. His limbs were there. Everything from his neck up, eyes and nose and ears existed without an issue. He opened his mouth and bit down hard, for his fangs to click like high-pitched blades.

He was fine, without problems. Actually, it felt like the injuries he had sustained before entering the Tomb had been healed.

???: “Your injuries from reality aren’t carrying over because this place only exists in your mind. If you suffered a wound serious enough to influence your mind, then it would not heal even in the dream. This one’s already been proved, for example if someone missing an arm in real life was invited to this world, their missing arm would not heal and...”

Garfiel: “Shut it with yer long-winded blabberin’. Can’t ya tell I’m ignorin’ ya?”

???: “Indeed I can. But even so I just have to speak with you. I’d sort of like it if you could respect these feelings of delight I have for our reunion after such a long time.”

A woman with a doll-like smile stood opposite to Garfiel. She was a woman of pure white hair and skin, dressed from top to bottom with clothing resembling a black funeral dress. Her smile was alluring enough to enchant any man, but facing her was enough to tell that it was completely empty.

That appearance was yet another thing which had not changed an inch from what he remembered.

Garfiel: “My amazin’ self’s grown up, but you haven’t changed a bit.”

Girl: “Because I am very unfortunately deceased. Dead, with only my soul stuck in the world. No matter how many years pass, it is not the same for me as it is for the living. This is a pretty sentimental topic, isn’t it? It’s not really like you.”

Garfiel: “«Like me», now those are words only people who know me real well got any business sayin’. Our meetin’ happened ages ago ‘n we only did it once. It’s not like we talked ‘bout anythin’ important either.”

Girl: “Perhaps that’s exactly how I look to you. But I have to wonder if that means the time I’ve spent looking at you has been equal.”

Garfiel: “—Tch.”

He knew he couldn't outwit her in conversation. While withstanding the urge to click his tongue, Garfiel glared at the Witch standing there without a speck of ill will on her face— Echidna.

Perhaps acting as an inspector for the Trial, Echidna had accompanied Garfiel like this on the previous time he had seen the past as well. Not out of any human concern for him as the Trial brutalized his heart, but to make sure that she did not miss the events unfolding, out of a gross kind of curiosity.

Losing will to speak with her any further, Garfiel looked at the forest. If this reproduction of the past had already started, then it was only a matter of time until the actors arrived.

Garfiel did not have the slightest intention to delight this Witch that was delighted with mere conversation.

Echidna: “So cold.”

Echidna accepted even this attitude of Garfiel as something pleasant, as she took her place beside him, stroking her white hair.

While he was watching her from aside, the change happened.

Garfiel: “———”

Faced with a scene he supposedly had known would be coming, Garfiel swallowed his breath.

The edge of the forest, or rather, the dividing line for the barrier which delineated Sanctuary's inside and outside. Just being around the barrier was enough for those trapped within to nearly go unconscious and experience the unpleasant feeling of having their very existence disturbed.

Near the boundaries of this barrier, four silhouettes appeared. One was Ryuzu with her long pink hair, her appearance identical to her present one. Another was a girl approximately ten-years-old, with beautiful, silky blonde hair— Frederica.

And standing opposite to Ryuzu and Frederica was a woman, her blonde hair tied in a ponytail, her face gentle. In her hands she cradled an infant, a blond child, with nasty-looking eyes.

Garfiel: “Ah... M—Mom...”

The instant he sighted the woman and recognized who she is holding, a feeble sound escaped his lips. But his call for his mother did not reach any of the four.

—As was natural. Nobody could ever interfere with the past.

Echidna: “Even if you try to reach out, you will not touch her. Nothing you say will make her smile back. I know it sounds ridiculous coming from me, but I sympathize with how you are being forced to watch something cruel.”

The Witch’s sentiments, which made him want to shout, “Don’t you goddamn talk!”.

But the eyes of the Witch as she watched Garfiel, his face twisted in anguish, hosted no malice. This scene was not something the Witch had prepared with malicious intentions.

How would the challenger’s regrets manifest, how would the challenger face them, and what would be the outcome of it all? This natural disaster sought nothing but these results.

Garfiel: “———”

Garfiel trembled. The four were having a conversation.

Their statements, their words, the tone of their voices, none of that was reaching Garfiel. They were opening their mouths, making sound. But despite travelling through the air and vibrating against Garfiel’s eardrums, no definite meaning could be understood.

Anguish arose on Ryuzu’s face. Frederica bit her lip in an attempt to keep herself from crying. Their mother looked worried, while Garfiel in her arms smiled happily.

This painful scene was not accompanied by sound, because it was Garfiel’s memory.

Young Garfiel had not stored the content of this conversation in his memory. And so, the words they were speaking did not reach present Garfiel.

But this memory is one that had been trapped by his heart. The scene had been reproduced, the performance playing on as if it had the objective to rile him up.

Echidna: “I wonder what they could be saying. Can you figure anything?”

Garfiel: “Stop talkin’ to me— Yer just gonna give some stupid answer anyway.”

Considering what would happen after that, he could figure out what they were saying. His mother was attempting to leave to the outside world, while Ryuzu and Frederica were trying to convince her to stay. Young Garfiel was unable to participate in the conversation, merely being held by his mom and basking in that joy.

Garfiel: “—Gaaaah!”

An unbearable urge rose within Garfiel, leading him to step forth. Echidna’s brows rose as Garfiel lumbered over to the four. He stood right beside them, but neither of them noticed him. He gazed straight at his sister, shorter than him, Ryuzu, unchanged, and himself and his mother.

Cradled by his mother, young Garfiel smiled guilelessly. It pissed him off. That guy did not know what would be coming next, he was not even qualified to participate in the conversation to convince his mother to stay, just smiling there.

How to quantify the regret and despair that had come of the fact he merely sat there, smiling?

Garfiel: “Aagh! Gaaah! Aaaaaaghhhhh!!”

He swung his arm up, his claws ripping through the air. He wanted to stab his claws into the infant’s happy face and overwrite it with despair. He wanted to make him know how imbecilic his decision was.

But his claws passed through the infant’s face, and through the arms of his mother as she cradles him.

He could stomp the ground and use his Divine Protection to try and send them flying, but nothing would result. The swings of his arms grew larger, the phantom of his mother was wrapped up in this attempted destruction, but no change had occurred at all.

Garfiel: “Why! Am I! Bein’ shown this shit!!”

He moved his arm up fruitlessly and struck the ground. But this ruin did not transmit to the world of memory, which remained sternly as it was before.

Unable to vent his anger or make the past disappear, his voice shaking, Garfiel turned around and bared his fangs at the Witch.

Garfiel: "It's the same! It ain't changed at all! Nothing's changing 'bout how mom didn't stay, or 'bout what happened to her after! Are you satisfied now, eh!?"

Echidna: "You are free to messily throw attacks around however you want, but don't you think it's slightly extraordinarily selfish to blame me for this? It's definitely not a mistake that the past is unfurling because of what I intended... But you are the one who, knowing what this place was, came back here. If you were anticipating for something to change, then the one you should reprimand for its failure to change isn't me. It's you."

Garfiel: "Me?"

Echidna: "Indeed. This place has not changed because you have not changed. You cannot accept the past differently from before because you cannot accept change in yourself. If you accept yourself to change, or elect not to change, then you will be capable of overcoming the Trial. And actually, there was a boy who elected for change, and did overcome his past."

Garfiel could not manage a single word in response as Echidna told him of a previous conqueror.

It was easy for him to disregard it as just Echidna pulling the wool over his eyes. But if that was not the case, then— the moment he thought of it, Garfiel knew fear.

Someone had overcome their past before.

The Sanctuary has not been freed. This person who overcame their past had not managed to conquer the following Trials. But even still, presuming they had overcome their past—

Garfiel: "N—no... ya can't trick me! Ya need to have demi-human blood to be qualified to challenge the Trial! It ain't possible anyone thinner than a half-blood that other than me or sis has come to Sanctuary before! Meanin' anyone qualified's still in Sanctuary! And this guy who took the Trial and beat their past doesn't..."

—Exist. Garfiel hesitated on the final word of his assertion.

The Witch's provocations messed with him, and just when he came close to doubting his own thoughts, the facts to refute her came flying at him. But was he truly correct?

The Witch smiled somewhat happily. She was not welcoming the detection of her lies, nor was she welcoming Garfiel's counterargument. That expression was one of waiting for something that would tickle her curiosity more intensely.

Echidna: "This guy who beat it doesn't what?"

From the bare-faced tone of her question and from her attitude, Garfiel sensed it. Echidna was looking for something. Waiting to see whether, from the information that Garfiel himself had presented, he would or would not reach the solution.

And then Garfiel realizes. Just who the Witch, who Echidna, was talking about.

Garfiel: "No goddamn way..."

Garfiel had spoken of the Qualification to challenge the Tomb. But there was an exception.

The Witch had not stated this directly, and so it was entirely Garfiel's speculation. But most likely, being an Apostle to the Witch of Greed qualified someone to challenge the Trial simultaneously. Garfiel knew only one person to whom this might have applied to. And had he not told Garfiel before about it already?

—I have taken the Trial, and seen my past.

Garfiel: "But, he said he couldn't overcome the past, he said himself he couldn't overcome the Trial..."

Echidna: "Don't you think saying those things would avoid unneeded conflict? Or that unwanted things would happen if people knew he overcame the Trial, maybe?"

Garfiel: "Shut it, I ain't talkin' t'you. Don't butt in!"

Echidna's words confused Garfiel's brain, his thoughts in turmoil. It was correct to acknowledge that he, Natsuki Subaru, had challenged the Trial. He knew the Trial meant facing the past long before Garfiel had mentioned anything.

Garfiel recollected on Subaru back at the time he had said he failed to overcome it. Garfiel had been so shocked to learn Subaru possessed the Qualifications that he had inadvertently ended the conversation before asking what he really should have asked, but—

Garfiel: “—Hk.”

Subaru's expression back then had not been the face of a man battered by his unconquerable past.

He did look frustrated for failing to achieve something, but that had not been the look of a man harboring a personal problem. That look was one which Garfiel had gotten to witness every day, reflected on the water's surface as he went to bathe.

Subaru's bearing as he attacked Garfiel did not carry the visage, nor the voice, nor the assertions of a man who had been stalled by his past.

Garfiel: “He... overcame, his past? You can overcome your past?”

Echidna: “Just for hypothesis, supposing a scene in which he gave you some kind of pompous lecture really happened, wouldn't it make sense something made him capable of preaching such a thing?”

Garfiel's hazy mind thought back on his exchange of fists with Subaru.

Subaru and Garfiel both had been hitting their limits for staying conscious. He could not remember the entirety of what Subaru yelled back then. No, he could not give up. Right here, right now, he needed to remember those words and question himself.

What had he been told? What had been yelled at him?

His past, his stagnation, his immobility, his barrier, his Sanctuary, his family.

What would happen to the hopeless, to those who had stopped moving? Hadn't he said that Garfiel was free to start something as long as he wanted to start?

???: “—Are you sure you want to go?”

Suddenly, a familiar voice hit Garfiel's ear.

But that was a voice which should not be audible. Because that was not the voice of someone who was able to interfere with Garfiel here, and not the voice of someone Garfiel was able to interfere with here.

???: “Yes, I am leaving. I’m sorry for the inconvenience to you, Ryuzu-sama.”

Ryuzu: “Ya don’t have to worry about that. The problem’s how the kids are gonna feel.”

The voices were the familiar ones of his family, and the unfamiliar ones of his family. The sounds matched Ryuzu’s movements and her sour expression, and the movements of his mother who was facing her.

For the first time in his life, Garfiel was hearing his mother’s voice.

Garfiel: “———”

He swallowed his breath as the scene robs his attention. His mother was gazing down lovingly at Garfiel in her arms, rocking him gently. Frederica grasped the hem of their mother’s skirt as she looked up at her, straining her voice.

Frederica: “M—Mother... I—I... I...”

Mother: “I’m sorry, Fuu. I know how it’s going to worry you.”

Frederica: “That’s okay. I will be fine. But, poor Garf...”

Mother: “Should I take him with me? But your mommy is clumsy. I’m sure he’d go through bad experiences. Fuu, you are my child, yet you are so dependable, so please look after him.”

Frederica, although sad, gave her goodbyes to their mother.

Garfiel did not know his sister had agreed to their mother’s departure from Sanctuary. Ryuzu, holding Frederica’s trembling shoulders, also looked as if she respected their mother’s decision.

Mother: “Gar-chan, your mommy will be coming back.”

Their mother lifted Garfiel up. Ignorant to his mother’s determination, he smiled cheerfully. She brought him close, kissing his forehead.

In the exact same spot where Garfiel now held a scar.

Mother: "I'll be coming back with your daddy. Until then, wait for me."

Garfiel: "—Hk!"

Her eyes filled with affection, her voice filled with compassion. To keep herself from losing that unforgettable memory, again and again, his mother kissed him.

Eventually, she handed young Garfiel to Ryuzu, cradled Garfiel firmly as she and his mother nodded to each other. His mother then hugged Frederica, showering her beloved daughter's forehead in a rain of kisses as well.

Garfiel: "—Haa, ahh. Uh, aaagh... Aaaaaaagh..."

As he witnessed this, Garfiel had fallen to his knees at some point in time. What in the world was he watching?

He did not know this. He had never seen this before.

This was supposed have been the memory from the time of his youth, back when he had known nothing, back when he had challenged the Trial, where he had seen something more hopeless, more garnished in crushing despair.

And even though he remembered it, even though he remembered that vivid feeling of being abandoned in that memory, he had believed that memory to be precious and cultivated his stubbornness.

All those empty threats, across his days up until now, which he had made to hide his sorrow and misery, peeled away, crumbled away, as something entirely different overwrote them.

What was this? This memory? Didn't his mother abandon him and his sister, leaving them to pursuit her own happiness? Hadn't she forsaken these nuisances from her life, determined to walk her own path?

It was completely backwards. His mother had deserted both himself and Frederica, and left. That was why Garfiel had been capable of shaping the existence that was Garfiel Tinsel with such conviction.

The second Garfiel would realize that it was all the illegitimate result of misdirected ideas, his secure barrier would amount to just a brittle dirt wall, his world collapsing beneath him.

Garfiel could not even stand any more, as his family's goodbyes reached their end.

His mother, reluctant to part, touched Frederica and Garfiel one last time, entrusting everything to Ryuzu as she picked up her bag and turned to exit the woods. She stopped many times along her path. Glanced back, at Frederica who was waving. Notices how Ryuzu had been holding Garfiel's hand, making him wave his goodbye to his mother, and she waved back.

She collected herself and again began to walk. Stopped. Glanced back, waved. Over and over, over and over and over and over, as his mom exits the forest—

Garfiel: “—Wha!?”

Just as he moved to stand up and follow her, his vision warped. The world was becoming devoid of its edges, and not entirely because of the teardrops swamping Garfiel's eyes. It was happening for a more clear-cut reason.

The edges of his vision was swarmed in white light, the forest disappearing.

It was like the end of the world. This unanticipated finale led Garfiel to turn towards the Witch behind him, and yell.

Garfiel: “Why! Why is it ending here! It hasn't reached the fundamental...”

Echidna: “No, it's over. There is no need to see anything further. It is not me who determined the dream as finished, but you. Congratulations, Garfiel. You've rewritten your past.”

Garfiel: “What are you...!? Stop messing with me! The part my amazin' self is most related to's after this!”

Echidna: “There is no need to see what comes next, and even supposing you have envisioned some idea of what does happen next, interfering with it is out of your scope.”

Garfiel: “Ah—”

“You cannot change the past”, was what the Witch was saying.

Garfiel's reddened face paled as he fell back to his knees.

He knew how his mother truly felt. And now this.

His mother's fate, having left this place, would not change?

His mother had left Sanctuary for Garfiel and Frederica's sake, in search of his father. But immediately after that journey had started, it was crushed, alongside his mother.

—Didn't just turn an already hopeless memory into something even more dismal?

Didn't a memory of despair piled upon despair just morph into one of hope crushed by hopelessness? What about himself was he supposed to change, with this?

Frederica: "Mother loved you and I both, Garf."

Garfiel raised his head up. Looking down at him as he kneeled was his sister, still young, looking at him. A supposedly blind past, incapable of interaction, was interacting with him.

Frederica: "Our Mother left Sanctuary for the sake of our family. Does that dissatisfy you?"

Garfiel: "Don't, mess with me! So what if we were loved! D—don't, shove u—undue memories onto me. I...!"

Frederica: "How much easier it was to be unloved."

In a tone of derision, young Frederica spoke towards Garfiel.

Their height difference was literally that of a child and an adult. But Frederica did not show the slightest care to his height, talking to him looking straight at him, with an expression suggesting her little brother was such a handful.

Frederica: "If you were allowed to believe your love was not reciprocated, you would be able to justify yourself."

Garfiel: "No!"

Frederica: "You love her, and she loves you... If you had discovered this, you would no longer be capable of justifying your refusal to go outside, and remain holed up in Sanctuary."

Garfiel: “No! No, no! And when ya don’t even know anythin’... What do you think happened to Mom!”

Frederica: “—Surely I would know.”

Garfiel left himself to his anger as he roared, and a shock hit him like a slap to the face. Frederica’s expression vanished. She looked at Garfiel, seemingly enduring some emotion.

—What did she just say?

Frederica: “Surely I would know. If we suppose Mother perhaps faced misfortune instantly after leaving Sanctuary... Surely that information would have reached me.”

Garfiel: “So what!?”

Frederica: “And surely you understand this information could not have reached you. You are no longer a child, Garf.”

Frederica knew what happened to their mother. And even Garfiel understood the reason as to she had been unable to tell young Garfiel that. Who could inform a young boy his mother had met a cruel demise?

Had he never peeped on the Trial in this Tomb, Garfiel would not have known. He knew because he had trampled over much consideration and kindness which had been trying not to let him find out.

Frederica: “In truth, you did remember that Mother loved you.”

Garfiel: “...”

Frederica: “You yourself wounded the spot where Mother had kissed you, where she had last touched you, in an attempt to pretend that it had not happened.”

His fingers touched his forehead scar. This wound did not exist on his brow when he was young.

He had sustained this injury right after he challenged the Trial. In a state of disarray, Garfiel had bashed his head open on the walls, on the floor, harming himself so greatly he suffered a permanent wound. This scar was his injury from back then. And the truth behind this scar was, surely, what Frederica had just said.

Frederica: "It's ending now."

Frederica whispered. Before he could realize it, the world had already nearly lost its shape. The forest was gone, as were his departing mother and Ryuzu. Not even the onlooking Witch was anywhere in sight, the world remaining with only the siblings, Frederica and Garfiel.

Frederica: "Even if you use wounds to conceal it, you cannot erase your past. Nor can you erase the fact that you were loved."

Garfiel: "What am I... meant to do?"

Garfiel asked this of Frederica, feebly.

Garfiel: "If Mom's end isn't changin', then that means the outside's still scary for me. Goin' out there, and nanna and everyone else havin' to go out there, scares me."

Frederica: "Must you really ask this of your small elder sister before you can figure any answer?"

Garfiel: "I know it's pathetic! But yer th'only one I can ask. C'mon, tell me... Sis, why did you..."

Frederica: "What is it that you wish to do, Garf?"

Interrupting him, Frederica tilted her head.

Garfiel's sentence stopped abruptly. What did he want to do? That was not what they were talking about. They were talking about what he should do, what did he need to do. That was what he was asking.

Frederica: "What is it that you wish to do, Garf?"

Looking somewhat exasperated, Frederica repeated the question. Garfiel swallowed his breath.

Garfiel: "I want to do, what people are looking for."

Frederica: "What people are looking for? Which people?"

Garfiel: "I wanna do what... what the people who need me are looking for from me."

Frederica: "Why is it that you feel this way?"

Illustration from Volume 13, coloring by Setowi (source)

Garfiel: "Because... they are the ones who made me remember."

"Remember what?", but Frederica did not voice that question. However, those eyes, the same gold as his, did ask the question.

Garfiel: "—That my mother loved me."

—The world of the dream shattered to dust, the past vanishing into the beyond.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Garfiel's expression as he left the Tomb looked like he had undergone exorcism, to Subaru.

Subaru had spent approximately an hour fidgeting outside the Tomb with his arms crossed, in waiting. The group had been anxious, never looking or speaking to each other, simply waiting in silence for whatever would happen.

Subaru: "So what's our plan if he goes back on his promise and destroys the Tomb?"

Albeit it had been intended as a joke in an attempt to ease the mood, Otto had replied with something incredibly inconsiderate to the situation, eating a dropkick from Ram, but generally speaking, it had been very quiet.

Ryuzu: "...Gar-bo."

Ryuzu had reunited with them, her expression anxious and hands linked as she looked restlessly at the Tomb.

The present Ryuzu was probably Theta, but regardless of which Ryuzu it is, they all cared about Garfiel dearly. There was that whole affair in which the five had ganged up to beat up Garfiel, and also that whole affair where Garfiel had had a complete change of heart and entered the Tomb. Both these events must have given Ryuzu more than a little shock to the heart.

Emilia looked at the Tomb in suspense as she stood beside Subaru.

While she would have been curious about Garfiel's attempt too, as was natural, once Garfiel exited the Tomb, it would be her turn to go inside.

The argument inside the Tomb, and the fight between Subaru and Garfiel afterwards. Subaru could not tell what kind of change those events had brought to her mental state. But her anxious expression was deeply steeped in concern for Garfiel, without an ounce of reluctance toward her own Trial. That was probably not a bad omen.

Otto: "—Ah!"

Subaru was immersed in those thoughts, when suddenly Otto pointed at the Tomb and spoke up.

"He's saying something without reading the mood again", thought Subaru as he grimaced, Ram clicking her knuckles. But this time it seemed their conclusions had been hasty ones.

Ryuzu: "Gar-bo!"

Ryuzu stood up and dashed for the Tomb.

Following her gaze, Subaru realized a silhouette had appeared at the Tomb's entrance.

Short blond hair, scar on his brow. A sharp gaze, canines like blades and lustrous. With a small frame and slouched posture, but nonetheless emitting a dreadful and imposing aura. Garfiel Tinsel.

Otto: "See, it's exactly what I said it'd— Eek!"

Recipient to a jab from Ram's knee, Otto went tumbling across the grass.

But without anyone raising the topic of Otto's suffering, they instead ran over to Garfiel. Subaru bounced up the stone stairway to reach him. Ryuzu had already arrived and was standing before Garfiel, mumbling what to say.

Ryuzu: "G—Gar-bo. Erm, I..."

Garfiel: "Don't go makin' a face that doesn't look like ya. Sorry for worryin' you."

Ryuzu: "Gar-bo."

With that blunt statement, Garfiel put his hand on small Ryuzu's head. Patting his grandmother's head was incredibly unscrupulous, but given their heights, it was natural for these two. And seeing as Ryuzu wasn't complaining about it, pointing it out would be beyond tasteless.

Ram: "How did it go, Garf?"

Ram came up the stairs behind Ryuzu and Subaru, and called out to Garfiel.

It had been Ram who had given Garfiel the direct incentive to challenge the Trial. Aware of the background circumstances, a shade of worry could be glimpsed in her expression. Something that had seldom happened in Subaru's presence.

Garfiel groaned in thought.

Garfiel: "Can't ya see the results with yer eyes? Gotta say I expected somethin' more."

Subaru: "For some reason that sounded like a middle schooler bragging about shoplifting, but if this is what you are saying... you did it?"

Garfiel: "—I'm thinkin' I've made my peace."

In response to Subaru, Garfiel exhales deeply through his nose. Everyone understood him instantly, but a different sentiment rose to the forefront.

Garfiel had overcome the Trial and had reached a conclusion about his past. That meant a step had been taken towards Sanctuary's liberation, proving the Trial was not unreasonable or impossible.

Subaru: "Alrightey then. You keep riding off that momentum and go for the other Trials too, and..."

Garfiel: "Piss off. The only Trial my amazin' self's takin's this one. It's not up to me to be doin' the others, yeah?"

Emilia: "Yes, you are right. The rest are up to me. Can't have that be taken away."

Garfiel glared at Emilia, who accepted the gaze directed straight at her.

Garfiel: "Witch's bein' an asshole as usual. Make sure to watch out."

Emilia: “Huh? You are giving me advice? Thank you. I’ll remember it well.”

That was Garfiel’s breed of ironic encouragement. Emilia accepted it while beautifully ignoring the sardonicism.

Garfiel looked utterly disappointed and, seeing that expression, Subaru’s cheeks relaxed into a smile—and this time, Garfiel’s gaze was directed to Subaru.

In front of Subaru, who’s brows shot up, Garfiel scratched his cheek.

Garfiel: “Uh, I need to, right... Yeah.”

Subaru: “What’s up? Being skittish doesn’t suit your character. You’re the type that just kills those hesitant or broody types, so we’ll do tribal play instead.”

Garfiel: “I ain’t got any idea what the hell yer sayin’, but I can tell yer makin’ fun of me, oy. Yer gettin’ yer teeth beat in... Aah, errrr, no, never mind.”

He brought up his arm, only to lower it without doing anything. Garfiel’s suspicious, or rather not-exactly-getting-to-the-point behavior made Subaru tilt his head. Then a smile appeared on Ram’s face, as if she understood everything.

Ram: “Garf.”

With that, she poked Garfiel in the hip. Garfiel sighed, shaking his head resignedly.

Garfiel: “It’s probably ‘cause of you that I passed the Trial. Thank you.”

Subaru: “...Did you just thank me?”

Garfiel: “I ain’t sayin’ it again. But, I got to remember somethin’ I wanted to remember. So goin’ in there was... worth it. Shit!”

Perhaps because his embarrassment had peaked over time as he talked, Garfiel’s face reddened in agitation as he jabbed his finger at Subaru, wide-eyed.

Garfiel: "Listen! My amazin' self did lose, 'n my Trial did change. But! Ya ain't gonna see me accept every word of everythin' you've said as correct 'n raise the white flag 'n surrender! Ya talked big, sayin' you'll change this Sanctuary! If that change hurts or pains the folks inside, yer not gonna be gettin' any mercy!"

Subaru: "Uhh... R—right, that's reasonable..."

Garfiel spoke in an overwhelmingly menacing manner, Subaru was in awe, but was nevertheless managing to get words out.

Subaru could not give Garfiel any absolute guarantees. But he was able to promise he would be doing his best to improve their situation. That much was definite. And just as he resolved to say this—

Garfiel: "So I'm gonna be watchin' ya from up close t'see whether ya wind up just bein' some all-talk bastard or not— You better pull it off, Captain!"

Subaru: "——"

Garfiel vigorously slapped Subaru's shoulders, gaze fixed on him, making that incredible statement. His unexpected form of address and his attitude stunned Subaru so much he was slow to react.

During that delay, Garfiel immediately passed by Subaru and descended to the bottom of the stairway with Ryuzu. Almost as if he was scared someone would see his face.

Emilia: "Garfiel, your face is sooo red."

Perhaps catching a glimpse of his face before he can pass by, Emilia spoke while trying to hold back a smile. Which meant that no, Subaru's ears had not been not tricking him.

Subaru: "Captain... I'm not the one heading this group, that's Emilia."

Emilia: "But it was your group which beat Garfiel, Subaru. He accepted what came out of a man-to-man conflict, which means you are his Captain. Isn't that great, Captain?"

Emilia smiled without any ill will and Subaru was lost on how to respond. Ram jabbed the troubled Subaru in the side, telling him "Accept it", shrugging.

Ram: “He isn’t sure what he should be doing when he gets emotional either. Let him do what he wants.”

Subaru: “But still. I am utterly weak to it, but it’s...”

Ram: “Leaving aside strength in a fight, you are the older party, Barusu, so at least give him that much leniency. Garf is a child despite his looks. Doesn’t it feel like you’ve got a younger brother now?”

Subaru: “Hold on a second.”

Ram: “What?”

Subaru: “Can you go over that?”

Ram: “Over what?”

Subaru: “Garfiel’s younger than me?”

In response to Subaru’s question, Ram nodded in comprehension with a short “Ah—”.

Ram: “Did you not know? Garf is younger than you, Barusu.”

Subaru: “How young?”

Ram: “I believe he’s fourteen this year.”

Subaru: “Fourteen!? Fourteen... He’s a chuuni¹⁶⁵!?”

Those entirely unanticipated news made Subaru’s voice crack in surprise. Suddenly, he was able to accept being called Captain, and Garfiel’s overly childish stubbornness.

Subaru: “A middle schooler in the peak of his rebellious age... Right, that’s a nightmare to tame...”

Muttered Subaru, his voice showing even more exhaustion than after their fistfight.

¹⁶⁵ “Chuuni”, also known as “chuunibyou” (中二病), or literally translated as “middle two disease” or, alternatively, “middle-school second-year disease”. Well-known term to describe kids in middle school who have delusions of grandeur, like special powers. It even has its own Wikipedia page!

Arc 4 Chapter 117 - Love Letters

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 13, Chapter 8 “Love Letter”, Parts 6-8

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 243

With Garfiel’s hostility quashed and the shocking reveal of his age, a period of rest fell upon the scene outside the Tomb. Everyone surrounded Garfiel, each waiting for their chance to speak.

Subaru: “Geez... Our man-to-man fight sure starts feeling different now that it was basically us ganging together to beat up a middle schooler. It’s iffy.”

Otto: “Garfiel’s age is a shock to me as well, but surely those misgivings would be unwarranted? The fact our opponent, who we all needed to work together and gang up on to defeat, was actually fourteen holds not the slightest bearing on the details of the combat.”

Ram: “Exactly. Garf is disproportionately powerful for such a babyish teen, and there is no logical reason to begin complaining about the fact we ganged up on him.”

Garfiel: “All of ya, shut yer traps ‘bout gangin’ up on me! Yer lookin’ for another tussle!? Eh!? My amazin’ self’s always ready fer it!”

Subaru, Otto, and Ram all nodded, as Garfiel sent spit flying.

Thinking back on everything Garfiel had said and done up to this point, and seeing him yelling and asserting himself the way he was, yes, indeed, he was a fourteen-year-old. The way Subaru had treated Garfiel so far, as if they were in the same age-group, may have actually placed a filter on the way he interpreted everything that was unraveling.

Subaru: “Actually, how old were you when you took the Trial before? Your stubbornness got worse after that.”

Garfiel: "My memory of that ain't perfect, but... I think I was three or four. I don't exactly remember anythin' 'cept the Trial."

Otto: "You'd expect that, yes. Three or four... That's the same age as when I still thought that the world was hell."

Subaru: "You are bringing up heavy stuff out of nowhere, stop. I don't wanna hear it."

A grim smile arose on Otto's face as he spoke. Otto must have had his problems, but delving into them at this point in time would have been over his capacity. Subaru's arms were already full, and holding more baggage than he could carry, he had resorted to balancing it on his head and hammocking it in his lap.

Emilia: "Do you mind if I ask you for specifics?"

With the joking over, Emilia breached the real topic, face tense. Her gaze fixed on Garfiel, the true meaning of her question most likely was about the specifics of the Trial. But Garfiel snorted—

Garfiel: "Got nothin' specific to tell. Me 'n you are gonna have different pasts, 'n they are gonna need to be beaten differently. Don't think I can tell ya anythin' useful."

Emilia: "I know. My Trial is my Trial. It won't help very much to ask you about it."

Garfiel: "—? Then what on earth are ya askin' 'bout?"

Emilia: "Now that you've overcome the Trial... No, overcome your past, do you feel like you've changed? That you can accept that change in yourself?"

Garfiel narrowed his eyes in silence. The atmosphere was getting tense. Subaru and the others swallowed their breath as they waited for Garfiel's response.

There was a period of silence. Garfiel touched his nose, his fingers then tracing upwards along his scar. With that done—

Garfiel: "Can't tell whether to say somethin's changed, or to say I got somethin' back."

Emilia: "Mhm."

Garfiel: "This scar on my head's somethin' I did to myself. To try 'n forget a bad memory."

Garfiel tapped his forehead, his gaze fixed on the person standing beside and looking at him— Ram, who blinked her cerise eyes.

Ram: "Garf."

Garfiel: "Shut it, don't say anythin'. It'll make me miserable. Pushed th' blame for it on to someone else so I could hide a bad memory. Realizing now how ya knew that 'n went along with it for my sake suddenly makes me feel like crap."

Garfiel grumbled, as Ram watched him somewhat resignedly.

Subaru could not grasp the exact significance of their exchange, but he could tell this information referred to things only Garfiel and Ram would understand.

And could also tell that Garfiel and Ram had a definite, warm, and familial kind of bond.

Garfiel: "Anyway, whether we're sayin' it changed or came back, I ain't th'same as before. Ya guys changed me. So now's to see how you'll all change, makin' sure ya don't wind up bein' all talk."

Emilia: "Mhm. Good. And I'll be doing my best to match your expectations."

Garfiel's cheeks twisted while Emilia smiled, full of determination.

Subaru abruptly realized, if one considered the mental factor alone, those two were the same age.

Fourteen-year-olds. A boy and a girl in the emotional throes of puberty, and a situation that required the future of this place rested on them. Subaru was seventeen, verging on eighteen, so he was not in the position to say much, but everything had wound up being a very manga-like or anime-like predicament.

Emilia: "Staying too long will just reduce my resolve."

Emilia stood up and wiped off the grass from her waist. Exhaling deeply, her eyes gleaming with strength, she looked at the Tomb— the site of the Trial.

Subaru: "You're going?"

Emilia: "I am.... I'll follow Garfiel's performance, I'm absolutely going to beat it."

Garfiel: "Can ya do it?"

Emilia: "I'll do it. I've decided not to be afraid to change."

Emilia nodded to both Subaru's and to Garfiel's questions.

Subaru stood up and stands next to Emilia as she starts walking toward the Tomb. Even if he was unable to go inside and stay with her, holding her hand, he had determined to stay at her side until her departure.

Ram: "Emilia-sama."

Emilia stopped and turned around, for Ram to deliver a curtsey. Pinching her skirt, solemnly, as if she were a servant paying respect to someone of higher status.

Subaru: "Well no crap. Undoubtedly, Emilia-tan is a master to her."

Ram: "Silence your muttering, Barusu. Practice prudence enough to know that this is no situation for that."

Ram sternly rebuked Subaru's mumbling. Emilia's eyes widened, and Ram collected herself by once again bowing her head.

Ram: "I request forgiveness for my rudeness. I had, in full sincerity, doubted whether you would rise to the situation."

Emilia: "Hmm. I'm sorry, for being so ineffective."

Ram: "Indeed, you were ineffective and a blight to onlooking eyes."

Subaru: "Oh, come on."

How much courage had it taken Subaru to convey that sentiment to Emilia? While grinding his teeth at Ram, who scaled difficult hurdles easily, he continued to listen.

Ram: “But now you have stood up and have decided to take on this challenge. Whether that was preceded by a desire to flee, presents not the slightest of issues.”

Emilia: “...”

Ram: “I had determined. Would your stance be one to challenge the Trial, or something else? Where I would entrust my own problems rested upon that. Should you have exhibited a desire to flee in surrender, I would have gone with the flow of the world. But should you have exhibited a desire to fight—”

Ram glanced at Subaru. How was he connected to this part of her speech? Perhaps that provided the answer as to why she had allied herself with Subaru and Otto to fight Garfiel.

Ram: “May your endeavors proceed well, Emilia-sama. I shall wait for your safe return.”

Ram delivered a curtsy in silence, an impeccable exhibition of a maid giving farewell to her master. Seemingly empowered by Ram’s send-off, Emilia firmly nodded, her expression cheery.

Seeing this, Subaru uncrossed his arms and nodded.

Subaru: “So going with the flow of the conversation, you got anything to say, Otto?”

Otto: “Well it’s amazing how demanding that prospect feels now but is this truly a situation in which I should be saying anything!? Don’t you find anything wrong with this!?”

Subaru directed the conversation onto Otto, figuring that he would be prepared to say something, but apparently whatever he had in mind could not hope to beat Ram’s speech.

Seems like he wanted to pay consideration for the situation, and let it all end cleanly— But,

Emilia: “Okay. Please go ahead.”

Otto: “—!”

Unheeding to Otto’s distress and figuring that he would encourage her, Emilia is ready to accept it. She waited with a tense expression, failing to notice his panic. To such an innocent attitude from Emilia, Otto finally put his hand to his forehead with a look of resignation.

Otto: “Erm, well, ok, Emilia-sama.”

Emilia: “I’m listening.”

Otto: “It happens that actually, I’ve paid some rather considerable damages thanks to this whole debacle. Though yes naturally this has the nuance of being a joint-investment, and the damages had already been factored in this payment...”

Emilia: “Hm?”

The topic transformed into money business and Emilia, not the brightest in mathematics, looked confused. Otto bit his lip and raised his finger with an “Okay, that’s right!”.

Otto: “I chose to assume these damages with the anticipation that, someday, you would grow into something great and hefty. So you need to prevail and ensure I regain the expenses I made for this bet!”

Emilia: “...I think I’m already all grown up. Eating will make me fatter though¹⁶⁶.”

Subaru: “Don’t use tricky phrasing on our sheltered angel. Also Emilia-tan, I think everything you are doing right now hits the golden ratio so just keep going like that. Right now, you are the loveliest.”

From head to toes, Emilia’s current state was perfect. That said, of course Subaru would have found her lovable still, regardless whether she thinned down or fattened up.

But leaving Subaru’s sentiments aside, Otto looked like he could not find anything to say about the fact his statements did not communicate in full, and after a bit of flailing—

Otto: “...Come back safely. I’m supporting you.”

Emilia: “Mhm, understood. Otto-kun, thank you for helping me too.”

Emilia responded to Otto’s hideously safe summarization with a strong nod. Garfiel gave Otto, who had slumped his shoulders, a comforting shove. Witnessing that, Subaru and Emilia once again headed for the Tomb.

¹⁶⁶ A small pun. “太い” can mean both “hefty” or “fat/thick”.

Night had fallen over Sanctuary. It was the time of day during which the Trial would occur.

Emilia took repeated deep, in and out, to steel herself. With her beside him, Subaru pondered what would be the best thing to say to see her off. And then---

Emilia: "Subaru."

Subaru: "Hmm?"

Emilia: "So about that thing in the Tomb..."

She was anxious about the Trial. Thinking this, Subaru waited for Emilia to continue. But she was unable to say anything as she glanced at him sporadically, her expression uneasy. For some reason, her cheeks were tinged red.

Subaru: "Emilia?"

Emilia: "S--so, erm, the thing in the Tomb."

Subaru: "Thing in the... Oh, you don't mean what's coming up, you mean the stuff from before?"

Emilia: "Yes, geez."

"It's obvious I meant that", said Emilia's expression as she puffed up her cheeks. But considering how the whole scene had been going until this point, Subaru couldn't agree with her criticism.

Like anyone would have thought that Emilia, ready to challenge the imminent Trial, was worried not about the future but the past. Though if one considered that the Trial waiting inside the Tomb was also the past, the whole topic of time would start getting confusing and vague.

And though the momentum and all the grisly events that followed meant Subaru had forgotten about it, thinking back on it, the deed he had committed could send his face bursting into flame. Arguing with Emilia, slinging insults, shoving love at her, snapping down to steal a kiss--- call all that an explosion of all the wrath he had built up over these five loops, and it was still no excuse.

That whole affair was probably what was troubling Emilia.

It was pleasant to see crimson on her pale skin, but Subaru had no opening to be getting transfixed here either.

Emilia: “Inside, where we, hm... You know.”

Subaru: “Y—yeah... Mhm, right.”

Emilia: “And, hm, I think it’s going to be tough, but it’s important, so... when the Trial and everything else is done, let’s take our time to talk, okay?”

Subaru had no choice but to nod to Emilia’s proposal, even though he believed his mind to be taking it tough already. It was Subaru’s first time, and definitely Emilia’s first time as well. Their feelings had crashed into each other, and they had mountains of things they need to sort out. And for Subaru, the unavoidable topic of Rem was also something that needed to be managed as well, with no excuse.

Either way—

Subaru: “Oh, you’ve got plenty of time to think about the future, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “Can I afford that? I’m not sure. I might just be getting cocky.”

Subaru: “But if you can afford to be confident, then it means your head isn’t close to bursting. You’ll pull it off. I can bet on it.”

Subaru shot her a thumbs-up, his teeth sparkling. Emilia tilted her head in mystification.

Emilia: “Bet what on it?”

Subaru: “The right for us to go on a date.”

Emilia: “Then what happens if you win, and what happens if I win?”

Subaru: “I win and I can go on a date with you, you win and you can go on a date with me.”

Emilia couldn’t help but giggle, and for a period, the two chuckled together. It truly did seem that Emilia was neither stressed nor anxious.

Emilia: “I’ll bet that I will beat the Trial.”

Subaru: "Okay, I'll bet on Emilia beating the Trial."

Emilia: "And if we both win?"

Subaru: "Two dates."

Emilia: "Yes yes."

Like always, Emilia smoothly ignored Subaru's flirting. She moved forward, her silver hair dancing on the wind, glimmering under starlight. Subaru raised his hand as he saw her off.

Subaru: "Take care now. Watch out for cars, and men."

Emilia: "Stop being silly."

With a wry smile, Emilia's shape disappeared into the Tomb. The unlit corridor swallowed her into the darkness, robbing her silhouette from Subaru's sight.

There was no longer anything Subaru was able to do for Emilia. Everything else was now a problem she must overcome herself.

Garfiel: "Stop lookin' so worried, Captain. Makes ya less of a man."

Subaru: "Man, every time I think you are a middle schooler, somehow I can just accept this stuff you say. I was like you too once upon a time."

Garfiel arrived next to antsy Subaru's side and scolded him. As Subaru was shrugging, Garfiel drove his fist to his palm, remembering something.

Garfiel: "Oh yeah, Captain. When we were fightin' 'n ya smacked me flyin', what the hell was that?"

Subaru: "You mean Invisible Providence?"

Garfiel: "In... What?"

Subaru: "Invisible Providence. The Imperceptible Will of the Gods. Isn't it cool?"

Garfiel: "It's pretty cool, yeah."

Garfiel had found a compatriot in Subaru.

Unseen Hand's reputation was pretty bad, so he was hoping Invisible Providence would catch on. But either way, Subaru was doubtful Garfiel was just asking about its name.

Garfiel: "Magic... That's not what it is. It's just a feelin', but the vibe ain't right."

Subaru: "If we are gonna bother classifying it, honestly I have no clue either. But it's definitely something occult. Try all you want, but you'll never copy it."

Garfiel: "Not plannin' to. Hittin' someone with somethin' they can't see's cowardly."

Subaru: "C—cowardly, what's this punk saying...!"

He had been looking for mutual understanding on Invisible Providence's awesomeness, only to be stricken down in shocking fashion.

"My bad my bad" said Garfiel, looking completely unapologetic, but making no effort to inquire any further. Probably, he had sensed it. This occult thing was not something good for a man to delve into.

Subaru: "...But still, what's with this cause and effect?"

Invisible Providence— It was, unmistakably, Petelgeuse's Unseen Hand. There was a difference in strength, and he was only able to manifest one hand, but the sensation was unmistakable. Why did the same power the abhorrent madman held now dwell inside Subaru? Perhaps, it had something to do with the Witch Factor that Echidna had mentioned.

Witch Factor. The words suggested nothing pleasant, and it was also a term used by Petelgeuse. And the first time Subaru had used this thing reminiscent of Unseen Hand had not been during this recent battle. He had previously used it instinctively, to evade a charge from Garfiel who had transformed into a tiger, in a previous loop.

That meant the Witch Factor was steadily taking root inside Subaru.

Subaru knew he could no longer use Shamac. Repeated abuses of his gate had extinguished the exhausted magical gateway's function. He could no longer feel a connection with the magical world, a world once unknown to him.

He had lost his yearned-for magical powers, gaining occult powers in its stead. How ironic.

Subaru: "It's better than having no aces up my sleeve. Feels like there's proper technique to use it, but also doesn't, really..."

Regardless, nothing had changed about the scarcity of his options in battle. He would resort to turning and turning his cunning little brain, enlisting help from others while divining an escape from fatality.

The height of the walls Subaru needed to challenged remained as high as ever.

Garfiel: "Oh, just thought of somethin', Captain."

Subaru: "What's up? This whole Captain thing is still throwing me off."

Garfiel: "You'll get accustomed. Anyway, there's somethin' I gotta'pologize for."

He hadn't accepted the change in address, but Garfiel just looked on in admiration. Like Emilia before him, Subaru smiled wryly at the fact there were so many things to say, one after the other.

He shrugged to urge Garfiel on, his fingers tracing over his scar.

Garfiel: "My amazin' self went into the Tomb. 'N so my amazin' self went into the Trial room."

Subaru: "Yes, I'm following."

Garfiel: "N' so, I saw them— Yer, uhhhhh, frantic results."

Subaru's brows furrowed for an instant— but he immediately realized what Garfiel was referring to, and his eyes shot open. Shocked, Subaru's ears blazed red.

He saw them. He saw them he saw them hesawthem!

Garfiel: "W—wasn't tryin' to do anythin' bad. But to think it'd wound up bein'..."

Subaru: "S—stop talking! Forget it now! You, crap... I forgot! I mean... I mean, I didn't think you'd end up going into the Tomb! And then you... Agh, fuck!"

Clutching and shaking his head, Subaru's face got hotter.

Garfiel, who was looking at him with a look of pity, was now a loathsome being. Perhaps even more loathsome than during the fistfight.

Subaru: “You forget about it! That’s all I’m looking for! Okay, conversation over! Done!”

Garfiel: “Yep, will do. But here’s what I thought when I saw ‘em. Yer an absolute, incredible moron. But I’m glad ya ain’t dead.”

Subaru: “I said it’s over, are you some braindead brat!? Wait! You are a brat!”

Although he was called a brat, Garfiel had grasped Subaru’s weak point and remained the superior party between the two. He laughed away Subaru’s screams of defeat before descending the Tomb stairs.

Following after Garfiel as he returned to everyone else in the clearing, Subaru prayed for Emilia’s good fortune, while simultaneously begging she would not notice his cheers.

That sort of thing would be ruined if it didn’t reach the intended recipient first.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

And as such, Subaru’s prayers did not go in vain.

Emilia: “I’m here...”

Exiting the stone corridor, Emilia arrived in the room in which the Trial took place.

Amid the cold, damp air, Emilia walked using the dimly-glowing wall as her guide and gazed at the door in the back of the room. This closed door would likely open once the Trials had been cleared. Garfiel had come back to the group without opening the door. Meaning, she---

Emilia: “Have to do my best to get inside there.”

She did not know what might be lurking back there. But Emilia had been told, from the mouth of the Witch, that the number of Trials amounted to more than just one.

When she thought of the Witch conducting the Trials, painful itch spread through Emilia's chest. This was possible because that white Witch's welcome to Emilia was——

Emilia: "Huh?"

Momentarily in thought, Emilia cast her gaze about the room, noticing something odd. During her time spent hugging her knees and waiting for night in this Tomb, Emilia had never gone more than halfway through the corridor, and so, she had not ventured as far as this room. This meant this was her first time witnessing the chamber in two days.

It had only been two days, but something had changed over that time. While mulling over what that something was, Emilia realized the nature of the oddity.

Emilia: "This is..."

Brushing her fingertips over the wall, Emilia murmured. Her amethyst eyes began adjusting to the dark, and they began to capture the change clearly.

Emilia: "Subaru, you idiot."

With a hint of laughter in her voice, Emilia found herself saying this involuntarily. Because that was really it. When she looked at it, she couldn't help but think that.

Emilia: "You are reeeally an idiot."

Contrary to her words, Emilia's expression was filled with tender affection. This change on the portion of wall she was touching, over the wall before her, over a whole face of this room, top to bottom.

——Etchings. Pictures, letters, chiseled into the wall all large and crooked. That big chibi¹⁶⁷ drawing of a cat was a familiar picture of Puck. Many drawings of Puck had been etched into the wall, all surrounded with writing.

The messy I-glyphs, scattered everywhere as if written by a child, proved beyond any doubt he had worked frantically with Emilia's interests in mind.

¹⁶⁷ Cute caricature. See here.

“You can do it, I know you can!”, “Me and Puck are supporting you, everything’s okay”, “This girl I’m into is amazing! Have confidence in yourself!”, “Once this is all over let’s go on a date”, “Go for it, Emilia!”, “Nobody is expecting anything from us. Is there anything more fun than proving them all wrong?”, “I love you! So I believe in you!”—

Emilia: “Idiot... idiot, idiot, idiot... You featherbrain, Subaru.”

She had to challenge the Trial now and had been bracing herself to face something painful and unpleasant, and here he was pretending to support her while making her cry, this awful man.

She understood. She understood now.

The last time Emilia had come here had been two days ago. There had only been one day of opportunity for these drawings and writings to be etched. And that was the only time during which Subaru had the opportunity to leave Emilia’s side, and the only time he so stubbornly had kept silent about what he was doing over that period.

Emilia: “—Mhm. You are right. Let’s do it, Subaru.”

Her fingers lovingly brushing the letters, Emilia responded to the engraved words. Instantly, she felt herself falling into slumber, the world’s edges turning dim.

The Trial was coming. That terrifying past was coming.

—But Emilia’s lips kept smiling.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Broke my promise to go write love letters, and then someone else winds up seeing them first... My life’s over...”

Garfiel: “Yer exaggeratin’ it...”

Surrounding Subaru, too stricken by shock to stand, Garfiel and the others allowed themselves to look as flabbergasted as they wanted.

But having said that, there was nothing for the group to do here, except waiting for Emilia to come out. While it did sound good to hang around here, waiting while believing in her, that was also a Trial in itself for everyone who needed to sit around and wait.

Subaru: "It took Garfiel about an hour... So we should assume Emilia will take that long too."

Otto: "Supposing that she succeeds, you'd be corre— Ow!? Also aagh!?"

Otto's reward for his insensitive blunder was Ram's elbow. Seeing Otto jabbed by Ram, Garfiel's face twisted in jealousy, so he sent his finger flying to poke Otto's forehead. Otto toppled backwards as he tumbled to the ground, but no one mentioned it.

Subaru: "Actually, there was something I wanted to ask you and Garfiel, Ryuzu-san."

Ryuzu: "Something to ask me and Gar-bo?"

Ryuzu stood there uncomfortably as she looked up at Subaru. She had gone into hiding, and albeit unintentional, had ended up aiding Subaru and the others in their plans to defeat Garfiel. She still seemed somewhat lost on how to approach Garfiel, and so their grandmother-grandson conversations had been rather awkward for a little while now.

That said, Ryuzu was the only one worrying about it, for Garfiel felt no negativity towards her whatsoever.

Subaru: "Yes. A question. Though it's tricky whether you'll be able to understand it right now, Ryuzu-san."

"Tricky to understand right now", meant tricky to understand for Theta.

Alpha, Beta, Theta, and Sigma were the four Ryuzus representing Sanctuary. With the Garfiel problem resolved, the Ryuzus' stances toward Sanctuary's liberation would hopefully be in accord, but it was essential to check.

But most importantly, there were still some things that did not feel quite right.

Subaru: "Garfiel, you are all for Sanctuary's freedom now right?"

Garfiel: "It's not 'bout agreein' to it, Captain. My amazin' self lost to ya. So I'm not gonna get in the Captain's way as you all free Sanctuary. I'm gonna make sure the people in that changed Sanctuary ain't gonna suffer... That's my stance now."

Subaru: "Right, that stance right there."

Garfiel: "Eh?"

With his finger raised, Subaru pulled the breaks on Garfiel's speech.

Garfiel looked mystified, as did everyone else listening. Nobody must have felt that Garfiel said anything strange. But Subaru is uneasy.

Subaru: "When we first came here, your standpoint wasn't for or against it, it was pretty neutral... The same kind of thing like you said just now."

Garfiel: "...I was thinkin' you'd all get on guard 'bout me if you knew where I was leanin'."

Subaru: "But you got wary about us, instantly and plainly. Maybe we made some blunder, or say, tripped on a tiger's tail, but anyway, what was with that change in mentality?"

It was just weird. At the very least, on Emilia's first day taking the Trial, or until around the time she had taken the Trial, Garfiel's appeared to be friendly towards Subaru's group. Only after she failed the Trial did Garfiel expose his hostility on that night. With the Witch's Miasma emanating from Subaru as his pretext, Garfiel declared himself an enemy.

But Garfiel could not actually smell the Witch's Miasma from Subaru. Someone else had been noticing the Miasma, and Garfiel opted for hostility after learning about it from that someone else. The one who had reported the Miasma to Garfiel, and who had been spurring him into hostility was—

Subaru: "Ryuzu-san was eyeing me, who opposed the liberation of Sanctuary."

While looking down at the silenced Ryuzu, Subaru rested his raised finger on his crossed arms. The Ryuzu here is Ryuzu Theta— the only duplicate which had not been in favor of Sanctuary's liberation.

Alpha and Beta were in favor of liberation, and Sigma was neutral. Theta knew about the true Ryuzu Meyer's past, and viewed Sanctuary's liberation as dangerous. If he was going to add further support to his speculation, then it'd to note how inconceivable it would be that any other Ryuzu would spur Garfiel's change of attitude.

Garfiel nodded, his face puckered.

Garfiel: "Ya nailed it, Captain. Nanna told me..."

Ryuzu: "Ya got it all wrong, Su-bo. I never told Gar-bo about..."

Their voices were in sync, but their arguments were not.

Subaru furrowed his brows as Garfiel and Ryuzu looked at each other. Garfiel's mouth flapped open and shut uselessly as he pointed at the stunned Ryuzu.

Garfiel: "W—what are ya sayin'? Ya told me on the first night that lady took the Trial. Ya smelled Witch from the Captain. Then there's th'half-devil lady too, that maybe they were the Witch's assistants... So, I..."

Ryuzu: "Did I mention...? No, I haven't noticed the Miasma around Su-bo, and I don't have the most flawless thoughts about Emilia-sama's heritage, but... that ain't relevant to this. I was tryin' to make my decisions align with Ros-bo's outline as best I could, and..."

Subaru: "Wait! Wait, freeze! Ryuzu-san, you just said you don't know anything about this."

Ryuzu was rejecting Garfiel's statements. Garfiel looked to be in utter disbelief, but considering these words were coming out of Ryuzu's mouth, they were undoubtably true. The people of this Sanctuary were contracted not to tell lies while inside Sanctuary.

Subaru: "Leaving aside a situation in which the person doesn't think they are lying, Ryuzu-san's statements can't be a lie; if she says she hasn't done something, she hasn't."

Garfiel: "But, it's true that I—"

Subaru: "I'm not doubting you. I know you've been lied to. Ryuzu-san, do all the Ryuzu-sans agree with what you just said?"

Ryuzu's face paled as she nodded. This meant that neither Ryuzu Alpha, nor Beta, nor Theta, nor Sigma had spurred Garfiel's change of attitude. But Garfiel himself had stated his change of attitude had been prompted by Ryuzu.

Subaru raised his head, looking at Garfiel's face who, in turn, clicked his teeth as he shook his head, with nary a trace of a lie in his complexion. In the first place, his personality was not suited to telling lies.

And now that his pretense of being Sanctuary's barrier had been stripped away, that had become even obvious.

Subaru: "Ram."

Ram: "I will mention that no magic exists to change a person's shape. Not even Roswaal-sama would be capable of such a thing."

Subaru: "What do you think's going on, then?"

Ram had no answer to Subaru's question. She probably did not know how to resolve that contradiction as well. Subaru was half-convinced that it was a trap set by Roswaal, rather, he had no other options.

Subaru: "I would like to wait here until Emilia comes back, but—"

Only ten minutes had passed since Emilia had entered the Tomb. Once she cleared the Trial and came back out, Subaru wanted to be the one to welcome her, arms open wide. He wanted to celebrate her. But—

Subaru: "Let's interrogate Roswaal. Have to find out what bad things he's doing at this last hour."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Emilia could not tell whether waking up inside a dream ought to be called awakening.

Until just a moment previous, she had been inside a stone chamber. Ejected from the Trial room, Emilia now found herself inside a nostalgic forest.

Tall trees surround her surroundings, she could feel the cool breeze on her skin and warm earth at her feet.

Those memories, flashing back— The snowscape of the white forest, as she had seen before in the Trial.

But that had yet to begin.

No snow was falling, as Emilia's consciousness was welcomed by green. And—

???: "Hey. These past few days have had a real turnout."

As Emilia held her breath to confirm her own whereabouts, she heard a voice.

Emilia's visit had formed this dream world. Amid scenes from a memory which had not existed until now, standing there under the shade of a tree, as if all that was a matter of course, was somebody.

Dressed in black clothing from head to toe, hair and skin like scattered snow, was this woman of white. It was a beautiful Witch, who seemed to have explored beauty using only two colors. She who presided over the Trial, the lord of the Tomb that showed visions of the past— the Witch of Greed, Echidna.

The Witch stood there relying on the tree trunk behind her to lean back, as she tilted her head at Emilia. Emilia stares back straight at the Witch, swallowing her breath.

Echidna: "Truly, quite the turnout. Some guests warrant a warm welcome— Some do not, as they are uninvited."

Emilia: "..."

Echidna: "It's amazing how you can come back so shamelessly, after flaunting all your hideousness. Even I have to find myself shocked at your audacity and failure to quit."

The Witch staring at Emilia struck her with words, things full of spite and disdain. Those numb, dark eyes did not possess the slightest resemblance to those dark eyes which always look at her so kindly. With all the malice she has known and been showered in, Emilia can tell.

This was malicious intent on an entirely different dimension from what she knows. The spite Emilia had received thus had been targeted broadly at a silver-haired half-elf, a blade lacking reason.

However, the maliciousness this Witch directed was different. It was not targeted at a silver-haired half-elf, but was instead enmity fully focused on Emilia.

Echidna: “You hit setbacks and bawl, but provided you can corrupt a man into embracing you, it matters not to you, you whore. You defiler who desecrates my world. You shameless, self-loving person, as he forgives you over and over, you reprobate— What do you think, daughter of the Witch?”

Until recently, these abusive words would have clawed at Emilia’s heart. It wasn’t that she would have yielded before this malice and given up on the Trial entirely, but these words did start flaying and abrading her heart, chipping away at her capacity to resist her past.

The Witch had no wish for Emilia to take the Trial, or to overcome it.

The Witch had not a single expectation that Emilia would overcome the Trial at all.

Subaru: “Nobody is expecting anything from us. Is there anything more fun than proving them all wrong?”

“I see, that’s exactly what Subaru would say”, she thought. And so, Emilia raised her arm, jabbing her finger toward the heavens. The same way Natsuki Subaru did when stating the audacious, when stimulating his courage.

Emilia: “My name is just Emilia. Born in Elixir Forest, the Witch of Glaciation.”

Emilia could tell the Witch was disappointed. Feeling satisfaction in that, Emilia lowered her skyward finger to point at her.

Emilia: “I will not give in to the malice of a fellow Witch. After all, I’m a pain in the ass of a woman.”

Character Pages for Volume 13

Characters

Re: Life in a different world
from zero

Characters

Re: Life in a different world
from zero

The only ability I got in a different world "Returns by Death"
I die again and again to save her.

エミリア(幼少期)&フォルトナ

Emilia & Fortuna

幼きエミリアとその養母フォルトナ。

ジューズ

Geuse

フォルトナたちを支援する人物。
フォルトナとの仲は良好。

Web Novel Volume 14

Arc 4 Chapter 118 - The Day Alpha Orionis Smiled

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 1 “—Journey of Memories”, Part 8; Volume 14, Chapter 3 “The Day Alpha Orionis Laughed”, Part 1

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 3

Emilia walked leisurely, with experienced gait, along the unmarked trail flanked by tall trees.

She stepped on grass, treaded on earth, taking care not to trample on any flowers hidden beneath the bulging roots. Hard ground could be felt beneath her feet, but Emilia found it strange— After all, she was dreaming.

Never mind how an ordinary dream would proceed, here she could feel the texture of the tree bark, smell the sweet aroma of the flowers, and feel the warmth of the breeze.

Emilia: “It’s a dream world, but I can feel everything like normal. Why is that?”

Echidna: “Dream world, would be an entirely figurative descriptor for it. This is a place constructed from the memories of the one who challenges the Trial’s, which drags in only the consciousness, a space fit to be called an alternate world. These are things withdrawn from you, from the challenger’s memories, so of course your senses can interact with this world. Conversely, if I attempted to touch the ground or perhaps the trees, I will not feel any tactile sensation.”

Emilia: “So that’s it... So I could go on a rampage, and turn the forest into a hodgepodge?”

Echidna: “What a barbaric and Witch-like idea. While it’s true that you have tactile sense, you cannot influence this world. To add, you and the living beings recreated in this world cannot even touch each other. Though, if the Trial were in another form then it would possible.”

Emilia: “Another form?”

Echidna: “Full of questions, aren’t you? How about using your own head for once? Seek and you shall find. Though for you, constantly spoiled and fawning on men as you are, I’d say it’s outside your capacity.”

Emilia: “Hmph.”

Emilia took the lead, the Witch of Greed following behind while keeping a fixed distance. Echidna sneered at Emilia’s ignorance while looking thoroughly unimpressed, while delivering a venomous lecture. But, despite that animosity, her statements were legitimate.

Emilia put her hand to her mouth and began thinking. There was a difference between touchable memories and untouchable memories. There was a method for Emilia, with only her mind present in this world, to touch the people who walk about these memories.

Emilia: “I thought about it, but I couldn’t get it. Tell me the answer.”

Echidna: “———”

Emilia: “What’s wrong? Do you have a tummy ache?”

Echidna: “Your attitude gives me pyrosis. While it certainly feels unpleasant, if you exclude him and my friends, the only one who can inspire such emotion in me is probably just you.”

Emilia: “Echidna, you have friends.”

“How nice”, was the nuance in Emilia’s mutter, to which Echidna sighed. It seemed she had not taken Emilia’s statement with the nicest of interpretations. Emilia hesitated on how to reword it to make it communicate properly, when——

Echidna: “The regrets of the past that you glimpse in the Trial do not consist of only a single scene for everybody.”

Emilia: “Hm?”

Echidna: “There are pasts fixed on a single moment of time which you regret. And differing from those pasts, there are also ongoing pasts where you regret your relationship with somebody, for example. For the latter, the recreated past will not be a single isolated scene, but will instead recreate those characters as they are inside the challenger. You could speak with them, touch them, even make happy love with them.”

Emilia: “...Okay. So that’s how it works.”

Emilia nodded in comprehension.

Indeed, regrets could be distinguished like that. Some people might regret they got in a fight with somebody, and some people might regret everything that happened in the aftermath. Which to conquer was entirely dependent on the person.

Emilia: “You don’t like me, but you answered my question for me.”

Echidna: “Because I’m just sooo nice a person, is the kind of misunderstanding I’d loathe for you to make. I’ve done nothing humiliating enough for you to regard me favorably. That I wind up answering these questions is entirely a result of my disposition.”

Emilia: “Right, right.”

It didn’t put her in the most jovial of moods, but Emilia had more or less figured out how to interact with the icy Echidna. She definitely hated Emilia like one would hate a serpent, but Emilia could not bring herself to dislike Echidna. She didn’t know her well enough for that.

Reasoning backwards, it meant Echidna knew Emilia well enough to hate her that much— But she would have no chance to ask about it here.

???: “—Huhu! Ahahha! Here! This way!”

Emilia: “Eep!”

The sudden and loud voice of a young girl calling from behind surprised Emilia.

She froze as the little girl circled around her to run past from behind her to before her and away. It shocked Emilia that the girl had managed to come so close without Emilia noticing, but she promptly sensed that had not happened because of her own negligence or inattention.

The girl who overtook Emilia ran about, her long silver hair flapping in disarray.

Amethyst eyes, a well-worn children's vestment. She dashed confidently around the forest, her face very familiar to Emilia as she laughed.

This person was her young self— back when she knew no regret, Emilia in a bygone time.

Echidna: "Utterly ignorant, but it's still astonishing how dumbly blithe she looks."

Emilia: "Don't you start saying things about little me too. And... we'll find out soon whether or not that's anything bad."

Such was Echidna's prejudiced judgement of the frolicking young Emilia.

Feeling a throbbing in her temples after objecting to Echidna's appraisals, Emilia grimaced. Her Contract with Puck had ceased, and her sealed memories were resurrecting one after another. Her days spent with Mother Fortuna. Juice's group and how they brought supplies to the village.

The seal, and the fairies who helped her escape the Princess Room. And, the day on which she met Juice, who she wasn't supposed to meet, and the fact they became friends.

Emilia: "How did I manage to live without memory of these things, like it was completely normal...?"

Emilia's memory had been fraught with holes, but Emilia had lived without finding anything strange about that at all.

Who knows what would have happened had she noticed the pitfalls, but without the Trial's involvement? She would not have recovered from it. Perhaps Puck, who would've known Emilia's abnormal state better than anyone, hadn't told her about it because he understood that.

Pieces of her reviving memory still remained sleeping beyond the ajar door. She had not been able to spy their entirety before challenging the Trial, but that was fine.

Here, in the Trial, all of Emilia's sealed memories would likely be revealed.

She could figure something inside her would change definitively after she saw them.

Emilia: "But I'm not scared of that anymore."

Echidna: “Crying and bawling, you cling to men or your father. Are you going to stop making decisions typical of the filthy woman you are?”

Emilia: “I know they’d probably forgive me... But I don’t want to do that, and for me or for Subaru to feel disillusioned because of it. I don’t want to be weak and rationalize that I can stay weak.”

Echidna: “...Do whatever you want. All I’m doing is stockpiling yet another result in my memory.”

No matter how much spite Echidna spewed at her, nothing could shake Emilia’s nerve now.

Perhaps having perceived that over their conversation, Echidna resignedly closed her mouth. The Witch’s comments had abated in their fury. Emilia sighed, turning to devote her attention to her past.

In front of her was her young self, running about guilelessly. And,

???: “Please wait, Emilia-sama. It is perilous to traipse the area in this way.”

Young Emilia: “I’m not in danger, I’m fine. You’re the one with scraped knees, Juice.”

Juice: “Injury to myself is nothing to be concerned about. But any injuries you may sustain are dire. Not even my death would constitute recompense for wounds imposed on your sumptuous skin.”

Chasing the frolicking Emilia was a tall man in a black robe— Juice. His stern face held definite gentleness and affection as he softly chided Emilia, who continued frolicking, heedless of his warning.

???: “Juice. The way you said that actually made it sound reeeeeeeally dirty.”

Juice: “My intentions in speaking had been otherwise... Never would I consider Emilia-sama in such a manner.”

Juice was addressed by a woman following behind him as he himself followed Emilia—a woman with short silver hair, sharp eyes and beautiful looks.

Having spotted her, Emilia’s throat felt as it had cramped.

Emilia: “Mother Fortuna...”

Although she was aware that this healthy sight of her mother was only occurring in a memory, Emilia could not keep herself from feeling the urge to cry. Emilia had loved her. Had respected her more than any other. Even after all this time, Emilia considered Mother Fortuna a member of her family at least as precious as Puck.

Fortuna moved to stand beside the worried-looking Juice, casting him a glance.

Fortuna: “And that’s not just for Emilia, it’d sound that way no matter who you said it to. You’re supposed to be getting on in years by now, Juice.”

Juice: “Age is something which presents rather little significance to me. Related to having lived for a long duration of time, by my view even yourself and Emilia-sama would be infants.”

Fortuna: “I’m an infant by his view... Hm.”

Fortuna lowered her gaze, muttering with tones of displeasure. Juice’s brows furrowed in concern, but Fortuna did not respond. Instead, Emilia toddled back to them, her cheeks puffed out.

Young Emilia: “Aaagh! Mother Fortuna, Juice, how come you’re not chasing me! We’re playing tag! You have to chase!”

Juice: “Ah! My deepest apologies, Emilia-sama. The failing of this negligent Romanée-Conti, to persist lifelong and evermore...”

Fortuna: “Don’t spoil her like that, Juice— Emilia, you do remember why your mother and Juice started chasing you, yes? Girls who don’t think about what they have done reeeeeally annoy your mother.”

Young Emilia: “Eep!”

A hint of anger slipped into Fortuna’s smile, prompting young Emilia’s shoulders to hitch.

She thought back on why the two were chasing her, and realizes that she has needlessly riled a hornet’s nest. Her face paled, as she giggled in an attempt to draw attention away from the issue, then turned breaking into a run and—

Fortuna: “No luck. Mother Fortuna caught you.”

Young Emilia: “Uwah! I’m sorry, Mother Fortuna! It’s not what you think! The fairies wanted to play, and said to go outside, and so...”

Fortuna: “Girls who blame other people, or rather fairies, also annoy your mother. Do you understand, Emilia?”

Having been caught in a hug from behind, Emilia panicked as Fortuna spoke to her in whispers. Young Emilia stopped struggling, hanging her head in dejection.

Young Emilia: “I’m sorry, Mother Fortuna. The room was reeeally boring, and Juice is my friend, so I wanted to see him, and I just went out.”

Fortuna: “And then you ran away because I spotted you. You knew you did something bad. That was something you reeeally shouldn’t have done.”

Young Emilia: “I know...”

Fortuna: “You mustn’t break promises. Keeping promises is important. Promises are a representation of trust, and breaking them means betraying that trust. Don’t do it.”

Close to tears, Emilia attempted to look down— when her face was caught between two hands, being forced to look properly into that pair of amethyst eyes.

Fortuna: “Emilia, promise me. You’ll keep your promises from now on.”

Young Emilia: “Mmhm... Yes, I promise. I’m so sorry, Mother.”

Fortuna: “Alright. Everything’s fine then.”

Having heard Emilia’s teary pledge, Fortuna held her darling daughter to her chest. She tenderly caressed sobbing Emilia’s silver hair, accepting her child’s maturation with a gentle sigh. When—

Fortuna: “Juice? What are you doing over there?”

Juice: “I—I have... w—witnessed, far too brilliant a sight... The tears... beyond my control...”

Juice was squatting in the shade of a tree, as he pressed a handkerchief to his face, bawling. Apparently hearing that mother-daughter conversation had sent him over the emotional edge.

The visions of Juice crying both in her recovered memories and during the Trial led Emilia to remember that he was a real cry-baby. Warmth unfurled through her chest.

Fortuna: “But anyway, Emilia. These fairies you mentioned are...?”

Leaving aside Juice as he was blowing his nose with the hankie, Fortuna went back to a part of Emilia’s testimony which had bothered her. The topic of fairies raised, Emilia looked up at Fortuna from within her embrace, her eyes still red.

Young Emilia: “Oh, they’re... Fairies, come here.”

Young Emilia reached out her arm as she spoke to the world. As if her pale fingertips were a perch, several glowing lights appeared, drifting over to convene around her hand.

Both Fortuna and Juice looked shocked to witness the sight.

Fortuna: “It couldn’t be, Micro Spirits? And so many of them? How?”

Young Emilia: “—? I talked to them, and lots of them came out. They appear when I’m playing in the Princess Room now.”

Juice: “To command this sum of Micro Spirits at such an age Emilia-sama, it seems that you possess distinguishable aptitude for Spiritualism.”

Young Emilia: “A-pty-toode¹⁶⁸, for Spiritualism?”

Juice: “These who you call fairies are beings known as Micro Spirits. They exist ubiquitously throughout the world, and you can open your heart to them to converse and form a Contract. Those who are favored by Spirits, and borrow their strength to achieve the extraordinary, are referred to as Spiritual Arts Users.”

Young Emilia: “I can be one of those?”

¹⁶⁸ Childish mispronunciation. Adorable.

Juice: “Certainly. Proceed to mature in good health, favored by Spirits as you are presently... And undoubtedly, many Spirits, and more powerful Spirits, will come under your direction.”

Emilia’s face beamed with happiness as she heard Juice’s explanation. But Fortuna stood up, nudging her elbow into Juice’s side.

Fortuna: “Hold on, Juice. No funny talk. Don’t go off saying managing a few Micro Spirits makes you a Spiritual Arts User. And Emilia doesn’t need that.”

Juice: “So might be how you opine, but Emilia-sama shall not remain a child indefinitely. It will happen that she cannot stay at your side. My belief would find its additional necessity in her establishment of herself as herself once that eventuality comes.”

Fortuna and Juice were presently arguing over where Emilia’s education should be focused. Watching their exchange from aside, the older Emilia inevitably did think it.

Young Emilia: “Mother Fortuna and Juice are like a mom and dad.”

Fortuna: “Wha!?”

Without a trace of ill will in her expression, young Emilia stated the exact same thing that older Emilia had been thinking. Emilia watched Fortuna’s face redden while being convinced of the fact that, yes, her younger self had thought the same thing.

Fortuna: “Okay, Emilia, don’t say anything weird. Your mother and Juice have known each other for a very very long time, our relationship isn’t one you can talk about like that.”

Juice: “Exactly, Emilia-sama. Fortuna-sama and I have known each other for a very long time... In fact, it would have been since being in the company of your mother and father...”

Fortuna: “—Juice.”

Fortuna started rambling with frantic explanations, but Juice’s loose lips caused her tone to plummet. Juice seemed to sense his mistake, putting his hand to his mouth.

Juice: “Forgive me.”

Young Emilia: “Mother, and father?”

Fortuna: “I’m sorry, Emilia. We’ll talk about that another time. But anyway, you go back to the room. I haven’t forgiven the fact that you snuck out.”

Young Emilia: “Hmph... You’re so mean, Mother Fortuna...”

Feeling that Fortuna was trying to fudge the conversation, Emilia puffed out her cheeks to display her displeasure. But Fortuna appeared to be stubborn, and put her hands to Emilia’s puffed cheeks, pressing down to make her expel the air. With the air puffed out of Emilia’s mouth, Fortuna knelt down to match Emilia’s eye level.

Fortuna: “Be a good girl and behave. This will not be the last time you’re going to get to see Juice. I’ll, uhhhh... make another chance for you to see him.”

Young Emilia: “Really!? You promise? No going back on it?”

Fortuna: “Oh, no, this girl. Just where did she learn to be so fussy?”

Fortuna smiled wryly at Emilia as she brought up the topic of promises they had covered previously, before taking her in an embrace.

Fortuna: “Yes, I promise. This is a promise between you and me, and it’s reeeeeeally important.”

Young Emilia: “...Okay then. I’ll go back to the room.”

Young Emilia gives Fortuna a trusting nod.

Released from the hug, Emilia ran over to Juice before she made her return to the Princess Room. She extended her hand to Juice, smiling.

Young Emilia: “See you, Juice. Promise that we’ll meet again.”

Juice: “—Yes, assuredly. May we make audience again in the future. I shall be awaiting the day.”

Juice took the small, extended hand, completing the handshake. Her smile having been met with another, Emilia nodded and nodded and nodded before releasing her hand and announcing her goodbye.

Young Emilia then readied herself to return to the Princess Room—

Echidna: “Here they are.”

Whispered Echidna, having silently watched over everything until now.

Emilia heard Echidna clearly and raised her head, looking around to try and determine what Echidna is referring to— and then, she spotted it.

Emilia: “———”

A white young man.

White skin, white hair. He wore a simple shirt and pants, nothing ornate about him. His face did have its looks, but he was lacking in anything that would make him stand out, his appearance utterly banal. He would be able to mix into a crowd and disappear instantly, with how he epitomized all lack of individuality. But his presence right here, right now, made him seem an abnormal kind of outsider.

Fortuna: “...Who’re you!?”

In her memories, Fortuna also noticed the man, immediately holding Emilia close as she voiced her clear caution. In response to that voice, the man leant against a tree trunk, running his hand through his white hair.

Man: “Don’t you think it follows reasonable sense that when asking a person for their name, you begin by introducing yourself first?”

The reply made Fortuna’s eyebrow twitch. Seeing this, the man’s mouth twisted, the atmosphere he emitted dismal.

Man: “Who, is one of those questions where when you give this response, I can only think it as stale and trite but, now that I’ve actually wandered into a context fitting for that kind of thing, aha, I can indeed understand why people have the urge to say this. Here are fellow persons, making the presence of the other for the first time. Our standings are supposed to be definitively equal, as we begin in our efforts to establish a relationship, but now we have a condescending someone trying to extort a name unilaterally. I wonder if it's occurred to you. That you're unconsciously, unsympathetically, and by your own accord treating me as inferior, has that occurred to you?"

Fortuna: "...For a man, you sure love talking."

Man: "For a man, is where your prejudice shows though and indicates how ignorant you are to comparative examples of men. And first of all, what right do you think you have to take these creatures called men, a class which includes more individuals spread throughout the world than what is conceivably countable, and compare me to them? This attitude of yours... it's giving me a little trouble to overlook. It's all lacking in any degree of reasonable courtesy. It's taking this individual I am, taking my rights, and disregarding them."

It appeared that Fortuna's every word had made the lunacy in the man's speech escalate. As the man's danger grew more and more, Fortuna exposed her wariness as she braced herself for combat.

But the one to pull the breaks is Juice, standing beside her. He looked up at the white man, his expression stern as he opened his mouth to speak.

Juice: "Regulus Corneas! For what reason are you here! We had an immutable promise that I would be the only one involved in this affair!"

Regulus: "Call it an immutable promise or call it whatever you want, it's all on you for going off saying things yourself and presuming things yourself in what is actually just a normal agreement. Look at you trying to push people into submission with that domineering phrasing of yours, what great and pompous drivel you've started spewing from your Spirit mouth. Trying to restrict my daily actions, even though I'm not permitted any kind of perfidious behavior anyway... So that's what a Spirit is? Have you ever considered putting a stop on the infringements you're making to my mind and person?"

Juice: "Nothing you say presents an answer! If you were displeased with the agreement, we could have discussed it at church! What have you appeared here for! And who told you that this place is..."

???: "—This has happened on my instruction."

Juice's voice trembled in rage as he yelled at the displeased young man, Regulus.

But cutting into their argument, never once before heard in this altercation, arrived a woman's voice. And everyone watching the scene had their own reaction to that voice.

A shiver arose in Juice's eyes, Fortuna's eyes blazed in fury, young Emilia shook her head as she tears up in her mother's arms, Regulus crafted an ominous smile. Emilia swallowed her breath as she watched the memory, while Echidna merely closed her eyes.

She stepped forward, this single girl.

This character standing beside Regulus as he looked down at Emilia, Juice, and Fortuna, was a girl so beautiful that all those who put their eyes on her would tremble. Her long, platinum hair gleamed sweetly as if they were sunlight given form, flowing to her slender neck and streaming down her back.

Long eyelashes bordered her eyes, their shade so deep a blue they seemed to entrap the world, her looks so overwhelmingly attractive that even a god would have hesitated to touch her fingers, all so perfectly delicate.

Her petite frame was adorable enough that even having the wind cradle her appeared risky. What covered her was merely a single white cloth, its whole aura suggesting the world would permit nothing else to touch her skin.

The presence she held was not that of an ordinary person, and her appearance was not what an ordinary person would have had. Her voice possessed an almost magical allure, binding the minds and bodies of those who hear it, so nobody present at that place could say anything, anymore.

Girl: "Is there something wrong? Archbishop Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti?"

Tilting her head, the girl conveyed her question.

Being looked at by her, being talked to by her. Just the fact that any one of her actions were aimed at oneself was enough to inspire an overwhelming euphoria, such that death would not have been an aversive prospect, the sensation unavoidable.

Although she knew that it was the past, Emilia felt her mouth rapidly going dry as she looked at the girl.

—This thing is dangerous.

Juice: “Why are you... No, Regulus Corneas! Why have you brought her here!”

Juice gritted his teeth, rejecting the emotions swelling up inside him.

—This thing, is dangerous.

Regulus: “Do you think it’s possible for me of all people to pull any such stunt like bringing people places with how it infringes on the will of others? It is by her own volition that we are in her presence. Your attempts to make all of this my fault are an amazing exhibition of prejudice. I’d appreciate you not to go off passing your unasked-for judgements on this human being that I am.”

Girl: “Archbishop Regulus. He is rattled. Do not fault him too much.”

The corners of Regulus’s mouth trembled in a frantic attempt to keep ecstasy from showing on his face as he bowed respectfully.

It was strange. Regulus was overwhelming, a being entirely alien. That he was so submissive, obeying her will, illustrated beyond any parallel how abnormal this girl is.

Juice looked up at the girl, his eyes trembling in shock and confusion as he shook his head.

Juice: “That is... remarkably, cruel... Pandora-sama...”

Juice’s breathy voice made the girl smile faintly. That girl’s smile, blessed by the world, harbinger of even greater felicity. The girl, Pandora, answered all gazes aimed at her with a tolerance that permitted everything.

She spread her arms wide, as if her small reach would cradle everything in existence.

Pandora: “Now, shall we begin? —For the fulfilment of cardinal desire of us Witch Cultists.”

Fortuna: “PANDORAAAAAAAAAAAAA!!”

With young Emilia sheltered behind her, Fortuna thrust out her arms to generate a blue magic circle before her. Icicles materialized with overwhelming momentum, their aim set directly on Pandora.

Pandora: “Goodness.”

Fortuna: “Be impaled, and apologize to my brother and the rest!!”

Pandora casually put her hand to her mouth, and Fortuna’s magic attacked. Each of the icicles was as large as an adult’s arm, their number nearing twenty. They formed at a rate fast enough to appear continuous, shooting one after another— spearing into the astonished girl, before exploding into white vapor.

Crackling of shattering ice rained upon crackling of shattering ice without end, the white smoke cloaking over the surroundings as Fortuna regardless relented for nary a second in her attack. Young Emilia’s mouth gaped open with Fortuna standing before her, her beautiful face twisted in rage as she hoisted up her arms.

Fortuna: “Aaaand now—!!”

Following the motion of her arms as she brought them down, a ball of ice massive enough to decimate the forest trees plummeted down from above. Its aim was true as it slammed into the spot where Pandora had been, white demise drilling itself into the forest ground, marking the girl’s grave.

Not even the older Emilia was able to say anything about Fortuna’s overwhelming magical prowess. Could Emilia, even while borrowing Puck’s power, be able to devise such powerful magic? She had never estimated her mother poorly, but learning her strength had been greater than what she remembered made her shiver. However—

Regulus: “Say... You were paying me absolutely no attention during any of that, were you? You weren’t paying me even the slightest thought and you still opted to entangle me in one of your attacks, honestly don’t you find that suspect? Do you know what it means...? What it means is that you infringed upon my presence, my life, my rights.”

Immediately following the prolonged complaint, the massive ball of ice shattered to pieces from the ground-up. The shards of ice-crystal scattered through the air, as if shards of a dream, the sight of Regulus casually standing there being overwhelming abnormal. Likewise, so was the sight of Pandora standing beside him, uninjured.

Regulus made a show of easily brushing off his coat; despite the ferocity of the attack he sustained not a single injury, in fact, not even his clothes had been sullied in the least. Pandora adjusted her bangs slightly, disrupted by air pressure as they had been.

Most likely Regulus, standing before Pandora, had protected her— but that was preposterous. Emilia had no clue as to what had just happened.

Echidna: “So that’s this generation’s Greed. Considering what an impossible fluke of a meeting it is for me to be witnessing this, it really is very fascinating.”

Emilia: “You know what that was?”

Emilia addressed Echidna, who had moved out of the tree-shade and into a spot where she could better observe the fight. Echidna glanced at Emilia, her eyes narrowing.

Echidna: “I can make a guess, but it’s far from anything definite. If we keep watching this for a little longer, I might be able to figure out what’s going on, but... It doesn’t seem that circumstances will allow for that.”

Emilia: “What do you...”

Echidna: “There they go.”

Although frustrated, Emilia directed her gaze forward. Even with Fortuna’s offensive, the fight had produced zero results and seeing Regulus stepping forward with a displeased look on his face, Juice stretched out his arm.

Juice: “Fortuna-sama, I ask that you take Emilia-sama and withdraw! We are presently powerless against Regulus Corneas!”

Fortuna: “You...! That woman is right there, and you’re telling me to stand down!?”

Juice: “Consider the situation! Who is it that you are protecting in this instant!”

Fortuna: “———!”

Juice bellowed at the belligerent Fortuna. Her face stiffens in shock as she glanced behind her, only to find young Emilia holding anxiously onto her mother's clothes.

Young Emilia: "M—Mother..."

Fortuna: "Emilia!"

Juice: "Please withdraw. From there, rescue the village. The followers who accompanied me to this place share me in my feelings. They will surely aid you."

Fortuna: "If we do that, what will you do?"

Fortuna bent down and held Emilia to her chest, while Juice spoke calmly. She stood up with Emilia in her embrace, looking anxiously at Juice.

Juice: "—Please calm your worry. I am not remaining behind absent of any plan."

Juice, although exuding tension, responded to Fortuna's concerned gaze with a smile. Seeing his expression, Fortuna closed her eyes to shake off her unease.

Fortuna: "I'm coming back to help you."

With that, Fortuna broke into a run through the forest, Emilia in her arms. Emilia struggled in her grip, peeking her head out from over Fortuna's shoulder.

Young Emilia: "Juice—!!!"

Juice: "——"

Juice turned to glance at Emilia, his expression somehow relieved as he raised his hand. With that, and with Fortuna and Emilia sprinting deep into the forest, Juice disappeared from the couple's view.

Emilia: "...It's strange. Me, I was taken away, so I shouldn't be seeing what happens here."

Echidna: "Don't disparage these worlds of memory I have constructed. Your memories may be the starting point, but the construction comes from my algorithms and takes reference from the Book of Wisdom. To an extent, it's simple to compensate for the events which you haven't seen. Although..."

Standing aside the bewildered Emilia, Echidna's gaze tracked the path of Fortuna's escape.

Echidna: "Speaking for the sake of overcoming your Trial, it's correct that we follow them. What do you think? Should we transition over?"

Echidna indirectly announced that Emilia was supposed to follow Fortuna. Which was a correct statement, rationally speaking. The Trial concerned Emilia's past, so whatever young Emilia was seeing and doing now should be prioritized. But—

Emilia: "Echidna... that kind of sounded like you're trying to make me go that way."

Echidna: "..."

Emilia: "Am I overthinking it... No, that's not it. Your phrasing and attitude just then were weird."

Echidna: "...Whatever you think is up to you. And besides, this side's moving again as well."

Echidna went without answering Emilia's question, her expression blank as she stepped back a small distance. Her retreat was probably to avoid getting showered any side-damages from the imminently-starting fight.

No matter how terrible the damage incurred, nothing would affect Emilia or Echidna. But if anything were to alter the surroundings, they could not avoid the impact the earth they are standing on.

Regulus: "Well wasn't that cool of you, Petelgeuse? But whose permission do you think you have to be doing these things? Do you have any idea at all why I'm here? Think about it in any way you can possibly conceive, and it's obvious I'm here on business. Not with you, with the other one. Getting in my way here means you're obstructing me from doing what I ought to do. It's infringing, my rights."

Juice: "Say anything you wish, Regulus Corneas. But, with my being at stake, I must not allow you any passage further!"

Regulus: "Well said. Not that I could give less of a care about you being one of the founders of the Witch Cult, but how wonderfully said, when some smidgen of past contributions was what landed you in the seat you're occupying. How can you possibly believe you have any hope of beating me, properly chosen into my seat as I am?"

Juice: "That... I will now present."

Regulus's anger intensified over the course of his egotistical strings of logic, to which Juice quietly responded. His hand reached into his robes, his expression steeled with determination. To Emilia, it looked the expression of a man resolved for death.

Emilia: "No... Juice, what are you doing!?"

Emilia's vicarious experience of her past had led her to remember her nickname for him. With the situation such that he was resolved for death, Emilia promptly reached out her arm in an attempt to stop him. However, there was no way for Emilia to influence the story of the past.

Her outstretched hand passed through him, feeling no touch of the palm that she had grasped in her youth.

Regulus: "That's..."

From his pocket, Juice withdrew a small, black box.

Regulus's brows furrowed at first, but he promptly seemed to guess its true identity as his eyes shot wide open. As Regulus showed shock for the first time, Juice's resolute gaze pierced through him.

Juice: "You should be able to feel it. Your hands have also held it once before."

Regulus: "I am aware. Very aware, and so my jaw's too busy gaping at your abject stupidity for me to speak. Perhaps you were keeping that hidden on your person thinking it'd be your ace or whatever else idea you've come up with, but couldn't you tell from the moment you had it anywhere near you? You! Are unqualified to have that! And it's not you, but the thing that's decided that!"

Juice: "...Indeed, I possess no compatibility with it. Owing to that, I have merely held what was entrusted to me and nothing else. However, it also serves for the sake of junctures such as these."

Pandora: "Archbishop Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti."

Juice responded quietly to the infuriated Regulus.

Pandora, not having moved an inch from her original spot, cut into their conversation. Pandora's face was tranquil as Juice raised his head.

Pandora: "Happy travels."

Juice: "-----"

No hostility or goodwill or ill will or anything, just simple words of blessing. And so being, Emilia could not prevent her horror, and neither could Juice. The blessing almost looked to have butchered Juice entirely as he grimaced, enduring the pain. He twisted the box in his hand, taking off the lid.

Inside the box upon his palm is a black, squirming "something".

Juice: "I beg you forgive me, Flugel-sama."

With that, Juice pressed both the dark something and the box to his chest. Instantly, the "something" snapped onto Juice's body like droplets of water, compounding in volume explosively to envelop him wholly.

It was as if Juice was being absorbed by some viscous creature. Emilia shrieked in silent grief as that "something" shrouded Juice's body, constricted him.

Regulus: "Imbecile."

For the first time, Regulus phrased his judgements succinctly, in a single breath. His scornful gaze was fixed on Juice, enveloped in the "something" as he lifted his arms to the heavens, his mouth agape and shrieking. Not as if in pain, not as if in joy, but as if some other emotion is throwing his being into disarray.

Emilia: "-----"

A baffling sound joined the shrieking.

The sound of someone clapping their hands.

Pandora: "Magnificent."

Whispered platinum Pandora as she gave her applause. As she watched Juice, swallowed and panting in the wake of a torrent of emotions, her cheeks had reddened in ecstasy. The slight hitch in her breathing was, unmistakably, because the scene is exciting her.

Regulus: “Pandora-sama?”

Emilia was not the only one with questions about Pandora’s attitude, as Regulus voiced the same thoughts. He furrowed his brows at the clapping Pandora. She glanced back at Regulus, her cheeks still red, aborting her applause to point at Juice.

Pandora: “Archbishop Regulus Corneas.”

Regulus: “Yes.”

Pandora: “He is coming.”

Instantly, Regulus flipped, hanging upside down, and was flung high into the sky overhead.

Regulus: “Wha—?”

It was the same kind of infantile violence as grabbing a doll by the leg and flinging the thing away. Regulus had not a clue as to what was happening either, making a dumb noise as he hit the apex of the throw— Only to slam back down to the earth. Having obviously transcended terminal velocity in his fall, it seemed that he had been thrown with his leg still grabbed by something.

Helpless, Regulus smashed to the ground head-first.

Out thunders the echoing boom as the earth burst apart, the trees caught in the crash falling and falling in sequence toward Regulus’s point of impact. The secondary attack pinned Regulus beneath the lumber, silence falling upon the forest.

Emilia fell speechless, her blank mind working frantically to figure out what on earth had just happened.

She had not seen a single thing. But supposing there was something she did make out—

???: “I am sure I did inform... Desu.”

Fallen to his knees and dressed in black clothing, blood streamed from the man's eyes as he gazed forward.

Glaring at the gaps between the trees and the rising plumes of dust, breathing ragged and having turned his resolve into a victorious bet, was this man.

Freed from the agony of being shrouded in black "something", he stood.

Juice— No. This man, was Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti.

Petelgeuse: "I will not allow you to pursue them... You shall not be allowed to pass from this point—
DESU!!"

Illustration from Volume 14, coloring by Setowi (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 119 - Back Then, Even Now, Love Unchanging

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 3 “The Day Alpha Orionis Laughed”, Parts 2-3

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 19

Streaming tears of blood and gritting his teeth, Juice shrieked. Emilia could not stop the goosebumps from running down her spine.

Until only a moment before, a black “something” had been trying to subsume Juice’s body. It had stopped gorging on his outside, and was presently squirming within him.

Juice’s body spasmed, and pitched, beneath his black vestments. The blood seeping through the thick fabric suggested how gruesome his state was, and informed any witnesses of the unimaginable nightmare unfurling in his interior.

Emilia: “Juice...”

What on earth had Juice put inside him?

And what had been that attack that had toppled Regulus? It was like she couldn’t see what was happening, giving Emilia a sense of déjà vu. It was almost as if, just some moments prior, she had witnessed the exact same—

???: “You have proven your resolve magnificently. Archbishop Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti.”

A breezy female voice interrupted Emilia’s thoughts.

The one speaking calmly had been Pandora, looking down at Juice as he breathed raggedly and spit blood. Even while watching Regulus being shunted into the sky, her tranquil countenance had remained utterly unshaken.

Pandora: “You have done well to take in that Witch Factor, being that you are unqualified. With my name as Pandora, I confer to your resolve and to your ironclad will the seat of Sloth.”

Juice: “Do you believe that I desire any such seat? What I presently desire is merely one thing. Without a moment of regret for my sacrifice, the safety of that family!”

Fortuna and Emilia were gone from that warzone. Juice had resolved to stake his lifeblood on their escape. Pandora’s brows perked up in surprise, when a redness flushed her cheeks, her smile intoxicated.

Pandora: “Love. Very wonderful.”

Juice: “It is an emotion that you will never understand!”

Pandora, persistently transcended and aloof. Juice, prepared to fight to the end.

He supported himself painfully on one knee as he raised his trembling arm, forcing his bloody eyes wide as he screamed.

Juice: “Authority of Sloth— Unseen Hand!!”

Overwhelming pressure erupted from Juice’s position.

But Emilia’s eyes could not discern the nature of this force. Juice had merely extended his arm with a yell, yielding no visible changes in the world. Even so—

Emilia: “The forest’s being torn down!?”

Throughout the area surrounding Juice, as if beset by invisible serpents, the aftermath of destruction spread. Trees snapped, earth shattered, clumps of dirt and grass scattered through the air.

Juice: “Aaaa... aaaaAAAAAAAAAAH!!”

All while indiscriminately ravaging Juice’s surroundings, the destruction answered to his scream, directing its path toward Pandora. Although faced with demolition akin to an oncoming giant, trampling over the woods, she showed no indications of moving from that spot.

Therefore, the destruction proceeded on its course, capturing the small Pandora and—

???: “Say.”

Juice: “———!?”

???: “I came here, I am present here, so what do you think you’re doing in moving the situation along without paying the slightest of mind to me? Giving and wantless as I am, I think that now’s a suitable enough time for me to be angry.”

On the instant the invisible serpent was about to reach Pandora, a white figure cuts into the attack’s path.

His hair fluttering, Regulus’s raised hand had stopped the shockwave. An impact which would have killed any ordinary person washed over him as he simply stood there, absolutely nothing happening to him. Or even that was understating it. He had been slammed into the ground with a force strong enough to burst the earth apart, his body supposedly buried in the soil. But never mind injuries, there wasn’t even a speck of dirt on him.

Emilia: “No way...”

Her hand to her mouth, Emilia was speechless.

She could at least understand his safe return from Fortuna’s surprise attack. Had he been in possession of combat ability far exceeding that of Fortuna, it was possible that he had managed to defend against the lethal attack.

But Juice’s invisible strike presented a different story. There was no white fog to obstruct Emilia’s view this time— She had plainly witnessed Regulus being thrown into the air, and then slammed into the ground. He had, undefended, been slammed into the ground.

There was still some million in one chance that it hadn’t wounded him.

But the absolute lack of dirt or soil or whatever filth on him was beyond any explanation. There was some kind of trick, preventing attacks— no, preventing outside effects from influencing Regulus.

Juice: “Regulus Corneas!”

Regulus: “Can I say how unpleasant that is? The factor has not acknowledged you, and there you are ignoring your bodily collapse to force the thing into submission. You don’t think that’s an insult to us who reached our seats by way of proper process? That it doesn’t wound the unwavering speck of pride I have in myself?”

In line with the swing of Juice’s arm, Regulus’s face rebounded.

His neck rotated as if he had been punched, but when he promptly returned his head to proper position, not a trace of the blow besmirched his face. He simply furrowed his brows in displeasure, undefended as consecutive punches proceeded to batter him.

Echidna: “I don’t think staying here will show us any particular developments.”

Juice’s offensive to Regulus’ defensive as he mercilessly repelled the attacks continued.

Emilia watched her old friend staking his life in battle, and Echidna addressed her from behind. Emilia glanced back, glaring the expressionless Witch.

Emilia: “You’re telling me to leave? But look at what’s happening to Juice, how frantically he’s trying!”

Echidna: “Though, the question of whether his efforts are going to reach a desired result does leave some room for debate. And unfortunately, I have no intentions of debating with you. It doesn’t interest me to torment the weak, and hearing even one unimportant syllable out your mouth is the pinnacle of unpleasant.”

Emilia: “Then it should be fine for us to stay quiet and watch. I’ll—”

—Remain here, and see Juice’s resolve through to the end.

But as she started making that assertion, Emilia’s own heart kept her from saying anything. Her hand failed to touch anything at her chest, and so she recalled why she came here. It had been to challenge the Trial and overcome her past.

Emilia was currently witnessing her legitimate past, which she had wanted to forget.

Juice’s fight here had assuredly happened, and perhaps its outcome was what she ought to watch over, rather than what had become of Fortuna and young Emilia.

—But that would have been taking Subaru’s feelings, who had seen her off, and Juice’s feelings, who had attempted to secure Emilia and Fortuna’s escape, and betraying both of them.

What happened to Fortuna and Emilia after Juice presented them their escape?

She needed to unearth more of her slumbering, unrecovered past, and reveal the answer.

Echidna: “It seems like even your deficient brain can understand which decision is wiser.”

Emilia: “...You’re right. Let’s follow me and Mother. Will Juice...?”

Echidna: “Don’t worry, it’s a battle between Archbishops of Sin. The scales won’t tip in either direction so easily. It’s another story supposing someone else joins the fight... But it’s inconceivable that she would involve herself in battle anyway.”

The ferocity of Juice and Regulus’ fight compounded.

Blood trailed from Juice’s eyes, his nose, his mouth. The unseen destruction he manipulated shot up in accuracy and force, parallel to the increasing destruction of his insides.

But Regulus remained so unchanged and ordinary it was abnormal. The destruction showering his undefended form, he merely stood there with a bored expression, looking down upon Juice’s resistance.

It felt like if he chose to go on the offensive, the situation’s trend would instantly shift.

Pandora: “Haaaaaa...”

Echidna’s gaze was directed at Pandora, heart racing and expression aroused.

Indeed, it seemed that she was not going to involve herself in the fight. A beautiful girl faced with an abnormal battle, panting rather sexually— but disregarding all that strangeness—

Echidna: “I’m changing the scene— To you and your mother, escaped into the forest.”

Emilia: “—Uh.”

Following Emilia’s conclusion, Echidna raised her hand and clicked her fingers.

Everything in Emilia's vision warped as the forest scenery shifted, the false feeling of the ground beneath her feet being covered over with something new abruptly leading her to stumble.

She raised her head. No destruction had reached this familiar spot, nor this section of the forest.

???: "No! Mother, no! Please don't leave me!"

Hearing the shrill voice of a crying child, Emilia jerked her head up.

In front of her was a familiar tree, its inside hollowed out and re-purposed into a room large enough to shelter a small child— it was what her young self and her mother had called the Princess Room.

Right outside its entrance, Fortuna and crying young Emilia were talking, Emilia clinging to Fortuna's chest. Fortuna grasped her daughter's shoulders, frantically—

Fortuna: "Please listen to me, Emilia. Everything's okay. I'll come... Yes, I'll deal with this quickly and come right back. So please stay hidden here while I'm doing that. Please."

Young Emilia: "No! I don't wanna! Mother Fortuna, you're making a face like Juice's! Like Juice did, what're you gonna do! L—leaving me, what're you... going to..."

Emilia's little hands gripped desperately to keep her mother from escaping.

Fortuna was easily capable of untangling herself from a child's grip if so she desired. Her reasoning for not cruelly untangling herself from Emilia's hands was evidenced by her amethyst eyes, as she gazed at Emilia.

Fortuna was Emilia's mother. So she could not bat away the hands of her crying, clinging daughter.

Young Emilia: "Don't leave me! Let me be with you! I won't tell lies anymore! I won't break promises! I'll be a good girl, I'll be a good good girl... so don't leave, me..."

Fortuna: "Emilia... Emilia, Emilia, Emilia!"

Not wanting to be separated from her mother, and willing to sacrificing everything so that she did not have to separate from her mother, Emilia shrieked. Fortuna, her expression breaking down with emotion, hugged her daughter tight. If she did not press her daughter's face to her chest as she had done, she would have seen it.

Her daughter would have seen her mother's expression, seen the overflowing and unceasing tears, seen the teardrops wetting her mother's cheeks.

Emilia: "Mother, Fortuna..."

Young Emilia had not seen her mother crying, but older Emilia clearly did.

Emilia had never imagined that her perpetually noble, marvelous, strong, respectable, not-weak-in-the-slightest mother, had ever been so wounded and struck with such sorrow she would shed such feverish tears.

As she watched her mother cry, the onlooking Emilia hit her limit.

Unable to put her hands to her cheeks in time, the tears in her eyes appeared one after another.

Having seen this, having seen her mother's face in this instant, she understood. It was not that she had ever doubted it, but truly, at that second, she was again convinced.

Emilia: "Mother Fortuna... was, my real mother..."

Her birth mother, whoever she was, did not hold any significance to Emilia anymore. As if Fortuna's insistence on the fact she was just a substitute could ever make Emilia forget Fortuna was her real mother.

Although spoken by her most precious and respected Mother Fortuna, those words alone were ones Emilia could not accept.

Emilia: "I love you, Mother Fortuna..."

As if anyone was able to say anything that would have made that feeling bend.

???: "Fortuna-sama—!"

A man's voice called out to Fortuna from behind as she held Emilia close.

Fortuna wiped her face with her sleeve, hiding her torrent of tears as she turned to face the speaker. Her gaze landed on an elf man in a lightweight dress.

He was one of the elves living in this village, and someone who Emilia knew as well.

Fortuna: “Archi, how is the village?”

The man ran over while Fortuna questioned him in a regular voice. The man, Archi, looked to have noticed that Fortuna was crying, but refrains from touching on the topic and shook his head.

Archi: “It’s the same everywhere. The Archbishop’s subordinates and the village’s men are reciprocating the fight, but...”

Fortuna: “Isn’t looking good, then.”

Fortuna lowered her gaze, biting her lip at the poor state of the battle. Emilia looked anxiously up at her mother, saying nothing as she gripped her clothes, trembling. Archi notices her shaking, and—

Archi: “It’s okay. Don’t be so scared, Emilia. Believe in all us villagers and us adults. And besides, your mother is a very strong, very scary person.”

Young Emilia: “Mm, mm...”

Fortuna: “Archi, was that «scary» really necessary? Geez...”

Fortuna crossed her arms in indignation, but she did nod to Archi’s roundabout words of consideration. “We can’t stay utterly pessimistic about this”, she thought, gazing at the Princess Room.

Fortuna: “Hiding her here won’t work anymore.”

Archi: “Frustrating as it is, staying in the forest means they will find her before long. Could their goal be...?”

Fortuna: “It’s likely that it is the seal deep in the woods. Where did they find out about it? And even that woman!”

Fortuna seemed to have particular hostility toward Pandora's presence as she bit her lip in frustration, before shaking her head resolutely.

Fortuna: "It's fine, but anyway, I'm going. I'm the strongest fighter in this forest, this isn't the time for me to be dragging my feet."

Archi: "No! We will be the ones to fight! Fortuna-sama, you take Emilia and exit the forest!"

Fortuna: "What will running away accomplish? We will have our peaceful lands stolen from us... that logic isn't going to stop me. Us losing isn't the problem here. The problem here is having them disclose the seal¹⁶⁹!"

Fortuna riposted back Archi's yells with an even stronger tone. And then, embarrassed she had snapped back at him, she said "I'm sorry", and continued—

Fortuna: "I know you resent me. There was honestly no reason for all of you to get wrapped up in this. When Emilia and I came here... we placed burdens you did not need."

Archi: "No! As if there could possibly be any one of us who thinks that!"

Fortuna: "Archi..."

Archi responded ferociously to Fortuna's regretful voice, as if that alone had been something he could not allow her to say. His face reddened, his long elfin ears tapering back in fury.

Archi: "Please stop constantly excluding us from your problems! With our long lifespans, perhaps it may have only felt like the blink of an eye... but even so! We spent the same time together, saw the same things together! Have you forgotten that!?"

Fortuna: "——"

Archi: "Who could possibly think ill of you! When you consider what great debts we owe to you, to your brother... to Emilia's mother, how could you ask that we shamelessly forget what we owe!"

¹⁶⁹ Note from SummaryAnon: "The most common meaning for the word used for «disclose» is «exposing something hidden to the public», but has a second meaning of «graverobbing». On reflection, if you take it extremely literally «disclose the seal» works fine for both meanings. Wonders of language."

His emotions detonating, Archi pleaded with Fortuna while practically in tears. The still-young elf breathed raggedly as he fell to his knees, sniffing as he looks up at Fortuna. She closed her eyes in silence.

Fortuna: “I’m sorry— Once again, I’ve invalidated the family I live with.”

Archi: “Fortuna-sama... I... I may have, said too...”

Fortuna: “No, it was important that you did. I’m sorry, Archi. And thank you.”

Fortuna gave Archi, who was kneeling, her thanks, and presented him her hand. After a moment of hesitation, Archi took Fortuna’s hand and quietly stood back up.

Then Fortuna turned back to face young Emilia.

Fortuna: “Emilia. Your Mother has an important role to play, she has to protect everybody. We’re going to be separated for just a little bit.”

Young Emilia: “D—don’t, Mother. I... I...”

Fortuna: “Please. It’s only for a little bit, so please listen. Go with Archi, and leave the forest. This forest is... going to be reeeeeeally dangerous soon.”

Speaking to Emilia, who was bordering on tears as she shook her head, Fortuna glanced back to Archi. Her determined amethyst gazes made Archi’s skinny body go rigid.

Archi: “For—Fortuna-sama... I,”

Fortuna: “Archi. You’re still young, you still have a future. Please take Emilia, and... I know it’s a hard world to live in, but there has to be hope.”

Archi: “I... Don’t say these things like it’s the end! I—I’m staying in this forest to the last, with everybody!”

Fortuna: “Please, Archi. Emilia... she’s my, my brother’s, my sister-in-law’s, daughter.”

Archi: “———!”

This was merely the voice of a frail woman, absent of Fortuna's usual strength and nobility. Hearing the voice of this woman and mother, Fortuna, tears streamed down Archi's face. Arch buried his face in his hands as he sobbed.

Archi: "It isn't fair...! When you hear something like that, you know it's impossible for me to refuse...! I... want to fight with everyone! But...!"

Fortuna: "I'm sorry. For pushing everything onto children, please forgive us."

Fortuna put her hands on the shoulders of the crying young elf, begging for forgiveness. Arch could not say anything, but accepted Fortuna's request silently.

And now, it was only young Emilia that Fortuna had left to persuade.

Fortuna: "Emilia."

Young Emilia: "No! I, I wanna be with you, Mother! Please! I ask please! Please, let me be with you! I don't wanna, be alone..."

Fortuna: "You're not alone at all. Listen closely."

Emilia bawled with an unreceptive attitude. She put her hands over her ears, trying to shut out every word of her mother's goodbye, which made older Emilia want to pull her young self's cheeks taut.

Not to punish her for disobedience. But so that a single syllable of any of the words that Fortuna was going to speak would not escape her.

Fortuna: "Emilia."

Crouching down, Fortuna embraced Emilia.

She took Emilia's arms in her grasp, stopping her from plugging her ears, and when her daughter acted out by pressing her head against her, Fortuna nuzzled her cheek against her daughter's silver hair. As if she was touching something, someone, more beloved than any other, taking care so that they would not break.

Fortuna: “Your Mother is always right there with you. Right there when you close your eyes, in your memories. Right there when you cradle yourself, in your heart as it grows warm. Right there when you call out, beneath the same sky that your voice echoes. You and Mother are always together. Always, always, forever... together.”

Young Emilia: “Liar. Liar, liar, liar... You’re lying, Mother...”

Fortuna: “Emilia— Promise.”

Fortuna looked at Emilia in the eye, while she attempted to discard her mother’s words as being mere consolation. However, the word “promise” made Emilia swallow her breath, and hold her mouth.

Having been led by Fortuna’s gaze to her outstretched palm, young Emilia too, placed her palm to Fortuna’s.

Fortuna: “Emilia and her Mother will always be together. That’s what I promise you.”

Young Emilia: “Y—you’ll, really... be with me?”

Fortuna: “Yes, really. More than anyone else in the world, your Mother reeeeeeally loves you, Lia.”

That tender call, Lia, caused the dam of tears for young Emilia, for old Emilia, to burst. Sobbing and bawling, two Emilias of present and past.

Young Emilia: “Mother Fortuna... L—love you too... love you, love you...”

Emilia: “I love you. I love you, Mother Fortuna. Love you, sooo much, love you, treasure you...”

The emotions of the two Emilias overlapped, as they frantically answered to the love given to them.

They strained their voices, pressed their bodies close to her, to show that if they did otherwise, they would fail to convey, fail to express, all those feelings in their hearts.

Fortuna: “I love you, Lia.”

On her cheeks, eyelids, forehead, Fortuna’s soft warm lips touched her.

Although she had been permitted to share touch, to share embrace, Fortuna had been late to learn how to express love as a mother, and had never done such things— Which made the present moment the one in which Fortuna truly, from the bottom of heart, first accepted herself as being Emilia’s mother.

Fortuna: “—I’m counting on you, Archi.”

Archi: “...Understood.”

Having conveyed her absolute love to her daughter, Fortuna stood and called for the young man. Arch received the bawling Emilia from Fortuna, holding her firm, and gave a great bow to Fortuna.

Fortuna: “Get away safely.”

Archi: “I will... Yes, I will! I won’t let Emilia... I won’t let this girl be hurt by anybody!”

Fortuna’s cheeks relaxed in relief, then pointing to a road deeper into the forest.

Fortuna: “That way. I’m begging you.”

Archi: “———”

Arch said nothing further and broke into a run, in the direction Fortuna was pointing.

In his hold as he sprinted through the forest, Emilia peeked her head out from behind his shoulder— to sight her mother as she grew distant. She cried out, but her screams went unvoiced.

Fortuna’s sharp eyes soften so tenderly—

Fortuna: “—I love you, Emilia.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Being held by Archi, Emilia looked frantically in the direction where her mother had disappeared.

As if she was begging that her vanished mother would reappear, she went on, her gaze fixed. As if she was hoping that perhaps she would come to follow them.

Archi: “Emilia!”

Emilia’s stubborn heart communicated well to Archi as he held her small form. Archi’s face turned into a mess as he considered what to tell her young heart, having been separated with Fortuna.

Echidna: “—I’m surprised.”

Said Echidna to Emilia, the two running side-by-side in pursuit of Archi.

Still affected by the parting with her mother, and not quite suppressing her weeping, Emilia questioned Echidna using only her gaze, to which the white-haired Witch shrugged.

Echidna: “You did not stay behind, and followed your past self without hesitation. I was certain that it’d be like before when watching Sloth, that you’d prolong the scene with your mother so girlishly.”

Emilia: “...I know I told you earlier. I’m here to watch my past through! Mother, and Juice, and everyone... That’s why they...”

Echidna: “Mhm, mhm. Said something unasked for, didn’t I?”

Looking like she did not get the answer she wanted, Echidna shook her head. Even Emilia was becoming irritated with Echidna’s callousness, but before she could mention it, young Emilia buried her face in her hands.

Young Emilia: “Why? Why? How, come this... happened? I—it’s, because I... I, broke my, promise... and left the, room...”

Archi: “No. No, Emilia. It’s not your fault at all! It’s not Fortuna-sama’s fault, it’s not anybody’s fault! There’s no need to blame yourself!”

Young Emilia: “But then, how come? How come, we’re separated? Mother... and Juice too, how come... Do, do they hate me? Lots of, heaps of people, hate me so, this’s why it...”

Her incredibly sudden parting with Juice and Fortuna has cornered Emilia’s heart so that it was close to breaking. Thinking back on what foreboded this situation, and on her own actions, young Emilia sunk into a sea of self-invalidation.

She had broken her promise. She had left the room she was not meant to leave. She knew about the seal she was not meant to know about. It looked like her own deeds had been the cause for everything that was happening.

Young Emilia: “Should I... have stayed there, stayed in the room? If I did, would, nobody be gone... and I could, be with everybody?”

Archi: “Emilia...”

Young Emilia: “Was, I a bad girl...? Is everybody, in the world going to, hate me... and, I’ll be alone?”

Archi: “No... No, Emilia! Nobody, there’s nobody out there who hates you. The world isn’t here to hurt you. The world’s here so that everybody can celebrate you!”

Arch frantically tried to persuade the bawling Emilia. Part of it was an attempt to stop Emilia’s crying, but a larger part was much like a wish— because he himself would have liked to believe it.

Archi’s shouts struck older Emilia’s heart. It wasn’t just Fortuna and Juice. He and the other villagers had all protected her, loved her, reached out to her to make sure she was not alone.

It was not until this exact instant that she truly remembered. It had always, always been like this.

???: “You over there—!”

With a sharp shout, somebody slipped into the space before Archi as he ran.

The black-robed character jumped out from a gap between the trees, which prompted Archi to stop immediately, his gaze growing wary. But the man raised his hands in response.

Man: “Wait, don’t panic! I’m one of Archbishop Romanée-Conti’s fingers!”

Archi: “The Archbishop’s...!”

Hearing Juice’s name from the breathless man in robes made Archi’s face look relieved. The man approached after seeing that Arch had lost his wariness, and noticed Emilia.

Finger: “That girl... Then, Fortuna-sama couldn’t possibly be...?”

Archi: “There is no need for concern. She’s... She has merely entrusted me with Emilia, and left us together. Fortuna-sama is the most skillful of any of us in the village. She will surely defeat the trespassers, and...”

Finger: “...Though I find this hard to state, I’m afraid that’s a difficult prospect.”

The man lowered his gaze, his voice weak, a complete shift in attitude. Arch raised his brows, to which the man sighed, his expression grave.

Finger: “We have confirmed the presence of the Archbishop of Greed, and our Archbishop has entered combat with him. Were that the only problem, and we repelled the extremist members of the faith, it would have been possible for us to drive them away, but...”

Archi: “Some other issue has...?”

Finger: “—A Witchbeast. The Black Serpent has been loosed in the forest.”

Archi: “———!?”

Archi was visibly stunned by the man’s words. He shook his head in disbelief, gesturing to the forest.

Archi: “That’s ridiculous, impossible! The Black Serpent is even less controllable than the White Whale or Great Rabbit! It’s not like the White Whale, under Gluttony’s command, or the Great Rabbit, whose course can be guided... the Black Serpent is just a natural disaster which listens to nobody! A catastrophe among catastrophes! How!”

Finger: “...Pandora-sama of the Witch Cult has accompanied him. Pandora-sama cannot go so far as to control the Black Serpent with her authority, but she can lead it to a destination.”

Archi: “Pandora? That isn’t a name I’ve...”

Finger: “She exists in secrecy! In the Witch Cult she is taboo not to be spoken, neither by the Archbishop-sama’s faction of moderates¹⁷⁰ nor by the extremists. Now she has come here.”

¹⁷⁰ Might not be clear from the way it’s worded, but this passage is implying it’s a moderate faction led by Petelgeuse.

Archi's shock kept him from saying a single word.

Archi's failure to sink into despair resulted from the heartbeat of the life in his arms. Results from his knowledge that he was not permitted to be pessimist.

Archi: "Fortuna-sama has request that I shall lead Emilia to her escape. Regardless of what may happen to the forest, this girl... this hope, must be protected!"

Finger: "...I will accompany you. Although I cannot say how much this frail person of mine can assist."

Archi's persistent will to fight led the man's crestfallen look to recover its determination. He cast his robe open, revealing rather stout muscled legs for his age, breaking into a run as he took the lead along the path out of the forest.

Finger: "We'll proceed while taking care to avoid the extremists. Now, if we can just exit the forest, prospects should be—"

—Brighter. But in that exact instant, something entangled the leg of the man in the lead, making him topple into the ground. He fell onto his side as Archi cried out, running towards him in a panic. But the man shouted to the approaching Archi.

Finger: "Stay back!!"

Archi: "———!?"

Finger: "My blunder... but to think it came so quickly!"

The man, holding back Archi, raised his fallen body. But, that was all he did. His legs, for some reason, did not move an inch. Because, beneath his overturned vestments, marks like black burn wounds engraved his exposed shins.

Finger: "It's the evil tongue of the Black Serpent! Run!"

Archi: "But——!"

Finger: "I am already beyond saving..."

The man's face rapidly began to change in appearance. His skin from the neck up steadily drowned in marks like black spots, the eyes of his gentle-looking face bulging open, eyeballs close to falling out as his face sank into his skull.

His fingers clawed at his mottled neck, his mouth spilling massive quantities of yellow froth.

Finger: "Blugh, guhbgluh... Ahguh, bgeh..."

Immediately following his agonized moan, his eye sockets, his nostrils, his ears, his mouth, every single orifice began leaking with dingy blood, strangling his life to nothing as it gushed away.

As both Archi and Emilia were subjected to witnessing that pitiful death, neither could keep their usual composure. Even Echidna's expression looked scrunched up in pain.

Archi: "Crucible of Pestilence... Witchbeast of Blight, the Black Serpent!"

His voice strained, Archi stated the name of the man's killer, the beast.

While it may not have responded to its name, the forest that had been silent except for Archi and Emilia's breathing abruptly became a host to another noise.

—The sloshing, of a large animal licking its lips.

—The slithering, of something long and thin crawling across the earth.

The noise was on a ridiculously incorrect scale, its nature hard to pin down accurately. But it nearly resembled the noise of a serpent faced with prey, its tongue flicking out, as it squirmed across the dirt.

Archi: "—Shit!"

Having guessed the true identity of the sound, Archi belatedly realized that himself and Emilia were right in the middle of the Black Serpent's hunting ground. Although aware that yelling only put them at an disadvantage, he had to yell. He could think of no other methods to rebel against the thing.

Although unsure of where to run, Archi sprinted away from the man. He had not a single thought for Fortuna's directions no longer. Right now, he had to escape from this threat. Right now, he had to protect that what ought to be protected.

The frantic resistance of that young elf—

Archi: “Agh—”

—Was cruelly crushed as a vile, black tongue ensnared his right ankle.

The areas of bare skin which the tongue had licked had been besmirched with dark, mottled burn scars. The instant he recognized aw, Arch aimed his open palm at his foot.

Archi: “...Fula!!”

Without hesitation, he fired a blade of wind to sever his scarred leg from the shin down. He had lost his footing, and so he propped up his falling body on a tree trunk. Blood spurted from him, the agonizing pain soldering his brain as he endured, gritting his teeth so hard they caused him severe pain.

Archi: “Humaauh...!”

A crack sounded through the air as Archi’s severed stump began freezing over. White mist rose, Archi shrieking as he forced his bleeding to stop.

His gruesome deeds stunned older Emilia silent. Instant decisions, counteracting the pain. And his strength of heart, as he had not released Emilia from his hold even after all of this.

Young Emilia: “Archi...?”

With her head pressed to his chest, young Emilia had not witnessed Archi’s actions. Neither did Archi possess any intention in the least to let her see them.

Even with his face covered in cold sweat, he gave Emilia an awkward smile.

Archi: “It’s... nothing... I’m... all fine!”

Although his speech was faltering, Archi replied so he would not let Emilia sense there was something wrong. But cruel fate ridiculed evermore the spirit of this noble man.

His leg had been severed, his frantic deeds done to plug the bleeding of his stump— as the uninjured portions of his frozen leg looked as they were drying up, fissuring like a plane of earth bereft of water, the damage spreading.

It was as if Archi's leg was dying like a dry wasteland. And it wasn't stopping at just the leg.

Archi: "...Emilia. Do you see the white flowers between those two trees?"

Young Emilia: "...Mm."

Archi squatted down, the tree supporting his back. Standing on solid ground, Emilia looked in the direction Arch was pointing at, and nodded as she spotted the white flowers.

Arch wiped the sweat from the brow, hiding his agonized expression—

Archi: "Can, you run to those flowers? Run, past the flowers... Go straight... Go straight, ahead..."

Young Emilia: "I, can. I can. But..."

Archi: "Then, get running—"

Although confused, young Emilia now recognized Archi was in incredibly irregular straits, her amethyst eyes wavering.

Wavering because she would be alone. Because again, she would lose someone.

Archi: "Everything's okay. Emilia, you, won't be alone..."

Young Emilia: "Archi..."

Archi: "Now, run off. No matter what you hear, don't look back... Run!"

Archi's sharp command made Emilia's shoulders hitch, and with that, Emilia ran. She withstood the urge to look back, instructed as she had been not to do it.

Archi's words, Fortuna's words, Juice's words, all echoed through Emilia's brain.

Illustration from Volume 14, coloring by DdukaE (source)

So that she could believe that if she did everything as she was told, everything would go back to normal. So that she could convince herself that following instructions was the only hope she currently had.

Running away, leaving him behind, Arch watched Emilia disappear into the direction of hope. He exhaled deeply and rolled up the sleeve of his jacket. The dehydration had already covered his legs and waist, and had reached as far as his abdomen. He could move neither of his legs, and in fact it seemed that just touching them would be enough for them to shatter and disintegrate.

Once the dehydration reached his chest and got to his heart, what would happen?

He heard the slithering of the beast, licking its tongue in the face of prey.

He heard a slithering noise like it was plotting to take the fleeing girl, the forest's hope, the significance of Archi burning away the faint flickers of life he had left.

Archi: "Like anyone could let you get away..."

The slithering stopped its retreat. As if it had regained interest in the still-living prey.

The noise approached. Meaning that although he sensed that the end was approaching, Archi's cheeks relaxed. The fact that death was looming in on him meant that death was growing distant from the girl.

Archi: "I know she'll be okay, Fortuna-sama."

The end slithered closer.

He heard it, and although exposing himself to mortal danger beyond parallel, Archi's pride in his achievements caused him to smile.

Archi: "-----"

That smile, even though parched arid, would remain without ever going dry.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Emilia had long passed the white flowers.

Young Emilia: “Haaa... haaa... haaaaaaa...”

Her breathing hitched as she demanded long strides from her little legs while dashing through the forest.

All while thinking about her mother and Juice and Archi, focused on the idea that running in the direction Arch had indicated was the best thing she could do, unwilling to consider anything else.

Young Emilia: “Aaaahh... Uwaaaaaah!”

She shook her head.

The tears flowed. Desperately, she kept the sobs from pouring out her lips.

What was happening, and why was it happening? Everybody knew something, and she did not know anything.

She did not know what to do, did not know a thing. Was there nothing she could do?

Who were the people attacking Fortuna, Juice, Archi, and the others? What could she do that would make them go away? For what goal had they—

Young Emilia: “The, siel¹⁷¹...”

That was it.

Fortuna and Arch had mentioned something. And Juice’s talks with Fortuna had surely indicated that the object was something important. Meaning, their goal was?

Young Emilia: “—Ah!”

As she ran, Emilia’s feet suddenly hit nothing but air, and losing sight of the ground, she came to realize she had entered a basin sloping downwards.

¹⁷¹ Same as in the previous volume: “Emilia mispronounces “fuuin” (封印) as “fu-in” (フーイン). Let’s keep that adorable childish mispronunciation because why not”.

She immediately reached out to try and stop herself, but the steep incline did not aid the small girl, and on the heels of her momentum, Emilia tripped, tumbled, fell.

Normally, she would have cried from the scrapes and bruises and stood back up.

But this time, with both her body and mind entirely fatigued, the strike of Emilia's head against the ground led her to fall momentarily unconscious.

Young Emilia: "I..."

All this, when she needed to do something. All this, when she thought she had figured it out. With the flame of duty kindled in her little chest, her consciousness faded.

—The story will leave the side of the girl, temporarily to return to the scene of the fight. To see two fates, and to see how they will conclude.

Arc 4 Chapter 120 - Great Elixir Forest, Glaciated Evermore

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 3 “The Day Alpha Orionis Laughed”, Parts 4-5;
Volume 14, Chapter 4 “The Eternal Freezing of the Great Elixir Forest”, Parts 1-4

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 35

—The site had been changed so drastically already that one would forget what it originally looked like.

Traces of destruction as if giant, frenzied serpents had rampaged. All trees have been felled down, some severed from their roots and dancing violently through the air.

Several craters, too deep to sight the bottom, had been gouged open on the fractured earth. The entire region had been devastated to a point of imminent collapse, which would have it transform into a pit to hell.

This destruction was entirely the work of one man, standing in the dead center of the devastation. Blood spilled fresh from his face, his breath faltering as he struggled to keep himself upright. This desecrator had taken inside Deadly Sin unfitting to him, his life whittled away in exchange for power.

He is Juice— Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti.

Juice: “———”

He breath ragged, his face so devoid of color that it had transcended the word “pallid”.

But even so, he had regained his calm compared to beginning of the conflict. It seemed like the raging “something” had, for the moment, accepted the uncomfortable environment as its temporary lodgings.

His bones and flesh had already been ravaged from inside, but control of his body was now entirely entrusted to Juice, the power acting as equivalent for rent having increased in strength and accuracy.

Wielding this Authority, overwhelming destructive power.

Unseen Hand's strength was immense, allowing him to extend his arms to places he could not touch, letting his fingertips contact what he could not contact, sending power crashing into someone he would normally have no hopes of opposing.

Juice's power, being the leader of the Witch Cult's moderate faction, would never match that of the extremists what with their militaristic streak. And that went for double when talking about the person who possessed the greatest ability for combat in the cult, the Archbishop of Greed, Regulus Corneas.

That Juice was managing to somehow face Regulus without instantly being turned into gory paste was unmistakably the achievement of the Witch Factor he subsumed. But Juice's life-threatening frantic resistance—

Juice: "How... about this, DESU..."

Glaring ahead with bloodshot eyes, Juice strangled out his voice as he held his trembling arms aloft.

Unseen Hand's had unleashed an unrelenting, uninterrupted storm of concentrated violence. Having been endlessly battered around by the thing, the enemy vanished beneath the dense plumes of dust.

Regulus: "Oh, you're done?"

When the smoke settled down, it revealed Regulus merely standing there, looking bored with his finger in his ear.

His figure as he stood there, rigorously probing his ear, was completely detached from the environment surrounding him. Absolutely none of the assault had affected him. As if he had been pasted onto the scene of the annihilation in post-production.

Juice: "Even with... all of this!"

Regulus: "How about toning it down and taking a moment to realize? To realize the discrepancy. To realize that between you and me there is a clear discrepancy in power. And you can disregard the matter of how good your compatibility against me may hypothetically be, because that is beside the issue here.

There's nobody out there who can defeat me or wound me. You can go ahead and absorb a Witch Factor, and then go ahead and bring the Dragon and Sword Saint along with you, it's still not going to work."

Juice: "...Perhaps you may, say so... Although it rather appears that I have... purchased from you, considerate time... Desu..."

Regulus: "Because there is no need for me to get into a panic to overtake you. Can't you see it? I'm just here as a chaperone. Do you think I'd go out of my way to come to this kind of place if I wasn't? Being in my mansion surrounded by my wives is enough to satisfy the minuscule fraction of peace I desire. But, well, I have to say I'm starting to get bored."

Regulus slowly stepped forward in response to Juice's words. He walked calmly through the transmogrified forest, descending from his position until his eye level matched that of Juice, and swished his arm casually.

It was like he was swatting an insect. Juice braced for anything to happen. Calling within himself, he sacrificed his flesh and blood to the dark, squirming thing to gain power. He took in a breath, ready to use the rush welling up inside him to batter Regulus around——When both of Juice's arms went flying through the air, having been severed at the shoulders.

Juice: "Wha—!?"

Regulus: "What a dull reaction. With how you've been annoying me, don't you think it's simple courtesy to at least writhe in a form of agony that's fun to watch? Though I suppose there was no point expecting anything."

Juice: "Aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaahhhhhhhhhh!!"

His arms splaying blood about the surroundings as they tumbled across the ground, the eyes of the disarmed Juice shot open wide as he shrieked.

The cut at his shoulders was sloppy, leaving an ugly wound as if a beast's fangs had mangled his arms off. His right arm was gone from the shoulder down, his left arm severed about halfway down his humerus.

Juice convulsed violently due to the gruesome pain. Bloody froth spilled from his mouth, the excess of pain leading him to grit his teeth so hard that he broke tooth after tooth after tooth. His legs, already lacking in strength at the best of times, faltered and dropped him down to his knees. His forehead hit the ground, despair creeping over Juice's expression.

Regulus: "In the end, your resolve or your determination or your whatever and so on and all those other things I suppose we're going to talk about, here you see what they amount to. And it's the same for everyone, so don't bother worrying about it. There's nobody out there who can live while carrying more than their arms' capacity. Live while satisfied in your own little world, fulfilled, focused only on your own concerns, according to what fits your character best. And you don't even have arms to hold anything now... The conclusion here is obvious, don't you think?"

Juice: "Aaah! Aaaaaaaahhh..."

Regulus: "And being entirely honest, it's not like I'm enjoying this. You might see me tormenting you like this and perhaps think that I'm some kind of sadist who feels pleasure when inflicting pain on others, but actually that would be an incredible misapprehension, and a great insult to the personality I possess. I'm not doing this because I want to do it. There's nothing in my life that I do because I want to do it anymore. Fulfilled as I am, regardless of whether the nuance is a good one or a bad one, my preference is to reject the influence of anyone else. I am without want. I am fully fulfilled. You don't have any right in the slightest to resent me. I was simply walking along, and you were simply in my path."

The spouts of blood became slower, Juice's screams transforming from something loud into something quiet. With the quiet, ragged puffs of his breathing, Juice's form spasmed like an insect as he expelled bloody foam, seconds away from demise.

Regulus's words carried no malice, or hostility, or anything at all. Because as far as he cared he was stating the absolute truth, and no reason existed to pair it with any emotion of any form. Regulus had no need to hide anything, and so truly believed this.

Regulus Corneas was influenced so little by Juice's desperate deeds that his bangs did not even sway in the resultant breeze.

Regulus: "Speaking in full sincerity, this was all very anticlimactic. I was called along which had me thinking that something would happen, and... Well, not that there's ever been a situation which hasn't resulted in an anticlimax for me, but if I'm being summoned the best you could do is to show me something that can hope to counterbalance the effort I put into walking around."

Pandora: "I give my apology, Archbishop Regulus. I have put you through the pains to accompany me, and the trip has failed to meet to your expectations."

Pandora, who had only been watching the battle until then, addressed Regulus as he looked down at the nigh-withered Juice. She had also kept through the entirety of Juice's onslaught with Unseen Hand while standing stock still in the very same spot where she had first appeared.

Much like Regulus, her outfit had not changed an inch. Not a speck of dirt polluted the white cloth enshrouding her small, thin frame, the purity of the garment preserved, and her beautiful face suffered not a single wound.

Regulus: "I do not mean to say that you are at fault, Pandora-sama. I'm just saying that all these forest people and the idiots in the moderates are unanimously pathetic. Trash without even the slightest intention to improve themselves. They're not like me, sitting at heights where the very concept of improvement carries no necessity, they have these attitudes while being mundane rabble whose lives are over if they ever stop struggling. They're rejecting the idea of meeting their own capacity¹⁷², and from my perspective as Greed, I have to say that level of desire is inconceivably shallow."

Pandora: "It is not the case that every person in existence is able to consider matters in the same manner you do or reach the same domains you have. You are more special than anybody else, and satisfied in that self of yours. You are perfect and glorious. While they are imperfect and also glorious."

Regulus: "I'm not the most favorable when it comes to debates. I have no compunctions against receiving your praise, but I cannot say that I'm seeking commendation either. Though, there was no need to bring myself and the Black Serpent alongside, was there? You could easily dominate this forest on your own, Pandora-sama."

¹⁷² The expression used is "器を満たす", which means literally "fulfill/filling one's vessel". This word choice is extremely interesting, as this is not the only place it is used in relation to the sin of Greed.

Somewhere in that forest, at that moment, the pestilent Witchbeast was lurking. The presence of the repugnant and malicious thing prompted Regulus's disgust, all without him realizing that from anyone else's perspective, he would be worthy to be thought of in the same manner.

Pandora nodded to Regulus's words.

Pandora: "Yes, if we only consider overpowering their resistance, then it would indeed be possible for me to achieve it by myself. However, those are not the terms in consideration. As I assuredly did not come here for the purpose of harming the inhabitants of this forest."

Regulus: "This is what you're saying after bringing the indiscriminate Black Serpent here and leaving it to its devices? I'm sure that you're being entirely genuine about not meaning to cause harm... Then have you rationalized that fatalities are simply unavoidable?"

Pandora: "When pursuing a noble goal, it is essential that some lives be given as sacrifice. But even so, one cannot forget people's zeal to rebel against even that wicked fate. I believe that the beauty of such heart cannot be invalidated."

Regulus: "You're diverging from the point, but essentially you're talking about killing people to achieve your goals. Hahahaha. If that's all we're discussing, then I'd call it preferential to state it plainly and clearly. Compared to making me waste a day of my time racking my brain pointlessly, far more preferential."

Pandora: "I feel very fondly about your approach."

Regulus shrugged at Pandora's enchanting smile. Then he lowered his gaze back to Juice, who would probably die if left alone, and began walking over to deliver the finishing blow.

Regulus: "Well it's not like I think you'll die because that body has died, but pulling your insides out and keeping you pinned down does make our operations easier. Though it's pretty strange to be talking about pinning down someone who doesn't have a body.¹⁷³"

¹⁷³ Translation note from SummaryAnon: "Doesn't have a body, or more accurately, doesn't have a head or neck. I'm 99% sure this fuzzing doesn't matter at all (the 1% is the chance Juice is the mysterious kind of Spirit that has pinkies or something) but hey."

Regulus raised his leg, ready to stomp down and smash Juice's skull to bits. But right before he can make contact, a voice cut into the scene.

???: "Al Huma!!"

Obeying the canto, matter took in the world's Mana to achieve form. Appearing alongside the explosive noise was a ball of ice so giant it encompassed all the visible sky above. Trees were felled and it became easy to observe the firmament, but the only thing to observe was a vast sheet of pale blue ice.

Regulus: "Ahh... I swear, nobody can give it a break."

Regulus looked up to see the continent of ice floating above him, and clicked his tongue. Immediately, the immense ball of ice plunged down from directly above him.

The earthquake, and the unavoidable shockwave, battered Regulus entirely. The explosion of air and rumbling of earth exacerbated even further the collapse of that forest, already only describable as a disaster zone.

The sheet of ice shattered into fragments, with the crushed trees and boulders, the ground pulverized under this incredible mass, changing shape yet again within only one single day.

Shards of white ice danced through the air, scintillating. Among their gleam was a man toppled limply on his side, with a silver-haired woman dragging him.

Woman: "Juice! Juice, keep steady! This is... What am I meant to..."

Juice: "For... tuna, sama... is that, you... Desu...?"

In response to that call, a weak light returned to Juice's nigh-dead eyes, his breaths quiet like an insect's. His life still hanged in the balance, but he still managed to barely remain conscious. Fortuna nodded several times to Juice.

Fortuna: "Yes, yes, it's me. Juice, you're..."

Juice: "I am, fine, desu... This flesh was, due to wither someday... The finger who trusted me, and entrusted it to me, will understand... Of more concern is, Emilia-sama?"

On the very moment the dirt and pebbles that Regulus had thrown hit the ground, out pealed the staccato noise of raindrops beating on a rooftop as countless tiny holes bore through the earth. Each hole was only the size of a grain of sand, but their density and piercing ability presented an issue.

The mystery attack had concluded by only gouging open the earth, but one fragment of the assault had managed to hit a tree which still precariously retained its original shape. That tree, with a trunk so thick that it was questionable whether Fortuna could loop her arms around it, ripped open with countless tiny holes and bursted into smithereens.

It was easy to envision that if someone were to be hit by that, it would conclude with them instantly exploding into a mist of blood. And the most terrifying thing was—

Regulus: “Why the hell are you people dodging! Just take the attack, turn into gore, and go be food for the bugs! That goes for you, Petelgeuse, you pile of scum, and for that woman too. I was thinking you might have been okay to take as my seventy-ninth wife, and then you go and pull this rubbish!”

Regulus bent down, arms to the ground as before.

The most terrifying thing was that a deed of destruction on this level meant nothing more than throwing dirt around for Regulus— and took no greater effort than that. Child’s play.

The enraged and belligerent Regulus had taken a direct hit from Fortuna’s strenuous attack, for nothing to happen to him. Aberrant, was the word to describe it. Regulus Corneas possessed transcendental powers in both attack and defense. And all that incredible power was locked up in a body hosting an egotistical, infantile mind.

A dangerous entity, as if power identical to the Dragon had been given to a petulant child— That was how Fortuna judged this monster.

Regulus: “If you’re not keen to becoming chunks of gore, how about I pluck off your limbs and arrange them as decoration! I’ll make you regret having made a fool of me... of Greed!”

Pandora: “Please wait, Archbishop Regulus.”

Just as Regulus prepared to once again shower Juice and Fortuna in dirt, Pandora beckoned him to stop. His hands still touching the ground, Regulus turned his head to look at Pandora. The rage remained thick in his expression, and even when facing Pandora, who he had treated respectfully, he showed no signs of discarding his anger.

Regulus: "...What, Pandora-sama? Right now, I am midway through shaking in uttermost rage as my rights are being violated. You have some task for me, when I'm like this? What are you scheming, trying to stop me? Take careful mind of your words, and, answer me right now..."

Pandora: "Please calm your anger, Archbishop Regulus. I do not permit you to kill them here. Is there nothing that you feel in seeing them?"

Regulus: "Seeing me right now, do you think I look like there's nothing I feel...? I go prostrating myself for this, don't get fucking carried away, you woman!"

Seemingly forgetting they status as allies, Regulus gave a swing of his arm with his target being Pandora. Up went the spray of dirt, cutting straight through and decimating the trees in its path to strike her. It connected, her body exploding into a splatter of blood and gore.

Fortuna: "...No way."

Fortuna muttered in astonishment as she witnessed Pandora's evisceration. Someone she had loathed, now killed ruthlessly due to a breakup of internal relations.

Fortuna had utterly believed that Pandora would be in possession of some ace to disregard even Regulus's attacks, but here she was, strewn in scarlet chunks across the ground, fertilizer for the ruined earth.

Regulus: "This is what happens when you prattle bullshit at me. How come nobody can perform any basic goddamn form of consideration? Don't get in my way. Don't obstruct my path. Don't interfere with my actions. Don't rebel against what I do. Am I really asking for anything so difficult? Say, what are your thoughts on this?"

Regulus turned to Juice and Fortuna, a shadowy gleam in his eye.

That was not the time to celebrate that the number of enemies had been reduced by one. Even after the number had diminished from two to one, considering the enemy remaining was a person of absolute strength, the situation did not change at all.

Fortuna had used the greatest power in her disposal to hit Regulus with that surprise attack. And even after the attack had hit him, Regulus's body had not suffered even a single wound and his clothes had not suffered a single wrinkle. It was frustrating to admit, but Fortuna could not defeat Regulus.

Juice had also been so cornered that his body had broken down. Even if Fortuna asked him to do the impossible and fight until he expired, the battle would be one-sided.

All Fortuna was able to do was to have them lure Regulus's fury, and buy time for her daughter to run.

Juice: "Let me, deal with this... Fortuna-sama."

Fortuna: "But Juice, you..."

Juice: "No matter how... much blood I shed, until all of my bodies are deceased, I can... keep going, desu. I... I, shall amass time, for you... to, flee..."

Fortuna: "Don't say these ridiculous things."

Fortuna's cheeks relaxed as Juice attempted to upright himself in her arms. The fact she was able to craft a smile at a time like that puzzled her, and made her rather proud.

Fortuna: "You're telling me to leave you here and run? If I meant to do that, I wouldn't have come back here. I parted with Emilia to come back here, telling me to leave now is impossible."

Juice: "Desu, however... then, if so, why... have, you returned? I... I..."

Fortuna: "To keep you from dying. And if you do die, for me to be at your side."

With Fortuna's amethyst eyes gazing on, Juice's bloody eyes wrenched open. Considerably lighter now that he had lost his arms, Fortuna embraced Juice's body closer, to tell him from breathing range.

Fortuna: "In a world without you, in a forest you no longer visit, what is there for me? I'm weak. I can't survive a long period of time without you there."

Juice: "You are not weak in the..."

Fortuna: "I'm weak. I act strong when I'm around you and Emilia, that's all."

With that, Fortuna helped Juice up. So that he stands, her body close against his as she supported him.

Seeing the couple standing in what could be almost understood as an embrace, Regulus's face turned abjectly disgusted.

Regulus: "Look at how fired up you are after such a protracted period of ignoring my question. What is going on? What can this be? After I showed you how incredible the power gap between us is, after I taught you in such succinct and plain terms, how can you possibly figure that you have the capacity to do anything? What on earth are you people thinking?"

Fortuna: "Windbag of a man. After how our attitudes have shown it, surely you can tell? Thanks for all the lectures, but we've got only one response."

Juice: "Yes... DESU."

Fortuna and Juice shared a glance, and speaking together—

Both: "—Like we care, idiot."

Their voices overlapped, with Fortuna flipping Regulus the bird as a bonus. With that, Fortuna and Juice scrambled up whatever power they had available, Regulus's face flashing crimson in fury.

Regulus: "...! Very well! I'll take the two of you, butcher you into indistinguishable chunks, hurl you into the Black Serpent's dingy maw—"

???: "I told you to wait, Archbishop Regulus."

For the third time came an interruption to Regulus's plans.

Pandora's arm descended from above to press Regulus's head down, his body proceeding to sink into the earth without any resistance. Having been buried chin-deep into the earth in under a second, Regulus glared up at Pandora as she landed beside him.

Regulus: "Again and again and again!"

Pandora: “Should it be necessary that I discourage your will, I shall. As of now, my goals in having brought you here have been largely accomplished. You have done far enough, and I would appreciate you go home.”

Regulus: “You drag someone along, but the second you’re satisfied you demand they leave? Do you think anybody could agree with these ideas of yours? Until I’ve settled this irritation of mine and returned to being my usual self, I will assuredly never——”

Pandora: “I see. Then I will do it. Archbishop Regulus could not possibly be here. He is in his mansion, spending his time with his wives.”

Regulus: “Wai——”

The next instant, just as Regulus began shouting something, he snapped out of view.

It wasn’t that he had been sunken entirely into the dirt. He had truly blinked, vanished out of this scene. In the spot where he had once stood, the hole formed because he had been plunged into the dirt was gone.

All as if affirming Pandora’s statement, that he could not possibly have been there.

Pandora: “Being that the racket has left the scene, we can now discuss at a more leisurely pace.”

Fortuna: “...Can I ask you something first? How come you’re here? I know I just saw you die a minute ago.”

Pandora stood there as if that was entirely normal. That girl, calm smile on her face, was supposed to be just scatters of gore. Fortuna glanced over to where her remains were strewn and gulped.

Not a trace of the gory mess remained in the slightest. Just like how Regulus had disappeared, her corpse had vanished.

Fortuna was utterly lost for words, to which Pandora tilted her head.

Pandora: “Could your eyes have deceived you?”

Fortuna: “———!”

Fortuna was horrified by those words. That should not be possible. But the world had reformed itself into a form that supported Pandora's words. Invalidating what Fortuna had supposedly seen, and overwriting it all with something strange and unknown.

The corpse was gone, Pandora was resurrected. Regulus was gone, the aftermath of his deeds were gone. Immediately after realizing that, Fortuna looked aside and almost screamed at the shocking thing that had happened.

As he stood beside her, Juice's arms— rather, Juice's severed arms, were back to normal.

Pandora: "Since Archbishop Regulus is not here, the consequences of his actions have disappeared. It is all very simple. Although, the mending of Archbishop Petelgeuse's arms is a result of my beneficence."

Pandora plainly explained what had happened to Fortuna and Juice, seeking to sooth the two. Juice rotated his recovered arms in confirmation, Fortuna's eyes wavering as she watched on.

Fortuna: "J—Ju—Juice, your arms..."

Juice: "Desu, they feel to move without issue. My body, also... the insides excepted, without issue."

Pandora: "I have not rewritten so far as to change your ingestion of the factor. I would like to commend this action of yours, and the actions of she who has returned for you. Please consider this an illustration of my sincerity."

Pandora was an emblem of hatred for Fortuna. That had not changed, and the moment she had laid eyes on her, she assuredly could not hold back her rage.

But Fortuna had not imagined that Pandora would be such a mysterious, unfathomable opponent.

She could not come up with any clues as to what happened. She could not comprehend what was going on. Everything that happened on that day, in that forest, transcended Fortuna's imaginings. The one thing she did understand was that, thanks to all those incomprehensible happenings, everything was on the verge of ending.

Juice: "Fortuna-sama, compose yourself!"

A roar cut into Fortuna's stunned mind just as it began to stall. The pain of her slapped cheeks leads her to blink, and find Juice right there, looking at her. He grasps her shoulders.

Juice: "I am sure that you have queries, and I am sure that you are confused. However, you must leave that aside for the present moment, DESU! What is crucial is to safeguard this forest, safeguard Emilia-sama, DESU! And... the defeat of that woman shall achieve such! DESU!"

Fortuna: "—Juice."

In response to his cry, strength returned to Fortuna's eyes. She glared at Pandora.

Yes. He was right. She might be strange and unknown, and the inability to anticipate what would happen next was terrifying. But even so, Pandora had eliminated powerful Regulus from this scene, and returned Juice's missing arms. She had foolishly weakened her own combat forces and rejuvenated the enemy. She might not even have realized that she had cornered herself.

Fortuna: "You're exactly right, Juice. Wondering about what's happening can happen later. Now is when!"

Juice: "We combine our strength, and defeat her, DESU! Should we repel her, the remaining cultists in the forest also will withdraw, DESU— We can save Emilia-sama, DESU!"

The image of her daughter passed through Fortuna's mind. She had been prepared for their previous goodbye to perhaps be their last. And she had indeed been acting until now with that exact resolve. But now, she saw a new hope.

Emilia would be saved. By none other than Fortuna and Juice's power.

Fortuna: "—Frigid white, captor of time, magic palm of sheer ice."

The magic which had struck Regulus still churned within Fortuna, seeking a place where it may detonate. Her canto presented that power with form, with a target, as Mana interacted with the world.

Out sounded a crack as the sharp-tipped icicle formed, the thing large enough that multiple giants would be necessary to lift it in concert, a spear of ice. Its point aimed at Pandora. Should it launch and strike true, she would be mutilated, her remains scattering everywhere and freezing beyond any hope of repair.

Beside Fortuna, Juice hugged his shoulders as pressure surged from him as well.

The power ran frenzied beneath his tattered vestments, all wounds except those on his restored arms reopening. Even in that grievous state, he was going expend the whole of his soul for the sake of those he believed in.

Faced with the manifestation of their powers, Pandora did not even take a fighting stance as she smiled.

Pandora: “Now, please do come— Allow me to savor your resolve to its very limit.”

The couple’s power quaked the world, all in effort to rip apart Pandora’s smile. And—

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Emilia woke up in the basin and shook her head, managing to recall her location as she glanced around the area.

Young Emilia: “Right... I...”

Herself, covered in mud, and unfamiliar scenery. Scraped knees, legs pained from excessive running.

All of it weighed down on Emilia as she regained consciousness, the panic constricting her chest and her rejuvenated memories informing her that it was neither a lie nor a dream.

Young Emilia: “Mother... Juice... Archi...”

Precious people, who had all staked their own lives so that she could escape. As she recalled their faces in sequence, Emilia remembered that she had to do something. Everyone who had tried to protect her told her to run.

That they wanted her to run dead ahead and escape the forest.

But Emilia also thought— There had to be something she could do for everybody.

Young Emilia: “That’s, right... the siel, the siel!”

Seal. The word lingered in her memories from the time before losing consciousness. A stern-faced Fortuna had previously discussed it with Archi. About how the scary people had arrived searching for the seal in the forest.

The forest's seal was located deep in the deepest depths of the forest where Emilia lived, a mysterious door leading to nowhere, just a metallic-looking door standing there in the middle of the woods.

The adults had called the place the seal. Emilia knew its location.

Young Emilia: "Have to go there."

Going there would not present Emilia with anything she was able to do. She did not know how to open the door, and she did not even know what the word "seal" exactly meant. But she knew something extremely important was found there, and knew its location—which was more than enough for Emilia.

Considerations about what she would be able to do were not what spurred her into action. It was the hope that going there would make things change that pushed her forward.

Young Emilia: "The seal should be... But, which way was it?"

Having tearfully parted with Juice, tearfully parted with Fortuna, and ran around the forest in Archi's arms, Emilia ran straight for an unknown place, alone.

This may have been the forest where Emilia lived, but it was no longer the forest that Emilia knew. The region that Emilia frolicked in had been limited only to the village's surroundings. Forget about the seal's location, she could not even put her finger on where her mother or Juice would have been.

Young Emilia: "Ah, hah..."

Emilia wailed at her own powerlessness.

She knew what she needed to do, but lacked the strength to achieve it. She had no mother to cling to when troubled, at this juncture. She had to be the one to act and save her mother.

Young Emilia: "—Hm?"

Her earnest feelings spurred those watching over her into motion. Emilia wiped away her tears, when dim lights passed by her face and made her blink suddenly. She looked up, to find several glowing lights cutting into her vision.

Young Emilia: “The, fairies?”

Emilia called them fairies, Fortuna and Juice called these supernatural entities Spirits.

Supposedly lacking any language or will, the Micro Spirits answered to the young girl’s frantic pleas, dancing in circles before the paralyzed Emilia. They all moved in one direction then back again, there then back again, over and over, demonstrating the course.

Emilia’s voice trembled as she realized what the Spirits were trying to say.

Young Emilia: “You’re telling me, where to go?”

They did not reply. But they did bob up and down, as if in affirmation.

Young Emilia: “If I go that way, I’ll find the siel? I’ll be able to save Mother and everybody?”

The Micro Spirits strobed brightly. Seeing those pale lights, Emilia wiped away her tears as she shook her head. That was not the time nor the place to keep bawling indefinitely. Her mother and Juice and so many people had helped her, and when she started crying, even the fairies came to cheer her up. After all of this, she could not pardon herself to cower at that place endlessly.

Young Emilia: “Mm... mm, mhm.”

The Spirits bobbed about, as if confirming whether Emilia was well. She nodded in reply, and with her small frame swaying, broke into a run. She followed the Spirits’ guidance, dashing desperately over the rugged earth.

She passed over hollows, scaled steep inclines, passed through the gaps between trees.

At many points along the path she came across areas that the Spirits could travel through easily, but Emilia could not. She stumbled, branches scraping at her cheeks, tumbling mouth-first to the ground, spitting out mud before standing back up.

Her breathing labored, tears of fear and pain welling up again.

She sniffed her snot back up, wiped her tears with her muddy sleeves, gave her grazed knees a slap and runs. She withstood the pain and the hurt, running with all her might as the memories passed through her mind.

Memories of her time spent living in the forest, ever since she first gained cognizance.

Fortuna was a stern mother, and had never spoiled Emilia in the least. She was not Emilia's real mother, however. Emilia had proper, real parents, like normal.

Such had been a common thing to hear from Fortuna, repeated over and over, which Emilia both believed and did not believe. She had real parents. That made her happy. But Fortuna was also her real mother. And as far as Emilia cared, that was unquestionable truth. It was because of today's happenings that she had truly understood that.

Emilia remembered being scolded. She remembered nights on which Fortuna would hold a crying, apologetic Emilia, and sleep together with her. She knew that Fortuna would always stroke her head once she woke up until Emilia got out of bed, so that Emilia would not be lonely.

Emilia knew better than anyone that her mother loved her.

Everybody in the village had been kind to her.

There had always been a kind of alienation, feeling like they had been keeping their distance, and were not sure how to interact with her. But even so, they had never said anything that would hurt her, and always treated Fortuna well.

Emilia knew that everybody had done their best to make sure the Princess Room would be a nice place for her to spend her time. They had prepared toys so that she would not feel alone while inside and made lots of hand-stitched dolls for her. The number of dolls multiplied by the day, and Emilia had long ago ran out of enough fingers and toes to even hope to play with them all.

Every one of those dolls, every single stitch of thread, was proof of their care toward Emilia.

Emilia had hated Juice at first.

Because everybody had taken their distance from her and locked her in the Princess Room every time Juice's group was visiting. The adults had been hiding things from her so that they could do something fun. On the first time she escaped the Princess Room and witnessed Juice and Fortuna talking, upon seeing Fortuna smiling at him, Emilia had been jealous of Juice.

She thought she would never forgive him. But he had broken into tears upon meeting her. Cried and cried, spilling tears of happiness, and so Emilia forgave him.

After all, those had been tears of warmth. She thought back on how peaceful she felt whenever Fortuna hugged her, and patted Juice's head. She had stayed by his side as he cried, so that he would not feel alone when the tears stopped.

"He's hopeless", she thought.

"Just hopeless", she thought.

Young Emilia: "I... with everybody, again..."

She wanted to sleep with Fortuna again.

She wanted to invite everybody to the Princess Room.

She wanted to take that cheeky Juice, who was trying to protect Emilia, and definitely stomp on his foot.

She wanted to see everybody again.

Young Emilia: "Because I'm, a good girl..."

The tears blurred her vision as she ran, and after passing by a handful more trees, Emilia discovered the seal she had been seeking, and—

???: "Welcome."

—A girl with platinum hair stood before the door, her arms spread to greet Emilia.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Girl: “Thank goodness. You were the first to arrive. I was glad to have finally found the seal, but I could not locate the essential key. I am truly relieved to have found you safely.”

Young Emilia: “Why are... you here?”

The girl, Pandora, addressed Emilia with a familiar tone a strange oppressive feeling. Emilia’s throat trembled as she asked her question, and Pandora gave a small clap of her hands.

Pandora: “Huhuhu, you must be surprised. It is all very simple. This seal is very important to me. And so I have always been searching for it. It is one of the reasons for which I have come to the forest today. Which means that I need to be here.”

Pandora’s response was not what Emilia was looking for. She was trying to ask about Pandora’s reason for being there, in that spot. When Emilia had last seen her, Juice had been blocking her and Regulus’s path.

If she was here, then that meant Juice was dead.

Young Emilia: “Why are... you here?”

Perhaps having noticed how close Emilia’s heart was to shattering, Pandora’s eyes widened. She put her hand to her chest as she seemed to reflect on what she had just said.

Pandora: “I apologize. The reply I gave you was strange. I am not the one you are asking about, you are asking about Archbishop Petelgeuse and your Mother.”

Pandora was late to understand it, but she did end up reaching the correct answer. If Pandora had continued being mistaken, Emilia could have ended all this without her question being answered. Even though she herself did not know what she was seeking, with all of this.

In response to Emilia’s inner conflict, Pandora smiled tenderly. It carried no malice or maliciousness, instead abounding in kindness, an honest attempt to dispel Emilia’s anxiety.

Pandora: “Please do not be worried. You are concerned about Archbishop Petelgeuse and your Mother, both of whom are safe.”

Young Emilia: “Huh?”

Pandora: “There is no need to be so anxious, though it would have been best should you have asked so originally. Neither I nor the members of the cult have come here to harm anybody in the forest. It is as I have stated, I have visited as I have business with this seal. So being, I am not so foolish as to create any unnecessary sacrifices.”

Pandora’s words were kind, and one after another they fell into Emilia’s overburdened heart.

If what she was saying was to be trusted, then Fortuna and Juice were safe. Perhaps whatever was happening to everyone in the forest was nothing as bad as she first imagined.

In fact, this girl had just said she had business with the seal. Which meant once she’s done with that business—

Young Emilia: “When you’re done with the siel, will you please go home...?”

Pandora: “...”

Young Emilia: “Wh—when you’re done with the siel, will you please leave the forest and go home? Go home without doing anything bad to everybody?”

Pandora: “—Why, of course. I have no desire for unnecessary sacrifices either.”

Pandora gave a deep nod to Emilia’s appeal, as if she was making a promise. She then pointed at the sealed door, and tilted her head at the teary-eyed Emilia.

Pandora: “Which means that I would like for you to please give me the key. Provided that you open this door, we shall withdraw from the forest immediately.”

Young Emilia: “Key...?”

Pandora: “Yes. A key. Considering the form of a door which this seal has taken, a key is necessary to open it. You would be in possession of that key.”

Young Emilia: “I, don’t know anything about that...”

Emilia shook her head. She truly had no idea what Pandora was alluding to. She did not remember anyone giving her anything like a key, and the seal had been kept secret from Emilia in the first place. There was no possible way for Emilia to own a key for a seal she had been kept in the dark about. Logic that could go unspoken, a natural conclusion.

And so, Emilia shook her head, being that she did not know. Pandora also shook her head in response.

Pandora: “There is no need for secrecy.”

Young Emilia: “I—I’m not keeping secrets... I really, really don’t know! I don’t have any key! I haven’t been given a key! I can’t open the seal!”

Pandora: “I see— Then, I will have to dig through the forest so that I may find the key.”

Pandora’s expression looked incredibly pained as she lowered her gaze.

While her actions and tone were sympathetic toward Emilia, her ironclad mentality meant that she would most likely do exactly the thing she was saying that she would. That was why Emilia was trembling.

If she did not open the seal right here and right now, this girl would dig through the forest.

Dig through, as simple, vain decoration. Pandora was going to dig through the forest, the people living in it, Fortuna and villagers, and Juice’s group to get this thing.

She was an abnormal entity. So abnormal, that Emilia was convinced that not even Fortuna would be a match for her.

Young Emilia: “I—I’ll open it! I will open it!”

And so, Emilia called out before Pandora could start acting on her words and upon hearing her words, Pandora’s face brightened.

Pandora: “You truly will? Thank goodness. So the key was in your possession after all. I had thought it would be, after all, you cannot deny that you are a Witch’s daughter¹⁷⁴.”

Young Emilia: “A, Witch’s...?”

¹⁷⁴ Translation note by SummaryAnon (same as Volume 13): “This term (魔女の娘) can mean either «Daughter of a/the Witch» or «Young Girl who is a Witch». Though my instinct says it’s 9:1 odds the former, it’s not perfectly clear which one it is supposed to mean.”

Pandora: “Indeed, yes. Now, if you would like to take care of the seal? Provided that I can investigate what is inside this door, we will stand down immediately.”

Handing the scene over to Emilia, Pandora elatedly waited for her to act. While the term mentioned did claw at Emilia’s chest, retreat was not an option and so she stepped forward.

Little Emilia could look up, and look up even further, but still not sight the top of the door. It was like a giant door made by a giant so that a more giant giant could pass through. The idea that tiny Emilia had to open that thing was some kind of empty, hollow fantasy.

Young Emilia: “...”

She stood before the door. Standing was all well and good, but Emilia had no idea how to open it. Back when she had first located the seal, Emilia had gone through all her usual ideas on how to approach the thing. She had already tried pushing it, pulling it, climbing it, far and long ago. Emilia’s tiny form had not made this ancient door move an inch, and she could not even get the thing to creak, much less open.

Today would be no different.

She could reach out and touch it, but it gave not the slightest indication of moving.

Young Emilia: “Haa... haa, haaa... Ahh...”

Her pulse raced abnormally fast, her blood churning sluggishly through her head. Her chest flashed hot, and her thrashing heart could leap out of her mouth at any instant. But her limbs were dead cold, heavy, as if stuffed with lead.

She had to move it. But she could not.

If she did not open that thing, something terrible would happen to everybody. And she knew this, but was still unable to do anything.

Terror and despair bleached her thoughts stark white, crushing Emilia whole.

Pandora: “—Please consider thinking, «I am the key».”

That voice was horrifically smooth as it slipped into desperate Emilia’s ear.

—I am the key.

As ordered, Emilia focused on only that image.

Instantly, Emilia felt a weight in her hands, and so she looked at them. To find that she was grasping a large, ancient, silver key.

Young Emilia: “A key...”

Pandora: “It is visible to you now? If so, then you indeed are the key.”

Pandora happily pointed it out upon hearing Emilia’s mutter. But there was something unnatural about her statement. It almost seemed like Pandora herself could not see the key in Emilia’s hands.

Young Emilia: “You... can’t, see it?”

Pandora: “—No, I cannot. That key will only be given to the hands of those who are qualified. I am certain that, in this world, there are only two people capable of opening that lock.”

Pandora seemed to find that position enviable. And indeed, her gaze was certainly fixed on Emilia, and not on the key in Emilia’s hand. Although unsure what she meant by not being able to see a key which was so perceptible that it had weight, Emilia turned back to the door.

The suddenly-revealed key— but Emilia could not find anything that looked like a keyhole. That door did not even possess a doorknob. And although the key was big, it paled in comparison to the door. Could this grungy old key really open it?

Young Emilia: “—Ah.”

When Emilia instinctively figured out how to use the key.

Searching for a keyhole was unnecessary. The door itself was like a keyhole.

This door was not running the seal. It was merely acting as a lid for the seal. The door was not sealing anything. The seal was something more insubstantial operating inside of this door.

Pandora: “Now, please open it.”

Accepting Pandora's demand, Emilia took a step forward.

Simply pressing the key against the door, twisting it, and willing for the door to open, would be enough to open it. By that alone, this door would be freed from its long, long post.

—If you open this door, everybody will be saved.

Pandora: "...Is there something wrong?"

But the moment before she moved to press the key to the door, Emilia's outstretched arms hitched. Noticing how Emilia's fingers had stopped shaking, Pandora furrowed her brows slightly.

Emilia went without replying, instead staring at the key in her hands. If she proceeded to press the key to the door, the seal would open. But—

???: "Emilia— Promise."

Emilia heard in her mind the whispered words from her mother's goodbye. Their conversation back then had not been about the seal.

Yet Emilia remembered. That she had promised her mom she would keep her promises.

She did not know about this seal. She could never know about this seal. Emilia did not know about this place, and was not meant to interfere with it. She had promised Fortuna. Keeping her promise must be higher priority than anything else. She was betraying her trust, and mustn't do that.

Nobody would forgive Emilia if she were a bad girl. Nobody would be able to forgive her. And so, she must not open this seal.

Young Emilia: "I... I, can't open it..."

Pandora: "—Why is that?"

Young Emilia: "The promise... Because, I promised. I don't have anything to do with the *sie*l. I'm not allowed to open it."

Pandora: “I see. Promises are truly important things. I think it is very splendid and great that you would like to keep your promise. However... they are also things which depend on the occasion.”

Pandora matched her gaze to Emilia’s, who shook her head. In turn, she pats Emilia’s silver hair, who was still holding the key with both her hands.

Pandora: “I suspect that this promise is one between yourself and your Mother. Your Mother is a very wonderful person. She has taught you something venerable and correct. Your will is precious and deserves to be upheld.”

Young Emilia: “A—and, so...”

Pandora: “But, it sometimes happens that sometimes a moment arrives when you must make a decision which will run contrary to a promise. Perhaps it is cruel that I am seeking a decision from you when you are still young. However, fate and its looming decisions will not take into consideration the circumstances of those it trifles. Fate loves those who resist to the turn of its waves, and inspires hope in the outcome of the decision. Which is the hope that you seek?”

Young Emilia: “Which, hope?”

Pandora nodded, smiling like a benevolent mother, and replied “Yes”, to Emilia’s voice. She gently presented her hands to Emilia—

Pandora: “First is the hope that you will keep your promise with your mother, proceed without opening the seal, confront my party, and overcome this tribulation.”

Pandora raised her right hand, as if holding that invisible thing called hope.

Pandora: “And second is the hope that you defy the promise with your mother, open the seal, grant the wishes of my party, and the situation will settle down with no further injuries.”

Young Emilia: “———”

Pandora raised her left hand, again showing Emilia that invisible hope. Faced with these two hands, Emilia went rigid.

She could not even recognize her breathing, with how her lungs felt to have frozen. If she said anything careless, Pandora would instantly withdraw both of her hands. Unable to touch either of the hopes presented to her, perhaps it would end with both being taken away from right under Emilia's nose.

—Terror grasped the young girl's heart firm, not letting go in the least.

Pandora: "Which hope shall you choose? —I leave the decision to you."

The right hope. The left hope.

The hope resultant from breaking the promise. The hope resultant from keeping the promise.

Pandora's sweet and alluring voice. Fortuna's kind and chiding call of her name.

She could not even hear her heartbeat under all the noise. Sound disappeared from the world, leaving Emilia behind in a land without color.

She was thinking. Deliberating. Her thoughts were blazing, her brain was about to starting boiling at any moment. She focused every bodily function she had into thinking, giving the impression that everything from her neck down had died. She could not hear her pulse, her limbs utterly motionless and alienated from her will.

She couldn't choose, she couldn't choose, she couldn't choose she couldn't choose shecouldn'tchooseshecouldn'tchoose. Which choice would save everybody? What should she do that will help everybody?

What could she do that would make her everybody's strength? What should she do? Somebody should tell her.

Young Emilia: "—Ah."

Pandora: "I see. So that is your decision."

Her thoughts soldered, her vision clouded, when Emilia slipped a small sound. Seeing her decision, Pandora's long-lashed eyes lowered their gaze.

—Emilia's fingers were touching Pandora's right hand.

The path to not break the promise, not open the seal, and hope for everyone's rescue.

Young Emilia: "I... promised, my... mother, I'd keep... my, promises, so... mother..."

Pandora: "Until the very end, you trust in your mother's words, your compass. The answer you have reached following your indecision, and the result that your life has divined, shall I respect."

Pandora nodded in agreement as Emilia's eyes overflowed with tears. She released her hand from Emilia's grasp, and Emilia fell to her knees as Pandora looked on, gaze merciful.

If so she wished, she could have just pushed Emilia's hands to the door while she held the key. While that had nothing to do with whether Emilia would will for the door to open or not, being that Emilia had been seeking some kind of support, it may have been enough to send her over the edge.

Pandora knew that, but didn't do it. That alone was something trustworthy about this utterly bizarre girl.

Pandora: "And so—"

Young Emilia: "...Huh?"

Pandora: "—Please respect my decision as I consider methods to open the seal."

Emilia raised her head, stunned.

Pandora was not looking at Emilia, instead her gaze was directed somewhere behind her. Emilia followed her line of sight, to find a silhouette pushing away the shrub as it soared onto the scene.

It was a woman with short, silver hair.

Woman: "PANDORAAA!!"

And covered in blood, it was Fortuna who jumped out and arrived on scene.

Compared to when Emilia had last seen her, she was drowning in injuries. But even so, having been convinced of the possibility they could have never met again, just knowing that she was alive relieved Emilia's heart.

Fortuna: "Take this!!"

Apparently having not noticed Emilia's presence, Fortuna fired off six icicles, striking Pandora without the least of mercy. Emilia's body stiffened at the danger of being struck herself, when Pandora cut in to position Emilia behind her, protecting her.

Pandora: "Launching an attack without first observing the area is very dangerous."

With that, an icicle speared Pandora through the chest. Her thin waist, her right arm, her right foot all proceeded to be impaled with icicles, with one last strike blowing off her platinum head.

Emilia shrieked as she witnessed Pandora's small frame be skewered with ice. Pandora's body staggered, slumping back to land on Emilia. Emilia caught the decapitated body as it gushed with blood.

She screamed. It was all too unreal.

Fortuna: "...Emilia?"

Hearing that scream, Fortuna whispered in dumb shock as she seemed to come back to her senses. Rather than accomplishment in having bested a detested foe, Fortuna's eyes wavered in discord as she registered the fact her daughter was present at this scene.

Fortuna: "Why is Emilia...? She was meant to have escaped the..."

Pandora: "To question why is a rather terrible thing. Your daughter was worried about you, wholeheartedly hoping to help you as she ran to this site. How is it that you, her mother, can proceed without praising her intrinsic purity?"

Fortuna: "———!"

Pandora's voice called out from directly aside the questioning Fortuna. Fortuna's amethyst eyes shot open from both how unexpected it was, and at the fact that Pandora's corpse had vanished from Emilia's arms.

Pandora: "When you look as surprised as you do, you truly do resemble each other. Parent and child indeed."

Fortuna: “———! Emilia and I are not blood relatives! Her adorable face is from my sister-in-law!”

Pandora: “I give my apologies for that.”

Fortuna’s mouth twisted in rage as a sword of ice formed in her raised hand. Her sweeping slash sliced diagonally through Pandora’s torso, spraying fresh blood everywhere. Pandora collapsed back-first, her body limp as it hit the ground.

Pandora: “Which means that her foster parent is her Mother. That being, you have not erred in your methods of raising her. Your daughter has grown to be a very honest, good girl. Her true parents, your sister and brother, would surely be overjoyed.”

Fortuna: “Don’t you dare talk about my brother and sister-in-law!!”

The fallen corpse disappeared as Pandora walked over, as if this is normal, to Fortuna. Fortuna brought down her sword to bisect her like bamboo, capping it off by slicing off her head with the backswing.

She immediately glanced behind her to kill the revived Pandora with a stab. She shoved her backwards, where she slams into a tree’s trunk, pinned.

Fortuna: “El Huma!!”

A blanket of frigid mist shrouded the pinned Pandora, transforming her into an ice sculpture. A humanoid sculpture was born, sealing Pandora, already beautiful enough to be a masterwork of the gods, eternally in the forest as a belonging of nature.

Pandora: “This indiscriminate use of magic is only going to exhaust you. Would you like to take a moment to calm down, and for us to reattempt by waiting for an opportunity to talk?”

Fortuna: “———! Tedious talk!”

The ice sculpture remained, with only Pandora inside having escaped and walking outside. Fortuna spun around to find Pandora standing there, and casually slammed her fist into her. It was not even a magical attack. Just a punch resultant from vain struggle.

It struck Pandora in the face as if drawn straight to it.

Young Emilia: “—Ahh!”

Fortuna: “E—Emilia!?”

Blown away by her mother’s punch, Emilia failed to catch herself and tumbled across the ground. Having unintentionally beaten her daughter, Fortuna’s face paled as she frantically rushed over to the fallen girl’s side.

Fortuna: “No! Emilia, I’m so sorry! I didn’t mean to! That wasn’t what I...”

Pandora: “This is the pain one person feels when hit. A pain equivalent to being hit has surely just run through your heart. Are you beginning to understand how heartless your actions are?”

Her hands holding Pandora, Fortuna’s throat hitched as she shoved the girl away. She stood up and looked around to find Emilia standing beside the seal as ever. No traces of being hit remained upon her white cheek.

Fortuna: “You’ve been saying so much nonsensical junk, over and over!”

Pandora: “But this time it was different. It soothed you. Are you unable to devote some fraction of that emotion toward someone you believe you hate? I am not telling for you to love everyone out there in the same way that you love your daughter. But, there are some who change after receiving only the slightest of care. If I could be part of that count, then I would like to proceed without repeatedly presenting you any tragedies.”

Fortuna: “Who the hell do you think you are to demand kindness from me!? Emilia’s parents...”

Noticing Emilia’s gaze on her, Fortuna quickly shut her mouth.

Emilia stared fixedly at her mother’s tense face. When in presence of her daughter, no matter how detested the enemy was, there were some things which should not be spoken.

Pandora: “Then here is what we shall do. Would you like to try being the one to persuade your daughter? I have confirmed that she possesses the key, but it appears that she will not open the door. Because she is keeping her promise with you.”

Fortuna: “...”

Pandora: “If you rescind your promise, no chains will bind her stubborn heart. I promise that, provided I may undo the seal, we will leave this forest without doing anything further. Indeed, I promise. I will keep my promise. Very nice words.”

Spoken with no hint of jest, those were most likely her sincere thoughts.

But statements and actions which became overwhelmingly sardonic because of their lack of ill will did exist. Fortuna had seen more than enough to judge Pandora’s statements as so. Fortuna looks at Emilia.

Emilia simply clasped her hands and waited for her mother to speak. Her hands looked to be gripping something, likely because she was holding the door’s key.

Emilia had wound up recognizing the key. And if Fortuna uttered a single word to render the promise ineffective, she would likely open the door in full belief that doing so would save the forest.

Fortuna: “—Don’t be stupid.”

Pandora: “Stupid, you say?”

Fortuna: “You’ll stand down? You won’t do anything more? How will you doing that benefit us? With everything you’ve destroyed, everything you’ve ruined, all the things we had to protect that you crushed underfoot, with even our pride broken and distorted... What will be left for us!?”

Pandora: “Things may be born from barren places. Do you not consider that the magnificence of life?”

Fortuna: “When the pillagers are the ones saying that, those words are empty and superficial!”

Fortuna roared, jabbing her finger out at Pandora, who in turn tilted her head, not seeming to understand what Fortuna was saying.

Fortuna: “The struggle is beautiful. There’s nothing more respectable than a will to live— Stop it with this facetious talk. After robbing us of the peace we staked our lives to create, stop your condescending speech. We had comfort and happiness and everything here. You’re the ones who ruined it!”

Pandora: “Our opinions appear to differ.”

Fortuna: “When your positions aren’t the same, the sights you see aren’t the same either. With how you’re always looking down at us from on high, I’m sure you see the sky as being a different height from us!”

Fortuna spat at Pandora’s suggestion. The latter looked horrifically sad, but Fortuna was not going to respond to that. She instead kept up her caution towards Pandora as she dashed over to Emilia, who stood beside the seal.

After confirming that it was definitely her daughter, Fortuna fell to her knees and hugged the small girl.

Fortuna: “Oh, Emilia... Emilia, I’m sorry. Why are you... where’s Archi?”

Young Emilia: “Archi... told me, to run to the white flowers... so, me, I ran...”

Fortuna: “———”

Hearing that, Fortuna deduced the young elf’s demise.

She hugged Emilia to her chest, keeping her from seeing her tears. Just how many had perished in the forest due to the sinister cult’s violence? Indeed, this forest would never return being what it had been before.

Fortuna: “Emilia, Emilia... you did so well to keep your promise. You’re amazing. You’re amazing.”

Young Emilia: “Mother... Mother, I, I...”

Fortuna: “Emilia... you’re my pride. My treasure.”

A clinging daughter, her mother hugging her.

Pandora watched on with her expression intoxicated. Her face almost looked like she was monopolizing the most beautiful sight in the world, all for herself.

Pandora: “I have enjoyed seeing this beautiful familial love. Mutual affection truly is magnificent.”

Fortuna: “That’s disgusting to hear when you’re saying it— The seal’s staying put. I’m not handing her over to you. Get to being an icicle, and wither here.”

Pandora: “From your phrasing, would this not usually be when you advise that the other party leave?”

Fortuna: “All I want right now is to dump the shards of your frozen corpse off the Great Waterfall.”

Voicing curses that Emilia had never heard before, Fortuna once again began honing her magic. Pandora pursed her lips, seemingly pained. And then——

???: “I have finally caught up—— DESU!”

His voice sounding somewhat crazed, a man soared over the trees to arrive at this spot. He leapt over the tall trees, his momentum that of having been thrown, arriving on the scene with his holy vestments slathered in blood. It was Juice.

Fortuna: “Juice!”

Juice: “Fortuna-sama!”

With just one call of the other’s name, the two coordinated perfectly. They stood positioned on either side of Pandora as she occupied the center of the clearing, the two of them commencing with their assault from both ends.

Fortuna’s left hand gripped Emilia’s wavering right hand firm. Emilia looked up at her mother’s face.

——Her expression as her gaze pierced through enemy was so beautiful she could shiver.

Fortuna: “Al Huma!!”

Juice: “Unseen Hand!!”

Fortuna cast magic of the most powerful degree, while Juice called upon all of the Witch Factor’s power at the final moment. The overwhelming powers surged forth, and——

Young Emilia: “——Mother?”

——With Unseen Hand piercing her chest through, Fortuna’s blood rained upon Emilia.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Strength drained from the hand clutching Emilia's as she witnessed Fortuna's body fall limp.

Juice: "Thiiiiiiiiis is the end— DESU!"

Juice landed violently as he shouted, sweeping his battered arms hard to the side. As if it had been pulled along by that gesture, Fortuna's body danced through space along the exact same trajectory. Her limbs went limp like a doll's, and her body tumbled across the ground as if discarded. Blood shot out from her convulsing form like a geyser, painting the grassland red in an instant.

Juice: "That did, prove effective, DESU... After all of this, assuredly..."

With a ragged sigh, Juice fell to his knees.

Emilia did not notice how Juice still gazed at the fallen Fortuna with caution.

She merely drew closer, gait tottering, to Fortuna as she lied prone on her back. A gaping hole had been opened through Fortuna's back and breast, the damage so great the innards of her ruined body were visible. The force of the bleeding rapidly weakened, leaving Emilia sitting in a puddle of blood.

She hugged her mother's pale head, somehow managing to put it on her lap. Red spots sullied Fortuna's pretty silver hair, and Emilia frantically attempted to clean her by wiping the grime away with her fingers.

But Emilia's fingers were already dirty with blood, so the more she touched, the bloodier Fortuna's hair got.

Juice: "Fortuna-sama! Do not loosen your guard, I ask that you remain vigilant! Once I verify..."

Young Emilia: "Juice?"

Juice: "——"

With a sharp breath, Juice heaved himself up with his palm faced towards Fortuna. Hearing him, Emilia calls his name, raising her head. After a moment of looking distantly at nothing, he blinked.

Juice: "Emilia-sama?"

Pandora: “You have sacrificed even your soul to save the person you love. That is no ordinary matter. The entirety of your long, long time spent supporting the Witch Cult was also for the sake of that love. The entirety of your deeds are the outcome of love. A most excellent, pathway of love.”

Juice: “Love... LOVE... love... love... love... love...!¹⁷⁵”

Pandora: “Exactly. There is no need to fear or regret anything. Everything was inevitable. It was all according to the path of fate. The road had continued its course to lead to this point. EVERYTHING, FOR LOVE.”

Juice: “For, love...”

As he deliriously muttered the words back, Juice’s mind shattered to pieces. Juice’s eyes lost their color. He was in a trance, motionless. He muttered inaudible whisperings, endlessly, a living cadaver. Seeing Juice’s mind so utterly broken, Pandora gave a satisfied sigh.

???: “Emi, lia...”

Just as Juice’s being was shattered into tiny pieces, the flame of yet another life started to dim.

Young Emilia: “Mother.”

Called by a voice so frail it could disappear, Emilia called back in astonishment. Her trembling arms reached out to draw her mother closer, to find that she had grown depressingly light. At some point, the flood of blood had stopped completely.

Which meant that her mother was okay now, right?

Emilia was not immature enough to be able to think this and protect her mind. Fortuna, too weak to even move, was plainly wearing the complexion of a dead man.

Fortuna: “...I’m, sorry, brother¹⁷⁶...”

¹⁷⁵ Written in six different manners, as the original line is 「愛.....アイ.....A I.....あい.....a i.....あい.....ッ！」

¹⁷⁶ She uses “にいさん”, read “nii-san”. Might be relevant in the future dunno.

Illustration from Volume 14, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Young Emilia: “Mother.”

Fortuna: “I didn’t... follow, a single thing, you... told me...”

Spoken like a child giving an apology, Fortuna voiced her regrets. Blood no longer streamed from her body, though tears poured from her eyes. Emilia felt the hot teardrops landing on her fingers, and scrambled to gather them up.

Because Emilia inevitably felt those composed the entirety of her mother’s current strength to live.

Fortuna: “I know, you’ll... be angry, sister¹⁷⁷... I know you, won’t, forgive me...”

As she listened to Fortuna’s incoherent mutters, Emilia finally realized.

Fortuna’s amethyst eyes had not been reflecting any light for a long time. She had long lost her sight, and her eyes had degraded solely into organs for shedding tears. She was not even looking at Emilia’s face. She had not even noticed that Emilia was right beside her.

Emilia could touch her, could hug her, but it would not reach her.

Emilia, faced with Fortuna as she sobbed like a child seeking forgiveness—

Young Emilia: “—I forgive you, Mother.”

Fortuna: “...”

Young Emilia: “You’re my Mother... You were so good to me... and not even Father, or Mother, could beat you with how you like me sooo much...”

Fortuna: “...”

Young Emilia: “So you, don’t have to apologize. You do not have to. Emilia will always, always love you, Mother Fortuna. Love you. Love you, love you... love you...”

¹⁷⁷ She uses “ねえさん”, read “nee-san”. Might also be relevant in the future dunno.

The dam bursted. Her voice lost its usual tone, as the overflowing tears dripped one-by-one onto Fortuna face. If teardrops were composed by the strength to live, then the final miracle left was the strength conferred by Emilia's tears.

Young Emilia: "...Mother?"

Fortuna: "Lia."

Her hand slowly reached out to touch Emilia's cheek. A hand that should not have been moving stroked Emilia's cheeks, her ears, tickled her hair. As if touching something beloved, so as not to break it, lovingly.

Fortuna: "You big crybaby."

Young Emilia: "..."

Fortuna: "I reeeeeeally love y..."

The strength drained from her. Her arm hit the ground with a thud.

Emilia sensed that Fortuna's body had grown lighter. Her body had lost its strength, and this should be compounding the weight on Emilia's lap, but Fortuna as she laid in Emilia's arms had definitely grown lighter.

The most important part of her mother, which must not be shed, had been shed. Even Emilia could understand that.

Young Emilia: "———"

She had lost Fortuna, her mother.

Juice, Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti, had lost his mind. And Emilia——

Pandora: "Now, have you prepared yourself to choose the hope which follows the opening of the seal?"

Young Emilia: "———"

Asked Pandora after walking over to Emilia, who held Fortuna's corpse close. She looked towards the sitting girl, all while wearing a calm expression and waiting silently for her reply. Finally, Emilia understood.

Young Emilia: "Open, the siel?"

Pandora: "Yes. Although highly unfortunate, your Mother, who you shared your promise with, has passed away. There is no need for promises to bind you like fetters for any longer. What do you think?"

Listening to Pandora as she spoke insane logic, as if it was something normal, Emilia comprehended. She now understood what this demon in human shape had been intending by pulling this stunt.

This demon had done what she did so that Emilia would break her promise.

Entirely for the sake of making Emilia lose sight of a promise's significance, Pandora had caused Fortuna's death, tormented Juice's mind, and annihilated the forest.

Pandora: "Right, I forgot."

Young Emilia: "..."

Pandora: "I doubt that these kids will be necessary for you anymore."

Pandora gently reached her hand out towards the unresponsive Emilia's face. Dim lights began glowing, encircling Emilia, before selecting Pandora's arm as their home and perch.

The Micro Spirits.

The fairies who had guided Emilia to the seal, and shown her the way. And, why were they, going to Pandora?

Pandora: "Seeing as I doubted that you would come here on your own, I have enlisted their help. They do not communicate with words, but they have been very reliable."

Pandora smiled as she thanked the Spirits, and with that, they danced through the air. Since when had it started? Emilia couldn't even tell.

Emilia's head wavered as she looked up at the seal's door. It felt like the door was looming, pining to someday be opened, and watching Emilia. She felt the weight of the key in her hands. She had thought that she had dropped it somewhere, but now it was again in her grasp.

Pandora: "You do have the key. Then, you know what to do."

Pandora gave a nod to Emilia, who slowly stood up. She lowered her mother's head from her lap and silently set it atop the grass. She twined her finger through her bangs, arranging her prided mother's beautiful face nicely. And—

Young Emilia: "Just die."

—A blade of frigid wind whistled through the air, slicing Pandora's body to pieces. Her spouting blood froze in an instant, flowers of frozen crimson blooming furiously. With a single icicle standing central in their midst, out scattered the sanguine-flecked petals, a masterpiece of ice and death.

Pandora: "That was rather dangerous. Where on earth is this sudden—"

Young Emilia: "Just die."

Rods of ice speared down to impale Pandora's limbs, a spear of ice shooting up from the ground to pierce Pandora from groin to crown, her frozen body screeching as it shattered into pieces.

Pandora: "Please calm down. I am sure that discussion will lead us to an understanding."

Young Emilia: "Just die."

Balls of ice closed in from both sides, crushing Pandora between them and transforming her into a splatter of blood.

Pandora: "We should stop. You are kind by nature, and not a girl capable of harming others. Has your Mother never told you so?"

Young Emilia: "Just die."

A spinning blade of ice sliced through Pandora from the feet up, casting up a spray of red sorbet.

Pandora: “It would sadden your Mother to see you like this. Neither your real Mother and Father, nor Archbishop Petelgeuse, would desire this.”

Young Emilia: “JUST DIEEE!”

White mist cloaked Pandora’s body, transforming her into a sculpture of ice. The giant icy sword which slammed into her the very next moment smashed rather than sliced her with its force, beating the Pandora sculpture to the earth.

But despite this storm of destruction and bloodlust—

Pandora: “This is something of a predicament. It appears that the effects were the opposite of what I had intended.”

Young Emilia: “Just die, just die, just die, just die!!”

Bawling, swinging her arms, Emilia rained icy destruction upon Pandora. But even as they all connected, and Pandora suffered gruesome deaths, she continuously came back fully restored after only the space of a blink.

Young Emilia: “Haaaah! Haah! Haaaaaaah!”

Gradually, Emilia was approaching her limit for using this excess of magic.

Her repeated casts of magic she was unaccustomed to, red-faced Emilia’s lower body began to freeze. The vast Mana contained inside her young body was running rampant, failing to escape outside in time.

Pandora: “The manifestation of power surpassing your capacities, such that you cannot even avoid damages to your own body, would be because of your bloodline. The blood of a Witch cannot escape that karma— Perhaps this forest had been necessary so that you would not awaken to this power.”

Emilia shook her head in refutation of the noise. Her right leg was entirely frozen, and it was questionable whether she could even stand. She fell to her knees, her eyes brimming with bloodlust as she glared at Pandora.

Seeing that sharp, ominous gleam, Pandora shook her head.

Pandora: “This is unfortunate when I am standing before my long-cherished goal, but I believe that I will withdraw for the day. It does not seem that you will be willing to listen to anything more about kindly opening the door.”

Young Emilia: “Just die, just die just die just die, just die...”

Pandora: “I will regard this day as well enough finished with only the presence of your lineage, and the creation of a new Archbishop of Sin. I will achieve my goal at another time.”

Egocentric logic, disregarding of others and entirely self-centered. Pandora appeared to have washed her hands of the situation, when white flakes flickered through her vision.

Snow.

Emilia’s outrageous magical powers were running amok, warping weather to the extremes and making it snow. At first was merely sprinkling down, but the snow progressively intensified in force and strength, soon coming cloaked with wind ferocious enough to call the whole thing a blizzard.

Pandora: “It appears that, whenever we next speak, I will have to begin by having you expel everything before we may even face each other.”

Pandora looked up at the sky as she walked over towards Emilia, who breathed white puffs. Although she witnessed a hated enemy approaching, Emilia could not move. Her body had already frozen up to her waist, and she wasn’t even able to raise her arms anymore.

Pandora: “You have caused this frenzy of power, and will proceed to fall into a long slumber. Will the Mana of this glaciated forest be fully exhausted, or will an entity possessing power comparable to your own offset it? Whichever it may be, I suspect you will spend more than a short period beneath the ice.”

Young Emilia: “Just die, just die!”

Pandora: “I regret to tell you that I will not die. I suspect that both you and I will remain healthy still by the time that the ice melts and we again meet. And certainly, once that time comes, we cannot have things proceed in the vein that they currently are. And so.”

Pandora's white finger touched against Emilia's cold forehead, who was still showering curses upon the former, her eyes seething with loathing. Pandora smiled without any malice.

Pandora: "All of your memories leading to this day are consummated without my presence in them."

Young Emilia: "—Ah."

Pandora: "Feel free to supplement them however you wish. Indeed. You did your very best to keep your promise. It would make me glad if that fact could be engraved in your heart, and you could proceed being as you presently are."

With her body frozen up to her breastbone, Emilia's face recoiled, her gaze unfocused and puttering. Her eyes spun and drool trailed from her mouth as her mind was ransacked.

It was crumbling. Indiscriminately and unfeelingly, the wallpaper of her memories was replaced.

The conversations she had had faded into the distance, while insults she surely had not received assault her.

Important, unfading— A promise.

She had kept her promise, and that alone was something that she would never forget. And she would never forget to keep her promises, either. She had kept her promise. The promise had been kept.

Nobody possessed any reason to invalidate her for keeping her promise.

Pandora: "What conclusions shall your heart reach, and what smile will you give me when next we meet? I will be eagerly awaiting our wonderful reunion."

The blizzard raged through the forest. Pandora held her long, disheveled hair down as she started walking.

Having remained on his knees in a stupor, Juice was already halfway buried in the snow. Pandora whispered something to him. He stands up, expression powerless. The two of them, Pandora and Juice, walked side-by-side as they left the snowy forest.

Emilia could only watch them go. The freeze had already reached her face, and her awareness remained only in her eyes. Emilia lowered her gaze, and noticed it.

On the ground before her, there was an unnatural lumping of snow.

As if, in the middle of this white snowscape, somebody was hugging her.

Young Emilia: “———”

Her mouth did not move. She could not even close her eyes anymore. Her body was frozen, and her heart was freezing. Emilia’s consciousness——

Young Emilia: “——ther,”

——Then had come to spend a century encased in never-melting ice.

Until a Spirit found her, a Spirit who was searching for her, a Spirit given life in this world entirely for her sake.

——Until that time, Emilia remained frozen in the ice.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Having witnessed it all, and having faced the sight of her own frozen self, Emilia stood stock still.

She remembered everything that had happened.

Those scenes of the past, slowly unfolding ever since she had woken up. All of them had been peeled of their superficial, false skin, and flowed out.

Young Emilia had seen everything that day. She saw how Fortuna died in her arms, how Juice’s mind broke and went insane, and witnessed the perpetrator of all this evil.

Had she forgotten them because of her own weakness and desire to forget them?

Echidna: “It would be a mistake to fault yourself for the falsification of your memories.”

The girl standing beside Emilia, Echidna, addressed her.

Just as Emilia had experienced her memories vicariously, Echidna had witnessed everything that happened from start to finish.

She glanced at Emilia, who gazed at the snow.

Echidna: "That thing you confronted was the Witch of Vainglory, Pandora. She brandishes superficial and self-serving logic, rewriting events however her whims and pleasures dictate. The dampening of her influence would be a result of time's passage, and your very own strength."

Emilia: "My, strength..."

Echidna: "As you can see, your strength is so immense that you can't fully control it. If we are speaking simply about combat ability, you surpassed Pandora even here, at a young age. But battles aren't so shallow that you can prevail on strength alone. And especially not considering Pandora is a Witch with a penchant for surviving."

It wasn't clear how far her knowledge spanned, but it appeared Echidna knew about Pandora. Although, her expression as she spoke with Emilia was as bitter as ever, and so Emilia doubted that she would get an honest answer if she asked her any questions.

Emilia: "...You're not insulting me like you were before?"

Echidna: "That's the kind of thing about you that I hate. Of course I'm thoughtful enough to be considerate toward someone who just remembered the death of their mother. Even if that someone is a filthy licentious whore."

Emilia: "Thank you."

Echidna sighed at Emilia's gratitude, speaking no further comforts. Noticing that she was coming close to smiling at Echidna's attitude, Emilia realized that she had been attempting to divert her attention from the grisly memory before her in a show of weakness.

These resurrected memories were things which completely shook Emilia's perspective of the world. Things which overturned Emilia's life from its very outset.

After all, Emilia aimed to save everyone in the forest, that fact serving reasoning for devoting herself to the Royal selection.

Emilia: "I wonder if anyone's still alive... in this frozen forest."

Emilia had witnessed both Fortuna and Archi's deaths.

The Black Serpent's attack was information that had been absent in Emilia's memory. She knew the beast's might, and the wicked characteristic it possessed.

The Witchbeast of Blight, the Black Serpent, infected living creates with a hundred diseases just by contact alone. And it placed curses on the land it crawls on, transforming the region into a region of death, where only Witchbeasts could live.

—How many people had survived before the village was buried in snow?

And were those who had survived and were now encased in ice unaffected by the Snake's pestilence?

If not, that was equivalent to Emilia losing her very reason to fight.

Indeed, she could agree with these memories being sealed. Even had Pandora not interfered, perhaps Emilia would have wanted to forget about these events. That was how utterly hopeless these memories were.

Echidna: "...Standing here indefinitely won't end the Trial."

In that still world, Echidna muttered while gazing at the silent world of snow.

Echidna: "The past went along without any issues. Challenger of the Trial as you are, you must have recognized your greatest regret. Now you need to present an answer."

Emilia: "Present an answer for the Trial?"

Echidna: "The First Trial is beaten by demarcating an end to the symbol of your regret. Do you affirm the actions of your past self, or reject them? If you are unable to fully accept this and reject the question, this will all end without the Trial being accomplished."

Emilia sighed deeply. She had thought over and over about what she needed to overcome the Trial.

When she was faced with counterfeit memories, she had questioned herself as to why she was unable to overcome them. Losing Puck, and having to take over the parts of herself she had entrusted to him, was what had let the cap on Emilia's memories come loose for the first time.

Now, Emilia finally stood at the starting point for the Trial.

But even though her legs had reached the starting line, she had lost sight of the starting line in her own heart.

She had left the forest because she had wanted to save everybody, save her mother.

It had turned out that those ideas had been not just idealistic ones, but straight-out fantasies. Her mother was dead, and she did not know if the villagers were safe.

If she lost the reason why she had set out on this path, what was left for Emilia?

Emilia: “—That has already been taught to me.”

Just when it seemed that her heart had begun to waver, a hand reached out from the light and stopped her. A powerful arm, to pull Emilia forward when she was lost as to her destination.

“Don't give up, look forward, raise your head, watch me”— Over and over, again and again, he had said that to her.

He knew Emilia was weak, but roared at her not to stay weak.

When Emilia had shaken her head and insisted everything was over, he had said that nothing was damn over and pulled her back up.

When Emilia had wanted to give up, thinking she was useless, he had baselessly asserted that she was the best.

The pain from their teeth striking each other, and the warmth of their overlaid lips, lighted a flame in Emilia's heart.

Emilia: “Mother loved me.”

Echidna: “———”

Emilia: “I wanted to help Mother Fortuna. I wanted her to hug me again as we slept in the same bed. I wanted to tell her, countless times, that I love her.”

Echidna: “Then do you regret it?”

Echidna’s question without a subject was addressing the moment of Emilia’s decision, when she had been presented with two hopes.

Back then, if Emilia had taken Pandora’s hand and broken the promise, perhaps Pandora’s group would have withdrawn from the forest, and Fortuna and Juice would not have been stolen.

“If”, “had I”, “supposing”. Using those words to look back on the past, perhaps that would indeed have been the case.

Emilia: “I don’t regret anything.”

Echidna: “...”

Emilia: “I don’t regret that I kept my promise, and stood my ground back then. If there’s anything I regret, it’s that I wasn’t strong enough, and couldn’t consider things more wisely. I’ll never regret that I stayed true to my Mother’s teachings and didn’t listen to Pandora, ever.”

After all, had Fortuna not told her? That she had been proud of Emilia, who had determined to keep her promise, and that she was her treasure?

Those very words were a treasure, to remain inside Emilia forever.

Echidna: “Your fight has not lost its meaning?”

Emilia: “No. I... couldn’t save mother. But I still don’t know about everybody else in the village. Everybody might be waiting there, waiting for rescue under the snow. I’m the only one who can save them.”

Echidna: “That land has been polluted by the Black Serpent. Even assuming that there are villagers alive under the frost, I doubt they will survive long while harboring infection.”

Emilia: “That’s all just your imagination. A nasty kind of speculation. Everybody’s waiting for rescue under the snow. I’m going to get them out of there quickly, and they’ll all tell me off. And then laugh, glad to be alive.”

Echidna: “Imbecilic delusion.”

Emilia: “No, it’s a forecast for a happy future!”

Emilia stepped forward, cutting her off. Face-to-face with the Witch, Emilia gestured to the snowscape.

Emilia: “I won’t let you invalidate something that no one’s even seen yet! I’m not going to accept that the things my Mother left for me ended so sadly! I’m going to realize my Mother’s ideals!”

Echidna: “Ideals? Your mother was searching for something?”

Emilia: “My Mother said it. That one day everyone would leave the forest, and be able to live like normal. Just like how Juice’s group and all the villagers could get along, and how Subaru told me he likes me, one day that world in which my Mother and Juice were supposed to walk together will arrive!”

Echidna: “And the frozen villagers will be included in that world? After you trapped them in the ice?”

Emilia: “I feel reeeeeeally sorry about that. I’ll apologize over and over, and over and over until they forgive me! And once they forgive me, I’ll show them the world. Tell them that they don’t have to live in secret anymore. That this is the world that Mother Fortuna was talking about!”

Echidna: “———”

Taking a deep breath, Emilia shouted.

They were no longer in the snow, but in a world of white light.

Heedless to the absence of the prickling chill, and to the departure of the scene composed of her regrets, Emilia raised her voice.

Emilia: “I’ll shout myself hoarse as I sing my dreams, so that my Mother in the sky can hear it!”

Echidna: “———”

Emilia: “I am happy in the world that my Mother loved!”

At that moment, the world audibly fractured.

Seeing the fissures run through the white space, Emilia finally noticed the change in setting. Her eyes widened in surprise, and Echidna put her hands together. In applause.

Echidna: “I see, understood. I didn’t expect that I’d know what would happen, but this exceeds anything I imagined. This pushy, complacent, hubristic, egotistic, hypocritical and forced purchase.”

Emilia: “Exactly. Anything wrong with it?”

Echidna: “No, I don’t really care. But this is one of those points where you’re exactly like your mother.”

Echidna scrunches her pretty brows, when Emilia asks her question. Because it sounds like,

Emilia: “My, mother... you don’t mean Mother Fortuna, you know about my other mother?”

Echidna: “I know her, yes. She’s partly responsible for why I get so emotional when dealing with you. She always did have that «Why is it always you...?» kind of jealousy about her...”¹⁷⁸

Echidna shrugged, her form beginning to fade. At the same time, Emilia felt a vague kind of weight press down on her consciousness, a floating feeling like waking up from a dream surrounding her.

Echidna: “It’s over. No matter how complacent your logic is, a settlement with your past is a settlement with your past. All you have to do is dance clumsily around as you take your mother’s resolve to sacrifice herself and use it as your rationalization.”

¹⁷⁸ SummaryAnon originally translated this sentence as “I Though there is still some kind of irrational resentment to it, as I lament: why does it always only happen with you?”, which gives away the idea that Echidna hates Emilia’s mother. That is not correct, and is a common misconception in the community. The word used in both the Web Novel (and the Light Novel as well) is “やっかみ”, which literally means “envy” or “jealousy”. From this, it is possible that Emilia’s mother was jealous of Echidna, or the other way around; I don’t know enough to be able to tell which option is correct... So, I followed the meaning in the Light Novel’s translation.

Emilia: “You can say anything you want. Me, I’ve gotten used to your insults.”

Hand to her hip, Emilia showed off her composure to Echidna, who didn’t forget to take one last jab. Echidna averted her gaze from Emilia’s attitude.

Echidna: “There’s still two Trials left, but... frustratingly, I doubt they will prove to be much of an obstacle.”

Emilia: “They won’t?”

Echidna: “Constant rationalizations are the nemesis of self-inquisition. These Trials, which intrude on your interior, have terrible compatibility with the present you. You could call it a benefit resulting from your utter neglect to think.”

Emilia: “When you talk in a way that sounds like I’m not thinking, it reeeeeeeally stings, actually.”

Emilia bared her displeasure to Echidna’s lecture.

That said, their conversation here was close to meeting its end. Echidna was practically gone from view, and Emilia’s head was beginning to fog. She could not keep herself conscious any longer.

Echidna: “—I hate you.”

Emilia: “But I don’t really hate you.”

What expression had Echidna shown at that moment? Even though Emilia didn’t see it, she got a feeling that she knew.

Her consciousness, ascends.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Emilia regained her conscious and groaned, feeling a firm touch on her back.

Right behind her was a wall. It seemed that she had collapsed against it, and fallen unconscious with it supporting her still.

She reached out to touch the wall and checked the writing rudely engraved there. She ran straight into an “I love you”, and winded up smiling at the perfect timing.

Right now, Emilia wanted his words more than anyone else’s to be the ones validating her.

Emilia: “—I’m sorry, Mother.”

Her smile twisted, as her voice slipped, choked, out of her mouth. Her apology echoed through the dark room, as did the noise of her sniffing.

Teardrops streamed one after another, unstoppable. Unendurable.

She had chosen to act strong, to be stubborn, and to not let the Witch see her cry. Inside this tomb, where there were no worries to be had about any onlookers, Emilia pressed her face against the wall and cried magnificently.

Emilia: “Mother... mother...”

The tears overflowed.

Truly, they were from forever ago. Tears that needed to be cried one-hundred years ago.

She had forgotten about it, and so she had never been able to mourn her Mother’s death. In that small chamber, where no one would know about it, Emilia proceeded to mourn exactly that.

So that once she exited, no one would know what her face looked like in tears.

So that she could end it, without the boy who had professed his love to her weak self, seeing her being weak.

She cried, and cried, and cried, and cried.

All while mourning the memories of her mother, her mother’s affection, and everything she had given her.

Emilia remained exactly like that, proceeding to cry with her face pressed to “love”.

Arc 4 Chapter 121 - Help Him

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 4 “The Eternal Freezing of the Great Eltor Forest”, Part 5; Volume 14, Chapter 5 “The Red Drained from Their Lips”, Parts 1-4; Volume 14, Chapter 6 “Lies to Hope”, Part 1

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 75

She wiped away her tears and tapped her cheeks. She combed her fingers through her hair, which was bordering on a mess, and smoothed out the wrinkles in her clothing.

Did her face look horrendous right now?

Puck would usually have been present to comment about Emilia’s appearance, but he wasn’t. Though, the misshapen crystal that Garfiel have given her did reassure her with its dim light.

Emilia: “...We won’t be seeing each other’s faces for a while.”

The crystal in her hand siphoned her Mana out from her fingertips. Despite being an uncontracted Great Spirit, and its only action being to rest there inside the Anchor, but it still demanded an incredible load of Mana. Had Subaru or Garfiel spent a full day accommodating that Mana drain, they would have been run utterly dry.

But even the forcefulness of this Mana drain paled in comparison to Emilia’s vast stores of Mana. Emilia had regained her memories and remembered she was able to use magic without a Spirit’s help. If she focused her attention on her gate, she could feel the outrageous current of Mana circulating through.

Emilia had been why Puck could manifest in reality. Puck had bragged that it was happening by scraping the ambient Mana, but most likely, a large portion had been drawn from Emilia’s unacknowledged Mana stores.

All that, so that Emilia would not face her forgotten memories.

Emilia: “You really are so overprotective.”

With a slight smile, Emilia rapped her finger against the crystal. Perhaps in protest, or perhaps smiling wryly, the crystal strobed its light in response.

Emilia: “...Okay. Mm, everything’s fine now.”

Her mood had calmed down considerably, too. Thinking about Fortuna or Juice made her heart sting, and should she relax her guard, she would definitely wind up crying again.

But Emilia could not stay cowering forever. She had things she needed to do. And they were surely things that Fortuna and Juice would have expected of her, and desired from her.

She exited the Trial room, and headed through the stone corridor, making for the exit.

Two Trials remained. Overcoming the First Trial wasn’t enough to make the door in the chamber open. Most likely, she would need to complete all the Trials before it did.

The requirements to cause the start of the next Trial were unclear. Exit and enter the tomb again? Potentially a passage of time? Either way, the Trial had not heartlessly started on her during her period spent crying in mourning. So it felt like re-entry was the requirement.

Emilia: “What would I do if Echidna did something mean to me...? I think she was reeeally mad at the end.”

“I hate you”, she had said. “But I don’t really hate you”, had been Emilia’s reply.

Part of that comment had been revenge against Echidna and her constant belittling of Emilia, but considering that this Witch was in command of the Trials, perhaps she could have used a little more self-control.

Emilia: “I wish for you to please not be too mad.”

While praying for Echidna’s good behavior, Emilia headed for the tomb’s exterior. Moonlight spilling in at the end of the hallway informed her of the exit.

She instantly forgot about Echidna for the moment and raised her head cheerily.

That past she had remembered was assuredly nothing trifling. It still did not quite feel real yet, but it had been definitely a huge and unshakable event which composed part of the foundations of the character called Emilia.

But for now, all she wanted to do was to inform those who believed in her that she had beaten the Trial. To see the person who had said, “You can do it”, and to tell them, “I did it”.

Squinting under the dazzling moonlight, Emilia exited the tomb—

???: “I welcome your return, Emilia-sama.”

Being greeted at the square outside by Ram and her curtsey, without a single other person in sight, Emilia tilted her head.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Time rewinds slightly, back to when Emilia’s Trial began.

While traversing the route to Roswaal’s recuperation hut, intending to verify his motives, Subaru swallowed his breath and stopped still.

He could tell that Garfiel, walking beside him, also had his eyes open wide in clear shock. For him, the situation truly must be a bolt out of the blue.

Subaru had imagined some circumstances and possibilities beforehand, but even he could not conceal his surprise. While feeling some sympathy for Garfiel, Subaru sighed at the character blocking their path.

Subaru: “I did think you’d be around... But actually seeing you makes me feel kinda defeated.”

???: “Well, that’s not very surprisin’. Goin’ by what Ros-bo said, ya got eyes good enough to see through everythin’, Su-bo.”

Subaru: “He’s anticipating too much. Seriously, how huge are his estimations of me?”

From Roswaal's perspective, being aware of Return by Death— or rather, of redoing, then indeed perhaps it all looked like the work of an omnipotent god. But its power was not that infallible. It provided absolutely no help in reclaiming what precious things had already been lost. That was the sort of unhappy power it was.

Narrowing her eyes, the pink-haired girl, a look-alike for the Ryuzu who they had parted with outside the tomb, one of the Ryuzu Meyer doubles— smiled slyly.

Subaru had anticipated her existence and so his reaction only amounted to him slumping his shoulders, but Garfiel's reaction was dramatic. His eyes were peeled wide as he glared at the face of his grandmother.

Garfiel: "The hell... Why the hell there's another granny here? There ain't more than one talkin' granny, 'n the rest of the fellas who got granny's face are under my orders to..."

Ryuzu: "Everything has its exceptions. Right... If we say that the Ryuzu Gar-bo knows as the representative of Sanctuary is the place's caretaker, then I'd be the overseer of Sanctuary's faculties. A will inherited from Ryuzu Meyer, continuously protecting the place."

Subaru: "Then speaking in terms of the system, you're against Sanctuary's freedom. I thought it was weird that none of the Ryuzus were against liberation and were goading Garfiel. So the one who secretly took that role was you— Ryuzu Omega."

Subaru named Ryuzu, who had an unreadable emotion on her face, Omega. However, it wasn't Ryuzu who reacted to the name, but Garfiel. He glanced back at Subaru, looking confused, "Oh-me-gah?"

Garfiel: "Hell's that, C'ptain. That name."

Subaru: "Considering there's several of them, it's hard to keep track of the Ryuzu-sans if you don't differentiate them. So just for convenience, we're calling the Ryuzu-sans we know Alpha, Beta, Sigma, and Theta. But now there's obviously a fifth Ryuzu-san, Omega. Not thrilled with it?"

Garfiel: "No, I just mean that name's way too cool for the granny... That ain't fair."

Subaru: "Don't be like that. When there's more of you, I'll give you guys cool names too."

Garfiel: "But there ain't gonna be more of me..."

It seemed like Subaru's naming sense had appealed rather intensely to Garfiel. The two recognized this unexpected point they had in common as Omega sighed.

Omega: "I don't mind whatever ya gonna call me, but yer leavin' me behind to have a happy chat. Since when have you two been such good friends?"

Subaru: "Men who trade fists with the evening sun as their backdrop always become pals. Even if comes after getting decked following a four-versus-one. Right, Garfiel?"

Garfiel: "Well ya sure got over whatever goddamn guilt ya had, Captain."

It seemed like Garfiel was still unable to really agree with losing due to force of numbers, but coming from him, the jab was pretty poor. That aside, the act of joking around to buy time and think had just ended.

When Subaru turned to face Omega, she was stroking her long hair.

Omega: "The look in yer eyes has changed. Not a kid to drop yer guard around."

Subaru: "This whole kid thing feels pretty fresh, not bad. Omega-san, do I have this right? You're not like the other Ryuzu-sans, so you don't have a rotation? I really don't want to have Gamma, Ampersand, Dollar, and Pound show up too."

Subaru went off listing whatever signs he can think of, to which Garfiel's eyes sparkled. While Subaru consciously ignored the admiring gaze of a fourteen-year-old, Omega rapped her flat chest.

Omega: "Don't worry. I'm the only one holdin' the role of overseer. Without a spec of a doubt, I'm the last remaining Ryuzu in Sanctuary with any sense of will."

Subaru: "Not gonna go back on that comment? Going off who I know, up to 20,000 people with the same face will show up."

Omega: "Now that has to be goin' too far. Sanctuary wouldn't be able to hold us all."

Subaru relaxed, his worst fears undermined. He furrowed his brows at the calm Omega.

Subaru: "I mean it's nice that you're just telling us who you are, but... what happened? With how you've been treated like a hidden ace up until now, I was thinking entirely that you'd be in the shadows. So why're you suddenly showing up now?"

It was a graceful attitude, sure, but there was no reason for that gracefulness. In response to Subaru's question, Omega smiled weakly and began, "It ain't nothing tricky".

Omega: "The peace between ya and Gar-bo meant ya figured out I exist. Ya might not have actually got yer grips on me, but the second ya think «Maybe she exists», I lose. I showed up figurin' I'd behave nicely to face my judgement."

Subaru: "Saying «face my judgement» is really overstating it... But there must be more to it than that, yeah?"

If Omega had seriously wanted to achieve her goals, she surely could have played more of a hand. Even if Subaru's group suspected her existence, until they actually managed to find her, she remained the superior party.

Subaru: "Call it guerilla warfare or whatever, if you ever felt like being an obstacle, you should've been to get in the way. And your role is being the Joker to pull that off. Roswaal's been keeping quiet about your existence this whole time, and..."

Omega: "Ros-bo's state is part of why I'm showin' up so nicely."

Subaru: "Roswaal's, state?"

Subaru's eyes widened, to which Omega shook her head. There was something sardonic and cavalier about that attitude.

Omega: "Ya take a look at Ros-bo as he holes up in his room right now, and you'll figure out right away why I'm thinkin' of just givin' up. And especially when I was helpin' him as Sanctuary's caretaker, with the idea he'd steer the place into its correct form. Not gonna happen with that."

Being that Subaru knew the other Ryuzus, he found Omega's dejected remark to be rather harsh. Perhaps Garfiel interpreted her comment as being too strict too, for he did not interject about her unsparing opinion of Roswaal.

Omega had been tasked with being Sanctuary's manager and caretaker. It was unclear when she had first obtained that role, but the likely outcome would be that she had been active for much longer than Alpha and the others. There was a possibility her current attitude was built up over all that time. Regardless—

Subaru: "Never mind whatever you've been doing until now, is it safe for us to think that you're not gonna get in our way anymore?"

Omega: "Well, if ya follow my views on the correct steerin', then I still got lotsa things I'd like to interfere with. Sanctuary's liberation ain't what Ryuzu Meyer wished for but, times are times. If the era means that Sanctuary has stopped bein' necessary, then my role ain't needed either. What's kept me goin' 'til now was essentially the thought of not wantin' to be left behind."

Omega's voice was somewhat sad, anxiety peeking through about her role's end. The post she had served for so long was reaching its conclusion.

Subaru did not know what exactly Omega felt as she reminisced on her life. While a good portion would be a sense of will and volition, a sense of liberation would perhaps be smattered there too.

Garfiel: "Stubborn, ain't ya. It's a good thing to be, granny."

It was Garfiel, who was listening silently, that first spoke up after Omega's silence. Omega looked up at Garfiel's words. as he crossed his arms and clicked his fangs.

Garfiel: "It's same for me. I was stubborn like ya were, granny Omega. 'N my thing was even worse than yers. But the Captain used his strength, used his numbers, 'n smashed the whole damn thing apart. Was honestly thinkin' it was a load of bull... but now I just feel damn refreshed."

Omega: "Gar-bo..."

Garfiel: "It's what the Captain said. Sanctuary losin' its barrier doesn' mean that the world we live in's gonna be gone. Sanctuary disappears, 'n the whole of the outside world becomes a Sanctuary. 'N there, both you 'n my amazin' self have things we can do."

In response to Garfiel's words, Omega looked down, in thought. Her expression lost its anxiety and her brows lost their crinkles. Instead she looked to be scrutinizing Garfiel's words, the blond boy nodding in satisfaction.

Subaru, witnessing the exchanged between the two, tapped Garfiel's shoulder.

Subaru: "Garfiel, do you have a fever or something? You are saying some super smart, super embarrassing stuff right now."

Garfiel: "Captain. Do ya think I got the brains to come up with this? Eighty-percent of what I just said's comin' second hand from you."

Subaru: "Seriously? I said that? Nononono, hold on, oh crap, belated mortification."

Garfiel sighed in astonishment as Subaru squatted down to the ground, ears red. He then again faced Omega, still in thought, and extended his arm out, gesturing an open path.

Garfiel: "I get what yer sayin', granny Omega. 'N ya basically answered what I was gonna ask. Now's just the question 'bout that nefarious plot, 'n showin' up in person to see the asshole who came up with it."

Omega: "Anything ya want... What shall I do?"

Muttered Omega. Subaru hummed his agreement.

Omega had been keeping her existence a secret. Not even Alpha and the other Ryuzus had noticed her or what she was doing. Now that her role had ended, Omega could appear in public for the very first time.

Subaru: "If you go to the tomb, Ram and Alpha-san... No, right now it's Theta-san. They're waiting there. They've probably already figured out what's going on, so just go and talk with them."

Garfiel: "They figured out what's goin' on, serious? My amazin' self didn't figure a single thing of this."

Subaru: "That's because your blood flow's running a whole lap behind."

It was actually more baffling that he hadn't grasped even an idea of it, after that past conversation. All those times where Garfiel's instinctive actions impeded Subaru's activities in Sanctuary floated through his mind.

Either way, Omega's anxiety was probably needless. Theta knew that there were many duplicates of herself, and Ram probably knew about the duplicates too. They would accept her.

So the next problem on the chopping block was—

Subaru: “The mastermind of the nefarious plot, a face-to-face conversation with the boss clown.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Once he entered the room, Subaru had to wonder if he had even been here before.

Roswaal had been in this room ever since Subaru first came to Sanctuary. This was the room he had visited every time he had wanted to talk with Roswaal. He could even remember where all its ornamentations are arranged, and yet.

Roswaal: “Weeeeeeeeell, if it iiiiiiiiiiiisn’t Subaru-kun. How nice of you to come. Even though you must be veeeeeeeeeeery busy.”

Subaru stood wordlessly with his hand still touching the opened door as Roswaal glanced back at him, and speaks in that aloof tone. He gave a joking kind of shrug, which prompted Subaru’s heart, for an instant, to wish it would think nothing was irregular. But Subaru suppressed that thought and instead faced Roswaal.

The room was an absolute mess.

The bookcase had been overturned, and the ripped white bedsheets had been dumped upon it. The bed was broken in two, wood chips everywhere. The warlock stood in the middle of this destruction with his hands dripping blood.

Seeing those splinter-wounds on his hands, Subaru noticed it. He had just smacked the bed apart by force.

Garfiel: “Captain...”

Having also seen the ruinous condition the room was in, Garfiel took a half-step forward, placing himself in a position to protect Subaru. It seemed Subaru had not been the only one whose caution grew at Roswaal’s abnormal state.

Garfiel's golden eyes were clearly wary. He stooped his body forward, so that he could immediately suppress Roswaal should he do anything shady.

Roswaal: "Hooooooooow domesticated you've beeeeeeeecome, Garfiel."

Recognizing Garfiel's actions, Roswaal mockingly spoke, his lips twisting in malevolent crimson. Keeping that smile, he closed one eye to view Garfiel only with the yellow.

Roswaal: "It's shocking how quickly you changed your tune. You're protecting Subaru-kun, which means that you've been added to his merry band of friends. Aaaaaaand that you took your will of wills, the love you have held so long for your mother, and discarded it."

Subaru: "Roswaal, you're wrong. Garfiel isn't allying with us because he had some change in his feelings. He's just shifted his ideas a little, and..."

Roswaal: "Thaaaaaaat is what I'm saying is superficial. You are ganged up on, beaten up and lectured, and that's all it takes to change your stance. Your feelings are so weak that losing a fight is enough to change them. Easily altered, shoddy."

Subaru: "Roswaal!"

It was Subaru and not Garfiel who got enraged with Roswaal's screeds of heartless words. After finishing the intense fight with Garfiel, Subaru had come to understand a fragment of his feelings, a fragment of his mental pain. And had also come to understand that they had been assuredly nothing frivolous or cheap.

Roswaal could not be forgiven for trampling all over Garfiel's feelings.

Subaru: "You take that back! You don't have any right to mock Garfiel's feelings!"

Roswaal: "Call pliant what is pliant. Call brittle what is brittle. Is there any reason to be criticized foooooooooo stating facts? Your overreaction actually reinforces my statements' legitimacy. A cheap sketch where cheap relationships try to validate cheap feelings. Truly... an offense to the eyes."

Subaru: "-----!"

Subaru moved to approach Roswaal in a rage.

But the one who stopped him in his tracks was in fact Garfiel. The one most wounded by Roswaal's insults, Garfiel. Subaru could only imagine how hurt he must be as he timidly turned to glance at his face. However,

Garfiel: "Yer words ain't gotta lotta punch to 'em, Roswaal."

Said Garfiel, his arms crossed in boredom and head lightly tilted. The attitude shocked Subaru, and same went for Roswaal.

Had this been Garfiel from just a little while ago, he surely would have left himself to rage and snapped at those words. But he, right now, had disregarded them. As if he were bathing in a warm breeze.

Garfiel: "I ain't able to deny that I'm full of half-measures. 'Til this mornin' I was on yer side, 'n now I'm on the Captain's. Yer right when ya say it was a quick change of tune."

Roswaal: "After your treachery toward your beliefs come the rationalizations, I seeeeeeeeee. Goodness me, it appears that the strength you've validated all this time also prooooooooooves to be substandard in reality. Ten years... That is assuredly no short period of time, only for a handful of days to alter your doctrines."

Roswaal shrugged and shook his head. A murky emotion rose in his odd-colored eyes as he glared at Garfiel.

Roswaal: "And that is what I'm calling cheap. If you really loved her, then your feelings would never change their form. Do you believe that your ten years, and Emilia-sama's century, can be handled so cheaply?"

Garfiel: "-----"

Roswaal: "All you did was interact with Subaru-kun for a handful of days. What could possibly happen in this time? Did you create something with him which could rival your feelings toward the one you love? Of course you did not! No matter what you create with those at your side, it will never compare to what you feel for your love! It will not be on the same level! That is what it means to love someone most!"

Roaring, Roswaal kicked a piece of bed which had fallen to the floor. It rebounded and flew toward Subaru and Garfiel, striking neither of them as it instead hit the wall behind them.

Splinters of wood rained to the ground. Roswaal's assertions made Subaru hold his breath.

—Scour away everything except what is most important. That is what loving something meant to Roswaal.

There was nothing precious built outside of the one he focused upon, and he found no necessity to build up anything precious outside of that, either. His feelings toward that one thing would then become ironclad, and if opportunity existed for him to bring them to fruition, he would not hesitate in the least. This was what Roswaal believed love was.

The moment Subaru understood Roswaal's thoughts, Roswaal looked at him as if he had noticed it. His yellow eye churned with the outrageous, ever-consuming zeal of love.

Roswaal: "Do you remember the terms of our bet? The bet that you yourself presented. Once that bet leads you to bind your greatest power and become mundane, what can you do? You can do nothing. Because you... you, are so inferior even mediocrity is unattainable!"

Subaru: "..."

Roswaal: "The potential for you to be a foolproof ace exists solely because you have that power. Once you throw that away and become mundane, and in due time you won't even be capable of floundering at ordinary par! Nobody! After living with one another, is capable of overcoming feelings engraved over time! It doesn't happen!"

Garfiel's decade of obsession with Sanctuary and distortion of his love for his family. Emilia's century, with a past so terrible that she had wished to forget, and guilt that she had left behind. And—

Roswaal: "A decade, a century, and my four centuries! Do you think I can tolerate for even a second that you, nobody else but this mundane you, are the one to overturn that!"

Subaru: "Because feelings never change?"

Roswaal: "That's right!"

Subaru: "Because you've had these feelings for a long, long time?"

Roswaal: "Yes, that's right!"

Roswaal affirms all of Subaru's questions. Nobody could overwrite their feelings. Feelings would never, ever, neither change nor bend.

Finally, Subaru felt that he had grasped it. Finally, he felt that he understood Roswaal.

Roswaal wanted his feelings to be validated. He wanted to validate somebody else's feelings, so that he may believe that was what feelings were.

And so Roswaal had wanted Garfiel to remain weak. He had wanted Garfiel to remain obsessed with his feelings, frantically protecting something that would not change.

Subaru: "Seriously, how come, Roswaal?"

Feelings for one single loved one.

For the sake of validating that, Roswaal was obsessed with how others went about their feelings for someone.

Even though Roswaal should know better than anyone what it was for someone to feel something for someone else.

Subaru: "How come you can only see the weakness of love? If you know that loving someone without end is a strong emotion, how come you only see the weak things about it?"

Roswaal: "—Because that's what I believe."

Replied Roswaal, his voice strangled in response to Subaru's words.

Incredible fury flashed through his eyes, as if he were glaring at the thing he hated most in the world.

Roswaal: "Exactly! Like how you believe in others' strength, and expect things from them! I believe that everybody remains consistently weak! They are weak, frail, minuscule people, incapable of achieving their love for their precious one outside of merely clinging to them, that is what I believe!"

Subaru: "———!"

Roswaal: “I have gone four centuries without ever forgetting about her! The time we’ve spent apart is infinitely longer than the time that I spent with her, and still she is emblazoned in my heart, never to leave it! My heart is still in pieces from that day of our goodbye, nothing about me has changed!!”

Roswaal stepped forth. Garfiel cut in to stop Roswaal from approaching Subaru. But Roswaal put his hand to Garfiel’s chest, looking down at him—

Roswaal: “Wasn’t it easy? When you spent ten years giving heed to the shouts of love inside you, and through that time believed in them obstinately, didn’t you manage to bask in the feeling of loving someone?”

Garfiel: “—! Bastard...”

Roswaal: “It’s fine, entirely fine. It’s what everybody ought to do. There is no person capable of living in solitude! All live with feelings for another. And that is enough... So then why are you attempting to change your feelings. Attempting to betray them. Did you not love her!?”

Garfiel: “Yer got it wrong! I...”

Roswaal: “What changed you!? Your muscled body was defeated in a fight, and you lost? You spent ten years for a malleable love, bent by the shattering of your fangs? Then the one disgracing and desecrating your ten years is in fact you yourself!”

To Roswaal’s fierce words, Garfiel knocked away the hand at his arm. He attempted to use the backswing to thrust Roswaal back, but Roswaal wrenched himself aside, evading. Garfiel’s eyes shot open as Roswaal grabbed his arm and hoisted him into the air.

Garfiel: “Hrah—!”

However, once Garfiel hit the peak of the attack, he put his foot to the ceiling and managed to overpower Roswaal’s momentum, saving himself from slamming back-first into the hard surface. He forced his body to flip around, giving him three points of contact minus his grappled arm. He rewarded this by yanking his grappled arm, pulling Roswaal closer, and ramming him in the chest with a headbutt.

Roswaal: “Guh...”

Garfiel: “Ha! If I hadn’t heard from the Captain that ya can do martial arts too, ya’d would’ve gotten me good.”

Looking down at Roswaal as he fell to his knees, Garfiel gives a roll of his previously-grappled arm, then baring his fangs.

Garfiel: “Hey Roswaal. Yer sayin’ things that an idiot like me ain’t gonna understand. Ya can go on about yer four centuries, but fact is yer a young guy who ain’t even thirty prolly. ‘N I know my amazin’ self’s sittin’ at half of that.”

Garfiel reached out to grab Roswaal’s collar, hoisting the clown close, face twisted in pain. Garfiel scrunched his nose.

Garfiel: “But it ain’t that my amazin’ self’s goin’ with the Captain ‘cause I lost a fight. It’s true that I lost. Ya said it, my amazin’ stubbornness’s been doin’ me good for ten years. My head ain’t mushy enough for a loss to turn that around.”

Roswaal: “Then why are you standing in this room...”

Garfiel: “‘Cause the Captain... actually, it was Ram. She told me to go into the tomb ‘n look at the Trial after I lost. ‘N so, ten years later, I saw what started these ten years of feelin’s.”

Roswaal: “Wha—?! ”

Faces close to each other’s, shock flashed through Roswaal’s expression.

Roswaal: “Impossible... You’re, you’re not capable of facing your past again!”

Garfiel: “Ya can say I’m not capable all ya want. I already went ‘n done it, ‘n saw what I saw. ‘N so, I ended up understandin’.”

Roswaal glared at Garfiel, who was shaking his head. That silent, focused gaze of his was waiting for Garfiel to divulge what he had learned.

But, Garfiel merely opened his mouth wide, and—

Garfiel: “I ain’t gonna tell ya what I figured out. It’s a waste on you.”

Roswaal: "What!?"

Garfiel: "But I will tell ya one thing, why I'm sidin' with the Captain."

Garfiel let Roswaal go, sending him toppling down to a graceless landing on his behind, and looked at Subaru. He sighed slightly as Subaru flinched at his intensity.

Garfiel: "It's 'cause of course ya'd rather team up with the people sayin' yer strong, we need you, than someone makin' ya think yer gonna stay weak forever."

With that incredibly reasonable logic, Garfiel looked away from Roswaal. He passed him by, to stand beside Subaru with his arms crossed.

Subaru glanced over at him. And away. And over. And away. And—

Garfiel: "What."

Subaru: "...No, it's nothing. Counting on you."

Garfiel closed his eyes, looking uncomfortable, when Subaru spoke up and then squatted down in front of Roswaal. With his neck down and head drooped, he made no attempt to look at Subaru.

Subaru: "Roswaal."

Roswaal: "..."

Subaru: "Garfiel saw his past. That might have changed his viewpoint, but that does not mean the feelings he's had for his family for the last ten years have weakened or wavered. The strength of the feeling is staying the same, but he's changed. You don't find that idea a believable one?"

Though he may no longer be obsessed with Sanctuary, Garfiel's feelings had not weakened in the least. He had learned that his unreciprocated love for his mother had actually been mutual, and how great a shock had that given him? Subaru couldn't know.

But who could think that Garfiel was weak, seeing him now? Though he had wavered, and likely would lament.

Subaru: “And it’s the same for you. We’re not telling you to twist these feelings you’ve had all this time for someone. We just want you to change how you demonstrate those feelings. If no sacrifices occur, then of course we’ll help you.”

Roswaal: “...I cannot tolerate that. And so what does it matter if merely Garfiel’s feelings have changed? For our purposes, yet another vital person remains.”

Subaru reached out to Roswaal. But Roswaal did not attempt to take his hand. He shook his head, terrible at surrender, as he spoke about Emilia, who was now in the middle of the Trial.

Subaru: “Emilia’s not going to do what you expect either. She’s going to overcome it.”

Roswaal: “She cannot. She’ll be crushed by her regrets, regret ever hoping that she could change, and come crying and clinging to you... As suits her.”

Subaru: “Like there’s a girl out there whose face’s suited to crying. And actually, have you even seen her cry?”

Subaru recalled Emilia in the tomb, before their argument. She had been carrying heavy responsibility, and grieving the loss of her bond with Puck. Her expression as she glared at Subaru, unable to hold back her tears.

Recalling it lighted a fire in his heart.

An unbearable inferno of rage, burning him whole.

Subaru: “I have never seen a woman so fucking horrendous at crying before!”

Roswaal: “To be wounded, to be disparaged, that is the lot of half-elves like her. Sharing the same birth as the Witch of Envy is a congenital curse. It’s inevitable that would be despised as a Witch.”

Subaru: “Fuck off, what about her’s a Witch? This Witch you’re talking about doesn’t goddamn exist.”

Roswaal faced down. Subaru grabbed his collar and forced him to look up, his eyes pitched in anger as he put them on even eye level.

Reflected in Roswaal's eyes was Subaru, blazing with an unstoppable fury directed at the world. Yes. Right now, Natsuki Subaru was sick of everything in the world.

What about Emilia was a Witch? There wasn't any damn Witch. And if there was one, it would be—

Subaru: "If you're saying she's a Witch! It's because you all made her one! You keep telling her that and of course she's weak, of course she'd be hated, all because of her useless birth, and you are going to make her into a Witch!"

He recalled the Witches' tea party. The scenes flashed through his mind— The old Witches, titled after the Deadly Sins.

Minerva, Sekhmet, Typhon, Daphne, Carmilla, Echidna.

And the one who had seen him off at the moment the dream had shattered, he remembered Satella's face.

Like he could forget her. Her face— looked exactly like Emilia's.

Subaru: "Has anyone told her even once!? That when she's sad, when she's suffering, it's okay for her to cry! That if she can't wipe her tears away, someone at her side will do it for her! Has anyone told her even once that someone would be there for her!?"

No matter what horrible things she would go through, she accepted them as natural. Surely her heart would have been filled with pain, and it would feel like the sadness could crush her. But nobody had allowed her to cry, making her so terrible at crying.

Over repeated experiences in crying and crying and crying and crying, everyone would learn to keep the tears out of their voice, out of their expression, and themselves out of sight.

But she did not know that. She had made it this far without ever knowing that, and so she was terrible at crying.

A world that would do this, a world that had done this— was presently so loathsome to Subaru that he could go mad.

Subaru: “If the obvious thing in this world is for nobody to take her side, then my presence is going to change it! You think four-hundred-year-old curses can’t change, and I’m going to teach you!”

Roswaal: “———”

In front of Roswaal, his eyes shot open, Subaru jabbed the index finger of his right hand to the heavens.

By some bizarre turn, his posture right now, and Emilia’s pose to the insulting Witch, mirrored each other perfectly—

Subaru: “My name is Natsuki Subaru! Knight to the silver half-elf, Emilia!”

Once, Natsuki Subaru had crowed the exact same line without any preparation for it, and many had mocked his foolhardy determination. Thinking back, he had been even more useless back then than he was now. But there was a single difference between now and then.

Even if someone laughed at him for it, Natsuki Subaru would feel no embarrassment.

Subaru: “Emilia’s doing it, Roswaal. This girl you think to so weak is gonna tear right through the last hope you have left.”

Roswaal: “As if, she can...”

Subaru “The weakness you’re clinging to is getting peeled off bit-by-bit, and all that will be left to do is to talk to you... I’m trusting that you’ll finally start to listen.”

Even after hearing all of Subaru’s words of determination, Roswaal’s heart did not yield.

He was exactly right. Something built over four-hundred-years could not be altered with just a single word.

Just like Garfiel’s decade and Emilia’s century had required both words and actions to begin moving, Roswaal’s four centuries would be the same. The actions and the words of Subaru’s group would, finally, affect him.

That was what Subaru wanted to believe.

Roswaal: "...Regardless of what anyone may do, my feelings shall not waver."

Roswaal crawled past Subaru. He reached out his shaking hand to grab a black book beside the broken bed, cradling it to his chest.

A legitimate, future-charting Gospel.

Garfiel and Emilia had both outgrown the weakness that Roswaal believed in.

Omega and Ram had diverted from Roswaal as he attempted to establish his path.

The only hope remaining for Roswaal now was the Gospel.

Once its writ was lost as well, Subaru would be able to speak with Roswaal genuinely for the first time.

Roswaal: "I'll, make it snow..."

Subaru: "Do what you want. I'm crushing all your plans and crushing them unrelentingly."

With that reply to Roswaal's high-delirious whisper, Subaru turned to exit the room. He nodded at Garfiel, who seemed like wanted to say something, and the two left the room together.

At the very end, Garfiel glanced back to Roswaal still inside the room. And, perhaps seeing something in him as he was left behind, whispered in the quietest of voices---

Garfiel: "Ya fuckin' idiot."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Their conversation with Roswaal over, Subaru exited the building with a sigh. A deep one, wringing all the air out of his lungs, expelling everything in him.

Subaru: "Crap. We were trying to make him stop the attack on the mansion, but it feels like we just cornered him into doing it."

Garfiel: “Started talkin’ some nonsense crap ‘bout makin’ it snow, too. Didn’t look like we were gonna get a real conversation outta him... it ain’t yer fault, Captain.”

Subaru: “No, I totally cornered him when we didn’t need to. Even though I knew the second we went in that Roswaal wasn’t exactly in a normal state of mind, what the heck was I doing?”

Holding his head, Subaru recalled that conversation, which had consisted of the two pushing their points onto each other. Subaru felt like he had finally understood Roswaal’s principles and motives in earnest. And Subaru had clearly given his response and feelings regarding them.

He did think it was necessary to inform Roswaal that Emilia was going to clear the victory conditions, so that he would acknowledge his loss. But—

Subaru: “Doing that meant we lost out on the most important point...”

Garfiel: “I’m tellin’ ya, don’t get down ‘bout it. Ain’t like my amazin’ self got curious listenin’ from aside wonderin’ what ya were gonna do, but what ya said ain’t anythin’ incorrect.”

Subaru: “I mean, that’s the idea...”

Garfiel: “But anyway... That pose was so cool!”

Giving Subaru a smile, Garfiel promptly jabbed his finger to the heavens.

Honestly, the pose had only ever gotten terribly negative reviews ever since he had come to this world, so finding someone who could empathize with it was the peak of happiness. Perhaps it was Garfiel’s way of comforting Subaru. Probably. Hopefully.

???: “—Natsuki-san! Garfiel!”

Somebody called to the two who had been exchanging words. They glanced over, to see Otto running towards them. He had been doing something else, and came to a stop before them.

Otto: “It looks like you’re done speaking with the Margrave. How did everything go?”

Subaru: “Yeah. Got him to pick up the fight we put down.”

Otto: “Was that what we were attempting to do here!?”

What they had actually meant to talk about was actually the final trap Roswaal set in Sanctuary, and try to make him change his mind about it. They had found out about Omega’s presence on the way to Roswaal’s, and Roswaal was too thick-headed to change his mind about anything. So negotiations had failed.

Garfiel: “Hey, bro. Don’t get on the Captain’s case too much. He did this super fiery awesome backtalk. Put me in a good mood hearin’ it.”

Otto: “Do you remember what you went there to do? This truly isn’t a joke.”

Unable to refute Otto’s complaints, Subaru reached the peak of guilty reflection.

But Garfiel gave the dejected Subaru a boisterous slap on the shoulders, and rapped his finger off a dissatisfied Otto’s forehead. He watched as Otto yelped, pitching back, and squatted down to the ground.

Garfiel: “Yer right, that talk didn’t go great. But all that was a back-up plan anyway— I’ll be doin’ somethin’ bout the trouble at Roswaal’s mansion.”

Garfiel guffawed in reply to Otto’s silent criticism. He bared his fangs, and with a loud click,

Garfiel: “Leave everythin’ to my amazin’ self— I am the goddamn strongest.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Ram: “And so the three idiots and one clever dragon have departed by carriage for the mansion.”

Done with the story, Ram put her hand to her chest with her expression rather exhausted.

It was a rare thing for Ram to display emotion when around Emilia, and surprised her a little.

Emilia: “I see then. Well, I guess they had to.”

Ram: "...Is that all?"

Emilia: "That's all. I mean, I am still reeeally a little, yes, just a little miffed that they weren't waiting for me."

After all those talks, and they weren't even around to see nor hear how she had performed. What was up with with that?

Emilia: "But it means they don't think I'm going to fail."

If Subaru was indeed more worried about Emilia than anything else, then he would've stayed behind. His absence here meant that somewhere else, there was someone who needed his help more than her.

That's how it was, since Emilia knew that Natsuki Subaru believed in her.

Emilia: "I wonder if he really does love me. What do you think?"

Ram: "Barusu has more feelings for you than he does for anyone else, Emilia-sama."

Emilia: "...Huhuhu, thank you."

Ram affirmed it to Emilia, who was asking for confirmation. Emilia put her hand to her mouth and smiled, for Ram to lower her gaze in thought. Then, after a few seconds of silence, she looked up again.

Ram: "Emilia-sama, I must apologize."

Emilia: "What's wrong?"

Emilia's eyes widened to Ram's sudden act of contrition.

Emilia: "It's reeeeeeally uncommon for you to apologize."

Ram: "I think the same... However, now is the first time that I bow my head to you sincerely."

Ram curtly announced all of her curtseys up until this moment had been mere poses. Emilia smiled wryly, while Ram looked her straight in the eye.

Ram: “I did not believe that you would come to stand. The Trial had broken your spirit, you lost the Great Spirit who was your support, you even learned that Barusu had been keeping secrets from you. I did not think for a second that you would rise to your feet.”

Emilia: “...”

Ram: “However, even with all that has occurred, you have not yielded. When you left your bed, and realized that you had gone to the Tomb. I at least recognized that I had been discrediting you.”

But even so, Emilia had yet to get back on her feet at the juncture Ram was indicating. The only thing was that she had not tried to abandon the Trial. That alone was something she had never considered. Emilia could assert that.

Emilia: “And so you helped Subaru and Otto-kun?”

Ram: “I merely believed that my assistance would lead to a future worth seeing. It would be wrong to perceive it as myself assisting them. The person I had been assisting was you.”

Emilia: “You might be right.”

Subaru’s words had been indispensable for Emilia to get back to her feet.

And Subaru’s defeat of Garfiel had been necessary to prove those words. And defeating Garfiel had required Otto and Ram’s help.

Looking only at the results, you could say that Ram aided Emilia.

Emilia: “Why did you do that for me?”

Ram: “—Because it is essential to demonstrate your own sincerity before making a request.”

Emilia: “———”

With that, Ram knelt before Emilia. Whenever Ram demonstrated politeness around Emilia up to now, however insincere the sentiment may have been, it was always by grasping her skirt and performing a curtsy. Something within the scope of a maid’s duties.

But this time was different. This was the ultimate demonstration of politeness, through which anyone living in this world would illustrate all the respect they could muster.

Ram: "I ask of you, Emilia-sama— Please save my master, Roswaal-sama."

Emilia: "...Save Roswaal?"

Ram: "He is obsessed with delusions. A curse born of delusions, which has kept his heart bound for a long, long time. Perhaps I would have been happy even with that. Even should he never cast his gaze upon me, and never regard me as more than a tool to accomplish that delusion, I would have been happy."

Still kneeling, Ram bared her heart to Emilia. Beneath her expressionless mask, she may have been holding this wish the entire time.

Ram: "However, his delusion is no longer capable of taking form. The world has diverged from the writ of the Gospel, the basis for everything, and Roswaal-sama now clings merely to letters... I request that you may destroy it."

Emilia: "Will Roswaal be okay if that's destroyed?"

Ram: "I doubt so. He will likely be thrown into disarray. He may lose sight of his life's meaning and break down entirely. But you are the only one, Emilia-sama. Who might be able to grant Roswaal-sama's delusion... His feelings, in a world diverged from the Gospel's writ."

Her head bowed down, Ram pleaded to Emilia.

Half of her speech was failing to communicate clearly to Emilia. Roswaal's Gospel probably meant that black book he had shown her. He had also mentioned that the world was diverging from its text. What would Roswaal do in a world different from what the book said? How could Emilia do anything to do something about the hopes of a hopeless Roswaal?

Emilia: "What do I have to do?"

Ram: "—I ask for you to ascend to the throne."

Emilia: "——"

Ram: “For you to be seated upon the throne of Lugunica. Once you achieve this, Roswaal-sama’s feelings will be fulfilled. Please teach Roswaal-sama that the day will come in which his love is realized. Give him reason to live for today, and for tomorrow.”

This is the first time Emilia had ever seen Ram so talkative.

And so.

And so...

This emotion flooding up in Emilia’s heart, indescribable, was...?

These feelings, unstoppable, as someone who had thought her useless requests her aid, were...?

Ram raised her head. The great love filling every inch of her small form glistened wet in her cerise eyes.

Ram: “Please, Emilia-sama— Help him.”

Those quiet words made Emilia’s entire body shiver. It felt like a shock to her bloodstream, enough to imagine that a hand was jolting her heart once, twice.

After the shiver raced through her body, only one thing remained inside Emilia. Blazing hot in her heart, solely a sense of duty.

Emilia: “I honestly don’t know how me becoming Ruler will save Roswaal.”

Ram: “...”

Emilia: “And I don’t think I can truly understand what your feelings are, either.”

Ram: “...”

Emilia: “But....”

Returning Ram’s silent gaze, Emilia drew in a breath. Hesitation was gone from her heart. Anxiety was gone from her mind.

Her soul blazed hotter than ever before.

Emilia: “This is the first time you’ve ever requested anything from me.”

And so—

Emilia: “I’ll do it, Ram. You believe in me, and I want to answer to that.”

In this instant, the things that Emilia ought to do and wanted to do overlapped so perfectly that there was no need to deliberate. She said with a smile,

Emilia: “And that’s definitely something I’ll need to start, right here.”

Arc 4 Chapter 122 - Roaring Reunion

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 7 “A Howling Reunion”, Parts 1-2

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 95

Holding her breath, the girl crept through the darkness with her footsteps mute.

Petra: “———”

She made her small frame even smaller than usual, paying heed to the rustling of her clothes. Her hand stayed over her mouth, for if she failed to physically obstruct it, she would let slip her wheezy breathing.

She truly wished that her heartbeat’s incessant pounding would shush itself too.

Petra: “———”

The auburn-haired girl, Petra, walked through the finally-familiar mansion, rife with anxiety, as if lost in an unfamiliar world. In this instant, she was truly grateful for the fluffy carpeting over the floors. She found it laborious to walk on normally, but it was thanks to it that she was able to walk without producing any noisy footsteps.

She pledged to herself that, should she get another chance to clean them, she would put all her gratitude and diligence into their washing.

If she did not allocate her attention into unrelated topics like laundry, her barely-moving legs would come to a stop. Even now, she was proceeding at the slow pace of a caterpillar, so what would happen if she stopped completely? Just the thought of it terrified her.

She presently loathed the length of this long, stretching, endless corridor.

Petra had been overjoyed at the time she was accepted to work in this large mansion. Although near to the village, Petra had considered this mansion an extremely faraway place. It hadn't been a problem of distance. More like a problem of social position.

The Margrave, governor and lord of the mansion, would come to Arlam Village during his spare time.

Despite his noble status, he assumed no pretentious airs, and he laughed off and forgave the impolite remarks of children. Petra had never heard the villagers badmouth the Margrave except on the topic of his dress.

And Petra hadn't particularly paid special focus on the Margrave either.

But she had always admired the size of his mansion.

Being from a small village, with two normal parents, Petra would never reach this place. While she had talked about wanting to go to the Capital and making clothes when she grew up, that was merely a dream she had created, one that was appropriate to her standing. She'd known to give up on reaching for things that she would never attain ever since she'd been young.

And then Petra was unexpectedly given a chance to work at the mansion.

To add to that, she would be with someone who had saved her life, towards whom she had some feelings for. Which one fact had delighted her more? Keep it secret, but the latter one won out just slightly.

Regardless, her employment in this mansion had been the start of a dreamlike life for Petra. While the expansive hallways, abundant rooms, and extensive time spent on cleaning did dizzy her, the hectic days brought joy to Petra's life.

This place of aspiration and dreams now chilled her to her core, so terrifying it was for her.

Petra did not know what had happened, or what was going on. What she did know was that she had finished her work as usual, and had just had dinner alone with her senior maid, Frederica.

Petra stood on a stool as she cleaned the dishes, while Frederica collected the meal which had been meant for Beatrice-sama. They had failed to get it to her.

Petra had never seen Beatrice even once. She did sometimes wonder whether she really existed, but seeing that Frederica, Emilia, and Subaru seemed to know her, Petra went along with it without saying anything.

The lord of the mansion had gone somewhere far away. Ignoring the servants Petra and Frederica, two people remained in this mansion. One was the unseen Beatrice, and the other was the girl called Rem. Neither of them would eat meals, which somewhat dissatisfied Petra.

But Petra pitied the sleeping Rem, and she could not forget how carefully Subaru treated the girl. Subaru's expression as he gazed at Rem's face had been incredibly vivid, so emotional and anguished that Petra hesitated to even feel jealous.

And so—

Petra: "...I gotta save Rem-san."

That verdict alone, voiced so unwittingly, spurred Petra's actions.

After Frederica disposed of Beatrice's dinner and Petra cleared away the dishes, Frederica had instructed Petra to double-check the work itinerary for the following day, alongside other things.

Petra truly wanted to help Frederica with the leftover work, but being midway through her physical development still, Petra's body did not withstand the fatigue of late nights. Frederica would acknowledge Petra's enthusiasm and then send her off to bed; that was the usual way of things.

But tonight, while on the way to her room, something irregular had happened.

—All of the lights in the mansion shut off.

Surprised by the sudden darkness, Petra clung to nearby Frederica. Frederica took her tenderly in a hold, and after speaking words upon reassuring words, held her breath.

Petra would never forget how the atmosphere had frozen in that instance.

She had experienced this heavy aura before. The anxiety coursing inside her led her to strengthen her grip on Frederica, who quietly drew her hands away.

Frederica: “Petra. Be a good girl, listen to me— Use the stairway behind us, and exit. Without making any sound, silently, as fast as you can, flee.”

Petra: “B—but what about you?”

Frederica: “I’ll follow soon behind. Once you have exited the mansion, run to the village. After we safely reconvene, we will wait until morning to tidy everything up.”

Frederica looked forward as she spoke her gentle words.

She had then pushed Petra lightly behind her, creating distance between herself and Frederica. The misty air hid the moon back then, providing her with absolutely zero sources of light.

Petra sensed Frederica stepping silently forward.

Simultaneously, Petra obeyed Frederica’s instructions and set out down the corridor, her path opposite to Frederica’s. She managed to reach the stairway, and just when she thought to proceed down, remembered.

Petra: “This is... just like the forest.”

She remembered where she had experienced this heavy, freezing atmosphere before.

This was the aura from two months ago, when she and the other village children had entered the forest. The aura she had felt when she found herself in the middle of a forest full of bloodthirsty Witchbeasts, with her life in peril.

Petra: “—I have to.”

The instant she realized that, Petra’s feet proceeded not downstairs, but up. She remembered Frederica’s instructions. She did feel guilty for violating them.

But she could not leave Rem in a mansion identical to that forest. Because she remembered how Subaru had brought her out of those terrifying woods back then.

Petra: “—Ah.”

After thinking back on those scary memories, Petra sensed she was near her destination.

Make no sound, go unnoticed— By stubbornly adhering to those rules, her sluggish journey reached the end of its path.

Just reaching Rem's room did not make small Petra capable of carrying her and fleeing. Petra had been so overwhelmed by urgency that she had not even considered that fact. She had merely thought that, should she reach Rem's sleeping room and confirm that she was there, everything would work out.

A sense of duty unfitting to her small stature, and the terror of knowing that death was near, both berated her. Nobody could fault Petra for failing to notice the obvious.

Just a few more steps, a few more meters, two rooms away, and there it would be. Almost no distance at all left to reach her destination.

Her heart pounded so loud it could explode, the noise of her breathing slipping out between her fingers.

Just a little further, just a little more, just a—

Petra: "———"

—Reaching the room, Petra looked up.

And that's when it happened. When, outside the hallway window, wind blew aside the clouds that blocked the moon. Its light beamed in through the window, bringing color to a once-dark world. And Petra then saw it.

???: "My, what an adorable maid."

A woman so dark as to meld into the darkness of the shadows stood directly in front of her. Between Petra and the door, just three steps away.

She was a tall woman, with long hair. Her sensual clothes displayed her voluptuous body unreservedly. Her hand flicked the tip of her braid as she calmly approached, all exceptionally erotic.

That was, provided you had failed to notice the large, gleaming knife in her free hand.

Woman: “From what I’m told, I have two targets with one more appended. You’re the little maid, aren’t you?”

Petra: “...Ah.”

Woman: “You’re shivering? Don’t worry— Your guts are bound to be pretty. Girls with futures always have beautiful entrails.”

Petra had no idea what she was saying.

But she did know that her advance was synonymous with the approach of death. Petra knew this, but her feet froze in terror, unable to move.

The slender woman held an unfittingly large knife. Once that thing struck her, Petra’s life will be messily reaped. And yet.

Woman: “Good girl... I’ll send you to meet the angels.”

Heartlessly, the woman raised her knife, the shivering girl as her target. The blade sliced through wind, cutting into Petra’s belly— But before that,

???: “Petra!!”

A large silhouette swooped in from the other end of the corridor, cutting into the space between Petra and the knife, sparks flying alongside shrill metallic noise.

Petra’s protector, their long blonde hair fluttering, was a character very familiar to her. There was only one person with a back so large and dependable that it did not seem that of a woman.

Petra: “Frederica-neesama!”

Frederica: “You naughty girl, Petra. I told you to flee... You are going to get a scolding after this.”

Petra: “Yes, yes!”

Frederica turned only her neck to glance back at Petra, reproaching her in a harsh voice.

Petra trembles at the words naughty girl, nodding several times at Frederica’s back in tears.

Woman: "You're the big maid? Big did indeed mean big."

With the two having their exchange in front of her, the knife-wielding woman retreated a short way and tilted her head. The way her braid swayed with the movement did not match with the woman's strangeness, seeming somewhat comical.

Frederica: "My large size does bother me, you realize. Likely from my father."

Woman: "Then your father was huge. And if you're that huge, that means you have superb guts. I'm excited."

Frederica: "Your hobbies cannot be called tasteful."

Woman: "Women have brighter and more vivid guts than men do. I'll do a comparison with yours, and teach you that."

Frederica jabbed her arms out in front of her as she took a combat stance. Her hands were adorned with clawed cestus, which were likely the weapon which had parried the woman's strike. They made use of Frederica's large, powerful build, so you could call it a weapon suited for her, but...

Frederica: "Frustratingly, this is not going to prove an adequate match."

Woman: "You do look like you have some ability to you, but probably, not as much as me. After an experience in the Capital where I practically died, my skills have gotten better."

Frederica: "I see. I find myself rather wishing to curse whoever failed to terminate you."

Cold sweat rose on Frederica's brow. The overwhelming grisliness radiating from the woman made Frederica feel the disparity in strength with just a glance. She looked like she was merely standing there, doing nothing, and yet a thick aura of death exuded from her.

How many lives had she reaped to radiate this ghastliness?

Frederica: "Petra. This time, truly do leave the mansion. I shall stall her."

Petra: "B—but, nee-sama..."

Petra glanced at the door to the room beside them. With that, Frederica understood why Petra had disobeyed her orders and arrived here. And so,

Frederica: “I would not know who has commissioned you... but it would appear that Petra and I are listed as targets.”

Woman: “Yes, you are. You, the little maid, and the Spirit girl. I’m not exactly satisfied with the numbers, but I’ve never opened a Spirit’s stomach before, so I’m excited for it. I was just a step behind last time and didn’t manage to do it.”

Frederica: “You certainly divulged that information smoothly. Does this not disqualify you as a professional?”

Woman: “I don’t mind it. Your mouth’s going to stop working soon, and if you’re thinking to complain to my employer, then I just have to keep you quiet.”

Frederica: “How deranged.”

This conversation would give anyone a headache.

Frederica sensed that speaking with the woman any further would be pointless. Regardless, she had managed to get the answers that she wished to hear.

Frederica: “Petra. She is targeting yourself, myself, and Beatrice-sama. Do you understand?”

Petra: “—Yes, ma’am.”

Petra nodded as she wiped away her tears. With that last exchange, and this statement, Petra supposed Frederica’s intentions. She was a smart girl. A good student. Someone Frederica did not want to die.

Frederica: “Leave!”

Petra: “Yes ma’am!”

In response to Frederica’s voice, Petra practically tripped over herself as she broke into a run.

Immediately, the black-garbed woman threw something at her. Four knives, slicing through wind as they loomed in on Petra's back. Their superb aim was brilliantly disgusting, and a snap of Frederica's cestus barely managed to deflect them. Shrill metallic noise pealed out as all the thrown knives rebounded, thrown off-course.

Petra did not even look back as she fled. She trusted Frederica entirely. And so, the little girl had to answer to the senior's demands.

Woman: "She's a good girl."

Frederica: "Yes, she's my pride!"

Frederica slammed her left cestus at the woman, who dodged by tilting forward slightly. However, then targeting the stooped woman's stomach, Frederica unleashed a kick.

Frederica's kick drilled through the air, capable of destroying walls. Unlike her normal human mother, Frederica's father was a half-blood from a lineage of fighting creatures. While she did not entirely approve of the blood coursing through her veins, she was thankful for its strength this time.

The kick slammed into the woman, whose eyes shot wide open. She immediately brought her free hand up to block, but the kick would be powerful enough to snap those skinny arms of hers and—

Frederica: "Wha!?"

Woman: "Does this truly surprise you?"

Frederica swallowed her breath. The woman's scarlet lips relaxed into a smile, everything upside down. The moment that her left hand touched Frederica's leg, in a situation which would not forgive even the slightest error in force, the woman pulled off some nigh impossible acrobatics. She leaned her body weight into Frederica's kick and pulled herself into a one-handed handstand. Frederica shivered at the feather-light woman perched on her leg.

Frederica: "Spider!"

Woman: "Someone else called me the exact same thing not too long ago."

Her voice sounded as she had been somewhat stung by those remarks, but no such sentiment was reflected in her ferocious strike.

Moonlight glinted off her blade as it cleaved the air for Frederica's neck. Frederica immediately drew up her cestus to parry it, but both this arm, as well as the other one which was supposed to aid in the deflection, screamed in pain.

Although one-handed, and with arms far skinnier than Frederica's, the woman's grip strength was immense. Sparks flew as the blades shrieked against each other and Frederica lowered the leg the woman was perched on, then aiming for her face and—

Woman: "Poor choice."

The knife remained caught in the cestus's claws— as the woman used it as a pivot point to flip even further overhead.

The trajectory of Frederica's kick was supposed to have caught her as she fell, but instead passed harmlessly beneath her as the woman's free hand reached for her leg. Out from beneath her skirt, there peeked yet another foreboding knife.

Woman: "Show me your vibrant insides."

Still upside down, the woman's two knives fly in from both left and right, force enough to slice Frederica in twain.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Soaring down the staircase, Petra gave great swings of her little arms as she ran. She heard the shrill peals of metal meeting metal from upstairs, and Frederica's quiet scream.

Petra was not foolish enough to stay fixated on stubborn, childish ideas that would keep her from listening to Frederica, fighting so that she could flee. But even Petra, who knows absolutely nothing about fighting, knew this.

That shadowy woman was a horrifying monster.

Frederica's face had looked so scary, but the woman's smile had not faltered for even a moment. Petra was not unaware of the strength gap. In fact, she was incredibly aware of it.

Leaving Frederica behind like this meant that she would be murdered.

Petra: "But if, Beatrice-sama was here...!"

There was one last person present in this mansion.

It seems like the shadowy woman was unaware of Rem's presence. Naturally, Petra did figure that the woman would add Rem to her list of targets were she to find her, but so long as she and Frederica refrained from announcing Rem's existence, it was unlikely that the woman would notice her.

Petra: "This one... Not it, then this one!?"

Having descended the staircase, Petra opened a random nearby door and checked inside.

It was unbelievable, but apparently Beatrice lived inside a moving room in this mansion. Should you open many of the mansion's doors, eventually one would lead to Beatrice's room. That was how powerful of a magician she was.

Petra required that magician's help right now. If that person was present here, then she would surely help Frederica. She'd do away with that shadowy woman, and protect Petra's dream mansion.

Petra: "Not here... not here either... Nee-sama!"

Out of breath and eyes flowing with tears, Petra was near to collapse. She had opened all the nearby doors in the servant's quarters. But Beatrice had not appeared. How long had it been since Frederica started fighting that woman?

Petra needed to hurry, really needs to hurry, and yet.

Petra: "Nee-sama..."

She needed to run, yet her legs did not move.

Petra clapped her hand against her leg in an attempt to invigorate her withering heart. But that was not enough. She did not have the courage. And her hopes were seconds from dying as well.

Petra: “—Subaru.”

With weakness dominating her heart, the name she called in desperation belonged to someone not present.

It was the name of the one Petra thought was the bravest person in the world. He was amazing and courageous, overpowering his shaking legs as he faced opponents he could possibly defeat.

When Petra and the other villages had been in real danger, and she almost died, he had been their savior— And his name was the one she called upon.

Even though she knew that he was not here.

Petra: “Subaru, Subaru... help me, Subaru...”

???: “Alright, will do, Petra.”

Petra: “Wha—”

Crying, with her face buried in her hands, the voice led Petra to look up. Tears blurred her vision. Somebody was standing right in front of her.

They kneeled to match the cowering Petra’s eye level, and—

???: “My bad for being late. But here I am to help you. Thank god you’re safe, Petra.”

His familiar face with its nasty eyes gave her an awkward smile. His expression as he tried his best to comfort Petra was not tender in the slightest, which brought Petra absolute relief.

Petra: “Are you Subaru? You’re here for us?”

Subaru: “It’s me, and I’m here. Everything’s okay now.”

He nodded reassuringly, and Petra reached out to him. She pat his cheeks, and when she leaned forward too far and fell, he caught her.

It was no hallucination and no dream, he was here. He was here for her. She would love to bask in the relief it brought her— But it was not the time for that.

Petra: “Subaru. Frederica-neesama’s fighting with a lady upstairs.”

Subaru: “Frederica is?”

Petra: “A dark woman, with a big knife and really scary.”

Subaru: “A dark horrifying lady with a huge knife... Yeah, I know her.”

Subaru grimaced at Petra’s words. It seemed like they both understood how threatening she was. Petra tugged Subaru’s arm.

Petra: “Please, save Frederica-neesama! Beat that lady, Subaru!”

Subaru: “Okay, just leave everything to me! That’s what I wanna say, but if I face off against someone who Frederica can’t beat, I’m gonna be a corpse in under a second!”

Petra: “———”

For an instant, Petra’s heart threatened to flood with despair. But Subaru’s palm came down to pat Petra’s head gently.

Subaru: “And so I sent in some crazy strong reinforcements instead.”

Subaru looks up as if staring at the floor above, apparently imagining the scene unfolding there. His expression is somewhere between relaxed and anxious, an undefined thing.

Subaru: “It’s a shame the reunion will be interrupted by a nuisance that’s a bit too much of a nuisance, though.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Frederica was seconds away from accepting something as fact— I am going to be sliced in two through the stomach.

???: “Sorry for this... But you ain’t invited.”

Metal clashed against metal alongside a voice which sounded pleasantly displeased. It was a contradiction, but true. They sounded excited, but also sounded disgusted by their opponent. Which was really to be expected.

Woman: “You...”

???: “Yer gonna be sittin’ there downside up for fuckin’ ever, eh!? —Get th’hell off!”

Her blades blocked and attack ineffectual, up slammed a ferocious kick into the woman’s chest. Her body curved into a C as she blasted away, and the man lowered his raised leg, clattering his arms against each other.

Both his arms were equipped with silver, gleaming shields. A one-handed shield for each arm, both covering his fists.

Man: “Accordin’ to the Captain, they say «the best defense is a good offense».”

Sharp fangs bared, the man’s teeth clicked as he spoke.

Man: “So there ya go. Got defensive shields set up to go on offense. Best offense and best defense happenin’ at the same time, so with two bests ain’t it the damn strongest?”

It was dumb, child-tier logic. But this man was applying his child-tier idea, and using two shields as weapons.

The blond man took a stance with his feet positioned far apart, glaring attentively at the opponent as he craned his head back at Frederica.

Man: “Ain’t I right, sis— Fuckin’ hell, yer huge!?”

Instantly, the warrior’s atmosphere about him dissolved. The man’s—no, the boy’s eyes shot open in shock as he gazed Frederica top to bottom.

Boy: “Wha— Yer serious!? That’s my sis!? Ain’t my sis meant to be smaller, skinner, with a softer lookin’ face!? This ain’t my sis, ‘tis more like my big bro... Agaaaaaahh!?”

Frederica: “Do not be rude.”

Frederica jabbed her knee into the rude, staring boy’s side. The boy tumbled to the ground before sluggishly getting back up. Looking at his dizzied face, Frederica noticed it. The scar on his forehead.

Frederica: “Is that you, Garf?”

Garfiel: “Never mind that, am I really safe to be callin’ ya Frederica... Can’t frickin’ believe it... Gah!”

Frederica: “Do not neglect to appropriately refer to me as your elder sister.”

Halfway through standing up again, an elbow to the back sent Garfiel back into agony. Looking at him in pain like this made Frederica remember the time they were young— They had no toys in Sanctuary, and had to use their bodies to stave away boredom.

Frederica had just flung Garfiel away with complete disregard for their nine-year age gap. Exactly the same as back then.

Frederica: “No. Garf... you have truly grown large.”

Garfiel: “It just sounds like sarcasm when yer sayin’ it, oy! ‘N just so you know, my amazin’ self’s still gonna be gettin’ bigger! Don’t think yer gonna be lookin’ down on the top of my head forever!”

Frederica: “Huhuhu, allow me to amend that. Your body may have grown larger, but you remain as small as always.”

Garfiel: “The hell was that!?”

Garfiel bared his teeth as he objected to Frederica’s statement. This interaction with her little brother, happening for the first time in ten years, filled Frederica with an unbelievable happiness.

Who would have thought a day would come where she spoke with Garfiel outside Sanctuary?

—Someone who had ventured to Sanctuary surely had done well. Ram, or Emilia, or Subaru? Which of them was it?

Frederica: “Ah, Otto-sama was also with you.”

Garfiel: “Ha, that guy flat never gets his payoff. Kinda like «A migurd-made bridge collapses on the usual», and guess he’s just that kinda guy.”

The vision of a dejected-looking grey-haired man came to mind. While the siblings both reached that conclusion, from deep in the dark hallway,

???: “Do you mind if I begin to act now?”

Garfiel: “Yer bothered waitin’ fer us, pretty considerate of yer. If yer gonna be so nice, then how about forgettin’ yer work ‘n goin’ damn home. My amazin’ self ain’t lookin’ to punch women around.”

Woman: “Goodness, how kind of you.”

Garfiel gestured as if swatting away a bug, to which the woman smiled. Frederica tapped Garfiel’s back, for he was overwhelmingly careless.

Frederica: “Garf. You are going to have a painful time should you judge her by her womanly appearance.”

Garfiel: “Yeah I got it, she ain’t anythin’ normal. N’ anyway ya better bet the only lady in the world who’s gettin’ my real lady treatment is Ram.”

Frederica: “If you believe that sounded cool, I will tell you that it was not cool in the slightest. Ram would snort at you.”

Garfiel: “The hell!?”

Frederica looked astonished. Garfiel glanced back at her, indignant.

—That instant, a silver disk comes shooting from the woman’s hand.

A disk. Or no, it wasn’t a disk, it was a knife rotating at insane speeds on the vertical. The thing whistled through the air, too fast to see, zooming in on Garfiel, ready to split his head open and splatter fresh blood about the corridor.

Garfiel: “Y’know.”

Woman: “———”

The metal shields clattered together as a searing shower of sparks burst out.

The thrown knife sliced the face of the raised right shield, before a skillful shift in its angle sent the knife flying up to pierce the ceiling. Garfiel did not watch that however, instead racing forward, gliding over the floor on approach to the woman as he raised his other shield.

Garfiel: “I did tell ya to get the hell out of here, yeah?”

Woman: “I heard, and here’s my response.”

Just before his fist connected, the woman flitted backward, yanking in her arm. Immediately, the knife behind Garfiel was ripped out of the ceiling, rotating again with its momentum as it attacked him from behind. A string had been tied around the knife’s handle, connected to the woman’s other knife.

Frederica: “Garf!”

She was too slow to warn him.

The blade rotated as it closed in on Garfiel’s arm, hoisted and seconds from slamming into the woman, the knife ready to slice the appendage in two. But—

Garfiel: “—Fuckin’ cheek!!”

Frederica: “———!?”

Garfiel shouted; it didn’t matter if Frederica’s voice had reached him or not. His arm exploded in girth, golden fur coating it, the thing thick as a log, clearly not the limb of any human but instead that of an animal.

Even the woman had to look rattled.

With a roar, Garfiel slammed his fist and the shield into the woman’s stomach.

Of course, having paid not a speck of care to dodging, the knife protruded from Garfiel’s arm. But it had failed to cut through the thick limb and its coat of wiry fur entirely.

Woman: “—Guh!?”

Garfiel: “Get outta here, woman!!”

Entirely bothered by the pain, the swing of Garfiel’s fist blasted the woman away. Unable to kill the momentum, she slammed into the ground, proceeding to bounce and roll further across the floor.

Garfiel watched her tumble as he yanked the knife out of his shoulder. Fangs severed the connecting string, their owner then tossing the knife out a nearby window.

Garfiel: “Ha! «Kurgan slayed the enemy even at the cost of his arms»! If ya think I’m gonna freak out ‘n shrink back at some pain, yer dead wrong, moron!”

Frederica: “The one being a moron is you!”

Garfiel: “Gah!?”

His sister’s fist struck the back of his head after his victorious boast. Garfiel crouched down, glancing back in protest to the unforeseen reprimand.

Frederica: “Fighting in a manner which injures yourself... Grandmother would cry if she saw this.

Garfiel: “Ah, guh... A—ain’t like I don’t know what the granny’d think of it...”

Frederica: “Is that how you are referring to Grandmother!? I do not recall raising you to be like this!”

Garfiel: “We ain’t seen each other since I was four, ‘n finally when we get our reunion yer doin’ this, yer the one who’s bein’ unbelievable here!”

Garfiel breathing jarred. Frederica also glanced forward, to find a black silhouette languidly getting up. The woman quietly lifted herself, flipping the knife around in her hand before catching the blood dripping from her mouth on her finger and licking it. A lovely smile arose on her face.

Woman: “—Wonderful, you are. Very wonderful. A lively boy.”

Garfiel: “Honestly, my amazin’ self wasn’t thinkin’ ya’d get right back after that one either. My bad, underestimated ya a lil’.”

Garfiel pressed his hands together as he apologized. The exchange did not exactly seem like one between two monsters trying to kill each other, but it did lead Frederica to forget the passing of time for a moment.

She shook her head, getting herself back together.

Frederica: “Garf! This woman is shrouded in mystery. Take care not to slacken your guard...”

Garfiel: “I’m sayin’ I got that. But anyway. Sist... Sis, d’you know a girl called Rem?”

Frederica: “...? Yes, she is in this mansion. I, hm, heard that she is Ram’s younger sister.”

Frederica wasn’t conclusively certain about that point either. She had known Ram since childhood, and those memories included no younger sisters of hers. But Subaru explained that Rem was Ram’s younger sister, and she did resemble her to a shocking degree. Apparently, she was suffering from a affliction which erased her from everyone’s memories, damage caused by the Witch Cult.

Garfiel: “She look like Ram?”

Frederica: “Exactly like Ram. But that is no pardon for you to use her as a replacement.”

Garfiel: “I ain’t gonna do anythin’ scummy like that. Jus’ wanted to check— Okay then.”

During their conversation, the woman rolled her shoulders and rotated her legs, checking her physical condition. Perhaps she was giving them time to have their conversation. Her thoughts weren’t exactly clear. Either way—

Garfiel: “Sis, if she’s somewhere on this floor, find an openin’ ’n bring her out. My amazin’ hands are gonna be full dealin’ with her.”

Frederica: “W—what are you saying? I will be fighting as well. With us together, our chances...”

Woman: “I truly wonder about that.”

Frederica looked at the woman wearing a sharp gaze, when the woman concealed her smile beneath her knife.

Woman: “Please don’t make such scary expressions. And I believe that your little brother will prove I’m not wrong in my statements.”

Frederica: “...Garf?”

Frederica’s brows furrowed in confusion, calling her brother’s name. In response, Garfiel adjusted the angle of his shields.

Garfiel: “Sorry, sis. This ain’t someone easy enough that I can keep worryin’ ‘bout what’s goin’ on behind me.”

Frederica: “Wha—!”

Frederica was speechless after being judged as an impairment. While she did recognize that her own abilities did not even touch that of the woman, it was still insulting to hear that she would be so useless she would be a detriment.

Garfiel: “Don’t go misunderstandin’ me, sis. I ain’t sayin’ yer a detriment.”

Frederica: “...Then what are you saying?”

Garfiel: “If me ‘n this chick get serious, this place’s gonna turn into a warzone.”

Garfiel pointed at himself, then to the woman. She smiled happily, as if affirming his words. She fiddled with her braid before stooping down forward.

Woman: “Exactly. And so it would be best that you stand down.”

Battle— a sense which only the truly strong could comprehend.

Recognizing that she was far outclassed, frustration blazed inside Frederica. She had reunited with her brother after ten years, and she could not even assist him at all.

Garfiel: “Stop thinkin’ bout pointless crap, sis.”

Frederica: “Garf.”

Garfiel: “Look at my arms. These shields are the ones me and you played with when we were little. The strength I have now, it started with me ‘n you.”

Frederica’s eyes widened to Garfiel’s words.

Concern, care, and something other than those emotions came through in his voice. Frederica felt that her younger brother had matured, her heart growing hot.

Garfiel: “The Captain still handed my ass to me with the power of numbers. But when I’m in top shape that story starts changin’.”

Stepping forward, Garfiel clicked his teeth, battered his shields together. And,

Garfiel: “Come at me, bitch in black. This’s my celebration for leavin’ Sanctuary. ‘N I’m startin’ it by utterly wreckin’ the first barrier in my way!!”

Arc 4 Chapter 123A - Bowel Hunter vs Shield of Sanctuary

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 7 “A Howling Reunion”, Parts 3-4; Volume 15, Chapter 1 “The Final Day of Roswaal Manor”, Part 2

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 110

Subaru: “Got it? In total there are four people in the mansion we have to save. They’re all girls.”

Inside the high-speed carriage, Subaru raised four fingers as he explained.

The scenery flowed by as they sped along the rugged road. But even so, no wind nor jolting assaulted their carriage. While vaguely finding it a mystifying sensation no matter how many times he experienced it, Subaru nodded to the two people looking at his raised fingers.

Subaru: “First is Frederica. Our buddy Garfiel’s older sister. If we assume the attacker’s already there, Frederica’s the only one who could buy us any time.”

Garfiel: “Sis, hmm... Ain’t seen her for ten years now.”

Looking uneasy, Garfiel scratched at his short, blond hair. He had been so stubborn about staying in Sanctuary. It was going to be hard for him to face Frederica, who had abandoned Sanctuary for the outside world.

Otto: “You truly have not seen her in a decade? From the Margrave and Ram-san’s accounts, it sounds as though they travelled between the mansion and Sanctuary rather frequently.”

Garfiel: “It woulda been awkward for sis too. She never came along with that asshole Roswaal... she did send a bunch of letters though, apparently.”

Otto: “Apparently?”

Garfiel: "Gave them all to granny w'out readin' them."

Garfiel averted his gaze, looking sulky. His awkward attitude toward his sister was exactly that of a child, so their reunion was definitely going to be an emotional one.

Subaru sighed. Otto's impression of that whole issue looked to be about the same as his as he pulled the reins.

Otto: "Then the second would be Petra-chan."

Subaru: "Yeah. The second one's the Roswaal mansion's precocious and hopeful new maid, Petra. She's a completely ordinary village girl with no underside at all, so if she gets targeted it's one-hundred percent bad."

The attacks on Roswaal mansion so far had ended in dead Petras one-hundred percent of the time. The other three people were also highly likely to die, but Petra had no means to fight back at all. So she was often dealt with pretty quickly. If they were going to protect her, they would need to find her immediately.

Subaru: "Next is Rem. She's Ram's younger sister. Though you probably don't remember her."

Garfiel: "I'm still 'n disbelief 'bout it, Captain. The idea of Ram havin' an identical twin sister. How the hell could I forget that, when my amazin' self's known her such a long time?"

Subaru: "It's a curse that made even Ram forget her. Talking about ways to deal with that is beside the point, but... Anyway, Rem's not so urgent. The assassin attacking the mansion, Elsa, doesn't have Rem on her list of targets. I don't think her employer knew about Rem's existence when they hired her."

Otto: "Although, should she discover Rem-san sleeping in the mansion, I doubt the encounter will end peacefully."

Subaru: "...You're right about that."

It was Elsa they were talking about here. Rem might not be on her commissioner's list, but if she discovered her, she would probably do something just for kicks. And while Subaru had not seen it himself, Rem had been killed during these loops.

All he could do was to pray Rem was not in a room that Elsa just happened to open.

Otto: “Regardless, this dependence on the opponent’s decisions can’t be called an overly great strategy.”

Subaru: “Where I’m depending on you guys, and also depending on the enemy. This is Natsuki Subaru’s brand of warfare, dubbed *Gyaku Fuurinkazan*¹⁷⁹.”

Garfiel: “S—so cool...!”

Garfiel clenched his fists, eyes sparkling.

The fact his random stupid statement had given Garfiel such expectations made even Subaru feel guilty. He decided that later, once they had more time on their hands, he would teach Garfiel about actual Furinkazan.

Resolved, he furrowed his brows as he looked at Garfiel, and began “Though...”,

Subaru: “I mean it’s been horrifying watching this, but is that actually seriously working?”

Garfiel: “Well we’re in a rush, ain’t we? If there were any better way, my amazin’ self’d go for that instead.”

Said Garfiel, looking displeased. His words were sensible, but Subaru’s statement really could not be avoided. This was because Garfiel was presently outside the carriage, holding on to it, while talking with Subaru and Otto through the window.

His hands clutched the window frame as he dangled there, hanging alongside the zooming carriage with his feet brushing across the ground, getting dragged along by the vehicle. Subaru had seen an enemy get mashed in a carriage’s wheels before, and considering the possibility of Garfiel’s hands slipping could end up in a repeat, Subaru didn’t really feel calm about it.

Subaru: “If something goes wrong and you get smushed, my PTSD will kick in and we also stop having anything we can do about the mansion.”

¹⁷⁹ Not really an English flip, but I’m keeping this in Japanese (逆風林火山). The literal translation is “Reverse Wind Forest Fire Mountain”. Part of it is a popularized version of the battle standard used by a feudal lord in the Sengoku period (for more info, see here).

Garfiel: “The hell, Captain, you’re bein’ a damn worrywart. Everythin’s all fine. Just watch this! N’t this n’t this! N’t this, n’t this!”

Subaru: “Stop!! I’m gonna die!! I’m gonna die before you do!!”

Using the window frame as the pivot, Garfiel started spinning round and round using just his arm strength. These acrobatics were made possible by the Divine Protection of Wind Evasion and Garfiel’s inhuman grip. And his hold on the frame was so strong that the thing warped and creaked. Subaru could imagine the pending despair of the carriage’s owner, Otto.

Otto: “His Divine Protection of Earth Spirits doesn’t come into effect unless his feet are touching the ground. Since we need Garfiel to be in top form, or something close to it once we reach the mansion, we can only rationalize this as a necessary measure.”

Subaru: “I mean I get the logic. You know, from an outside perspective this looks like us speeding as fast as we can to shake off some guy trying to get in the carriage. But what’s actually happening is that we threw a fourteen-year-old out of the carriage to drag him along the ground while zooming at top speed.”

Otto: “You do realize how preposterous both those perspectives sound when you use that phrasing!?”

Otto, handling the reins, probably wanted to avoid giving that first impression. But the two dragons tirelessly pulling the carriage, Patrasche and Frufoo, paid little heed to the coachman’s intentions and continued running ceaselessly.

This was approximately the reason why Garfiel was using this rather-acrobatic means of locomotion. Emilia’s magic had healed his serious wounds back in Sanctuary, but that hadn’t replenished his lost blood nor Mana.

The travel distance between Sanctuary and the mansion was about half a day’s worth. Even if they had the dragons sprinting at full speed, how much time could Subaru and the others really spend on convalescing?

Garfiel, his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits amassing power from the ground, was still their trump card. Subaru and Otto were only there to arrange a setting where he could fight at his best.

Garfiel: “But anyway, y’stopped talkin’ halfway, Captain.”

Subaru: "Huh?"

Garfiel: "The thing we were talkin' bout. We gotta save four people, 'n we only got three. I haven't heard 'bout this last person. Who's she?"

Pulling himself up, Garfiel peeked looked into the dragon carriage. He gave Otto a questioning gaze as well, but Otto just shook his head and shrugged.

Otto: "I'm afraid that I haven't encountered this final person either. I was in the mansion for approximately a week... But I never even saw her in passing."

Garfiel: "You haven't even seen her face 'n she hates ya so much she doesn't wanna see you, are ya gonna be okay, my dude?"

Otto: "I would like to think that is not the reason I've failed to see her!"

Otto frantically voiced his objection as Garfiel watched on with pity. Subaru struck his fist against the seat, sighing at the sight of the other two's exchange.

Subaru: "The last one... Beatrice, probably, won't come out unless it's me."

Otto and Garfiel shut their mouths as they looked at Subaru. The seriousness in his voice probably meant they believed him, even without asking why. Truly reassuring companions.

Subaru: "I'm taking Beatrice out of there. Dragging her out of there. I need to do it."

Nobody else. Subaru must be the one.

Even if Beatrice was gonna put on a show, acting like she didn't want it.

Garfiel: "If that's what ya say then that's what it is, Captain."

Otto: "If possible, I think we should evacuate the nearby villagers in Arlam as well. It will avoid some chaos. How about I do it?"

The two each showed their support for Subaru's decision. Subaru had his role. And they had theirs.

Truly, entirely, dependable people.

Subaru: “Thank you, ya two morons.”

Otto: “He’s incapable of giving an honest thanks, the moron!”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The battle escalated entirely, spreading destruction across the luxurious mansion.

Garfiel: “—Ooooh!!”

Elsa: “Ah!!”

Steel clashed against steel, shrieking metal was accompanied by showers of sparks, the blows and slashes destroying the mundane life of the moonlit Roswaal mansion. The windowpane shattered, the shards of glass scattering. Damage to the floor sent the carpet flying, while paintings hanging on the wall splintered to fragments.

Woman: “Wonderful. You’re excellent.”

Garfiel: “It doesn’t make me happy to hear that from anyone ‘cept Ram!!”

Garfiel jabbed with his shielded right arm, passing past the woman as she dodged aside, for the strike to slam into the wall. He pursued her in her escape, using the momentum from his right arm to pivot in the air, striking her backhanded with his left.

Woman: “Bad luck.”

Garfiel: “It ain’t over yet!”

The woman dodged. But before she could swing her blade, Garfiel wrenched his body again to dislodge his right arm from the wall, sending a strike hurtling for her. The woman aborted her downward slash to raise her arm, using the kickback to flip backward through the air— the instant that Garfiel’s blow skirted past the woman’s feet, the room ruptured.

Backhand blow to the left. Punch to the right.

Sweep leg back and to the left. Jab to the right.

Pivot and kick to the left.

Striking blow after blow as he spun, Garfiel had no leniency in his pursuit of the woman. She had no room to do anything except avoid Garfiel's assault, and sensing that her feet had reached the end of the corridor, Garfiel raised his head.

Garfiel: "Yer done!!"

Stepping forward, Garfiel unleashed his fists. The punches drilled through the air, silver reflections of moonlight shooting through the dark corridor in violent pursuit of the woman. These were the arms of a beast, so powerful that they would assuredly turn a human body into gore. With her back to the wall, the woman flicked up her leg to place the sole of her right foot against the wall also.

She aimed at the incoming punches looking to counter, jabbing out her dagger so that Garfiel would impale himself on its blade. Metal clashed against metal as the knife was caught between the shields. However—

Garfiel: "Like that trick's gonna work!"

Her plan must've been to slip her dagger between the shields, skewering Garfiel with her knife placed in the path of his charge. But Garfiel's muscles were not so weak that a woman's skinny arms would accomplish something.

With the kukri's point still between the shields, Garfiel twisted aside to snap the dagger apart. But before he did—

Woman: "Then what if I add another trick?"

Using her wall-set foot as the pivot, the woman flipped upwards. Instantly, the woman's foot struck the handle of her trapped knife, opening a slight gap between the shields. And into that opening,

Woman: "Here's the real thing."

Garfiel: "—!?"

Now entirely upside down, the woman held yet another knife in her other, left hand. This was her third ominous-looking kukri. Just how many was she hiding on her?

The thin knife easily slipped into the gap between the dagger and shields. The deadly blade did not even whistle through the air as it pressed forward, aiming to slice Garfiel's neck off. Even if he transformed at that very second, the strike would hit the most lethal of spots. But Garfiel instead chose a fiendish way to counter the blade.

Woman: "Incredible."

Garfiel: "—Yher prhahise ain't ghonha mhake me happy!"

The woman whispered, enraptured. Garfiel had spread his head forward. His sharp fangs had literally bit the woman's left blade to a stop. Blood dripped from the shallow cuts at the corners of his mouth, the knife's metallic stench piercing his nostrils.

Garfiel: "Fhuckin' stinks!!"

Putting force into his jaw, Garfiel snapped the knife to bits. He spat out the shattered fragments as he swung his clawed foot up to punt the still-inverted woman from below. The force of the kick would burst her skull apart—to counter it, she sacrificed her arm.

It sounded like a wet cloth had been slapped against the wall, pure scarlet splattering over the hallway. Garfiel used his sleeve to wipe the blood from his face and exhaled heavily out his nose as he glanced back.

Several meters away, having escaped the dead end, stood that woman. But with many bones broken from her wrist to her shoulder, her left arm hanged crooked and twisted.

Garfiel: "Pretty fuckin' good to get away by losin' only an arm. Crap, my mouth hurts."

Woman: "...Huhu, thank you. Ahh... it hurts. It truly does. I feel alive."

Garfiel: "Eh? Not just cuttin' others, ya like getting' cut yerself too? Now that ain't somethin' my amazin' self can understand. Not that I was thinkin' to understand ya at all."

The woman dripped blood as she smiled splendidly, bringing about visceral disgust in Garfiel. He battered his shields together—and noticed, behind the woman, something,

Garfiel: “Hey, sis. What are you still doin’ over there? Like ya just saw, it doesn’t feel like I can show you me bein’ cool th’whole time. Get off to doin’ what ya have to be do.”

Frederica: “...I—indeed. I shall.”

Frederica had not actually been watching in silence but been petrified and unable to move. That was how extra-dimensional the fight between Garfiel and the woman was.

If Frederica had gotten involved in this battle, she would swiftly withdraw after the first few blows. These two were just that superior.

Frederica kept her attention on the woman’s back as she glanced at her destination— Rem’s sleeping room. It was only a few meters away, and she was much closer to the room than the woman was, but she could envision herself reaching its door before her.

If only she could at least reach the room, she would be able to shoulder Rem and escape out the inside window.

Woman: “You don’t need to be so guarded, older sister.”

Frederica: “...Huh?”

Woman: “Right now, I am stricken with your little brother. It doesn’t bother me what business you have in whatever room, or what you’re going to do there. None of my interest is devoted to that.”

Frederica: “—!”

The woman did not even glance back as she assured Frederica’s safety.

She probably was not lying. She did not seem like the kind of person to trick the enemy in this manner, and she did not need to, either. Above all, anyone listening would hear the sincerity in her words.

Right now, the entirety of her attention was devoted to Garfiel. She truly could not give less of a care about Frederica.

But the woman emitted an aura so dreadful that it could engulf the whole mansion. A pungent, violent bloodlust, which made her initial foreboding air look like a child's joke.

Garfiel: "Sis."

Frederica: "—I believe in you."

Frederica traversed through the corridor, drowning in the woman's ghastliness, to reach her destined room—

Frederica: "——"

—After glancing at Garfiel one last time, Frederica slipped into the room. Witnessing this, Garfiel sighed deeply.

Garfiel: "Yer so unruffled that ya can overlook sis... That ain't what's happenin' here, is it."

Woman: "Do I look like a good enough cheater to stay unruffled when faced with such a wonderful partner? Right now, I am yours, and only yours— Ahh, I can't bear it."

Both radiant allure and blood-iron horror coexisted in the grisly woman as she smiled. Bathed in her fiery, passionate gaze, Garfiel spreaded his stance and stooped his body low.

Garfiel: "Honestly, yer just fuckin' gross. I'm rippin' ya apart and manglin' ya to shreds."

Woman: "I promise to extract your guts without hurting them too."

Her left arm still dangling, the woman's healthy right arm readied her knife. She stooped down so low that her breasts could touch the floor—

Woman: "I am the Bowel Hunter, Elsa Granhiert."

Garfiel: "...The Strongest of Shields, Garfiel Tinsel."

The instant the introductions were over, Elsa moved before her opponent. Elsa's smile phased into blank darkness as she dashed, so swift she gave no impression of being wounded. The instant that Garfiel heard the first footstep, the noise of pounding against the walls echoed, again and again and again, from every direction.

Elsa kicked off the floor, off the walls, off the ceiling as she closed in on Garfiel. She moved so fast that he could not focus his aim, and moved like no creature he had seen before. No humanoid nor beast would approach other resorting to these nightmarish movements.

And the most surprising thing was that she was obviously faster now than she was before being wounded.

Garfiel: “Entertainin’!!”

Garfiel bared his fangs, laughed, and took action again that jumping shadow. If the enemy was using tricky movements to approach, then Garfiel would counter by doing the same. He put his hands and feet to the floor. And off his rear foot, exploded.

Garfiel, the human-sized bullet, shot down the mansion’s corridor. He positioned his shields before him, his charge as ferocious as a tiger’s, the shockwave blasting away the shattered window glass and fragments of wall.

Garfiel: “Gaaaaaaa!!”

He did not observe the consequences, instead roaring as he speared his arm into the floor to force himself to a stop. He immediately flipped himself around and back into bestial posture, and again his rear foot annihilated the floor.

The quake rocked the mansion, the carpets scattering in the destruction, flying about in tatters. Shreds of red cloth caught on Garfiel as he soared, and in that moment—

Garfiel: “———!!”

Elsa: “Ahahahaha!!”

Elsa plummeted down from the ceiling, swinging her blade as she laughed, assaulting the zooming Garfiel’s shield. The violent shockwave stabbed through eardrums as destruction rocked the moonlit corridor.

Elsa laughed as she rebounded, making a breakneck flip sideways. The force of the slash had shifted Garfiel's course, sending him plummeting head-first into the wall. He busted through the stonework to land gracelessly in a guest room.

Garfiel: "Bah!"

Plumes of white dust shadowed the area as Garfiel grabbed the leg of the nearby bed. His biceps swelled so he would easily lift the hundred-kilo bed, tossing it back out the hole he had just came through. Boom, bust, and from beyond the bisected bed hailed the black woman's thrown blade.

Garfiel parried it with his left shield, using his right to slam the approaching Elsa in the face. But she ducked, the strike merely grazing her braid. Immediately after the end of her black hair tickled the tip of Garfiel's nose, he then zoomed forward, obeying the the feeling terror rushing up his spine. He barely managed to dodge the slash coming to slice up through his groin, his back instead taking the hit as he blasted though the door. The battle zone relocated back to the corridor.

Giving him no time to catch his breath, Elsa ran hot in pursuit of Garfiel. Garfiel kicked at her skinny waist, but it did not feel like it had connected. Elsa contorted her body strangely to evade, and dodged the shockwave from the kick as well by shifting ever so slightly; it merely brushed her belly. Garfiel stood stuck, his leg outstretched as the blade of Elsa's kukri butchered the air, closing in.

That was not like the attack she had fired when she had been cornered before. Were Garfiel to try catch this in his mouth, its speed and force would slice his head in two. Garfiel's decision was instantaneous as he caught the sweeping blade on his right shield, allowed its path to continue to his left shield, and then away.

Shrieking metal. Showers of red and yellow sparks. Dark eyes opened in surprise, and the woman's exposed belly. Garfiel roared as he slammed his raised leg to the ground. He took his stance and blitzed to drive his fangs into Elsa's torso, intending to quite appropriately rip open her guts.

Garfiel: "———!"

The fact he aborted his lunge, using the momentum to pull his head in instead, could only be chalked up to instinct.

Late to dodge, Garfiel's left ear went flying off and so he took evasive action through the spray of blood. He put his foot to the wall, dodging the oncoming strike by shooting to the ceiling. Dodging, dodging, dodging everything.

Garfiel's outstretched arm ripped through the ceiling, leading part of the upper floor to collapse. This created an opening in Elsa's pursuit, which Garfiel used to escape. His hands and feet landed on the carpet, and Garfiel used his palm to put pressure on the bleeding coming from his head and its missing ear.

He took a ragged breath and grit his teeth at the burning pain. He saw Elsa cut through the thick smoke, walking closer, and smiled.

Garfiel: "Ya bastard... I'm pretty sure I turned yer left arm useless."

Elsa: "You're right. It hurt. But people's wounds do heal."

Garfiel: "This's just goin' of my lil' knowledge, but when a mangled arm heals we ain't talkin' about humans anymore."

Rather, it transcended the category of living creature.

Garfiel may possess his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits, but he still needed several hours if he meant to make a shattered arm operable again. That was applicable only when on Mana-rich ground, and doing everything he could to mend it. If she could heal during battle, and so quickly to boot, was preposterous.

Subaru had told him beforehand that she didn't die even when killed, and now Garfiel's initial speculation felt legitimate.

Garfiel: "Which makes things quick. Ya ain't no human. Dunno if ya were born human, but either way ya stopped bein' that, at the very least."

Elsa: "You don't look it, but you're surprisingly clever."

Garfiel: "I told ya it only makes me happy when it's Ram praisin' me. 'N anyway, I got an idea 'bout yer weird healin'."

Jabbing out his finger, Garfiel stated his speculation.

Despite everything, despite how surprising it may sound, Garfiel liked books. With nobody to rival him in strength in that tedious Sanctuary, reading had been an important time-killing activity for him.

But that said, the books Garfiel liked were adventure novels, myths, folklore, things in that vein. His interests unfortunately did lie in anything productive like accumulating knowledge.

Garfiel: “In th’books my amazin’ self read, there were lotsa monsters, heroes, those kinda things ya don’t know if they really existed. And one of ’em just like you.”

Elsa: “...I’d like it if you didn’t equate me to a phantasm from a picture book.”

Garfiel: “It was no picture book, ‘twas one full of letters. It did have some pictures in it but whatever, that doesn’t matter. And I can’t say it was a phantasm for sure.”

Looking indifferent, Elsa listened to Garfiel. This habit of hers to entertain conversations to the end really did not mesh well with the ferocious impression she gave during a fight.

Garfiel would have that face of hers go pale.

Garfiel: “After all, yer the same as one of the old Witches.”

Elsa: “———”

The swaying motion of her dagger halted. Elsa’s dark eyes looked nonchalantly at Garfiel. He jabbed his finger at her,

Garfiel: “—Yer a goddamn vampire!”

Elsa: “Not that I drink blood or anything.”

With a sigh, Elsa kicked off the ground.

Her left arm had healed completely. She wielded kukri in both hands as she closed in on Garfiel. He blocked her sweeping slash by raising his shields, simultaneously shooting his right leg out to kick her—which Elsa met by launching her own kick along the exact same trajectory, the two of them crashing feet-first into each other and blasting away.

Garfiel: “Not fuckin’ cool! Yer arm’s seriously all back t’normal!?”

Elsa: “But didn’t you heal your ear as well, while you were buying time? We’re even.”

Garfiel mentally stuck his tongue out at her, wondering if he had been exposed.

During their time talking, Garfiel had used the hand plugging his wound to heal the injury with magic. He hoped for the missing section of his ear to steadily heal back, but if he suffered a wound equal to what Elsa had suffered, then Garfiel’s healing magic would only amount to a quick and dirty stop-gap.

Garfiel: “Ya ain’t denyin’ it. So yer really a vampire?”

Elsa: “People can call it whatever they want. I don’t suck blood, and my meals are ordinary. When I’m out in the sunlight, all that happens is that the guards get riled, but that doesn’t matter.”

Garfiel: “So yer on about guts so much because yer a vampire?”

Elsa: “That’s my hobby. I just like gazing at fresh colorful guts and touching warm-looking intestines.”

Garfiel: “That’s way fuckin’ creepier.”

Elsa shed and dumped her impeding black cloak. Garfiel judged that now, Elsa was motivated even further and clicked his teeth. He battered his shields together—

Garfiel: “It’s a big world... Bit of a drag, but ya better pull it off, Captain.”

With that, Garfiel roared as he brought his shields down at the oncoming Elsa.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—He opened the door, the scent of paper emanating from the room.

Perhaps the cloying smell carried the weight of all the days and years spent closed inside this space. Or perhaps, if you considered calling it a room stopped in time, days really had nothing to do with it.

Subaru: “Got stuck for some time in Sanctuary and thought about all that stuff. And one of the things I wanna hear is your answer.”

Beatrice: “—How come?”

Without its guardian’s permission, Subaru entered the Library. As always, the mood here was both melancholic and tranquil. There were no windows to let in the sun, nor for ventilation. Staying at this place for a long time was bound to worsen your mood and your health.

All the more so when the expression of the girl watching Subaru was so utterly exhausted.

Beatrice: “How come you managed to reach this room again, I suppose? I don’t remember calling you, in fact.”

Subaru: “Sorry, but showing up uninvited is just engrained in me. Impossible to forget that time back in middle school where I showed up uninvited to a friend’s birthday party and made the whole thing awkward.”

Even dense Subaru had decided to be more prudent after that one. Though, since he had announced “Well, that’s all for today!” and left the place being more noisy than anyone else, he stopped getting invited to anybody’s birthday party.

Subaru: “It’s miserable and my heart’s about a second from breaking from the pain, so let’s stop talking about that topic.”

Beatrice: “You’re the one who brought it up, I suppose. You’re like that about everything, doing things always of your own accord, in fact.”

Subaru: “Yup, always of my accord. So, no matter how much you hate it, I’m here.”

He saw the girl in front of him swallow her breath.

After respectfully bowing his head in a way that she could see it—

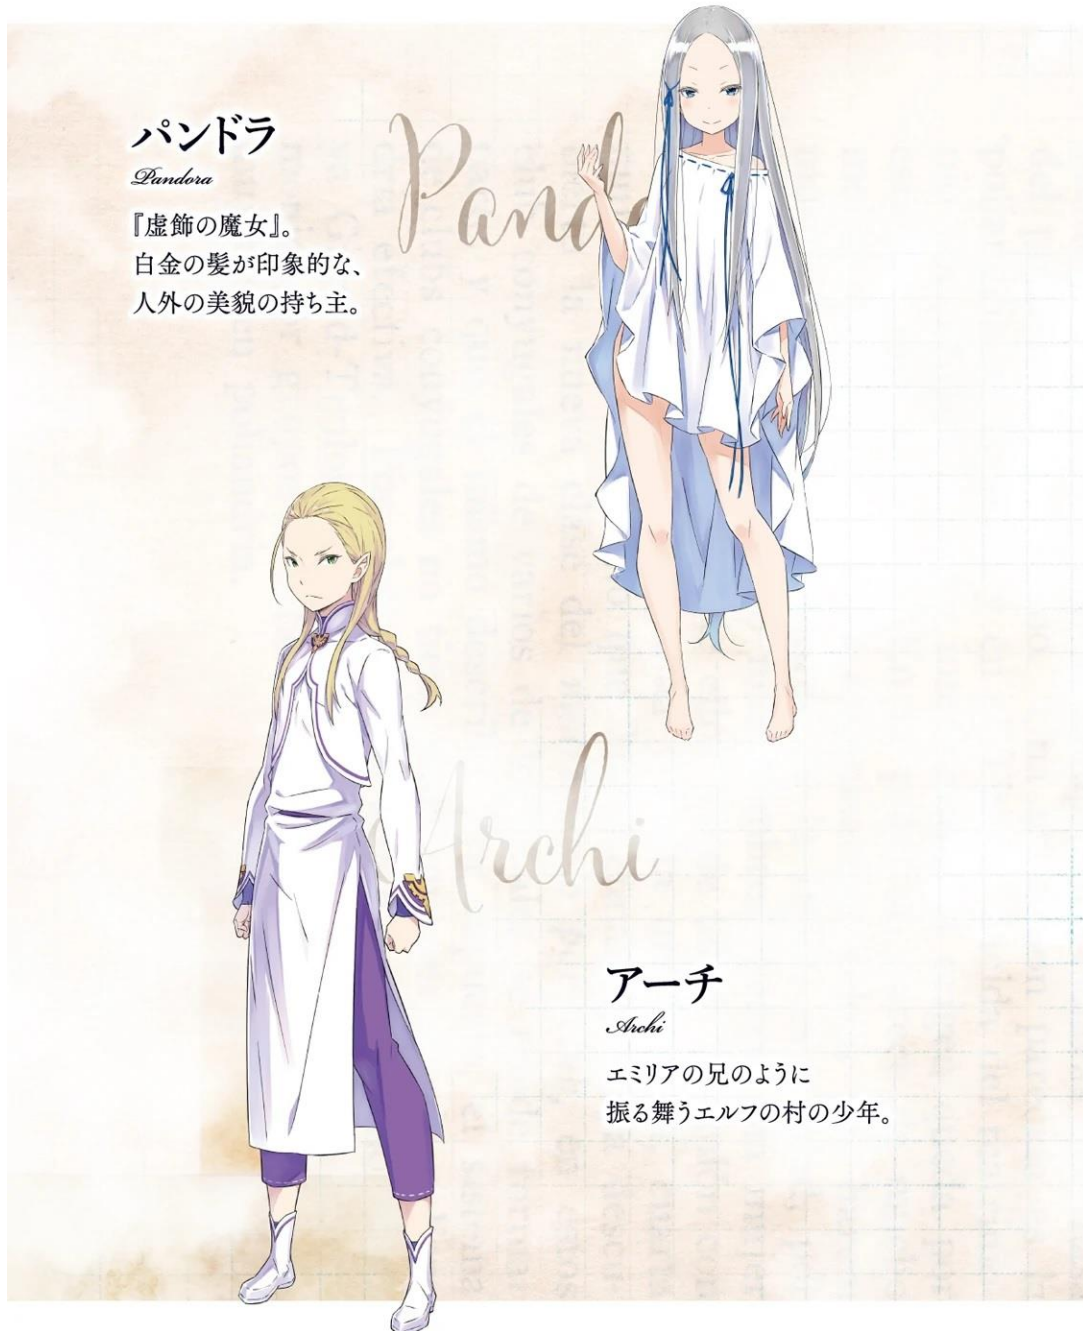

Subaru: “I’m taking you out of here, Beatrice— I’m dragging you out into the sunshine, where we’ll play until your dress is caked completely brown with mud.”

Hearing Subaru's caustic words, the girl Beatrice sat as she always did, on the stepladder, cradling herself.

With the black tome cradled in her arms as always, her wavering eyes gazing at Subaru.

Character Pages for Volume 14

Web Novel Volume 15

Arc 4 Chapter 124A - Listen Up, Stupid

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 1 “The Final Day of Roswaal Manor”, Parts 3-4

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 138

—How many times had he come to this room to see her?

The first time they met, Subaru had easily foiled the girl’s illusory looping hallway and entered the Forbidden Library.

Their first impressions of each other were mutually horrid.

Beatrice drained the Mana of someone still midway through convalescence, and promptly downed Subaru. Afterwards, she had to put up with his endless revenge-inspired meddling. They would insult each other every time they met, but despite that, they got along ridiculously well, and Subaru found himself stopping by the supposedly-hidden Forbidden Library.

Subaru and Beatrice had had many yelling matches, spit flying everywhere, one immature exchange after another, over the nearly two months Subaru had been in the mansion.

After the Royal Selection began in earnest, and Subaru returned from the Capital, those exchanges changed.

Beatrice rejected him. With the knowledge he had gained in a Sanctuary without her, Subaru had learned her history and fate, and accordingly understood some of the reasons behind her stubbornness. After that, he prattled as if he knew anything, trying to understand her solitude— and Beatrice, long bereft of tears after these four-hundred years, wailed her laments.

There was nothing he could have said to the exhausted girl after that. Immediate circumstances led Beatrice to lose her life, and Subaru saw that final expression on her face as she protected him.

That expression had seared itself into his memory. Running off his emotions, Subaru returned here.

—So that this time, no matter what it took, he would get her out of this place.

Beatrice: “Taking me out of here...?”

That was Beatrice’s bewildered response to Subaru’s grand opening statement. She hugged the Gospel tighter, drawing her knees to her chest as she sat atop the stepladder.

Beatrice: “Unwanted meddling, I suppose. Nobody asked for you to do that, in fact.”

Subaru: “This isn’t a matter of someone asking or not asking me. I’m taking you out of here. That’s my decision.”

Beatrice: “Just scram and have that foolish girl comfort you on her lap, I suppose.”

Subaru: “You little... This is war! You say something like that and it’s war!”

Beatrice brought up a topic back from back when Subaru had been overloaded in this mansion, and he strained his voice to distract from his internal shame.

Beatrice snorted at his attitude and glanced away.

Subaru: “Anyway, this isn’t the time to be joking around like this. We have basically no room to postpone anything. Have you grasped what’s going on outside?”

Beatrice: “...I do know that some uninvited guests have come to the mansion, in fact. After the big and little maid did something or other, two preposterous people started going on a rampage, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Though, one of those preposterous people’s a helper I brought along. I don’t think he will lose in fighting power, but unfortunately, I get the feeling that the winner will be decided by the difference in their resolve. So I can’t accommodate too much of your solemnity here.”

Beatrice: “Then you’re evacuating the mansion’s residents while your assistant buys time... That’s your scheme, in fact. Are you even trusting in your ally with this sloppy strategy, I suppose?”

Subaru: “The strategy is this because I know he’s way too kind.”

The restorative effects of Garfiel's Divine Protection of Earth Spirits did mean that his current condition was eighty to ninety percent of his maximum. When adding on his lack of hesitation for battle, he was quite the magnificent fighting force. But Subaru doubted that he would have sufficient resolve to kill his opponent, which would keep him from putting in his all. So, his evaluation was just a tad negative.

Meanwhile, Elsa was in perfect condition. Subaru judged her strange, unexplainable combat strength as a good match for Garfiel at his best. Her tendency to enjoy herself during her battles was something of a disadvantage for her in combat, but she had that inexplicable immortality. Elsa's statements did not suggest that killing her indefinite times would make her stay dead either. Subaru's tentative estimations dictated that Elsa had the slight advantage.

Subaru: "But if the strategy is working, Frederica should collect Rem while Garfiel's suppressing Elsa. Petra met up with Otto, so now there's only one essential evacuee left before we can save everybody."

Beatrice: "Essential evacuees... You mean to say that Betty is the last, in fact."

Subaru: "Yeah, I do."

Subaru had instructed Petra go meet up with Otto, who had guided the villagers in Arlam to safety, and retreat after helping with a few gambits in the mansion. Subaru had spent some time reaching the Library, so Petra should have departed by now.

Subaru: "And so I'm getting you out of here. If you don't wanna run while holding my hand, then I'll carry you on piggyback you or cradle you or do whatever to you, so just behave and come over here and..."

Beatrice: "Don't make me repeat myself over and over, I suppose. I don't need your help, in fact."

Subaru stepped closer, offering Beatrice his hand, but she lowered her voice to reject him. He came to a stop in front of her, as she turned her head in indication of the room.

Beatrice: "Hear me, I suppose? An isolated space, of power worthy of Betty, separated from the corridors of time. That is Beatrice's Forbidden Library, in fact. Regardless what threatens the outside, that threat will never reach Betty's Library. Your fears are needless, in fact."

Subaru: “Nope, they are needed. Your Library’s randomness does mean it has a strong advantage when it comes to fleeing, true... But it has a fatal flaw. And the enemy knows what it is.”

Beatrice: “A fatal flaw?”

Beatrice furrowed her brows, indeed unable to let the comment pass. But Subaru just responded to her harsh gaze with a nod, and gestured to the door behind him.

Subaru: “Your power, which randomly connects to some door in the mansion, is strong. But... It only works on the mansion’s closed doors. So in other words, if you leave the mansion’s doors open... You’re certain to reach the Library eventually, since you’ll be scratching out doors until the Library’s is left.”

Beatrice: “—Hk.”

Subaru: “It’s such a stupid thing. I bet you didn’t notice it either. I was wondering why I hadn’t realized it until I actually witnessed it myself.”

Subaru remembered when Elsa, having noticed the loophole in Door Crossing, had found the Library. If Garfiel was not around to stop her, Elsa would unmistakably arrive at this place using that exact same method. And she would likely take Beatrice’s life.

Subaru: “Though of course, it’s not like I’m underestimating you, or saying that if she shows up here you’re going down easy. It’s just that her strangeness is some of the most extreme I’ve ever seen. There would be nothing better than doing this without facing her.”

If defeating Elsa was possible, then he would prefer it happening. But it was not an essential requirement for clearing this series of loops. If Roswaal was the one hiring her, then as long as Subaru cleared the time limit for the issues in Sanctuary, Roswaal should stop having any reason to keep hiring Elsa.

The whole insignia affair in the Capital proved that this would make Elsa withdraw. Either way, right now they needed to survive through the attack on the mansion and—

Subaru: “Beatrice. This place isn’t safe. If you’re not here, she will not disturb the library. So just for now...”

Beatrice: “Why does that woman know how to break Betty’s Door Crossing, I suppose?”

Subaru: “———”

Subaru spat out the suitable bargaining chips to convince Beatrice to leave.

But Beatrice, perhaps listening to Subaru’s statements, perhaps not, whispered a whisper differing from what Subaru was looking for. Subaru shut his mouth, Beatrice remained upon the stepladder.

Beatrice: “It’s inconceivable that she would so suddenly figure out how to break Betty’s Door Crossing upon her first encounter with it, in fact. Whoever taught her the method knows me, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Beatrice. This isn’t the time for that conversa——”

Beatrice: “——It’s Roswaal, in fact.”

Subaru could not deceive her. Her swift thinking made Subaru swallow his breath.

Seeing his reaction, Beatrice understood everything. Roswaal had hired Elsa, and his goal was to kill Beatrice. Which meant——

Beatrice: “It is written in Roswaal’s Gospel that I be killed, I suppose.”

Giving no heed to either Subaru’s affirmations or denials, Beatrice sighed.

It was unlikely that the relief Subaru perceived in that sigh was just his imagination. Unable to overlook the comment, Subaru put pressure on Beatrice.

Subaru: “Want to tell me what that sigh was? And why the hell do you look like you’re going along with it!?”

Beatrice: “It’s what it looks like, I am going along with it, in fact. If Roswaal’s Gospel has ordered him to do this, then that means my fate is decided, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Why is that... Roswaal’s book is Roswaal’s book, and your book is your book! Does your book really tell you to go get killed by Roswaal, does it!?”

Jabbing out his finger, Subaru glared at the Gospel in Beatrice’s arms. If nothing had changed from the previous loops, then for four-hundred years, that book had written nothing; just blank, white paper.

Beatrice's expression turned gloomy, then opening to a page of the Gospel. She spread the book open and presented it so that Subaru could see it— Showing a book of only empty pages.

Beatrice: "Nothing is written, in fact. Identical as ever, only blank pages, I suppose."

Subaru: "Then there's no reason for you to get killed like Roswaal's book says! It's same as ever, you're who decides what you do!"

Beatrice: "...The same as ever, I'm the one deciding?"

Subaru: "Yes! Nothing being written means you must've faced choices during all this time. Small things to big things, you're the one who decided every path you took! So there's no reason for you to dance along to someone else's choices this time, eith—"

Beatrice: "What in my life have I ever decided?"

That doleful question crushed Subaru's momentum. Beatrice tilted her head as she gazed at Subaru, her eyes melancholic. Flipping through the blank pages—

Beatrice: "All the time Betty spent in Roswaal's mansion, protecting the Library that Mother entrusted to her, endlessly, forever... When did I ever have time belonging to myself during all that? When did Betty, having lived empty centuries without writ, ever leave her footsteps anywhere in the world? What did Beatrice ever do, and who is she?"

Subaru: "Bea, trice..."

Beatrice: "Betty's life, Betty's four-hundred years, are as blank as this Gospel, in fact. A void, in fact. What I chose by myself, what I gained by myself, what I can attest of myself... Are all non-existent."

Beatrice clapped the Gospel shut and set it on her lap. She stroked its nameless cover as she quietly continued,

Beatrice: "I'm the same as an empty book. Losing me here simply means losing a blank text, devoid of letters. It can never be anything to anybody, merely a book shoved in a bookcase— It would be laudable for it to be gone, in fact."

Subaru: "What if there's people who don't want that blank book gone?"

With a fragile expression, Beatrice felt like she was verging on abandoning her four centuries and her future. Subaru managed to get words out in an attempt to connect to her heart.

Subaru had yet to find his reply to Beatrice's tearful scream from back then. But even so, should he fail to speak here, she would give up on herself.

Subaru: "You called it nothing, a void. But there assuredly is a book wedged inside that bookcase. There are people who know of that book's existence. And maybe there are people who will want to pick up that book someday, do you think they would tolerate that it goes off and destroys itself?"

Beatrice: "The book has neither name nor author, I suppose. Even if we suppose this benevolent someone exists, they would only be disappointed after opening that book and seeing its inside would, in fact. The blank book doesn't want to watch disappointment appear in that person's face either, I suppose."

Subaru: "Then! Then what is that book doing in that place!"

Beatrice: "——"

Beatrice gazed emotionlessly at Subaru.

It felt like a retort, one that said the whole dialogue lacked any apparent meaning. Subaru raised his head regardless, continuously reaching out to Beatrice's distant heart.

Subaru: "If someone who picks it up will end up being disappointed nonetheless... Then for what sake is that book there? Wasn't the book made because it had meaning?"

Beatrice: "...The book's author crafted that book for the sake of a person, in fact. The book is made to appear empty to everyone except for that someone, I suppose. If we assume meaning does exist, then the very instant the book reaches that someone the meaning of that book's creation is complete."

Subaru: "And so then——"

Beatrice: "The book must not be disposed of until it reaches that someone, you're saying, I suppose."

Subaru swallowed his breath. He noticed what a cruel breed of hope he was arguing for just an instant before he could voice it. Beatrice saw Subaru's expression, and a horribly pained smile arose on her face.

Beatrice: “Exactly. If Betty truly were just a book... Then she would be happy to wait for that day, in fact.”

Beatrice would have waited there, for that day when that someone’s fingers flipped through her pages.

If she were a book.

—But Beatrice was not a book. She was a little girl, shivering from prolonged isolation.

Beatrice: “If I were a soulless, mindless book... then I could have believed in Mother’s instructions forever, without a fault. I could have been Mother’s lovely Beatrice forever, I suppose.”

If she were an entity like a doll, lacking a heart and comprised only of ornamentation, she would have never deliberated.

If she were an entity like a book, unshaken by the constant passing of time, she would have never lamented.

Beatrice was not that thing.

Beatrice: “But Betty has a heart. Should time pass, I do think about things at least, enough to lose faith in what I believed in, in fact. I agonize and deliberate, I suppose. There were countless nights where I scrambled to salvage my memories, because I’d forgotten what Mother’s face, what her smile looked like!”

Subaru: “———”

Beatrice: “There were times I could not bear being alone, and I yearned to touch someone! But everyone leaves me behind! They will say whatever they will say, state it’s for the sake of something more important than me, give their reasons, and abandon me! Mother! Roswaal! —Ryuzu too!!”

Beatrice shouted, her face scrunched up and nearly tearing up. Hearing the name Ryuzu made Subaru remember what he had heard in Sanctuary about Beatrice’s past. And the origin of all the present Ryuzus, Ryuzu Meyer.

She and Beatrice had only known each other for a fleeting instant, but their story still told of a definite bond— One that still left a persistent scar on Beatrice’s heart.

Beatrice: “—So that’s why it’s fine, in fact.”

Beatrice lost her momentum. The tone of her voice plummeted. Her expression, twisted with emotion, returned to its usual apathy as she hugged the book on her lap close.

Beatrice: “Betty’s Gospel will not outline Betty’s future... I’ve known that for a very long time, in fact. Betty’s fate was forsaken even by Mother a long time ago.”

The lack of writ about the future meant that the Gospel’s owner had fallen into a dead end. While drawing conclusions from Subaru’s possession of Petelgeuse’s Gospel, that was how Beatrice had appraised books with frozen writ. And so she had appraised that the same thing was happening to herself.

Beatrice: “If Betty’s fate has been outlined in Roswaal’s Gospel... How sardonic, I suppose. But that does ease me, in fact. It’s inconceivable that Roswaal would take half-measures, I suppose.”

Subaru: “An old friend of yours might kill you... how is that relaxing?”

Beatrice: “It’s obvious, in fact.”

Beatrice nodded to Subaru’s choked up voice. Then, with a fleeting, affectionate smile arising on her face—

Beatrice: “If Roswaal’s Gospel has written about me... Then it means that Mother has certainly not forgotten about me, I suppose.”

—Warped. Beatrice’s smiling visage made Subaru notice that he was seconds from drowning beneath an emotional torrent.

It was warped. Beatrice’s visage as she basked in contacting with her mother’s love was so warped it was unbearable. Subaru could not stand that this thing, that this happening, was a mother’s love— As fucking if.

Beatrice: “...What are you thinking to do, in fact?”

Subaru bit his lip and endured the sensations welling up in him as he stepped forward. Caution cloaked Beatrice’s expression as she perceived the alarming vibe emanating from Subaru.

Subaru: “———”

Beatrice: “I asked you a question, I suppose. What are you thinking to do, in fact? If you try anything, I’ll show no mercy, I suppose. I’ve already accepted my fate, in fact.”

Subaru: “Accepted what. You’re no different from Roswaal. No, he’s at least self-aware, you’re multitudes more awful. Utterly hopeless, you’re so screwed up.”

Anger surged from inside him.

It was an emotion that Subaru had constantly fought off ever since he began being exposed to all these events in Sanctuary.

Anger at himself while challenging the Trial, anger at the Witches for toying with him, anger at Garfiel for underestimating himself out of childish stubbornness, anger at Roswaal for obeying the writ to try and affirm the fragility of feelings, anger at Emilia for not believing in herself nor in Subaru’s love—— ——And now anger at Beatrice, and everyone who had cornered her into this.

Subaru: “You’re stupid. Say whatever about your fate, say whatever about your Mother’s orders, anyone looking from the side is gonna think it’s sad. You have a heart? You can’t be a book? Of course you goddamn can’t, stupid. Did holing up in this moldy room make you incapable of recognizing that?”

Beatrice: “Stu...!”

Beatrice’s eyes shot open, and after a look of surprise—— Indignation.

She got to her feet on the stepladder, her skirt swaying as she pointed at Subaru.

Beatrice: “You! Who do you think you are referring to with that comment, I suppose! I’m stupid, I’m stupid? How do you dare say this, in fact... And especially you! What do you think you could possibly know about Betty, I suppose!”

Subaru: “I know you’re stupid, and you don’t realize you’re stupid, so I’d say I know you better than you do! Stupid! Stupid! Stupid! Stuuuupid!!”

Beatrice: “Y—y—you...!!”

Subaru flipped the bird as he cursed, turning Beatrice's face crimson and blocking off her words. Her rage was too incredible for her to come up with any retort.

Barging into openings like that happened to be Subaru's forte.

Subaru: "A four-hundred year void? Drop your pretenses! You hugged your knees crying for four-hundred years, that's what you did! You had all that time to think, why the hell are you clinging to this single answer forever! The book's not telling you anything, so you think that means «I didn't do anything»? Are you stupid!?"

Beatrice: "O—of course I thought about things, in fact! Naturally I would, I suppose! Can you conceive how many things I tested to see if the Gospel's writ would change! But no matter what I did, no matter how I waited, it didn't! That's why——"

Subaru: "That's what I'm saying is stupid! The book's got nothing in it, so you work to try and make letters appear, the hell is this, invisible ink on a New Year's card? No one does that anymore! If none of that worked, start thinking about other possibilities!"

Beatrice: "O—other, possibilities..."

Subaru: "Correct. Such as the possibility that your mom's book was wrong."

Beatrice fell utterly speechless.

But she immediately snapped at him, determining his reply as moronic,

Beatrice: "You hold your tongue, in fact! Mother would never pull such an idiotic stunt, I suppose! You... You could not possibly comprehend Mother's vast thoughts, in fact!"

Subaru: "Nope, don't know them at all, stupid. Like I care anything about what your mom thinks. What we're talking about is you. And you said it, didn't you? You said that she'd never pull something that idiotic. Really? Can you assert it? Have you never doubted your mother even once?"

Beatrice: "What, are..."

Subaru: “Four-hundred years! Gone with a self-writing book sitting absolutely blank! The person you’re waiting for never came either! You spent all that time alone, had so much time to think it’s ridiculous, and you have never thought of it even once? You seriously never thought that it was strange!?”

Four centuries spent believing in someone.

Perhaps it sounded like a pure way of being. But in truth it was crooked. Especially when spent only ever thinking about the person, about their words. Especially when Beatrice, who does not think her wish will come true, has pretty much given up.

Beatrice: “I—it is inconceivable that Mother would bring about anything incorrect, I suppose! O—of course she wouldn’t, in fact. She is Mother, I suppose! Do you think it possible to doubt the words of your own Mother!?”

Subaru: “Of course I do! I think the stuff my mom says is overwhelmingly lacking in credibility! That time when she misheard news that «a satellite fell into the atmosphere» as «a satellite fell into Aichi prefecture» and I went zooming out with the big scoop without verifying it, is when I stopped trusting her! That was in third year primary!¹⁸⁰”

He would never forget the day he had sincerely accepted that, spread the rumor, and turned into a schoolyard laughingstock.

Subaru never trusted anything his parents said ever again. And he had already deemed his father’s statements as unreliable prior to that.

Subaru: “Four-hundred years, and you never doubted her for even a second!? I’m not even twenty years old, and I’d run out of fingers before I could count the number of fistfights I’ve had with my dad. And that’s just in twenty years. You had twenty times that, and you never felt that way even once, huh?”

Beatrice: “You... What do you wish to make me say, I suppose!? I utterly cannot discern it, in fact! Your aims, the point of your remarks, are utterly unknown to Betty! Unknown!”

Subaru: “Then I’ll say it loud and clear! So that you and your stupid mother can hear it!”

¹⁸⁰ Punny. The former is “大気圏”, read “taikiken”, the latter is “愛知県”, read “Aichiken”.

Beatrice was about ready to clutch her head in frustration when Subaru approached, and took her hands. She looked up. Subaru drew his face close, into breathing range, and declared to the teary girl—

Subaru: “Stop getting thrown around by a blank book and a four-hundred-year-old promise— Be the one who chooses what you want to do, Beatrice.”

Beatrice: “———”

Subaru: “It’s been four-hundred years. Plenty long enough for you to have at least one rebellious phase.”

Beatrice had been trying to obey her parent’s instructions in admirable fashion. Her stubborn volition to keep that promise had spawned her solitude and a timespan of emptiness.

Her mother, Echidna, seemed to find even that time spent in agony as something gratifying, but from Subaru’s perspective it was immoral and profane. She had forgotten how to cry and the feeling of wanting to cry, what the hell was this about a pure way of being. It made him want to puke.

With her hands still in Subaru’s grip and atop the stepladder, Beatrice looked away from Subaru. Her height as she sat on the top step was practically level with Subaru’s eyes. She eventually tilted her head down, lets her lips move, and,

Beatrice: “Th... en... This is, what you’re attempting to say, I suppose. Betty, disobey Mother’s orders.”

Subaru: “...”

Beatrice: “Abandon everything you believed in over these centuries and be free... That is what you are telling Betty so easily, I suppose.”

Her shaking voice gradually regained its composure.

It began to fill with something that is not shock, and Subaru felt his hair standing on end. Ever since coming to this world, this sensation alone was one he had undeniably honed.

That was the sensation of a direly hazardous crisis.

Beatrice: “—Demanding that I, Beatrice! Violate a Contract! Running your mouth as if you know anything!”

Subaru: “—Agh!?”

As if stricken by a blast of gale, Subaru went flying backwards. His back struck the Library floor, still encircled by a wind which then slammed him into the wall. His breathing stalled. His bones creaked all throughout his body, his vision strobing as he raised his head.

Beatrice remained atop the stepladder, but her expression was one of fury as she looked down at Subaru.

Beatrice: “Contracts are absolute! Absolute, in fact! And especially so for Contracts made between a Spirit and a Witch. You demand that it be broken unilaterally, and by the Spirit? You understand nothing, I suppose! Such a thing would never be forgiven! Not anyone! Not anything! And not even I myself would permit it, in fact!”

Subaru: “—That’s rich coming from someone searching for backdoors in that Contract by thinking if they can’t violate it, better try and get killed.”

Beatrice: “———!”

Subaru sighed to force the pain out of him as he sluggishly stood up himself.

Beatrice’s rage was not faltering, and her adorable expression remained thick with malice. Subaru raised his head and laughed venomously.

Subaru: “You’re an incoherent mess, Beatrice. Have you not realized how inconsistent you are? Of course you’ve realized it, haven’t you? You’re a smart person.”

Beatrice: “Be silent, I suppose.”

Subaru: “No, I will not. Break the Contract? Sounds perfect. If you hate keeping the promise so much that you literally want to die, just stop. No one will fault you.”

Beatrice: “I will fault me! Why is it you don’t understand that, in fact!? Contracts are absolute, and keeping them is...”

Subaru: “Why don’t you understand it? If keeping the Contract kills you, you need to break the Contract and live. Is it really so strange that I’m opting for this?”

Subaru easily discarded these Contracts Beatrice was so fixated on. Beatrice had no words to his attitude. He might be looking like an incomprehensible, monstrous creature to her, right now.

Subaru found it far more mystifying that he was recipient to that opinion.

Keeping promises was important, of course.

Emilia had criticized him multiple times for breaking promises, and he had gone through multiple painful experiences exactly because he had broken them. Because of that, even Subaru knew that keeping promises was very important.

Even so, he felt no hesitation about making Beatrice break her Contract. And his reasoning was exactly what he had just told her. If anyone demanded that Beatrice keep the promise and die as a result, Subaru would flip the guy the bird and tell him— She would be made to violate the Contract, and Beatrice would surely live on.

He wouldn’t even think twice about doing it.

Beatrice: “Th—that is unrelenting, incorrigibly villainous of you, in fact...”

Subaru: “I know it’s unrelenting, and I am sorry for saying it. But it’s important. So I’m not surrendering this.”

Subaru’s stance had been decided from the very beginning. From the very beginning, the whole issue depended on Beatrice’s feelings.

Beatrice could not hide her panic and confusion at Subaru’s disparagement of Contracts. Of course she couldn’t. Contracts were that important for Spirits.

Having witnessed the relationship between a Spirit and a Spiritual Arts User, Subaru knew they were firm, weighty, utterly unshakable things. He knew, and yet he was saying it— You are more important than it.

Beatrice: “I—if, you... were That Person...”

Subaru's response to Contracts was overwhelmingly overwhelming. Frailty crept onto Beatrice's expression, bordering on breakdown.

Her lips spoke of the insubstantial someone that Beatrice had waited for over four centuries. The fictional entity that Echidna had so cruelly invented so that she could know who Beatrice would choose.

Beatrice wanted to be saved. The best proof was that Subaru's words had shaken her heart and brought her to tears.

Beatrice: "Will..."

Beatrice's teary eyes focused on Subaru. Her lips trembled, and, practically clinging—

Beatrice: "...you be Betty's That Person?"

This question could be the full stop on what had gone on for four centuries.

And it might be exactly what Echidna had ordered her, making it what the Witch wished to hear.

Who would Beatrice determine as being this insubstantial That Person?

The Witch had used her daughter to satisfy her own curiosity, letting her spend four-hundred years in solitude.

The payoff for all that time rested in that question.

Beatrice swallowed her breath. Subaru looked her in the eye, and declared.

Subaru: "Are you stupid? —Of course I wouldn't be this weird mysterious That Person of yours."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

After the ferocious shockwave gusted through the Library, Beatrice took the books thrown about by the wind and returned them to their bookcases. While they had fallen to the floor, none of the books looked like they had separated from their bindings, fortunately.

Beatrice reflected remorsefully on her use of force while inside the Library, relieved that only very minor damages had occurred to its books.

They were her comrades, who had passed four-hundred years of solitude alongside her.

Beatrice had not been lying about her wish to be a book. She had fantasized many times about being like these texts, something which could wait for such a long time without it rocking her heart at all. She now thought it hope borne from a stupid idea.

Beatrice: “Conceivably, it is laughable, I suppose.”

This was the wretchedness into which she had been cornered. She mocked herself for it. But inside her small chest, self-deprecation dimmed, replaced by wrath.

Beatrice: “That guy... that guy... truly, what is wrong with him, I suppose!”

Just thinking about him aggravated her, bringing her close to stomping the ground.

She would like to vent these pent-up emotions on something, but in this place which her Mother had instructed her to protect, everything was precious. Unable to find anything to take her tantrum out on, all Beatrice could do was to wait for her bloated emotions to wither.

She returned the final book to its shelf and sighed as she smoothed out her appearance. Then she sat herself back on the stepladder, reaching to cradle the black tome—and stopped.

He had said so easily, so many times, to simply throw it away.

Then, at the vital moment, he rejected the option which would have allowed Beatrice to discard the thing. Absolutely, entirely, so incomprehensible it infuriated her.

Beatrice: “I’m exhausted, in fact...”

But her fury would not last forever.

Beatrice stopped puffing out her cheeks, took that book she had hesitated to hold, and put it to her heart. Ultimately, to the end of the end, leaning on this thing was the only way to protect her mind. Just as Roswaal’s Gospel had writ, Beatrice’s end would arrive soon.

What emotion should she feel as she waited for it to come?

It was finally ending. Would that not be a good enough sentiment?

It was the one she was supposed to be feeling, but now that it was actually happening, she was confused.

—"You are stupid." For some reason those words remained, sitting heavily in her heart.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Blown away by the shockwave, Subaru tumbled down the corridor until he slammed back-first into a wall. His side hit directly against a column, leading him to shriek and writhe.

Subaru: "Gah! Haa, gah... I—impossible! Halfway through the conversation, and that idiot just...!"

The door in front of him slammed shut. Subaru reached out for the door, his expression hateful, but naturally the sight before his eyes after cracking the thing open was not the Forbidden Library— merely a guest room.

Door Crossing had activated, and Subaru had been expelled from the Library.

Subaru: "I pissed her off so much she threw me out... Shit, messed up in choosing my words!"

What he had been trying to say was not incorrect, but there was a contradiction between how he was telling it and showing it. That resulted in Subaru being thrown out of the Library, and distanced from success.

Subaru: "Anyway, can't stay here. Have to find Beako through another door and...!"

???: "N—Natsuki-san?"

Subaru turned around, thinking to conquer the doors via utterly random selection, when a voice addressed him. Its familiarity, and the fact it was calling him, led Subaru to stumble and for his eyes to shoot open.

His gaze landed on Otto, peeking out from a neighboring room, who was supposed to be somewhere else. And peeking out from under Otto was Petra, also looking at Subaru.

Subaru: “Y—you guys? Why are you still in the mansion? I thought I told you that opening the doors of just one wing would be fine and to run away after?”

Otto: “Unfortunately, the situation outside has changed rather dramatically...”

Otto shook his head, his face pale as Subaru approached. It was inconceivable that Otto would be joking in this situation. Otto had aborted his escape, which meant something warranting that must be happening.

Subaru: “What happened? Short version please.”

Otto: “Witchbeasts did. Hordes of Witchbeasts are encircling the mansion, and we cannot move.”

Subaru: “Witchbeasts!?”

Subaru’s eyes shot open wide at the unexpected word and he looked to Petra for confirmation. She nodded several times in response.

Petra: “Erm, there’s lots of Witchbeasts different from those demon dogs... like snakes with two heads, or like opossums, lots of them.”

Subaru: “Do these guys live in the nearby forest?”

Petra: “They do, but the barrier should be keeping them out.”

Subaru: “The barrier again...”

During the previous Witchbeast debacle, they had confirmed that the barrier between Arlam Village and the woods surrounding the mansion had been repaired. Afterwards, they put top priority on looking out for weaknesses in the barrier, so it was inconceivable that a mistake could have happened after such a short timeframe.

And most importantly, the beasts were surrounding the mansion for some reason.

Subaru: “Is it like those mutts, something weird is happening to them? What about Arlam’s people? Are they okay?”

Otto: “I couldn’t locate any Witchbeasts when I instructed them to evacuate, and since they used the carriages from the Duchess to flee, they should be safe. Patrasche-chan is guiding them too.”

Subaru: “Okay. That’s a relief.”

The clever dragon was more trustworthy than some random guy, so she had been tasked with escorting them. While praying for Patrasche to pull it off, Subaru grit his teeth. The situation was unfolding down a track unknown to him yet again.

This Witchbeast attack had never happened before. Naturally, considering the timing, it had to be related to Elsa’s attack.

Subaru: “What about Frederica and Rem?”

Petra: “We haven’t run into Frederica-neesama or Rem-san... Erm, I—I don’t really think they can break through them and get away.”

Subaru: “Which means they are still in the mansion too. We’ll be thankful the beasts are still staying outside, but how much can Garfiel do?”

Subaru stroked Petra’s head, praising her strong heart for remaining composed during this extreme situation. If it were Subaru when he was her age, it wouldn’t be weird for him to piss himself crying. But circumstances prohibited them from staying still.

Subaru: “Where are we right now? Which wing of the mansion?”

Otto: “The eastern. Garfiel should still be battling in the western wing, so I suggest avoiding that area to circumvent damages...”

Subaru: “And so the possible escape routes are...”

Of course, Subaru needed to collect Beatrice, but Otto and Petra’s escape was also indispensable. Subaru descended into thought, scrutinizing his mental map of the mansion for any possible escape routes. However, a voice drowned out Subaru’s contemplations—

???: “—Oh my? You were all gathered here, waiting for me?”

A petrifying feeling, like a blade stroked against the back of their necks, made all of them freeze rigid.

Subaru promptly pulled Petra’s arm and hugged her close as he timidly glanced behind him.

Further down the hallway, lit with bars of moonlight, someone’s approaching footsteps echoed. Their shape soon entered recognizably into the light—

Subaru: “What the hell is Garfiel doing!?”

???: “I’ll unveil pretty guts from all three of you—”

Kicking off the floor before the shrieking Subaru, the Bowel Hunter’s black shadow darted as she drew closer.

Arc 4 Chapter 125A - The Roswaal Mansion Battle

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 1 “The Final Day of Roswaal Manor”, Parts 4-5

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 153

???: “—DONAA!!”

The only one who managed to immediately react to the oncoming threat was Otto.

He held his hands out in front of him, influencing the world with a canto— the torrent of Mana broke through the mansion floor as a wall of earth surged up, blocking the whole of the wide hallway and obstructing the shadow’s advance. However—

Elsa: “Nuisance.”

Subaru: “In one hit!?”

One short statement, and two swings of a kukri.

The slash teared through the wall like paper, and with one kick to the bisected blockade, the whole thing crumbled instantly. Scattered particles of Mana alongside the collapsed wall’s remains. An archetypically sadistic smile alongside the silver gleam of a knife.

Elsa: “First in order is to slit your throats and silence you, or I suspect you won’t be cooperative.”

Subaru: “Stop saying this terrifying stuff!”

Using the momentary opening Otto created, Subaru held Petra close and tumbled into a neighboring room. Otto followed a second behind, shutting the door before immediately maneuvering behind the bed.

A slash cleaved through the door. The dangling lower portion of the door plummeted, having been kicked into the room.

Subaru: "Take this I guess!"

Elsa swooped into the room, for Subaru to attack her with a wooden clothes-hanger. She dodged by tilting backward and sliced the thing in two with a flourish of her blade, aiming for Subaru's throat with the backswing. But thanks to Petra jumping in and pushing Subaru out of the way, the contact ended with merely a graze.

Elsa: "Goodness. Bad girl."

Subaru: "She's our pride and a good girl, moron!"

Blood seeped from the shallow cut on Subaru's neck. He pressed down on the wound and pulled Petra close, retreating. A ghastly grin arose on Elsa's face as she prepared to pursue them. However,

Otto: "Then how about this!"

Otto tossed a spellstone, aiming for Elsa's face. The glowing red thing, packed with fire Mana, behaved much like a shotgun bullet. It was Otto's trump card, a stone even more pure than the one he had used against Garfiel.

Otto's hidden ace shot straight for the defenseless Elsa, and detonated. The magic ore burst apart in crimson halfway between Otto and Elsa.

Noise and light swept through the room, a heated wind fanning Subaru as he watched. His eyes focused so intensely that time felt to lag, Subaru saw how Elsa had not even bothered to turn around as she threw her knife and cleaved Otto's spell stone.

The stone detonated at an unintended point in space, burning Otto's eyes. He screamed as he pitched back.

Elsa drove her foot into Otto's exposed stomach, shooting him away to crash into a wall. She did not even glance at Otto, collapsed, as she instead turned toward Subaru, who swallowed his breath. Elsa's brows hitched up.

Elsa: “Oh? You’re... I think I know you from the Capital.”

Subaru: “I—I’m honored you remember me. Considering that relationship, would you mind overlooking us?”

Elsa: “I make a point to, no matter how long it takes, witness any guts I previously failed to behold.”

Subaru: “She’s a collector!”

Subaru could feel Petra clutch tighter at his sleeve. His thoughts blazed white.

He keenly sensed that his Gate was dead. He could pray or set his soul ablaze, but neither his Mana nor his Gate were giving the slightest murmur of response. It was impossible for him to use Shamac here, and more importantly it would amount to folly if he ended up immobilizing himself again.

Which leaves him with only one method— Invisible Providence.

Subaru: “———”

The instant he decided to use it, a dark, alien thing slithered through Subaru’s body. It had been still, but began asserting its presence the moment it realized that Subaru was calling upon it, eager to display its power and cheering.

A foreboding feeling struck him, as if he was feeding a repugnant monster.

While consciously ignoring the feeling, Subaru issued orders to the dark power shrieking its birthing cry, determined to cut open a pathway from his inside to the outside.

He could cry blood with the agony, and he was aversive to using this power. Regardless, he had to cling onto what he can, utilize what he can, and live while capitalizing on whatever he can.

All to save everyone he wished to be saved.

Elsa: “Ahh... What a thrilling expression you have.”

Subaru: “I’ll show you something better.”

Elsa: “I’m so excited——”

Taking aim at Elsa's core as she brandished her two blades, Subaru pulled the trigger. Now he just needed to release, and her slender form would be shredded, mauled and perforated.

Subaru: "—Oooh!"

A squirming thing flows into his bloodstream, courses through his whole.

It almost feels like the air he breathes is chromatic, like he is cloaked in blazing heat, as the dark alien nails extend, Elsa's bisection conceivable and anticipated.

Just like this, offer up everything, and—

Petra: "Subaru!"

A grieving cry, and the dull pain of a pinch at his side.

Subaru scrunched his face in surprise, the repugnant emotions inside him dispersing immediately. What remained were the faint dregs of a dark taint, and the unchanged emanations of black murder.

Elsa had begun swooping near, and Subaru would be delayed in managing to fix his aim in a panic—when,

Elsa: "—Close."

Subaru: "—Evaded!?"

It took Elsa a microsecond to discover the gust closing in from behind and dodge it. She aborted her attack on Subaru and twisted away, dancing out from under the claws which gouged her back.

Flipping backwards, she drove a kick into Frederica's flank and rode the momentum to jab her elbow into Subaru, sending both of them flying as she somersaulted backwards—escaping from between them to calmly land on the room's bed.

Elsa put her hand to her back, looking at the blood on her palm. She looked to be in ecstasy. She then looked at Frederica, kneeling on the floor, and tilts her head cheerfully.

Elsa: "Yet another... no, two more people to receive me. Truly a wonderful mansion."

Frederica: “That ambush did not even work... those are not the reflexes of a human.”

Frederica groaned in frustration, unable to hide her shivering. The blow to his chest caused Subaru to cough as he crawled over to Frederica.

Subaru: “Frederica, my bad, thank you. And, Petra too.”

After addressing Frederica, Subaru thanked Petra, her hand in his. Petra shook her head, her eyes teary.

Petra: “N—no, I’m who should apologize. But, Subaru... Your eyes looked so scary, and...”

Subaru: “Honestly, I think I was on the border of getting swallowed. That could have turned bad if I wasn’t pulled out of it. Guess I can’t be careless about using Invisible Providence...”

Petra: “Invisi-what?”

His ace being a double-edged sword was something not even worthy of surprise to Subaru. The problem here was how its uses were now limited further. All he could do was pray that this current backfire had resulted from using it in quick succession.

At the very least, he anticipated that he could not count on Invisible Providence for this fight. It would mean losing far too much in exchange.

Petra: “Frederica-neesama...”

Frederica: “It must have been frightening for you, Petra. You did well to not cry.”

Petra still clutched Subaru’s sleeve when Frederica called her. Frederica appraised her precious faux-sister’s efforts while turning to face Subaru, her expression stern.

Frederica: “Subaru-sama, my apologies. I recognize you wished that I take Rem-sama and flee the mansion... I’ve failed my task.”

Subaru: “No, it cannot be helped in this situation. And the outside’s even more dangerous than here... Where’s Rem?”

Frederica: “Here.”

Frederica held nothing in her hands, both equipped with clawed cestus.

Subaru was anxious about Rem's apparent absence, when Frederica turned her back to face him. Firmly secured there with ropes, carried on Frederica's back, was Rem. She was bound securely, but it was nonetheless quite the overwhelmingly surreal scene.

Subaru: "I know we're in an emergency, but it looks like Rem's neck will snap if she's moved around too much! It's terrifying!"

Frederica: "Fortunately, albeit a word I'd hesitate to use, Rem-sama has been separated from the regular flow of time. Because of that, even if you treated her somewhat roughly there would be no effect..."

Subaru: "E—even so, try to treat her carefully as possible okay?"

That was the result of Frederica striving to do the best she could. Subaru did not want to complain about it as he did not have any alternative plans to offer. He would have to have Rem endure through an uncomfortable experience for a little while.

But either way—

Subaru: "None of us can fight except Frederica. Me and Petra are no fighting force. Rem's asleep. Otto fought his best, but for all his struggle he fruitlessly wound up..."

Otto: "Except I'm not dead!? Could you please not spin these terrifying tales while people are dizzied from hitting their head!?"

Subaru looked down solemnly, which resuscitated Otto, lying on the floor in a corner of the room. He shook his head and crawled over to the group, trembling at the bisected door and clothes-hanger.

Otto: "Who would've thought that the magic ore would be shot down like that... It worked fine on Garfiel."

Subaru: "They've got different experience when it comes to fighting, and their brains are probably built different. Don't compare them, it's sad."

Frederica: "Garf... Then he truly has been raised in the manner which he appears to have been. I was not watching over him..."

Subaru put a stop to Otto's cruel comparisons. It seemed like even Frederica had some thoughts about Garfiel after their ten-year reunion. She might feel guilty that her eyes strayed from him and he had grown up into a sort of a punk.

But all that business and their fostering of brother-sister relations would need to be left as something to do later.

Subaru: "Gotta do something to solve the problems at hand."

Elsa: "Can I assume that you're about done with your pleasant chat?"

Subaru: "Sorry for making you wait. And how about you? Are you mentally ready for a five-versus-one beatdown?"

Elsa: "I'm afraid you're including three, or perhaps four stray children in your calculations?"

Elsa smiled faintly as she accurately counted the number of non-combatants. The kukri knives in each of Elsa's hands swayed as she easily hopped off the bed. Watching this, Subaru realized—

—No blood was dripping from Elsa's back anymore.

Subaru: "But it looked like it was pretty deep?"

Elsa: "You mean my wound? Don't worry, it's fine. Look at it."

With that, Elsa turned on the spot. And just like Subaru had suspected, the wound Frederica inflicted on Elsa's back was perfectly gone. The slashes still remained on her clothes, so it was not like it had been just imagination.

Everyone, including Frederica and except Subaru, swallowed their breath, faces tense. Conversely, Subaru just gave a deep sigh and cursed his bad premonition for being correct.

Subaru: "I mean I knew killing you won't make you stay dead... But are you kidding, your wounds heal too? You're basically just a monster."

Elsa: "I don't remember ever discarding my humanity, and I have some disagreements about you saying that to a woman. Besides that, where could you have learned about my constitution?"

Subaru: “Anyone would think something was up the second you weren’t split in two by Reinhard.”

Elsa: “I don’t go through experiences like that one often. I nearly got split in half— I wonder what a hero’s guts are like. It’s extremely fascinating.”

Although having borne witness to such incredible combat strength, it did not seem Elsa had learned her lesson. It would be fine if she went and got attached to Reinhard, who felt like he wouldn’t die even if you killed him, so why was she so focused on constantly causing problems for Subaru and the others?

He had too many bitter complaints and grievances with Roswaal than he could ever hope to voice.

Frederica: “Subaru-sama... If she’s present here, that means... Garf is...?”

Asked Frederica timidly, her expression stiff. Having witnessed the abnormality of Elsa’s constitution, she was anxious about her brother’s absence. But Subaru had no answer which could dispel Frederica’s unease. If there was anything he could tell her—

Subaru: “Unfortunately, I can’t explain why she’s here either. But I seriously doubt Garfiel was beaten in such a short timeframe.”

Frederica: “From what I witnessed, their strength seemed to be level... Garf even looked like he had slight advantage.”

Subaru: “That’s how I see it too, but in the end we don’t...”

“...know”, Subaru meant to say as he glanced toward Elsa, when his breathing froze. Following Subaru’s gaze, Frederica looked over there as well and held her breath as well. Elsa’s brows furrowed, perplexed, as she also looked at that same spot above her head.

It looked like the room’s ceiling is sinking in, falling, and—

Garf: “The fuckin’ cheek!!”

???: “Ee, eep!?”

Subaru: “That moron!!”

The instant they heard the ceiling breaking, Subaru and the others rushed to the door.

Right after the five of them ran out the door, the ceiling collapsed to crush the entirety of that room, furniture groaning and wood snapping apart thunderously. The explosive noise and the gale gusted out the room, the aftermath of the destruction flowing down the corridor.

Up billowed plumes of white smoke. Subaru spat the gritty dust from his mouth as he tumbled down the hallway to escape the scene. It seemed everyone had managed to avoid getting caught in the collapse.

And from beyond the smoke—

???: “Don’t’cha pull none of that stupid crap! Now ahead we go!”

A familiar, uncouth voice shouted with fervor. The battering of metal on metal and the noise of a blow followed the voice, until a silhouette cut through the smoke and tumbled into the hallway.

Subaru: “Uh, wha—!?”

Seeing that tumbling silhouette, Subaru found himself yelping in surprise.

Well, of course. This figure was not the one he anticipated, and was instead a clawed furry quadrupedal beast with spotty fur— Looking much like a hyena.

But it was not the size of a hyena. It was huge, twice as big as Subaru.

Subaru did shudder for a moment at the arrival of the giant beast, but immediately noticed that the hyena’s eyes were devoid of life, the animal dead. He found that its neck bones were broken, possibly bent into angles opposite of what should be the norm.

Something possessing incredible power had obviously snapped the thing’s neck.

And if there was anyone in the mansion who could probably do that to the beast, it’d be—

Garfiel: “Hey, Captain. Th’hell, ya were still inside?”

—Garfiel, who kicked the smoke away and appeared in the hall, cool as a cucumber. He noticed Subaru and the others staring in astonishment at the dead hyena, and chortled.

Garfiel: “Ya don’t need to freak out, tis all good. My amazin’ self killed it.”

Subaru: “Right, thank you... Not! You stopped paying attention to her! I thought I was gonna die! I was terrified! I thought I was dead!”

Garfiel: “Yeah, yeah, my bad, but my amazin’ self wasn’t thinkin’ to let her go for an instant. She ran off while I was tangled up with that pest.”

Subaru: “Pest which means?”

Garfiel’s face twisted bitterly as he clicked his fangs.

This pest he was talking about was probably this hyena. Going off the previous conversation, it definitely had to be some kind of Witchbeast. But that was when—

???: “Geez! I can’t believe this! Elsa! Elsa! Dooo somethingggg!”

Elsa: “I’d love to, but I’m sure you’re the one who said, «leave this to me, go do something about the others». Though I’m happy to have more bellies to gut.”

Two female voices, one loud, one calm.

Instantly, the room that Garfiel had crushed was crushed once again, and again silhouettes cut through the smoke to appear in the corridor.

Weighty footsteps, and light footsteps— with a size disparity so large you’d hesitate to call them only two pairs.

Otto: “...What is that thing?”

Unable to keep silent any longer, Otto pointed at it and asked Subaru for an answer. Subaru felt the cold, damp sweat oozing down his body.

Subaru: “From what I’m seeing, a biggish hippo.”

Otto: “Just biggish?”

Subaru: “Yeah. Because hippos are big anyway.”

Illustration from Volume 15, coloring by Setowi (source)

If you took a hippo and tripled its size, it would perhaps manage to become this creature. Black flesh, with a thick rocky hide. Its round eyes hosted a red gleam, wicked and hostile. Its mouth was so large that it could probably eat Old Man Rom in one bite, with flat teeth like mortar stones. It resembled a hippo at a glance, and it was probably what a person would end up with if a hippo's wickedness and ferocity were to be tripled.

???: "Spotty Rex's deadd! He's deeeaaadd! Poor boy! It's awfuulll! Awfuulll!"

High-pitched sobs wailed out from atop the giant hippo in mourning of the hyena's death. The person riding the hippo, legs flailing everywhere, was a small girl. Her brown hair dressed in a braid, and her features were rustically simple.

Her face was familiar to Subaru.

Subaru: "...The forest, the Witchbeasts."

Back when Subaru had been caught up in the loop series at the mansion. When Subaru had gone into the deepest reaches of the forest to save the children from Arlam Village, he had found her. She had been the main reason as to why the children were lured into entering the forest.

Subaru had heard from Roswaal that she had vanished after the whole affair was over, but—

Petra: "She's from back then!"

It seemed that Petra had reached the same conclusion. Had Subaru been the only one to notice it, then he would probably have discarded it as some kind of misunderstanding on his part. But if Petra's memories were telling her the same thing, he had to accept it.

This girl had been involved in the Witchbeast debacle.

And if the current situation with Witchbeasts surrounding the mansion was considered, that meant even that debacle—

Subaru: "Roswaal's plans...!"

She was working with Elsa. So, was Roswaal behind the Witchbeast affair too?

If so, that meant the events in the Capital, the events in the mansion, Roswaal's hands had been behind everything. All of Subaru's efforts had been in accord with a future dictated by a dark book of prophecies.

Subaru: "Like I can accept something so stupid!"

Fixed fate was something that he could not accept. At very least, it would start changing from now on. All it meant was that the Witchbeast debacle would be put aside as another thing to interrogate Roswaal about, and that he had yet another reason to smack that clown in the face.

Subaru blazed with rage and rebellion. The girl atop the hippo finally noticed his gaze, blinking her round eyes and waving at Subaru.

Girl: "Oh, you're the guy from before. And Petra-chan's here too. It's been aaageeees."

Subaru: "Y—you sure aren't shy about talking. You do realize what this situation is?"

Subaru could not hide how the girl's unconcerned attitude caught him off-guard.

She tilted her head at Subaru's blatant caution.

Girl: "I realize, I'm woorkiiing. Mama will scold me if I don't do my job. But then Elsa's there, off doing whatever she wants."

Elsa: "Taking the rear post is tediously boring, it was a mistake to appoint me there. My methods are far more vivid and fresh for enjoying life, compared to being made animal feed. Being killed by me is the better choice for the victim too, correct?"

Elsa started walking over to the hippo's side as she directed the conversation onto Subaru. Subaru sighed, then raises his finger.

Subaru: "Okay, then I'll give you the coolest proposition ever. You take that knife you're holding and flip it around. And then you plunge the thing into your stomach. After that you roll and roll around on the floor. Guts everywhere, I'm happy, you're happy. It's the *seppuku*¹⁸¹ challenge. Isn't it cool?"

¹⁸¹ You probably know what it's referencing, but... Suicide by disembowelment (more information here).

Illustration from Volume 12, coloring by Setowi (source)

Girl: “Pff! Ahahahaha! That’s awesome! Come on, Elsa, wanna try it? Elsa, you like guts. It’ll be fun! I’m excited!”

Elsa: “Sorry, but I’ve already done that so many times after getting this constitution that I’m bored of it.”

After learning that his super cool proposition had already been put into practice for real, a super cool shudder rushed down Subaru’s spine. Regardless, it did not change the fact they have two predicaments sitting in front of them.

Subaru: “I don’t know how it works, but is it safe for me to think she’s controlling the Witchbeasts?”

Garfiel: “Doubt yer wrong. It’s the same for the ones outside, ‘n the same for that mutt, all of them are doin’ whatever she says, no fuss at all— What’s the plan, Captain?”

Honestly, the situation had changed immensely from the initial plan. Not only Elsa, but they had another foe— someone who commanded massive Witchbeasts.

So long as beasts lurked outside, it was going to be nearly impossible to escape the mansion peacefully. And most importantly, Subaru’s team had not yet assembled all the people they needed to save.

Even if they took Frederica, Petra, and Rem to the village, it was not enough.

Subaru: “Garfiel... can I ask you to do something crazy?”

Garfiel: “Try me, Captain.”

Subaru: “I want you to stall Elsa and the girl simultaneously.”

Garfiel: “———”

Subaru knew that he was asking for something unreasonable. Just Elsa alone was a foe who presented unparalleled difficulty. While Garfiel was keeping her in line, he would also need to keep the attention of the massive Witchbeast.

Subaru had, since coming to this world, learned the threat Witchbeasts posed to a painful extent. And so—

Garfiel: “No problem. Just leave it to me. Now I’m motivated.”

Subaru: “—!? S-seriously? No kidding? You can do it?”

Garfiel: “It’s what I’m here for. Been talkin’ some massive talk. Too late for me to start whinin’ over the enemies bein’ strong or havin’ numbers. «Meedan who shoulders the mountain loses anywhere to run», like they say.”

With that, Garfiel clattered his shields together.

Even Subaru could tell it was bravado, completely unsupported by any real self-confidence. Regardless, Garfiel was the only one he could rely on for this.

Subaru: “Garfiel. I know I already said this countless times in the carriage, but...”

Garfiel: “I hear ya. My amazin’ self got no ideas of dyin’ in this place either.”

Garfiel interrupted Subaru and eased his worries by pushing him forward with his shoulder. He was indicating that there was no need to say anything else. Repeating it would be inconsiderate toward Garfiel’s resolve. So Subaru swallowed his words and returned a push to Garfiel’s shoulder.

By that alone, he pressed a firm form of trust on Garfiel.

Garfiel: “Now get goin’. I ain’t able to get serious if yer gettin’ in the way.”

Garfiel bared his fangs as he spoke to the others. Hearing that, Otto, Petra, and Frederica looked at each other.

Otto: “Garfiel, don’t die. I don’t want to run around cleaning Natsuki-san’s messes by myself.”

Frederica: “We truly have not spoken enough. But very well. We’ll speak another time, with Grandmother alongside us.”

Petra: “Y—you can do it, scary-looking man.”

Garfiel smiled wryly while nodding to the three.

Subaru felt like they had just loaded a pile of death flags on him. But with how huge the pile actually was, it would flip into a comforting life flag. That was how Subaru rationalized things in a bid to cling to hope.

Garfiel: “N’ so, yer opponent from now on’s my amazin’ self. This time I ain’t gettin’ distracted and I ain’t lettin’ yer flirt around. My claws ‘n fangs ‘n shields are gonna beat ya ‘til you cry!”

As he sharply turned around, Garfiel roared. Bathed directly in his aggression, Elsa smiled while the girl’s mount let out a bass growl.

Elsa: “Meili. Don’t interfere this time.”

Meili: “But you’re the one interfering, Elsa! I’m just doing what Mama saaaaiid tooo!”

While having their disagreement, Elsa and the girl attacked Garfiel. He braced himself as he caught the heavy blow on one shield and the sharp blow on the other, sparks flying as Subaru ran away as fast as he could.

Subaru: “Otto! Frederica! Situation’s changed! Since we can’t leave the mansion through anywhere decent, we’ll escape from a different route so we don’t get eaten by Witchbeasts!”

Otto: “You say «a different route», but I’m sure we’ll be faced with the same outcome even if we take a backdoor. If Garfiel can’t support us in combat, what should we do?”

Subaru: “What if you do frantically negotiate with Witchbeasts using your Divine Protection of the Soul of Language, and depending how the bargaining goes they surrender the path and we escape? Here’s your chance to be the lead role.”

Otto: “Witchbeasts generally just say «Me eat you whole», so it isn’t really a conversation!”

It was a faint hope to begin with, and Otto looked miserable as he replied, running alongside Subaru.

Yes, there were people who you could speak with, but not communicate with. It seems that principle worked for both humans and animals. Elsa was good proof of that. Which meant there was only one escape path Subaru could think of—

Frederica: “Subaru-sama. I have an idea for an escape route.”

Subaru: “I know, Frederica. It’s probably the same place I’m gonna suggest. But...”

There was a problem with that route. Just as Subaru goes to point out what the problem was, he dashed out the hallway and swallowed his breath.

Subaru: “No matter where we run, they just can’t make it easy for us, fuck!”

—Before them, two hyenas noticed their presence and rushed to attack.

Though the cast of the Roswaal Mansion Battle had changed, the fight remained heated.

Arc 4 Chapter 126A - Attack of Guiltlaw, Ebony King of the Woodlands!

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 3 “—Giltirau, Black King of the Forest, Strikes!!”,
Parts 1-3

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 165

—Sparks of steel on steel shrieked and shrieked in succession.

Garfiel: “Ghaaaaaaaah!”

Elsa: “Ahahaha! Wonderful, wonderful, wonderful!”

Her body danced through the air. Her blades elected for no fixed course as they slashed for Garfiel’s vitals.

Who was to say how she was capable of these moves? Every single casual-looking strike closed in with deadly force and accuracy to imminently gouge into Garfiel. Her crooked blade shredded the air, transcending sound as it flew at sonic speed.

Garfiel redirected the blow upwards with his shields, defending himself by letting the strike slide away rather than block it directly.

The force of the woman’s slash remained lethal as she shifted only the trajectory of her swing, her body flowing aside with skill. Cutting into that opening, Garfiel aimed at the woman’s open stomach and swung his leg.

Garfiel’s kick was as mighty as a cannonball, easily capable of demolishing walls of stone. If it hit someone at full force, their fleshy human body would offer absolutely no defense, as its overwhelming strength would mean their innards would be destroyed.

And Garfiel had, in fact, succeeded in landing such blows to pulverize the woman's flesh and bone, more than a couple times until now. However—

Elsa: "I've seen this before."

Garfiel: "Buzz off!!"

The woman twisted her open side, backing away from the kick's trajectory. Garfiel's foot merely grazed across the woman's back, before getting tangled in her black cloak.

It was an instantaneous, but conceivably fatal moment of lag for both the woman and Garfiel.

Elsa: "Haa—"

With a quick exhale, the woman reached her arm around to her back, entangling the cape further over Garfiel's legs. Elsa was halfway through a backflip. Her other hand darted up from behind, racing for Garfiel. The swing would slice Garfiel's right thigh in two— before he even considered his options, he hopped with his free left foot and jabbed it directly beneath his entangled right.

Garfiel's left foot slammed into the flat of the ascending blade.

Metal and wrist snapped as the woman cried out sensually, dropping her knife. She retreated, but since his leg remained entangled, he fell back to the floor, unable to pursue her. He used the momentum from his kick and put his hands to the ground to backflip away, opening distance between them before disentangling his foot.

Garfiel: "Got yer wrist 'n yer knife, haha."

Elsa: "That is fine. I have spare knives, and my hand will be moving again before long. And my cloak... It's practically just an impairment while fighting you."

Garfiel: "Ya can keep yer bravado to yerself."

Elsa: "We'll check your guts to see whether this is bravado."

Garfiel used the stolen cloak to wipe off his sweat and dumped it on the side of the hallway.

Elsa paid no mind to her cloak as she touched her crooked left hand with her right oh so tenderly, and called out to the massive silhouette behind her.

Elsa: “Meili. Don’t just watch, give me another knife.”

Meili: “Geez, just doing whatever you want, Elsa. I’m not your luggage girl or knife caddie. And you keep fighting so Rockpiggie can’t cut in.”

The girl riding the massive Witchbeast puffed out her cheeks in reply as she flung something to Elsa. It was a holder for Elsa’s customary knives. She drew two fresh kukri out of it, holding both of them in one hand as she tested their grip, looking up at the girl.

Elsa: “It’s a blight on your own cuteness that you brought that giant Witchbeast along. Though I’m glad to dance with him without any nuisances involving themselves.”

Meili: “But it’s gonna be ridiculous if you get caught up in that and let the mark get away. If Mama knew what you did, she’d totally scold you. I’m gonna tell her you were naaaughtyyyy, Elsa.”

Elsa: “If I feared being scolded, then I wouldn’t start without you or steal your food. You and the others should be the good children. I personally don’t mind being troublesome.”

As she spoke, Elsa tossed the two knives in the air and started juggling them one-handed. The size and speed of the blades as they spun meant that Elsa could lose an arm if she made a mistake, but Elsa’s risky maneuvers ended with one knife in her right hand, and one knife in her left.

Elsa: “My apologies for making you wait. It seemed like waiting would be enough to fix my hand.”

Garfiel: “Don’t worry yerself ‘bout it. My amazin’ self’s also lookin’ to buy time, and I ain’t insensitive enough to butt into a talk b’tween sisters. Family talks are damn important.”

Elsa: “Goodness. Why do you believe that she and I are sisters?”

Garfiel: “‘Cause ya keep callin’ the same lady yer mom. It doesn’t matter that yer hair ‘n eye colors are different. I’m talkin’bout bein’ family, yer blood ain’t got anythin’ to do wit’it.”

Hearing Garfiel’s reasoning, Elsa’s eyes shot open for a second in surprise. She put her hand to her mouth, and out slipped a very cheery laugh.

Garfiel: “Eh?”

Elsa: “Huhu... Ah, no, forgive me. I wasn’t expecting that response, so I found it a little bit funny. You truly do seem like a good boy.”

Garfiel: “Stop treatin’ me like a kid. My amazin’ self’s an amazin’ man.”

Elsa: “Indeed? Although, it doesn’t feel to me that you’re fully a man or an adult.”

Elsa replied to the dissatisfied Garfiel with her cheeks still relaxed. Garfiel’s brows furrowed in puzzlement, making Elsa’s smile even more cheerful.

Meili: “Elsa, Elsa. Don’t you get the feeling this scary-looking guy’s actually reeeeeeallyyyy precious?”

Elsa: “Yes, Meili. I am just beginning to get that feeling. For the first time in a long while, I may have sighted somebody who I’d rather keep alive after pulling out their guts.”

Garfiel: “Stop runnin’ yer damn mouths. Yer both gonna be takin’ a nap after eatin’ my amazin’ fists.”

Garfiel sharply turned his wrists as he spoke. He really did not understand Elsa and Meili’s conversation, but he could definitely tell they were mocking his determination.

Should Garfiel understand that, then he would have no kind words to offer. Unless they apologized in tears as they begged for forgiveness, Garfiel would pulverize them immobile, and dish out due punishment— Such was Garfiel’s duty.

Garfiel: “Get on wit’it already. Yer buyin’ even more time for the Captain ’n th’others to get away. And my amazin’ self ain’t hopin’ to be gettin’ a gold star for runnin’ away. I’m beatin’ ya to yer last inch, and teachin’ ya a lesson. That my amazin’ self’s the strongest shield, inside or outside Sanctuary.”

With that, Garfiel battered his shields together.

A high-pitched sound rang down the hallway as Garfiel lobbed his determination at the two enemies in the moonlit corridor.

Meili: “—Pffhahaa! Elsa, did you hear that? He’s the strongest shield! Strongest shield. Pff— Pffhaha! He reeeeeeallyyyy is precious!”

However, the situation ended up being that Meili, of all things, laughed, and Elsa's smile also intensified. They did not seem to be feeling threatened.

Garfiel: "Fuck you laughin' at, huh?"

Meili: "Ahhhh, it's so funny. So funny I just laugh. You're funny too with how you think you're oh so strong, but the group that ran away are also just so, so funny."

Garfiel: "The Captain's group's funny?"

Meili: "They are. Aren't they? My pets are surrounding the mansion, so there's only one place to go to escape. That's actually meant to be Elsa's post, but since she went off acting on her own, I put a replacement there."

Elsa: "——"

Meili shot Elsa a criticizing gaze, to which the unabashedly paid no heed. Elsa's murderous eyes stared at Garfiel, observing his every action, making it extraordinarily difficult for him to move. And he also needed to devote some attention to Meili's comment.

Meili thumped the back of the Witchbeast she was riding on, as Garfiel's gaze grew sharper.

Meili: "Except for Rockpiggie, I brought one more huge pet with me today. That child is the one blocking the path. So while you're thinking you're buying time, you're actually doing the opposite of what you want."

Garfiel: "..."

Meili: "When you're done with me and Elsa, you're going to catch up to the others and save them. That's what you're thinking. But that's really not happening. So I'm seeing you doing your best to buy time without even realizing this, and everything's just so funny."

Unable to keep herself from smiling, Meili laughed at Garfiel's silliness. Faced with her juvenile malice, Garfiel sighed deeply. Indeed, there were many unstable requirements piling up on them. Meili was correct, they were definitely facing a situation which exceeded their plans. However—

Garfiel: "Ha. Stupid bullshit."

Meili: "...Huh?"

Garfiel: "Yer th'ones who ain't gettin' it. You got more monsters around? We're th'ones gettin' pinned? As if me or the Captain'd let that fly."

Enjoying the way Meili's smile had disappeared, Garfiel stepped forwards. He watched as Elsa reacted, stooping herself slightly forward—

Garfiel: "The Captain 'n the others beat the shit outta me— They're gonna snort laughin' so hard they blast yer dumb obstacle right outta here!"

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: "We're doomed we're doomed we're doomed we're doomed we're doomed we're doomed, what is even going on!?"

Utterly out of breath, Subaru whined as he dumped himself to the floor. On the third floor of Roswaal mansion's main wing, on the platform leading to the staircase to the top floor, Subaru's group was assembled— Subaru, Otto, Frederica, Petra, and Rem, all holding their breath.

The fatigue was blatant on all of them as they sat there, somewhat deep wounds present on the whole party. In particular—

Subaru: "Are you alright, Frederica?"

Frederica: "...I am, this is merely trivial, it is not anything serious. Subaru-sama, I apologize to you for demonstrating such fecklessness."

Subaru: "We wouldn't get anywhere without you. The pathetic ones here are us guys, me and Otto. I'm sorry. We're weak."

Otto: "T—this time alone... I cannot refute your banter, Natsuki-san."

Otto sighed in frustration. Subaru spat the blood out from his mouth.

While ignoring the hideous pain across his whole body, Subaru readjusted Rem's position on his back. He had switched roles with Frederica, now being tasked with carrying Rem. Otto guided Petra by the hand while Subaru shouldered Rem. Their only fighter, Frederica, stood at the frontlines while opening a path. Such had been the optimal plan for these five.

Right after parting with Garfiel, Subaru's group had been attacked by two hyena Witchbeasts. Between Otto's spellstones and Frederica's fighting, they had barely managed to repel the hyenas, but they soon discovered many more Witchbeasts placed throughout the mansion to torment them.

The hordes of bat-like, Blackwinged Mice lurking in the hallway between the main and separate wing. The hyena-like, Spotted Rex wandering throughout the mansion, attacking whenever they could. Opossums¹⁸² that cast nets over the team after they entered a room, and swooped down the second they let their guard down.

They had had a particularly painful battle when dealing with a two-headed snake¹⁸³, its body as thick as Subaru's arm.

They had managed to drive the Blackwinged Mice away with smoke, Frederica's claws had bested the Rex, they had fled from the Banassi while having their rear ends chewed, Otto's frantic negotiations had managed to stall the Abonsconda, and Subaru had taken the opening to grapple the thing and have Frederica decapitate it— and now, they had arrived at this juncture.

Subaru: "We're just, completely... We failed because we had to split up with Garfiel..."

Otto: "Don't be so faint of heart. Now should be around the time Garfiel would be confidently shouting that we'll succeed, so let's hold expectations at least equivalent to the ones that he's placed on us."

Subaru: "With how dutiful you are, you really don't feel suited to being a merchant..."

Otto was looking the least dire of all of them stamina-wise. Subaru gave him a wry smile, psyching himself up, and got to his feet.

¹⁸² In Ask.fm, Tappei gave a Furigana reading for this Witchbeast (バーナッシュ), whose romanization is Banassi. Source is here. The literal translation of the Witchbeast's name is Opossum, or Bag Mouse, which is used to refer to marsupials in real life (袋鼠).

¹⁸³ In Ask.fm, Tappei gave a Furigana reading for this Witchbeast (アボンスコンダ), whose romanization is Abonsconda. Source is here. The literal translation of the Witchbeast's name is Two-Headed Snake (双頭蛇).

The Rem on his back was, honestly, so light it saddened him. Subaru had heard that unconscious or sleeping people were heavy to shoulder, but Rem alone was not exhibiting that.

He could barely feel her weight or her warmth. Her very presence was dim. Her faint heartbeat and breathing alone proved that she was alive as Subaru firmly corrected her position, as if he was terrified that, even though it would surely not happen, he would drop her and not notice.

Petra: “Frederica-neesama...”

Frederica: “Do not worry, Petra. There is no need to look so anxious... We will reach our destination very shortly.”

Frederica responded to Petra’s nervous gaze with a hearty smile. But Frederica’s situation was not as optimistic as she was making it out to be. A hyena had mauled her arm during a fight, she was unable to lift her bleeding left arm, and her movements lacked their usual refinement. They could not place hope in her to fight at full strength, and needed to find a place to heal and rest immediately.

Subaru: “Though yeah, we really are close to our destination.”

Subaru muttered as he looked up the staircase— at the uppermost floor.

Their team was trying to reach Roswaal’s office. That meant they were aiming for the escape route leading outside located there, but it was also the bad road that had led to Elsa’s invasion in all the previous loops.

When Subaru had first lost his plan to flee to the outside of the mansion, he had bordered on discarding this route as well— But after a conversation with Frederica, changed his mind.

It happened right after they left Garfiel and repelled the two hyenas.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Frederica: “There is a concealed passage in the Master’s office which leads to the outside. We may capably escape the mansion and flee to a cabin in the forest using it. Should we do that...”

Subaru: “Sorry, Frederica. It’s not gonna be that easy. There are reserves awaiting us in the hidden passage. Since that’s the path that woman got in here through.”

Frederica: “———”

Aware that the situation was nigh hopeless, Subaru nonetheless reported this information to Frederica, who was listening quietly.

Subaru had run into Elsa before while trying to check the hidden passage. Leaving aside whether she had entered through the passage this loop, at the very least she knew of its existence.

Subaru: “Going off what Elsa and that girl said... It sounds like they have other allies. Leaving aside whether this «mama» is actually their mother, considering how they look nothing alike... If they’re going to have a rear guard in place, then they’re going to post someone at that passage.”

It was natural to believe that it would be blocked. Witchbeasts were surrounding the mansion, and there was an enemy in the escape route too. They were utterly trapped, and Subaru forced his brain to fire.

Things were desperate. It was a pity that they could not use Beatrice’s help, in a situation with their escape route ineffective. They would not need to agonize about this had Subaru succeeded in convincing Beatrice. With her Door Crossing, escaping this place would be so simple they wouldn’t even need to think about it.

Subaru: “...I’m so selfish.”

Subaru knew about Beatrice’s anguish and the reason behind it, and yet he still tried to cling to her aid. He could not get her help because he had failed to bring her outside, proving that he wasn’t looking at her properly.

It was only natural that she hate and eject him from the room.

Otto: “Natsuki-san.”

Petra: “Subaru.”

Perhaps noticing something about Subaru’s expression as he sank into self-loathing, a tap came to his shoulder and a tug came to his arm.

He looked to find the tap came from Otto on his right, and the tug came from Petra on his left. Each one of the pair had used their methods to have Subaru snap back to reality. Realizing they had done the same thing, both scrunched up their faces.

Looking at the two of them, Subaru sighed, feeling saved.

Frederica: "Subaru-sama. I believe that we ought to choose that path nonetheless."

Subaru raised his head. Frederica raised her finger.

Frederica: "As you have stated, it presently appears that we are trapped in a deadlock. Ferocious Witchbeasts are encircling the mansion, and the enemy is aware of our single route of escape. Normally this would mean that we would inevitably be killed..."

Subaru: "Yes, right. I think the same, so I've been wondering about whether we could at least find a weak spot in the siege of Witchbeasts, but..."

Frederica: "Incidentally, Subaru-sama. Where have you previously met that assailant woman?"

Interrupted by Frederica's low-voiced question, Subaru quietly held his breath. Unable to read her intentions in asking it, Subaru nodded with a "Yeah".

Subaru: "She targeted Emilia in the Capital before. The Sword Saint just happened to show up there and because of that everyone got out fine. It'd be way too convenient to expect that handsome guy to burst into the scene here, though."

Frederica: "I, see. Your last encounter involved the current Sword Saint-sama. But, regardless, that does not matter. I do not wish to know the methods used previously to repel the woman. I would rather like to know her personality."

Subaru: "Her personality?"

Subaru tilted his head at Frederica's rather nebulous question.

Subaru: "I mean, her personality is just as you see, she's a weird fetishist. She's the Bowel Hunter, loves cutting open people's stomachs and checking out the insides. She's up there in the worldwide danger rankings."

Frederica: “And judging by how she appeared to enjoy her confrontation with Garf, she would be particularly fixated on doing the deed by her own hands... Correct?”

Subaru: “Not like I know her, but yeah. She’s probably that kind of character. I don’t see where you’re going with this, though?”

Frederica: “It is simple, Subaru-sama— The enemy is experiencing some unexpected events during this raid, as well.”

It was a powerful assertion. Subaru’s eyes widened in surprise.

Frederica: “Witchbeasts are presently encircling the mansion. The young girl also present is likely a manipulator of Witchbeasts. We shall perhaps call her a Witchbeast Master. The enemy’s true designs had been to assault the mansion whilst the siege of Witchbeasts was in place, and attack those of us inside, would be what it appears.”

Subaru: “What makes you think that?”

Frederica: “—The timing between the attacks from the Witchbeast Master and the Bowel Hunter are not the same.”

For a moment, Subaru furrowed his brows in thought. But he immediately realized what Frederica was trying to say, and hit his fist to his palm.

Subaru: “That’s it, so that’s it! Shit, why didn’t I notice it? Yes, Frederica’s got it right! With that weirdo’s personality, of course it’d be like this!”

Otto: “Wh—what is it? I don’t quite see how everything connects—”

Subaru kicked the floor in frustration and excitement. Otto looked somewhat nervous, but Subaru just nodded to him.

Subaru: “It’s really simple, Otto. The Witchbeast attack was actually meant to corner everyone in the mansion. And once we’re cornered, we can’t run away like normal. So we would head for the hidden passage— That would be the natural course of events, right?”

Otto: “That would be exactly the course we have followed, correct? But weren’t we saying the enemy knows about the secret passage, and so we cannot use it?”

Subaru: “Exactly. The correct course of the attack is, we’re cornered and run into the hidden escape path, and that’s where we all get killed by Elsa lying in wait. That’s their plan. But it’s gone astray. Elsa isn’t in the passage right now.”

Otto: “———”

Why was that? Considering Elsa’s disposition, the answer became obvious.

Subaru: “Elsa did not want to miss out on prey, so she started moving on her own. That’s why she’s out of tune with the Beastmaster. And that means she’s not at the spot that she’s meant to be blocking— So there’s no one at the hidden passage!”

Frederica: “The original plans had been for the woman to lie in ambush in the passage. Consequently, since events are diverging from their plans, it is extraordinary unlikely that a rear guard would be presently occupying the passage. The enemy shall surely realize that the situation is divergent from their plans should they be given time. Likelihood is steadily increasing that they may send another individual into the passage.”

Petra: “So we gotta race there while no one’s around!”

Following on from Subaru and Frederica’s theories, Petra practically jumped as she answered. Subaru laughed, appraising her conclusion with a “Full marks”, as he put her hand on Petra’s head, patting her auburn hair vigorously.

Subaru: “With the information we have, this is the most likely case. Either way, it looks to have more promise than breaking through the Witchbeast perimeter outside. And worst case, we can at least check what’s happening with the office. Let’s do it. This is the only way we’re all getting out safe!”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Ready for that plan, the team had arrived to this sight outside the office.

Everyone was both physically and mentally exhausted. Regardless, the hope of reaching their goal had filled them with enough energy to move their incredibly wounded selves. And now, that flicker of hope had been—

Subaru: “You have to be kidding me.”

Muttered Subaru reflexively after reaching the top of the staircase and peeking into the hallway. Otto poked his head out above him, as did Petra below him, and seeing the same thing, they agreed with Subaru in dumbstruck shock.

Frederica: “What has happened? Is the Master’s office...?”

Frederica sat on the stairs behind them as she asked that of the three scouts. But judging by their reactions, she had likely surmised that the situation was looking bad.

Subaru stifled his footsteps as he turned around, rather anxiously.

Subaru: “There’s a real nasty-looking one camping outside the fucking room.”

—To Subaru, it looks like the monster Chimera.

A lion-esque feline head, with the skinny body of a horse or a goat. Its long tail whipped about like a snake, and although it was smaller than the Beastmaster’s hippo mount, it was stupidly huge enough to block the mansion’s expansive hallway. A strange entity which looked like it had burst out of myth— its prowess in combat easily deduced from sight alone.

Otto: “That... is the Witchbeast Guiltlaw. It... It lives deep in woodlands thick with Miasma, something like the king of beasts... And now, in a human village... It’s not the kind of Witchbeast that you could possibly bring with you to a mansion...”

Subaru: “What are chances that we are overestimating it, and it’s actually a wimp? Like, it looks like that, but in reality its personality’s gentle so you can just feed it *katsuobushi*¹⁸⁴ and it’s happy, or something...”

¹⁸⁴ Literally “dried bonito flakes”, consists of simmered, smoked and fermented tuna. For more information, see here.

Otto: “I wouldn’t know what katsuobushi is, but are you suggesting approaching it with food? It will probably end in the beast chomping you in half.”

Otto’s statement made Subaru think of how huge the Guiltlaw’s head was. Indeed, with a mouth that big, Subaru was a two-bite meal.

Subaru: “No, but Garfiel’s even bigger when transformed. Okay, let’s go get him and compare sizes. If our guy’s bigger, then that guy will sneak away dejected.”

Otto: “If we go back to summon him, then that woman will carve us to bits. You can stop being funny, Natsuki-san. Have you thought of any ideas?”

Otto entertained Subaru’s joking, but his gaze was expectant, turning to Subaru. It was like he had expected Subaru to have come up with some idea over the span of that little exchange.

Thinking Otto was placing quite the ridiculous expectations, Subaru glanced back to Frederica and Petra—

Petra: “Subaru.”

Frederica: “Subaru-sama.”

—And they were gazing at him with expectation too.

Subaru: “—Seriously, just what expectations are you putting on me?”

Giving a deep sigh, Subaru shivered at the weight of those huge expectations. He adjusted Rem’s position on his back, and closed his eyes.

What, presently, were the combat forces they could muster?

Frederica was injured and Otto had no magical power. Neither Petra nor Subaru were fighters, and they were on the third floor of the mansion’s main wing. There was no way they could call Garfiel up here, and even thinking of getting Beatrice’s help was a bust.

But that said, fighting while using everything available was the only technique Subaru had ever had at his disposal.

Everyone's abilities, their capabilities, materials present, the opponent's situation, the requirements, Subaru mulled over all of them, considered all of them, thought over all of them— And exhaled.

Subaru: "If neither martial nor magic forces are looking like they'll work, time to stake it all on my unmatched knowledge from the twenty-first-century."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The first thing to catch Guiltlaw's attention was a sound.

Guiltlaw: "———"

Having heard the peal of something hard tapping and tapping and tapping against the floor, Guiltlaw raised his snout.

The Silent King of the Woodlands— some locations indeed referred to Guiltlaw as such, and unlike other Witchbeasts, he did not favor needless roars nor pointless noise.

Contrary to his great frame and queer appearance, he soared deftly through the wastes, making not the slightest sound in approaching his prey before landing a single fatal strike and slaying the creature. This sort of sneaky and assassination hunts were his greatest forte. Thus, although his Master had ordered it, Guiltlaw could not see the hunt of lying in ambush in one spot as anything but foolish utilization of his prowess.

Although naturally, he had not the slightest intention to be an ingrate and defy his Master's orders. Because by breaking his horn, Guiltlaw had been allowed to escape from his curse.

Guiltlaw: "———"

Guiltlaw cast his snout around, searching for the source of the sound while ruminating on his Master's orders. Remain in place outside this door, and hunt any enemies what may approach— such was the duty that Guiltlaw has been tasked with, and his Master's desire.

Those high defenseless tapping sounds clearly were footsteps.

Many two-legged creatures, such as his master, made this sound when they walked. The truly strong were amongst their number, those who did not even make such noise as footsteps, but the owners of these footfalls was not among them.

They were undefended, uncalculated, unintentional, unheeding— devoid of a single speck of grace. Guiltlaw found them irritating to chew on for even for a meal, with how utterly weak they were.

Guiltlaw: “———”

Silently, Guiltlaw slid away from the door. The footsteps were coming from the western staircase, the direction from which he had heard intermittent sounds of battle for some time now.

Guiltlaw knew that his Master had brought in other Witchbeasts besides himself. While instructing many beasts inferior to him in both strength and size to surround the mansion, his Master had tasked Guiltlaw with defending the door, mounted herself upon a large and dimwitted beast, and went hunting.

It had dissatisfied Guiltlaw that she had chosen that beast, only good for its size, for her hunt, and left him behind to guard the rear. But should the foes he face here at least be powerful ones, then he could both agree with his reason for being brought here and preserve his honor.

Thus, Guiltlaw had not done anything so foolish as leaving his post to attack the enemies, no matter what beasts they faced, until they managed to reach this very spot. A weakling who could not even reach Guiltlaw’s location did not merit battle. A weakling butchered by beasts weaker than himself did not merit the hunt.

However, the prey had overcome the other Witchbeasts, and arrived at this spot. The second that Guiltlaw sensed their presence, he felt secretly thrilled.

—And this was what he had been waiting for? Something fragile, ignorant of even the concept of hiding footsteps, with such weak lust for battle. One swing of his claws, one flourish of his fangs, would scatter this fleeting, inferior being to bits.

Guiltlaw: “———”

What surged inside him was rage. Only rage.

His fangs would ravage the prey, and without a single lump of their flesh going down his gullet, he would leave them scattered about the floor.

That was the only thing that would assuage this burning feeling of insult.

Pursuing the footsteps, Guiltlaw moved without even casting any shadow over the moonlight. Should there be anyone to witness him as his great frame sailed silently in motion, they would surely think themselves observing a nightmare.

The ebony assassin approached the footsteps, finding that the prey seemed to have stopped at the next bend— Guiltlaw drew his claws to bisect the prey from behind.

Guiltlaw: “———!”

With not the slightest sound, Guiltlaw stretched out his neck and jumped onto the prey’s back— however.

Guiltlaw: “———?”

The prey that he had caught, and sensed to be within mauling range, was nowhere to be seen. Unsure of where to swing his upraised paw, Guiltlaw stalled for a millisecond, feeling something awry. He sniffed as he turns his head.

Where had the foolish, frail, flimsy prey gone?

Guiltlaw: “———!”

Once again, the noise of footfalls reverberated in Guiltlaw’s ears.

He lowered his head and looked toward the noise, to find that it seemed to be echoing from the stairway. The noise of the prey’s footsteps, descending, running down the staircase. It appeared they had noticed his presence and sped up somewhat to avoid him. But should Guiltlaw learn of such a thing, then he would never allow the prey to flee.

Guiltlaw turned his head. Looked at the door that his Master had ordered him to protect.

He may be distancing himself from his post, but this prey was surely the exact prey that his Master had given out her orders for. Should he slaughter the prey, that was tantamount to observing his Master's orders. With that decision, Guiltlaw pursued the gracelessly fleeing prey.

He was effectively teaching the prey the moment they had turned their back on him, they lost any means of resistance— never mind the fact that they had been within range of his strikes.

For Guiltlaw, who dashed over mountains and reigned over the woodlands as King, the hunt of fleeing prey was an everyday act of amusement. The only prey worthy of being absorbed into this flesh were the truly strong. Prey that would turn their backs and lose their fangs to resist him merely existed so that he would not forget the feeling of blood and gore on his claws and fangs— and they ought to learn this too.

Guiltlaw descended the staircase, following the footsteps. He kicked off the wall at the stairway landing, dancing through the air to the floor below. He reached the second floor, then the first floor in pursuit of his prey, and now stood in the lowest floor of the building.

He perceived the distant signs of fighting. The scent of his Master, and the stench of the annoying dimwitted beast accompanying her. The remaining scents were of blood and steel, the aroma of the strong.

Guiltlaw: “———”

Were it possible for him, he would prefer to venture in that direction, and participate in the fight. He wished to brandish his claws and fangs in presence of his Master, ripping the strong fighter to pieces and drowning them in a sea of blood, supping upon the taste of victory.

However, he must not desire such a thing right now. He had orders to uphold.

—Should he swiftly hunt this prey down, perhaps his participation would be permitted.

Guiltlaw: “———”

Guiltlaw felt the burning in his fangs ever more keenly, his body shuddering. Again, he heard the footsteps, and pursued them to hear a door close further down the dark hallway, before looking at it, freshly closed.

Darting over, standing silently before the door, Guiltlaw used his long tail to dexterously open the entry.

This was not his first time invading the dwelling of the two-legged creatures and brandishing his fangs.

He understood how these doors functioned, squeezing his massive frame through the doorway as he sneaked into the room. He had been expecting the prey to be waiting here at this very moment, but he could not find the slightest glimpse of them, and yet again Guiltlaw was utterly surprised.

But his disappointment this time does not hide far away—

Guiltlaw: “———”

Turning his head, Guiltlaw’s gaze landed on a corner of the room— the wardrobe.

Sticking out from the crack between the wardrobe’s two doors was from the prey’s clothing. They had swooped inside in a panic, their clothes caught. The shallowness of this prey, believing that they were hiding from Guiltlaw while failing to realize their failings, was humorous.

Guiltlaw silenced his footsteps and crept near the wardrobe. He raised his tail, sharpened its tip, and did not hesitate for not even a second.

Guiltlaw: “———!”

His tail penetrated, piercing easily through the wardrobe like a spear. It left a round hole as if made by a drill— and many more of them. Coin-sized holes were stabbed one after another into the wardrobe, skewering the pathetic prey cowering inside.

Once more than twenty holes had been punched open on the wardrobe, Guiltlaw ceased attacking with his tail. He reached out his front paw and yanked the wardrobe door so that he may observe the pathetic, dead prey. The perforated door opened easily, and the prey inside—

Guiltlaw: “—Grah!?”

The instant Guiltlaw went to confirm the corpse’s presence, a burning shock to his nose made him recoil.

A terribly intense stench shot through his nostrils, the sensation so painful he could wail. He promptly looked back at the wardrobe, to find a transparent bottle, broken and overflowing with colorless liquid.

The stench was coming from this substance. And the prey was not inside the wardrobe. The protruding cloth had merely been clothes protruding from the wardrobe.

Guiltlaw: “———!”

Once again hearing footsteps echo from the hall outside the room, Guiltlaw turned around. His nose was not working, but his eyes and ears were fine. He spotted a shadow dash down the corridor, and while lamenting the humiliation of having his nose disabled, pursued the shadow.

Guiltlaw had never faced such humiliation in his life.

This was not a bold and honest confrontation against Guiltlaw, who had overwhelmed all enemies he had ever faced until now, nor was it him easily sinking his fangs into fleeing prey. This was an entity scrambling so horrendously for life, so wretched Guiltlaw had never seen anything like it before.

Assuredly, kill them. Slay them. Maul them, splay them over the dirt, trample them.

Guiltlaw: “———”

Forgetting to even silence his footsteps, Guiltlaw’s massive frame soared into the room into which the footfalls had fled.

He easily blasted through the twin doors. What welcomed him was a room remarkably larger than the others he had seen. A large table stood in the middle of the room, and at the back of the room was a fireplace. Candlesticks were lit upon the table’s white tablecloth. In a room with the moon as the only source of light, the flames flickered bewitchingly.

Guiltlaw: “———”

Fire was an irritating thing for Guiltlaw. Even during day, when the great globe of white fire remained in the skies overhead, Guiltlaw detested fire being near him. After all, the forest Guiltlaw lived in had been engulfed in flames, and so he lost his peaceful home. His horn was broken, and he began obeying his Master during that affair as well. Fire prompted memories of both liberation and humiliation for Guiltlaw.

Guiltlaw: “———”

He heard no footsteps. But he did hear something else. Opposite the door he had just barreled through was yet another door, on the other end of the large room. From that likely-cramped space beyond the door, he sensed something.

Guiltlaw sniffed, but his sense of smell had yet to return. He could not smell the aroma of the prey wetting itself in terror. Once he mauled the prey, it was likely he would be unable to smell or taste its blood either, which was a disappointment.

But he could put those sensations off for another time, as long as he succeeded in slaughtering the prey. Right now, only erasing this sense of humiliation blazing in his chest and making the prey who disgraced him shriek its death wail would offer Guiltlaw any solace.

Guiltlaw: “-----”

Guiltlaw stepped forth, heading straight for the room. Then he stabbed his sharp tail into the room’s door. It was soon filled with holes just like the wardrobe, and Guiltlaw pulled the door open before taking a breath and leaping inside.

Guiltlaw: “-----Ooooh!!”

He soared into the room, roaring. His bellow intimidated the prey, scaring the weakling so that it may compensate him by having its flesh torn into by his claws and fangs.

He whipped his tail about, spreading destruction throughout the room, when dust erupted from shredded bags and boxes sitting on the cupboards. His forepaw slammed down on the floor, shattering it and shredding through the cloth draped across the ground for dust to erupt yet again, from below— but no. These plumes of dust, thick enough to block out Guiltlaw’s vision, were only growing thicker.

Guiltlaw: “-----!?”

Guiltlaw’s vision drowned in white, his windpipe being invaded the second he took a breath, making him cough. Some kind of, massive quantity of flour was dancing through the air.

Enough flour to rob him of his vision, and even rob him of the breath needed to roar.

???: “Got him!”

Someone, some creature, spoke. Guiltlaw heard their voice not from inside this room, but the previous one,

???: “Eat this, the soul of science— Flour explosion!!”

With a sound, something was hurled into the room covered in white.

The bright, flickering thing was one of the candlesticks from the table in the previous room. The candlestick struck the wall, its flickering flame falling on the floor and blooming larger for an instant.

Guiltlaw: “———”

???: “H—huh...?”

But that was all.

The candlestick remained fallen to the floor, doing nothing in particular. The speaker sounded like it had misunderstood something, and Guiltlaw knew they were standing petrified outside the room.

Guiltlaw: “———!”

Guiltlaw’s instincts told him that he was never getting this opportunity again. The enemy had experienced some breed of failure. And if that failure had not happened, Guiltlaw would have been in danger.

Comprehending this, Guiltlaw twisted his body, electing to escape from this room.

If he were able to exit to a spacious room, a place where he could swing his paws and his tail freely, no plans drafted by his prey could present an issue. He would use the overwhelming disparity in strength to force them to submit, and wrest victory.

There was no need to do anything more than that——

???: “Didn’t I tell you? Instead of doing that nonsense!”

???: “It’s quicker to just do this!”

The instant that Guiltlaw thought of soaring out of the room, he heard two more prey speak.

A low voice, and a high voice. The moment he realized these were prey of different genders, Guiltlaw sensed that the shelf behind him was collapsing toward him.

The string drawn across the entryway was connected to the leg of the shelf. That string was forcefully tugged, and the shelf collapsed onto Guiltlaw's back. But its size only allowed it to hit Guiltlaw's massive behind.

The force the blow carried inflicts absolutely zero damage on Guiltlaw.

Calmly taking the blow, Guiltlaw severed the string with his claws. And when he prepared himself to definitely leap out of the room—

Guiltlaw: “———?”

The cupboard opened, and a liquid overflow, streaming all over Guiltlaw's body. It felt slimy, unlike water. It was slightly yellow in color, and having it slathered over his prided black coat was hideously unpleasant for Guiltlaw.

But that discomfort disappeared instantly.

Guiltlaw: “———!?”

???: “Here is Otto Suwen's personal investment of trading oil— Take as much as you want!”

The prey's voice called from outside the room. But Guiltlaw had no leeway to mind the weak prey's voice in that moment.

—The oil he was covered in caught on fire, detested flame burning his body whole.

Guiltlaw: “———!!”

The King of Beasts, who had descended from the plains, who was eternally obsessed about his throne in the woodland skies, combusted in flames as hot as his humiliation without ever knowing what had bested him.

Arc 4 Chapter 127A - The Final Day of the Roswaal Mansion

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 3 “—Giltirau, Black King of the Forest, Strikes!!”, Parts 4, and Volume 15, Chapter 5 “I Love You Down to Your Blood and Guts” (first half)

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 182

Subaru: “Otto, you mentioned something about using wind and water magic to make footsteps ring from far away, right?”

Otto: “...Actually I believe that we did talk about that before, but I am impressed that you remembered. Magic that simple isn’t impossible for me even with my currently impoverished Mana, but... How would I use it? The only time I ever use it is when I want someone to turn around for a moment.”

Subaru: “We’ll be using it exactly how you said. You make footsteps peal, pull their attention, and guide them into a trap— Then I blast them away with the soul of science.”

Otto: “You sound absurdly confident about this, though what exactly is this «soul of science»...?”

Subaru: “Simple, strong, certain death. A dust explosion. The methods and materials are simple. All you need is some fire and flour. If it’s powerful as I know it is, it’s going to be more than enough to blast away just one single monster.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Otto: “That’s what you said, then I believed you and helped you do it, and this is what happens!”

Subaru: “Shut up! Scientific progress always comes with sacrifices! Why didn’t it work!? There wasn’t enough flour, or not enough fire, or... are the laws of physics just different in this world? So that’s why the dust explosion didn’t...”

Petra: “Aaagh! None of that even matters, focus on putting it out! Ahh, oh no! Oh no!”

Petra butted in, screaming, into Subaru and Otto’s yelling match. The three of them were in the kitchen on the first floor, lit by the glow of blazing flame. Because—

Subaru: “You used too much oil! How are we gonna put this out!? It’s spreading!”

Otto: “Do you think it’s possible to shirk out on oil when hunting such a ludicrously huge monster!? And even if we couldn’t take the flammables out and simply left them there, the results would be the same anyway! You are definitely paying the fees for this afterwards!”

Petra: “Just stop it, you guys! This isn’t the time for this! We can’t put it out! Run!”

Subaru: “You sound like a middle schooler failing to recover from a mishap with fireworks...”

Said Subaru, exasperated, when he noticed the tablecloth in his hands had caught alight. The flames did not go out no matter how he batted away at them, so he resignedly dumped the cloth into the fire. The fire from the storage pantry had spread within an instant, and the flames had started circling around to the dining room and kitchen as well. It felt like the spellstones they used for cooking would get caught in the blaze and explode at any second.

Subaru: “We sacrificed way too much for this...”

Frowning, Subaru looked down at the charred corpse fallen at the threshold between the pantry and the dining room. It was the beast that had been blocking the door to the office on the third floor, which Otto had lured downstairs with his sneaky magic, then got covered in the storeroom oil and burned to death.

It had brains befitting its brawn and had graciously triggered every single trap without suspecting a thing. Fortunately, it was seemingly susceptible to fire, falling into a panicked frenzy once it caught alight, and had proceeded to burn up without doing anything else.

Subaru had indeed faced a conundrum upon his dust explosion’s failure, but Otto and Petra’s backup plan of using oil led them to victory.

For once, you could say that Otto and Petra’s failure to understand Subaru’s lectures on the terror of dust explosions, and dimwitted insistence to lay down insurance, had saved them.

But if there were problems that had arose from this, then that would be that the flames that had killed the Witchbeast. Even after felling the beast, the blaze had not settled down. The fire burned the walls of the mansion, burned the food inside the pantry, tongues of flame reaching to the legs of the dining room table.

It reeked of smoke, of a fatal and burning world. Subaru's vision began to haze. In this land without fire brigades, they were lacking in enough water magicians to put out the fire.

Subaru: "I knew that renovation worked would be needed after this, considering how Garfiel and Elsa are fighting and Witchbeasts are prowling around... But it's so big we'd have to reconstruct the building..."

Otto: "This is not the time to discuss it, Natsuki-san. We'll follow Frederica and escape. Swiftly, before the third-floor staircase stops existing."

Petra: "Hurry! Hurry!"

It all felt unreal to Subaru as he watched flames engulf the familiar scenery, when Petra and Otto tugged at his sleeve.

Otto and Petra were the only people here except Subaru. Frederica and Rem split up with them when they began their plans to trap the Witchbeast, and had also been tasked with judging when the beast moved away from the door, and then securing the hidden passage in the office.

It had worried Subaru to entrust the task to Rem and to a wounded Frederica, but thinking about pure combat ability, it was a sensible plan. Even when unable to use an arm, Frederica was far more than capable of defeating Subaru and Otto.

And either way, they had succeeded in repelling the Witchbeast.

While praying their read of the situation was correct and no other enemies would be found in the passage, Subaru's team burst out of the dining hall and sprinted up the stairway, aiming for the top floor.

Subaru: "What do we do if Garfiel dies in the fire!?"

Otto: "Garfiel surely isn't that stupid, he will be well! And it's possible for him to escape by charging through the Witchbeasts outside!"

Subaru was anxious about the fire's spread, and how it chipped away Garfiel's battlefield. Otto's shouts are correct, but seriously what if—

Petra: "Frederica-neesama!"

While Subaru brooded, the three reached the third floor. Out of breath, Petra sighted Frederica standing outside the office, waving towards her. Frederica seemed to perceive that the group's fight had been successful, and relief washing over her instantly.

Frederica: "Thank goodness, you're safe. It comforts me that nobody is missing."

Otto: "Please excuse me, may I ask why you are saying this while staring at me? Do you mean I seem likely to go missing? Please stop, I'm near to weeping!"

Subaru: "Yeah, yeah, just calm down, calm down. We'll put improving your reception aside as an issue for later, and for now think about how to deal with our current problems. Frederica, how's the passage?"

Frederica: "It operated without any issue. And I have confirmed that the path itself is also safe, at least as far as the inner room... Incidentally, am I simply imagining this smell of something burning?"

Frederica narrowed her eyes as she asked about the stench that tickled her nose. Subaru grimaced, looked at Otto and Petra, and the two shook their heads.

Subaru: "Ummm, well we kinda made a couple mistakes, and the fire we used for defeating the monster got really huge. And so..."

Frederica: "The mansion has begun to burn. I had not anticipated that the building would return to a state of complete normalcy, but now it shall burn down entirely... In comparison to our lives, it can be replaced."

Subaru: "Oh, you get it. Yup. Yup, it's an inevitable sacrifice."

Frederica: "I have little sentimental connection to this mansion. Instead, Ram's should be fond of the building, so you would best prepare yourself for a scolding afterwards."

Subaru: "Ugh."

Imagining the relentless and endless chastisement, Subaru suddenly felt reticent for their reunion. But it was good that he could think about the future like this. Frederica smiled wryly at Subaru's attitude, and a relaxed atmosphere spread across the scene.

Subaru: "Now, we just forced another time limit on ourselves, so let's get out of here quick. Frederica will take the lead, then Petra then Otto. The second you're out of the passage, you should be in a safe area... Hard to tell what side of the barrier you'll be on, but either way follow Frederica's instructions. If possible, meet up with the villagers who fled with Patrasche. That would be best."

Calling an end to the jokes, Subaru quickly explained what their current goals were. Frederica and Otto's expressions tensed as they nodded in response. But Petra furrowed her brows. She raised her little hand and called, "Subaru?".

Petra: "I—Isn't this kinda funny? It almost sounds like you're not coming with us..."

Subaru: "—It does. I'm sorry, but I'm not leaving with you. We're splitting up."

Petra: "Why!?"

Petra cried in surprise to Subaru who replied affirmatively. She reached out and grabbed his sleeve, her fingers shaking, trying to keep him from going.

Petra: "Let's just run! The mansion's burning, and there's so many scary monsters! You can't beat them in a fight, can you, Subaru? So won't you run?"

Subaru: "Well, you're right, so I have no excuses to pull, but I'm not gonna fight. Though I guess in a sense, it is a battle."

While happy for Petra's concern, Subaru gently unhooked her fingers. He saw grief permeate her big, round eyes, paining his heart.

Otto tapped her shoulders from behind, taking care not to startle her.

Otto: "Petra-chan. Natsuki-san has something that he needs to do. Until he's done it, he cannot leave the mansion."

Petra: "But! Subaru's weak! He's in danger! We should just leave you behind instead, Otto-san!"

Otto: “You’re not saying that because you believe in my strength at all, are you!?”

Shaking her head, Petra looked up at Subaru with tears in her eyes. Subaru knelt to get on Petra’s eye level and patted her head.

Subaru: “I’m sorry, Petra. You, and Rem, and Frederica will all escape the mansion safely. But that still isn’t the entire reason for why I came back to the mansion. There is still one more person I must get out of here.”

Petra: “B—Beatrice-sama?”

Subaru: “Yes. Have you met her?”

Petra shook her head. Petra had started working here about ten days ago. She had not caught sight of that shut-in girl even once during her time living here. Beatrice was indeed a hardcore shut-in.

Even though Subaru used to basically never leave his room either, except to go to the bathroom.

Petra: “I—is she really around? You sure you aren’t just thinking too hard, and fooling yourself that she...?”

Though she probably did not intend to, Petra had begun doubting reality.

“Could it be that this person only exists inside your own head?”, was what she was asking.

Subaru: “She’s an absolute pain, she’s lonely but a complete meddler, takes everything upon herself and answers questions all on her own and suffers for it. She can’t settle issues on her own, so she wants someone else to end it for her.”

Petra: “...”

Subaru: “I’d really rather not think I could come up with someone like this in my imagination. If I’m gonna fantasize about anyone, it’s going to be a helping character with their fondness gauge at MAX.”

Beatrice would never do a single thing that Subaru wanted even once, did not know what she or others desired, was trying to give up on thinking, and was the pinnacle of annoying.

And so Subaru needed to teach her.

Subaru: “You know, Petra. Beatrice is basically the same age as you. And with how you’re mature in lots of ways, you might resemble her first friend.”

Petra: “Her first friend?”

Subaru reminisced on the past Theta mentioned. He thought about Ryuzu Meyer, Beatrice’s old friend, who had left a permanent scar on the girl’s heart. Beatrice and Ryuzu may not have recognized it themselves, but from an outside perspective, they had been obviously friends.

Subaru: “Petra. Once I come back with Beatrice, you will definitely be her friend. You’ll like her. Because it’s so fun teasing her.”

Petra: “Even more than Otto-san?”

Subaru: “Yeah. You don’t even need Otto anymore.”

Otto looked like he wanted to say something, but Subaru consciously ignored him. He drew his hand away from Petra’s head and stood up.

Subaru: “I’m doing it. I’m searching for Beatrice. I’ll do my best not to die in the fire, but if I do burn to death, then I want the records to show that I died because of Otto’s oil.”

Otto: “I’d really rather have that not happen. If you don’t come back safely, I’ll slap you, I swear.”

Otto spoke his mind, looking miffed, as he set his hands on Petra’s shoulders, drawing her near him. As if he was drawing a line between Subaru, and the four of them.

Subaru: “Frederica. I’m counting on you.”

Frederica: “I will not spare my health. I swear that I shall cut open a path to our escape.”

Subaru: “Be sparing. If we can’t keep you, it was pointless for me to come here.”

Frederica’s eyes widened. It wasn’t often that Subaru saw her looking so surprised. It actually felt kind of nice.

Finally, Subaru looked at Rem, on Frederica's back. The sleeping princess showed no signs of seeing Subaru off. It was fine. Rem was not meant to see Subaru off. Subaru was meant to greet her.

Petra: "Take care, Subaru!"

Turning his back to the four, Subaru broke into a run. Even at their parting, Petra's voice washed over Subaru's back. But he did not glance behind him. Petra did not desire him to, either.

The flames were spreading steadily across the mansion.

—With his hand to a door left unscathed, Subaru had to wonder whether this fire would reach the Forbidden Library.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The shield caught the blade as it slashed down, and to a screech of sparks and metal, the knife flowed away.

Weaving into each other's openings, a forceful kick plunged into Elsa's stomach— She took the blow, rotating to dissipate the strike's force, and used her momentum to slash at Garfiel, her blade closing in to slice his head in two, but.

Garfiel: "Lax!"

Elsa: "Goodness. How harsh."

Garfiel's wide open jaws closed down on the blade, making this the fourth mouth interception of the day. The force of Garfiel's jaw shattered the knife instantly, and Elsa salvaged her hand before leaping backwards in retreat. The theft of her favored weapon made her only smile deeper.

Elsa: "If you were wrong by even a hair, your head would have shot off. Doing that is certainly impressive."

Garfiel: "Got the trick to it down. I'm startin' to get bored of how you fight, right now."

Elsa: “How cold. Looking like you understand a woman entirely, when you’ve only known her a short while.”

Garfiel: “...Fuck off with that entrappin’ phrasin’, oy— Hrmm.”

Garfiel stuck his finger in his ear, grimacing, and sniffed as he noticed something. He looked down the hallway, his mouth curving into a grin.

It did not look like Elsa had noticed it yet, but Garfiel’s sense of smell had picked up the stench. That was the stink of stone and wood on fire— otherwise said, the aroma of flame.

Meili: “—Ahh, geez, I can’t believe it! He’s sooo useeeleessss!”

Right after Garfiel smiled, the girl atop the Witchbeast puffed out her cheeks. Elsa glanced at her and Meili remained peeved as she continued,

Meili: “Apparently the Shadowlion who’s meant to be stalling the others just died. He never listened to my instructions anyway, and he got mad really quickly so he was always a problem, but... How did he manage to die when aaalllll he had to do was nap outside a door?”

Elsa: “The true question is, why did you bring such a useless beast with you?”

Meili: “The Shadowlion was the only one except Rockpiggie neither in rut nor hibernation. And yet he still died, I can’t believe this.”

Meili groaned as she tossed yet another knife to Elsa. Elsa received it, confirmed the feel of its grip, and remained utterly apathetic to the information from Meili.

It didn’t look like Meili cared at all about the dead Witchbeast either. Poor creature. Regardless, what he had overheard made a wicked smile arise on Garfiel’s face.

Meili: “Eww. Scary-looking precious guy, you’re making a real nasty face.”

Garfiel: “My mug’s nastiness ain’t a match fer the Captain’s. ‘N anyway, ain’t it exactly what I told ya? Yer sneaky plots ain’t nothin’ to the Captain ‘n his happy band of friends.”

Elsa: “While yes, they have exceeded our expectations... Where does that leave them now? The slaughter of one useless Witchbeast does not change that we have the power of numbers on our side. We continue to keep you, their pivotal combat force, pinned here... And nothing especially changes about their predicament.”

Garfiel: “Yeah, yer right.”

Elsa held her two knives loosely while Garfiel crossed his arms. He sniffed again, reflected back on his fight with Elsa until now— and decided.

Garfiel: “It’s ‘bout time for things to get movin’.”

Elsa: “What do you—”

Meili: “Elsa!”

Garfiel’s statement made Elsa raise her brows. But before she could finish her question, Meili cried out.

Garfiel looked to find that the Boulderpork’s eyes had changed color, the giant animal so agitated that it was stomping around on the spot. Meili called out to the creature, getting it slowly back under control. But it seemed like the Witchbeast had, just like Garfiel, noticed the fire.

Meili gave a few pets to the Boulderpork to calm it down, then looking gravely at Elsa.

Meili: “Elsa, the building’s burning. Somebody set it on fire.”

Elsa: “———”

Garfiel: “Hell are you sayin’ with that «somebody»— ‘Twas was obviously the Captain. Makes sense, it’s good that it’s so straightforward. Witchbeasts are beasts. If yer gonna drive ‘em away to make a path, quickest way’s to scare ‘em with fire.”

Meili: “But... Then he came to the mansion to save the people inside, only to burn it down in his escape?”

The decisiveness of Subaru’s actions stunned Meili speechless. Elsa also looked to be having trouble consolidating this information, perhaps because it did not fit with her image of Subaru.

But Garfiel's heart remained horribly calm in contrast to their surprise.

Naturally, Subaru had not told Garfiel beforehand that he was planning on going this far. Garfiel did believe Subaru was someone who took daring actions, but not even he expected that Subaru would burn down the mansion. It made Garfiel feel comfortable as someone who decided to go under Subaru's tutelage.

And most importantly, the fact this situation had been arranged lighted a spark in Garfiel.

Garfiel: "Mansion's burning. Outside's a horde of Witchbeasts."

Elsa: "———?"

Garfiel: "Got people we gotta save, 'n adversaries we gotta stall. Th'only guy who can fight's me, 'n the Captain told me he's leavin' this up to me."

Meili: "What are you suddenly going on about, Mister..."

Garfiel: "It's goddamn obvious."

Elsa tilted her head. Meili looked like she was observing something creepy. Garfiel clicked his fangs, feeling refreshed.

His body was light. Nothing was scaring him anymore.

Garfiel: "With all these conditions in place, what fuckin' man out there ain't gonna get fired up!? I'm damn goin' for it, like «facing the Dragon, Sword Saint Reid laughs and draws blade»."

Elsa: "You recognize that saying is used for someone abnormal and insane?"

Garfiel: "Ya bet I know. And? Yer sayin' there somethin' wrong 'bout my amazin' self 'n you bein' here?"

Garfiel affirmed his own stupidity with a refreshing momentum, leading Elsa to stare in utter astonishment. But for nary a moment. She immediately grinned, licking her lips as her eyes softened beautifully.

Elsa: "You are correct. You are sincerely correct. You have stated it perfectly."

Agreeing with him, Elsa pointed the knives she wielded at Garfiel. She crossed her blades, her long, black hair dancing as she tilted her head.

Elsa: “But would you mind if we had a change in attitude? I doubt that you are suddenly going to grow any stronger, and I also suspect that you have recognized this after clashing with my constitution numerous times. A bout may leave me as the more wounded party, but the confrontation will still remain unproductive.”

Garfiel: “Yer right.”

About ten minutes had passed since Garfiel and Elsa started fighting.

Steel had already met steel over one-hundred times, each competing viciously with the other. Garfiel held a slight advantage in terms of combat ability. He narrowly surpassed Elsa in brute strength, in speed, and in technique, never once conceding predominance.

But Elsa could heal her wounds in mere seconds, happily accepting injury without feeling pained in the slightest, never once hesitating in either offense or defense.

And on the topic of wounds, it was worth mentioning that Garfiel was also wounded. He also needed time to heal himself, while Elsa did not.

He was inferior to Elsa in terms of stamina. Should the fight turn into an endless cycle of bouts, then her blades would soon catch Garfiel. However—

Garfiel: “Five... No, maybe six? That’s how many times my amazin’ self did you in.”

Elsa: “Yes, you may be correct. And?”

Landing a direct hit with a kick, smashing her into the wall with his shield, grabbing her by the leg and slamming her head-first to the floor— Garfiel had already landed many fatal strikes on Elsa. The injury had healed every time, and he truly had not achieved anything, but—

Garfiel: “I was anticipatin’ four or five times at best.”

Elsa: “———”

Garfiel: “Vampires ain’t immortal. You pile enough killin’ blows on ‘em... ‘n eventually they’re gonna run outta life. That’s what I’m gonna be doin’ to you before this mansion’s all burned down.”

Garfiel took his stance, legs apart, as he laughed ferociously with his fangs on full display.

Elsa heard him in silence, the smile vanishing from her face. She fiddled with the end of her braid before giving a quiet sigh.

Elsa: “Meili— Give it to me, and you pursue the others.”

Meili: “Elsa... Are you serious?”

Elsa: “When you’re given a reason to do it, failing to do so is discourteous to the opponent. My only regret is that I may not be able to extract your guts cleanly.”

Replied Elsa with her eyes closed in meditation. Meili did not question further.

She dropped the knife holder she had been championing to the ground, and drew a different holder— One containing merely two knives, and threw it towards Elsa.

Garfiel: “Hmm?”

Garfiel hummed cheerfully as he watched Elsa draw the knives from their holder. These two blades radiated a pressure so intense that none of the others she had used so far could compare.

The knife in Elsa’s left hand was completely black from handle to blade. It looked identical to the kukri she had been using at a glance, but this one’s blade was curved with countless, bestial fangs down its edge, specialized more for goring for slicing.

The knife in her other hand was the exact opposite, pure white with a thick body. It also looked like a kukri, but its thickness made it seem like it could snap bones with a single strike, and pairing it with the black blade made its ruthless image multiply greatly.

Garfiel: “Yer tellin’ me that’s yer ace?”

Elsa: “These are the ones I use when I’m focusing on killing the opponent, rather than seeing their guts. If you exclude Mother, you are the third person I’ve ever used them on.”

Garfiel: “That’s one hell of an opinion I ain’t glad for, ‘n one hell of a family I ain’t jealous ‘bout, oy.”

Garfiel scrunched up his face at the unpleasant confession.

Meili gave orders to her Witchbeast as she nimbly moved herself. The dimwitted beast stomped the ground, charging through walls as it headed towards the main wing in pursuit of Subaru’s group— however.

Garfiel: “Well, thanks for showin’ me yer ace. You’d cry foul if I didn’t show you mine, yeh?”

With that, Garfiel stomped the ground. Immediately, a pulse rushed out of Garfiel’s sole and through the ground, speeding down the hallway, passing beneath Elsa before reaching the Witchbeast— and exploding.

Pork: “———!?”

Meili: “Rockpiggie!?”

The earth caved in beneath the beast, which lost its balance and crashed into the wall as it fell. The impact rocked the mansion, and Meili was unable to stay atop the Witchbeast, instead coming to land in the hallway. She stroked the fallen Boulderpork’s rump as she looked at the floor, seeing the unnatural depression, and glanced behind her.

Meili: “Don’t tell me, you did this?”

By utilizing his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits, Garfiel could conjure depressions and protuberances in any surface within visible range that could be judged as being ground. Of course, it had a few differences in effectiveness depending on how far away the target was or how large a scale he was aiming for, but it was more than enough for him to bluff with.

Garfiel had learned from Subaru to laugh with a complete lack of shame, when in hold of something others could not be allowed to find out.

Garfiel: “It is what it is. Yer safe to think that not lettin’ yer escape’s an expression of my will. Long as my feet are touchin’ the ground, y’ain’t escapin’ from anywhere my amazin’ eyes can see.”

Elsa: “Meili. You can put minimal forces upstairs. Call the others, and awaken that beast.”

Meili: "...Mama will be mad."

Elsa: "What will truly earn us a scolding is failing to remove the threat. And, I doubt we'll have the leeway to worry about what will come afterwards."

Garfiel: "So ya do get it."

Meili's expression lost its calm as she nodded, put her fingers to her mouth, and whistled.

Garfiel silently watched on as the thin sound echoed far, all throughout the mansion. If those two were speaking the truth, then Witchbeasts should be approaching this place before long.

This situation was only blazing hotter and hotter.

Elsa: "I'll pluck off your limbs and shoulder you home once you're lighter. I doubt all this will be worth it if I'm unable to enjoy myself to my heart's desire."

Garfiel: "Where's th'option to just quit it with that guts thing?"

Elsa: "I'd rather quit breathing."

Garfiel clicked his neck at the statement, before stooping forward in preparation to receive the enemy's strike.

Elsa swayed loosely and nimbly positioned her white knife behind her, putting strength into her arms.

Elsa: "—I assure you that I, more than anyone else, can love you to your flesh and bones."

A horrific, debauched smile. The shriek of blade rubbing against blade. And—

Garfiel: "—Gaaaaah!?"

The white knife sticking diagonally from Garfiel's left shoulder had broken his bones apart.

—The battle between the Bowel Hunter and the Shield of Sanctuary, had entered its final phase.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

His beaten shoulders, his hips, his head all hurt. He was battered all over after falling many times, always stifling his pained moans from the impact dead.

He ran, ran, ran, out of breath, knees shaking, eyes fogged, ran. It hurt to breathe. He kept his head low, so he would not inhale the smoke. The flames had already engulfed the majority of the building, through which he sprinted, he searching for a yet-untouched door.

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Discovering an unopened door, Subaru dashed madly towards the doorknob and wrenched the thing open. Before him an utterly mundane guestroom was revealed, which would shortly drown in a sea of flame. Leaving sentimentality aside, Subaru left the door open as he ran for another room. He tried the adjacent room, and the one adjacent to that one, and the one adjacent to that one, opening every door he gazed upon—

Subaru: “—There!”

Freeing him from the scent of soot and char, the stench of aged paper streamed out of the room. Subaru sniffed the familiar, musty smell as he stomped across the boundaries of the room. He raised his head, and addressed the person occupying it.

Subaru: “Hey! Enough of this, stop being angry and listen to—”

Beatrice: “Get out, I suppose!”

An invisible shockwave went through Subaru, threatening to blast him away. But Subaru managed to hook his fingers on the carpet, defending himself from the force.

Amidst a pressure so intense it could drag him backwards, Subaru’s cheeks twisted into a smile.

Subaru: “Hah! Don’t underestimate me too much. You think I’d put up with getting thrown out of here so quickly, over and over, by the same meth—”

Beatrice: “I won’t say it again, in fact!”

Subaru: “Blargh!?”

A thick book rode the wind to smack against Subaru's forehead, making him dizzy and sending him tumbling, flying backwards, ejecting him from the room.

He was shot down the corridor and crashed into a wall. He shook his head as the door closed itself in front of him, and he hurriedly leapt at it— It was too late already. This room was no longer connected to the Forbidden Library.

Subaru: "Asshole...! Who're you taking after, goddamn loli...!"

After violently kicking the door open, Subaru broke into a run, in pursuit of another door.

The fact the room had not sent him to the second floor of the eastern wing, somewhere in the vicinity of Garfiel's fight with Elsa, was probably because of Beatrice's kindness.

Subaru: "Then at least listen to me, stupid!!"

Beatrice had to be thinking the exact same thing from within the Library.

Keenly feeling that truth, and having been rejected times upon times, Subaru sprinted through the mansion in search of the door to the Forbidden Library.

With the fight in the western wing in its final phase, and the fire from the main wing blazing through the whole building— It was only a question of time until Roswaal mansion burned to the ground.

Arc 4 Chapter 128 - I Love You to Your Blood and Guts

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 5 “I Love You Down to Your Blood and Guts” (latter half)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 195

He drove his fangs into the green tail slipping before him, and mindlessly tore it apart.

Purple fluids splattered everywhere and vivid blood showered his face, but he did not care. His left eye had already been bathed in venomous fluid and blocked shut for ages.

He roared to obfuscate the burning pain before slamming his arm into the two-headed snake, killing it. He kicked its corpse, keeping everything in front of him in check as he retreated, and that was when the chill raced up his spine—he instantly recoiled.

And the grisly blade screamed past, grazing his chin.

The Witchbeast in the blade’s path became prey to the fanglike knife. Flesh was shredded, blood splattered in sheets, a scramble of organs forming a curtain before him—which he charged through, aiming for the woman who had perpetrated that tragedy, before ramming his arms into her torso.

Elsa: “———!”

His right shield at her chest, his left shield at her flank, her flesh squelching and bones cracking at each point.

At his ears, before his eyes, from all directions came the cacophonous cries of beasts, their shrieks, his roars, crashing conflict, the pounding of metal on metal, too many noises mashed together for him to properly register the world.

He did not care. This stuff in front of him, in his vision limited to his right eye, that was real.

Her voluptuous breasts sunk in, the force of the gut-wrenching blow making her vomit blood. Even with her scarlet lips turning a deeper shade of red, and faced with pain that was enough to threaten her life, her expression remained raptured.

Maybe it was not her combat strength. Nor was it her stamina. But that mentality of hers was perhaps the real nuisance.

Elsa: “—Haa!”

Garfiel: “Sha!!”

Her short exhale. His responding roar.

She swung her left arm from behind to front, shrill noise echoing out from behind him. The slash reflected off the wall, rebounded off the ceiling, hit the floor as it flew for the back of his head.

Garfiel: “———”

He directed his attention behind him, extinguishing the idea of evading it from his mind.

The woman before him drew her right arm back firmly, preparing to shoot her serrated black knife into him. If it was intended to catch him between the two knives, then this blow would likely slice open his head, or maybe his throat.

He tilted aside, forcing himself out of the blade’s path as it rushed to stab the back of his head. A dull sound was heard, originating from the vicinity of his left shoulder blade. Feeling the tip of the rebounding blade bite into a gap between his bones, he clicked his tongue— when the knife sliced into his joints, rendering his right arm motionless for the time being.

Elsa: “Huaaah!”

Garfiel: “Shah!”

So violent as to mute all sound, she loosed the readied blade. This unremitting attack was less of a terrifying sharp slash, instead more of a pointy bludgeon.

The strike would blast his head off should it hit, mutilating it completely. Garfiel immediately raised his left arm to intercept the strike, but with his poor posture, he could not avoid all the damage to his right shoulder.

Animal teeth shrieked against metal for only a microsecond, before Garfiel's arm was easily forced away.

With only a meagre drop in its speed, the black blade resumed its charge towards Garfiel's head. More than enough strength to cleave apart his skull charged in, a second from hitting.

Hitting—

Elsa: “———!?”

—What Garfiel had kicked up, forcing it into the path between his head and the knife, the Witchbeast's corpse.

An uncomfortable feeling like hard-skinned vegetable against his cheek, and blistering venom that burned all skin it touched. Risking being bathed in both these things, he reaped the benefit of avoiding fatal damage.

The knife sliced into the Witchbeast's corpse, the battering force of the blow proceeding through the cadaver to strike Garfiel across the face.

The impact pummeled him, sending him rotating left to right, spinning in circles— and with two resolute steps into the ground, he soared backwards.

His Divine Protection of Earth Spirits activated, obeying his will to make the ground he had stepped on explode. The detonation had sent him soaring further backwards, the woman now to his back as he proceeded to zoom straight for her— With the woman's white blade still sticking out of his shoulder.

The instant the blade touched her, the woman flinched. Though she knew that the side contacting her was the pommel, it had still made her falter from making any instantaneous decisions.

With his right shoulder still rubbing against the woman, Garfiel spread his stance, dropping his center of gravity.

The instant this made the woman decide to step backwards and distance herself, Garfiel's arm shot up, grabbing her face in a vice-grip.

Garfiel: "—Partial Transformation!"

Immediately following his scream, a change occurred in the arm clutching her face. It swelled explosively—growing a coat of golden fur in an instant, transforming into the arm of a beast, as thick as a log.

And naturally, its end was a beast's paw, with saber-like claws,

Elsa: "Kyaaaaah!"

The thick claws gouged into the woman's face, splaying blood everywhere and making her recoil. His five fingers inflicted the same pain and injury as knives as they carved into her head. Even she had to feel obligated put her hands to her face, backing up, shrieking while looking to the ceiling.

Garfiel: "Hrm!!"

He plunged a kick into a torso, shunting her back. The force battering her chest carried more than enough strength to further destroy her shattered bones and ruptured innards, churning them into a greater mess.

The fallen woman dropped her weapon, spitting up pure scarlet as she gives a faltering laugh. It was horrible to listen to, and he was more than ready to swoop in and make it stop, but,

Garfiel: "Tch! Just one after another!"

Just as Garfiel moved to pursue her, Witchbeasts flooded the gap in his assault.

Blackwinged Mice, Banassi bloated in proportion to their anger, Spotted Rex assembled here from throughout the mansion, and a restored giant—the Boulderpork, all rushed in.

His claws ripped apart the swarm of rats, one stomp of his foot eliminated the swollen Banassi, his kicks snapped the necks of the Rex snapping at him, all as Garfiel faced the charging Boulderpork head-on.

Meili: "Get squished!"

Garfiel: “Ya think I’m gonna be takin’ that, y’dumbass!”

A mass, weighting at several tons, was charging with explosive force.

Rather than a blow from an animal, this cannonball was equivalent to a building dropping on him.

Not even Garfiel was able to take a direct blow from it and get out safely. He would be unable to offer even a second of resistance; he would be blasted away and crushed flat.

However,

Garfiel: “That’s what makes it fun—!”

Stomping with both his legs, Garfiel unleashed his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits to its utmost limit. He felt the blessing of the earth pulsing up from underfoot, rippling through his flesh.

A glint of war lighted Garfiel’s golden eye, fangs bared as he smiled wickedly, detonating the blood lying dormant inside him.

Garfiel: “—OOOOOOH!!”

This strangled bellow was not addressed to the outside, but was a call to his own insides.

Flowing through his body, difficult to accept as it is, laid something he had definitely not acquired by choice. His bloodline. He called to his usually-hidden pedigree, feeling goosebumps as his very soul trembled.

Just like his left arm, the one that had tore the woman’s face apart, Garfiel’s right arm swelled explosively. Starting at his arms, his shoulders, his torso, his neck, his head all crunched as his skeleton changed shape, his face morphing from that of a human to that of a ferocious feline— a massive tiger.

Following the enlargement of his torso, his hips, his legs, his clothing all failed to endure the pressure, bursting apart. Scraps of cloth hunt off his frame, the two shields on his arms barely managing to stay equipped as small bucklers— A beast that, by physique alone, was on the level of the oncoming Boulderpork, had appeared.

Garfiel: “———!!”

The floor creaked, caving in beneath him.

Even the solidly-constructed mansion could not endure the confrontation of these two absolutely massive beasts. So big that the hallway was unable to contain him, Garfiel shattered the walls, ornaments crashing to the ground as his back scraped across the ceiling.

Meili: “—Rockpiggie!!”

The girl atop the Witchbeast shrieked, in response to Garfiel’s transformation.

She was probably screaming the name of the Witchbeast. Answering to its master’s call, the Boulderpork let out a roar strong enough to disintegrate boulders and opened its maw wide, with all its teeth flat enough for a millstone, racing for Garfiel.

The Witchbeast reared up on its back legs, raising its forelegs to stomp Garfiel flat.

The massive tiger, its golden eyes flaring, had its own legs propel it into the opening just before the behemoth’s crushing blow connected. And stabbed its claws into that thick, stony hide.

Blades screeched against bedrock, as the tiger’s claws were peeled out of their sockets. Knives failed to puncture the thick hide, and the swine’s plummeting forelegs proceeded to slam straight into the tiger. The stomp pressed down on the tiger, causing crushing pressure on its shoulders. The force pinned Garfiel’s upper body to the ground, the merciless impact prompting the tiger to scream.

Meili: “Don’t stop, Rockpiggie!!”

Bones shatter and flesh was crushed, but the noises did not deter the Witchbeast’s master. Hearing her wailing voice, the Swine roared and raised its forelegs, ready to stomp once again and crush the tiger’s head once and for all. However—

Garfiel: “———!”

If his claws would not work, the tiger had only one weapon left.

Twisting its neck, its shoulders crushed, the tiger used its spine to upright itself. The Boulderpork’s forelegs were raised, and its belly exposed— the tiger bared its fangs.

Not even a Witchbeast with skin as solid as rock could have its entire body at the exact same toughness. Compared to its legs or back, its vital regions were, logically, less heavily shielded. And so, the tiger drove its sharp fangs into the Boulderpork's bare stomach.

Meili: "Rockpiggie!?"

Garfiel: "—GRRRRRRRRRRRRRR!!"

The tiger's jaws, so immense they could swallow a man whole, closed around almost half of the Swine's extensive belly.

For a moment, the Boulderpork's hide did pose some resistance to the piercing fangs. But like the point of a knife stabbing into a fruit, the sharp fangs effortlessly tore through the thin skin after only a second.

The Boulderpork's shriek arrived as the tiger kicked the floor, using the momentum to roll sideways. With his fangs still sunken into his prey, attempting to shred the creature apart— that was the hunting behavior of the aquatic sub-type of dragon, named water dragons, that dwelled in rivers.

Were Natsuki Subaru present to witness it, he would have deemed it as being something close to the death roll of an alligator, a creature that did not exist in this world.

His hindlegs hit the floor, gaining rotational and forward force as he mangled the Boulderpork's torso. Inside the thick hide, a vast store of blood and guts was found, which spilled out from the bite wounds relentlessly, and onto the floor of the mansion's hallway.

Pork: "———Ooooooooooooo..."

Eyes wide, their whites exposed, the Boulderpork collapsed, alongside its weak death wail.

The tiger spat out chunks of the Boulderpork's flesh before slamming its rear leg into the massive creature, toppling it onto its side. The girl, having dismounted the Witchbeast at the moment it had crashed, was utterly lost for words as she watched her Witchbeast's gruesome death.

Meili: "No, way... I don't believe it..."

Stepping back, the girl glanced behind her to see what forces she had left.

Many Witchbeasts had heeded her call, and were steadily assembling. But they amounted to merely a mob of small- and medium-sized creatures, none of them large like the Boulderpork.

Meili: “Ugh! What is this!? Elsa! Elsa! Dooo somethinnngg!”

Elsa: “...That is a rather, unsparing demand.”

Realizing that she was at a disadvantage, the girl threw senseless insults as she called her partner’s name. In response to that voice, a shadowy woman, crawling out of the darkness, spoke.

Her mangled face had regenerated. She fiddled tirelessly with her bloodied braid.

Elsa: “Gouging a woman’s face open without hesitation, you are indeed marvelous, you.”

Garfiel: “—Ooh! Ooh! Ooooh!”

The woman laughed with a blood-soaked grimace. The tiger, shoulders broken, growled in agitation. Its massive form quaked, then butting its massive head against the fallen swine, and puked.

The tiger growled in pain as its great body begun losing mass, and bit-by-bit its enlarged form started to return to human shape. After a few seconds, there now stood a half-naked boy, batting away shredded bits of golden fur.

Garfiel: “Ah... Fuck, I’m back. Head hurts...”

Elsa: “I see... So you are half-beast. I did think your eyes looked rather nasty for a human.”

Garfiel: “If we’re gonna be followin’ yer logic, that means our Captain ain’t human either.”

Garfiel shook his head, getting a grip on the state of his own human body.

Over the course of returning to human form, his broken shoulders had mended to the point they could both move. However, they still flared with pain every time Garfiel moved them, turning his thoughts into a blaze of soldering white.

He could not stay in top performance for much longer.

But the same went for his opponent.

Garfiel: “Went ‘n busted open yer Witchbeast’s guts for ya. Yer allowed to happily swim ‘n that ocean of blood there, I ain’t gonna mind.”

Elsa: “I’ll have to refrain. Animal guts are no substitute unless I am extraordinarily starving. The beauty of guts is that they are disemboweled from people.”

Garfiel: “Yer aesthetics make no sense to me.”

Garfiel stuck his pinky into his ear, picking it rigorously while sighing in astonishment. Elsa had an overwhelmingly disadvantage, but her attitude did not budge.

—Garfiel had estimated that it would take five more tries until Elsa’s immortality ended, at most.

And Garfiel had already fatally injured her four more times. Five if the mauling of her face were included. It should be about time for her to start hitting her regeneration’s limitations. That would mean that Elsa’s stock of lives had already been exhausted. Garfiel was injured as well, but that was not going to make him slack in this fight.

If she had no hope of support possibly coming from Meili’s beasts, the situation was that they effectively had their blades at the other’s throat— So why was she so composed?

Elsa: “It’s not that there’s any special reason for it. You don’t have to be so scared.”

Seeing Garfiel’s brows furrow in puzzlement, Elsa spoke as if comforting a child. Garfiel scowled his face in response, growling like an animal.

To obfuscate the fact that she had clearly seen the slight confusion in his heart.

Garfiel: “Bunch’a crap. Stop talkin’ like ya know anythin’.”

Elsa: “But it’s clear to see. Disemboweling someone means facing someone before they are disemboweled. Your face is a familiar one to me.”

Garfiel: “———”

Elsa: “It’s the face of being unable to comprehend someone who is a deviant.”

Garfiel fell speechless, his throat feeling to clench. Elsa put her hand to her mouth and laughed, smiling slightly as she tilted her head.

Elsa: “Don’t worry, it’s fine. I’m not wishing to be understood by anybody. My happiness is something I acquire by trampling the life of another. To live is to bring about death.”

Garfiel: “...I’m gettin’ that if I take this seriously, I’m gonna go nuts.”

Garfiel raised his arms, battering his shields together as he rejected any attempt at understanding her. He did not have the leeway to be thinking about her circumstances. And her last statement had just eliminated any reason he possessed to pay attention out of whimsy.

Garfiel: “But I’ll ask ya this. If ya pledge y’ain’t ever gonna do nothin’ bad again ‘n run away, it’s not impossible that I let you go.”

Elsa: “You truly are a precious boy.”

She was shown her final mercy, then dispelled it with a smile— That was the signal, to charge.

Blasting off, Garfiel soared ahead. Elsa countered him by swinging her white blade up to hit the ceiling, hit the floor, revolving and rebounding as it closed in on Garfiel.

Elsa’s wide white blade was composed of multiple knives strung together. The blade’s edge alternated from one side to the other, the knife rippling like the bones of a snake, as it bounced through the hallway.

Up? Down? The knife easily outsped the eye, soaring about as a white light. Garfiel braced his shields over his head, abandoning the option to evade. The knife plunged down into his upper left arm, imparting him with the pain of broken bones as he continued his advance.

Elsa: “The land I was born in was Gusteko of the north, a very, very cold country.”

Split-second combat was unfolding in this battleground, but for some reason her song-like voice snuck into Garfiel’s ears.

It was not even audible. His consciousness was blazing, focused in the instantaneous trade of deadly attacks. There was no opening for this voice to butt in.

That was how it should be, but the woman's voice slipped smoothly into Garfiel's consciousness.

Elsa: "It is a country with a wide gap between the rich and the poor, and it was not uncommon at all for lower-class children to be abandoned. I was one of those children, with no parents I ever knew, drinking dirty water to survive."

Garfiel: "—Grahhhh!!"

Elsa: "I spent my days stealing objects, threatening people, doing things of that ilk, with the people around me constantly changing. Why am I alive? What is happiness? Those were not questions I had any time to consider back then."

His fist plunged forward, inches from belting Elsa's face.

But she leaned aside to dodge the exaggerated attack, slicing her black blade to cut shallowly through Garfiel's torso.

The bestial fangs plundered his flesh. Elsa licked her lips as the bright blood bathed her.

Elsa: "That day was a particularly cold day."

Garfiel: "Shut up! I ain't goddamn listenin'!!"

Elsa: "The wind blowing from the lofty mountains was so strong, so cold, that it froze the town that day. My breath could freeze in that chill, when the shopkeeper I stole from caught me."

With a passionate sigh, Elsa spoke on, enraptured. Her blades of death increased in momentum, slicing cut after cut into Garfiel as he failed to keep up.

Elsa: "No one would complain if he killed me, but upon noticing I was a girl... I can still remember his face as he laughed vulgarly, moving to strip my clothes."

Garfiel: "Gah, ah..."

Elsa: "The bitter wind howled as he stripped my jacket, snatched my underwear... And when I contemplated that I would rather freeze and die before he could do anything to me, I happened to pick up a shard of glass."

Her leg swept up to try and belt him in the side of the head, but Garfiel countered it with a headbutt. The impact reverberated through his brain and caused him to recoil, but it surely had shattered Elsa's foot too. Elsa drew her leg back, retreating. But her expression remained one of ecstasy.

Elsa: "I wasn't thinking about anything. I just had that shard of glass, then when he leaned forward, I pressed it into his stomach, moved it, and sliced him open."

Garfiel: "——"

Elsa: "I felt nothing for his screams, or the fact that I had taken a life. But amidst that icy gale, I did think."

Garfiel's breathing froze. Elsa smiled an enchanting smile.

Elsa: "How warm are blood and guts."

Elsa's blade swung up, threatening to split apart Garfiel's skull. He slid to the side, kicked off the wall to reposition himself behind Elsa, and slammed a kick into her back— but she instantly twisted around and delivered a blow to his shin with her pommel, diverting the kick.

His leg crashed into the wall, which crumbled alongside plumes of dust. Garfiel clicked his tongue as he jumped back and away.

Elsa: "If there is happiness in the world, then it is in the warmth and beauty of forgetting the cold. From birth I had nothing, and now I had this, the first definite happiness I had ever found— You cannot understand, can you?"

Garfiel: "Ain't wantin' to, either."

Elsa: "That's fine. I don't want sympathy."

Garfiel: "Then why'd ya tell me such a damn story, it's gross."

Elsa: "Why, I wonder?"

Garfiel's eyes housed hostility as Elsa tilted her head, mystified. And she narrowed her eyes obscenely, licked her lips lasciviously—

Elsa: “Because I find you truly darling.”

Garfiel: “...Sorry, but I already got a girl I like. Ain’t got time to be datin’ no crazy fuckin’ bitch.”

Elsa: “So rude. But it’s fine. I’m only concerned about your innards.”

It felt like a conversation was happening, but fundamentally, that was not the case. Over all his exchanges with her until this point, Garfiel had finally come to understand this.

He had no interest nor sympathy nor anything else for Elsa’s life story. That was her foundation, she had those experiences, and she had become this monster. That was all. Garfiel’s shields already knew who should be protected.

Garfiel: “—I will kill you, Elsa Granhiert.”

Elsa: “Once I kill you, I will adore you, Garfiel Tinsel.”

Each calling the name of the other, the half-beast and the murderer waged violence.

The beaming light of the white knife sliced through the corridor’s darkness, and the black knife pressed forward would cleave Garfiel in twain.

A knife ricocheted everywhere in the corner of his vision. He could not defend against the attack, nor did he have the option of evading it. But if he failed to take the blow without it dampening his charge, he would merely be repeating the same foolish mistake.

Garfiel: “———”

The knife sliced through sound, dancing throughout the hallway. If he could not perceive the blade’s aim, he could only aim for the point it had been thrown from.

Garfiel thrust out his left arm, the fasteners on his shield loosened— and lets the thing fly.

He had loosened the bindings back when he had battered the shields together. Now he was tossing it, Elsa’s eyes shot wide open as it smashed directly into her left hand— a crunch echoed, and her broken fingers dropped her white knife.

Having lost the hand handling it, the knife stabbed into the ceiling, remaining still.

A deep, dark smile, and a surging roar. A deathly blade murdered the very air as it was swung down, Garfiel charging straight into it, and struck him.

He placed his right arm upon his head to receive the direct hit from that black blade. The shockwave pierced through his shield, rocking his skull vigorously. His eyes spun, and he came close to stumbling forward, but just managed to stomp firm and catch himself.

He had endured it— When the woman's knee shots up and smashed Garfiel's nose.

Elsa: "You must not be careless and think you're safe."

She said with a laugh, sweeping her leg up at Garfiel as he recoiled.

Her leg was lifted high, and from her shoe arrived the glint of a blade in the heel, its point aimed to stab Garfiel through the neck—

Garfiel: "Yer the one who better not be overlookin' my amazin' weapon, bitch."

His open jaws swallowed her heel and the blade whole, gnashing at her slender foot. With her bones and the knife chewed up to the heel, Elsa's eyes shot open wide.

Elsa: "Goodness."

Yelping in surprise, Elsa staggered away, losing her balance, and tumbled to sit on the spot. Her right leg was mangled from the ankle down, inoperable, and the force of her own attacks had broken her arms as well. With her left leg as her only support, Elsa gazed at Garfiel—

Elsa: "—Ahh."

Taking in a breath, Elsa blushed like a girl in love.

Her exhale carried enough heat to be chromatic. Her wet eyes were filled with passion so hot it would not grow cold.

—Before Elsa, Garfiel shouldered the immense Boulderpork, and threw it.

Although aware that she would be crushed beneath its incredible mass, it was not until the silhouette swallowed her that Elsa's gaze strayed from Garfiel.

Her breathing ragged, gazing at the grimacing blond boy with love——

Elsa: "What a thrill."

The overwhelming weight crushed the murderer, the vampire, the Bowel Hunter, until nothing remained untouched.

Her flesh squelched. Fresh blood mingled with fluids from the Witchbeast. Scenting the stench of death, Garfiel howled.

Roaring, bellowing, booming like thunder through the burning mansion.

——The battle between the Shield of Sanctuary, Garfiel Tinsel, and the Bowel Hunter, Elsa Granhiert, had concluded.

Illustration from Volume 15, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 129 - —Choose Me

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 1 “The Final Day of Roswaal Manor”, Part 1, and Volume 15, Chapter 7 “—Pick Me”

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 205

—Whenever she thought back on that instant, the terror assaulted her.

How her clinging fingers had been cast aside, and her name been affectionately spoken.

The love in their goodbye. The determination and tears in their smiling eyes. Both carried far more than enough weight to silence her.

What should she have said? She still did not know.

What had she been thinking? She could no longer remember. What ought she have done? She still failed to see any answer.

—And so Beatrice remained, even now, cowering motionless in the Forbidden Library.

Beatrice: “...Ryuzu.”

The sound out her lips was a fragment from a memory so ancient, even just the word sounded wistful. When she spoke that name, emotions bursted, and the frozen time inside Beatrice, the four-hundred year void, instantly came surging to the surface.

Beatrice had secluded herself inside the Forbidden Library, waiting for That Person’s eventual arrival, only after Ryuzu Meyer had been lost, as her existence became impetus for the establishment of Sanctuary, the Warlock, Hector, repelled.

Beatrice had lost someone so close to her that they could safely be called her only companion. Anyone could see how haggard Beatrice had been, having lost that friend due to her own inability. And everyone knew that only time would mend her injured heart.

So her Mother's conclusion was simple.

Echidna: "I suspect that Warlock will return to destroy me someday. I plan to set up means to oppose him before that happens... but even that might be fallible."

Beatrice: "Yes, Mother."

Echidna: "If we engage in confrontation again, it will develop into truly heated, absolute combat. Considering the enemy's strength, my chances of surviving are about fifty-fifty... or maybe a little lower? Since Roswaal has unfortunately lost his gate, and so cannot assist in battle."

Echidna lowered her gaze, but Beatrice's unaffected demeanor remained stable.

It was not as if she was suppressing anything. Ever since that day, her emotions had almost entirely stopped showing on her face. Who could suppose the effect that the overwhelming loss, the emotional aftershock, had had on her?

It could have been that her emotions had frozen over exactly because her heart knew that effect.

Echidna looked at Beatrice and her unchanged expression, running her finger through her white hair.

Echidna: "I am already among the Witches least suited to combat. Once I know I cannot enlisting aid from Roswaal, genius in sorcery, I must expend all possible means to finally begin seeing hopes of victory."

Beatrice: "...What should Betty do, I suppose?"

Everyone knew that Roswaal had been half-killed in the battle to establish Sanctuary's functions. His gate had been utterly decimated, making him ineligible as a magician.

The sight of her comrade lying in bed, still moribund in this very moment, rose in Beatrice's mind. Sounding somewhat desperate, she assaulted Echidna with questions.

Beatrice: “Should I do the same as Roswaal, and buy time until your algorithms are complete? Or should I sacrifice myself, as I am a conglomerate of powerful Od, and become the nucleus for the algorithm, I suppose? I will not regret it for an instant because it is for Mother’s sake, in fact. Please, use me however you’d like, I suppose.”

Beatrice grasped her skirt and displayed a curtsy, displaying the greatest of trust to her mother.

Honestly, the emotion was far too brittle and fleeting to be called trust. But Beatrice was unable to comprehend her own present mental state, and even supposing that she understood herself, she would have likely reached the same solution.

Reckless lust for vengeance, and indignation at her powerlessness— The question of whether she recognized these two feelings of hers constituted the only single difference.

Echidna: “—I see. If you say that, even I can ask for favors without any reproach. You truly are a good girl, Beatrice.”

Beatrice: “...Yes. Betty’s your daughter, in fact.”

Hearing such words from Echidna would usually overjoy Beatrice.

Perhaps Echidna was aware of that, for she was careful to give Beatrice verbal praise only infrequently. But now those magic words sunk into Beatrice’s empty chest with a hideously hollow thunk.

Perhaps nothing would rekindle the fire in her heart.

That was what Beatrice thought, and so she failed to immediately react to Echidna’s next words.

Echidna: “Beatrice. I’m entrusting you to oversee my Library of knowledge. Until the time that must come does come, you’ll protect the knowledge as the Library’s keeper— So that nobody can steal it.”

Beatrice: “...Wha—”

Echidna: “Fortunately, you have unparalleled affinity for Yin magic. You will use Door Crossing to link a familiar location to an isolated space... Yes, we’ll call it the Forbidden Library. There, I want you to guard over the extent of my knowledge, compiled into books.”

Beatrice's eyes shot open in shocked turmoil as Echidna continued speaking, leaving her behind. Beatrice had expected Echidna to order her to accompany her in this battle of life and death. Having been cast into an utterly unanticipated role, Beatrice could only glance about in bewilderment.

Even though witnessing her daughter's discomposure, Echidna proceeded, without missing a beat.

Echidna: "It would be best to link the Forbidden Library to Roswaal's mansion. I will dismantle my laboratory, and prepare for the final battle. I am sorry, but I cannot expend any people to carry the books. I would like you to ask Roswaal about preparing the bookcases and securing labor."

Beatrice: "W—wait..."

Echidna: "It will not last forever. Both you and I are already liberated from the fetters of predestined lifespan. The cycling of the seasons is not especially meaningful for us. But even saying that, once you consider that I may be lost, it's irresponsible if it lacks a deadline. Which means..."

Beatrice: "Please wait, I suppose!"

After a deep breath, she shouted.

Beatrice could not comprehend what her mother was saying.

No. Her instincts were screaming at her, telling her not to comprehend it. Echidna's thoughts were vast, and always reached beyond what the ordinary man could possibly understand with ease. Meaning that Echidna's statements represented the optimum, and Beatrice had never thought to interrupt her before.

But now was not like that. Nothing like that.

If Beatrice let Echidna speak her whole screed, she would surely regret it.

If Echidna stated the whole of her opinion, what she would present was the absolute optimum solution with no purchase for debate. The world would follow a course affirming Echidna's stance, and Beatrice would be unable to defy it.

To defend against that, Beatrice must interrupt before Echidna could finish.

Beatrice: “Mother... What are you saying, in fact? I... I don’t understand what you mean with this Forbidden Library, I suppose. Betty is! Staying with you!”

Echidna: “Having you with me will not influence the confrontation with the Warlock much, unfortunately. Naturally, it would surely increase my chances, but... Only by a pittance. It would fall under statistical error.”

Beatrice: “B—but if it’s better than me being absent, then Betty will help you, in fact! It’d be—”

Echidna: “You cannot. The risk of us both being destroyed outweighs a tiny, potentially non-existent boost to my prospects of winning. Considering that there is a less than fifty-percent chance that I will survive this battle, I have to endeavor to ensure my knowledge survives to the hereafter.”

And ensuring her knowledge survived to the hereafter meant the management of this Forbidden Library that she was trying to entrust to Beatrice.

In this moment, Beatrice cursed her Door Crossing and her ability to create unique spaces. If she did not possess these powers, her mother would never desire that she take this ro—

Beatrice: “Don’t... tell me... My powers were for this?”

Echidna: “———”

Beatrice: “Mother knew from the beginning that this would happen... Supposing so, then not just this Forbidden Library, wh—what happened in Sanctuary was also...”

Echidna: “Having ways to anticipate things does not necessarily mean those routes must be used. I did have means to both perceive this route and settle matters without travelling it. But I swear on my way of life that I have not utilized that power. That alone I want you to believe.”

Echidna shook her head in response to Beatrice’s strangled question.

Echidna approached Beatrice, who was chewing at her lip, before taking a book from the bookshelf and presenting it to her daughter.

Beatrice: “This, is...?”

Echidna: “An imperfect replica of my Book of Wisdom. The Book of Wisdom’s algorithms are both advanced and complicated, so I did not manage to fully unravel them all... But it should be enough to work as a simple guide for the owner’s future.”

Beatrice accepted the book, tracing her shaking fingers over the cover.

She raised her head to look at Echidna, who stared at Beatrice with the same faraway gaze she always had. As though she was looking somewhere into the distance.

Echidna: “There are two books. One goes to you, and the other has been given to Roswaal. I expect Roswaal will manage what comes next, provided he reads the book. I know it is a one-sided request, but I want you to see it through.”

Beatrice: “-----”

Beatrice looked down at the book, her eyes wavering as she finally realized that it was far too late. “I have to make her speak, I have to make her say it”, were her ideas, but they were not nearly sufficient.

Echidna, her mother, had already decided all her answers. Beatrice could cry, pleading and clinging, but it would not change Echidna’s stance.

Because that was the kind of person the Witch of Greed Echidna was, and the kind of Witch she was.

Echidna: “Let us return to the topic of the deadline. I might not return, but the Library must be opened to someone someday. Once that happens, it shall be clear to you. Someone suitable to inherit my knowledge will surely come for you.”

Beatrice: “Come, for Betty...”

Echidna: “We will dub this person That Person. The deadline shall be set to the moment That Person opens the doors to the Forbidden Library, and announces that your duties are over— This is my final wish.”

—Final wish.

The phrase made Beatrice swallow her breath, and looked up at Echidna’s face as she gazed back at Beatrice.

Her mother's constant, unchanging expression. But Beatrice felt that, in just this single instant, it was mixed with unfamiliar emotion.

Echidna: "Betty— Please, be well."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

After parting with Echidna, Beatrice obeyed her mother's request and went to stay in Roswaal's mansion, using her Yin magic to create the Forbidden Library and stockpile books of her mother's knowledge there.

It was the sea of knowledge that Echidna had spent her life amassing and cataloguing. When holed up in this room of books, it felt like her mother was embracing her.

Leaving aside the question of whether Beatrice always perceived it that way, she did obey Echidna's instructions.

If she neglected to immerse herself in her duties, the grief tormenting her heart would exceed what she could bear. She passed her days in the Library, oblivious to time, with the loss always plaguing her.

??? "Replicating souls... overwriting into vessels..."

Beatrice could not accurately determine just when it had started feeling hollow.

But once enough time passed that she no longer remembered the last time she had held a real conversation, an adult Roswaal began venturing into the Forbidden Library.

Roswaal: "I'll be iiiiiiiiiiiintruding once again today."

The skinny, unshaven young man limped into the room.

He used a cane, walked with a lumbering gait— the battle with the Warlock had destroyed his body, and his gate had lost the majority of its functions. Even attending to daily life was an arduous task for Roswaal now. Even so, after he had recovered some amount of strength, he would strain his inconvenient body and display his debilitated condition as he faced the bookshelves.

He was just skin and bones. His looks, known for their beauty, shone with no brilliance. His sunken yellow eyes alone blazed wet with insane ferocity.

Beatrice: “---Do whatever you want, in fact.”

Although, Beatrice did not wish to let anyone at all enter the Forbidden Library. Until That Person Echidna had mentioned arrived, this place was meant to be Beatrice’s Sanctuary, never to touched by the eyes of anyone.

But Roswaal was an exception. He alone was devoting himself to Echidna’s wishes, just like as Beatrice was, a companion who she had spent more than a little time with.

Roswaal’s wishes alone would permit Beatrice’s heart to open the Library.

It may have been Beatrice’s faint sense of camaraderie that determined the fate of Roswaal L. Mathers, and his family.

Roswaal would venture to the Library, sink into the sea of Echidna’s knowledge, and staked his entire lifetime on a search for something.

Beatrice did not know if his efforts ever wound up bearing fruit.

But the Roswaal L. Mathers who had studied with Beatrice under Echidna, ten years after Echidna and Beatrice had parted, at the time bordering on thirty years of age, lost his life. And his descendant inherited the mansion.

Roswaal: “Myyyyyyyyyy goodness, it is a pleasure to meet you, Beatrice-sama. My predecessor has told me stories about you.”

Beatrice: “...Roswaal’s dead, I suppose?”

Roswaal: “The previous Roswaal has passed away. But do be at ease. I, the current Roswaal L. Mathers, have inherited the debts towards your duties and your mother.”

With that said, the second Roswaal gave Beatrice a smile.

---With one of his eyes yellow, and one of his eyes blue.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Nothing especially noteworthy happened after that.

The Mathers family continued to introduce themselves as Roswaal down the generations.

Though aware that they would do this to remember their respect for Beatrice's deceased mother, Echidna, Beatrice did not allow the Roswaals unlimited entry to the Forbidden Library.

As was natural. The only Roswaal to whom Beatrice could give special treatment was the first one. All the other Roswaals were imposters. She did accommodate them somewhat, given that they were providing the mansion needed to preserve the Forbidden Library, but nothing further.

From then on, Beatrice would only ever open the Library to That Person.

This awaited Person, and the guidepost her mother had given her, would force Beatrice into solitude for a very, very long time.

???: "Your power is magnificent. Please, grant it to me as my Spirit."

---Shut up. Get lost.

???: "You've been isolated here for so long. It's a horrendous fate. No matter who ordered you to do this, it's unforgivable."

---What would you know? About the precious duty my mother desired of me.

???: "Do you not think knowledge ought to be free? Can you imagine how many lives would be saved if the knowledge stored here was spread? You must already recognize it yourself."

---It has nothing to do with "how many". I am only looking to save a handful of people. And there's nobody I can save any more, except one person.

Four-hundred years.

Beatrice had not been seeking them out, had not permitted them in, but even so, many people visited the Forbidden Library. They each flung whatever words they'd fling at Beatrice, the Guardian of the Library, before inevitably demanding that the Library be opened.

Their proposals, propositions, and demands did sometimes sway Beatrice's heart.

She wondered countless times after the doors burst open, noticing the daylight spilling in from outside, whether it would finally be the arrival of That Person.

But, heedless to Beatrice's expectations, not a single one of them knew about That Person, and Beatrice's book mentioned nothing indicating that they were That Person either. So Beatrice cast away their words, their hands, everything they offered her, rejected them, and kept her mother's words close as she passed the time until today.

Over the years, resignation and disappointment had steadily overtaken Beatrice's heart. She wished that she had spoken with the first Roswaal more. Ever since she had lost the only person who shared her memories of Echidna, Beatrice had to face this concept called "eons" all by herself.

She had nobody to rely on. Her only option was stubbornness, and to seclude herself inside an impregnable, isolated barricade.

Over four-hundred years, her cage consequently took shape. Had it been a prison locked from the outside, or from the inside?

---Not even Beatrice could tell any more.

Puck: "Hey there, Betty. It's really been forever. It's me, Puck."

This inconceivable reunion was perhaps the only event that even minutely thawed Beatrice's frozen heart.

Beatrice: "B-Bubby? How come, you're here...?"

Puck: "This mansion's Roswaal went and swindled my daughter. So here I am with her. I was not expecting to find you here. I'm glad we got to see each other."

The name of this cat Spirit, bashfully washing his face with his paw, was Puck. Like Beatrice, he was an Artificial Spirit created by Echidna. He was the only entity who shared Beatrice's birth and circumstances, applicable as being her race.

The time that Beatrice and Puck had spent together four-hundred years ago had been short, but felt long. Puck had been created before Beatrice, and separated from Beatrice's group before the battle with the Warlock had begun, wandering the world in accordance with his purpose.

Beatrice had never thought that they would meet again, and practically considered him dead. She keenly felt how the reunion made her heart surge for the first time in four centuries.

But her joy only lasted an instant---

Puck: "After I left you, I spent about three centuries wandering the world before I finally found Lia. I'm not sure what you are waiting for, but I know your wishes will come true."

Beatrice: "Yes, yes, I suppose. But I envy Bubby, in fact. The role Mother gave Betty has..."

Puck: "Mother? Who was she, again?"

Beatrice: "-----"

Beatrice remembered how Puck had looked, not joking in the least, his head tilted in mystification. When Puck had left, he and Echidna formed several Contracts. Beatrice did not know their detailed terms, but Puck forgetting Echidna was obviously part of them.

Beatrice: "...No, disregard that, in fact. I'm glad I got to see you again, I suppose."

Puck: "Mhm, it's great, Betty."

Puck, having fulfilled his purpose and meaning in life, looked dazzling to Beatrice. But she knew that the topic she wanted to broach would only serve to impede his path.

So she kept quiet, smiling sadly as she wished her brother well with his future.

The unexpected reunion had given Beatrice slight joy, but heaps more agony, as her dead four-hundred years pressed down on her heart.

Comparing herself to Puck, who fulfilled his role, Beatrice was dumbstruck at the overwhelming disparity in their performance. And so she thought.

Beatrice: "...I am no longer able to ever laugh like you, Bubby."

Beatrice decided to get as little involved with Puck's beloved half-elf daughter as possible.

If she didn't, Beatrice would wind up taking out her pent-up resentment on the girl. She would do such wrong to her beloved brother's blameless, precious daughter that the situation would never be fixed.

Calling her heart to a stop and suppressing her emotions was her forte. She had spent four centuries constantly doing it through the sunrise, after the sunset, submerged in the moonlight.

Her specialty. A familiar deed. Lucid resignation. That kind of thing.

That kind of life— Which suddenly met an intruder.

Subaru: "M—make it painless ok."

Beatrice: "It's incredible that you're so persistent in your frivolity, in fact."

It had truly been forever since someone had entered the Forbidden Library without permission. While looking down at the boy, fallen on the floor from the Mana drain, Beatrice sighed and stroked her hair.

Using her space-connecting powers to send the boy into a labyrinth had been an act of simple revenge. Revenge for having to help in healing the boy when he had arrived wounded the previous day. Revenge for having to grant the request of the half-elf girl he saved.

Her plan had been to alleviate some of her sourness about the affair by pestering the boy.

Then he went around and defeated Door Crossing on his first attempt. He must not have noticed how shaken Beatrice had been on the inside.

Beatrice: "Not someone I want to have anything more to do with, I suppose."

Said Beatrice, after expelling him from the Library.

Not even Beatrice could determine how he had reached the Library in one attempt. Perhaps he possessed an affinity for Yin magic, and he had just happened to be on Beatrice's wavelength that day.

But even if he did have Yin affinity, he lacked any affinity as a magician.

He would only be staying for a few days. With that thought, Beatrice managed to ignore the uncomfortable strain in her chest.

Puck: "Betty. Were you mean to him? Come on, don't do that. He helped Lia, so you better give him a real apology."

Puck showed up in the Library the next morning to scold Beatrice for her actions, and now she had to confront the boy she had just decided she would stop having anything to do with.

Subaru: "She shows up, and what the hell does this loli start saying?"

Beatrice: "What is that word, I suppose. I've never heard it before, and it still disgusts me, in fact."

Subaru: "It means «too young to go down their route». Besides, I'm not really into younger girls."

Beatrice: "...Your extensive discourtesy to Betty goes around and becomes pitiable, in fact."

Tit-for-tat.

She did not intend to apologize anyway, but this conversation had completely eliminated any urge.

Beatrice passed breakfast in silence, saw Puck's rather resigned expression, and breathed a sigh of relief. It seemed like he had forgiven her. In exchange, it wound up that the boy would be staying in the mansion for the long-term.

Beatrice's desire to curse the situation seriously intensified, and she decided to excuse herself and return to the Library. The mansion came with complex circumstances and history anyway, and it was presently in a state of emergency, too.

This gutless boy would give up before long. All Beatrice had to do was to endure until that happened.

Subaru: "Hey, Beatrice. Done with work so here I am to hang out."

Completely oblivious to Beatrice's thoughts, the boy came parading into the Library while looking like a nitwit, annoying Beatrice even though she had not asked for any of this, and just kept doing it whenever he found time to spare.

Beatrice could only sit there, stunned at his impudence.

There had been others qualified to enter the Library without Beatrice's permission. But they had all been seeking the Library's knowledge, or seeking the powerful Spirit Beatrice. The second they opened their mouths, requests to liberate the knowledge would spill out. Or requests to Contract with Beatrice. Always.

Subaru: "Beatrice--- Mind if I pull your drills and make them sproioioioing everywhere?"

Beatrice: "Are you trying to die, I suppose?"

Just when it looked like he was about to say something serious, the same crap as usual came out. He had been somewhat desiccated in his first few days after waking up and gaining employment in the mansion, but after that, his overly-familiar attitude was off the charts.

...That was what Beatrice thought, when suddenly.

Subaru: "I'm stuck with no way out. Completely upfront, I'm looking for your help."

---He noticed the first signs of the Witchbeast affair in the forest surrounding the mansion.

With his body bathed in a Witchbeast's curse, discussing de-cursing and potential origins of the curse with Beatrice, she felt that there was something different about him compared to before. And she simultaneously noticed.

The Yin power she perceived from him, and its somewhat crooked manner of peaking.

The Witchbeast affair ended without being any of Beatrice's concern, he apparently resolved his differences with the maid sisters, and was welcomed in as a true member of the mansion.

He then went around being his jolly self, pestering her with an attitude even more over-familiar than before, and there was that one delicious episode among others about his mystery condiment called mayonnaise, all while Beatrice began meditating on an impossible fantasy.

—A boy who showed no great interest in the knowledge, or in Beatrice's power. Could he be the one who Beatrice had been waiting for?

That suspicion was baseless, continuous, and exhausted her. But when she tried to deem it as a legitimate theory, she thwarted herself by opening her blank book of prophecy. Being that the prophetic text said nothing, this boy could not be Beatrice's awaited That Person. And he was lacking in too many ways to be Beatrice's awaited one anyway.

First, his eyes were nasty. His attitude too. He was no man of culture, lacking refinement, and had short legs. He regarded something else as more important than Beatrice, and was not gentle with her.

In fact, she was unable to find any good point about him. Her mind was boggled as to what the half-elf girl and blue-haired maid found so appealing.

There was nothing good about him, so why couldn't he just be uniformly disliked and alone? If he was, then when he showed up in the Library, she wouldn't hesitate to change the way she interacted with him a little.

That was what she had sometimes thought, and yet.

Roswaal: "Beatrice. I'm thinking to invite Emilia-sama and Subaru-kun to Sanctuary."

That was what Roswaal, after returning from the Capital, told Beatrice.

A variety of questions whizzed through Beatrice's mind, her eyes wide. But Roswaal silenced Beatrice's queries with a single action. He stroked the cover of the prophetic book in his hands.

Roswaal: "...Do you understand? Beatrice."

Beatrice: "I... I, do understand, in fact. Do whatever you wish, I suppose."

Beatrice could say nothing else.

After Roswaal turned his back to her, and she learned that he was leaving for Sanctuary in advance, Beatrice decided that she would hole up in the Forbidden Library and go without seeing anyone.

The writ of Roswaal's Gospel was demanding contact with Sanctuary.

Beatrice did start having hopes for her own Gospel after hearing that. But her prophecy book contained endless pages of pure solid white as always, abandoning her heart in a wasteland.

Beatrice knew what came of Ryuzu Meyer's sacrifice.

She also knew that the place had gone without being liberated for four centuries. And that people diverged from demi-human races were held inside there, awaiting freedom.

And that it was a barrier the half-elf girl needed to overcome if she was aspiring for the throne.

—But what would happen to Ryuzu Meyer's sacrifice if the place was freed?

To Beatrice's feelings of powerless about being unable to save Ryuzu Meyer? To her overwhelming sense of loss that had triggered her parting with Echidna?

Her emotions had nowhere to go. Sensing that things that had been supposedly frozen had begun to pulse again, Beatrice knew that the end to her fate was truly coming.

Beatrice did not know the details of what had happened outside the mansion.

The boy returned from the Capital with a memento of someone dear from Beatrice's memories. Seeing it, feeling that the world had left her behind once again, Beatrice saw the boy's group off as they left for Sanctuary.

And, thinking that what they would bring back from Sanctuary would be her answer, Beatrice gave up.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Beatrice: "And so Betty has decided, in fact...!"

Before they could bring back her answer, Beatrice had sensed deadly violence whipping through the mansion. Once she realized what was causing it, Beatrice understood that fate had truly deserted her.

Beatrice: "I won't break my promise to Mother... But it is meaningless to spend any more time in this emptiness, I suppose!"

That Person would never come. But she could not stop waiting.

Meaning that Beatrice needed someone to steal the option to wait from her.

If that meant losing her life, then she would offer it without any hesitation. If there had been someone, anyone, who she felt she could put even a little bit of her trust regarding this duty, then she could believe that her final wish would be granted.

So when the boy, when Natsuki Subaru, burst into the Forbidden Library this night, Beatrice's heart had been moved with more emotion than she could even express. It had felt like fate, which had never once attempted to give Beatrice's mind solace, had finally rewarded her.

If his hands would take her life and make her defy the promise, then even that would be---

Subaru: "I'm taking you out of here, Beatrice--- I'm dragging you out into the sunshine, where we'll play until your dress is caked completely brown with mud."

---And he said this.

Beatrice: "Unwanted meddling, I suppose. Nobody asked for you to do that, in fact."

---She did not understand. What was he saying?

He had never, not even once, behaved anything like That Person before. He had never snatched her Gospel away and told her, "Sorry for the wait".

Subaru: "Stop getting thrown around by a blank book and a four-hundred-year-old promise--- Be the one who chooses what you want to do, Beatrice."

Beatrice: "-----"

---So then, why was he, after all this time, disrupting Beatrice's heart after she had already steeled her resolve?

"I'm meeting my end", had been the only thought in her head. She had looked upon the boy, upon his return, and hoped she would end by his hands.

But he had been trying to show her a future that diverged from her hopes.

This was what she desired.

The heart that could desire this hope had, over four-hundred years of time, long ago withered to nothing.

Beatrice: “I—if, you... were That Person...”

...That had been what it was supposed to be, but while listening to the boy’s indignant speech, something changed in Beatrice’s heart.

Her slumbering emotions shook like flowers taking bloom after winter. She raised her head. There would be no taking this statement back, once she said it.

She was dispelling her four-hundred year obsession with her mother’s binding words, and now clinging to something entirely unrelated and new.

And though she understood that, from her mouth, the decisive words—

Beatrice: “Will... you be Betty’s That Person?”

Subaru: “Are you stupid? —Of course I wouldn’t be this weird mysterious That Person of yours.”

The instant he said it, his expression somewhat mocking, Beatrice’s newly-budded hopes had been betrayed.

She did not really remember what had happened afterwards, as she surrendered herself to anger and expelled him from the room.

But she did know that she had said something she could not take back, and before it could develop into something that could not be taken back, was snuffed out.

Beatrice: “———”

What an utter clown she was.

This meant that she had done nothing more than betray her Mother's instructions. And her betrayal had meant that she was barred from procuring results, degrading Beatrice's pledge into something horrendously cheap.

Beatrice: "I'm exhausted, I suppose..."

And so, all she had to do was let things proceed as she had originally intended.

It had been a mistake to consider taking his hand in the first place. He was not the owner of a heart so valiant that they could soil their hands for the sake of another.

He was someone like Beatrice, constantly fretting about trivial things, indecisive and unsure, constantly piling excuses upon excuses, the owner of a weak heart.

And so the death to end Beatrice would come in a different---

Subaru: "Finally back! Hey, stupid. Stop throwing people out halfway through conversations. Now just listen to me and--"

Beatrice: "----!"

Subaru: "Plot!?"

Butting in to Beatrice's contemplations, the boy burst back into the Forbidden Library.

The instant she saw the boy, edging on speaking something more, Beatrice's emotions seethed and she blasted him away with a pulse of magic.

She watched him fail to endure it, shooting out of the Library as the doors slam shut.

Their conversation had disintegrated, capped off with his decisive comment, and still. Just how shameless was he?

Beatrice could not comprehend how he could leave her with that statement, going on to show up so brazenly. She put her hand to her chest to deal with her irritation, let out a sigh, and---

Subaru: “How about cutting this out! Is this you throwing a tantrum!? If you’re gonna resort to violence first thing, the conversation’s not going any—”

Beatrice: “You cut it out, in fact!”

Subaru: “Dua!”

The higher grade of magical pulse impacted his head, proceeding down to batter his torso.

Once she confirmed that the screaming, tumbling boy struck the wall outside the door, the Library once again severed its connection to the hallway.

She could not believe his persistence. Was he ignorant to the concept of “giving up”? Or did he not realize how deeply his thoughtless words had wounded Beatrice’s heart? Whichever it was, the boy was continuously rejecting Door Crossing’s goodbye.

Beatrice: “...This is truly no joke, I suppose.”

With that irritated mutter, Beatrice dragged the stepladder over from the back of the room, and took her usual position opposite the door. She cradled her book of prophecy in her arms as she glared at the entrance.

—The boy would be belting that door open once again.

With his selfish logic and inconsiderate sales pitch, he would come. Times upon times upon times, she would reject him and cast him away.

Because he was not That Person.

Because he himself had forfeited his right to take Beatrice out of here. And so Beatrice would never, ever leave here.

She merely had to end here, alongside her unfulfilled promise. Because that was the only thing that would now grant Beatrice solace.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Having been blasted out of the room, Subaru crashed head-first into a wall, causing his breathing to halt upon impact.

This was his sixth time being thrown out of the Library after his first failure in persuading Beatrice. He felt that all these repeated blasts in such a short timeframe had made him better at catching himself when dealing with invisible attacks.

But Beatrice's magic pulses seemed as if they were beginning to feel out how intense they could get without seriously damaging Subaru, meaning he absolutely must not slack.

Subaru: "This isn't the time to be polishing your stupid magic, shit! She's not listening..."

Wiping away his sweat with his sleeve, Subaru demanded his knees bring him to his feet.

He had been running constantly since yesterday, had blood shed and broken bones mended, meaning he was physically exhausted. The utter fatigue made his vision hazy, and the only thing keeping him moving was willpower.

Subaru: "The fire's gonna be spreading for real around now..."

Subaru kept himself low, turning his head this way and that, clicking his tongue, for fatigue alone did not explain his poor vision.

The fire that had killed the massive Witchbeast was steadily engulfing the whole mansion. The lower floor of the main block was nigh completely drowned in flame, and he could see plumes of smoke wafting from the eastern and western wings too.

The spreading fire had driven most of the Witchbeasts out of the mansion, so there were no monsters to block Subaru's path as he ran around. But the building was heating up like an oven, its temperature rising. His sweat was evaporating swiftly, his singed flesh bordering on charring at any moment. The building would start collapsing before long, and Subaru's fate would drown to nothing in the fire.

Before that could happen, he needed to fulfil his goal and flee here with Beatrice. But Beatrice's heart remained stubbornly closed.

Subaru: “It does help that the mansion fire’s cutting down the number of doors, but...”

That was really the only conceivable benefit of the blaze.

Door Crossing only operated on the mansion’s functional doors. So open doors or burned doors would not apply. The further the fire spread, the fewer doors would potentially lead to the Library.

Subaru: “That said, the fire’s gonna cook me before the number of doors is cut down.”

And he did not even want to wonder about what would happen if all the mansion’s doors were to burn away. Subaru did not know specifically how Beatrice’s Door Crossing linked spaces to one another. The incineration of the mansion could potentially turn Beatrice’s Forbidden Library into a permanently isolated subspace.

There was only one place outside the mansion that Subaru could think as a potential connection for Door Crossing, the laboratory with Ryuzu Meyer’s sleeping crystal, but—

Subaru: “Would she link the mansion to there in her current mental state...?”

Beatrice’s Door Crossing had sent Subaru to Sanctuary once before. Subaru had speculated on why this irregular event occurred.

Beatrice’s emotions had detonated and she forcibly expelled Subaru from the Forbidden Library. Her intentions strayed as she focused intensely on a farewell— and so her Door Crossing consequently sent Subaru to the laboratory. That was his idea.

That location was a symbol of sad and painful farewell for Beatrice. So perhaps that was why Subaru had been sent to Sanctuary back then.

Making it inconceivable that Beatrice’s Door Crossing would link to the laboratory now. Beatrice was not focusing on “farewell”, she is focusing on “end”. If she lost her connection to the world, the mansion, Beatrice would reach her end. To Subaru, his gut told him that Beatrice’s ultimate decision would be just that.

Subaru: “I’m not letting you ever end like that!”

Taking a deep breath, Subaru broke into a run while keeping low to the ground.

He left the previous door open and searched for the next door, batting away smoke as he proceeded deeper into the mansion.

He heard the constant crackling of the building's structure burning in the inferno. His skin was scorched and the boiling air threatened to sear his eyes. He endured both with a grimace. The smoke slipping into his nose brought him near to choking, when he discovered a yet-unopened door and pounced for the doorknob.

The blazing doorknob irradiated heat, searing Subaru's hand. Already his palms were atrocious with many ugly burns. He was quite used to gritting his teeth in agony.

With a stabbing pain piercing through his temples, he kicked the door open.

Subaru: "-----"

He tumbled into the room with its cloying stench of ancient books. He opened his mouth wide, taking a deep breath having fallen face-up, and he glared at the dim ceiling above.

A familiar atmosphere, and rage prickling at his skin--- It was definitely the Forbidden Library.

Beatrice: "You again, simply incorrigible...!"

Subaru: "Haaaaa! Of course I'm back! I'm coming here however many times it takes to kidnap you. If you don't like it, then let me drag you out of here right now! Then that'll be the end of these exchanges!"

Beatrice: "Enough of your useless chatter, I suppose! I know that the mansion is burning, in fact! If you don't flee outside immediately, you will simply burn to death in the fire, I suppose!"

Subaru jerked himself up, his breathing ragged as he glared at Beatrice. She remained seated on the stepladder, her round eyes as sharp as they could get as she bared her rage at Subaru.

For an instant, slight emotion dashed along the edge of those eyes, and Beatrice's lips trembled.

Beatrice: "Or... Do you mean to burn dead with the mansion and Betty?"

Subaru: "Are you stupid! After everything I've said, you still don't get it!? I'm not thinking of dying with you at all! I'm here to drag you out without you dying!"

Beatrice: “—! Selfish without fail, I suppose! Leave!”

Subaru stood up, pouncing for a bookcase to bide through the first magic pulse.

He felt the gale battering him, and then a second pulse that utterly drained him of energy. He glanced up to find Beatrice with her left hand raised toward the ceiling, her face twisted in anguish as she forced herself to smile.

Beatrice: “I robbed you of Mana, in fact. You must remember this sensation, I suppose.”

Subaru: “You, little...”

Beatrice: “Should your grip on the bookshelf slacken, that would be the end, in fact. Stop involving yourself with me, I suppose!”

The moment his knees started to give out, the third pulse of magic struck Subaru from head-on. An invisible wall of force crashed into him. Unable to support himself, Subaru was again pushed toward the door, proceeding to tumble and fly out the—

Subaru: “Nnngah!”

—Reaching his limbs out as far as he could, Subaru managed to catch himself on the door.

His limbs were overrun with pain, and experience told him that his arms were fractured or possibly even broken. He gritted his teeth, forcing himself to ignore it.

Beatrice: “Wh—”

Subaru: “Experience it too many times, and even I can learn how to get through. So want to comply to my efforts and start getting in the mood to talk?”

Beatrice: “You’ve lost your chance to speak with Betty, in fact. By your own actions, you are the one who squandered it, I suppose... Why do you not understand that, in fact!?”

Subaru: “I don’t get it, no. Because you’re actually guilty for that as well, aren’t you?”

His hand against the door, Subaru got to his feet and wiped away the blood dripping from his open lip.

He watched how Beatrice's brows furrowed in utter confusion, his face slipping into a wry smile.

Beatrice: "What's so funny, I suppose?"

Subaru: "I just confirmed that my consecutive assault is not fruitless. If you mean to seriously reject me, stop with the finicky crap and just blast me away. You have the power for that. It'd be so much quicker to just do that."

Beatrice: "...You are telling Betty to kill you."

Subaru: "Not that you can. That was me being a jerk. Sorry. But if you're seriously rejecting me, then there should be easier ways for you to do it."

Beatrice, bordering on tears, had refused to kill Subaru before.

Subaru had not advanced to a stage where he could understand what her sentiment or reasoning had been back then. So all he had was speculation, assembled from what fragments of her past Subaru knew. He had his suspicions, and still asked that question, astounding himself with how mean-spirited he truly was.

But if he did not ask it, Beatrice would not realize.

Realize the contradiction between her thoughts and actions, and the fact of Subaru's presence here.

Subaru: "If you seriously do not want to see me, then seclude yourself in the Library, Beatrice."

Beatrice: "What... are you... Betty has not taken a single step out of the Forbidden Library, in fact. But you are forcing yourself in of your own accord, and...!"

Subaru: "Nope, that's incorrect. If you were serious about holing up in here alone, there'd be no goddamn way I'd reach the place so many times in such a short time span. Your rejection's just superficial."

Beatrice: "That! Is because... Yes, is because you are enacting the method to cheat Door Crossing, in fact. And the mansion is burning, reducing the number of doors..."

Stuck for words, Beatrice's rebuttal trailed off to a weak end.

Subaru's statement had made her doubt herself. And even if that was not the case, Beatrice had lost the pillar that had kept her standing through these four-hundred years, and was currently unstable.

She could no longer tell if Subaru's words were right, or if her emotions were right.

Subaru: "-----"

And honestly, Subaru did not know either. He had no clue why he had managed to reach Beatrice's Forbidden Library so unflinching in this short timeframe.

It could be due to the mansion's doors burning away, leaving him with fewer options. Or maybe the emergency situation was prompting his Yin abilities to showcase absurd strength, and that was letting him defeat Door Crossing. It might be that Subaru was actually correct, that Beatrice was not truly rejecting him, and the doors of Door Crossing were open to him.

Subaru wished that the latter was true.

But the reality was insignificant. What Natsuki Subaru needed to do here, now, was to secure any possibility of bringing Beatrice out.

Beatrice: "You... you! Are not Betty's That Person!"

Unable to bear it, Beatrice yelled, clutching at her skirt. She had given up on thinking as she appealed to Subaru, howling.

Beatrice: "You said you weren't, in fact! You... you said you weren't, I suppose. If you were That Person... even if you said it as a lie, Betty would have believed you. Even knowing it was a lie, all I could've done was believe you, in fact."

Subaru: "Beatrice..."

Beatrice: "But you said you weren't, I suppose. Said you weren't, said I was stupid, in fact. Why yes, I suppose. You're correct, in fact. Betty is stupid, a stupid imbecile, who even now cannot disregard a promise from four centuries ago... and so! Nothing you say will change that it is over, I suppose!"

Choosing rejection, an invisible wind whipped around the shouting Beatrice.

The torrent of magic made her dress, her long hair flutter, filling the Library with a tense and turbulent air. Subaru sensed that this was the greatest gale yet, his body shuddering in terror at the coming strike.

His cowering heart wanted him to retreat, to flee outside the door.

But he managed to suppress the urge, bit deeper into his lip, and raised his head. To tell what must be told.

Subaru: “I...”

Beatrice: “-----”

Subaru: “I am not That Person. I’ll say it however many times. Your long-awaited prince isn’t coming on his white steed. Not to the end, not ever!”

Beatrice: “—! Then! Betty shall simply rot here, in fact!”

Subaru: “Not happening. I’m not letting you choose that. I will come back and say this however many times it takes for you to change your mind. That Person isn’t coming. You cannot keep your promise— But you will not be allowed to die.”

Beatrice: “I just... hate you so much, I suppose!!”

With that, Beatrice’s emotions exploded. The torrent of magic changed form as it targeted a single goal, white light dominating everything in Subaru’s vision.

He did not even have time to feel the gust of wind.

The shockwave pounded Subaru through his front and out his back, scrambling all the innards he had. His blood flowed backwards as everything inside him was wrung out his pores, the pain agonizing.

His eyes spun, he lost his sense of balance, felt overwhelming vertigo, became devoid of all perception of sound and smell and light. This would be what humans would call dying.

—But, Natsuki Subaru knows.

Subaru: “—What are you doing?”

Withstanding a nausea so intense his organs could spill out his mouth, Subaru forced himself to speak so that his weakness would be imperceptible.

The world existed underfoot, and the moment he recognized that fact, he steadily regained his perception. He had his limbs, had his head, his organs were not spilling out his mouth, his soul had not shed its vessel.

So what? Same thing as usual, just a near-death experience. Natsuki Subaru was experienced enough to know. This was not death.

Beatrice: “You are, joking, in fact...”

His vision swayed, blurry and unstable. Regaining enough focus to somehow recognize that he was inside the Library, he gazed at the girl in front of him, her arms spread wide as if she was witnessing something unbelievable.

It was Beatrice.

Not even she could comprehend his failure to die, and the preservation of his fundamental shape.

But there was nothing strange about it. Subaru had known it would turn out like this. It was inconceivable that Beatrice would let herself kill Subaru.

Subaru: “Beatrice...”

Beatrice: “———”

His consciousness was hazy. But willpower allowed him to anchor his nearly broken spirit.

The girl before him was wavering. She could not comprehend her own self, unable to fully reject him, as she looked at a ragged Subaru in terror.

Suspecting that his voice would reach her in this instant, he scrambled to assemble his waning consciousness, and spoke.

Subaru: “I’m, not... That Person of yours...”

Beatrice: “———”

Subaru: “But.”

Those repeated upon repeated rejections had put Beatrice on the verge of tears.

The conversation would usually end here. Before it could, however, before Beatrice’s emotions could swell to their limit, Subaru spoke.

Subaru: “I... want to be with you, Beatrice.”

Beatrice: “———!”

Subaru: “You are kind, and I want to be by your side so you will not be sad.”

Beatrice: “Ah... guh...”

Beatrice’s expression twisted.

It was as though she was suppressing fury, as though she was suppressing tears, as though she was struggling to keep some utterly undocumented emotion from showing on her face.

But she swallowed her words, sighed a ragged sigh, and picked up the book on the stepladder. She flipped through the pages, wrested through the pages, her fingers scrunching the paper, then let out a quiet whine. And.

Subaru: “—What?”

Before Beatrice could take any action, Subaru’s vision warped. It had nothing to do with his hazy consciousness or deficient blood. It was a matter of reality.

The Forbidden Library was starting to bend in front of Subaru.

The ground around him warped, the bookshelves losing their balance as they toppled down one after another. Books fell messily to the floor, instantly drowning the ground in a sea of tomes.

Even still, the world continues to bended.

The ground beneath Subaru's feet distorted too, undulating like a bellows, preventing him from maintaining his balance.

Subaru: "What... what's...!?"

Beatrice: "-----"

While clinging desperately to the door, Subaru looked at Beatrice.

He found that in this rippling room, Beatrice's surroundings alone were untouched. The stepladder she sat upon moved not an inch, supporting Beatrice's weight as she looked at Subaru.

Subaru: "—Ah."

Before Subaru could say anything, the ground beneath him tilted.

The floor under Subaru fissured open with a noise like the ripping of paper. A black space expanded from beneath the floor-tiles, and without a doubt, it was about to send him somewhere by methods other than Door Crossing.

She could even be imprisoning him in some non-existent, hyper-dimensional space.

Subaru: "—Shit."

It happened the moment he noticed the hole, taking a step back.

The world slanted in earnest, sending Subaru falling backwards following to gravity. The door's gaping mouth swallowed him, sending him back to the blazing mansion through Door Crossing.

Subaru: "H—hot!"

The heat of the wall he crashed into forced a wail out of him.

He raised his head, to find that he had been ejected into a hallway fully engulfed in flames. The only thing he managed to recognize was the fact that he was in the main wing. The flames singed him utterly as he looked at the door he had just exited, and, noticing that the door's lower half was already swallowed in flames, Subaru was stunned.

It was a miracle that Door Crossing had even worked. He did not think for a second that jumping at that door would bring him back to the Library.

Subaru: “Crap... If, this is the main wing...”

Then he might be able to find a functional door upstairs.

Vaguely aware he was not in the uppermost floor from the number of doors, Subaru decided to head for the stairway, engulfed in flames as it was. The smoke stung his eyes, tears welling over. His lungs burned with every breath, though he managed to keep the smog from snatching his consciousness by holding his jersey to his mouth.

Every minute counted. Like fuck he was actually going to reach the Library— No. It was not the time for whining.

He could not forget Beatrice’s expression at the end.

Subaru: “Stupid idiot, making that fucking face again...”

The numbness in his limbs caused by Beatrice’s magic pulse left his body. He dragged his body along, the thing more or less obeying his will, whittling at his soul as he ran for the end of the corridor.

Beatrice’s expression flickered through his mind. It was the same face he had seen in a previous loop.

When he and Beatrice had faced Elsa, and the woman took Beatrice’s life, after she had supposedly been defeated. When Beatrice had shoved him away to protect him, and had her stomach cleaved. Once she had seen Subaru was safe, her body wordlessly turned to particles of light.

Subaru had not forgotten her final expression from back then.

It had not been relief at having protected Subaru, nor joy at having obtained her desired death, but a grimace.

—It was the kind of expression that said “I don’t want to be alone”, obvious to anyone.

Subaru: “So like hell... like hell I’m gonna leave you on your own!”

With that, he leapt into the fire as he searched for escape.

He felt something squirming and wrong inside him, but the heat from his singed flesh and the pain from his burnt skin prevented him from focusing on it.

Were Subaru an objective witness to this, he would unwittingly recoil from how repulsive it was. Subaru, running through the fire with his pledge to bring out Beatrice, was wrapped by an overwhelming mass of black Miasma, embracing him almost like a protective vestment of shadow.

Oblivious to this, Subaru broke through the wall of flame and reached the stairway.

He exhaled raggedly, looked at the staircase above, and recognized that it was the second floor. He proceeded to climb the staircase, thinking to dash straight for the uppermost floor— When.

Subaru: “———”

He heard the noise of something wet being dragged across the ground, and looked down. The noise was coming from downstairs. His rationality told him that it was impossible.

All he could hear around him was the crackling and booming of the burning building.

The mansion was seconds away from collapse, and that sound came from the first floor of the main wing, where the inferno had started. Nothing should be moving down there. Having sprinted all through the mansion meant that Subaru understood the fire, from which even the Witchbeasts fled.

So the noise had to be a hallucination.

—But if it was, then what was that?

Subaru: “...No way.”

While dragging something along with it, a silhouette emerged from the flames.

It was destined for the upstairs as it climbed the staircase as Subaru just had, stopping at the landing between the first and second floor— and looked up as it noticed Subaru’s presence directly above it.

The silhouette was wearing black clothes, holding a black knife, and was a woman with black hair.

Subaru: “Elsa...?”

Elsa: “———”

The silhouette did not respond. But it definitely looked like the black-garbed woman Subaru knew.

Why was she here? Could Garfiel somehow have lost? If so, then Subaru’s battle—— Subaru’s battle to save everything, had ended in defeat, and——

Subaru: “No, I’m off...”

Just as those ideas started appearing in his mind, Subaru shook his head.

Subaru had to trust in Garfiel’s strength. Even if his opponent was strong, Subaru had been betting on Garfiel to win. Otto and Frederica had done everything they could to assist in evacuating Petra and Rem. Garfiel would likewise have done his absolute best as well.

How would Natsuki Subaru have possibly gotten this far without believing in his companions?

Subaru: “Garfiel shouldn’t lose. So, why are you...”

Believing in Garfiel’s valiant fight, Subaru flung words at the silhouette below him. This woman should not be here. What was behind her actions?

But just when he went to question her, Subaru noticed something. Or no, he was forced to notice.

Subaru: “——You’re not Elsa anymore, are you?”

The dark eyes looking up at Subaru shone with not a speck of light. They were so hollow and empty that it was unbelievable that those were eyeballs in those sockets.

The noise was coming from the crushed lower body of the silhouette, dragging along behind it. But the thing still acted like it was alive, which Subaru found incredibly repulsive.

Subaru did think that she had life force enough that she would not die, but she was still incapable of dying after all that destruction?

Subaru: “Though, this isn’t the time to be pitying her...!”

Even supposing she was incapable of dying, Subaru had no words of sympathy.

Given what Elsa had done before she died, sympathy would be lenient treatment even despite her state. That said, Subaru did not make a hobby of tormenting walking corpses. So he rationalized that she just needed to get caught in the mansion's collapse, and have the flames cremate her.

Subaru: "Get swallowed in the inferno. I'm leaving to get Beatr—"

Shaking his head, Subaru disregarded the silhouette and resolved himself to head upstairs.

Subaru: "—Huh?"

With a slight noise, the silhouette leapt.

Its mouth gaped open as it aimed for Subaru, swinging its wicked blade.

Subaru: "——"

The wind from the knife as it grazed past his nose made Subaru's lungs forget to breathe and heart forget to beat.

The thing had just tried to take Subaru's life, so natural that it may as well have been walking over to him.

But its strike just barely missed Subaru, instead shattering the floor before the tips of his toes.

The enemy had not been going on easy on him, its dead lower half had simply lacked the leg strength needed to pounce. Had it possessed said leg strength, that attack would have killed Subaru.

Subaru: "You've gotta be kidding!"

He promptly kicked the silhouette as it pitched forward before ascending the staircase. He dashed so intently that he forgot to breathe, glancing back at the shadow. The silhouette's head swayed from the kick and it jerked its limbs awkwardly to the ground like a marionette, then scuttling like a spider in pursuit of Subaru.

Subaru: "Are you joking!?"

He had called her a spider-woman before, but he had not thought she actually was one.

Stunned at her inhuman locomotion, Subaru soared to the top of the stairway. He imagined the silhouette pursuing him as he dove into the inferno of the third-floor hallway. In the very middle of the hall was the office. That room, being the sturdiest in the mansion, should still be generally undestroyed—

???: “—Ooooooh!!”

Subaru: “Daaaaah!?”

Intercepting Subaru as he leapt into the blaze, a lion-headed Witchbeast roared.

Having lost its mane, and with over half of its body burned grotesquely, this was unmistakably the Witchbeast that Subaru’s team had supposedly killed in the dining room.

Apparently the near-dead beast had returned to this door in adherence with its master’s orders. Meaning that Subaru was presently a moth darting into a flame. An unanticipated meeting amidst fire. The pun worked disgustingly well.

The half-burnt Witchbeast swung its foreleg what with those giant claws. The attack minced the wall, closing in to strike Subaru’s neck, more than strong enough to mow Subaru down easier than a weed despite the beast’s moribund state.

Subaru: “You’re one-trick ponies!”

But Subaru dodged by ducking low and diving forward.

Subaru had learned from the other Witchbeasts that they often aimed for their prey’s vitals. Judging that the beast would definitely aim for the head, Subaru dove into a forward roll to slip past the beast’s flank.

This beast, fully capable of devouring Subaru in one gulp, roared in rage as it attempted to readjust itself and face Subaru. But things would not be that easy.

Guiltylaw: “—Ooooh!!”

In pursuit of Subaru, the skittering silhouette bared its fangs at the half-dead Witchbeast.

The beast, its back turned, was slow to react as the silhouette's flourished blade showered a slash down upon it. The beast's rear left leg was amputated at the joint, blood pouring from the crooked wound as the creature's shrieks echoed through the corridor.

The beast whipped its snakelike tail, striking for the silhouette that crawled across the ground.

The silhouette avoided it nightmarishly, maneuvering beyond human capacity to parry the beast's tail away with its blade, stabbed its knife into the beast's open wound, and bore deep into the injury.

Subaru listened the earsplitting screech resound as he headed for the office's door, certain not to let the opportunity escape.

He kicked the record room's door open on his way, but it failed to lead to the Library, instead leading only to time loss. The beast and silhouette were still fighting behind him, but being that the only howls being heard came from the beast, it was obvious how the scales were tipping.

Subaru: "Beatrice!"

Having reached the office, Subaru prayed to himself as he opened the door. If the Library appeared before him, he could say goodbye to the monster battle. But what cruelly appeared was merely the sight of the disheveled office.

Subaru: "Shit... Then this wasn't it!"

Practically illustrating the strength of Beatrice's rejection, the office diverged from Subaru's wishes. He could no longer search for other doors, or return to the lower floors of the burning mansion. If there were any potential doors left, it would be---

Subaru: "The hidden passage..."

It was difficult to call the hidden passage, which opened via a mechanism, a door. The passage was opened via a sliding bookcase, and it was rather unlikely that passing through its entrance would lead him to the Forbidden Library.

If there were any other doors left, they would be deeper inside the passage.

Subaru: "There should be a door midway through the passage that opens to a small room... But..."

In a previous loop, Elsa had ambushed him from beyond that door.

But he did not know if that door fell within Door Crossing's area of effect. And above all, Subaru had to think that this was Beatrice's doing, leading him from door to door to try and expel him from the mansion through the hidden passage.

She may be aware of the mansion's current state, resolving to lead Subaru down a route that would grant him survival.

In that case, the hidden passage may not even lead to the Forbidden Library.

He could be led outside the mansion, to the mountain cabin at the end of the escape tunnel, and forever lose his chance to save Beatrice.

Subaru: "—Not giving me any time to think!"

Subaru heard the beast's death wail as the decisive blow was struck.

The Witchbeast, which had unwittingly put in a valiant fight to buy Subaru time, had most likely died for real to Elsa's silhouette.

With a shake of his head, Subaru dove into the hidden passage.

A spiral staircase lengthy enough to reach the mansion's underground welcomed him— and it seemed that the inferno had reached even this tunnel, the heat and smoke preventing anyone from doing anything here.

Subaru put his hand to his chest to cope with the aching, steeling his resolve as he sped straight down the staircase. Descending right after ascending. The heat charred him, and just imagining what color his skin must be made for a terrifying thought.

After eventually reaching the end of the staircase, Subaru peered into the darkness of the passage, his breathing ragged. It seemed like the smoke had been leaking in from a gap in the stairway wall, for he saw no effects of heat or fire in the subterranean passage.

Instead of the threat of burning, Subaru had to deal with fumbling in pitch darkness.

He walked in deeper for another ten or so meters before reaching a somewhat wider space, finding the door to the small room he's looking for, and stopped.

Subaru: "Here..."

Subaru had never gone deeper into the hidden passage than this door. He did not know if any other doors existed beyond this door. Meaning that this was potentially Subaru's last chance for a door to lead to Beatrice. And if this place were to function as a proper hidden passage---

Subaru: "-----"

Shaking his head to dispel his weakness of heart, Subaru reached for the doorknob.

If Beatrice had lead Subaru here with intention for him to survive, then his chances here were poor. Subaru fearfully touched the doorknob---

Subaru: "Hooo! This door's another..."

Crying in pain as his hand burned, Subaru grimaced and glared at the door. Its response, as if it had reflected Subaru's heart, caused a wave of foreboding to surge up in him and--- He noticed it.

Subaru: "The doorknob's hot...?"

While the underground passage may be heated, there were no signs of fire. The smoke and heat had likely been leaking in through a gap in the stonework that made up the staircase. If Subaru's speculation were correct, then it was inconceivable that the door would be so hot.

The door was hot enough that one would have to wonder if it had indeed been seared by flames.

Subaru: "...Beatrice. If you can hear this, please listen."

Taking care not to touch the door, Subaru looked slightly upwards and muttered. Believing that his voice would reach the absent girl.

Subaru: "Did you lead me here? If you did, knowing that the only way out is through this hidden passage, then honestly I'm speechless at what a schemer you are."

Beatrice's tactics to lead Subaru this far were indeed quite considerable.

The encounter with Elsa's shadow and the Witchbeast surely had nothing to do with Beatrice, but she had definitely led Subaru here by the nose. If he proceeded to open this door and reach the mountain cabin, Beatrice's plans would likely be fulfilled.

Subaru: "But apparently things won't go so smoothly. I could open this door, but I will not manage to escape how you want me to. This isn't me being stubborn and insisting that I don't want to run away, okay? I'm at least half in that mood, yes, but... it's something more urgent."

Addressing someone who might not even be listening, Subaru smoothly strung along word after word. He tapped his nails against the door blocking the way before him and sighed.

Subaru: "If I open this door, I will probably die. You and the others might not notice this, but, right now, that's the situation on the other side of this door. It's hard to explain verbally... but I understand the soul of science. I can tell."

Setting aside the failure in the dining room, Subaru's twenty-first-century knowledge was howling at him. This door Subaru was presently looking at was a door commonly found during fire-related emergencies, and must not be touched.

No joke at all, Subaru's life was in danger. What happened next was up to whether Beatrice was listening. And if she was, would she believe what he was saying?

Subaru: "Beatrice. I am going to open the door— I am leaving it up to you to decide how to judge my words."

Although aware that the thing before him was a threat to his life, Subaru's heart was rather calm. It was not that his nerves had been steeled, or that he had resolved himself.

Rather, it was that he could calmly entrust his life to another. After all—

Subaru: "—Beatrice, I trust you."

With his hand burning in pain, Subaru flung open the door. And—

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Rather than going down the spiral staircase, the shadow reached the bottom via something closer to plummeting.

Shadow: “-----”

The blood flowing from the shadow was clouded like muddy water, its visage as it dragged its crushed legs along so ghastly it did not look like it belonged to this world. With a wicked black blade in its right hand, and the dead Witchbeast’s heart in its left, the shadow clenched its fist to crush the organ as it proceeded deeper down the passage.

The skulking shadow had a human’s shape, but not even itself could determine whether it possessed human will or not. Its body had been destroyed so thoroughly that it could function, its life whittled such that it could not revive, and it had already exhausted the absolute dregs of its vitality as a shadow.

If you asked how the silhouette could regardless be moving around like this, then the shadow would respond— because, before it had become a shadow, its personality had been just that intensely tenacious.

The shadow eventually, silently, reached the deepest part of the passage.

The shadow lacked a will, and possessed no goal other than to corner anything moving and reap their lives. Sensing that its mark had passed this place, the shadow gave an easy flourish of its wicked blade.

Shadow: “-----”

With a clunk, the door in front of the shadow split apart. The shadow kicked the door’s debris aside, and moved to peer into the darkness beyond.

Shadow: “-----”

A slight wind blew by, making the shadow feel as if they were being sucked into the darkness. White smoke overflowed from deep in the darkness, a haze beginning to form before the shadow.

And immediately after— oxygen flowed into the room where incomplete combustion had occurred, mingling with the traces of the fire, instantly superheating and bursting out of the room.

Backdraft.

There was no way that the shadow, a dimwitted mass moving only to destroy, could have anticipated the explosive phenomenon.

Shadow: “-----”

The burst of flames engulfed the shadow, hellfire burning its body to nothing.

The shadow’s body had lost the means to either restore or revive itself, waiting only to rot, when cremating fires enveloped it, carbonization not even being an apt enough concept to describe it, as the blaze peaked instantly hotter— and burned it to nothing.

The fire’s momentum did not stop with merely the shadow as it proceeded to zoom through the underground passage, transforming the spiral staircase into a sea of searing heat. Then, blowing into the office to explode for even greater inferno.

—The Roswaal mansion now truly collapsed, meeting its end.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Seeing how the Forbidden Library had changed, Subaru swallowed his breath.

Fissures ran through the floor near the entryway, the hole to the hyper-dimensional space still alive and well. The fallen bookcases had no hopes of recovery, and in fact a portion of the room was up in flames.

The situation in the Roswaal mansion had started affecting the Forbidden Library too.

Subaru: “-----”

But, noticing the gaze fixed upon him, Subaru suppressed his shock and changed his gears. For now, he would focus everything on only one single girl.

—For this, this was surely his last chance.

Beatrice: “You’re an idiot, in fact...”

Subaru: “That’s seriously the first thing you say?”

Beatrice: “Well you are, I suppose. Betty put in so much effort so that you might escape, then you waste the opportunity, and come back, in fact. The mansion no longer has any doors, I suppose. The Forbidden Library has caught aflame too, in fact.”

She was right.

The fire had spread to some of the fallen bookcases, turning the beloved books one-by-one into ash. The entire place was flammable. It was going to burn down in a flash.

Subaru: “Which means this will be the end both for me and for you.”

Beatrice: “Yes. It’s the end, I suppose. There is not much that Betty desires any longer. The fire has spread to the knowledge destined for That Person, which completely goes against the promise, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Does it. Then, I want you to listen to my final speech.”

Beatrice’s empty eyes looked at Subaru. She said nothing to encourage or refuse him, but the reaction probably meant that she was at least willing to listen. Subaru gave her a nod, and took a small breath.

The words he had not managed to tell her before, at their previous parting. Right now, he would tell her everything he wished to tell, in full.

Subaru: “Beatrice— Help me.”

Beatrice: “...Huh?”

Assertion, spoken with chest held high.

Shock dashed through Beatrice’s eyes in response to sooty-faced Subaru’s declaration. She had surely attempted to imagine what he would say.

While drawing near to her unavoidable end, Beatrice had definitely run many simulations of what words Subaru would approach her with.

“I want to save you, I won’t let you be alone”. Perhaps those manly words, and the cool greeting she had expected from That Person, were what she had been waiting for.

But if Subaru was to communicate his true feelings, it was impossible for him to use such statements.

Subaru: “So I have been considering how I’ve been saying this cool stuff like, «I’m bringing you out of isolation», or «I’m going to save you». Really, that’s all I could come up with while riding off momentum to get through the situation. So, I’ve been sincerely thinking. What is it I think of you? What do I think of you, and what do I want to communicate to you?”

Subaru presented his sincere, unadorned thoughts to Beatrice, who remained wordless.

While turning a blind eye to how cowardly and unfair it was that he was leaving its reception up to her.

Subaru: “This whole thing with me saving you is a joke, the truth is that you don’t need my help at all. You’re strong, you’re smart, you’re cute, you can do anything you put your mind to, and can have anything you want done.”

Beatrice: “———”

Subaru: “You are more than capable enough of living on your own. Of course. If you weren’t, then you would not have managed four-hundred years. So not a word of this stuff about helping you or saving you resounded with you.”

Beatrice: “———”

Subaru: “But even though you’re strong and smart and can do so many things, it scared you to live on your own. It hurt you. It made you lonely. Nobody can fault you for clinging to That Person.”

Beatrice: “After you rejected... Betty’s feelings... what could you possibly understand!”

Biting her lip, Beatrice glared at Subaru with something like hatred.

But that wavering emotion failed to reach the level of hatred in full. Beatrice held on to that fading fury, frantically trying to preserve it as Subaru shook his head at her.

Subaru: “I do know. That you’re kind. That when someone’s having nightmares, you’ll hold their hand to ease them. That when someone’s in unworkable trouble, you’ll offer your hand and open a path. That when someone you cannot help but hate loses someone close to them, you’ll be sad for them.”

Beatrice: “Talking as if, you know anything.”

Subaru: “I’m powerless. I cannot be of any help to you. Still, I don’t want you to be alone. And if we’re gonna say there’s anything I am able to do, then all I can do is cling and beg.”

Beatrice’s eyes widened. Subaru presented his right hand.

It was raw with burn scars, disgusting to look at. But it was still better than his atrocious left hand after all the damage it had taken.

He wiped it, prepared it, made it clean enough to suitably hold her hand.

Subaru: “Beatrice. Help me.”

Beatrice: “———”

Subaru: “I will not be able to live, I will be lonely without you. Help me.”

To a third-party listener, it would sound an overwhelmingly pathetic and shameful form of coercion.

“I cannot live without you, so please take my hand”, was his threat.

He could not do anything for the other, so he was teaching the other that they could do something for him, and with that rationale, he was demanding that they live.

It was an excessively selfish, unreasonable, and hopeless means of coercion.

Beatrice: “Not, fair... It’s not fair, in fact.”

Subaru: “...”

Beatrice: “Using, those words... and, saying it so... after all this, you... when you’re not That Person... when you rejected Betty, and yet...”

She was tongue-tied, lost for words, hesitant to speak, emotional, and anguished.

Her eyes remained set on the hand presented to her as she firmly embraced the book in her arms. Tears spilled from her eyes.

Beatrice: “I was alone for four-hundred years! I spent all that time in isolation, so what could taking your hand now possibly... You’ll just die anyway! Human lifespan passes in a blink of the eye to Betty... After all of this! How could I cling to this!”

Subaru: “It is impossible for me to imagine your four-hundred years. I can’t talk like I understand it, either. Four centuries, I haven’t even lived a twentieth of that. I know I can’t understand all of your fear for what will come after I die.”

Beatrice: “Then! Then... nothing you’ve said, presents any solution...!”

Subaru: “But, tomorrow, we can be holding hands.”

Beatrice: “———”

Subaru: “Tomorrow, and the day after, and the day after that too. It might not last four-hundred years, but we can spend our days together. It might not last for eternity, but tomorrow, and in this present, I can treasure you.”

Beatrice: “——Hk.”

Subaru: “Beatrice—— Choose me.”

Subaru had already chosen.

Now he presented the choice to Beatrice. It all rested on her.

Would she stay loyal to her mother, and punctuate four centuries by being swallowed in flames? Would she disregard her promise to her mother, abandon her meeting with That Person, and take Natsuki Subaru’s hand?

Beatrice: “Y—you are, That Person is...”

Subaru: “Not me. Don’t equate me to some other guy you built up in your head. I’m me. Natsuki Subaru. Take all your unreciprocated feelings for this four-hundred-year-old asshole you’ve never even seen, and dump them.”

Beatrice: “———”

Subaru: “Rather than fear a goodbye that might come someday, live with me in a definite tomorrow. I’m weak, but I’m still aiming so high... If we’re together, you’ll be so busy fussing over me you’ll stop having time to think about being bored or lonely.”

Beatrice: “...Ngh.”

Subaru: “Choose me, Beatrice.”

He would repeat it however many times it took for the words to reach her. Because he understood her wavering feelings, and her wavering heart. So that the selfishness of Natsuki Subaru could shoulder the burden of her guilt for her indecision, and shame for breaking the promise.

So that this girl would never cry alone ever again.

Beatrice: “But you’ll go away...”

Subaru: “It will not last forever. The future you are fearing will arrive, definitely. The time when you are left behind, eternal as you are, will almost definitely arrive. But only thinking of fear for farewells, and throwing away all the fun of being together... That takes far too much out of our lives.”

Beatrice: “Even though you will leave me...”

Subaru: “Let’s be together. Let’s live together. Let’s go together. Let’s pile memories upon memories, enough to blast away your fears of goodbye, enough that you can smile and say with your chest held high that you enjoyed it. Enough that you recover those four centuries you spent in solitude, and counterbalance them.”

Beatrice: “Even if... that happened! I’ll be alone, someday!”

He stepped forward. Closed the distance.

The girl's wavering eyes reflected him.

He looked pathetic, he looked deplorable, he was a far cry from the prince she had been waiting for. But right there, was your usual, mundane Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: "You will live forever, and the time you spend with me might only be a microsecond for you. So I will carve it into your soul. My microsecond."

Beatrice: "-----"

Subaru: "—And when all's said and done, Natsuki Subaru was a man who even through eternity was too vivid to ever fade to sepia!"

The Forbidden Library crumbled with the sound of shattering glass.

The area around Subaru and Beatrice was surrounded in spatial fissures and scorching flames. But in this second, he felt not fear. Nor fire.

The only thing in Subaru was Beatrice. And the only thing in Beatrice was Subaru.

Beatrice's shaking hands clutched the book she had received from her mother. With the belief that unhooking her fingers would mean mending her centuries of solitude, Subaru reached out his hand.

And shouted.

Subaru: "Choose me! Beatrice!!"

Beatrice: "—Ah."

Subaru: "You want someone to take you outside! That's why you are always! Sitting opposite the goddamn door!!"

With the decisive boom, that world met its end. The Forbidden Library, the girl's isolated cage, was swallowed and disappeared in rifts and fire. But the instant before that happened.

—The sound of a single book hitting the floor of the Forbidden Library echoed.

Illustration from Volume 15, coloring by Floating (source)

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Having escaped through the hidden passage and reached the mountain cabin, Otto's group watched the mansion burn from atop a hillock.

Otto, Petra, and Frederica. And Rem shouldered on Frederica's back. The four of them had succeeded in safely evacuating through the passage to the mountains.

The mountains, and particularly the area around the cabin, apparently had a barrier around them to repel Witchbeasts. They saw no signs of neither wild nor ambushing Witchbeasts in their vicinity.

But not a single person here had the composure to rejoice about their survival.

All of them gazed at the mansion with a feeling akin to a prayer, waiting for visible change to occur. While trusting in the safety of Subaru and Garfiel, both still inside.

Otto: "-----"

Putting the treatment of his wounds aside for later, Otto gazed at the mansion, regretting even a blink. Petra stood beside him, clutching her arms with a strength inconceivable by her youth.

She was worried, so worried, so worried it was unbearable. Everyone knew that the young girl was greatly fond for Subaru. Considering her grief, it was impossible for Otto not to pray for Subaru's safety.

Otto: "-----"

Otto gently placed his hand atop her head to calm her. He gave her a smile as she looked up at him in surprise, before returning his gaze to the mansion.

And he noticed it.

Otto: "...There."

In the middle of the burning mansion's main wing.

A massive explosion of flame burst from the office holding the hidden passage that Otto's group had used. The windows shattered, overflowing inferno spreading everywhere in an instant, before the mansion lost its shape— and collapsed.

Petra: "Ah..."

Otto heard Petra's cry of grief. And Otto, too, having witnessed the same reality and imagined the same thing as Petra, withstood the urge to scream in denial. If he threw a fit here, it would be a disservice to the heart of the girl who most likely wanted to cry, even more than he did.

But Otto's thoughts were instantly invalidated.

Petra: "Otto-san, look!"

Otto: "Agh!?"

Just when Otto was about to lower his gaze, Petra's little hand slapped him across the cheek.

The impact startled him, sending sparks across his vision and dizzying him. But he soon saw Petra's look of elation as she pointed at the mansion. Otto hurriedly looked over as well, and understood.

Otto: "Hah, hahaha..."

—A pillar of white light was extending from the destroyed mansion to the heavens.

The light twisted like a rainbow, changing its angle high in the sky, shooting far to the east. Practically announcing that its destination laid there.

Otto knew what awaited in that direction. So his cheeks relaxed as he watched Petra cheer in joy.

Otto: "Now it's all up to you— Truly, I am exhausted."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Meanwhile, the same light that had brought Otto relief was witnessed by Garfiel, half-naked and clad in only a cloth around his waist. He clicked his fangs.

Garfiel: “Ha! So ya did pull it off, Captain! Knew ya’d do it! «Posthumously too Hoshin keeps his promises»^{185!}”

Having escaped the burning mansion and sprinted into the woods, Garfiel put his hand to his hip and laughed like an idiot. Lying on the ground beside Garfiel was a girl, her limbs bound in restraints made of the same cloth as Garfiel’s waistband— Meili, unconscious.

Spoils of war— That was not how he was going to boast about it, but she was a living witness who had been involved in the attack, and there were many things they needed to interrogate her about.

But above all, Garfiel’s principles would not allow him to kill the young girl.

Garfiel: ““Said, the shadow lady must’a been burnt t’a crisp.”

Garfiel gazed at the destroyed mansion, sighing.

He had thrown a Witchbeast at her and crushed her— It was an indirect method that had left no feeling in his own hands, but Garfiel had still chosen to butcher a near-human life of his own volition.

His fingers shook, and he could feel wrenching pain in his stomach.

But Garfiel suppressed those feelings with a shake of his head, seating himself beside the sleeping Meili before leaning against a tree.

Garfiel: “For now we’ll put off th’aftertaste of winnin’ and the feelin’ of killin’. Nothin’ my amazin’ self does now’s gonna accomplish anythin’. Countin’ on you, Captain.”

Thrusting out his fist, Garfiel glared at the trail of white light, and—

Garfiel: “Once this’s all cleaned up, we got a guy we both gotta give a good smack ‘cross the face!”

¹⁸⁵ 『ホーシンは口約束を死んでも守った』 - I would translate this literally as "Hoshin kept his promise even at the exchange of his life" or "Hoshin kept his (verbal) promises, even were he to die" (thanks to Ice for this second one). Fun fact: this very same idiom is present somewhere else in the story. Can you find in what story/chapter it is located, without using search/find?

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—She had been caught.

She had known this would happen, and yet she grasped it.

Even though she had known forever that, should she take this hand, should she cling to this warmth, she would never be able to return to her nights of isolation and solitude.

Even though she had admonished herself about how insanely foolish it had been to live while depending on ephemeral warmth.

That voice, calling her. Those eyes, gazing at her. Those hands, requiring her.

Even though she should have known there was no way she could possibly refuse it.

—Subaru.

Subaru: “Yes, that’s it.”

—Subaru, Subaru.

Subaru: “Yes. That’s my name.”

—Subaru, Subaru, Subaru.

—Subaru!!

Subaru: “And you finally called me by name.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—The blizzard raged.

Blinding curtains of white unfurled, every puff of breath freezing the instant it touched the outside air of this gelid world.

The breeze bathing her was frigid, and the blizzard winds carried snow so sharp it nigh cut the skin. But even amidst this ferocious storm, the girl, her silver hair fluttering, held strong willpower in her amethyst eyes, facing forward.

Emilia: "I'm never, never... going to let you take anyone!!"

A glow cased her arms as she stretched them out, and unleashed a massive volume of magical power. The blizzard amplified the ice magic wreathing itself in pale light, which then sliced through the world like an incandescent sword, slashing apart the white Witchbeasts passing overhead one-by-one.

The unpleasant noise of their chittering fangs echoed without end.

The embodiment of hunger— an ancient calamity beyond salvation, specialized only to devour its prey, a being no-one could coexist with.

Faced with the multiplying malice of hunger, there stood, not retreating a single step, the silver-haired girl.

But her breathing was ragged, and she had lost some control over her gargantuan Mana, with white frost beginning to cover her lower body. If this continued, she would soon transform herself into an ice statue. But even though she knew this, she could not retreat.

Emilia: "-----"

The girl glanced behind her.

Located there, everything that she needed to protect from the Witchbeast's slaughter. A dilapidated ruin, and several lives who were placing their hopes upon her small shoulders. And a man, having not entered the ruin, who observed the girl's battle in a daze, and a dead-still pink-haired girl in his arms.

Half her body felt as if it had frozen. But fire blazed in her heart. Who could possibly moan and whine after witnessing that?

For what purpose, and with whose confidence, was she standing here?

Emilia: "I... I won't let you be the end to anybody! Everybody's hands were linked together... And I'm going to protect that! That is what I promised my Mother!"

A torrent of pale light crashed into the horde of approaching Witchbeasts.

They cried no death wails, falling motionless amid the white gleam. They witnessed their companions' sad deaths, before instantly choosing to cannibalize them and chew into ice.

It was a most dreadful sight.

But perhaps, potentially, that was also the appearance of people clinging to hope. Even so. Even so.

Emilia: "As long as I haven't forgotten about Mother and Juice, and about everybody today... and about what he wrote for me, I am never giving up."

Even if she did end up encased in ice, she would never regret it.

Cutting through the blizzard, the ferocious Witchbeasts drew steadily and steadily nearer, closing in on the girl and those relying on her.

She was resolved to give her life in the case of an emergency.

But just when the girl was tormented with that thought, she heard a voice.

???: "No need to push yourself so hard, Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "-----"

She knew that someone had just landed beside her, having descended from high above.

She looked aside. The blizzard was too strong, and she could make out their face through the veil of white.

But she knew exactly who it was. Their voice, their attitude, and above all, the fact they would always come for her whenever she wanted them most.

???: "You can hold off and fall back— The inaugural battle of deliverance is here."

Emilia: "I'm sorry. That kinda went over my head."

It felt like they were smiling.

The silhouette began walking, immediately followed by another, smaller silhouette.

She heard a second voice. One that sounded lively, as if the speaker had been waiting for a very, very long time for this moment---

???: "What comes next is a complete unknown, in fact."

???: "Yeah, we'll be doing something about this--- Together, me and you!!"

Here, Spirit Beatrice and Contractor Natsuki Subaru, two people who would from now on engage in battles upon battles while linked hand-in-hand, commence their inaugural fight.

Arc 4 Chapter 123B - Happiness Reflected on the Water

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 6 “Lies to Hope”, Part 2 (very end), and Volume 15, Chapter 2 “Happiness Reflected Upon the Water’s Surface”, Parts 1-2 (heavily changed)

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 122

—Taking a breath, she again challenged the Tomb she had just exited.

Inside the stone tomb, isolated from the light of the moon, only the pale glow of the walls provided any source of light. It was not uncommon to see such natural phenomena helping to preserve visibility, in places where ambient Mana thrived.

However, it was unusual for this natural lighting to be inside a manmade structure. It had, most likely, been reproduced by some inbuilt mechanism of the building. A mechanism like a magical device, functional so long as the required Mana was stockpiled— sensing that the lighting in the Tomb followed similar logic, Emilia quietly took a breather.

Inside the Tomb, she felt the distant presence of the Micro Spirits. It was not that they were gone. Micro Spirits were omnipresent like ambient Mana. There was the question of whether their presence was perceivable or whether they were strong enough for their presence to be detected, but there was no place where they could not be found.

This particular perception arose from the wall’s light-producing mechanisms. The Tomb preserved a rather high rate of Mana flowing into and out of its space. The Mana inside the Tomb was kept at a fixed volume, its quantity never exceeding or falling short of that amount.

The amount of Mana needed for preserving the luminescent phenomenon was so scant that the Micro Spirits could not manifest themselves sufficiently. That was why their presence in the Tomb felt faint. Even assuming that Micro Spirits were present, they would be debilitated in this environment.

Emilia: “This place is reeeally nasty for Spiritual Arts Users.”

Reaching that conclusion, Emilia muttered to herself.

Perhaps overcoming the First Trial had somewhat liberated her from her sense of being cornered. Having finally gained enough composure to observe her surroundings, that was Emilia’s impression of the Tomb.

It was no significant threat for a magician, those who casted magic using the Mana stored inside themselves. But were they to exhaust their reserves, there would be no means to replenish them, and so, a magician with a limited number of Gates would probably find the Tomb a troublesome place too.

Although in the case of Emilia and Roswaal, their combat capabilities would be barely affected at all.

Emilia: “Which is strange... since I can hardly sense anyone outside.”

Having regained her capabilities as a Magic user, Emilia’s perception of Mana had strengthened. When outside the Tomb, she had felt the Mana of so many entities that she felt like she could not control her senses. She had probably picked up the Mana of practically all creatures, or perhaps the presence of practically all Od, tugging at her perception. The wear on her mind had been intense. She needed to learn how to control it quickly.

But that behind-the-scenes battle had been postponed while inside the Tomb.

Instead she needed to wait for the Trial. If she were honest, she did not know which option was preferable.

Emilia: “Ram asked me. I have to keep focused.”

Emilia thought of Ram, begging to Emilia with her head bowed.

Ram had never showed such weakness, and there she had been, baring her emotions so intensely. How could Emilia repay her for everything she had done until now if not by answering to her plea?

Subaru, having returned to the mansion without observing Emilia’s results, also had faith in her. His actions expressed his unwavering conviction that Emilia could do it. She needed to answer to Subaru’s trust. Or actually, she needed to do even better than expected and surprise him.

Emilia: "I'm glad they believe in me, but that's not what this is about."

Though they might have been in a rush, Emilia still had to object to the fact that they had all left without seeing her. She should be permitted to jolt them and sulk.

And especially in Subaru's case. The two of them needed to have a very, very serious conversation after this.

Emilia: "Anyway, this feeling... the Trial's here."

The moment she entered the Tomb, Emilia felt it on her skin. She had been skeptical that exiting and entering the Tomb would be enough for the Trial to prepare itself, but the overwhelmingly cool air in the Tomb keenly informed her of the truth.

There was no need to postpone it. Inside the Trial room, the Second Trial was awaiting Emilia.

Emilia: "I saw my past. Then, the next one is...?"

Her cheeks tensed, nearly stiff, as she stroked her belly.

She used the irregularity in her breathing to determine whether her nerves are steeled. They were, acceptably so.

—The Trial Room waited, unchanging, as it welcomed Emilia.

Not even been an hour had passed since she left, so of course it had not changed. As visibility was slightly better here than in the hallway, perhaps this room alone preserved a greater load of Mana. The doorway in the back of the room stood shut and sturdy as ever.

What awaited her there, once she had overcome the Third Trial? Just as that thought popped up in her mind—

???: "—Witness, a present that was not to be."

Emilia: "—Hk."

She heard it.

Murmured at her ear, her own voice.

The instant she attempted to think about “a present that was not to be” could mean, her consciousness faded to white.

The intense sensation tore Emilia’s mind and soul from her body, dragging her into another world.

Unable to rebel, Emilia crumpled, leaning against the Tomb’s wall, before collapsing. Her vision blurred, unable to think anything, and her consciousness drowned.

Emilia: “Subaru—”

Unsure of what her own lips had said at the close, the Trial begun.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “Hey now, Lia. Where are you going off to, come over here.”

Stopped by that gentle voice, Emilia turned around.

A woman with short silver hair beckoned her to the dining table. Her eyes were nasty. Her voice was gentle. Either indicated Emilia’s ideal for women.

Emilia: “Mother, Fortuna...”

Fortuna: “...? Are you still half-asleep? Then you stayed up late again. You are not a child anymore, you cannot trouble others like that.”

Fortuna approached, her tone chiding Emilia as she poked her in the forehead. Pressing down on the faint red mark on her forehead, Emilia widened her eyes.

Emilia: “Woah.”

A sound of astonishment slipped out her lips before she could register it. That’s how greatly the sight shook Emilia’s heart.

This was the first time Emilia had ever seen Fortuna sacrifice her ease of movement and wear an apron. The over-adorned frilly white apron was a complete mismatch with Fortuna's personality, but suited her beautiful appearance well.

Emilia: "Mother, you're cute."

Fortuna: "—Where did that come from? You really are half-asleep."

Her cheeks reddening slightly, Fortuna grasped Emilia's shoulders and turned her around. She gave Emilia's back a push, and,

Fortuna: "Go wash your face in the river. You'll stop saying weird things once the cold water's woken you up. Though considering we're talking about you, Lia, that might not change even when you're properly awake."

Emilia: "Wh—what are you saying, Mother? That's not what it is. I'm not half-asleep at all... and I didn't say anything a trifle weird in the first place."

Fortuna: "Where are you learning this archaic speech, a «trifle»? I'm reeeally worried that everyone might be teasing you and putting these things in your head. I'll have to interrogate Archi later."

Emilia pouted. But Fortuna merely nodded back, not conceding an inch. While shocked that her own opinions were not working, Emilia slumped her shoulders and started her journey to the river.

???: "Goodness, hello there, Emilia. You're not looking the cheeriest."

???: "Gosh, she really isn't. Which means Fortuna-sama told her off? She may have stayed up late."

???: "Emilia's old enough now. I'm sure she wants her me-time every now and then."

After exiting her house and embarking along the road to the river, the elves of the village addressed her. A group of older elves sat at a table surrounded by thick tree roots as they chatted. She had heard they were the same age as Fortuna, though everyone, including Fortuna, saw Emilia as a youngster.

Emilia: "Good morning. You're all out early."

Elf 1: “It’s you who’s late, Emilia. It’s nice that you’re helping your Father’s work, but if you don’t use some of your time for yourself, you’ll waste your youth.”

Elf 2: “Exactly, exactly. You’re so cute, Emilia, you need to have fun while you’re cute.”

Elf 3: “If I were as young and cute as you, Emilia, I’d be bicycling the village.”

Emilia tilted her head at the term “bicycling the village” as the women shared looks and laughed, squealing. The details of their conversation were beyond Emilia, but it was good that everyone was having fun.

Finding herself feeling happy, Emilia relaxed as well.

Elf: “There, now that’s much better than looking down. Smile, smile, let’s see a smile.”

Emilia: “—Right.”

After pointing at the smiling Emilia, the women’s fingers pulled her own cheeks into a grin. Finding their argument as legitimate, Emilia identically smiled and nodded.

Waving a goodbye to the women, Emilia continued on her course towards the river. She scaled the gnarled tree-roots, passed through gaps in verdant leaves. Hearing the burbling of water, Emilia broke into a jog, her face beaming.

Emilia: “Iiiii’m— heeere!”

???: “Wagh!? Emilia!?”

The instant she pushed a branch out of the way and pokes out her head, she sees someone toweling themselves dry right in front of her, shock on their face. Realizing that the intruder was Emilia, the youth’s eyes flitted here and there and there in confusion—

Emilia: “Ah.”

Youth: “Ah.”

Illustration from Volume 15, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Emilia put her hand to her mouth as the youth slipped, sending him plunging into the river head-first. A spray of water splashed up as he landed in the brook.

Emilia: “Archi! Are you okay?”

Standing atop where he had fallen, Emilia looked down and called down to him.

Bubbles rose one after another on the water’s face for a moment, before a blond young man floated to the surface. He wiped his face with his hand, then raised his hand at the onlooking Emilia.

Archi: “Look, Emilia! Don’t interrupt people right when they’re almost done bathing!”

Emilia: “I’m sorry. I didn’t think anyone’d be here... But I’m glad it was you, Archi.”

Archi: “What are you implying!?”

Emilia stroked her chest in relief. Archi yelled, cursing the absurdity of it all. Emilia put her finger to her lips and hummed.

Emilia: “Hmm... I mean we’re close Archi, so you’ll forgive me.”

Archi: “Uh...”

Emilia: “Me, I’ve always thought of you like a big brother... so you’ll definitely say there was no helping today and forgive me, I think.”

Archi: “Think what? Goddamnit... Has no idea how I feel...”

Archi mumbled his regrets while sinking his mouth into the water, spewing bubbles. Which meant that the latter of his statement was drowned out, and Emilia did not hear it.

Emilia: “And I came here to take a bath too. Can I jump in next to you?”

Archi: “Wha—? I—idiot, don’t! Take a bath, in somewhere as open as this? Of course you can’t! Be a little more modest! Are you trying to be a child forever!?”

Emilia: “Eeeh...”

Archi: “No eeehs!”

Emilia: “Waaah...”

Archi: “No waaahs either!”

Having readied herself to leap into the river, Emilia pouted at Archi’s prohibition on bathing. She was not sure why he acted so panicked, but Archi was being mean to her today nonetheless.

Maybe he was mad about slipping and falling in the river.

Emilia: “Archi, I’m sorry.”

Archi: “Errr, hm... H—how come you’re being so docile suddenly?”

Emilia: “I thought maybe you really didn’t like falling in. I’m sorry. So let me take a bath too. If I don’t, Mother Fortuna won’t let me eat.”

Archi: “That’s something a kid would think!”

Archi shouted at Emilia’s stern words, hands to his head. He stopped paddling like a dog for an instant and sunk into the water slightly. Meaning that, for an instant, he had taken his attention off Emilia.

Emilia: “Woooo!”

Archi: “Ah!”

After her quiet cheer, sunlight skimmed across Emilia’s eyelashes, a feeling like floating being felt. Her silver hair fluttered out behind her as she shot toes-first into the water. Emilia’s contact with the water gave not a single unneeded splash as she sunk with shocking calm, reaching the bottom of the deep river. In the clear water, Emilia’s open eyes sighted fish and water plants swaying in the current. Her foot contacted the river bottom, Emilia savoring the tickly feeling of sand as she ascended.

Her face pops up beside Archi,

Emilia: “—Paah!”

Archi: “No! Paahs!”

Emilia smoothed her wet hair back, and swam away from the yelling Archi with repeated backstrokes.

Archi furrowed his brows, perhaps wishing to rebuke her once again, but it seemed that nothing would stop Emilia anyway. He gave a deep sigh and went around to behind Emilia.

Emilia: "This feels nice, Archi."

Archi "Well, you jumped in yourself so maybe it does for you. I got pushed in and sprayed with water when you jumped in so I'm feeling terrible."

Emilia: "Okay. I'm glad you're having fun too."

Archi: "You really are an optimistic girl, Emilia..."

Feeling complimented, Emilia floated on the water as she puffed out her chest. Archi averted his gaze and scratched his nose. His cheeks were red, yet the water was cold. Did he have a fever?

Emilia: "Are you feeling sick? Is that why you're mad you fell in the water?"

If that was the case, then of course he would tell her off for what she had done, even after she apologized. She would like to drag Archi out of the river and heal him with magic immediately if so.

Archi: "No it's not that, don't worry. That's not what's going on. Ummm, Emilia. Around guys, you shouldn't, no, I mean, around people, you should not be this defenseless. Especially around people you aren't close with."

Emilia: "...? But Archi, you are the closest one to me?"

Archi: "Even around people you're close with! Ummm... B—but just only do it around me."

Emilia: "Not around Mother?"

Archi: "Ok, around Fortuna-sama too, just me and that woman!"

Yelling at Emilia as she tilted her head, Archi bit his lip, his face reddening further. Then he sunk into the water and grumbled, disappearing from Emilia's view as she furrowed her brows.

As she thought about his words, Archi splashed up by the riverbank, pulling himself onto the shore.

Archi: “Okay, you get out of there too, Emilia. When you’re just trying to wake up, usually you’d just wash your face, not take a full bath. I don’t think Fortuna-sama would tell you go take a bath right in the morning.”

Emilia: “Actually, you might be right... I didn’t bring a change of clothes.”

Archi: “Seriously, what are you doing...”

Archi looked even more astonished at Emilia’s reckless behavior. Emilia started swimming over to him, when he dashed into the forest, returning with a towel.

Archi: “Wipe yourself down with this, and wrap it around yourself until you get back to your house. Heck, you’re a handful of a child no matter how old you get.”

Emilia: “Ahaha, I’m sorry, Archi. Thank you for lending me this.”

Even Emilia had to reflect on her actions after all this. His outstretched hand took her arm and pulled her out of the river, where she took the towel to dry her long hair. It glimmered silver in the sunlight, terribly heavy with water.

Emilia: “Was my hair always this long?”

Archi: “What are you talking about? You’ve been growing it out for ages, saying that it’s the same color as Fortuna-sama’s, and looks pretty.”

The towel absorbed the water, when Archi hit her with that statement. After hearing it being spoken out loud it did feel like he was right, but when exactly had she decided to grow it out?

Although feeling something was not quite right, Emilia chose to avert her gaze from the oddity. She got the moisture out of her hair and began rubbing her body with the towel. That done, she peered into the river and reached out to fulfil her original goal of washing her face—

—Seeing her face reflected on the water, Emilia’s throat jarred.

Pale skin. Amethyst eyes. Pink lips. Long, glistening silver hair. All those were components belonging to herself. Nothing had changed, and nothing was strange.

As if. Strange things, odd things, incorrect things, were all she was seeing here.

Emilia: “Ah, uh...”

Patting, slapping at her cheeks, Emilia exhaled irregular breath after irregular breath. Her lungs felt like they were convulsing. She could not breathe properly. Her guts constricted, throbbing, painful pressure coursing through her whole body.

Archi: “Emilia, what’s wrong?”

Noticing Emilia’s abnormal state, Archi spoke with his voice low. Emilia kept staring at the water’s edge, motionless, as Archi touched her shoulder and stroked her head from behind.

Archi: “Did you see something strange in the river?”

Emilia: “...No.”

Archi: “Did your stomach start hurting? I can’t use healing magic, so I’ll have to take you to someone else...”

Emilia: “That’s, not it.”

She felt the touch of Archi’s palm and heard the sound of his voice. But she did not draw her gaze away from the water.

Archi followed Emilia’s gaze, seemingly realizing what she was looking at. He timidly pointed at Emilia reflected on the water.

Archi: “Did something happen to your face? But I think it looks the same, pretty as always.”

Emilia: “It’s an adult’s...”

Archi: “Huh?”

Emilia: “My face is an adult’s... I’ve never even seen my face before.”

Seeing an unfamiliar face on the water, Emilia whispered with a trembling voice.

She moved her fingers to check whether the face belonged to her, but the reflection mirrored her movements, denying her of that possibility. That face was hers. She had never seen it before, and yet it was hers.

Emilia: “I...”

After noticing that one decisive peculiarity, many more inconsistencies came into focus. She looked down. Her chest had grown. Her hair too. Her limbs were longer than she remembered, and there was supposed to be a bigger height difference between herself and Archi.

People’s perceptions of her, people’s conversations with her had both changed in nuance.

And how many times had people pointed out that she was not a child? No. She wasn’t anymore.

Emilia: “—I have to go.”

Archi: “Emilia?”

Emilia stood up, her head swaying slightly as she turned around.

The forest she ran through, and the village. She needed to go back to the house where Fortuna awaited her. She did not know what she needed to do yet, but that point alone was undeniably truth.

Emilia: “Archi, I’m sorry. I’m going back to Mother Fortuna.”

Archi: “Y—yeah... That’s fine, but is everything okay with you?”

Emilia: “I’m fine now. I’m sorry for interrupting your bath. And I’ll be okay without the towel.”

Emilia took off the towel, pushing it against the confused Archi. She made sure that he had taken it before breaking barefoot into a run. As fast as she could, back to her house— and behind her,

Archi: “Emilia!”

She heard Archi’s voice.

Her heart insisted that she had no time to wait, but she still ended up stopping. As if someone had told her to never let a single thing Archi would say escape her.

She glanced back. Archi raised his hand.

Archi: “I don’t know what happened, but if you’re ever worried about something, you can always talk to me! Because I... Because I’m like a brother to you!”

After a second of hesitation, Archi gave Emilia those impassioned words. For some reason, hearing them made something surge up in Emilia’s chest. She was definitely happy to have heard those words.

But she had a feeling that that the thing swelling up in her heart differed from ordinary joy.

Emilia: “Right! Thank you, onii-chan!”

Emilia waved in response to the blushing Archi, and resumed her run.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Fortuna: “...I’m sure I only told you to wash your face, so how did you manage to come back with your whole body sopping wet? Your Mother’s mystified.”

Sighed an astonished Fortuna as she welcomed her dripping-wet daughter back home.

While her hair had mostly been toweled dry, Emilia’s white clothing was adhering to her skin, water dripping from her skirt.

Emilia: “I’m sorry, Mother. I was kinda... reeeally kinda half-asleep.”

Fortuna: “I know I told you to wash your face to get rid of your sleepiness, and you sure did put some energy into doing that. You really are a child no matter how old you get. Did anyone see you looking like this?”

“It would be embarrassing if someone saw you looking like a drowned rat”, was probably what she meant. Then no, miraculously, she had not run into anybody on the way back.

Emilia: “No, it’s okay. Only Archi saw.”

Fortuna: “Hm... Archi. Well, if it’s that boy... But I suspect Archi has started viewing you differently than he used to...”

Emilia: “Mother?”

Fortuna: “Ah, hm, no, it’s nothing. Now, come here.”

Emilia lowered her gaze. Fortuna looked on resignedly before stroking Emilia’s head, then taking her hand, and pulling her into the house. But water continued to drip from her clothes.

Emilia: “Mother, the house is getting all wet.”

Fortuna: “I just need to towel that dry afterwards. Anyway, have this towel, so dry yourself with that and go get changed in your room. I’ll make breakfast once you get back.”

This house, made in a hollowed-out tree, had been created by pouring Mana into an old tree to change its shape. Emilia and Fortuna’s house had been hand-made by Fortuna, and was a rather large dwelling for merely two people. Each of their rooms was on the second floor, while the first floor was a dining and kitchen space. Thinking back on it, it had been a luxurious use of rooms.

—”Thinking back on it” was a rather weird statement.

Fortuna: “Come on, get going.”

Emilia: “Wagh!”

A towel pressed itself into her face while she was in thought. Emilia looked at Fortuna in protest, but seeing her Mother’s gaze as she put her hand to her hip quickly drove Emilia to surrender.

The towel smelled like sun on her face. She dried herself as she returned to her room on the second floor.

Her room was rather simple. That was also valid for Fortuna, but Emilia did not particularly like pointless decorations. Her room hosted the bare minimum of furniture, with a few extra fixtures. It had a wooden box with her clothes in it, which Emilia squatted down next to. She grabbed a random outfit out of it and speedily changed out of her wet clothes into that.

Just like with her room, Emilia felt no urge to embellish her clothing.

She pulled a short-sleeved outfit, long enough to cover her upper and lower body, over her head. Then she changed her undergarments, and exited the room— While making a conscious effort not to look at the object beside the clothes box.

Emilia: “Mother Fortuna, I’ll wash the wet clothes by myself, so...”

???: “Goodness. I think that filial and excellent of you.”

Emilia: “———”

Emilia put the laundry in a basket and came back down the stairs, only to hear a man’s voice welcoming her. Emilia’s breathing stopped as she heard that kind, affectionate voice. She looked over at the dining table.

Usually Fortuna and Emilia would be the only ones around that table, and so one of these three chairs was excessive. It was the chair they used when a certain someone was visiting, and was usually brought out from the back of the house by Fortuna.

The familiar person seated in that chair was, of course,

Emilia: “Juice.”

Juice: “Indeed, it is lovely to see you again, Emilia-sama. Now, has anything notably different happened for you?”

Emilia: “Me? No, it’s been same as usual. Juice, it’s been reeeally long since you’ve been here. I didn’t know you were coming today, how come you’re here?”

Juice: “You did not know? I was sure that I had asked my finger to contact you prior...”

The mild-faced man, Juice, put his hand to his chin in thought. He was a good-natured person and appeared to be earnestly disconcerted, but Emilia instantly deduced the culprit. She passed by Juice to peer into the kitchen, where she saw Fortuna with her hand to her mouth, stifling a laugh.

Emilia: “Mother, you kept it a secret.”

Fortuna: “Huhu, now did I? I might’ve only forgotten about it.”

Emilia: “I don’t think so. Juice’s seat is there, and you’re making food for three.”

Fortuna: “Ah, sharp eyes. You’re usually a little ditzy, but you’re so perceptive about these things.”

Fortuna winked at Emilia and whistled as she picked up a dish, presenting it to Emilia.

Fortuna: “Now come help set the table, Lia. You can’t cook anything on your own, so I should at least be able to ask you to arrange things.”

Emilia: “Hmph... Changing the subject. And I can’t cook because you won’t teach me.”

Fortuna: “You’ll absolutely mix up sugar and salt, and I’m too scared to put a girl who can’t handle a knife properly in the kitchen.”

Cutting off Emilia’s rebuttals, Fortuna laid the dishes on the table. Although unsatisfied, Emilia followed her to the table.

Seated at the table, Juice looked at the fragrant dishes, breaking into a smile.

Juice: “I am privileged to partake in your cooking, Fortuna-sama. This joy does not fade, no matter how many times I experience it.”

Fortuna: “And there you go again, saying that so easily.”

Juice: “I am merely conveying my honest feelings?”

Fortuna: “That’s what I’m saying is devious.”

Juice tilted his head, looking somewhat distressed.

Watching their exchange made Emilia smile. Just watching them was enough to make Emilia completely forget about how Fortuna had argued her into submission.

Emilia: “Juice, if Mother’s food makes you so happy, you should just live here too.”

Fortuna: “Wh— Emilia!”

While placing a large plate overflowing with vegetables on the middle of the table, Emilia went with the flow of conversation and tried that sentence out. Immediately, Fortuna looked panicked, her face flashing red as she glanced over at Juice.

Fortuna: “D—don’t say anything crazy. Juice has so much work to do, he’s fitting time in his busy schedule to come see us and...”

Juice: “I am overjoyed by your offer, Emilia-sama. Were it a possibility, I would like to oblige. I sincerely would.”

Fortuna rushed to object while Juice replied calmly, the two in utter contrast. Juice’s statement killed Fortuna’s momentum and she sunk down into her chair, before attempting to make herself look small.

Looking at the two, Emilia also took her seat.

—This scene unfolding before her looked overwhelmingly natural to Emilia.

Emilia: “Mother, Juice, if neither of you object, then you should just do it. No one is going to stop you from doing it. Ah... Unless I’m stopping you?”

It was as clear as day that Fortuna and Juice thought favorably of each other. Perhaps they were not going any further than this fixed limit because of Emilia’s presence. However, Emilia’s worry was—

Fortuna: “You’re not.”

Juice: “You are not.”

—Promptly dispelled by the two as a needless anxiety at the same time.

Emilia's eyes widened. Fortuna and Juice looked at each other, realizing that they had said the same thing, and laughed.

Emilia: "See, you really do get along reeeally well."

Fortuna: "Stop teasing us, Emilia. Juice, scold her too."

Juice: "Indeed, Emilia-sama. Fortuna-sama is a splendid person. If someone like me overstays their welcome, it would burden her with objectionable rumors."

Emilia: "Hmph. But I think you're too late for that."

Juice undersold himself all the while putting Fortuna on a pedestal. Emilia saw sadness in Fortuna's gaze as she looked at him. So, Emilia raised her finger.

Emilia: "After all, everyone always tells me not to cause trouble for Mother Fortuna or Father Romanée-Conti when I go outside the house."

It was pretty funny how dumbstruck the two looked at hearing that. Emilia put both her hands to her mouth to keep herself from laughing, and calming her breathing down,

Emilia: "I'm serious. I even stayed up last night, and got mesmerized in bridging the differences between the old books you gave me, Juice, and the maps... Everyone praises me for helping in my Father's work."

Fortuna: "Wh—who is, saying..."

Emilia: "Tehena-san from across the street, Mitto-san and auntie Tanse."

Fortuna: "Those three gossips...!"

With the mental picture of their faces floating in the air, Fortuna bit her lip in frustration. Her brows shot down in anger, her face just a little bit scarier.

Emilia consoles her with a "now now", and—

Emilia: "Anyway, everyone thinks that. And me too, hm, I, uhh, thought about stuff, kinda a lot, and, hmm, uhhh... It's..."

Juice: “Emilia-sama, there is no need to force yourself to deliberate it.”

Emilia: “N—no! I think it’s good! But it just kinda feels like Mother’s being taken away, so I can’t calm down!”

Everyone else was fully ready for it, but the two of them and Emilia were all being fickle. Though their problem was their own thing, Emilia did not like that her emotions were getting in the way of their decision. After all, even by Emilia’s view, they were a wonderful match for each other.

Emilia: “I think it’d be reeeally great. You two should think about it too.”

Fortuna and Juice: “———”

Emilia: “No one in the forest, and me neither, and no one else is going to stop you. I’m not going to let anyone tell you that it’s bad or that you can’t do it!”

Emilia’s hands crashed on the table as she spoke zealously.

She then realized that she was getting too passionate, and got slightly scared. The two gazed at her as she stroked her hair and slowly sat herself.

Emilia: “A—and so... I’ll leave the rest to you young’ns.”

Fortuna: “Seriously, Emilia, where are you leaning this?”

Fortuna looked astonished as always at blushing Emilia’s comment. But the expression soon vanished beneath a laugh.

Fortuna: “Hehe, huhuhu.”

Juice: “Ahaha, Emilia-sama... Indeed, you have grown. I was lacking in discernment when I judged that nothing was different.”

Fortuna: “You were, Juice. She’s my prized daughter, it’s only natural.”

Juice: “Yes, I underestimated her.”

Fortuna and Juice looked at each other and laughed.

The atmosphere around the two was even more tender than before, and Emilia sensed that her own statements had brought changes.

The two of them were abound with warmth. The gaze they shared, surely carried a different nuance from before.

—It was a terribly happy scene.

Fortuna: "...Emilia?"

Fortuna glanced at Emilia, calling her name.

Emilia swallowed her breath, burying her face in her hands. She let out a forced "Ah", wiping away the tears threatening to spill from her eyes in a panic.

Emilia: "I think there's some gunk in my eye. Gunk that's reeeally big."

Fortuna: "That big? Are you okay?"

Emilia: "I'm okay, it's only fist-sized."

Juice: "A—are you certain you will be well?"

Emilia: "I'm fine!"

Emilia rubbed vigorously at her eyes as she stood up. She left the table, and began heading for the second floor.

Emilia: "I'm going to put in some really good eyedrops. It'll freshen my eyes up so well they'll fall out."

Fortuna: "Your eyes are such a pretty amethyst, Emilia, so please don't throw them away. They're exactly like my brother's, they are lovely."

Emilia: "And they're the same pretty color as yours, Mother."

Perhaps not expecting that response, Fortuna's eyes opened in surprise. Emilia saw Juice laugh at her expression, and Emilia laughed as well.

She smiled as her foot landed on the staircase, and glanced back at the two.

Emilia: “You two eat breakfast. I’ll be back right away.”

Fortuna: “It won’t taste well once it gets cold, so really do come back right away.”

Emilia: “Mhm, right away.”

Juice: “Then we will await your return at leisure, Emilia-sama.”

With those send-offs from Fortuna and Juice, Emilia took a deep breath. She glanced back one last time, looking down at the two at the table,

Emilia: “—I love you both.”

With that, Emilia returned to her room. Emilia closed the door to her room and sighed, expelling all the air inside her.

Her innards felt like they had been squeezed, constricted. She slapped her cheeks to psych herself up and shook her head, then walking over to a corner of the room. Next to Emilia’s box of clothes was something long and thin, with a thin cloth draped over it. Emilia had never thought to reach for that thing until now, but,

Emilia: “If I don’t face it, it won’t start.”

—Please give me courage.

Emilia traced her finger over her lips, remembering that warmth as she pulled down the drape.

The cloth fell. Behind it was a polished mirror, one that reflected Emilia from her head to her toes—

???: “—Did this scene of ideal happiness grant you anything?”

—There was a white-haired Witch standing where Emilia’s image should be.

Arc 4 Chapter 124B - You Reflected in the Mirror

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 2 “Happiness Reflected Upon the Water’s Surface”, Parts 3-4 (heavily changed), and Volume 14, Chapter 6 “Lies to Hope”, Part 4

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 244

While facing the Witch staring back at her from the mirror, Emilia sighed. Composed solely of monochrome black and white, the Witch of Greed, Echidna.

Having discovered Echidna in this dreamworld reproduction of her room, Emilia felt that it truly was a place constructed out of her own head.

A peaceful, tranquil, kind world where her life in the forest had continued forever. A world where she could have spent her days alongside Fortuna’s, Juice’s, Archi’s, and everybody else’s smiles.

Emilia: “But such a world doesn’t exist, does it...”

Echidna: “Completely not. This is a false world constructed with your memories and wishes as the basis. However, the world-building algorithms that precede over the Trial transcend human knowledge. The people you see in this world are most exactly who they would have been, had there been just one flick of the switch.”

Emilia had just remembered the truth of the day of Elio Forest’s freezing. Had there been no casualties back then, and the forest’s tranquility been preserved, their lives would have been ones filled with smiles.

The sight of Fortuna and Juice, seated jovially at the dinner table, had seared itself into Emilia’s mind. It was exactly the scene that young Emilia had wished to see from the bottom of her heart, and the same went for the present Emilia, with her memories restored.

Echidna: “Has witnessing a present that was not to be made you want to submerge in this world?”

As if peering into Emilia's heart, Echidna assaulted her with sweet temptation.

Emilia raised her head. Echidna gazed back, her eyes as cold as her voice. She stroked her snow-white hair, letting it flow over her shoulder and down her back.

Echidna: "Your mother, and that goodman. Did witnessing their happiness not make you desire this to continue forever? I'm sure you thought it pleasant and so dreamed of spending your days with everyone in the forest, and of your friends being so familiar with you."

Emilia: "...What are you trying to say?"

Echidna: "Just airing out some resentment. The fact you have found me means that you have already reached your answer regarding this world. And I know that this answer of yours is to choose reality over dream, which is exceedingly dull. If we're going to be seeing results regardless, I may as well leave some faint wounds behind."

Emilia: "———"

Echidna: "Rather than the happiness of your mother and your peers, you are electing for a reality where they met unfortunate demise. And so, the result of your Trial is that you are ultimately a wretched woman who prioritizes herself over others."

Echidna's fierce criticism stabbed through Emilia's chest. Her words had cut so deeply that Emilia felt physical pain, and though she had not been stabbed for real, she put her hand to her chest, impulsively retreating a step.

Emilia's reaction made Echidna snort.

Echidna: "It seems that has given you some semblance of self-awareness. The Trial does not take the personality of its challengers into consideration anyway. As long as they're qualified, be they hopelessly bankrupt of morals, or be they a conglomerate of egotistic narcissism, the Trial will accept them equally. Rest assured, you'll achieve your goals in short time."

Emilia: "Ah... You're reeeally going after such a sore spot. Are you like this with everyone?"

Echidna: "Not at all."

Echidna shrugged in response to Emilia's strained statement.

Echidna: "Other than you, there are only two people in the world who I interact with spitefully."

Emilia: "It doesn't make me happy at all to be among those three, out of the whole world. I don't remember ever doing anything that would make you hate me that much."

Echidna: "There is no need to look so worried. My hatred for you has nothing to do with you being a half-elf. It is not a question of your pedigree. Unrelated to blood or nature, I just hate you... Or rather, that may not be strictly correct."

Emilia: "———?"

Echidna lowered her gaze, feeling something off about the latter half of her statement. Emilia furrowed her brows at the brooding Witch, before giving a small shake of the head.

There was no way she could turn tail and leave those previous comments go without remark. Echidna had said many things that needed to be invalidated. Not only for Emilia's sake, but for the honor of everyone in the forest.

Emilia: "I don't think much can be done about your hate for me. I know how hard it is to make everyone like me. Since so many people have told me they hate me."

Echidna: "If that is the case, then it would have been nice of you to show some prudence and stay in the forest."

Emilia: "Well I'm not going to do that. I'm sure I said it in the last Trial. I'm going to melt the ice and save everybody. Then I'm going to hold my chest high and teach everyone that now the world is an easier place to roam."

Echidna: "Easier to roam. What a barefaced lie. Discrimination between races is still entrenched, and people cannot easily accept those who differ from themselves. That is why places like Sanctuary retain their function to this day. The disagreements you are referring to will forever result in the accumulation of casualties throughout the world. Am I wrong?"

Emilia: "You're not wrong."

Echidna's severe comments had put Emilia on the border of pessimism. Emilia still remembered the days she had spent with Puck in the forest. How the nearby villages had feared her and showered her in more than a few curses and more than a little spite.

Echidna's merciless attitude made Emilia recall those days. She could try not to recollect them, but those wounds and their unhealed scars continued to assert their pain.

Emilia: "But I am going to act as if you are."

Echidna: "-----"

Still focused on the pain of those wounds, Emilia firmly argued against Echidna. She watched Echidna narrow her eyes, and bit her lip, strength entering her eyes.

Emilia: "Being unlike others makes painful disagreements happen sometimes. Whether there are many of you or not might be a big factor for determining who are the victims and who are the perpetrators, too, sometimes."

Echidna: "And through history, that has been repeated over and over. People cannot accept those unlike them. Disparity in numbers represents disparity in strength. The many oppress the few. Now that you understand this truth and have gotten a little bit wiser, what are you going to do? Gather up the few, and create a paradise for weaklings? Wouldn't that be exactly the nature of this place we call Sanctuary?"

Emilia: "I think... That is one possible option. But I want to choose a different path. Even if I cannot change the fact there have been victims or assailants, the future's another story."

The second that Emilia said the word "future", Echidna's expression froze numb.

To Emilia, it felt like Echidna was angry, as if it was something she absolutely did not want to hear from Emilia, of all people. But yet Emilia continued.

Emilia: "I'm sure I'll be doing lots of things throughout the Royal Selection. I might face even more insults and spite than I ever did before. But I will always wish to say that I will never stop. To ask what is so wrong about being different from someone else. To ask what's so scary about being unlike our neighbors."

Echidna: “I would rather have you stop making me say this, but what I say is undeniably true. People cannot accept the discrepancies between themselves and others. By their very nature, all creatures desire for others to be the same as themselves. To like the same things, to love the same things, to hate the same things, to abhor the same things— Once that happens, they feel secure and reassured, and love their capacity to sympathize. Your platform will be denied as the ramblings of the weak.”

Emilia: “But that’s just neglect to think! It’s lame!”

Echidna: “L—lame...?”

Echidna’s eyes shot open to Emilia’s loud shout, looking like she had not expected that word in the least. Emilia exclaimed, “It is!”, and puffed out her chest.

Emilia: “It’s reeeally lame. Just because they aren’t like their neighbors, they hate each other... Are they children? It’s ridiculous that someone would block their ears for a reason like that. I’ll say it countless times to any of those nitwits. Rather than mindlessly yell about not liking it, if you’re looking to stop me from saying the same thing over and over, it’s easier to change your thinking a little.”

Echidna: “Absolutely self-centered. Incredible self-deception. You’ll eliminate others’ opinions that you wish not to hear, so that you may enforce your own?”

Emilia: “I’m not eliminating anything. It’s up to them whether they take their hands off their ears—I’m just confident that I’m more stubborn than them.”

Her hand to her hip, Emilia demonstrated to Echidna that her resolve would not bend. Echidna’s expression turned sour and she averted her gaze from Emilia.

Echidna: “Whatever you may wish to assert, the world has yet to changed. The forest-dwellers, frozen in ice, supposing they are alive and you do bring them into a thawed world, society is not prepared to accept them. All you are doing is tossing those who were kind to you into adversity. All for the sake of your hypocritical beliefs.”

Emilia: “...”

Echidna: “You wish to free your friends as soon as you can. But once you do, your friends will suffer as the world rejects them. Living is suffering, and so death too, is suffering. In a world like this, what can your individual attitude do? What can it change? What does it change?”

Echidna was sincerely inquiring this of Emilia. She had verified Emilia’s resolve through the two Trials, one of the past and one of the impossible present. Now, Echidna was asking Emilia about her resolve for the future. About Emilia’s prospects if she followed her intentions through.

About the route she would take to reach her imagined future. About what Emilia would use as her cornerstone, and what tangible basis she would use to create this path.

Emilia nodded in reply, and—

Emilia: “I’ll think about that after I finish the Trial!”

Echidna: “—Huh?”

Emilia: “Getting so focused on the future that I forget the present is putting cart before ground dragon. I know how this sounds coming from me, but I’m a blunderer. When there’s a wall I must scale, but I worry about what’s on the other side, I wind up falling into the hole at the foot of the wall.”

Between the Trials and her argument with Subaru, Emilia felt that she had a rather correct, objective view of herself. She felt that her appraisal of herself was also honest.

She was not clever enough that she could manage many things on her own. It was a question of whether she would manage to achieve results, after putting in her very best effort on whatever was laid in front of her.

She had hope for the future. Prospects for the future.

Resolved to aim for those hopes and prospects, the very first step on the road to achieve them must be taken. And right now, she had to establish that that firm first step.

Echidna: “...I finally remembered how pointless it is to debate with you. Honestly this was all rather idiotic of me.”

Emilia: "I know that you're smart, but I kinda think it's reeeally unfair that you shut down other people's opinions like that."

Echidna: "Do you sincerely believe that we exchanged any opinions? I presented questions, and you replied with empty platitudes. I had forgotten. That you are a hopeless child, unable to stand on your own, constantly relying on others, a weak woman."

Emilia: "You're right... I am a weak child."

Emilia lowered her eyes and shook her head slightly. But she immediately looked back up, matching her gaze to Echidna's.

Emilia: "But is being weak really that bad?"

Echidna: "...What?"

Emilia: "I know the person who taught me something very important would say this. It is not wrong to be weak. It is wrong to want to stay weak."

She thought of that black-haired, nasty-eyed boy. Lamenting his powerlessness, but kind and thus suffering more wounds than anyone else in his efforts, he was a precious boy. If it were him, who borrowed everyone's aid but nevertheless took a place for the most painful parts, he would absolutely say that.

Echidna: "Reorientation."

Emilia: "Mhm. I was slow to find my way."

Seeing how a smile appeared on Emilia's face, Echidna perceived that there truly was no room for debate. Echidna had no methods to stop the persistently optimistic, overly enthusiastic Emilia.

Meddling in the issue any further would even begin to impact her dignity as a Witch.

Echidna: "...Well, enjoy the remaining Trial. Once you have completed it, a reality far harsher than these Trials awaits you. I'm sure you will come to understand just how difficult it will be to uphold your shiny banalities."

Emilia: “Thank you for going out of the way to talk to me. I’ll make sure to remember what you’ve told me. And...”

Echidna was moments away from disappearing from the mirror. Seeing how her reflection had begun to fade in the mirror, Emilia continued her speech. Echidna furrowed her brows, looking sour. And Emilia—

Emilia: “Thank you for showing me this world.”

Echidna: “——”

Emilia: “It might be an impossible world, but I still wanted to see it. I never thought a day would come where I’d see them, Mother and... Father Juice, laughing together like this. Thank you.”

It had indeed hurt when Echidna had told her that this world was not real.

But even if it was an impossible world, those scenes would have occurred. Those scenes full of happiness and love, enough to make Emilia tremble in joy and sorrow.

“I’m so glad I got to see this”, thought Emilia from the bottom of her heart.

Echidna: “...You.”

And so Emilia expressed her thanks— and Echidna’s expression shifted.

Her expression had been one of witnessing something disgusting, her attitude had been one of withstanding displeasure, her stance had been one of scorn towards all actions Emilia took, and she had shown many such faces until now— But this expression was different from all of them.

—Echidna, looking close to tears, simply gazed at Emilia.

Emilia: “Echidna?”

Echidna: “I hate you— I just, hate you.”

Echidna, voice strangled and face cast down, responded to that call.

Her image in the mirror then warped, the white-haired Witch disappearing from the glass in an instant. Instead what appeared was a girl with long, silver hair and—

Emilia: “—Hk!”

A wave of rejection speared through Emilia’s chest as she promptly averted her gaze from the mirror. Her pulse had accelerated, and her breathing had grown slightly ragged.

She was supposed to have prepared herself for this, but it still terrified her to be reflected in a mirror.

Emilia: “———”

A century had passed before Puck saved Emilia from the ice in the frozen Elio Forest— She had never seen how she looked like having grown up.

The reason was simple. She was just scared.

Her century of slumber in the ice meant that Emilia’s heart had remained immature, while her body had matured to womanhood. Once she regained consciousness, and first realized that she could not control her body very well, Emilia had been struck with the illusion that her body may not be hers, and spent many nights in tears.

The reactions from the neighboring villagers had intensified that trauma of hers. Emilia shared the same distinctive physical traits as the Witch of Envy, and the villagers had feared her like a demon. Even though they had realized that Emilia meant no harm, they nonetheless continued to alienate her.

Even if people got to know that Emilia had not meant to do anything, what awaited her was still a life of discrimination, spite, and curses. During that time, Emilia had come to recognize, even subconsciously, that people hated her because she looked like the Witch of Envy.

That was when she first started rejecting mirrors and keeping her eyes from her own visage, which others detested.

Puck had noticed Emilia’s mental wounds, and removed everything reflective from her vicinity. He would even call out to her when she was out fetching water, distracting her so that she would not have to face herself on the water’s surface.

—One of the clauses in her Contract with Puck stated that he would be the one in charge of Emilia’s daily grooming. That was most likely something to protect Emilia.

To protect his daughter, who could not bear to look at herself in a mirror, Puck had used the Contract as a pretext to mask her trauma.

Emilia: "...Just how many people have protected me?"

And how long had she spent sulking alone, without realizing how others felt? This was the end of that time she had spent in ignorance of what she had been given.

She took a breath and froze. Then she raised her head, undertaking the personally monumental deed of looking at herself in a mirror.

Reflected in the mirror was a girl with long silver hair and amethyst eyes. Someone who was glaring so intently at her, it looked like she welcoming the end of the world.

Emilia: "—What."

She said, the whole thing anticlimactic. Seeing her matured visage in the mirror, Emilia sighed.

Emilia: "I look less like Mother Fortuna than I thought, what a shame..."

After her sulky mutter, the world shattered into pieces. This happy, desired dream world, which she would inevitably have to part with, ended here—

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Emilia: "—Ah, haa."

After regaining consciousness, Emilia realized that she had fallen asleep while leaned against the wall.

She had slumped to sit on the floor, her legs splayed out aside her, relying on the wall engraved with Subaru's messages. She combed her fingers through her disheveled hair and imagined the sight of her own self.

So that was her appearance, feared by many as a Witch, and what Subaru constantly proclaimed to be cute or beloved.

Emilia, with her impoverished understanding of personal aesthetics, could not tell which party was correct.

However, Mother Fortuna was Emilia's conception of the prettiest and coolest of people. And so, she did not think nasty eyes were a bad thing, and actually she did not dislike how nasty Subaru's eyes looked either.

Emilia: "I just got back, this isn't the time for me to be thinking about weird stuff."

Putting her hands to her cheeks, Emilia pulled the breaks on her own thoughts.

It was so absurdly spineless of her. She had just ended the Trial in safety and returned, and just looking at Subaru's handwritten messages seriously got her that elated?

Emilia: "But... This does mean that the Second Trial is really over, right?"

Muttered Emilia to nobody as she got to her feet and began thinking about her results. Judging from Echidna's actions at the end, the Trial was most likely over. Unlike the First Trial, Emilia felt no sense of accomplishment in having overcome it.

But she indeed had wrested her nearly captivated heart away, and managed to return.

Emilia: "——"

Fortuna and Juice. As Emilia thought back on how close they had been, her heart ached. But she suppressed her sorrow, turning her back to the Trial room.

Supposing that the Third Trial was ready, it would require Emilia to exit and enter again, much like the Second Trial.

She would ride off her momentum to defeat the Third Trial and liberate Sanctuary.

For Subaru's sake, and for Ram's request, and to turn her boasts to Roswaal into reality, people needed her to take action.

Emilia: "—It's pitch-black already."

Passing through the dark corridor of the Tomb, her footsteps echoing off the stone floor, Emilia narrowed her eyes as she noticed how dim the light spilling into the ruin's entrance was.

Perhaps clouds were blocking out the moon, or the hazy glow originated from the starlight.

In Sanctuary, which would lose all sources of light at nightfall, only the natural lighting pouring down from above ripped through the darkness of the night.

Emilia: “—Huh?”

Emilia pondered as she walked. And once she stepped outside the Tomb, the horde of gazes focusing on herself caused her throat to instinctively hitch.

???: “W—we are in her presence!”

Somebody spoke up, a chatter instantly spreading through the crowd.

The stir only unfolded further before Emilia, who had flinched at the sight of the overwhelmingly large group of people focusing their entire attention on her.

—Those were the residents of Sanctuary. The people who lived in Sanctuary other than Garfiel and Ryuzu.

Emilia had not interacted any more than had been strictly necessary during her time here. Partly because Emilia's mental state had not been calm enough for it, partly because they had not been actively trying to interact with Emilia either.

Emilia was somewhat resigned when it came to people staring at her like this. The residents detested Emilia's lineage, but held expectations for her to liberate Sanctuary, and most of all, they had to ascertain whether she was someone worthy of leading them.

And so, Emilia had thought it impossible that they would show themselves to her in such great numbers before she succeeded in liberating Sanctuary. Emilia had been convinced that interaction with them would only ever come about once she had achieved in attaining results.

So then why were they all gathered here?

And why were their gazes towards Emilia— filled not with loathing, but strong expectation?

???: “Can’t say it’s the nicest of things...”

Before the bewildered Emilia, a girl stepped forward from the group of villagers. With her long, pink hair, this person was Ryuzu. She stepped forward to represent the villagers as she showed Emilia a smile.

Ryuzu: “Everyone here’s stuck at a standstill. Wondering what answer yer gonna give the Trial, and... worrying about what’ll happen to us after Sanctuary’s been freed.”

Emilia: “...I think it’s inevitable that you would. But how would this be «not the nicest of things»?”

Ryuzu: “Now that’s easy. Gar-bo and Su-bo’s fight, or yer argument with Ros-bo, or... Well, lotsa things. Everyone in Sanctuary’s been discussin’ them in detail, and from there...”

Emilia: “D—discussed it!?”

As she watched Ryuzu scratch her cheek, Emilia’s cheeks flushed red. Disregarding Subaru and Garfiel’s clash of wills, Emilia’s argument with Roswaal had just been her being pushy with her unrefined opinions. She had rationalized to herself that it would not be embarrassing for anyone to hear it, but now that she had found out someone had actually heard it, it made her embarrassed.

Emilia: “But, even if you did hear about it... Ryuzu-san, where did you?”

Ryuzu: “Hrm, so about that... Despite however I might look, I got incredibly sharp ears. With it, ya pretty much can’t keep anything a secret so long yer in Sanctuary.”

Emilia: “You do... Wow.”

Ryuzu’s confession of eavesdropping ended up impressing Emilia rather than angering her. Failing to notice how the young-looking old woman stuck out her tongue, Emilia nodded in recognition of the reason that had led so many people have assembled. And—

Villager: “E—Emilia-sama.”

Emilia: “Y—yes?”

Ryuzu: “Ya sound like ya met through a dating service.”

It was one of the villagers— considering his presence in Sanctuary, he was most likely a half-blood demi-human. His canines were slightly long, and his pupils slit. He looked about as old as Roswaal, perhaps a tad older, seeming somewhat tense as he stepped out of the crowd before Emilia.

Villager: “I am... No, we are... In all honesty, we are still undecided.”

Emilia: “———”

Villager: “About whether we may trust in you, or what it will mean to learn of the world outside Sanctuary. Plainly said, the outside holds a lot of things we do not know about, and that scares us. We were all born in this place, and have lived our entire lives here. We know nothing of the outside.”

This had been what Garfiel had also advocated, the way of life in Sanctuary. The four-hundred year barrier had forced the people inside to live here for generations. They had no way to escape, and perhaps they had no need to think about the outside, either.

But now the means to escape was in plain sight, and this completely foreign and unknown person named Emilia was attempting to liberate them. It was obvious that people would feel unease and rebellion. Moreover, it was doubtful that many could enter the outside world with complete confidence.

Emilia had feared that Garfiel’s anxieties had reflected the general opinion inside Sanctuary. And this man in front of her was saying things validating that fear.

Villager: “We could perhaps come into Roswaal-sama’s care outside, but how would that differ from our present circumstances...? To be clear, we are more anxious than hopeful. The change frightens us.”

Emilia: “...Mhm.”

Villager: “However.”

Emilia nodded and was bordering on lowering her gaze, when the man’s statement stopped her. The man straightened his posture before continuing, his expression tense.

Villager: “Everyone has heard Garfiel’s... has heard the boy’s voice.”

Emilia: "..."

Villager: "We know what that trooper was thinking, and how he felt. And know the exchanges between him and that black-haired young man, and between yourself and Roswaal-sama afterwards."

His back still straight, the man's expression twisted. Regretful, and near to tears. It filled Emilia's chest.

Villager: "I, sincerely speaking, thought it pathetic. A fourteen-year-old boy was so worried for us, and a child under twenty-years-old was howling at us like that. And even though Roswaal-sama had stated that you could not do it, we listened to your words as well. And so, Emilia-sama."

Emilia: "—Yes."

Villager: "No matter what the results may be, and no matter what may occur after this, I believe your effort to challenge the Trial is incredible. Worthy of respect. Not all of us share that sentiment, and not even I have entirely accepted you yet. But I request that we may witness it to completion."

It was needless to say what.

Bathed in his willful gaze, Emilia looked at those behind him, at the crowd of people accepting him as their representative, and nodded.

Emilia: "Understood. I will be sure to end everything safely and you will listen to what I have to say."

Villager: "Yes. That is a promise. Judging someone based off hearsay, without ever interacting with them, we are the last people who should be doing that, huh— Waagh!"

The man slumped his shoulders. When Ryuzu attacked by pinching his hip from behind.

The man sprung up and turned around in objection, but Ryuzu just snorted a laugh.

Ryuzu: "Ya sure went on a while, sure are serious, aren't ya. And ya fell back into talking casual halfway through. 'Cause y'ain't used to doing this."

Villager: "M—my apologies."

Ryuzu: "Anyway, there's what we're thinking. Apologies for the meddler."

With that charming little exchange, Ryuzu got the man to stand down. Emilia took a deep breath, something other than oxygen puffing up her chest. Ryuzu was giving her blessings, and the people of Sanctuary had come to see her efforts through. Who could estimate how greatly it had reassured her?

Emilia: “Thank you, Ryuzu-san. Now, I know I can try sooo hard.”

Ryuzu: “I see, I see. Well, good. Next one up should be the last Trial.”

Emilia: “Yes, it is— I’m going to challenge it right away.”

With the strength they had given her, Emilia turned around to face the Tomb.

But halfway through her turn she froze, remembering something, and glanced back to Ryuzu.

Emilia: “Ah, oh. Actually, Ryuzu-san, have you seen Ram? I’d like to tell her that I have finished the Second Trial, but—”

Ryuzu: “Ram’s left here to attend to some business. But she’s praying for yer good luck. She said, «Emilia-sama has her tasks, and Ram has hers. Let us see them both achieved.»”

It indeed sounded like Ram, and even though she knew it was just a report, it made her want to smile wryly.

Ram’s task— Where, and with whom, and would she achieve it?

Emilia felt something stir in her chest, but she consciously suppressed it.

Ram believed in her. And so, she would believe in Ram. Just how Subaru and the others had created a path for her, she wanted to reap their efforts and make a path as well.

Emilia: “I’m going.”

Ryuzu nodded in reply, and the villagers’ noise pushed her back. Filled with even stronger resolve than the first or second times, Emilia stepped into the Tomb. Where—

???: “Face the impending calamity.”

The final Trial was coming—

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Ram felt how her heartbeat had grown a touch distant in her chest.

She had never been bathed in such hostility from this person ever before.

Physical contact with him, exchanging words with him, being ordered by him. Those things were the epitome in joy for Ram, and her meaning in life. And so, the fact that she felt girlish elation, even when regarded with hostility by that person, overjoyed her.

Roswaal: "...Hooooooooow dare you show yooooooooourself here."

Muttered the tall man in front of Ram, glaring at her. His tantalizing voice made a sweet ache run through her brain.

Just by having his heterochromatic gaze on her, everything below her waist felt like it would shatter.

Although, this was obviously not the time to display such weak and girly things. A woman like that would merely be deemed useless and discarded.

Roswaal: "Nooooooooow then, what could you have coooooooooome here for?"

Ram: "—That is simple."

She replied as usual, her face expressionless and manner tranquil.

Her pink hair swaying, Ram drew her wand from beneath her skirt, before pointing it at the beauty before her— pointing it at her dearly beloved master.

Ram: "I have come to snatch you away from your Witch delusions."

And confessed that she was present to burn her loved one, who had been consumed by an insane love, with her own.

Arc 4 Chapter 125B - Starting as Revenge

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 14, Chapter 6 “Lies to Hope”, Part 6, and Volume 15, Chapter 4 “Next Time, I’m Sure We’ll Have Tea”, Part 1, and Volume 15, Chapter 6 “It Started with Revenge”, Parts 1-4

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 257

The wind was blowing. A single, strong gust whipped violently at their hair and clothes as they faced each other.

The setting was the outskirts of Sanctuary, near the hidden house where young Garfiel and Frederica had once lived, in an unpopulated and unremarkable meadow.

There were no residencies anywhere nearby, and even if there were, nobody would possibly pass by at this juncture. All the people of Sanctuary should be busy waiting for Emilia’s Trial results. To cheer Emilia on, and for Ram to exploit to clear out the crowd.

Roswaal: “Delusion, yooooooooou say.”

Ram did feel somewhat guilty about using Emilia like this, but refocused her attention as she saw Roswaal’s lips relax into a smile. He swept his long, navy hair down his back, then closing one eye and glaring at Ram with the yellow.

Roswaal: “When you are the one saying this, aware as you are of my feelings and goals, it’s quiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiite the sad thing to hear.”

Ram: “I have simply kept silent, but always thought so. As I naturally would.”

Roswaal: “Natural... Weeeeeeeeeell, I doooooooooo suppose so. From your perspective, it was a life of prolonged prostration and disgrace.”

Ram: “———”

Ram responded to Roswaal’s shrug by lowering her gaze.

She somewhat understood what he was trying to say. Of course she would. Ram had always been paying attention to Roswaal. She understood to a painful extent how he, recipient of her love and loyalty, would perceive her allegiance to him.

Roswaal: “So, the first thing you do once unshackled from the Contract is stray froooooooooom my plans. That would be what you did in supporting Subaru-kun and aiding in subjugating Garfiel, correct?”

Ram: “It carried two meanings, both for my objectives and to rectify Garf’s idiocy. Were I not there, I suspect that they would have not managed to do anything.”

Roswaal: “It does feel that everything worked out «in the end». Subaru-kun makes some rather thoughtless bets. When so many precious things are involved and at stake, I would never even think to make such an idiotic gamble for my precious one.”

It was something of a sermon. He was both cynical about Subaru’s decision, and insistent that his own ideas were the rational ones.

And honestly, there was nothing about Roswaal’s statement that Ram could refute. Many of Subaru’s actions had been utterly unplanned and haphazard. The luck of heaven had been on his side for the whole Garfiel affair, including how Ram participated in it.

Ram’s opinion of Subaru being a man of only good timing had not changed at all.

Should one focus only on the question of achieving a goal, then Roswaal’s ideas were far superior. That was, provided that the Gospel could be trusted.

Ram: “You wouldn’t make gambles... because utilizing the Gospel means prioritizing accuracy.”

Roswaal: “Eeeeeeeexactly. Although you seemed not to trust it and have aaaaaaaaaalways been adverse to it. Again, it was inevitable. You’ve been hoping for its writ to divert at any point it possibly could.”

Ram: “...I will not deny that.”

She could not deny that.

Ram truly was averse to the Gospel. But there was a huge discrepancy between Roswaal's perception and Ram's real motives as to why she disliked it.

And it racked Ram with sorrow that she had never let show on her face.

Roswaal: "Do you remember? The Contract that we formed, with the Gospel as our intermediary?"

Ram: "—That, provided that history is moving as stated in your Gospel, I would wager my life to serve you. In exchange..."

Roswaal: "...Should time proceed down a path diverged from the Gospel's writ, it means I have failed in my goals. Should I lose sight of them, my life loses all meaning. You are permitted to do whatever you wish with my husk."

Ram: "Your life or death rests upon Ram."

Roswaal: "That waaaaaaaaas the Contract."

With that, Roswaal retrieved a black book from his breast pocket. He cradled the thick tome close, stroking its cover as he sighed.

Roswaal: "It must have been truly long and painful for you."

Ram: "——"

Roswaal: "After all... you had to spend your life swearing reluctant loyalty to a man partly responsible for the destruction of your birthplace. Contrary to your prayers, your heart delights when in contact with me... It must have been agony. My deepest apologies for being so aaaaaaaaapathetic."

Roswaal weaved spiteful words to wound Ram.

"Partly responsible for the destruction of your birthplace", hearing that sentence, pain and memories of her hometown, and family, in flames passed through her chest.

The oni had a low population even for demi-humans, but in exchange, possessed incredible strength.

Ram's race had gathered up their scant numbers and established a village deep in the mountains, only to then be exterminated overnight between fire and knives, leaving Ram and as the only survivors.

She had formed the Contract with Roswaal the morning after the fire, as she gazed over the scorched village in a daze. Ram had accepted the Contract for the sake of survival.

Without ever knowing anything, and equally without Ram ever telling anything.

Ram: “———?”

Feeling an inexplicable sense of awryness and faint aching in her head, Ram furrowed her brows. She felt as if there was an unnatural vacuum somewhere in her memories. That there was something that had to be there, instead being obfuscated by a network of lies, telling her that no such thing existed. Even though Ram's memories made no sense without it——

Roswaal: “This despicable longing within you, and the lust for revenge that your true heart fostered. Even with these contrary desires squabbling within you, you proved yourself to be a truly eeeeeeeexcellent pawn. Just how extensively have I used you, with your obedient conformity to the Gospel?”

Ram: “...”

While Ram searched her memories to try and find what felt off, Roswaal continued his speech. “This isn't the time for this”, she thought as she aborted her search for the vacuum. She faced Roswaal, who spoke sweetly as he praised her loyalty.

But the glances he flashed Ram with began to adopt another kind of sentiment.

Roswaal: “But who wooooooooould have thought that you'd betray me and ally with Subaru-kun. Do you comprehend how much grief I have suffered because of this?”

Ram: “...I have not defied the terms of our Contract. Should the world proceed on a course differing from the Gospel, I will adhere not to your words, but to my own heart. The Contract... If I had disobeyed it, then I would not have escaped unharmed.”

Putting her hand to her chest, Ram asserted the legitimacy of her actions.

Naturally, this Contract between Ram and Roswaal had not been a simple spoken-word promise. Spells were engraved on both of their souls, and they would suffer more than appropriate penalty should they defy the Contract's terms. Since this had not happened, Ram's heart had not defied the Contract.

But Roswaal gave a big shake of his head.

Roswaal: "Thaaaaaaaat is what I'm referring to. Considering that you have not been punished for disobeying the Contract in this situation... Your soul believes without the slightest of doubt that you are obeying the Contract. And I must find that a terribly unfortunate judgement."

Ram: "What do you mean?"

Roswaal: "It is simple— The Gospel's writ had yet to diverge. The Contract between you and I will only truly reach its completion further from now, in the future."

His voice low as he looks Ram in the eye, Roswaal asserted his point.

The statement made even Ram, who was usually expressionless, tense her cheeks. What she was hearing differed greatly from what the Contract's spell would acknowledge.

Even with all those conditions in place, Roswaal's stubborn heart was not surrendering in the least.

Ram: "The writ has not diverged? Barusu will not challenge the Tomb to liberate Sanctuary, and Emilia-sama is not doing anything to bring about snowfall. How could you state that the writ has not diverged in this situation, Roswaal-sama... Has something happened?"

Roswaal: "Nothing at all, it's theeeeeeee same as ever. While yes, it's true that neither of the things I stated have come into fruition... They still may yet."

Ram: "That will not happen. Barusu has left Sanctuary, and Emilia-sama is defeating the Trials. To state that matters will end up conforming to the writ... is this the tantrum of an obstinate child?"

Roswaal: "I am quite a mature adult and so I can deny being an obstinate child, but I cannot deny that I am floundering. llllllllllind, here is my useless tantrum— Endless and spanning over four-centuries, a peeeeeeeeeerpetual stretch of tantrum."

Changing his course, Roswaal asserted that his own actions amounted to a “tantrum”. The clown laughed from the back of his throat, his expression twisted in insane ecstasy as he slapped his knees, praising it like a masterpiece.

Roswaal: “A tantrum, exactly, it’s a tantrum! That’s the punchline! Is there any word that could describe this obsession of mine more accurately? Noooooooooope, there isn’t! Tantrum... tantrum... Hahahaaaaaa, wonderful. It had never even occurred to me.”

Ram: “Roswaal-sama!”

Roswaal: “A man throwing a tantrum in dependent obsession, and a servant whose lust for revenge against a madman has morphed into loyalty towards him. Our circumstances are truuuuuuly crooked and comedic. Hoooooooooowever, calling my actions a tantrum will do nothing to change my intentions. You have acted prematurely.”

Roswaal’s insane smile disappeared as he presents the Gospel to Ram, so she could see it.

Roswaal: “No matter what you may believe, the Contract remains unchanged. Until she overcomes the Tomb’s Trials, nothing has diverged from the writ that Natsuki Subaru will liberate Sanctuary. And even should she not bring snowfall, no deviation will come to the writ assuming that I cause snow to fall.”

Ram: “———”

Roswaal: “You may appeal to the terms of the Contract, but I am also acting in equal compliance. And so we sit upon parallel lines. The time has yet to come for you to enact your revenge.”

Roswaal lightly tossed the book, catching it in his other hand before stashing it in his breast pocket. Flickering flames appeared atop his outstretched right arm. Roswaal showed off how the flames changed color from red, to blue, to green, narrowing his eyes.

Roswaal: “You are still subject to the terms of your employment. You have acted impertinently as my servant and as such you will face punishment. Had you truly believed that the world had already diverged from the Gospel, then waiting for two more days was all you had to do. I would have presented myself to you without resistance. Hastiness is not a good trait.”

Roswaal continued with “Although”, while shaking his head in lamentation.

Roswaal: “I do understand your desire to destroy me as soon as possible.”

Ram: “...So you truly do understand nothing.”

Roswaal: “———?”

Ram closed her eyes, murmuring feebly in reply to Roswaal’s cynical smile.

Beneath her eyelids rested a wave of complex emotion, never to show on her face. By closing her eyes, Ram could see her own way of life, which she had pledged to never show to anybody.

She raised her head, Mana converging at the tip of her wand, poised this entire time.

Ram: “There is no meaning in having you should it be after the Contract is fulfilled. After you have been destroyed, there is no meaning at all.”

Roswaal: “——Come.”

Ram: “As you wish.”

——Flames of vibrant hue crashed into invisible blades of wind.

With waves of heat surging through their Sanctuary, the oni and the warlock had begun their crooked dance.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Emilia perceived the exact instant the Trial started.

Her five senses vanished, and she forfeited the general concept of having a body. Her sensory organs departed from her control, leaving her as only a mind floating helplessly in space—— That was what she was right now, merely a soul.

This one obviously differed in nature from the previous Trials.

Emilia: “———”

She could not speak. She had no mouth. No eyes either, but strangely enough, she was able to perceive the world.

Or no. You could say that she perceived the world, but it was not coherent enough you could confidently call it a world.

Emilia's consciousness floated in a void of darkness. She could recognize her own self regardless because of the many lights speckling this dark. The dim lights came in many colors, splayed about in considerable number. They resembled the glow of a Micro Spirit, but they transmitted a decisively different vibe from the Spirits.

They may resemble Micro Spirits, but their light was a closer match to that from magic ore. Regardless, considering these surrounding lights had scattered around to circle Emilia, she felt that she would not lose sight of the world.

Emilia: "——"

Surrounded by lights, and relieved that she had not been left alone, Emilia started feeling more and more confused about the utter lack of events taking place here. The dim lights simply floated there in their positions, not doing anything at all. Echidna had been showing up at the start of these Trials to explain what had been going on, but this time she was not present to act as a guide.

Time simply passed on— though Emilia could not tell how differently time flowed on the inside and outside of the Tomb, she knew that doing nothing would lead to nothing.

Emilia: "——?"

"I have to do something", thought Emilia, and a change occurred. Emilia's consciousness, formerly fixed in place and immobile, moved over to another spot— close enough to the lights that she could probably touch them.

She had no physical body, yet she could touch light. It was a weird sensation.

But she had no other way to express herself. If she did, then maybe it was possible that she was simply be invisible to herself, and instead have a body constructed of primal magic— a mass of Od.

If her Od was what held her consciousness and soul, then that would perhaps explain her current condition.

Reaching some amount of agreement, Emilia moved to validate her ideas by heading for one of the lights. There were more than twenty of these scattered lights. With no particular reason behind it, Emilia reached out for the light glowing a dim silver.

And the instant her Od touched the light— she saw it.

???: “Hate, hate, absolutely hate you. Me, I loathe you. I really do. All of it is entirely true. Ever since we first met... I’ve downright hated you.”

Emilia: “———!?”

Immediately following the voice, a vivid scene slipped into Emilia’s perception. Beneath an overwhelmingly giant sun, in a burnt field, standing beside a massive and dilapidated building, bathed in crimson sunlight, was a girl with blood wetting her silver hair— Emilia.

It was her fully-grown self, who she had only witnessed in the Second Trial.

And she looked woeful as she stood before the ruin, assaulting someone with her words.

Emilia: “I’ve had this thought countless times, and denied it countless times, but... Yes, a nightmare really did catch up to me. And so, I will say it.”

Emilia: “———”

Emilia: “Maybe we really shouldn’t have met after all.”

A tear streamed down from the corner of her amethyst eye. It trailed down to her cheek, fell from her chin, and the instant before it struck the ground, the world burst into nothing.

Emilia: “———”

She swallowed her breath. As just a mass of Od, she was incapable of something so dexterous. All Emilia could do was to accept the scene she had just witnessed.

What was that light? What was this scene?

That had definitely been Emilia, but she did not remember that event at all. Or perhaps that had been an impossible scene, like the one in the Second Trial.

Emilia: “———”

“It’s not”, thought Emilia. She calmed her chaotic mind, searched through her memory, and remembered. The words she had heard in the Tomb when entering the Third Trial.

“First face your past”, “Witness the uncomeatable present”. And now the third one. Yes, it was, “Face the impending calamity”.

Impending calamity— So, the future?

She had seen the past and a present, and finally, she was seeing the future. So, was this the baptism shown to those challenging these alternate worlds by the Trial?

Did that mean that Emilia would eventually meet this future? Where she was in such a dismal place, crying as she conveyed her regret for meeting somebody?

Emilia: “———”

Emilia used her feelings of denial to dispel her unease, recovering a superficial level of calm. But, once her mind registered the darkness again, another change occurred.

The silver light that Emilia’s Od had just touched disappeared. A vacuum filled the space the light once occupied, as it was now missing. Emilia was puzzled by this, but promptly realized what it meant.

If each of these lights represented a future, then Emilia needed to touch every single one of these futures before she would be freed.

—If this was a Trial, then she would have to make some kind of choice after she had seen all the futures. If Echidna was waiting anywhere, then it would be there.

Which meant— Emilia must witness over twenty futures.

Emilia: “———”

Would they be differing futures, or would they all be fragments of the same future she just saw?

While feeling her non-existent heart wilting, Emilia reached for the neighboring light. This one was blue, reminiscent of something vast and deep, like an ocean——

???: “You’re absolutely right. That kid was our enemy, and our wounds were deep¹⁸⁶. If we withdrew here, considering that neither of us can heal, maybe we wouldn’t have been saved.”

???: “In that case...”

???: “But they were just a kid—— And isn’t that enough?”

Again, the scene changed. Now she witnessed a thick forest, two people standing at the edge of a steep cliff. She could not see their faces. But she knew both of their voices. One was very familiar, and though the other one was not, she did remember it.

The two were facing off before that cliff, one of them kneeling, the other looking down at the kneeling party. Emilia felt like both looked horribly miserable.

???: “You... You are a hero. A hero... is all, you can ever be!”

???: “I...”

???: “Why thank you so very much for your help¹⁸⁷!”

One silhouette reached their hand out to the other, who turned their face away and left those inconsiderate words of gratitude.

It felt like it had been a definite farewell between these two people. A goodbye laced with only irreparable woe and disappointment.

¹⁸⁶ It is not clear who exactly was wounded, but from context, the party of the person talking is the most likely option.

¹⁸⁷ This line (助けてくれて、ありがとう!!) could also be interpreted as “Thank you for saving me”.

The world began fading away again, and Emilia's consciousness returned to the dark space.

Emilia: "———"

Emilia had not been present in that scene at all. She knew who those people were, but it felt odd that she herself had been absent.

She was meant to be facing these lights while conceiving them as futures.

So why on earth was it showing futures where she was absent, or scenes that she would not be present for?

—Was she being shown how her decisions may affect the future of those around her?

If so, then these scenes only presented one possibility out of many. It was telling her to witness how her decisions would impact those other than herself.

Emilia: "———"

The blue light vanished as the silver light had done. Twenty lights remained.

—Each one of them carried the weight of a choice.

Steeling herself, Emilia reached out to see the outcome of her decisions through. In the next future, and the future after that, Emilia's decisions awaited.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

With a swish of her wand, she created and unleashed a blade of wind. Invisible and inaudible, the whirling blade closed in on its target's throat as an assassin aiming at its target's feet.

Roswaal: "Is that all?"

But Roswaal easily evaded the imperceptible attack by nimbly jumping away.

Naturally. He was the head of the renowned Mathers family of sorcerers, a rare breed of magician proficient in all six attributes of magic. For Roswaal L. Mathers, perceiving others' manipulation of Mana was mere child's play. Even wind magic and its invisible blades was as visible to Roswaal as fire in the night.

Roswaal: "My turn."

With a swing of Roswaal's arm, three fireballs of differing hues rained down upon Ram.

A red fire, a blue fire, and a green fire—all three of them pursued Ram as she jumped backward, tailing her in annoying fashion. She ran backwards, her breath slightly ragged, as she unleashed another spike of magic. The blade of wind struck the three flames simultaneously, Ram believing it would snuff them out, but instead they each reacted in differing ways.

Ram: "———!?"

The instant the red flame took the hit it combusted into a pillar of fire, like it had taken a bath of oil. The blue flame was easily sliced to pieces by wind, its embers shooting out in all directions. The green flame looked like it had been engulfed in wind, only to then absorb the wind Mana and change its shape, morphing into a snake of green fire slithering across the ground in Ram's pursuit.

The fire pillar blazed at Ram, who kicked off from a massive tree to avoid the blue flames, and then tumbled across the ground to dodge the green flame's fangs before again striking the fire-snake with her blades of wind.

The snake bursted into small flares, which scattered over the meadow, smoldering to nothing.

Roswaal: "Oh myyyy... That was only one bout of magic, and yet you seem quite wounded."

Ram: "Haaa... haaaaaa..."

Roswaal: "If you acted with belief that you could win, then I must say that your estimations are raaaaaaaather naive. Why yes, I am currently devoting most of my magic to the algorithm to manipulate the weather. Hoooooooooowever, I am not so careless to accordingly neglect what is aaaaaaaaat hand."

Roswaal tilted his head as he watched Ram, her shoulders heaving with every breath, and spread flames to encircle them.

He created the three hues of flame again, which took the form of giant fireballs in his hand before moving to revolve around him. Their numbers compounded with every revolution, gaining speed. It only took a few seconds before Roswaal was veiled in a vortex of chromatic fireballs.

Roswaal: “This is one flame of each color. Ten flames of each type, for a total of thirty fireballs. You will not manage to dispose of them all with your current abilities.”

Ram: “———”

Roswaal: “Although, if you intended to confront me while my combat strength was limited, it was most foolish to aid in the fight against Garfiel. My abilities may be diminished, but that means nothing when your abilities are diminished as well. I can tell from the Mana overflowing from you— You transformed, didn’t you?”

Ram settled her breathing and answered Roswaal’s question with a glance. Perhaps having expected no reply, Roswaal shrugged.

Roswaal: “Of course transforming without my aid would turn out like this. You may challenge me with only a fraction of Mana, but you will approach your limit within a minute of fighting. If we view this as you expending your best efforts for the sake of your goal, it’s an affront to the eyes.”

Ram: “An affront... to the eyes, you say?”

Roswaal: “liiiiiiindeed, an affront to the eyes. You had stated this before. When I said that you needed to wait for only two days to see if the world had utterly diverged from the Gospel, you stated that would be pointless. I had been wondering what you meant at first... but after thinking about it, I came to a solution.”

Her breathing was calming down, but neither her stamina nor magic was being replenished. Roswaal knew this, and so he was stopping his attack on Ram to have this conversation.

It would be different if she started being an obstacle, but Roswaal did not intend to kill Ram. And Ram had to feel that this complacency of his was humiliating.

Roswaal: “If we take your goal to be revenge, then the answer is simple. You could brutalize me once I am a cripple, but that would not appease you. That is the only reason I can conceive that would make you abandon your chance for definite revenge by challenging me now. You think that you will only achieve revenge when you slay me, partway through my own goals.”

Ram: “———”

Roswaal: “That was partly my mistake for pressuring you into a choice at a critical moment, when you were still young. It may have caused you to panic, after time passed and you realized thaaaaaaat fact. And so, you have gone berserk to ensure the opportunity would not escape you. Though, the result is laid bare for all to see.”

Ram: “—Ah.”

A sound slipped from Ram’s throat. A hoarse, breathy sigh.

Roswaal’s odd-colored eyes remained fixed on Ram, making sure not to miss a single one of her actions. With that gaze upon her, Ram thought back on everything she had done for the last half of her life.

Although she had always known it, recognizing it again, after all this time, did prick her. Feeling that pain, Ram opened her mouth. Wide, so wide, as she looks up at the sky——

Ram: “Ahahahahahahaha!”

Roswaal: “——Ram?”

They were mirroring each other.

As she thought of how Roswaal had cackled earlier, the laughing Ram only felt more thrilled.

Her reasoning was entirely different to Roswaal’s, but yes, indeed, it was amusing. She had to laugh. That’s right, of course. Because, in the end——

Ram: “After all those interactions, after all that contact, you still have not realized how the other party feels.”

Dense, insensitive, no, it was something on an entirely different level.

Stubborn. Fixated. He had determined that it would never happen, and so had not moved an inch. To him, it was inconceivable that feelings that started as revenge would transform into love with the passage of time.

Ram: "I have been by your side because of the Contract."

Roswaal: "Yes, indeed you have. In that smoldering village, you and I formed a Contract of vassalage. I still remember how, even without your horn, your eyes blazed wet with wrath. And so, I sealed that away through the Contract, and redirected your fervor into loyalty. Although, I did believe that a day like this would someday come..."

Ram: "You are right. You were right. I wished to murder you. But you stole that opportunity from me, and I proceeded to spend my days in the mansion with this inexplicable loyalty and..."

Roswaal: "Unshackled from the Contract, today, you have decided to sate your desire for rev—"

Roswaal was lining up his theories. It was hilarious.

"It is truly as if he pays no attention to anything except his own feelings", she thought.

Ram: "Roswaal-sama, I am in love with you."

Roswaal: "———"

Ram: "I wound up falling in love with you. That is why there is no purpose in attaining you once you are broken. That is not the Roswaal-sama that I desire."

Roswaal's eyes shot open as his body froze solid.

He was stunned, as if he had truly, seriously not anticipated this in the slightest.

He promptly shook his head, attempting to come up with words, but his lips merely quivered with nothing meaningful coming out of them.

Ram: "Is something the matter?"

Illustration from Volume 15, coloring by Xarlasar (source)

Roswaal: “Of course there... Are you, mocking me? After all of this, mocking me? You have recognized that your strength is lacking, and so are attempting to shake me mentally, and...”

Ram: “How could I possibly believe that such tricks would work on you, Roswaal-sama? I am simply stating what I truly feel.”

Roswaal: “That only makes it even less conceivable!”

Stomping the ground, Roswaal roared. Reflecting his agitated mental state, the shroud of fireballs flew into disarray. They soon came to a halt, floating at various points around the surroundings as Roswaal glared at Ram.

Roswaal: “You love me? What on earth are you saying? You detest me. I’m a man you detest. For you, I am a man partially responsible for the destruction of your birthplace. You are meant to hate me so much you would like to murder me!”

Ram: “I did at first. But not now. Now, I love you.”

Roswaal: “This idiotic...! Who would, think such a cheap...!”

Feelings that had started as revenge must proceed to remain revenge.

Feelings that had become yearning must only have ever started as yearning.

Roswaal stubbornly believed that people’s desires and feelings could not change. And so he could not believe that Ram had changed her mind so dramatically as to alter her way of life.

Roswaal: “What about your revenge! Did you not pledge it! Did you not face your ashen village, and swear upon the souls of your dead brethren that you would accomplish revenge!”

Ram: “I do think it is wrong to do this to my brethren, and thinking of my birthplace does pain my heart. However, I cannot change that I have fallen in love. Ram is only prioritizing her own feelings over those of the dead.”

Roswaal: “———!”

Ram: “And you are not my direct foe, Roswaal-sama. Should my lust for revenge cloud my vision, that would make me even more shameful... That would be my excuse.”

Roswaal was utterly lost for words.

It would be an unreasonable demand to make him understand the current situation. Roswaal was a man who had gone for a very, very long time while sticking to his feelings. Wholeheartedly, persistently devoting his love to one single person, doing everything he could to make his wishes come true.

His emotions, his heart, and his belief that things ought to be this way were far too strong. And so he could not understand feelings that changed over time, or understand that strength.

There was really nothing she could do about the fact she found even this aspect of him adorable.

Ram: “I shall never allow you to become invalid.”

Roswaal: “You are contradicting yourself. No matter what your feelings are— No, even more so presuming that their nature is exactly what you stated, I do not understand why you are challenging me now. If the Gospel is to diverge from the writ, then I will lose my purpose in life and undergo heartbreak. You are aware of this, so why!?”

Ram: “Because this is the moment. Barusu, Emilia-sama, Garf. Now that all of them have brought your heart close to wavering, I face my single and only moment of opportunity.”

As long as the Contract between Roswaal and Ram existed, Ram could not defy Roswaal. Ram was currently disobeying Roswaal because her soul had judged that she was freed from the Contract, as Roswaal had pointed out.

But was that really the case? If one party believes the conditions to fit, then they are exempted as a target for the Contract. Does the system of Contracts truly possess such a vague and loose set of criteria?

Therefore, Ram extended her pleas. That she was not the only one who believed that the requirement to disregard the Contract, the divergence between the world and the Gospel, had been met. She hoped that some corner of Roswaal’s mind had noticed the same thing.

That was why this situation had been brought about.

Roswaal looked utterly confused as Ram turned to face him, held her breath, and dashed forth. She drew her wand, forcing out the dregs of Mana she possessed to cast a spell.

Roswaal: “———! Useless!”

Ram’s actions caused Roswaal to dispel his turmoil and order his floating fireballs to strike and stall her. But not a single one of the fireballs hit her as she lowered herself to the ground, their heat doing nothing more than searing her skin.

Ram had fulfilled the criteria needed to follow the Gospel’s future until now— and he could not decide if he should discard her or not. The fact that he could not perceive Ram’s designs was also a factor.

Perhaps he might even regret killing her.

If so, then that alone was enough to elate her so wonderfully to make her forget her earlier sorrow.

Ram: “—El, Fula!!”

The power of wind was concentrated, and invisible destruction detonated before her.

Roswaal had prepared himself in fighting posture, but he was not her target. She aimed for the ground beneath, rupturing it open and drowning out his field of vision with a great explosion of dirt.

Roswaal: “Do you think this smokescreen will...!”

Ram: “———!”

One sweep of Roswaal’s arm cut through the momentary veil of dirt into pieces. The barrier vanished, and as Ram watched it, she exhaled sharply and concentrated power to her forehead.

Ram: “...Ah, guh.”

Agony. Her vision drowned in scarlet as bloody tears spilled from her bloodshot eyes. Her muscles, her bones, both creaked as she heard the noise of her tendons ripping. She ignored all that, gritting her teeth so hard they broke as she stepped forth. The ground beneath her shattered, and in that instant, Ram had transcended the limits of mortals.

Roswaal had already batted the screen of dirt away— and Ram soared at him, so fast she took nary a single moment.

He noticed Ram, but before his eyes could even shoot open, she moved. Her outstretched arm reached for Roswaal's torso, and he swallowed his breath as he realized that her hand was contacting his chest.

Demonization— There was nothing else that could have increased Ram's abilities like this.

Although it was only momentary, Ram's strength currently exceeded the limits of the human body. Roswaal had to realize that it had been a blunder, thinking how she could shatter his ribcage and pop his heart. However,

Roswaal: “—What?”

With the shock and pain being registered, Roswaal could only blubber in astonishment.

In the blink of an eye, Ram had skidded to a stop about ten meters away from Roswaal. She faced down, vomiting blood as she fell to her knees.

Roswaal furrowed his brows, unable to comprehend the purpose behind Ram's actions. But once he saw what was found in Ram's hands, his expression instantly shifted.

Roswaal: “That!”

Ram: “To, me... this is, the root of all evil.”

His face pale, Roswaal began sprinting over. Ram responded merely by glancing up before, without any hesitation at all, giving a swing of her arm.

—And the Gospel in her hands went flying into one of the simmering green flames.

Roswaal: “———!”

Roswaal screeched mutely, but the blaze swallowed the Gospel nonetheless, becoming even hotter. Alongside a satisfying boom, the ancient book transformed into a pile of green ash.

Ram watched on with a smile, as if she had been yearning to see this for a very long time.

Ram: “—Now, finally,”

Ram sighed in satisfaction, her cheeks growing flush.

—The very next instant, a fireball thrown out of rage pierced through her petite frame.

Arc 4 Chapter 126B - We'll Next Meet at a Tea Party

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 4 “Next Time, I’m Sure We’ll Have Tea”, Parts 2-4 (half-way, heavily changed), and Volume 15, Chapter 6 “It Started with Revenge”, Parts 1-4

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 272

—She viewed the future.

???: “—Without that, do you not have even a sword to swing. Thief!!”

???: “Witness. The victor remains I.”

???: “Subaru, Emilia-neesama, I know you must be so tired. I’m sorry. But I’m going to wind up being a burden too. I’m sorry. All the thanks I’d wanted to say could never be enough...”

—With every colored light she touched, Emilia would see a different future.

???: “To think that someone I wanted to kill so much was actually a kind person, what an incredible nightmare.”

???: “There are feelings which must not be spoken. Does it satisfy you, now that they have come to light?”

???: “Does this make you feel that you have seen your promise through? If it does... If it does, then I was better off bound and dead in that cave! If I was going to see this dawn, then I should have just offed myself sooner...! Damnit, damnit!”

???: “God I’m sorry. I’m sorry for being so weak. God I’m sorry. I could not make the kill, god I’m sorry. Now  will always be alone forever. God I’m sorry for being so weak...”

—Woe, ire, death, rebirth, farewells, meetings, the future arrived in many forms.

???: "Yes, yes... my dear grandchild... must've grown up well..."

???: "I shall never perish to such nonsense as a curse¹⁸⁸!"

???: "It's simply that I realized something. That along the path up to today, I haaaaaaaaaad not been walking alone."

???: "How come there is no soul inside!?"

—Must the future be only despair? Would there nothing but sorrow and suffering?

???: "Just as promised, I'm fuckin' killin' ya! Yeh!?? NATSUKI SUBARUUUUUUUU!!"

???: "Am I being so covetous? Am I saying anythin' that indulgent? Nobody dies, nobody weeps. What's so complicated 'bout it?"

???: "After all, we must bleed ourselves to our very last drop to redeem ourselves, yes?"

???: "Right and wrong and good and evil's all a bunch of bullshit. You're stopping right there. Say it's the Dragon or say it's the Witch, if anyone's blocking the way then I'm... then we're, gonna crush them¹⁸⁹."

—Then, had it been wrong of her to choose this path? Had she been mistaken to wish for any favors?

???: "—I believe that to pray for one's requests is arrogance. Prayers are for when you seek forgiveness."

—In the final world of light, a girl that Emilia had never seen awake and speaking talked.

"I'd like to have a proper conversation with her", Emilia thought.

That sentiment was more than enough to deny the rejection of everything.

¹⁸⁸ It is unclear whether the speaker is talking about themselves, or someone else.

¹⁸⁹ This phrase can have a myriad of different meanings. I have opted to partially use DiscountAnon/Nanashi's alternative as it conforms better to the Light Novel's version.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Emilia's vision cleared, and she realized she was in a breezy meadow.

A hillock with a white table. Emilia sat herself upon a white chair, unable to remember what happened only a few seconds ago. But she did know that she was in a dream world.

Emilia: "Echidna?"

If anyone was going to greet her at the end of the Trial, then it was going to be its supervisor, Echidna. Emilia casted her gaze around in search of her.

But even though she could see that the field stretched as far as the horizon, she sighted no shelters or anything indicating the presence of people. And if she left the table to walk around, she might lose it from sight and never find it again.

She was definitely right here in this spot, but it strangely felt like she might fall off the horizon. Emilia took deep breaths to calm herself down, and made up her mind to start moving if nobody was around. Perhaps there was an exit somewhere. She would find that, and get out of this place. She had nothing to gain by wasting time here.

???: "It's been like this forever, haa. But why is it that these situations, huu... always end up being my post, haa? I can't say I'm thrilled with it, huu."

Emilia: "...Ah."

Seeing the ball of hair that had suddenly appeared across the table from her, Emilia froze. She stared at this thing before her in shock, still halfway into standing up.

Her breath had been taken away.

???: "Mm... An understandable reaction, haa. And the correct one, huu. The kid from before must have been a tad obtuse, haa."

Emilia: "——"

Every word that escaped this person's mouth was mixed with a gloomy sigh.

It was a rather lethargic woman with overwhelmingly long magenta hair, wearing a black robe. Her comments were not thorny at all, and she looked relaxed as anything.

—But Emilia regardless felt a pressure so intense it was practically strangling her. If this person felt like it, then anything above Emilia's neck would disappear in an instant.

Emilia had recalled her past, and could now manipulate such a vast quantity of Mana that her body was unable to contain all of it. Even though she had gained a massive boost in her capabilities as a solo fighter, she felt that she had no chance against this woman.

She would kill Emilia as easily as swatting a fly— and Emilia knew this.

Woman: "You don't need to be so wary, huu. I'm not looking to hurt you, or to get hurt, haa. Since that'd be a drag, huu. But Echidna just doesn't want to see you so she, haa... forced me here, huu."

Emilia: "I... I, see..."

Emilia nodded timidly.

The pressure wreathed around this woman showed no signs of letting up. Nothing had changed about her ability to easily decimate Emilia. But if nothing was going to change about the fact that the woman could kill Emilia whenever she wished, then it would be the same regardless of whether she was scared or not.

Emilia inhaled, held her breath, and exhaled. Doing this, she forced herself to calm down.

Emilia: "You're here in Echidna's place... so you are also a Witch?"

Woman: "—I see, haa. So you're braver than I thought, huu. You're not timid during the critical moments, haa. You might be taking after your mother, huu."

Emilia: "You know about my Mother?"

Woman: "I can't tell you anything, but yes, haa."

The unexpected relation made Emilia gulp, but the woman looked utterly exhausted after that comment. Emilia could pursue that information, but she probably wouldn't get anything.

Emilia decided to temporarily shelve the topic of her mother, for the time being. She had seen her past, seen an impossible future, and now Fortuna and Juice's light remained shining in her heart.

For now, it was more than enough.

Emilia: "What would you like me to call you instead of Echidna?"

Woman: "It's nice when children don't throw tantrums, huu. I'd like Typhon to get a lesson from you, haa. My name's Sekhmet, huu. As you've guessed, I'm the Witch of Sloth, haa."

Sekhmet leaned her body onto the table, looking up as she gave a faint smile.

The bags under her eyes and the unhealthy-looking paleness of her skin were something of a concern, but her features were attractive, and she was a beautiful woman. Still, the expression "Witch" and the ghastly aura she emanated indicated that she was not anyone ordinary for sure.

Sekhmet: "I really couldn't, huu... care less about how our names as Witches are treated in the present, haa. So that doesn't matter, huu. I just want to get this request done with, haa... and settle down into self-indulgent slumber, huu."

Emilia: "Hmm, if it's such a bother for you... Could no one else have done it? Echidna doesn't have to be the one if she doesn't want to... but aren't there other Witches?"

Sekhmet: "You're not going to, haa... get a conversation out of anyone else, huu. Minerva's the only one who could manage an actual conversation here, haa... and she can't show her face to you, huu."

Emilia: "Minerva..."

Sekhmet spoke with terrible tempo owing to her pauses to sigh. But hearing that she offered a better conversation than the other Witches made Emilia terrified of even imagining what the others were like.

But even that sentiment was overpowered by the strong feelings Emilia had for the word "Minerva".

Emilia: "Minerva..."

Once again, Emilia muttered to herself as she tilted her head. The word felt horribly nostalgic, something that would jog her memories. But that said, Emilia could not remember hearing it in any of her memories up until now, or in any of her recovered memories either.

But it was a terribly mysterious name, one that could evoke thoughts of someone very close to her.

Sekhmet: “No sense talking about someone who isn’t here, haa. Anyway, I’m just here to pass a message along from Echidna, huu.... and then I’m leaving it up to you to come up with ideas to end the Trial, haa. Pretty easy job for me, huu.”

Emilia: “Erm, thank you for your hard work...?”

Sekhmet: “I’ll pretend that worked, haa. Now, listen closely, huu.”

Sekhmet called out to the brooding Emilia, and put her head sideways upon the table. She gazed up at Emilia, and with a sigh, set her right hand on the table too.

Sekhmet: “In the Third Trial, haa... You have seen the future, huu. Those futures are possibilities of what will happen, haa... in this future where you decide to overcome this Tomb, huu.”

Emilia: “Possible, futures.”

Sekhmet: “There is a chance they will all happen, haa... and a chance none will happen, huu. Though, considering Echidna’s personality, haa... even I can tell that the futures you saw weren’t the nicest ones, huu.”

What did the other Witches think of Echidna? At the very least, it seemed like Sekhmet considered Echidna to be someone mean. Emilia could not exactly say much on that. Sekhmet’s opinion of Echidna was actually a little worse than what Emilia figured, but it was difficult to demand a worse appraisal than “mean Witch” from Emilia.

Sekhmet: “The future splits into infinite pathways, and so derives possibilities, haa. But the futures you saw were all seeds thick with tragedy, huu. After they sprout and bud, what will blossom out of them, haa? Are you prepared to doggedly walk a path of poison blooms that may leave everyone unhappy, huu?”

Emilia: “———”

Keeping silent, Emilia gazed earnestly at Sekhmet. Sekhmet looked fatigued after giving such a long speech. But she soon furrowed her brows upon noticing Emilia's gaze.

Sekhmet: "...I'm pretty sure I already gave you the question, haa."

Emilia: "Huh, what? That was the question? I answer that, and the Trial will end?"

Sekhmet: "That's what it seems, huu. Though, considering your goal, you could say that the Trial was over the instant you managed to get here, haa."

Emilia grinned wryly, as Sekhmet made it sound like a free round.

Emilia did not mean any ill. But the issue was just so trivial it had surprised her. After all, it was obvious how Emilia would respond.

Emilia: "Worlds that end tragically for everybody. No, I'm not prepared to see those at all."

It reminded her of memories that ripped at her chest, that clawed at her heart.

In that world of darkness, amid those colored lights, Emilia had heard their wails times upon times.

Emilia: "These are futures where everyone might meet a sad end. In the dark world before this, I saw a lot of them. Where everyone was crying, suffering, angry. I don't know the details of what happened, but I don't want to see a future like that."

Sekhmet: "But, I can assure that if you continue on the path you're on, huu... it's highly likely that such things will happen, haa. Is that going to make you flee, huu?"

Emilia: "No. That's going to make me face it."

Sekhmet narrowed her eyes as Emilia shook her head and puffed out her chest. The overwhelming pressure was threatening to consume her, but Emilia's spirit would not yield.

If she came close to losing heart, memories of her mother and father would support her. If she came close to giving up, she had someone who would encourage her to keep going.

Emilia: “We’ll sprint so fast we dodge the sad futures. But if that doesn’t work, we’ll ride our momentum to soar over them. If people fall in the jump, we’ll put in our all to pull them back up. And if we keep doing this, we’ll wipe away every single tear.”

Sekhmet: “You sure sound confident for someone so reckless, haa. If you merely talk about ideals and what’s convenient for you, you’ll break the instant you slip up, huu. Do you not think that’ll happen, haa?”

Emilia: “If I were alone, that might have happened.”

Emilia responded fearlessly to Sekhmet’s mocking words.

In a sense, Emilia’s stance was one that meant being reliant on others. But that was the most difficult option for Emilia, after never being able to choose a single thing for herself.

Sekhmet: “———”

Sekhmet looked utterly floored. She immediately looked down, the table and her hair concealing her expression. When——

Sekhmet: “Pfft, kaaha... haaaa, hahahaha! Ahh, yes! So that’s it! Yes, that’s it, that’s definitely it, of course you’d give that answer now! Ahhh, hilarious!”

Emilia: “Is it really that funny?”

Sekhmet: “It’s an absolute riot to me, haa. Okay, huu? So, Echidna, right, haa... she’s this terrible wacko even after her death, huu... She enjoys watching the Trial’s challengers agonize over their pasts and presents and futures alone, haa... The idea that her plans would be destroyed, and like this... Ahhhh, it’s hilarious, huu.”

Sekhmet laughed in an uproar, taking pained breaths while speaking cheerfully. She lifted her head and sat upright, leaning against the chair back to view Emilia straight-on.

Sekhmet’s eyes hosted a nostalgic gleam as she smiled,

Sekhmet: “The Trial presumes you’re taking it alone, haa... and you answer it by saying that you won’t face your challenges alone, huu— If Echidna heard this, she’d moan sour grapes all day, all while looking dead serious, haa.”

Emilia: “Oh. So that’s the reply I could have had... Mhm, I reeeally want to see that expression on her face too.”

Sekhmet: “She’s a terrible loser, so I doubt she’d let you see her looking like that, huu. That’s a privilege reserved for us dream-dwellers, haa.”

Emilia: “So unfair.”

Emilia pouted, which just made Sekhmet’s expression look more gleeful. To an outside observer, the harmonious joy emanating from them might make them look like friends who had known each other for decades.

Sekhmet: “Though, in exchange for that, I’ll bestow you with your Trial results, haa. As you’d expect, there’s nothing to complain about— in fact, you pass with a gold star, huu.”

Emilia: “Should it really be that simple?”

Sekhmet: “Did you want a more confusing answer, or some dramatic spiel, haa? Apologies, but you’d be wrong to expect something like that from me, huu. I’m the supervisor right now, and my word goes, huu. The Trial’s over without any issue, haa.”

With a deep breath, Sekhmet snapped her fingers. She failed to get a sound on the first attempt, or the second, but on the third try she finally managed a click— and a breeze gusted from behind Emilia.

Emilia glanced behind her, her silver hair swaying, to find that a door had appeared at the bottom of the hill. It did not look like it led anywhere, but Emilia intuitively knew that this door was the exit of this dream world.

Emilia: “You mean... once I go through that door, the Trial’s over?”

Sekhmet: “That’s the one, haa. Congratulations, huu. In the past four-hundred years, haa... since this Tomb was created and Echidna’s Trials came into operation, nobody had defeated these Trials, huu. Well, not that there was a lot of challengers in the first place, haa.”

Emilia: “Yeah. Not many people have been to Sanctuary, and meeting the requirement to get trapped in Sanctuary is actually surprisingly tough.”

Sekhmet: “There’s that too, but well, it doesn’t really matter, huu. It’s all over anyway, haa.”

It did bother Emilia how Sekhmet had started being vague, but she did not pry into it. More importantly, she was ecstatic to hear that the Trials were over.

Honestly, she did not feel any sense of achievement yet. It had not hit her yet. She had struggled so much with the First Trial to the point of almost broking down, thinking this whole thing impossible. She did feel that she had come here resolved not to lose, but even so—

Sekhmet: “You don’t look like you agree with it, huu.”

Emilia: “Erm, well I am kinda bothered. Reeally just kinda bothered.”

Sekhmet: “Echidna doesn’t present problems that can’t be solved, haa. It’s incorrect to say that’s the gist of it, but that’s basically the gist of it, huu.”

When it’s one Witch saying it about another, it was probably right.

Emilia nodded reluctantly in a show of agreement. Sekhmet glanced at her, examining her, before giving a small wave of her hand on the table.

Sekhmet: “Once you exit, haa... that door behind you, it’s goodbye to this dream castle, huu. Which also means that’s the end of the Trial, haa. And that you’re qualified to enter the room, huu... in the back of the Trial chamber, haa.”

Emilia: “Open, the door. Mhm, right. And what’s in there?”

Sekhmet: “The mechanism that keeps the Tomb functioning, huu. Once it’s stopped, haa... Sanctuary’s duties will come to their end, huu. You’ll know how to stop it once you go in, haa.”

Emilia: "I stop the Tomb's functions, and Sanctuary's duties end. And the barrier disappears."

If the barrier was extinguished, then Emilia and the people of Sanctuary would be able to exit the forest.

She did not know how many people would leave for the outside world once the barrier was opened. Or whether life on the outside would truly be to their benefit.

But they could not stay closed up in here any longer.

Just like how Subaru had argued Garfiel down, Emilia had to convince them. It was the end of a long period spent in a place whose time had been stopped.

Once time moved again, how were they going to make a place for themselves to live?

If possible, then Emilia wanted to search for the answer with them. She could guide them by the hand, give a push to their backs, and no matter how hard it became, she could walk by their side.

Though it was an unreliable, shaky, and fledgling demonstration of leadership.

Sekhmet: "That's enough."

Sekhmet spoke, as if she had seen into Emilia's thoughts.

That comment alone did not come with any of her characteristic sighs. Sekhmet had said that, directed at Emilia, while looking her straight-on, making Emilia gulp.

And smile.

Emilia: "Mhm, thank you. That's how I want to go my way."

With that, Emilia got to her feet.

She brushed her silver hair into order, before bowing her head to Sekhmet, who was seeing her off.

She did not really know why she was doing it. But it felt like simply saying a goodbye would not be enough. Why was it that she felt so grateful? Sekhmet surely would not tell her.

She pushed her seat in, and descended the hill on her way to the door.

The door looked ephemeral as it stood there in the middle of the meadow, and Emilia realized that she felt somewhat sad to be leaving the castle in a dream.

White table, crisp breeze. Bright sunshine, perfect weather. It would be so fun to hold a tea party around that table.

Emilia: "Sekhmet-san. Can you tell Echidna something for me?"

Sekhmet: "...Let's hear it, haa."

Emilia: "If we ever get the chance to see each other again, let's have a tea party. Even if it's just a dream, I'll definitely welcome it."

Sekhmet: "—No problem at all. I'll tell her."

Her hand on the doorknob, Emilia glanced back to address Sekhmet, who smiled. Emilia returned the smile, and opened the door.

Beyond the door was darkness.

But for some reason, she felt no hesitation about stepping into it. Emilia already knew exactly where it led.

She had overcome her past, chosen her present, and now met a door to the future.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Feeling somewhat suffocated, Emilia sat up on the hard ground. Coming back from the Trial was not the same as waking up from sleep.

It wasn't that her body had fallen into slumber, but that her consciousness had been taken from her body and led somewhere else. Her body and soul had been in different places, and seeing that her soul hadn't been sleeping, of course it would feel different from sleep.

If it were the same kind of thing as normal sleep, then considering that Emilia was rather bad at waking up, quite a lot of time would pass until she awakened in full. Before, Puck would be the one to wake her up. But as he was not present, it would have taken considerable time.

And now she would need to learn how to deal with this on her own, for the future.

Emilia: “—Ah, gotta stop.”

Emilia shook her head to dispel her sleepy thoughts, and put her hand to the wall as she got to her feet. She felt pretty much fine. It still did not feel like she had overcome the Trials.

But if what Sekhmet had told her in the dream was true—

Emilia: “I should be able to open the door.”

She looked to the back of the chamber, sighting the stone door across the small room.

The door had not moved an inch when she had pushed or pulled it before, and just like how the Tomb's walls glimmered slightly in Emilia's vision, this door also looked like it was cloaked in light.

It might mean that it was unlocked.

Emilia's footsteps pealed as she approached the door. As she stood before it, she held her breath for a moment.

On the other side of this door would be something that would liberate Sanctuary. Sekhmet had said Emilia would know what to do, but Emilia was frankly worried that she did not. Emilia was not exactly confident about her smarts.

Was she not allowed to bring anyone along with her? Though, considering the fact that not many people could get this far inside, she got a feeling that the door would not open if anyone else were around.

Perhaps it was happening because of how smoothly it had gone. Emilia could not erase her paranoia about that door. “Perhaps it was all a deception”, she wondered. You could call that being warier than before, but it was a kind of wariness exclusive to things connected to Echidna. A sense of caution she got because she knew the personality of the person who had set it up.

Emilia: “Anyway, have to go in. Okay, here I go.”

She balls her hands into fists to psych herself up, and moved to put her hand to the door. Should she push or pull? While she considered the issue, just as her fingertips grazed the door—

—The stone door slid sideways to make a path for Emilia.

Emilia: “...I feel like Echidna has a reeeally nasty smile right now.”

Emilia, pouting at her spoiled start, let that mutter escape her lips. She got the feeling that the door’s gimmick was some very elaborate pestering from Echidna, which slightly calmed her tension.

She sighed, gets herself back in the mood, and stepped into the room.

The door opened into a room less than half the size of the Trial chamber.

It was smaller than a room already small by itself. Just two beds from the Roswaal mansion would be enough to occupy that whole space. She had not expected the room to be this cramped. Her eyes widened at how constrained it was, before she spotted the thing in the back of the room... then putting her hand to her mouth in shock.

—In the back of the room was something like a transparent coffin, a woman lying inside. Her time was frozen, keeping her so beautiful that you would think she was only sleeping. The coffin looked to be fashioned from spellstone, and when Emilia touched it to examine its purity, she was shocked at its superior quality. Such high-grade crystal would excel even Puck’s old Anchor.

A woman, sealed in magic ore capable of sealing things superior to the Great Spirit Puck— Of course, she was not breathing. Emilia felt no life from her, and what remains was naught but a husk.

Her long, sleek hair was white as frost. Her cheeks and neck, and whatever areas of skin were visible, possessed the beauty of virgin snow. Emilia’s breathing almost stopped before her stunning visage. Her beautiful form was dressed in perfectly black garment, not a single superfluous color present, the dress-like clothing had been tailored for her, in miraculous harmony with her form.

A beautiful woman who could be described with only two hues— white and black.

True beauty, with its utter lack of need for any superfluous accessories, would probably feel terror when faced with this vision of black and white.

Emilia: “She’s beautiful...”

Emilia’s thoughts escaped her lips. She would find another strikingly beautiful woman if she looked in the mirror, but her sentiments had nothing to do with that. She was simply so enraptured by beauty of this thing before her to the point of being absolutely moved.

A beautiful woman of black and white.

That would be someone she had met in the castle of dreams, the Witch of Greed.

In the depths of the Tomb, waiting there, beyond the defeat of the Witch of Greed’s Trials was—

Emilia: “She looks like Echidna... but who is she?”

A woman reminiscent of the Thirst for Knowledge Incarnate, but who Emilia had never seen before.

Illustration from Volume 15, coloring by DdukaE (source)

Arc 4 Chapter 127B - Never Quit

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 4 “Next Time, I’m Sure We’ll Have Tea”, Part 4 (starting half-way), and Volume 15, Chapter 6 “It Started with Revenge”, Parts 4-5 & 7

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 283

The only observable thing in the room was the white woman in the coffin.

Emilia: “Then, this thing she’s entombed in... is the mechanism to turn off the barrier?”

Emilia tilted her head, looking perplexed, drawing that conclusion after looking over the room.

There were no nice and obvious levers, or spellstones to be crushed. A dim glow shrouded the transparent magic crystal encasing her, and Emilia could tell that it was siphoning Mana.

The only functioning thing in this place was this coffin.

Emilia: “Seriously, who is she... Perhaps Echidna’s mother?”

Emilia thought back on the Witch who had always looked so disgusted around Emilia. She had possessed white hair and worn black clothes, like the woman in the coffin, and Emilia remembered vividly how attractive her features were as well.

The visage of the Witch in her memories and of the woman in the coffin had many points in common. The positioning of her closed eyes, or the shape of the bridge from her lips to her nose were among those. Echidna had looked like she was in her late teens, while the woman in the coffin rather looked like she was in her early twenties. Perhaps it was better to think of her as Echidna’s older sister rather than her mother.

Emilia: “And... there’s no name engraved. But this is supposed to be Echidna’s Tomb.”

Emilia had entered, only to find that the woman in the coffin was not Echidna. Perhaps the Tomb's name was a deception, or—

Emilia: "Maybe this is Echidna, and the girl I saw in the dream wasn't Echidna?"

It was a crazy theory, and even Emilia had to shake her head.

Leaving aside whatever Echidna would say, Sekhmet would surely have mentioned something. And now it was too late for Emilia to simply regard anyone else as Echidna.

Emilia: "It's Echidna's Tomb, but someone else is sleeping here... That might be what's happening."

If so, then they should change the name of the Tomb, as it said, "Echidna rests here". But it was someone else's place of slumber, which caused lots of problems. Offerings would be going to the wrong person, among other things.

It was not the most clear-cut of conclusions, but it was what Emilia had reached it as she inspected the coffin, taking care not to touch the thing.

She glanced over the flow of Mana. It appeared that the coffin and the Tomb were absorbing minuscule amounts of Mana from the earth connected to the Tomb, using that Mana to power some kind of algorithm.

It was absorbing a minute load of Mana, but it was nonetheless powering as something as huge as the barrier, indicating that it was collecting the Mana in quite a large area.

"Earth connected to the Tomb" had been too literal a statement. The entire breadth of the forest inside the barrier was probably the Tomb's power source. And the Tomb was taking tiny loads of Mana at a time so that it would not affect that power source.

Emilia: "It's amazing... So amazing, that I have no idea what it's doing..."

The algorithm was capturing a flow of Mana, powering the magical faculties. Emilia could write simpler algorithms, but the complexity of the algorithm for the barrier around Sanctuary far exceeded her comprehension.

If she stopped these functions, she doubted they would ever restart. Not that there was any need to restart them.

Emilia: “There. If I cut off this flow, the supply will probably be severed.”

Emilia followed the flow of Mana, and locating the origin point for the barrier, which used the coffin as its nucleus.

Inside the Tomb, where the woman’s hands were folded atop her stomach— was the exact point into which the Mana flowed. If Emilia interfered with the Mana’s flow to disrupt the algorithm, then that would terminate all the Tomb’s faculties.

Emilia: “——”

For a moment, she hesitated.

Terminating the Tomb’s faculties would probably damage the mechanism that started the Trial. Which meant that she would no longer be able to enter that castle of dreams.

—She would probably never get to have that tea party with Echidna.

The Witches, or at least Sekhmet, knew about Emilia’s mother. She had felt both awe and nostalgia for Sekhmet’s overwhelming power. She wanted to know what exactly that sense of familiarity had meant.

If entering the castle of dreams were impossible, she would be furthering herself from that goal. And that—

Emilia: “—I just can’t let go, can I?”

With that mutter, Emilia disrupted the weak flow of Mana transmitting from the coffin, with her own Mana originating from her fingertips.

The power that supported Sanctuary’s faculties and comprised its barrier had been messed with. It meddled with the critical parts of the algorithm, compounding from a small into a massive alteration.

The glow eventually melted away, all signs of the algorithm vanishing from the spellstone coffin. All that remained after one last flash of light was the pure magic crystal, the woman still sealed inside.

Emilia: "...I guess that's the end."

Having observed no visible changes, Emilia timidly looked around the area. The flow of Mana previously circling through the Tomb was gone, leaving the Tomb as nothing more than a massive stone building.

With a quiet sigh, Emilia leaned against the coffin.

The Tomb had probably stopped rejecting the unqualified now. Emilia should bring Roswaal or Ryuzu inside, as they would probably know what was going on, and ask them who the person slumbering here was.

Emilia: "It's over... Yes, it's over..."

By repeating that statement over and over, Emilia attempted to reassure herself of the truth that did not feel true. She thought back on the lofty talk she had given to Roswaal before challenging the Tomb.

Roswaal had told her, "All you have to do is to reach the results you desire".

Emilia could not guess what his feelings had been at the time, but she doubted that he wanted her to beat the Trial. Though, he had also been the one who had brought her here and was endorsing her as a candidate for the Royal Selection, leaving her confused as to his reasoning.

Emilia: "Teacher... That was what he said, right?"

She also recalled this person who Roswaal had called Teacher. Even someone at the pinnacle of magic like Roswaal would, naturally, have had a master. Roswaal's master, that being this person called Teacher, had created the Sanctuary with him.

Emilia: "And maybe... that was you."

Thought Emilia as she stroked the coffin. If Roswaal had a teacher, someone irreplaceable to him, then perhaps this white woman would be suitable for that spot.

Emilia: "—I need to talk to everyone."

Emilia shook her head, pulling her gaze away from the coffin.

Though, she would have to postpone the talk about the entombed woman. According to Subaru, if they failed to exit Sanctuary before tomorrow night, that is, the dawn of the day after the next one, then something terrible was going to happen.

“If anything obviously out of the ordinary happens in Sanctuary, run away as fast as you can”, he had said.

Though she had a whole day of extra time, she did not know whether any unforeseen circumstances were going to pop up. She trotted out of the room and into the hallway, making her way to the exit. If things were still the same, then Ryuzu and the people of Sanctuary should be waiting for her outside.

Emilia’s footsteps rang over the stone as she ran down the corridor, before exiting the dark tomb to the open plaza. Where—

Emilia: “—Eh?”

—Met with a blizzard raging through Sanctuary, Emilia breathed a hazy, white breath.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The snow encompassed everything in sight.

The gale roared close by, and the snow stole her body of warmth. After a white puff of breath, Emilia’s amethyst eyes blinked as her throat froze in shock.

—What happened!??

???: “—lia-sama!”

The wind howled. Her chilled ears throbbed in pain.

Frigid gusts felt like they sliced Emilia’s skin, dressed lightly as she was, when she heard a voice calling from beyond the blizzard, leading her to stop still.

Snow had already accumulated up to Emilia's knees, threatening to swamp her down. Every step she took was forceful, as she slogged through the frost to find silhouettes gathered beyond the veil of white. They must be the people of Sanctuary. Meaning that they had waited for Emilia in the blizzard, without ever retreating indoors---

Emilia: "Everyone! Why are you all outside in this sn... Huh?"

Emilia imagined that everyone would be huddled together to stave off the cold, when she stopped.

There were about forty Sanctuary dwellers including Ryuzu. That was a huge number to start with, but Emilia spotted people who should not be present as well.

???: "Emilia-sama! Is the Trial over!?"

The speaker was a young man with a crew cut.

Emilia knew him. Because she had spoken with him before coming to Sanctuary, and she would have spoken to him even if he did not acknowledge her.

It was a youth from Arlam Village's young men's brigade.

Seeing him, when he was supposed to have left Sanctuary several hours ago on Otto's instructions, made Emilia's eyes shoot open. And what surprised her even more was that it was not just him. With the man sporting a crewcut as their leader, Emilia spotted several other people from Arlam. They had come in carriages, huddling with the people of Sanctuary inside the vehicles or under their shadow to endure the blizzard.

Emilia: "Wh—why is everyone...? But didn't you evacuate?"

Man: "Yes, we did. On Subaru-sama and Otto-san's instructions. They said that the dragons knew the way, so we should just run."

Emilia: "Then why!? Did you not hear that it's going to be dangerous here?"

Man: "We did. And we were told."

The youth grit his teeth, before raising his head and pointing beyond the forest.

Man: “To wait outside the forest, to return once the signal appears from Sanctuary, and to retrieve those still here.”

Emilia: “Huh?”

Man: “Those remaining, such as Ram-sama and the others. Anyway, they would fire magic into the sky. We were to return to Sanctuary once we saw it, load the residents into carriages, and leave.”

Emilia: “Who gave these instructions!?”

Man: “Otto-san did.”

Hearing Otto’s name made Emilia think of that flaky-looking merchant.

Though, no matter what impression he gave, he was Subaru’s friend. Every time she saw the two talking jovially, it reaffirmed Emilia’s assessment that Otto was someone capable of rivalling Subaru. Otto had definitely planned a lot of the events in Sanctuary, starting with the Garfiel affair, while acting as Subaru’s co-conspirator.

Meaning that the instructions were of utmost significance.

Emilia: “B—but, this was still reckless. The blizzard is blowing so hard... You should have known that doing this was crazy!”

Man: “...”

Emilia: “What’s wrong?”

The man made an awkward-looking expression and averted his gaze. Emilia did not overlook his reaction, instead pressing him further. Emilia’s amethyst gaze pierced him. He put his hand to his brow, and exhaled a frigid-white sigh.

Man: “Otto-san told us that what would be truly dangerous would be snow arriving prior to the signal. Since snowfall marks the time limit... He told us to immediately leave the forest then.”

Emilia: “They even knew about the snowfall... No, just, never mind that. Why did you come, then!?”

Man: “—Because it snowed.”

The man straightened his back and gave his firm reply to Emilia’s wails. His gaze was so strong that it made Emilia fall speechless.

They had known that snowfall meant danger. And when they saw it was snowing in Sanctuary, they had understood they had reached the time limit for that danger. And despite that knowledge, they had chosen to come here.

They had rushed here, where the residents of Sanctuary were in danger.

Man: “We suspected that Subaru-sama or yourself would have done exactly this.”

Emilia: “———”

With a wry smile, the man answered the question in Emilia’s throat.

So the evacuees overlooking the carriages behind him were Arlam’s young men brigade. Since their goal was to evacuate the people of Sanctuary, everyone unneeded must have left them and evacuated by themselves. That said, those who had left would be forced into the pain of evacuating by foot. And these men were here, because they had judged that it was the correct thing to do.

Man: “Emilia-sama, if the Trial is over... Can they exit this place?”

Emilia: “Y—yes, they can. But, with this snow and wind...”

The man gazed at the ground, clicking his tongue in frustration. Snow had piled so thick that walking even a short distance was a trial in itself. Carriage wheels would not move in these conditions; they were stranded.

But if they could at least find somewhere warm, where many people could wait through the cold—

Emilia: “If we cannot relocate as far as the cathedral... let’s get everyone inside the Tomb. The Mana there keeps the inside warm, and we don’t have to worry about the building collapsing beneath the snow.”

Man: “Is it possible to go in?”

Emilia: "I turned off the Tomb's dangerous mechanisms, everything's dandy now. Anyway, are you able to transport everyone as far as the Tomb? And the dragons should be loosed from the carriages and let inside too."

The six dragons had accommodated the brigade and brought them all the way back here. Even in this instant, the dragons' carriages were protecting two-digit columns' worth of people. It was inconceivable that they could possibly abandon the dragons.

The man nodded with a "definitely".

It should be good enough to deal with the snow for the moment. The issue now was that something dangerous was going to happen alongside the snowfall.

Emilia: "I wish we'd actually talked about this beforehand!"

Emilia mourned the lack of time to speak with Subaru before challenging the Trials. This had probably happened because Subaru had not wanted to leave Emilia with anything that would worry her needlessly. Though she was glad for his thoughtfulness, it was ridiculous that it was going to hamper her reaction to the danger.

Emilia could think of three people who, like Subaru's group, probably would know about the snow. That would be Roswaal, Ram, and—

???: "Ya've done well to make it back to us, Emilia-sama."

Emilia: "Ryuzu-san!"

A pink-haired girl hopped out of a carriage and onto the snow— Ryuzu. With how short she was, the snow that reached up to Emilia's knees reached up to her thighs. She trekked laboriously through the snow while Emilia hurriedly approached her.

Emilia: "The Trial's all over now! Is everybody here!?"

Ryuzu: "All of Sanctuary's people, 'n all of the humans who came back for us are present, yes. But..."

Emilia: "But?"

Ryuzu: “That child, Ram, and Ros-bo ain’t here. The two of’em have been somewhere else since before it started snowing.”

Emilia gazed over the people and the carriages. She did not spot that familiarly bizarre outfit, nor that dependable pink-haired girl.

Emilia: “If I don’t search for them... Ryuzu-san! Do you know? What’s going to happen if we stay in Sanctuary with all this snow?”

Ryuzu: “———”

Ryuzu’s cheeks stiffened and she lowered her gaze. Emilia recognized what it meant. Ryuzu knew what was happening. She knew what the danger was.

Emilia: “Please tell me, Ryuzu-san. We have to prevent it.”

Ryuzu: “But ya see, the timing for it’s off. Su-bo said that Ros-bo’s planning for snow to fall tomorrow night, so there must’ve been some mistake for it to be snowing now...”

Emilia: “What mistake, it is snowing right now! So! We need to do whatever we need to do when the snow comes! Ryuzu-san!”

Emilia put her hands on Ryuzu’s small shoulders as she attempted to persuade her. Ryuzu’s sour expression shifted, until she was left staring at Emilia in dumb shock.

Emilia: “Wh—what’s wrong, Ryuzu-san?”

Ryuzu: “...Emilia-sama. Have ya gone into the building deep in Sanctuary’s forest?”

Emilia: “Deep in the forest? No, I haven’t...”

Emilia tilted her head in confusion.

“That should not be possi...”, begun Ryuzu, before looking at the Tomb behind Emilia.

Ryuzu: “Then maybe there was something in the Tomb... that seem’d special, perhaps? Like, perhaps a giant spellstone, or something similar.”

Emilia: “—There was. A reeeally big spellstone. I kinda wanted to ask you and Roswaal to look at it later.”

Emilia glanced around the area, then drew her lips near to Ryuzu’s ear. So that nobody else could hear her, as they begun preparations to move the dragons.

Emilia: “There was a woman inside the magic crystal. I don’t know who she is.”

Ryuzu: “———!”

The information rocked Ryuzu’s expression. Ryuzu’s eyes shot open as she stared at Emilia. After a long, long sigh, she let out a “Then” as she nodded, looking as if convinced by something.

Ryuzu: “Understood. Emilia-sama, ask whatever ya wish. I’m obligated to answer you. Obligated to follow yer orders.”

Emilia: “I’m not ordering anything!”

Ryuzu: “Listen. That thing ya touched in the Tomb’s a spellstone that picks who’s qualified to command Ryuzu. Ya now hold those qualifications instead of Gar-bo. I... No, we, shall obey ya. Please order us however ya wish.”

With that solemn reply, Ryuzu attempted to lower herself while already thigh-deep in snow. This would result in her kneeling and burying herself head-deep in snow, causing Emilia to panic. She promptly grabbed Ryuzu by the shoulders to stop her.

Emilia: “Uwa! Right, okay! So I can ask things from you, Ryuzu-san. Then I’ll ask this. Please tell me what happens when there’s snow in Sanctuary.”

Ryuzu: “...Su-bo says that once it snows in Sanctuary, the Witchbeast, the Great Rabbit’ll come. It’s drawn here by the Mana in the spell that changes the weather to snowfall... ‘Twas the word.”

Emilia: “Spell to change the weather... Then, somebody’s behind this!?”

Surprised, Ryuzu silently nodded to Emilia.

This was magic immense enough to manipulate the weather. Puck could easily do this, if he were serious. Which made Puck the most suspicious candidate, but considering Ryuzu's attitude and the context of the situation, Emilia immediately landed on the culprit.

Emilia: "...Is it Roswaal?"

Ryuzu: "Most likely. I think Miss Ram's left to try and stop him. But if the snow came anyway, then it's possible that..."

Emilia: "Stop. I don't want to think about it. Anyway, I need to find them. Ryuzu-san, I'm going to start searching the village for them. If you have any ideas where they could—"

Ryuzu: "No need for that, Emilia-sama."

She interrupted Emilia with incredible confidence. It was like she knew exactly what Emilia was thinking, and it made Emilia gulp. And—

Ryuzu: "Us Ryuzus keep a close eye on everything Sanctuary— We'll find and get ya to them in a jiffy."

Ryuzu gave Emilia her stamp of approval.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Ram, as she laid unconscious, almost looked as if she was merely sleeping.

Roswaal: "...Ram?"

Roswaal drew the fallen, limp girl into his arms, jerking her. But Ram gave no reply. This girl, who would put aside anything to prioritize Roswaal's words. Ram.

Of course she did not reply.

Ram was dying this very instant. And it was all because of Roswaal.

The burning of the Gospel had sent him into a fury. His vision seething with crimson, he had no idea what was anything anymore, but he knew that he could not forgive Ram for doing this and—

Roswaal: “———”

—He had struck her with a ball of fire while she was undefended, blasting her away.

She had strained herself with imperfect oni strength, and burdened herself with the exact same fatigue only hours earlier. Ram’s body had reached its limit when a fireball blasted her.

Her life hanged in the balance.

Roswaal: “...Ram.”

Roswaal could not remember what he had thought as he drew near to her prone form and touched her. Even now, as he held her close and gaze at her sleeping, he did not think anything.

Roswaal regarded Ram as an incredibly convenient pawn. She had gone through ordeals by his hand, and their Contract preserved an extremely simple relationship between them. He had exposed his true thoughts only to Ram, and had spoken of his goal only to Ram. He believed that once that goal had been achieved, he would hand himself over to her as a reward for his accomplice.

But Ram had betrayed Roswaal partway through his course.

Ram’s statements had been correct; according to her Contract, the situation had not unfolded as Roswaal intended, and her rebellion was her pre-established revenge.

So he would not fault Ram. Were he to be forced to say anything, then he would have liked her to postpone her revenge and exact it once the situation with the barrier had been resolved without a doubt. There was also the topic of his bet with Subaru. Garfiel had been unexpectedly flexible, and some sympathetic-sounding talk had made Emilia reattempt the Trial, but ultimately Subaru’s speeches had been the ramblings of a weakling.

It was impossible to defy a predetermined future. The path to reach that future may change, but events would still lead to the destined end. Should someone stray from the path leading to the correct ending, what awaited was doom.

But they were nonetheless resisting it, and it made Roswaal laugh. And the fact that Roswaal knew this, and knew how weak he was for fearing their actions, also brought about laughter.

Why were they trying to change anything? He could not understand it.

Once any feeling reached its peak, once it reached its apex, it would never fade in intensity. If you loved someone, if your heart ever blazed with love for someone, then that heat, that brilliance, ought to be eternal.

And the same concept applied even if the emotion in question were hatred.

Feelings held for a long, long time should be sublimated into legitimacy. Feelings fostered over time were ironclad, never to yield to anyone. They absolutely must be.

Garfiel's hatred for the outside had been broken.

Emilia had accepted her detested and sorrowful past.

And Ram's endless, vengeful hatred for Roswaal had,

Ram: "I am in love with you, Roswaal-sama."

Roswaal: "———!!"

A love confession like a curse, burning deep in his ears.

Words that had come from the mouth of the girl in his arms, which absolutely should never have.

Had the Contract been binding her heart or soul, then he would have understood it. Her burning desire for revenge had been converted into subordination to Roswaal, and her hatred into affection. That was why Roswaal had Ram assist him in his goal more than anyone else, and trusted her for what would come after its realization more than anyone else.

Because Roswaal believed in her hatred that had turned to love, and in her vengeful desire to kill him. Because he believed in the hatred found in the eyes of the girl when he had first met her, and how she had gazed at him, murder in her eyes.

—And yet Ram had betrayed her own vengeance, to sing her love.

Roswaal: "Why did you, Ram...? I don't understand it..."

Roswaal heard how her faint breathing grew distant, and sensed that Ram's life was ending.

Her heartbeat faded. Something screamed that it must not continue. His right eye ached. Ached, so terribly. Stop! Stop asserting yourself. He was going to lose himself.

What should he do? What must he do? He could not tell what he needed to do, and what he must not do. He could not remember it. He could not conceive it.

He looked around the area. Nothing here was something he sought. The Gospel, which told Roswaal of the correct path, had been lost in flames. Nobody would teach Roswaal. What was the choice he must make here? Nobody would teach him. It could not be helped anymore.

Roswaal: “—Wailing wind beckons the snow, the light that fills the earth returns to sky. Each droplet is silence given form, ivory untouched by past karma's favor laments unchanging eternity.”

A canto.

This hummed, song-like canto directed to the power wrapped around Roswaal L. Mathers. The vast store of Mana interacted with the refined algorithm, bringing dark clouds to the night forest. Frozen wind blew, and a chill cold enough to freeze one to the core raged through Sanctuary. Clouds burdened with snow shrouded the entirety of the enclosed forest, and white snowflakes fell to the earth one after the other.

—This was the power of the massive-scale magic algorithm, Ultimillion.

Roswaal: “—Ugh, kh.”

After the canto, the magical power held for extensive time was released. A massive load of Mana was ripped out of Roswaal, and even he, boasting a transcendental store of Mana, had to feel somewhat dizzy.

Originally, the Mana for magic this widespread would be built up over several months, and it should be used on a smaller area. Roswaal was irregular for preparing the necessary Mana in only two days, and for affecting a range more than twice the normal range.

After the magician who achieved this feat gave a long sigh, he found himself utterly lost on what to do.

Roswaal: “I’ve made it snow, as according to the Gospel... What do I do now?”

Roswaal had forgotten that he had made it snow one day earlier than what the Gospel’s writ had stated. Or actually, not even the bet occupied a corner of his mind anymore.

Roswaal did not pay any heed to the method. His only concerns were how the events around Sanctuary would conclude. Snow would fall, and the barrier would be undone. Should that happen, should that happen— Then what happens?

Roswaal: “Ram... Yes... Ram.”

He could no longer hear Ram’s breathing.

Roswaal looked down at her face, and gently touched her forehead. Her transformation meant that her scar, where her horn used to be, was bleeding. Roswaal wiped away the blood, and as he always did with Ram, and injected colorless Mana, formed from a combination of all six Mana elements, into her. This had been a ritual continuously performed by the pair, so that Ram’s oni blood would not conquer her.

It was not as if he was thinking anything in particular.

Roswaal unconsciously understood that he was merely betting that her vitality as an oni would keep her alive. He had no questions about saving her. Ram needed to live. For the sake of Roswaal’s goal, and for what would come after that goal had been fulfilled.

Roswaal: “Teacher... Teacher, I... What am I supposed to do! Teacher... Teacher! Please tell me... please... guide me, again...”

Roswaal’s confusion reached its pinnacle, and he could not even comprehend his own heart as he wailed. Though he was trying to ensure Ram’s survival, his anger about her betrayal remained. He knew that he had lost his beacon, but still yearned for that old light.

The snow fell, encasing Roswaal and Ram in white flakes. Everything drowned in white, disappearing.

For some reason, the thought that it would be fine for that to happen, was not present in him in the slightest.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Emilia cut through the snow, breathing white puffs as she dashed onward.

Emilia: “Huma! Again, Huma!”

She shouted, casting ice magic on top of ice magic. She was doing it to avoid losing any time from getting her feet bogged in the snow. She used her magic to purposefully harden the snow, giving her a path to sprint upon.

Some people would slip on it, and find themselves in quite a bit of danger by using this method, but,

Emilia: “Alright! Got it!”

Emilia was a practitioner of ice magic, and had grown up in Elio Forest. She was accustomed to frozen ground. She dashed over the freezing snow of Sanctuary like she owned the place, with her tiny escort running after her.

Emilia: “Is this honestly ok with you?”

Emilia asked her guide, who was out of breath. The girl looked up at Emilia, and replied with only a nod. They could communicate, but she wouldn’t talk to Emilia. This was exactly what Ryuzu— what the representative Ryuzu personality, had told her to expect.

Ryuzu had suddenly begun showing special respect to Emilia outside the Tomb.

She had informed Emilia that she was an entity born from the soul of a girl named Ryuzu Meyer, and that there were several duplicates of her in the same circumstances. These Ryuzus functioned as eyes, spotted around Sanctuary, had gone searching for Roswaal and Ram in the village, and were now guiding her to them.

In this world, there was a kind of extraordinarily rare magic, called duplication magic.

Emilia had never heard about it having been utilized on living creatures before, but perhaps it had been done as a kind of forbidden magic. Emilia had kept herself from asking all the questions she wanted to ask, instead running through Sanctuary while relying on the Ryuzu clone, in search of Roswaal and Ram.

Emilia: “If I don’t hurry... the Great Rabbit will show up!”

The Witchbeast Great Rabbit.

Even Emilia, ignorant of the world as she was, knew the name of this creature.

It was one of the Three Great Witchbeasts, alongside the White Whale and Black Serpent, and much like those other two beasts, it was regarded as a calamity.

It was a Witchbeast of weak, frail, tiny little rabbits. But the beast itself was a group of individuals, a horde of creatures. It was not each individual hare, but the entire group of them that made up the calamity called the Great Rabbit.

With its endless hunger and overwhelming numbers, it devoured everything in its path. But still that would not sate it, and it would proceed to wander the world while cannibalizing itself. Indeed, ‘twas a calamity.

The terrifying thing was how it could multiply itself infinitely. The Great Rabbit would usually be low in number, cannibalizing itself to stave hunger when nothing to eat was found— but should it lay eyes on prey that fueled its appetite, it could not be stopped. It would compound endlessly in number, gnashing away until the prey was destroyed, then cut its numbers back down as it moved on, leaving behind a wasteland. That was the nature of this thing.

Emilia had decided that she had no choice but to face this incredible Witchbeast. They had already lost the time they needed to flee the Rabbit’s attack. The accumulated snow was an obstacle to their escape, leaving Emilia and the others without options.

The non-combatants would hide in the Tomb, while a frontline would formed at the entrance.

That was the only strategy possible in opposing the Witchbeast. It would consist of Emilia and Roswaal. If possible, they would include Ram, as they needed to assemble all the combat power available in Sanctuary. And so—

Emilia: “———”

Snapped tree trunks and buildings battered from battle. Gashes in the earth, and unnatural pilings of snow— A man and a woman, close together in a tree's shade.

Having found Ram limp and sleeping, and the dazed Roswaal, Emilia shouted.

Emilia: “—Roswaal! Ram!!”

Emilia left the silent Ryuzu replicant behind as she glided over the frozen snow. She manipulated the ground beneath her however she wanted, scattering flakes of ice as she moved like a snow fairy, before grabbing Roswaal's shoulders, as he laid motionless, half-buried in the snow.

Emilia: “Are you listening!? Roswaal, come on, Roswaal! We're in trouble! We have to help everyone! This is not the time to be frozen!”

Roswaal: “———”

Rocking him made the snow fall off Roswaal's head. It revealed his expression, and Emilia clicked her throat. Roswaal's face, as he looked at Ram, eyes dim, looked feeble.

Emilia: “Roswaal...?”

Roswaal: “...”

Roswaal said nothing. It didn't even seem like he had noticed Emilia.

His lack of reaction scared her, and she lowered her gaze to what was cradled in his arms. There slept a pink-haired girl.

—With snow on her cheeks, showing no signs of melting.

Emilia: “—! Ram? Ram!”

Emilia called to Ram in Roswaal's arms, and tried to wake her up.

But Ram gave no particular reaction. Of course she did not reply, but she had not opened her eyes either— In fact, her eyelids did not even twitch. Emilia touched her cheek, and her lips, to find them abnormally cold. As if she was—

Emilia: “That, isn’t happening!”

Emilia rejected her ineffectual thinking as she gritted her teeth and reached into Ram’s clothes. Her hand brushed across Ram’s chest, where she found a faint heartbeat.

It could disappear at any moment, with how frail, and feeble it was.

Emilia: “—She’s alive! It’s okay! We still have time, Roswaal!”

With renewed hope, Emilia yelled as she glanced back to Roswaal. But Roswaal remained with his hand on Ram’s brow, looking utterly dazed.

And only then Emilia noticed.

There was a massive amount of Mana flowing from Roswaal’s hand and into Ram. And it was acting as Ram’s lifeline.

Emilia: “Then, you’re saving Ram’s life...”

Roswaal: “———”

Emilia: “—!”

As she realized that fact, Emilia also realized the bitter truth.

Ram was unconscious, in dire condition, and Roswaal must administer the delicate treatment to heal her. They could not participate in the fight.

Meaning that Emilia had to face the Great Rabbit on her own.

—Can she do it?

This monster was one of the three that had survived for four-hundred years, since the Witch of Envy’s era.

Who could guess how many people had steeled themselves to face this thing, just as Emilia was doing right now? None of them had managed to destroy the beast. How could Emilia stand up and fight it alone? Without Puck. Only Emilia.

Emilia: "If we go now..."

Maybe they could still run? But what were they meant to do if it chased them?

Were they to encounter it without any place to call a refuge or hiding place, then Emilia would not be able to protect the civilians from the Witchbeast. Defending some place like the Tomb presented the most potential.

It hurt that Roswaal and Ram could not help in combat, but Emilia must not abandon the fight.

Emilia: "Roswaal. Bring Ram and come along with me. Everybody from Sanctuary... Mhm, everybody is taking shelter in the Tomb. And I'm going to protect them. Don't give up on healing Ram, and—"

Roswaal: "It's useless."

Emilia met Roswaal's eye level and began proclaiming her resolve to Roswaal, when his whisper interrupted her. Roswaal stared at Ram's face, his eyes still hollow.

Roswaal: "Useless. Everything is... I don't know the future. I don't understand myself. This world is done."

Emilia: "So you're back to saying this...! Who cares about the book! Maybe someone kind of important wrote it, but how does that have any say in what we do!"

Unable to bear his resignation, Emilia raised her voice at Roswaal. Why was this happening? This was not the Roswaal that Emilia knew. Always composed, making bold decisions like nothing, acting like he knew absolutely everything there was to know, all with a grin. Was that not Roswaal?

Who was this weak man, who had given up on everything, looking like a cornered and lost child?

Emilia: "Roswaal. I can't understand what you're feeling or how hurt you are right now. I do want to understand, but there's no time for me to learn... But I want to make that time. And so. I need you to cooperate with me."

Roswaal: "———"

Emilia did not understand Roswaal. He could continue being like this, and she still would not understand him.

But if they exchanged words, and divulged their feelings, then she would understand some things. She would never understand if she never did that. Those things would never be communicated, if the time for them was never given.

Emilia needed to create the time they needed to grow closer to one another.

Emilia: “Please, stand up, Roswaal. Neither of us are ending here. We won’t let Ram end either. We’re all going back to everyone, together, and—”

Roswaal: “I...”

Emilia insisted. But Roswaal did not meet her gaze.

He continued staring down at Ram, his scarlet lips moving to say—

Roswaal: “I, quit...”

Spoken so quietly it could disappear.

The frigid, whistling winds continued whipping by, so the words were barely audible. The whisper had hardly left his lips. It was questionable whether Roswaal himself had heard it either.

But she had definitely heard that quiet sound of surrender. And so, Emilia—

Emilia: “—Don’t you dare say that!!”

—Grabbed Roswaal by the collar, screaming in anger.

The movement rocked Roswaal’s head, and he whimpered in pain. Emilia assaulted him, unrelenting, with her words.

Emilia: “You quit!? What are you saying, you quit!? There is nothing out there to possibly quit! There is nothing for you to quit! Don’t you dare give up! Don’t you dare surrender! Not me, or Ram, or you, are done with any single thing yet!”

Roswaal: “———”

Emilia: “I finished the Trial! The past I was so scared of! A happy present that could’ve happened! Sad futures that might come! I saw them all! And I still decided to walk this path... and with that resolve, I can finally walk it!”

She howled. Wrath beyond what Emilia could ever remember surged up inside her.

—Yes. There it is. Listen to that whiny voice, hear those pathetic opinions, see that gutless spirit. This is what it looks like when you accept surrender as your end.

Emilia’s roars made Roswaal’s cheeks stiffen, and he averted his gaze. This was not him being worried for Ram, this was him distracting himself and running from something he did not want to see. Emilia grabbed him by the jaw, forcing him to face her.

Emilia: “Look at people’s faces when they are talking to you!”

Roswaal: “—Hk.”

Emilia: “You won’t understand what people are thinking if you don’t look them in the eye. You won’t understand why people are doing what they’re doing if you don’t look them in the eye. Keep your eyes on mine, hear my voice, stand up, and follow me.”

Roswaal’s odd-colored eyes blinked as if realizing something. His lips twitched. But he did not manage to squeeze out any words.

Roswaal: “—Ah.”

Emilia: “I will never let anyone say that they quit. As long as you’re alive, there’s nothing out there for you to quit. So— I am not letting anyone die here!”

Emilia got to her feet and turned around.

Over ten Ryuzu doubles had assembled at this place. All of them kneeled reverently, awaiting orders. Emilia took a breath, and shouted her command.

Emilia: “Take Roswaal and Ram back to the Tomb. I’m protecting everyone, no matter what.”

Speaking grandly, and aware that she had only acquired this right by coincidence, Emilia led the obedient Ryuzus as she broke into a sprint through Sanctuary's snow. The Ryuzus grouped together to support Roswaal and Ram, taking turns to make the path while following after Emilia.

—Emilia was no longer hesitating in her course for an instant.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

And so the tales—

Subaru: “No need to push yourself so hard, Emilia-tan.”

The boy who cherished the girl, who had decided to protect everything, had returned to her side.

???: “You can hold off and fall back— The inaugural battle of deliverance is here.”

Emilia: “I’m sorry. That kind of went over my head.”

Their usual banter made her smile as she supported her failing body, her eyes tracking the white silhouettes as they pressed forward.

Two silhouettes, walking hand-in-hand. She heard two voices as well. They sounded lively, and feeling that she had been waiting to hear this, the girl's heartbeat pounded.

???: “What comes next is a complete unknown, in fact.”

???: “Yeah, we’ll be doing something about this— Together, me and you!!”

And the tales converged, their wishes perfect mirrors of one another, as they entered the finale.

Knight and Princess, facing Witchbeast in a blizzard-swept Sanctuary.

A Knight who could not manage on his own brought a magician at his side, consecrating everything to victory.

—The final battle of Sanctuary commenced.

Arc 4 Chapter 130 - Faces in the Snow

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Chapter 8 “Faces Fashioned from Snow”

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 300

Icy winds whipped past. Frigid temperatures sliced at his skin. A horde of white hunger swamped everything in sight. The hand he was holding was warm. Natsuki Subaru felt not a speck of hesitation or doubt about standing here.

Subaru: “It’s cool that we had that cool entrance and all, but isn’t this a little weird!?”

Subaru raised his voice, addressing the unanticipated scene as the snow battered his cheeks.

Roaring wind raged through Sanctuary, which was currently embroiled in thick snow. Subaru had been ready for this to happen eventually, but the date was different from what he remembered.

Sanctuary would be buried in snow and lure the mob of white Witchbeasts at dawn— Supposedly, there should be over half a day of time left to spare.

Behind Subaru stood a silver-haired girl, breathing white with her shoulders heaving.

Emilia was unable to fully restrain the Mana overflowing from her body, and had half-encased herself in ice. Her left side was covered in white, and though that had to hurt, not a speck of anguish showed on her face.

Subaru mentally praised the bold Emilia, while simultaneously suspecting her as the cause of the snow. Had she been unable to control this frenzy of magic, bringing snow, and beckoning the Rabbit?

Subaru: “But then the order’s off...”

The sequence between the uncontrolled magic and the Rabbit’s arrival were backwards.

Emilia had used her magic to oppose the Rabbit, which resulted in her suffering damage. If Subaru was following the correct course of things, then the real cause was—

Subaru: “———”

Behind Emilia, Echidna’s Tomb loomed.

Subaru acknowledged the gazes peering at him out from the entrance, and nodded. If the people inside were the residents of Sanctuary, then they were not feeling the effects of the Tomb’s mechanisms.

That meant that the Tomb’s operations had been terminated, or rather, Emilia had defeated the Trial.

Emilia had overcome the Trial. Snow was falling earlier than anticipated. The state of Sanctuary’s citizens, and Emilia’s resolute shouts and expression. And also,

Subaru: “Roswaal.”

Roswaal: “———”

Roswaal, dazedly staring at Subaru while sitting beside the Tomb’s entrance. Subaru did not have the time right now to check if Ram, sleeping in his arms, was okay.

All he could do was to believe she was safe.

Beatrice: “Subaru.”

When the small hand gripping Subaru’s own gave him a tug.

Hit with an unfamiliar form of address from a familiar voice, Subaru choked.

Subaru: “Oughbuhnuh.”

Beatrice: “...Explain that bizarre reply, I suppose.”

Subaru: “It just feels so fresh when you say my name, so. Can you do it again but sounding shy?”

Beatrice: “What!? You are actually mad, in fact! This is no time for buffoonery, I suppose!”

Beatrice snapped at Subaru's silly request, her expression terrifying.

Subaru reluctantly dropped the issue, expecting her to ignore it no matter how much he pestered her, when—

Beatrice: "S—Subaru... There, I did it, in fact."

Subaru: "Beako, you are adorable."

Beatrice: "—! I'm never saying it again, I suppose! I'll remember this after we're done, in fact!"

Beatrice yelled in response, her face red as she swung her held hand in a huff.

Subaru looked at her, enchanted, while also directing his attention to the horde of approaching rabbits. He licks his dry lips.

Subaru: "So, Beatrice. We're fighting the Great Rabbit, how's your mental prep?"

Beatrice: "I am moments post-Contract. The opponent is one of the Three Great Witchbeasts. We are unprepared and conditions are poor. My Contractor is a novice. I have not participated in battle in four-hundred years."

Subaru: "And?"

Beatrice: "I could ask for no finer handicap, I suppose."

Beatrice smiled fearlessly as the beasts, their teeth chattering, swooped in to close the distance. Subaru stepped forward to face their attack, glancing to Emilia behind him.

Subaru: "Me and Beatrice are about to crush the Great Rabbit. Emilia-tan, I'm sorry for this, but some are gonna slip past, so I want you protecting everyone!"

Emilia: "I'm..."

Emilia cut off her sentence, hesitant for a moment. But after closing her eyes and taking a quiet breath,

Emilia: "Right. Leave it to me— And I'm leaving it to you."

Subaru: “Yup, all mine.”

Put the right people in the right places, split the roles up between them, and do what would be most fitting for you. Emilia inhaled deeply as she concentrated on controlling her magic and erected a defensive line. The snowfall continued to rage as Emilia formed a blockade of ice.

Subaru stepped out from Emilia’s line of defense as he gazed at the white typhoon.

Red eyes and sharp fangs stretched on as far as his eyes could see. Coated in pure white fur, this was the Witchbeast driven by the most primitive and insatiable hunger in the world. The Great Horde—otherwise said, the Great Rabbit.

The chittering of their fangs made the ache in Subaru’s soul spread to his whole body.

He had died gruesomely, flesh devoured, and innards ravaged, to those fangs. He had felt the agony of a hole gaping through his abdomen, spouting blood while teeth severed his windpipe. And he knew the overwhelming feeling of loss from death, his body chewed up and missing limbs, in Emilia’s arms.

To complete this loop series, Natsuki Subaru must overcome this Witchbeast.

Beatrice: “—Are you afraid, I suppose?”

Beatrice called out to Subaru, holding his breath as he gazed at the beast.

Her face was impassive as she glanced up at him. But her eyes, and her expression, informed Subaru far more eloquently than her words.

—Informed him exactly who was it that stood beside him.

Subaru: “Nope. Not at all.”

Beatrice: “Oh?”

Subaru: “Emilia’s at my back and you’re at my side. It’s like I’m strongest man in the world.”

Beatrice: “Doubtlessly, in fact.”

Beatrice's cheeks relaxed into a smile. Her expression was satisfied at his acknowledgement. Subaru joined her in her wicked smile.

The Great Rabbit entered a frenzy, rushing for the brazen duo.

Beatrice pointed her free right hand, the one not holding Subaru's, at the Rabbit.

Beatrice: "We'll begin with a warm-up, I suppose— El Minya."

Space spiraled alongside the canto as purple crystals materialized around Subaru and Beatrice, surrounding them.

Those things, with the brilliance and bearing of icicles, were the magical stakes that Beatrice had used in a previous loop to skewer Elsa. In a single instant, forty of them had formed.

It took less than a moment for one to aim and silently shoot off— without its aim deviating in the least, spearing straight through the open mouth of a rabbit. The skewer proceeded to plummet through the air and plunge into the rear lines of the horde, where it exploded. Fragments of crystal shredded the beasts around the site of impact, mincing them to pieces.

That was what one shot was capable of doing, and Beatrice had fired forty at once.

The looming omnipresent destruction caused bloody flowers to blossom through the white world. The ruthless opening attack had annihilated hundreds of hares. Aftermath of the destruction littered the clearing, where the surviving hares shrieked in agony. The beast could multiply infinitely and there were still individuals left, but even so, it worked Subaru up.

That was Beatrice's unimaginably devastating destructive capabilities do.

Subaru: "W-woaaaaaaaaaaaaaah!!"

Beatrice: "I—is it that incredible, I suppose? It isn't anything so impressive, in fact. This is the lowest of techniques from Betty, I suppose. A piece of cake, in fact."

Subaru: "No, what, the... This savage magic! What affinity—!?"

Beatrice: "It's obviously going to be Yin, I suppose. I'm not the best at other types of magic, in fact."

Said Beatrice, not looking entirely satisfied about Subaru's praise.

The ravaged Witchbeast immediately started cannibalizing the gore from the corpses, multiplying itself again, but Beatrice paid it not the slightest of mind.

Beatrice: "Pay attention in fact, Subaru. Here's a lecture from one Yin user to another, I suppose."

Subaru: "What, is that all?"

Beatrice: "Huh?"

Subaru: "Was our relationship just about both being Yin..."

Beatrice: "Th—that wasn't what I meant, in fact. You're a fellow Yin user, my Contractor, and also, hmm... Betty's Subaru, I suppose. Yes. And so here's my lesson to you, in fact."

Beatrice, flustered, probably did not even know what she was saying. She coughed before raising her finger and lowering her voice.

Beatrice: "About the apex of Yin— The most powerful magic within the realm of Yin."

Subaru: "What do I need to do?"

Beatrice: "Hold my hand, and keep me from being alone, I suppose."

Subaru: "I mean I do think that's important, but..."

Beatrice: "...It seems you do not quite understand Spiritualism, which gives me some concerns for the future, in fact."

She could be as exasperated as she wanted, as it would not change that he did not know what he did not know.

Beatrice shook her head at Subaru as he frowned, and pulled him forward by the hand.

Beatrice: "Fundamentally, a Spiritual Arts User and a Spirit fight on the battlefield as single entity with separate minds, I suppose."

Subaru: “A single entity with separate minds...”

Subaru recalled Emilia’s fighting style.

The most striking battle that had involved both Emilia and Puck had been the one with Elsa in the loot house. Emilia had placed Puck on offense while she took charge of defense. She would also use simpler techniques to buy time so that Puck could unleash massive attacks.

That bald old man had mentioned that that was the basis of how Spiritual Arts Users fight.

Subaru: “So I just have to do that. Okay, time for Shamac!”

Beatrice: “Being subject to your defective Shamac would probably damage us as well so I would rather not, in fact. And Subaru, your Gate is...”

Beatrice trailed off, looking reluctant to speak. Subaru felt apologetic that he had forced her into giving this consideration. His Gate was probably junk.

He had pushed it too far. He could feel that it was broken. Again, he was fantasizing.

Beatrice: “—It’s coming, I suppose.”

Muttered Beatrice halfway through her speech. The instant after Subaru let out an “Hmm?” in confusion, he realized that his feet were no longer touching the ground.

Beatrice kicked off the ground, and the jump carried the two of them straight into the air like a spring. That exact nanosecond, a horde of Witchbeast’s fangs closed in on the spot the two had just been. The Rabbit’s fangs clattered against each other as the rabbits leapt off the ground in pursuit of the two.

Subaru: “We’re flying!?”

Beatrice: “We only jumped, in fact. I have reduced the effects of gravity with the Yin spell Murak, I suppose. If we desired, we could fly by riding the wind, in fact.”

Subaru: “You see we’re falling though!?”

Beatrice: “We could keep riding the wind if we were simply fleeing... But we are annihilating them, I suppose.”

Like leaves tossing in the wind, Subaru and Beatrice were buffeted by blizzard. They regardless failed to flip upside-down midair gracelessly, probably by Beatrice’s doing.

The two were descending slowly from their ten-meter high peak. The hares awaited, below them with their mouths gaping open, making Subaru put his hopes in another rally of magical spears.

Beatrice: “Subaru, a continuation in fact. Spiritual Arts Users do not cast magic by using their internal Mana, but by directly manipulating the ambient Mana, I suppose. A Contract with Micro Spirits is essential for this, so you are not currently meeting those requirements, in fact.”

Subaru: “Ah, uhhhhh, Beatrice-san? There’s, there’s kind of a whole bunch of them right under us!?”

Beatrice: “Just listen to me, I suppose. Your Gate is useless, and you cannot use Micro Spirits. So poor useless hopeless Subaru’s only role is to stay at Betty’s side and praise Betty’s magnificence, I suppose. Why are you even here, in fact?”

Subaru: “That’s what I wanna know!”

Beatrice: “Then I’ll teach you, I suppose.”

The Witchbeasts leaping up from below them would start reaching their feet in no time at all. If their fangs caught on, the rabbits would never let go. Even he had to find it overwhelmingly lame to take huge damage and start crying after how cool and composed he had acted previously.

Subaru yelled rather hysterically at Beatrice.

Subaru: “What do I do!?”

Beatrice: “Visualize, in fact. Imagine the same crystals that I made before, I suppose. They are crystallized Mana, spears weaved as corporeal magic. They become narrower to sharp points, with ruinous shards packed inside them, piercing through defenses and stabbing into flesh— Visualize this attack.”

Subaru: “Visualized!”

Beatrice: “Now all you must do is chant, I suppose!”

The horde of hares waited below them, mouths agape.

Red eyes, bloodstained maw, sharp fangs, instincts that viewed Subaru as merely a wad of meat. Utterly repugnant, utterly loathsome; this was the greatest adversary in Sanctuary.

Both: “—El Minya!!”

Subaru and Beatrice’s cantos mirrored each other, and the conjured spears rained down at the ground from on high.

Explosions and destruction rocked the ground of Sanctuary, eviscerating the ugly Witchbeast.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Emilia: “Amazing...”

Sighed Emilia in admiration as she froze a rabbit that had slipped past solid.

Her amethyst eyes stayed fixed on Subaru and Beatrice, fighting the beast beyond the shroud of snow.

More specifically, Emilia’s eyes stay fixated on Beatrice as she held Subaru’s hand. Emilia herself was a Spiritual Arts User, who was using the Micro Spirits’ magic this very instant. She understood to a painful degree how incredible the magical confrontation unfolding in front of her was.

First, Beatrice was not receiving any magical reserves from Subaru.

They were definitely connected by the pass from their Contract. It was simply that Beatrice was abstaining herself from doing so. Subaru had been thrown into combat immediately after forming this Spirit Contract. If Beatrice siphoned the Mana she needed from him, he would not last.

Beatrice understood this, and was taking care not to burden Subaru.

Second, it was not that Beatrice was taking magic from Subaru— Rather, she was giving it to him.

It was not the most accurate of phrasings, but it was the truth. Subaru, as he held hands with Beatrice, was receiving Beatrice's support, allowing him to use magic that should be inaccessible to him. He was not using his Gate, and was instead using Beatrice's presence itself like a Gate.

There was no way that Subaru could possibly understand how monumental it was. Beatrice the Spirit was supplying the magic for both herself and Subaru, not from some outside source, but her own magical stockpile.

And third, she was legitimately witnessing advanced Yin magic.

The class of a magician's magical affinity would greatly influence their future. Specialization in any of the four main types of magic would separate them into distinct roles, and the same applied to the two special types of Yin and Yang. That meant that their essence differed greatly from the other four, even before reaching the advanced stages.

And then, there was the fact that they looked to be useless at first glance. They came with lots of negative sides, such as the time required to obtain results or the necessary quantity of magical power.

So the Yin and Yang affinities were both rare, and had few advanced practitioners.

Unlike the main four, many spells had been lost over time, making it a difficult environment to produce any new great magicians.

Yin had all these glaring issues, and Beatrice had nonetheless mastered it. And she was using ancient magic, long lost to time and history, as if it was nothing.

Emilia: "Woah, they went really high that time. Huh? They're gone... Oh, there they are."

The way they fought was so dreamlike and phantasmal that it made her lose her sense of reality. Though part of that probably was because Subaru and Beatrice were so amicably holding hands.

Emilia could tell that Subaru was fighting desperately, but Beatrice was even smiling a little. She had to be having a lot of fun. It was not that she enjoyed fighting or flaunting her power. It was just that doing this was fun for her.

Emilia: "———"

Emilia blinked, and Subaru and Beatrice had already moved to a completely different spot. It was teleportation magic similar to the more limited Door Crossing. Purple spears blasted through a row of hares from either end, the beasts shrieking furiously as they tried to leap at the two, only for their bodies to be caught by something midair, getting shredded apart.

Emilia strained her eyes. She spotted it.

The fragments from the detonated spear had not vanished, and instead sat suspended in space, as if frozen in time. The leaping rabbits slivered themselves on those splinters, ripping themselves apart. The crystalline trap was spread all across the area as the Witchbeasts moved, jumping, tumbling to resolutely attack the two, all while triggering the trap quite comically.

The Great Rabbit was a fearsome Witchbeast, but the individual rabbits were not that threatening.

They lacked any great power, and should an experienced fighter pay mind to the Rabbit's ferocity while fighting it, they would definitely come out ahead.

A fighting style as reckless as "follow your instinct to eat" would learn nothing. They wanted their fellow hares to be caught and be dismembered in the traps, because their hunger was everything. So they paid no heed to the fact they would die caught in the exact same trap after jumping at them, and become a cadaver.

Emilia: "Ah!"

Emilia slammed another rabbit that had escaped the siege with her magic. She dashed over to the frozen hare and kicked it to pieces without any hesitation. It shattered into shards of ice, so utterly deceased that it could not reform.

Subaru and Beatrice had been putting in such a good fight that only a surprisingly few hares had slipped past to Emilia. Emilia could even afford to concentrate on suppressing her own magical power.

But even as she watched Beatrice's display of overwhelming strength, Emilia could not erase the seeds of anxiety within her.

Beatrice's siege was powerful and cunning. The Great Rabbit kept catching itself in the trap, building a mountain of corpses. But Emilia could not see the end of it.

Emilia witnessed one of the rabbits trembling, when another hare appeared as if it had sprouted out of the first one's back. They repeated this on and on and on and on, the beasts multiplying like mice.

One-hundred hares multiplied into two-hundred in an instant, and into four-hundred in the next.

It had both numbers and wretched instincts ignorant to the concept of “stopping”. This was why this beast had been regarded as one of the Great Three, and had gone four-hundred years doing whatever it wishes as a calamity—

Emilia: “Subaru, Beatrice.”

Emilia called their names. Though they looked like they had an overwhelming advantage, they must not fall negligent.

Emilia would never forget how she had shivered after returning to the Tomb with Roswaal and Ram, and first confirmed the Great Rabbit's presence.

Those eyes regarded every single thing alive as nothing more than its food.

An entity truly incapable of any co-existence would make those who oppose it feel that utter despair. To oppose that overwhelming absurdity, Emilia had needed to demonstrate comparable power.

And those had been her intentions.

A torrent of magic churned within her, not fully under her control. It surely could not belong to her alone, and should she unleash it, it would annihilate the Great Rabbit. She would be offering her life in exchange. And she had been prepared to do that, had it come down to it.

Emilia: “Subaru...”

She murmured his name as he fought on.

He had known about the Rabbit's attack beforehand, and it did not seem that he was fighting it without a plan. He had brought Beatrice out of the Forbidden Library, and had made her look so full of life.

He would never do anything to bring gloom to that smile.

And so, Emilia believed in Natsuki Subaru.

White magic, capable of ending everything, asserted its presence in her heart. She suppressed it, advising that its time had yet to come.

—She believed in his words.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

For Subaru, using magic had always been equivalent to whittling away his soul.

At first it had been exactly like what Puck and Roswaal had said, that Subaru possessed not the slightest of talent as a magician. When he had first used Shamac, he was not able to keep himself from wringing out his Mana and could not move as a result.

The Bocco Fruit had been like doping in that instance. He used magic during his duel, even when he had been prohibited from doing so, and ultimately he abused his Gate so terribly that it collapsed.

He had no hope of being a magician.

Magic had saved Subaru many times, but he considered it something like whittling away at his already delicate core, sharpening it down, something like that. He thought it was inevitable that it would break.

And so, he had only dreamed about doing what he was doing now, firing off consecutive blasts of incredible magic, and could only think this reality impossible.

Subaru: “Hey, Beatrice! Should we really keep blasting them like this!?”

The Great Rabbit generated more rabbits than what Subaru and Beatrice defeated. The individual hares ate their dead brethren, steadily compounding in number. It seemed like they were using their multiplication as energy, for each rabbit grew more forceful the more their number increased.

That did encourage some dim hopes that, provided they kept buying time, the hares would eventually run out of energy to multiply themselves, but---

Beatrice: "There is no limit to their breeding, in fact. That's how they were created, I suppose. Even when they are close to being destroyed, they will not be destroyed. Unless you annihilate them all at once."

Subaru: "So what do we do? Do you have any ideas?"

Beatrice: "Subaru, are you trying to rely on adorable Betty for everything, I suppose?"

An explosion of crystal opened a hole in the mob, blasting the hares away, to be dismembered on the suspended shards. Beatrice saw this through as she pulled Subaru's arm and hopped into the air. Though neither her tug nor her jump had been that forceful, she easily succeeded in both.

Beatrice walked on air, dancing through space to avoid the rabbits' fangs as she weaved through gaps in her crystalline trap. The lack of a single drop of blood sullyng her extravagant dress proved that she felt not the slightest agitation or unease about the battle.

Beatrice: "We're moving, in fact."

Subaru: "Right."

With that, space bent, and the two engaged in a short-range teleport.

They crossed through space in a manner different from Door Crossing, reappearing behind the horde of hares. The beasts sniffed, but having lost Subaru and Beatrice, remained full of openings.

Beatrice: "You take the left, I suppose."

Subaru: "Right's all yours."

Visualize. Beatrice's magic reacted to Subaru's fantasy, manipulated the world, and brought about that transformation.

He definitely felt that he was benefiting at her expense, but that was why he was not playing around in the slightest.

The purple crystals of Yin's Minya spells formed in accordance to Subaru's imagination.

Subaru generated winding grooves on the projectiles to magnify their piercing force, before firing them off all at once. His hands never touched them, but they did fire according to his will.

It was like he was drawing a mental bowstring, to shoot incorporeal arrows.

They speared through the air, landing a direct hit on the undefended rabbits, blasting the mob of them screeching away. Beatrice's destruction had done the same thing to the right end of the mob, scattering them in all directions.

Fissures in space swallowed mobs of rabbits, sealing several hundreds inside a closed space as if in a picture frame. The hares hopped about beyond the looking-glass. Beatrice fired a crystalline spear at the heedless mob of hares— shattering the planar world to pieces, sending the hares inside to their end.

Subaru swallowed his breath, astonished at Beatrice's versatile magical skills.

While Subaru kept repeating Minya like an idiot, Beatrice tried entirely new combinations of Yin magic to annihilate the Great Rabbit, repeatedly. It was as if she was showing off every card she had in hand to Subaru. Or as if she was doing it to remind herself of her skills.

Beatrice: "About time, in fact."

Subaru: "Hm?"

The Great Rabbit had been cut down in number, only for it to instantly regenerate the exact quantity it had lost.

Subaru witnessed this, and again felt the same incongruity that he had been feeling for a while. Putting that together with Beatrice's muttering, Subaru felt the urge for a conversation.

Subaru: "Beatrice. They've been recovering the same number they lost... But doesn't it feel like they have never gone over their original amount?"

Supposing there were one thousand rabbits, if Subaru defeated one hundred of them, it would multiply to make one hundred more. If he defeated two hundred rabbit, he would get two hundred more rabbits.

The scales had not tipped once, no matter how many of them he killed. But Subaru had never seen them multiply beyond that highest number. Beatrice nodded to Subaru.

Beatrice: “Their multiplication itself may be unlimited, but there is likely a ceiling to how many of them there can be, in fact. So they cannot multiply beyond that, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Then, if we can finish off that ceiling all at once...”

Beatrice: “Theoretically, that will destroy it... But that presents its own difficulties, in fact.”

Subaru saw hope, but Beatrice made a complicated expression.

Well, of course. There were enough rabbits to drown out everything in sight. If magic to burn everything in visible range were possible, then they would be able to destroy the Rabbit, but how much power would it take to do it all in one second, and get all of them?

It was a violent plan akin to missile bombing the whole region. And if even one of them survived, they would instantly regenerate. The risk was far too great.

Subaru: “Then. okay. That’s it.”

Beatrice: “You’ve thought of something, I suppose?”

Subaru: “As usual, I’m utterly dependent on you, but yeah.”

Subaru watched the Witchbeast multiply as he whispered into Beatrice’s ear. Beatrice lowered her gaze in thought, and nodded.

Beatrice: “I’ve been thinking the same thing, in fact. But doing it would require...”

Subaru: “I know there’s a bottleneck. However! You better not get the wrong idea, Beatrice!”

Beatrice: “—?”

Subaru: “It’s not like we have to solve this problem on our own, yeah?”

Beatrice’s eyes widened at this. She gave a quiet sigh, pitching over in Subaru’s direction to set her forehead on his chest.

Beatrice: “Really, Subaru... You present some extraordinary solutions, in fact.”

Subaru: “I do promise to be such a thrillingly fresh and novel Contractor that you will never ever get bored.”

Subaru shot her a thumbs-up, his teeth sparkling. Beatrice smiled wryly before looking up, her face against his chest.

Beatrice: “Fine, I suppose. Let’s do it, in fact. But even Betty needs time to pull this off, I suppose. Let’s see you manage well over that period, in fact.”

Subaru: “Just pretend you are relaxing on a safe sturdy boat. It’s what I’m doing.”

Beatrice: “We will see who will be doing the paddling, I suppose.”

Beatrice pushed away from Subaru’s chest. She drew in a breath, closed her eyes, and begun focusing on escalating her magic.

Seeing this, Subaru psyched himself up and kicked off the snow.

The Witchbeast’s fangs clicked and clattered as it chased Subaru, running. Silhouettes swooped for his legs. But they were too slow. After the slaughters he had endured these past two days, the Great Rabbit looked wimpy.

Subaru: “Out of the way! Move it! I don’t have the time to deal with you right now!”

Subaru dodged the fangs, kicked away the hares.

He chanted, using crystal spears to force open a path as he charged through the clearing with Beatrice cradled in his arms, sprinting back to the Tomb.

Emilia: “Huh, wha, Subaru!?”

Emilia looked shocked as she witnessed Subaru’s return.

Subaru slid to a stop beside her before placing Beatrice, her eyes closed, on the snowy ground beside him and stroking her head.

Subaru: “Sorry, Emilia-tan! We’re having some trouble pulling it off on our own!”

Emilia: “I... I mean, that’s fine, but... What do we do now? Right, I’m going to——”

Subaru: “No, we have an idea for how to beat it. You don’t have to use your suicide bomber absolute death moves. Or actually, just don’t use them, period. It will make all our efforts until now pointless.”

Emilia swallowed her breath and stared intently at Subaru’s face. Had she seriously thought he would not figure it out? She seriously had, had she not? Of course Emilia would bring harm to herself to land the decisive blow, if truly backed into a corner in a situation like this. What an impossible girl.

She should stop thinking that it was okay to hurt herself if it saves everyone.

Subaru: “It’s best that everyone’s safe and everyone’s saved, duh.”

Emilia: “...Subaru.”

Subaru: “So Emilia-tan, I have kind of a crazy request. If it doesn’t look feasible, then I’ll think on it more, but if it looks feasible then I want to see your best—— Let’s all win this together.”

Emilia: “———”

Emilia put her hand to her chest, seemingly feeling something about Subaru’s statement, blinking several times. Subaru conjured crystal spears and fired them at the Witchbeast horde to hold them in check, buying time for Emilia to come to her decision. But it did not end up taking long at all.

Emilia: “Alright. Let’s do this, Subaru. I’m ready for anything.”

Answered Emilia, steeling her resolve, her eyes filled with determination. Subaru pumped his fists as he glanced back to her.

Subaru: “That’s the spirit. Here we go!”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru felt incredible magic swelling beside him, coming from both sides. Emilia stood on his left, and Beatrice on his right.

Each of them held one of Subaru's hands, linking the three of them together. There was no real significance to them doing this. It was just to motivate Subaru.

In context of battle, you could call "motivation" "morale". And high morale was essential for dictating the tide of battle.

Subaru: "Visualize, visualize, visualize!"

Subaru envisioned the wicked, powerful, magical assault.

He creates pointed amethyst spears and bombarded the siege of approaching hares. He fought his hardest, repeating volley after volley to keep the rabbits from reaching either themselves or the Tomb.

Subaru was not using his own Mana to cast this magic. But to say he was casting without suffering any strain— would be a complete misunderstanding.

He was getting the Mana he needed to cast the spells from Beatrice, but Subaru was the one regulating the magic. He visualized the spears' force, their aim, their quantity, materialized and fired them, instantly moving to the next attack.

Were he an actual magician, he would be suffering even more bodily fatigue alongside. He could not hope to imagine the immense burden and concurrent workload. No wonder he was told he lacked talent for magic.

The spears slammed against the ground, shockwaves and detonations sending the hares flying as they screeched in protest. Their fangs clicked and chittered and clicked and chittered and clicked and with the howling blizzard as accompaniment, it sounded like the cogwheels of hell, or something to that effect.

The cogs on the grim conveyor to send Subaru's team to the guillotine pressed ever closer.

Subaru: "Minya! Minya! Ah, crap! Biting my tongue on this magic!"

While grumbling about the hard-to-pronounce incantation, Subaru took aim at the charging Rabbit. He fired the conjured crystals, and the leading rabbit's head— went untouched, as the spear hit the ground before it, the shockwave pushing it back into the mob.

This was the first stage of the operation.

Subaru was controlling the horde with his conjured spears, but he was not killing them. They wanted to avoid disrupting the ceiling, and having the rabbits multiply at some indefinite juncture. He was keeping the Great Rabbit at its maximum number while pinning it in place. Although,

Subaru: "If you're attracted to the smell of Mana, then there's no way you're prying your attention from us."

After all, there were two people here maintaining nigh-unwitnessed magnitudes of Mana. And they were both beautiful girls. Subaru, right now, had flowers in both hands. Anyone would envy him.

Subaru: "Visualize, visualize, visualize... come on, you gotta be jealous! Try coming closer!"

Not neglecting to taunt the animal, Subaru hummed. Although the beasts would not understand.

Part of it was to inflame the enemy, but it was more about Subaru encouraging himself. If he pretended that this extraordinary situation was an ordinary one, he would manage to keep himself going.

If he did not do this, he could not guarantee that his knees would remain steady. Both of his hands felt warmth. With this touch on his palms, he absolutely could not show the pathetic side of himself.

Subaru: "Visualize, visualize, visualize...!"

Muttered Subaru over and over as he strained his eyes.

The horde of hares had pushed forward; there was a limit to how far Subaru could restrain them. But preparations were not in place yet.

Not Emilia's, nor Beatrice's, nor Subaru's.

Emilia: "...Subaru."

He felt someone squeeze his hand, and looked to find Emilia gazing at him, her eyes faintly open. Her preparations were complete, then? She was smiling, awaiting Subaru's signal.

Subaru: "-----"

Pushed onward by Emilia's gaze, Subaru strained his bloodshot eyes further.

The curtain of the blustering blizzard was thick, constantly concealing and revealing the places he was trying to keep an eye on. But the sight of their wriggling, white forms did inform Subaru of the slight difference between the Witchbeast and the snowbanks.

—Just a little more, a tiny, right there, there, there, there!

Subaru grit his teeth. Waited for the moment.

Confirming that the front, the sides, all of it, everything was correct, Subaru's eyes shot open.

Subaru: "Now, Emilia! Follow the lines!!"

Shouting, Subaru squeezed down on Emilia's hand.

Emilia's amethyst gaze focused firmly to the front as she looked at the lines Subaru had drawn.

While he had kept the Rabbit in check with conjured spears, Subaru had been simultaneously drawing lines across the earth with Mana. Using formless Mana to gouge into the ground had been of utmost difficulty.

But Subaru, as talentless as people called him, had overcome that ordeal by a combination of focus and pretensions that far exceeded those of the ordinary person. The ones that disallowed him from looking uncool around others, those pretensions.

He had drawn four lines in total. Four long lines, that formed a box around the mass of rabbits. Lines that would tell Emilia where to aim.

Emilia: "Excellent, Subaru! You did reeeally wonderful!"

Cheered Emilia at his beautiful set-up, saying things she would usually never say.

Emilia raised her right hand, Subaru's hand still in her grip, and placed the left hand, half-frozen by her own runaway magical power, atop it. And, chanted.

Emilia: "—Al Huma!!"

A gigantic amount of magical power surged as the world transformed in accordance to Emilia's canto. Mana rushed to Emilia and Subaru's linked hands before shooting into the atmosphere, piercing through the earth, and converging with Subaru's lines of Mana.

—The earth bellowed as something incredible occurred.

Subaru: "Woah..."

Subaru witnessed the event as an unintended astonished voice escaped his lips.

Well, of course. Anyone who witnessed this would react the same way.

Emilia's magic traced over the lines that Subaru had drawn— and all the snow within the box started levitating.

All the rabbits within the box remained atop the snow platform, but they had yet to notice that the tremors had happened because the ground beneath them was floating.

It may be a limited space, but the floating platform was still about twenty by twenty meters. The sight of so many hares crowded together, shuddering on top of this platform, beautifully demonstrated the supernatural nature of magic.

Subaru: "Emilia!"

Emilia: "Got it! I'm not letting them get away!"

But if they stopped there, then the Rabbit would just jump off the platform. There was one more thing they had to do to keep it from escaping. Emilia raised their linked hands up high— and brought them right down.

The floating snowfield rumbled. Surely, the Rabbit had never imagined what would happen.

A roar, and a frigid blast of stabbing wind.

It showered over Subaru and the others, as they kept their eyes fixated on the platform to see its results through.

—By the time the wind stopped, the snowfield had been vertically shut.

The left and right ends of Emilia's floating platform had folded to meet at the center. The ground had been shut in the same manner as a book, sealing the Rabbit inside the snow without any means of escape.

Subaru hurriedly looked over the closed platform's surroundings. They missed— none. Movement— not a shadow.

All the rabbits were in one place, trapped in an extraordinarily small area. With this,

Subaru: "The big one's all on you, Beatrice!"

Subaru called to Beatrice, telling her that the secondary set-up was complete. Hearing this, and having quietly chanted the canto the entire time, Beatrice's eyes opened.

Witnessing the sight before her, Beatrice laughed quietly.

It was not surprise. Nor was it anything like that. A smile abounding with trust arose on her face—

Beatrice: "Here is the ultimate in Yin— Al Shamac."

The instant she whispered the canto, shadow drowned out the world.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—For a moment, it was at the mercy of something like vertigo. But it really did only last for a moment.

The vertigo stopped, and a shock impacted its feet. Then the bondage pressing down on its body disappeared. It started off by giving a big shake to get the snow off its fur.

It sniffed the air, looking around the area.

Its eyes, its nose, its ears, all got the better of it as they prioritized the hunt for prey. Its red eyes glanced about as it searched for sweet-smelling game.

Nothing. There had been prey so delicious that it made its stomach wrench painfully, right in front of it, just a second ago. With tender flesh and sweet blood, prey that could possibly sate this starvation even temporarily had definitely been right there.

Its nose smelled nothing. Its eyes saw nothing. Its ears heard nothing. The prey was gone. It looked around. Nowhere in sight.

Hunger instantly overwrote its disappointment. To distract itself from its hunger and urge to chew, it decided to bite into the white mass beside itself. It gnashed it, shredded its flesh, slurped its blood while clawing out its innards. It chewed away to its heart's content, swallowed it down, and then noticed that identical meals were unfolding all around it.

The available pray had decreased.

It did not feel like it was in danger, but in accordance with its survival instincts, it bit off the head of another white mass that frantically consumed all around it. Bit into it, and swallowed it down.

And this repeats. And repeats. Spurred on by endless hunger, it goes to the neighboring prey, and the prey next to that, and the prey next to that, and the prey next to that, and the prey next to next to next to next to next to—

Eventually, after devouring everything around, it was the only thing left.

It licked up the blood soaking the ground, leaving not a single scrap of gore or blood-soaked grass left. Once it tidily cleaned up the remains of the meal, it truly was alone.

But even with meat in its stomach, starvation far exceeding its body mass assaulted it.

It cried out, teeth chattering, on the periphery of madness. Unending starvation, insatiable hunger. The maddening lack of release, no matter how much it ate.

Mother must have felt this too.

For an instant, a mysterious thought passed through a mind dominated by hunger.

The indistinct thing had been a simple flash of emotion, nothing so cultivated as to reach language. And it, too, vanished eternally in the face of maddening hunger.

The creature trembled, trembled violently. It shrieked as it felt its innards churn about, and it unconsciously created another entity. This sudden, new white mass tumbled back-first onto the ground, as if it had forgotten how to walk. Every single one of its organs registered this thing as prey, and it bit into the tumbling mass without any hesitation.

It swallowed it down without even allowing it to shriek. After eating, the hunger still tormented it. And after all this agonized struggling, another creature other than itself was born into the world.

And it repeated, and it repeated, the same thing going on and on and on and on.

It was alone now. Nothing else existed in this world. There were buildings, and forests, and ground, and air and wind, but no prey. It was alone.

And so it proceeded to eat.

Eventually, even it was devoured by another stomach, and disappeared. The new lonely one repeated and repeated it all until it was no longer, as the world turned.

—Insatiable hunger would never be sated.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The momentary presence of the incredible shadow made Subaru swallow his breath.

Subaru: “———”

The black orb that Beatrice’s canto had created swallowed the snowfield trapping the Rabbit that Emilia had sealed, then proceeded to shrink smaller and smaller, before eventually shrinking smaller than a marble and silently vanishing.

Even Subaru, who did not know the theory behind this feat, understands what it meant.

Al Shamac, the greatest of Shamac spells, was magic that disturbed space.

The magic had swallowed the Rabbit and the snowfield, then blasted them all into another dimension. Neither regeneration nor multiplication would mean anything anymore.

Because it was literally another world's issue.

Subaru: "I know I did... ask you to send them into an isolated space like the Forbidden Library, but..."

Beatrice: "Do I hear dissatisfaction, I suppose?"

Subaru's voice trembled before the incredible feat, while Beatrice pouted beside him. She put her hands to her hips, quite displeased with Subaru's attitude.

Emilia: "Seriously, wow..."

The whole thing made Emilia's eyes open wide as well.

Emilia was more learned in magic than Subaru, so her surprise was happening on another vector. Her powers had probably settled in somewhat after half-freezing herself and using such immense magic. Once she figured out how to control it, she would probably be fine.

Subaru looked around, confirming that nothing was present where the Rabbit used to be.

Then he glanced behind him, and confirmed that the Tomb had been secured too. Peeking out from the Tomb was an expressionless mob of Ryuzus. It looked like the Ryuzu doubles had all managed to reach safety as well.

Roswaal was leaning against the wall beside the Tomb's entrance, Ram in his arms. Ram's hand was touching Roswaal's cheek, and Subaru could see that Roswaal was crying.

Subaru: "-----"

Witnessing that, Subaru felt the weight in his chest disappear.

There were still so many things that they had to talk about. Otto, Garfiel, and the others were still back at the mansion. He did believe they were safe, but they needed to meet up and talk. And on this side, too, he had so many things to ask Emilia.

But somehow, it felt like everything was all right. There were so many things he had not confirmed yet. But seeing Roswaal crying, and Ram smiling softly as she watched him, made Subaru feel that everything was all right.

Emilia: “Subaru, come on!”

Subaru took a breather, until Emilia suddenly poked his cheek.

Emilia smiled at Subaru when he looked back at her, and then gestured to the area behind him. Where Beatrice stood with her arms folded, still looking sulky.

Beatrice: “I believe that the ace deserves a few words, in fact.”

Beatrice puffed out her cheeks. Subaru replies with a nod. And—

Beatrice: “Ah, eep!”

Subaru slipped his hands under her arms and lifted her right up. He ignored her adorable yelp, embracing her as he spun around on the spot.

Subaru: “You did it! Knew you could, I’m so in love with you, Beako!!”

Beatrice: “Wh— hold it! Sto— let me— let me go, I suppose! Betty isn’t...”

Subaru: “Yes yes yes! You are adorable! Beako is wonderful! Beako is supreme! All hail Beako!”

Showering her in praise, Subaru spun round and around with Beatrice in his arms. Beatrice’s face flashed beet red as Emilia watched them frolic, her gaze awfully gentle.

The Spirit and Contractor, spinning and spinning in an energetic expression of delight—

Both: “Ah!”

—Lost their footing at the last moment, and happily plunged face-first into the snow together.

Arc 4 Interlude I - Each Gives Concession

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Closing Chapter “Meeting Each Other Halfway”, Parts 1-3

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 319

Subaru: “—Aaand, done!”

Subaru stuck two twigs into the heap of snow before him, then wiped the sweat from his brow. It was the work of an amateur, thrown together in an hour, but he still had to be impressed at the results.

Murmurs of admiration spread through the onlooking crowd as well.

Subaru: “Yeah, I must have a talent for this stuff. If we’re ever hurting for food money, we can make it snow, and make it as the esteemed snow artists of the nation.”

Emilia: “Stop being so silly. I’m not going to make it snow to help you with that. But it really does look reeeally good.”

Said Emilia with a white puff of breath as she sat on the stone steps, observing Subaru’s work. Reflected in her amethyst eyes was Subaru’s snowman— but since labelling it as a snowman wouldn’t quite describe it correctly, perhaps it was better to call it a snow sculpture.

There were now about 20 sculptures of Puck crafted from the leftover snow in Sanctuary. What had compelled Subaru to make so many? Were you to ask him, he would only be able to answer with “copious romanticism”.

But it was making Emilia and Sanctuary’s people happy, so that shallow justification had would suffice.

???: “I’m sure that you’re not trying to be, but you truly are an idiot, Barusu.”

There was someone else, judging Subaru harshly.

The speaker was a girl, currently seated on the steps with her head on Emilia's lap. She was dressed out of her trademark maid uniform and currently wore a simple white outfit.

Her clothes had burned as she wandered between life and death. While her face did look paler than usual, neither her tone nor venom had changed. So everything was good.

Subaru: "The two of you keep ganging up to call dumb. I did put in quite a bit of work throughout this whole mess, so can't you be nicer to me? I could use a little more commendation."

Emilia: "Mhm, you are right. I'm reeeeeeally grateful, Subaru. But I was the one doing work when you were away, so actually I'd like commendation too."

Subaru: "The stuff you've started saying, Emilia-tan."

Though, Emilia did deserve praise for protecting Sanctuary during Subaru's absence. It was uncertain whether the residents would have escaped the Rabbit had Emilia not instructed them to go in the Tomb. And had Emilia not cleared the Trials, there would have been nowhere to take shelter anyway.

Neither was it certain that Subaru would have thought to use the Tomb as a shelter. Since his thoughts had been focused on escaping before the snow came.

Subaru: "Well, we'll call it a happy mistake that the Men's Brigade came back and sparked your motivation, Emilia-tan. Seriously, thank you."

This was true for previous affairs too, but this whole series of events had involved far too many gambles.

It felt like Subaru could not manage on his own, and constantly had others rescuing him. Even though he had decided to take the hardest parts upon himself, ideally.

Emilia: "But of course, though. If you do absolutely everything for me, Subaru, I will stop knowing what I'm even doing here. You've done enough zipping around that it's okay for you to rest a little."

Subaru: "No, it's just that when I want to help with all the brains and brawn I don't have, running around like an idiot's all I can do."

Emilia: "But that's going to change, yes?"

Said Emilia teasingly, suppressing a laugh as she stroked Ram's head. Subaru instantly understood and rubbed his finger under his nose as he replied with a "Yeah".

He had made many mistakes, and others had been constantly rescuing him, but he had managed to save basically everything he needed to. And he would never agonize over these issues alone again. Subaru would no longer hesitate to rely on others, would not slack in his own efforts either, and had people to give him a good kick in the ass when needed.

Subaru: "-----"

Subaru looked up, shifting his gaze from the clearing to the Tomb.

His gaze went past Emilia as she sat on the steps, all the way to the entrance of the Tomb. Inside that place, its Trial mechanism absent, were two people.

What could they be discussing inside? It was a concern on Subaru's mind.

Subaru: "Well, even I have enough tact not to interrupt them."

There had been a wealth of opportunities to speak, but they had not spoken to each other.

Surely, they had mountains of things to discuss.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

A girl and a man faced each other with a transparent coffin between them.

Girl: "Mother..."

Murmured the girl as she looked at the woman in the crystal coffin.

It felt like she was floating, like her feet were not touching the ground. Some of it was due to the remaining rush of battle, some of it was due to her feelings of loss and liberation from losing her old haunt, and most of it was due to the surreal sight before her.

She had never thought that she would see her mother again.

The woman in the coffin, the Witch, Echidna, looked not at all different from Beatrice's memories. Long, white, beautiful hair alongside her intelligent yet gentle features. It vividly revived memories of how she used to smile at Beatrice, though it had only happened rarely.

Beatrice: "Betty... was not able to keep her promise to you, I suppose. I'm sorry."

Beatrice stroked the coffin with her fingers, beginning the four-hundred-year reunion with an apology.

Back when they parted, Echidna had instructed Beatrice to give her stockpile of knowledge to That Person. Had given her abundant books to fill the Library, and a Gospel that told the future.

Beatrice no longer had either.

The Gospel telling the future that Echidna desired of Beatrice, and all the knowledge that Echidna had amassed, both had departed the world as ashes.

Beatrice: "Betty never even met That Person... and the books have burned, in fact. I have done too many things I must apologize for, I suppose."

"I'm a terrible daughter", thought Beatrice.

A foolish daughter who was not able to achieve even one of her mother's requests over four centuries. Now she was meeting her mother who she could not even face, and she should be apologizing profusely, but—

???: "...You look raaaaaaaather refreshed."

Muttered the man across from her, easily disclosing her thoughts.

Beatrice glanced up to see a man with long hair arise from the shadow, smiling weakly. It was Roswaal. He was supposed to be a familiar face, but Beatrice couldn't keep herself from feeling offput by him. Perhaps because his eyes, always crazed in pursuit of his goals ever since Beatrice had met him, now looked uncertain— and because he was missing his clown makeup, his face bare.

Beatrice: "Roswaal, you best me in terms of refreshed, in fact. Making my presence without cosmetics means violating the instructions from your predecessor, I suppose."

Roswaal: “The clown make-up was a sort of war paint for me, yoooooooo see. Wearing it let me interact with others with enthusiasm, as though I were donning a mask. But there is soooooooooomething I realized.”

Beatrice: “Yes?”

Roswaal: “That regardless of the make-up, I am aaaaaaan absolute clown. So how meaningful is it, truly, that I neglect my cosmetics?”

Beatrice: “I see, in fact.”

Beatrice nodded as Roswaal gives a joking shrug. She fiddles with her pigtails in silence, breaking it with “Now”,

Beatrice: “You must have things to say to Mother, I suppose. Reunion with her has been your... has been your family’s deepest wish, in fact.”

Roswaal: “...”

Beatrice: “You are perhaps the tenth Roswaal since the progenitor who directly knew Mother, I suppose. The heads of the Mathers family have been short-lived for generations, so the visitors to the Library shifted rather steadily, in fact... You’ve been different ever since childhood, I suppose.”

Beatrice may not have been deeply involved in the history of the Mathers Family, but she did watch from aside how their affairs had progressed.

The first Roswaal had been Echidna’s only student. Though he had lost almost all his magical ability in his fight with the Warlock Hector, he did not give up on being Echidna’s student afterwards.

He had frequented the Library even after Echidna’s death, disregarding the dazed Beatrice as he obsessively searched and searched and searched for something, and likely gave that something to his descendant before dying.

Ever since, all the descendants from Roswaal’s line had demonstrated magical capabilities close to those of their progenitor, and the Mathers family expanded.

And the current Roswaal— The man standing in front of Beatrice. Roswaal L. Mathers exhibited the most supreme talent out of all the Roswaals yet. He was such a genius that, secretly, even Beatrice had to shiver.

His power eclipsed that of his ancestor who Echidna had singled out personally, and could have done anything he wanted, with his claim as one of the strongest magicians in the world.

Beatrice: “You had all that talent, and you still failed to escape the Mathers’ curse, in fact. Your family has been obsessed with the thoughts of reuniting with my deceased Mother, this cruel path one you strived to walk. Betty sympathizes with you somewhat, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “Do you? But how are you and we any different? You spent four centuries bound by the words of your deceased mother. It’s identical. Or rather, unlike my family’s shifting over the generations, you suffered pain in solitude beyond what anyone can empathize. We did what we needed to strive forward toward our goal. You simply suffered in place.”

In response to Beatrice’s words, Roswaal replied, his words even graver.

“In the end, we’re both bad”, she thought.

Roswaal’s family had inherited the same feelings over lives upon short lives, in pursuit of a single reunion.

Beatrice had been trapped in an empty cage for the entirety of her eternal lifespan, waiting for the day she could fulfill her promise.

An objective onlooker would see them as equally foolish clowns.

The two glared at each other in silence. But their silent competition ended once Roswaal averted his gaze.

Roswaal: “This is a tedious argument. When two fools point at the other whilst mocking their foolishness, we begin crossing the boundaries of vain comedy.”

Beatrice: “...You are correct there, in fact.”

Roswaal: “Do you mind me asking something?”

Roswaal raised his finger. Beatrice silently looked up, expressing her consent by neglecting to reject him.

Roswaal looked down at Echidna as she slept in the coffin.

Roswaal: “Did Subaru-kun manage to be That Person of yours?”

The expression “That Person” made Beatrice swallow her breath. She had never spoken directly with Roswaal about That Person. But Beatrice did not think it was strange for him to learn about her from sources outside her knowledge.

And thinking back on it, the people who had visited the Library until now had ultimately been brought there by Roswaals up to the previous generation. The Roswaals could have easily heard the story from them and passed it on to their descendants.

And honestly, one could say that even Subaru had been brought there by Roswaal.

—Not that Subaru would accept that if he were told so.

Roswaal: “...Why are you laughing?”

Beatrice: “—Ah. Sorry, I suppose. I’m not laughing at you, Roswaal, in fact. It just made me imagine something amusing, I suppose.”

It amused Beatrice how she had managed to figure out, with pinpoint accuracy, what the black-haired man would say. Perhaps he was just that straightforward. She did not want to think any further into it than that.

Either way, Beatrice shook her head.

Beatrice: “That man is... Subaru is not fit to be my That Person, in fact.”

Roswaal: “...Huh.”

Beatrice: “Subaru lacks all kinds of qualifications to inherit the knowledge of Mother’s Forbidden Library, I suppose. He has no ambition to educate himself with the knowledge or to use it for his purposes, and he lacks the fundamental background to do either, in fact. And he looks dumb and he’s flimsy and he’s useless at magic and his legs are short, I suppose. He is not Betty’s awaited That Person in any way.”

Roswaal: “That soooooooooounds quiiiiiiiiite the harsh opinion.”

Beatrice: “Exactly, I suppose. Betty is harsh, in fact. And so, every opportunity that came to me over these four centuries, Betty rebuffed them with That Person, in fact.”

Beatrice did feel something like guilt towards all those who had tried to take her out of the Library, as she thought back on it now. Not all of them had reached out to Beatrice while thinking only in their own interests. Some of them had spoken kindly to her.

But Beatrice had cast away every single hand that reached for her.

Beatrice: “I know that I should have chosen That Person, I suppose. That I should have faced everyone who called to me, individual by individual, and properly thought out my answer, in fact. I was meant to choose someone suitable to inherit the Library, Echidna’s knowledge. That has to be what it was, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “However, you say that the one you chose, Subaru-kun, is unfit to be That Person?”

Beatrice: “I do, in fact. There is no issue, I suppose. Betty’s choice is Subaru, in fact. Not That Person. I chose Subaru, I suppose.”

Beatrice saw how Roswaal’s breath hitched, his eyes open wide.

It had to be a difficult answer for him to accept, considering how he had devoted himself to Echidna. Beatrice had been in the exact same position as him until only a moment ago. She understood how Roswaal felt so much that it hurt.

And because she understood, she had to explain it at length.

Beatrice: “Subaru laughed at me when I begged him to be That Person, in fact. He claimed that he could make me happier than someone I have never seen, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “What a... prideful thing to say.”

Beatrice: “I don’t dislike that forcefulness, in fact.”

Rather than enticing her with polite speech, explaining to her what she should do, and clarifying how he would use Echidna's knowledge, he had been utterly candid.

Roswaal: "But no matter what he preaches, Subaru-kun will not place you as number one. It is obvious simply by looking at him... You must already recognize this."

Beatrice: "Roswaal, you do not seem to understand, I suppose."

Roswaal: "I don't?"

Beatrice: "Betty did not leave the Library because she is Subaru's number one, in fact. I left the Library because I want Subaru to be my number one, I suppose."

He had told her to choose him.

He had told her that he would be too lonely to live without her.

Convenient prattle, she thought. Pleasant platitudes, she thought.

But it did sway Beatrice's heart. It had resonated. It took her heart, which had remained sealed stuck in one place for four hundred years, and gave it a jolt.

Now that she knew the feeling of liberation she felt the instant she took his hand and left the Library, and how it had almost brought her to tears, her heart just would not stop.

Beatrice: "Abandoning my post may disqualify me as Mother's Spirit, but I don't mind, in fact. Betty is Contractor Natsuki Subaru's Spirit, I suppose. My regret and shame for that... is gone, I suppose."

Roswaal might consider it a betrayal.

He had also been bound for four centuries by Echidna's curse, and perhaps Beatrice's announcement that she escaped it first was a betrayal to him. She did not escape by fulfilling her role, but by abandoning it.

If she was going to face her Mother, or face Roswaal, she had to rationalize that.

Beatrice: "———"

Her heart was already resolved. She had already taken that hand.

Beatrice was going to live a life so vivid it would never fade to sepia. Something so intense that, no matter how the years drag on, she would never forget those important to her.

So she kept silent, waiting for Roswaal to reply.

Roswaal: “You do not have to brace yourself. I am not the spokesman of Echidna the Witch. I have no right to intrude on your answer, whatever it may be. Just do what you wish.”

Beatrice: “Roswaal...”

Roswaal: “And even had you not abandoned it, you would have never fulfilled Echidna’s orders. Because I would have prioritized my own desires over you and sacrificed you. If we are to speak of betrayals, that constitutes a significant one.”

Beatrice: “——”

Penitently, Roswaal acknowledged his wrongdoings for what had happened in the mansion.

Just as Beatrice had realized in the Library, Roswaal had been the one plotting to take Beatrice’s life. She had wondered if it was written in Roswaal’s Gospel. Though she did not see how it all connected.

Beatrice: “Roswaal. What happened to your Gospel, I suppose?”

Roswaal: “...It’s burned to nothing. Thanks to a wicked maid who deeeeeeeefied her master. The future is in ashes now. And perhaps eeeeeeeeeeverything is.”

Beatrice: “Everything is hollow, and you cannot see the future... But instead, you look considerably refreshed, in fact.”

Roswaal: “—I wonder iiiiiiiiiif I am.”

Roswaal cast his gaze down in reply to Beatrice’s perfect repeat of their previous conversation. He reached for Echidna in the coffin, for her untouchable fingertips.

Roswaal: “I am sad that I have lost the definite path to the answer I seek, and scared. But perhaps I am also happy to read a story that I could have never read before. Though, because I have not felt like this in over four centuries now, I cannot tell whether it's legitimate or not."

Beatrice: "———?"

Beatrice scrunched her brows. Something about that statement felt off. Seeing her confusion made Roswaal smile slightly.

"We have not spoken nearly enough", he said with some self-deprecation.

Roswaal: "It can't be dismissed as beeeeeeeing beyond our control. At first, there was a need to be blindly fixated, but after that we did have time. We spent so much time in the same mansion. And even so, even though we had seen the same things, I kept avoiding you like I was scared of talking about it."

Beatrice: "Roswaal, what are you trying to say, I suppose?"

Roswaal: "I'm saying that it could've been like it used to be... That we could have spent our last four-hundred years like we did in Teacher's laboratory together."

Beatrice: "Teach...!?"

Finding an old, familiar word in Roswaal's quiet speech, Beatrice swallowed her breath. She breathed a shaky breath as she swallowed down the implications——

Beatrice: "Impossible, are... you, Roswaal?"

Roswaal: "I've always been Roswaal?"

Beatrice: "No! Not like that... You have to know what I mean, I suppose!"

Roswaal: "I'm merely jesting. And you're correct. I'm—— It's me, Beatrice. Roswaal."

The instant he interrupted himself, Beatrice saw Roswaal in double.

She saw a tall man with long navy hair, and a young man with hair the same color. That was the brilliant youth who used to adore Echidna and tagged along everywhere behind her.

Beatrice: "But, then... Roswaal, this... How!?"

Roswaal: "I am using one of Teacher's theories from her hunt for immortality, soul transcription. I adopted the least risky of the experiments conducted in this Sanctuary, and tested it on myself."

Beatrice: "Soul transcription... That's the experiment to transcribe your consciousness and memories into an empty vessel, achieving subjective immortality... But that experiment ended in failure because the souls failed to adhere, in fact!"

Roswaal: "Transcribed souls are pretty poor at adhering to empty vessels. That was a setback, but... If the problem is an issue of familiarity between the soul and vessel, then I overcame that problem by increasing that familiarity quotient."

The research had faced setbacks due to problems of familiarity between vessel and soul.

After Ryuzu Meyer became the nexus of Sanctuary, Echidna's crazed thirst for knowledge had led her to consider adopting the crystallized Ryuzu for other experiments.

But the Ryuzu doubles lacked any quality that would let them accept foreign souls, and the experiment ended in failure. Roswaal was saying that he bested this issue by associating the vessel with the soul. After mulling over this, Beatrice finally understood what Roswaal's presence truly meant.

—By transcribing his soul into the body of his descendants, entities close to himself, the first Roswaal had continuously extended the path to fulfill his goal.

Roswaal: "Are you going to call me inhuman, Beatrice?"

Beatrice: "..."

Roswaal: "Are you going to call it outrageous that I, desiring only my reunion with Teacher, committed the atrocity of assembling my ignorant children as vessels?"

Roswaal's words stabbed into Beatrice.

But the way Roswaal gazed so calmly at her made it almost seem that he was waiting for her to lambaste him.

So Roswaal wished to face judgement too? Just like her, when she informed him that she had abandoned her Contract with Echidna?

Roswaal must want to ask Beatrice, who knew Echidna, about the morality of his actions. About his four-hundred-year obsession, his unrequited love that had done nothing but inconvenience others.

Beatrice: "...It's not my job to say anything about it, in fact. I know how this sounds, but Betty's relationships with your descendants were shallow, I suppose. Though, thinking on it now, they were all just you, in fact. So I feel no disgust that you have used your children as stepping stones other than my gut reaction, I suppose. My thoughts on it are «euch», in fact."

Roswaal: "«Euch», huh. Hooooooooow harsh."

Beatrice: "But that is all I think, I suppose. Actually, I am overjoyed that a friend from four-hundred years ago is still alive, in fact."

Roswaal: "...I, see."

Roswaal closed his eyes. That might not have been the reply that Roswaal had been looking for, but Beatrice did not care. She was conveying her emotions honestly. That was how she resolved herself to be when she left the Library. And now—

Beatrice: "Roswaal. Squat down for a moment, I suppose."

Roswaal: "Squat? Here?"

Roswaal tilted his head as Beatrice pointed to the ground beside her. Beatrice nodded. Roswaal's eyes widened as he obediently squatted down on the spot.

Beatrice watched Roswaal squat down as she removed her right shoe. She grasped it firm in her right hand, and,

Beatrice: "Clench your teeth, in fact."

Roswaal: "—Gah!?"

Roswaal's face now rested at the perfect height to get slapped with a shoe.

The satisfying slap echoed through the room as it whacked Roswaal's face aside. He put his hand to his reddened cheek, eyes spinning. During his confusion, Beatrice had put her shoe back on.

Beatrice: “Since I’m generous, I’ll say that’s enough to forgive you, I suppose. It’s just consequences speaking for consequences, in fact. Subaru seems to forgive you too, so I may as well let you off, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “...And I think that’s your hindsight bias speaking, after everything ended with no deaths.”

Beatrice: “It is, in fact. Also, Subaru is amazing for all the work he did to prevent any deaths, I suppose. You ought to take a lesson from him, in fact.”

Roswaal: “—Ha, hahaha! Reeeeeeeally now! I ought to take a lesson from him! Ahaha! That is... Ahh, is that not, geeeeeeeeeenuinely humorous?”

Roswaal laughed as if Beatrice, hands on her hips, had just told him an excellent joke. He could not keep himself from pitching back in laughter and bonking his head on the wall. Then he struck the back of his head against the wall several times more, before giving a deep sigh.

Roswaal: “Sorry— But I do not feel that I have done anything wrong. Let me state that much.”

Beatrice: “Whatever, I suppose. If you’re going to apologize, do it the others, in fact.”

Roswaal gave Beatrice’s curt statement a nod. Still seated on the ground, he looked up at the coffin. And,

Roswaal: “Beatrice. What follows is a discussion only between you and me.”

Beatrice: “———”

Roswaal’s lowered voice made Beatrice narrow her eyes.

Beatrice crossed her arms and jerked her chin as if saying, “Well, we’ll see what you have to say”. Roswaal placed his hand on the coffin as he pulled himself to his feet, and gazed at Echidna.

His odd-colored eyes teemed with maniacal passion—

Roswaal: “—If it were possible to truly reunite with Teacher again, would you cooperate with me?”

Illustration from Volume 15, coloring by Setowi (source)

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Man, they are really not coming out. I know they have a bunch of stuff to talk about, but isn’t this a bit much?”

Impatient with the stale situation, Subaru pouted as he waited in the clearing.

He had already created ten more snowmen. There were now thirty sculptures of Puck making various expressions, transfixing Emilia and Sanctuary’s residents.

And Ram, who had quite enviably been borrowing Emilia’s lap for the past while, had recovered considerably and now leaned easily against the stone steps. But since her gaze kept shifting toward the Tomb, it was clear that she was worried about what was going on inside.

Beatrice’s eyes had been opened, and Roswaal had backed down.

Subaru doubted that anything violent would happen, but he did understand Ram’s concerns. They had yet to hear Roswaal say for himself that he had calmed down after his fit. But they were assuming that he was not okay.

Subaru: “Well, I’m leaving just that to Beako.”

Beatrice had known Roswaal for even longer than Ram had. And Beatrice had been the one to tell them that the female corpse in the Tomb was Echidna’s.

It was best that the two talk alone, if they were going to be doing that in the corpse’s presence. Subaru could get involved on the topic of what they were planning on doing with Echidna’s corpse afterwards. No problemo.

Subaru: “And it will be easier to talk about our future course after we meet up with Garfiel and the others.”

If they had managed to escape the mansion safely, then they should be coming straight to Sanctuary. Subaru had asked the Men’s Brigade to drive their carriage back to Arlam Village, too. They should meet up with everyone by the following night, at the latest.

They needed to deal with the snow covering Sanctuary and assess damages. Considering how long that would take, having this free time was the best for them. And also, for the sake of their nerves.

By focusing on making snowmen, Subaru had managed to more or less calm down his emotions. He should be capable to hold a peaceful conversation with Roswaal.

He was capable. Yes, he was capable. He rather considered himself capable.

Emilia: "Good work, Subaru... Why are flailing your arms around?"

Subaru: "Ah, I mean, nothing? I'm not shadowboxing as practice to beat that fucker's face in! He'll probably get me first anyway!"

Emilia: "Really?"

Emilia arrived beside him, tilting her head, and looking confused. She looked cheerfully over the rows of snow sculptures.

Emilia: "There's a whole mountain of Pucks. I know he'd be happy to see this."

Subaru: "Would he? I'm imagining him complaining like, «But I thought I was prettier than that?»"

Emilia: "Oh, that did sound like him. Puck, are... Ah, he's sleeping right now."

Muttered Emilia as she withdrew a blue crystal from her breast pocket.

The jewel had settled down into a state where it glowed a deep blue, reflecting the sunlight on the snow as Emilia held it. Puck, devoid of any Contract with Emilia, was sealed inside this crystal.

Subaru: "But you can't summon him like you could before."

Emilia: "No, I can't. This crystal isn't pure enough to seal a Spirit as strong as Puck. He's staying inactive so that the crystal doesn't break, but... I don't think I can touch him or talk to him like this..."

Subaru: "Gotta get a better gemstone. Something like the old green one."

The crystal pendant that used to hang from Emilia's neck. It had shattered into pieces after the end of Puck's Contract, and apparently had been quite a rare stone. Puck apparently had it with him when he first contracted her, so not even Emilia knew where to acquire one.

Emilia: "But I'll definitely get a good gemstone and bring Puck back someday. Then... There are so many things I want to talk about with him. There's everything he kept quiet from me, and everything I discovered because of it."

Emilia lovingly stroked the gem's face, her amethyst eyes full of determination.

She looked so stunningly beautiful that Subaru had to swallow his breath. Emilia noticed this and glanced up at him with a questioning hum, to which Subaru rubbed his nose.

Subaru: "Er, no, it's sorta... Emilia-tan, you've changed. I mean, you've always been cute, but now it's like you're strong too?"

Emilia: "If I am, then it's thanks to you and everyone else. I'm always only getting things from others. I want to be able to repay everyone soon."

Subaru: "I mean that's the same case here about that part of only ever getting things from others."

Subaru and Emilia both keenly felt their powerlessness.

But that did not mean they were going to lick each other's wounds. Subaru got that impression from Emilia, which he found both heartening and isolating.

He had finally gotten some of the confidence and strength needed for him to support her, and then she dashed so far ahead that she did not even need it. It felt like he could run after her forever, and he would never catch up.

Emilia: "By the way, Subaru... So, um."

Subaru: "Mhm?"

Emilia: "They're taking a long time in the Tomb. Mhm, it sure is long."

As Subaru submerged himself in sentimentality, Emilia awkwardly called to him. She glanced over to the Tomb, which sat there the same as ever.

But Emilia's face was steadily changing color. Her cheeks grew flushed, and seeing how the intense blush reached to the tips of her pointed ears, Subaru began panicking.

Subaru: "E—Emilia-tan!? Your face is flashing to red so fast, I mean, are you okay!?"

Emilia: "I... I'm, okay. I am absolutely composed. Now I would, um, like to discuss a certain matter."

Subaru: "I, I'm, indeed."

For some reason, having Emilia speak politely made Subaru wind up doing the same.

Emilia glanced over the area, and once she confirmed that no one was nearby, she gazed red-faced at Subaru. More specifically, she gazed at Subaru's mouth.

Emilia: "So, um... Subaru, it's like, you said that you l-love me, right?"

Subaru: "Erm, um, yes. I did say that. I love you."

Emilia: "—Well, that, erm, makes me, reeeally, reeeally happy, but..."

The way that Emilia's sentence trailed off gave Subaru a bad feeling.

She had just said "That makes me happy, but...". Subaru could think of only one thing that could follow on from this.

This sentence totally followed the flow of "Let's just be friends".

Subaru: "I did mention this before, that I'm waiting for you to notice me, and I'll put in my best effort so that you do."

Emilia: "I'm... That, makes me very happy. But, even when you say these things to me, I don't really understand what it is to like someone like that."

Subaru: "..."

Emilia: “It was the same in the carriage, and it’s the same now in the Tomb. You’re telling me you love me, but I still have nothing I can tell you. I know it’s reeally awful of me...”

Hearing her sentence reach its feeble end, Subaru put his hand to his chest in relief. Emilia’s answer was still in standby mode, then. Nothing had changed from before, which was fine.

So long as Subaru’s repeated and persistent love confessions had not sickened her, everything was fine. Subaru would offer Emilia his hand without fail, if she got lost enough to need it. That was the slight discord between Subaru and Emilia’s recognition of the other’s feelings. Which would become utterly pointless with Emilia’s next statement.

Emilia: “But! I think that we really need to talk about the baby in my tummy!”

Subaru: “———”

Subaru: “—”

Subaru: “———”

Subaru: “—————”

Subaru: “Pardon me?”

Emilia: “I don’t know if they’re a boy or a girl yet, but either way we have to shower them in love! But I was never taught about that, so I don’t know what to do... You have to talk to the dad for these things.”

Subaru: “No, no, no no, no... wait, wait, wait...”

Subaru’s mind could not catch up to Emilia as she rapidly continued. The speed of Emilia’s speech had put her out of breath too, and Subaru could see that she was agitated. There was no way that the two of them could have a proper discussion like this.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, take deep breaths, and calm down a second. I’m doing that, right now, taking deep breaths to calm down. Oh hey, there’s some snow right here.”

Subaru squatted down, got a handful of snow, and smacked it onto his face to physically cool himself down. He heard Emilia breathing deeply as he forced himself to think rationally.

The baby in Emilia's tummy. Emilia was the mom, and Subaru was the dad. He did not get it. Subaru's coming of age had yet to happen still.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan. When you say baby, you mean like a child, right?"

Emilia: "E—exactly. I know it'll be tough with the Royal Selection, but... That's not the baby's fault, and we have to make sure they're happy! I want the baby to get the love it needs from the people who must love it."

Emilia's determination was noble and beautiful.

But what she was saying did not make sense. Subaru had never done anything like that with Emilia. Which meant that Emilia and someone else had— No, he would rather not think about that.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan... you know that babies don't come from storks or cabbage patches, right?"

Emilia: "But when a boy and a girl kiss that makes a baby."

Subaru: "——"

He was stunned.

At her ignorance, and how adorable she was for thinking this.

Emilia: "Subaru? What's wrong? Hey, Subaru!"

Emilia did not seem like she understood anything at all as she called Subaru's name.

It somehow looked like her expression had grown stronger thanks to motherly self-awareness. Perhaps that was why Emilia had seemed strong to him. Which meant that maybe he should not fix this misunderstanding...

—No. He must. This was not the time for him to be thinking this stuff. If Emilia kept on this course, everything was going to continue alongside Emilia's fake pregnancy. She would be imagining her stomach growing bigger by the day and talking to it. Which was cute, but presented its own problems.

Emilia: "Subaru, maybe, you regret kissing me...?"

Subaru: “Uh no actually I’m craving your infinite kisses!?”

Emilia: “A—are you now...?”

Subaru regretted his knee-jerk response as the conversation flowed deeper into a swamp of misunderstandings. Subaru had basically just told Emilia that he was craving infinite baby-making. And he was, but that came later.

The first step was that Emilia needed to be educated properly. But how come Subaru had to be the one to do it?

Subaru: “C—curse you, Puck!”

Subaru cursed the cat Spirit sleeping deep in the crystal.

In his mind, he saw the cat put its paw to his head, stick out its tongue, and say “Whoops!”.

—After his internal conflict ended, Subaru realized that he had to have Ram or Frederica do the explaining, while Emilia started asking him about deciding on names for the child.

Arc 4 Interlude II - Emilia Camp • Warlock • Spirit • Spiritual Arts User

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Closing Chapter “Meeting Each Other Halfway”, Parts 4-6, and Volume 15, Ending Chapter “Offbeat Steps Under the Moonlight”, Part 2

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 334

Bones creaked at the moment of impact, the body whirling through the air before slamming into the wall. Unfaltering, the shock pierced through the flimsy woodwork, splinters showering the figure as it shot out of building. It skidded gracelessly over the snow, kicking up frost as it tumbled.

???: “———”

The prone figure did not even twitch. Everything fell so silent that it could practically be dead. Subaru glanced at the person who had been shunted through the wall, and at the one who had shunted him, inside the building. The assailant noticed Subaru’s gaze, and with a satisfied sigh,

???: “Yeh... I goddamn got it done, oy.”

Said the blond boy who smiled as he clicked his sharp fangs— Garfiel.

Subaru scratched his head, watching Ram run over to the pummeled Roswaal.

Subaru: “Y—you sure did”.

That was all he managed to say.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Garfiel and the others met up with Subaru's group in Sanctuary half a day after Emilia's declaration of pregnancy. Otherwise said, they arrived on the morning after the Great Rabbit fight.

Patrasche came to Sanctuary pulling a carriage of six people, including Garfiel.

Hearing that the girls they had gone to rescue in the mansion, Rem, Petra, and Frederica were all okay, and that the rescuers Garfiel and Otto were fine too, relieved Subaru.

But the bonus that they had brought along with them was,

???: "Oh look, hi there again, Mister."

Said a girl with pigtails, bound in a corner of the carriage— Meili, the Beastmaster who had attacked the mansion with Elsa.

The unexpected reunion struck Subaru dumb. Meili addressed him with the same friendly tone and demeanor she had before, in the mansion.

Meili: "Care to hear me out? This blond guy has just no clue how to treat ladies. He leaves them sitting there wrapped up in bindings, it's so awwwfulll. Don't you think so, Mister?"

Subaru: "Yeah. Though I don't know what you would've done to me, so I would've gagged you too... Which means we caught you, but what about Elsa?"

Meili: "No clue there. But Elsa wouldn't have survived that blaze, would she? So I guess she's dead. Doesn't bother me."

Meili didn't care in the slightest about the death of her supposed compatriot, Elsa. Subaru furrowed his brows.

Subaru: "You sure must be relaxed if you're looking for better captivity conditions. Doubt you're gonna be having a great time. You did some really bad stuff."

Meili: "I know. But I messed up, so it's kinda just like, oh well. And if I go back, Mama would just scold me anyway."

Subaru: “Your mom. I know you mentioned this a few times in the mansion, but that means you have some kind of kingpin. Well, just another thing that will get cleared up by talking to Roswaal.”

Meili: “Give me meals thrice a day with no peppirs¹⁹⁰, okay?”

Meili cheerily turned her back to Subaru, announcing that the conversation was over. They would have to deal with her incarceration later. But either way, she was an important witness to as to what had happened in the Roswaal mansion attack.

It genuinely surprised Subaru that Garfiel had had the smarts to capture her.

Next in order was the safety of Sanctuary and the Arlam villagers. After they learned that those who had evacuated Sanctuary earlier were safe in a nearby town, everyone’s well-being was secured. Just when Subaru had put his hand to his chest in relief, the first blow of closure struck.

Garfiel: “Personally think my amazin’ self’s bein’ damn nice to let ya off with just one punch.”

Garfiel swung the arm he had used to punch Roswaal as he gazed at the open hole in the wall. Though Subaru had quite a few objections about Roswaal, and believed that Garfiel’s fury was justified,

Subaru: “Considering that punch is stronger than ten of my punches combined, I really have to wonder about calling it «nice»...”

Garfiel: “Stop bein’ so passive, Captain. C’mon, have a go.”

Garfiel snorted and presented something to Subaru. Subaru looked to Garfiel’s hands, to find him holding a branch he must have gotten in the forest.

It was a rather good branch, thick and long. Like a wooden baseball bat.

Subaru: “What should I do with this, exactly?”

Garfiel: “It’d be a dick move to hit him a bunch. Ya get one shot, but no one got any right to complain if ya use this to make it a good one.”

¹⁹⁰ The ReZero world name for peppers.

Subaru: "It's already enough of a dick move to beat him up after what you did!"

And he was using a weapon. Subaru could start arguing semantics over whether it would count as a punch. But Garfiel just tilted his head, and jerked his chin toward the hole.

Garfiel: "It doesn't look like anyone agrees with'cha, Captain."

Subaru: "Huh?"

Stricken with a rather rueful Garfiel, Subaru looked outside to find that Ram had gotten Roswaal back to his feet, where Frederica faced him with her fist brandished over her head.

Frederica: "Brace yourself, Master!"

Frederica's powerful arm cut through the air as she drove her fist into the same spot Garfiel hit, his left cheek. Roswaal went flying through the air yet again, this time coming to a stop several meters away once he slammed into a tree trunk. The impact made snow fall from the treetop, burying Roswaal beneath it.

After witnessing it to completion, Frederica clapped her hands with a satisfied nod.

Subaru: "Seriously!? Everyone endorses this retaliation?"

Garfiel: "We gotta get closure, Captain. It's gonna be awkward later on if he doesn't get his payback for what he did. Ain't like I ain't gonna heal him. 'N there's Emilia-sama too."

Roswaal poked his head out of the snow, his eyes spinning, as Petra and Otto awaited their turns beside him. Ram pulled Roswaal out, while Emilia stood nearby to heal him at a moment's notice.

Subaru: "I mean Emilia-tan is there as a healer yes? She absolutely isn't waiting for her turn, yes? Though I guess she does have a right to be included."

Garfiel: "Eh, think'd be hard with her personality. But anyway, that's what'cha got. So c'mon, Captain."

Garfiel pushed the wooden bat over to Subaru. He timidly accepted it.

Subaru: "You won't let me in on the talk if I don't hit him?"

Garfiel: “I ain’t goin’ that far. It’s just that you wanna smack the bastard ‘cross the face too, yeh?”

A shove to his back made Subaru step out of the house.

Garfiel shot Subaru a thumbs-up from across the hole in the wall. Looks like he was imitating things Subaru did. With that send-off from his still-uncomfortable surrogate brother, Subaru reached the very end of the Roswaal Closure line.

Incidentally, Petra had just slapped Roswaal’s face with a soaking cloth. A wet, satisfying thwack echoed throughout Sanctuary.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “Ahem, okay. Now that we’ve had our closure, I think it’s time for us to discuss recent events and figure out what we’re doing for the future.”

After clearing his throat, Subaru took charge of the proceedings and glanced over the group. All the important players in this loop were together in the cathedral. Which amounted to quite a number of people, and made Subaru sentimental about how the household had grown.

In the cathedral were the old residents of Roswaal mansion, Subaru, Emilia, Beatrice, Roswaal, and Ram, alongside the new residents of the Roswaal mansion, Otto, Frederica, and Petra. And then there were the main figures from Sanctuary, Garfiel and Ryuzu.

Rem was currently sleeping in Ryuzu’s house, under the care of Pico and the other Ryuzu doubles.

Emilia: “Subaru, your eyes look kind of distant, are you alright? Are you still not feeling well?”

Subaru: “Nope, I’m fine. Just getting sentimental. Team Emilia’s doubled in size. Though, add Sanctuary’s people and the villagers from Arlam, and you’ll start getting a bigger figure.”

Emilia: “...You’re right.”

Emilia nodded, her eyes similarly distant.

After demonstrating her will by holding her ground, and holding the defense lines against the Great Rabbit, the Sanctuary dwellers and Arlam's Young Men Brigade had to view her more favorably. Just because someone had been dependable in a pinch, it did not mean they were fit to be a Ruler, but it was a world of difference compared to when they had been alienating her.

If they could interact with her more often, then they would surely come to learn Emilia's personality. They just needed to gain more understanding like that, over time, thought Subaru.

Subaru: "Aaand, I'm off topic. Okay, back to the point. So, we all know what happened in Sanctuary and at the mansion? Now I'd kinda like to exact some responsibility from the guy who triggered it all, or ask for some details, but..."

Everyone in the room turned to look at the topical mastermind. Roswaal laid limp in a corner of the cathedral, in Ram's lap. His eyes opened as he noticed the gazes upon him.

Roswaal: "Ooooooooooh? After you have all tormented me so thoroughly, you stiiiiiiiiill must brutalize me further before you aaaaaaaaare satisfied?"

Subaru: "You get what you pay for. Emilia-tan even healed you, so stop saying this shameless junk. But anyway, I'm more surprised about Ram."

Ram: "...For what?"

Subaru stuck his tongue out at the mouthy Roswaal, as he redirected the conversation onto Ram. She held Roswaal's hand as she rested his head on her lap, her words making Subaru furrow his brows.

Subaru: "No, I mean, I know you weren't in top shape, but I'm impressed how you just kept quiet and watched the Roswaal Closure. I was certain you'd flip out."

Ram: "Foolishness, Barusu. I do not believe in the least that Roswaal-sama is utterly incapable of mistakes. But I do wish to take his side when his path is mistaken. Of course I would find myself thinking that way. You cannot see even that? How foolish."

Subaru: "Don't start and end by doubling up on the fool business! But, anyway, with that logic, you..."

Ram: “Exactly. You were justified to strike Roswaal-sama. So I accept that he was stricken. It is up to Ram to tend to him with care and kindness afterwards.”

As always, Ram’s exhibitions of love were somewhat masculine.

Nobody could complain about her devotion to Roswaal. Garfiel alone did look like he had presented with a dilemma, but stayed silent, probably because he had always been talked out of mentioning anything.

Beatrice: “You have odd tastes, I suppose. After all those burns to your stomach... Were Betty and the silver-hair girl not around, you would have been left with those scars, in fact.”

The next one to speak was Beatrice, who sat quietly beside Subaru.

Her knees were folded up to her chest as she leaned against Subaru’s left shoulder. She had assisted Emilia in Ram’s treatment, erasing the injuries, allowing Ram to recover so well.

Ram: “I give you my gratitude, Beatrice-sama and Emilia-sama. But I would prefer that saving my life does not act as a pretext for you to meddle with my love affairs.”

Beatrice: “Betty is not as generous as to do that, I suppose. If you are going to devote yourself to this man who had done so much wrong even if it hurts you again, do that at your liberty, in fact.”

Roswaal: “—It won’t happen again.”

Beatrice gave Ram her harsh reply, when Roswaal heard her and sat up. The two of them caught their breath, and Subaru also gulped.

Roswaal was not wearing his cosmetics, exposing his unadorned face.

Without his clown make up, the handsome man covered his left eye with his hand, and gazed over the people assembled in the cathedral with his blue. He bowed his head deeply.

Roswaal: “I will never strive to achieve anything by so arrogantly making sacrifices of the people here ever again— I swear it on the soul of my mentor.”

Everyone: “———”

Roswaal: “And I would rather have Beatrice not punch me a third time.”

Roswaal joked as he raised his head and looked at Beatrice. Beatrice averted her gaze, sour.

Beatrice: “The second one was punishment for your moronic drivel, I suppose. The third is beyond me, in fact.”

Roswaal: “That is how I’d like it to stay. I’d prefer to avoid undergoing any more revenge from you all. Garfiel and Subaru-kun were so ruthless that even I had prepared myself for death.”

Subaru: “You’re putting my hit in the same class as that? It couldn’t have been that strong.”

Though Subaru had wanted his punch to have some oomph. His strike had cleanly struck the tip of Roswaal’s chin, and what a sight it had been to see Roswaal too dizzied to stand.

Either way. Roswaal’s statements did feel genuine. Meaning that Subaru was unhesitant to try trusting him. It seemed that something had moved Roswaal as he watched Ram risk her life to burn his Gospel, contributing to his change of heart.

Subaru: “Though this is kinda out-of-tune from you, considering we diverged from that Gospel you loved. I was seriously thinking that winning you over while you have a breakdown would be the last job to do in Sanctuary.”

Roswaal: “That bud was plucked before it could sprout. No words of mine can change that I lost our bet. At the moment that I lost myself, and defied both my Contract and Gospel toooooooo bring snowfall. And yet you performed so excellently.”

Subaru: “...Well, that’s because Garfiel and Emilia-tan put in serious work.”

Roswaal: “You have a bad habit of neglecting to name yourself at moments like this. Either way, results are results. You have overcome every tribulation that I thought impossible, and liberated Sanctuary. I have lost.”

Garfiel: “—So hey, Captain.”

Roswaal shrugged with resigned acceptance. Subaru found no words to speak, when Garfiel raised his hand, butting in.

His glare remained fixed on Roswaal, while his sharp fangs clattered.

Garfiel: “Are ya seriously thinkin’ t’add this guy t’our team? Honestly, I still ain’t quite agreein’ with that.”

Subaru: “Garfiel...”

Garfiel: “Well, it’s natural ain’t it! What the hell was this prick thinkin’ he was doin’ in Sanctuary and the mansion? Sayin’ you weren’t there Captain, the village’d be rabbit food, ‘n my Sis ‘n this girl’d be killed for fun by that guts lady! If we protect this guy, we don’t know when he’s gonna go back to slicing our necks!”

Garfiel stomped the floor, yelling, a slight quake running through the cathedral.

Garfiel was correct. They had had their conversations and beat-downs with Roswaal to bring closure, but that had only been the preamble for hearing his explanations.

Roswaal had exposed everyone here to mortal danger for the sake of his own goals, and Subaru had seen everyone lose their lives multiple times. This world devoid of sacrifices, where everyone was together and safe, had only been accomplished because he had those deaths as a groundwork as he worked together with everyone.

Subaru was furious enough that he wanted to slap Roswaal, and interrogate him. He wanted to do what Garfiel was saying, and turn his back on Roswaal.

Subaru: “But still, we need Roswaal.”

Garfiel: “Captain!”

Subaru: “We absolutely need Roswaal’s help so that Emilia wins the Royal Selection. She loses this guy as her supporter, and Emilia’s out of the running. We will make him pay, of course... But we can’t just say «okay goodbye now»!”

Garfiel: “Yer really fuckin’ tellin’ me to forgive a guy who tried to kill my family!?”

Subaru: “———”

Garfiel's emotional words pierced Subaru.

No matter how much Subaru tried to pacify him with words, Garfiel would not agree. He had almost lost Frederica, and almost lost Ryuzu. This boy had spent over ten years training himself so that he could protect his family. Roswaal was his unforgivable nemesis.

Frederica: "I... forgive the Master."

Garfiel: "...Sis!?"

But the one to disagree with Garfiel was his very own blood relative, Frederica, who had almost been murdered. Her long, blonde hair swayed as she spoke. Garfiel's eyes shot open in shock.

Garfiel: "What the fuck're you sayin'! This shithead tried to..."

Frederica: "And despite that, I am still alive. Because you saved me, Garf."

Garfiel: "Yer talkin' from fuckin' hindsight! He tried! To kill you! And Nanna! And ain't that... ain't that all there is to it!"

Frederica: "...The Master has cared for me for over a decade."

Garfiel's shoulders heaved as Frederica narrowed her eyes. Her gaze inspired compassion, as she was perhaps moved by her matured brother's anger.

Frederica: "So that I could achieve my goals, I accepted the hand that the Master offered me. I have learned much over the time since, and now I am here. To speak in common terms, I have exploited the Master's generosity for my own purposes. Would our debts not be even?"

Garfiel: "Don't fuckin' treat debts on the same level as life! You don't know when he'll betray—"

Otto: "Erm, I apologize for this when you're so enthusiastic, but would you mind if I interjected?"

Garfiel tried to argue, but this time Otto pulled the breaks.

Garfiel's furious gaze turned to Otto, his hand raised. But Otto let the glare wash off him as he soothingly continued,

Otto: “Now just calm down, calm down.”

Otto: “We’ll put aside Garfiel’s emotional argument for a moment, and consider Margrave Roswaal’s likelihood of committing something like this again... I think we’re safe to believe that he won’t, at least for the time being.”

Garfiel: “Eh? The fuck yer sayin’, ya prick. Are ya sleepin’? I’ll put yer lights out, oy.”

Otto: “The Contract, remember? A Contract was bound between Natsuki-san and the Margrave, so this affair has reached an obvious conclusion. Correct, Margrave?”

Otto was entirely calm as he dealt with a seething Garfiel.

It was also bold of him to verify the state of the Contract not with Subaru, but with Roswaal. The latter realized Otto’s intentions, his eyes widening somewhat.

Roswaal: “Otto-kun iiiiiiiiiiiis correct. Owing to the Contract between myself and Subaru-kun, I cannot defy Subaru-kun’s course.”

Garfiel: “Course, as in?”

Subaru: “He abandons the Gospel and helps make Emilia Ruler. That’s the Contract between me and Roswaal. He can’t pull this crap anymore.”

Subaru took over, Garfiel grinding his teeth in anger.

Subaru had won the bet. Roswaal was bound by the Contract, preventing him from forcing the future to follow the writ of the missing Gospel.

Though whether that rendered Roswaal harmless was a different question altogether.

Garfiel: “That still doesn’t close the books on what he did! If we settle this with an «I’m so sorry I won’t do it again», we ain’t ever getting’ «Rogos’s revenge demands more than one hand»!”

Garfiel’s shouting emphasized his stance even further, creating a divide of opinion among the group regarding Roswaal’s deeds.

Subaru, Otto, and Frederica accepted them. Garfiel and Petra rejected them.

Emilia and Ryuzu were undecided.

Subaru would need to wait and watch to see what stance Beatrice and Ram would side with. Their relationships with Roswaal differed from everyone else's.

Subaru: "Petra..."

Like Garfiel, Petra was adamantly furious at Roswaal. She gripped her skirt, her face red as Subaru called her.

Petra: "I'm still against it no matter what you say, Subaru-sama... The Master tried... Our Lord tried to do something terrible to the villagers, right? Even though everyone trusted him. Even though I thought our Lord was a good person...!"

Roswaal: "...It does hurt tooooooo hear that."

Even Roswaal had to frown as a little girl denounced him.

Petra was probably the one best reflecting the general feelings of the populace, without any ulterior inter-faction motives or complicated circumstances. Not because she was a child. But because her attitude clearly spoke of the rage she was feeling toward Roswaal for betraying her honest opinion of him as her Lord.

The villagers of Arlam and Sanctuary had not been informed that Roswaal had been behind this whole mess.

Petra was present at this meeting as a sort of representative because, despite hearing bits and pieces of conversation in the mansion which had led her near the truth, she never had spoken up to secure absolute conviction. They were trusting in that cleverness of hers.

If Petra had tried to thoughtlessly dig for answers as any child her age would, they might have said some junk to deceive her. But they did not.

Subaru: "I know I'm repeating myself, but we need Roswaal. If we drop Roswaal here, we close Emilia's path. You can say you don't want to work with him, or conversely we could bind him in ropes to get him to, either way he's working with us."

Garfiel: "We ain't gonna convince each other, Captain."

Subaru: "We're not. So we need to find a compromise. What do you want Roswaal to do that will satisfy you for now? And apologies, but we can't have you kill him."

Garfiel: "—Tch."

To keep Garfiel in check as he started getting to his feet, Beatrice stood up. Short as she was, it was more than enough to look down at the boy sitting down.

Garfiel clicked his tongue and shifted his glare to Roswaal—

Garfiel: "First is securing what's needed for the gramps 'n grans in Sanctuary. Yer gonna make sure everyone's safe, no matter if they're stayin' or goin'. It's the first concrete step t'achieving what Sis's trying to do."

Roswaal: "Very well, accepted."

Garfiel: "I ain't gonna be hearin' any excuses 'bout not havin' the funds 'cause the mansion burned down."

Roswaal: "The building that burned down was an auxiliary residence of the Mathers. The main residency is elsewhere. I try not to be so grossly unprepared as to fall into something as ridiculous as bankruptcy."

Roswaal's confident reply shocked Subaru.

It was news to him that the incinerated mansion was a side residence. Now he looked stupid for worrying about where they would live now.

Garfiel: "N' following from that condition, two more promis... No, a Contact."

Roswaal: "———"

Garfiel raised two fingers, Roswaal falling silent.

Garfiel lowered one finger.

Garfiel: “First’s what the Captain said. You pledge t’everyone here that you’ll stick to those terms. You ain’t pullin’ any more of this shit.”

Roswaal: “...Yes, of course. And the other?”

Garfiel: “Easy— You break that, and my amazin’ fangs’ll mash your head to pieces.”

Frigid bloodlust emanated from Garfiel.

The murderousness that should be spearing only into Roswaal was so intense that its ripples brushed against everyone’s skin like a razorblade.

Roswaal: “Very well— Let us tie the Contract.”

So when Roswaal accepted it only a few seconds later, and Subaru felt the bloodlust dissipate like an ebbing wave, his body relaxed, he breathed a sigh.

Garfiel sat cross-legged with his elbow on his knee and hand on his chin, looking unsatisfied.

Garfiel: “...It’s all I got for the moment. You best leave it there too, miss.”

Petra: “But...”

Garfiel: “It ain’t gonna make yer friends or family happy if ya tell them.”

Petra, bordering on tears, looked up at Frederica beside her. Frederica nodded, and Petra stifled her sobs by pressing her face to Frederica’s chest. It was more than enough to pain anyone’s heart.

Subaru: “Anyway, while we still have questions about how aid for Arlam’s and Sanctuary’s villagers will be secured, and where we’re going now that the mansion’s in ashes, and basically what we’re doing next, is it possible to say that we’ve finished exacting responsibility and we have all had our say on this?”

After waiting for Petra’s sobbing to stop, Subaru summed up everyone’s thoughts.

If nobody objected, then they had completed the first stage of conversations about the Sanctuary and mansion affairs. Now they just needed to discuss the other issues one-by-one—

???: “Excuse me.”

But someone did raise their hand in the silence.

And it was the leader of the group, who had not yet given her opinion on Roswaal, Emilia. Everyone’s gaze focused on her as she looked to Subaru, seeking permission to speak.

Subaru: “Go ahead, Emilia-tan. Feel free to say anything.”

Emilia: “Then I’ll oblige.”

Emilia nodded at Subaru and looked at Roswaal. Roswaal raised an eyebrow, looking rather surprised as he waited for Emilia to speak.

And Emilia spoke.

Emilia: “Roswaal has not done the most important thing yet. This discussion is not over until he does.”

Roswaal: “Most important thing...?”

Roswaal failed to figure out what Emilia was talking about, looking confused. Subaru tilted his head too as he contemplated what Emilia could be trying to say.

Emilia looked over the group, and with a quiet sigh,

Emilia: “When you do something bad, you have to be sorry about it.”

All: “———”

Emilia: “Everyone’s been telling Roswaal to do this and do that to prove that he’s repented, and Roswaal swore to his Teacher that he won’t do anything bad again, but before we even get to that, isn’t there something he has to say? Roswaal, have you said it even once? I didn’t hear it.”

Her cheeks red with anger, Emilia railed on Roswaal.

She was saying things so juvenile that it left everyone speechless. But Emilia was not joking in the least, and was truly, demonstrably mad.

Emilia was angry. Even though she rarely ever got angry at all. Except it was happening, and Emilia was mad.

To ensure that something so obvious, but something everyone had forgotten, did happen.

Subaru: “Roswaal.”

Subaru looked at the astonished Roswaal, and smiled as he looked to catch him off guard.

Subaru: “Apologize, Roswaal. If we’re going to do things together, then you’re obligated to, as a person.”

Roswaal: “———”

Subaru shared Emilia’s stance, the sentiment spreading to everyone in the cathedral. Roswaal perceived what he sea of gazes sought from him, and swallowed his breath.

Emilia: “—Mhm, that’ll do.”

The way Emilia smiled after seeing Roswaal’s apology left an incredible impression.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—Subaru makes an indescribable expression as he looked down at the woman in the coffin.

Roswaal: “Whaaaaaaat an impolite face to make whiiiiiiile looking at my Teacher.”

Said Roswaal, as he peered at Subaru from aside.

Inside the deepest room of the Tomb, Subaru and Roswaal faced each other, the coffin between them. So that they could speak, without anyone intruding. But before that,

Subaru: “This is honestly your Teacher, the Witch Echidna?”

Roswaal: “liiiiiindeed. Her body rests eternal in the spellstone, her mortal beauty preserved. It was worth living so I can meet her again like now.”

Subaru: “All I really have to say about your descendant-hopping super-motivated faux-stalking is «euch».”

Roswaal: “Beatrice hit me with the eeeeeeeexact same comment.”

Roswaal seemed to be having fun, but Subaru felt no urge to smile.

Beatrice had told Subaru that Roswaal had been perpetuating his life by transcribing his soul. Subaru had cracked a joke about something similar before, but he had never even dreamed that it would be correct.

But it did cause him to come to terms with the family’s fanaticism for Echidna, since it was all actually just Roswaal.

Subaru: “Do you feel guilty at all about your descendants...? I guess the answer’s obvious.”

Roswaal: “The Mathers family was made for that purpose. I began it, I continued it, I constructed it. It does not discomfort me, no matter who criticizes me.”

Subaru: “Great, the quintessential stalker.”

Roswaal: “Surely not. Regardless, there’s something I’d like toooooo confirm. About this person you saw in the Trial, who is not my Teacher called Echidna.”

Roswaal narrowed his eyes as he spoke. Subaru narrowed his eyes as well.

There were differences between the Echidna that Roswaal was talking about, and the Echidna that Subaru had met in the dream castle. That was the shock Subaru got once he got a glimpse of the woman in the coffin.

Subaru looked down at her figure once again. Long white hair and pale skin. Beautiful features, and a sleek black dress. Her distinctive characteristics were identical to Echidna’s. But she was obviously someone else.

The Echidna that Subaru knew was slightly younger than the woman in the coffin. Her features tended to be cute rather than beautiful, and her hair was cut shorter than the woman’s.

They did look alike. If someone called them sisters, Subaru would believe it. However,

Roswaal: “My Teacher had no relatives. She had no elder sister, and no one to call a daughter except Beatrice. I know this better than anyone else.”

Subaru: “So, who was the Echidna in the Trial? It was her, but with her youth restored... That is not what it feels like either. They’re different people. I can tell that this isn’t just a thing about ages.”

Roswaal: “Anyone intruding on the Trial must be connected. If this person was the one managing the Trial, they are assuredly connected. Perhaps some external party acted while I was unaware... It is conceivable. But.”

Roswaal did not continue, but Subaru sensed that he had dismissed whatever he was going to say as impossible. He did not have any basis for it, but perhaps Roswaal was confident in his stalking proficiency. His confidence told him it was impossible that someone could do something bad to his Teacher without him knowing about it. Which was gross.

Roswaal: “I feel that you’re imagining something rather iiiiiiiimpolite.”

Subaru: “Blame your imagination, or actually just blame yourself. Anyway, both me and Emilia saw Echidna during the Trial. Or at least, an Echidna that isn’t this one.”

Emilia had been present when Subaru first laid eyes on the woman in the coffin. That had been when they realized that the woman Beatrice called Mother was not the person they called Echidna.

Who was the girl in the dream? Without ever reaching any conclusions, Subaru wound up engaging in this conversation with Roswaal.

Subaru: “Can’t we use the Trial’s systems to enter the dream again?”

Roswaal: “The Tomb’s functions were ceased by a destruction of the algorithm. The technique has been lost, and the requirements are complex. And the Miasma permeating this Tomb has escaped. This Tomb is just an ordinary, historical stone structure now.”

Subaru: “I, see...”

Disappointment that he could not confirm it, and disappointment that he could not see her again, assaulted Subaru simultaneously. Just for some reason, Subaru did not find interacting with her and the Witches so bad, even factoring in the whole betrayal thing.

So losing the opportunity to do so brought melancholy in Subaru.

Subaru: "...We'll put the unchangeable stuff off for later. So, what are you thinking to do with the woman in the coffin? Bury her?"

Roswaal: "I will neither bury nor burn her. Subaru-kun, I'd like you not to misunderstand. I desire reunion with my Teacher, but that does not mean I've been yearning tooooooo meet my Teacher's cadaver. This is merely one step along the way."

Subaru: "What do you mean?"

Subaru raised his brows, wariness and distrust swelling within him.

Subaru had thought that Roswaal's desired reunion with his crush was a face-to-face meeting with the corpse in this Tomb. He had not conceived the possibility that her corpse was actually in the Tomb until he learned that as a fact, but the second that Subaru found out that Roswaal's mentor was inside here, of course he arrived at that possibility.

But Roswaal easily rejected that idea.

Roswaal: "I desire to speak again with my Teacher, blood running through her, soul housed inside her, life breathed within her. Retrieving her corpse is simply the first step."

Subaru: "You are going to resurrect the dead!? That... This world has magic to bring back the dead!?"

Roswaal: "Make sure you do not misunderstand. The possibility is present because it is her. There is no way to bring back lives that have met a conventional death. Od Lagna would never permit such convenient magic as resurrection."

Subaru: "Od Lagna?"

Subaru scrunched his face at the new word.

Roswaal: “Od Lagna is... How to say, a stockpile of Mana at the core of the world. No, supposing that the world itself were a living creature, then Od Lagna would be its nexus, and the Od of the world. Though we can only imagine as to its exact location, and whether it is sentient or not.”

Subaru: “The Od of the world... wouldn’t permit it, meaning?”

Roswaal: “To explain that would require quick unravelling of the entire history of magic to this day.”

Subaru: “In three sentences.”

Roswaal: “How harsh.”

Roswaal stroked his chin as he considered what to say. Then he began explaining as coherently and succinctly as he could.

Roswaal: “All of magic in this world was devised by past magicians. The first incidence of magic happened when an individual with outstanding talent in the manipulation of Mana began casting magic of their type. As more people became capable of magic, and disparities in proficiency began to arise, it became difficult to classify the phenomenon without assigning names or classes.”

Subaru: “That was when magic first got names, and was split into the separate type affinities.”

Roswaal: “Yes. While magical techniques and knowledge were expanding, people with incredible talent for magic started being born. They devised novel uses of Mana, separated from the existing forms of magic, to create new magic. The development of magic has always proceeded as mundane magicians comprehensively overuse the novel discoveries from a prior selection of geniuses.”

Subaru: “Kind of a spiteful lecture, since you’re one of the geniuses.”

Roswaal: “I may have gone through unpleasant times, oooooonce or twice.”

In every world and universe out there, the overly proficient ones would be alienated. There had been a time when Roswaal had been immature, and suffered under those gazes and obstacles. Though nowadays, he would definitely smile back and secretly get revenge.

Subaru: “So what does this have to do with Od Lagna?”

Roswaal: “The existence of a source for magic and the power called Mana. Research investigating into the topic proceeded as people tested unprecedented approaches and methods for using Mana. Those who created magic with shocking effects began to stand out even among the geniuses. Each case of this magic produced results beyond compare to previous magic, such that a single magician could alter a region’s geography— And once that happened, they all saw exactly the same thing.”

Subaru: “...”

Roswaal: “With its dim glow, it was the very Mana they so naturally manipulated. But this was a mass of power overwhelmingly vaster than any Mana they had touched before— These magicians, with their understanding of so-called forbidden magic, all witnessed this expanse of Mana, and their minds soon fell ill.”

Subaru: “And that was Od Lagna... The fountain of the world?”

Roswaal: “Just as humans fear injury or disease, the world rejects those liable to shake its foundations. That was what some first started saying about Od Lagna. The true common point between those whose minds were broken by witnessing Od Lagna, was that they reached new heights of magic that would have rewritten the practice’s history.”

It was unclear how powerful their magic had been.

They had divulged some portion of the theory behind their magic, but before they could publicly exhibit the completed algorithm and have it adopted for use, the magician who invented it would invariably have their mind broken.

Subaru: “Then resurrection would be one of them?”

Roswaal: “I wish to see my dearly departed again. That desire is omnipresent, shared by everyone, and more than a few geniuses were motivated by it. Though, before they could reach anyone, they all lost their minds to Od Lagna.”

Subaru thought it ironic. It wasn’t clear whether Od Lagna truly existed, or that Od Lagna had destroyed the magicians’ minds. But still, they sought to find the limit of their abilities. To realize a goal that everyone would yearn for.

Roswaal: “One theory states that Od Lagna is the consciousness ruling over everything in the world. And though it warrants skepticism, perhaps Od Lagna could be the one bestowing people with Divine Protections— Is the nonsense that people have come up with.”

Subaru: “Trying to stay uninvolved, and then involving itself... That celestial bunch never make sense, no matter where you are.”

Roswaal: “«That celestial bunch» is an entertaining way to put it.”

Ignorant to the logic behind Subaru’s epithet as he treated Od Lagna as a god, Roswaal laughed. Subaru had not expected this discussion, but their real topic had been something other than Od Lagna.

Subaru brought the conversation back to,

Subaru: “So, your reunion with your Teacher will not enrage Od Lagna.”

Roswaal: “Eeeeeeeexactly. It does not make use of any forbidden arts, or any special powers or algorithms. In fact, I’m far more worried that you would be the one displeasing Od Lagna.”

Subaru: “...Honestly, I was thinking the same.”

Return by Death. Subaru did not intend to reveal its requirements to Roswaal in detail, but it was no exaggeration that Subaru’s ability was conceivably touching on the taboo of resurrection. Subaru had used Return by Death to alter his own doomed fate, and saved the lives of others. If Od Lagna were to witness this, there was no way that Subaru would pass its harsh standards.

Unless, perhaps, the entity that allowed Subaru to Return by Death was strong enough to survive Od Lagna.

Subaru: “Just the idea makes me shudder. Anyway, your methods for this are...?”

Roswaal: “Sorry, but I’m not going to tell you that now.”

Subaru shook his head and got back to talking, when Roswaal slammed that statement into him. Subaru’s eyes darted about in confusion for a moment as he failed to understand what was said.

Subaru: “Huh, wha, what? What did you say?”

Roswaal: “Whaaaaaaat you just heard. I’m not going to tell you my methods for achieving my ultimate goal. I’m rather sure that nothing in the terms of our Contract reeeeeeequires me to.”

Subaru: “I mean, yeah, but... Come on!”

Roswaal: “I want to make this clear to you, Subaru-kun.”

Said Roswaal coldly. He walked around the coffin to come to Subaru’s side, looking down at him as he raised his finger.

Roswaal: “I have lost my guide the Gospel, and lost sight of the path of how things should be. But that will not make me abandon my goals in the least. Our Contract prevents me from using my past approach. And even supposing I laid pointless obstacles before you, Garfiel would rip my throat open, so I am also barred from that.”

Subaru: “...Yeah, exactly. So what can you do? What path can you pick except one where you reveal your goal, and come to us for help?”

Roswaal: “That is simple—— I will oversee you.”

Subaru: “———”

Oversee. Definitely, it was not a peaceful word, and it rendered Subaru speechless. Though Roswaal’s eyes gleamed in different colors as he looked down at Subaru, identical emotion lit them up.

Roswaal: “Fortunately, your goal of making Emilia-sama the Ruler overlaps with my path to achieving my goal. You were supposed to secure an unshakable will of iron at this juncture, devoting yourself to Emilia-sama no matter the loss, and become a Knight riddled in wounds.”

Subaru: “...”

Roswaal: “But that route has been cut off. You instead chose to walk a more painful, more agonizing path of thorns. Though I do respect you for that decision, I also pity you.”

Subaru: “Excuse me?”

He could let that slide. Subaru glared at Roswaal, who shook his head. He was definitely doing so out of pity for Subaru.

He faced his palm to Subaru, who was both irritated and confused.

Roswaal: “This is where you should have learned what it is to lose something. You should have become a Sage, who even in the face of loss, stringently protects only what is precious. I know how it sounds, but I wanted to save you.”

Subaru: “What’s so wise about that. What is so clever about accepting loss¹⁹¹!”

Roswaal: “You have rejected loss and chosen to salvage everything, and you will hurt for it. You will repeatedly suffer wounds beyond repair, repeatedly suffer loss, frantically attempt to regain what you lost, the invisible hurt compounding perpetually. And I pity that.”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Roswaal: “And so I will not be lenient about your refusal to be a Sage, and decision to be a Fool. As expected, yes? After all, you are the one who chose this.”

Roswaal’s outstretched hand landed on Subaru’s shoulder, the latter unable to speak.

Subaru trembled as Roswaal drew his face near to Subaru’s, and whispered softly in his ear.

Roswaal: “—Should you lose anyone you have resolved to protect, I will swiftly incinerate the survivors.”

Subaru: “...!?”

Roswaal: “You have chosen to save everything. You must not miscarry a single thing. A world of loss must not lead to the future. As a future where you accept loss could lead to a future I do not desire, I will invalidate it— Now that the Gospel is gone, you are what guides me to my goal, Subaru-kun. Only you, and your path.”

¹⁹¹ A bit of a not-so-funny pun. The word Sage is composed of the Kanji “賢”, meaning “wise”, and “人”, meaning “man”.

Roswaal drew his face away and lightly shoved Subaru's chest. It was not particularly strong, but Subaru pitched back as if struck, his breath catching as his back hit the wall.

That man standing in front of Subaru, Roswaal L. Mathers, was terrifying.

His conceptions had changed. He had stopped relying on the Gospel, and would never do anything to antagonize Subaru or Emilia again. He would assist Subaru should the latter desire it, and would put in his all to keep Emilia on the path to the Throne.

But were Subaru to make even the slightest mistake, Roswaal would instantly overturn and ruin everything. No lie and no deception. Roswaal would absolutely do it.

Roswaal: "What, there's no need to be so scared. Provided that you continue to fulfil your roles, I will offer you my utmost assistance— That is the Contract between us."

Subaru: "...Really taught me to be more careful when looking at Contracts."

Roswaal: "Your duty is to ensure that not a single person present today is lost, Subaru-kun. Without ever losing a single person, lead Emilia-sama to the top. Should you achieve that, I will also achieve my goal. I will see my Teacher again."

Subaru weakly hung his head. Roswaal gave a long sigh at him, and nodded. His shoes peeled on the stone as he corrected his posture.

Roswaal: "Upon my name of Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers, once we return to the main estate, I shall appoint you, Natsuki Subaru, as Knight— Our promise will be fulfilled."

Subaru: "..."

Accolade.

Something that Subaru had yearned for, the right to stand at Emilia's side.

After everything else in this conversation, hearing that did not bring as much joy as expected. But after everything Roswaal had said, he would definitely stay to his word. He gained no benefit from not supporting Subaru.

Seeing Subaru silently nod, Roswaal turned to exit the room. He must have meant that the conversation was over.

But his footsteps paused before he could exit, and he turned back.

Roswaal: “Right. I did just tell you that I’d be helping you wholeheartedly, so heeeeeeeere’s another piece of information.”

Subaru: “...What is it?”

Roswaal: “—I hired the Bowel Hunter to kill Beatrice, but both this and the previous attack from the Beastmaster are completely unrelated to me.”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

“What more could there possibly be?”, Subaru thought, his jaw dropping as Roswaal spoke. Unable to comprehend what Roswaal was saying, Subaru remained utterly still as he sought further explanation. Roswaal closed one eye, continuing.

Roswaal: “There’s nothing to add. I was the commissioner for the affair at the Royal Capital, and requested Beatrice’s assassination. But I never asked anyone to kill Frederica nor Petra, and had no time to tell them the particulars. I had been following the Gospel’s writ and so placed the order before the Selection started, you see.”

Subaru: “But, that can’t... I mean, she and Elsa are from the same group! So!”

Roswaal: “Someone other than myself was operating to attack the mansion, iiiiiiiis what it means.”

Subaru: “———”

Roswaal: “Adversity never seems to end, and isn’t there worth in resisting it?”

With that cynical statement, Roswaal’s footsteps steadily grew distant.

The voice echoing through Subaru’s head threw his mind into disarray as he stood, utterly still, his back leaning against the Tomb’s cold wall.

All the issues that had supposedly been resolved still sat smoldering in his chest. Feeling heat from the embers, Subaru clutched his head, and sighed deeply.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “You look depressed, in fact.”

What saved Subaru, brooding as he was, was the astonished voice of a young girl.

Subaru sat there as he saw her dress sway. His gaze traced up the luxurious fabric to find an adorable face looking down at him, arms crossed.

Subaru: “Beako.”

Beatrice: “I don’t know what Roswaal told you, but my Contractor needs to stop making that face, I suppose. It reflects poorly on Betty, in fact.”

Subaru: “That’s a real issue. And I just told you how awesome I’d be. Oh hell, this is pathetic.”

Subaru slapped his cheeks and shook his head.

Beatrice knelt down to reach Subaru’s eye level, before narrowing her eyes.

Beatrice: “It seems that he said some terrible things, I suppose I don’t mind hearing out your whining, in fact. As a temporary, special service, I suppose.”

Subaru: “The mental image of «whining into a little girl’s chest» is the worst, so I’ll give that a pass. If it really is looking bad, then I’ll instantly be there though.”

Beatrice: “Well, if you’re so inclined then I’ll deal with it with you, in fact.”

Beatrice snorted as she got to her feet. Subaru lifted himself up as well.

He turned his hips and looked ahead, gazing at Beatrice’s profile as she stared at the coffin.

Subaru: “That’s your mother, there.”

Beatrice: “And she is not the Echidna that you know, I suppose.”

Neither of them knew what it meant.

But Beatrice was glad that she had gotten to see her mother again, even if as a corpse. If the one sleeping here had been the Echidna that Subaru knew, “disappointment” wouldn’t be enough to describe Beatrice’s or Roswaal’s state. Though Subaru thought it was fine for Roswaal be somewhat anguished, he did not want to see Beatrice in any more sorrow.

After all, Beatrice had already lost one of her desired reunions.

Subaru: “I wonder what happened to Ryuzu Meyer’s crystal.”

Beatrice: “...I don’t know, in fact.”

Murmured Beatrice, leaving Subaru without a clue of what to do.

Echidna’s laboratory rested deep in the woods of Sanctuary. Inside was a system to produce Ryuzu duplicates, and the original Ryuzu Meyer who acted as both nucleus and operations for the barrier around Sanctuary.

A girl named Ryuzu Meyer was sealed in the crystal there, like this woman in the coffin. Or should be.

—Because the Ryuzu Meyer crystal had disappeared.

Beatrice had gone to the facility with Subaru, determined to see her old friend again, and was dumbstruck at the sight. Subaru cursed the fact he had not gone in to check the facility himself beforehand.

A gaped, giant hole had been opened on the floor where the crystal had been, both the supporting base and Ryuzu Meyer’s body absolutely gone.

Subaru had wondered whether they had fallen into the underground beneath the rancid, stinking room, and so asked Emilia to send Micro Spirits down to check— to no avail. Beneath the facility, laid a cavern that led to the forest through an underground passage.

Whoever had taken the crystal knew about the passage’s existence and had been waiting for the barrier to be broken before grabbing the crystal— That was the only theory he could conceive.

The thief's motives were not the issue here, though. The issue was that they had stolen the chance for Beatrice to see her friend again. She may be acting strong, but she had to be worried.

Subaru would get it back someday, and this reunion would occur. He was resolved for it.

Subaru: "Well I can sound as arrogant as I want, but I'm still insignificant by myself."

Subaru rolled his shoulders and stretched his arms, ironically recognizing his own powerlessness. He was primarily relying on Beatrice, but also Emilia and Garfiel for strength.

And for smarts he could depend on Otto, or, as much as he loathed saying it, Roswaal. Everything else was up to Frederica and Petra to support.

As always, Subaru's skill and ability remained feeble and limited.

Beatrice: "Subaru, what are you grinning about, I suppose?"

Subaru: "Just thinking, there are times where you're weak and pathetic, but there's also times where you're not. All I can do is leave it to you."

Beatrice: "It feels that I understand what you're saying, while simultaneously I don't, in fact."

Though she could not discern what Subaru meant, Beatrice smiled, perceiving that he was counting on her. Subaru gave her a nod, prefacing with a "Well yeah",

Subaru: "I'm not expecting you to figure out that much. It would be pathetic if you saw through me. But anyway, man, Spiritual Arts Users are amazing. I have never done magic like that before, got me really fired up."

Beatrice: "...Is that so, I suppose."

Subaru: "Though that was another case of me being completely dependent on you, so I can't go on bragging about it. I mean, I can say I'm a Spiritual Arts User, but it hasn't exactly hit me yet."

His Contract with Beatrice had been consumed by the course of events around the Library's collapse, making it a rather brief affair.

Though he had felt a definite connection back when she called his name and settled herself in his arms, which seemed to be enough.

Beatrice: “Subaru— I have something important to tell you, in fact.”

Subaru: “Hm?”

Beatrice looked serious. Subaru tilted his head, waiting for her to speak.

Beatrice: “Your Contract with Betty means you’re a Spiritual Arts User, but... Betty is very different from most Spirits, in fact. So you would best consider yourself as being slightly different from a genuine Spiritual Arts User, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Well the other Spirits I’m aware of aren’t humanoid, and Puck’s the only one that’s sentient, talking, and moving around. So I know you’re a little different.”

The only other Spiritual Arts Users that Subaru knew were Emilia and Julius.

Emilia was contracted to Puck, and also had a relationship with the Micro Spirits. Julius had multiple Contracts with multiple Quasi Spirits, stronger than Micro Spirits, and should be operating as quite the powerful Spiritual Arts User.

The evil Spirit Petelgeuse was one exception to that pattern— but Subaru would rather not remember him, and so he would be omitted. Exceptions were exceptions, after all.

Beatrice: “Betty is... Well, strictly speaking, Betty and Bubby diverge from the principles of other Spirits, in fact. Mother... the Witch Echidna made us, meaning that we are Artificial Spirits, I suppose. With that said, the method to create a perfect one is technically difficult... While Betty is inestimably powerful compared to ordinary Spirits, I do have some flaws, in fact.”

Subaru: “Flaws...”

Beatrice looked ashamed as Subaru voiced the word. She was prideful, and held incredible respect for her mother. It must hurt her to acknowledge that she had flaws at her most fundamental aspect.

But Beatrice cast that weakness away with a sigh—

Beatrice: “Bubby and Betty each have different flaws, but... one of my flaws is monopolization of my Contractor, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Monopolization of your Contractor?”

Beatrice: “Put simply, merely by being in a Contract with Betty, the Contractor exhausts practically all of their capabilities as a Spiritual Arts User. So... erm, being that you’re in a Contract with me, Subaru, you cannot contract any Spirits except Betty, I suppose. That applies to both Minor and Quasi Spirits, in fact.”

Subaru: “...Okay, got it.”

Grasping Beatrice’s point, Subaru nodded several times.

Preserving a Contract with Beatrice would use so much of Subaru’s resources, that he would have none left to enter a Contract with other Spirits. While Emilia could ask the Micro Spirits, rather than Puck, for their aid, Subaru was unable to do this.

Subaru: “Well that’s kind of a disappointment, but I’ll accept it anyway. There are heaps of benefits to a Contract with you, ignoring the cons. And I’m not going to let go of you to go making Contracts with some dumb Micro Spirits.”

Beatrice: “G—good.”

Hearing that reply, Beatrice’s tense cheeks relaxed somewhat. But she instantly erased that expression, clearing her throat, and,

Beatrice: “Th—there’s still more left, I suppose. Though it’s a very minor thing compared to that other one, in fact. No need to think too hard as you listen, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Okay. Well, I’m drowning in stuff I don’t know here, so please just tell me anything.”

Beatrice: “Erm, so well, Betty is a little, yes, just a little higher grade compared to most Spirits, and, erm... I have poor mileage, in fact.”

Subaru: “Mileage... makes you sound like a car.”

It usually took a lot of MP¹⁹² to use powerful magic or summon creatures in video games. That balance between cost and power was said mileage, but why was Beatrice having such a hard time saying this?

Subaru: “Huh? But even having poor mileage you used tons of magic against the Rabbit, and you let me use magic too, and you weren’t sapping anything from me either right?”

Beatrice: “That was using Mana from the stockpile I had amassed over a long period, I suppose. Had I been taking the Mana I needed for that fight, not even thousands of you would suffice, in fact. You can thank me for that, I suppose.”

Subaru: “W—well sure. I can’t imagine how strained I’d be if I tried doing any of that by myself.”

Consecutive Minyas and that final Al Shamac.

One Shamac was enough to exhaust Subaru’s store. There was no way he could have provided for all of that.

Subaru: “But we cannot keep doing that, can we? I’m your Contractor, so of course I need to supply you with Mana.”

Beatrice: “I’m expecting you to, in fact. Artificial Spirits like Betty and Bubby are made from Od made substance, meaning we do not produce Mana naturally, I suppose. So we need to get Mana from the atmosphere or our Contractor, in fact. And I can only receive my Mana from people, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Okay... Then how were you getting by in the mansion?”

Beatrice: “—I... I was taking bits from everyone there, in fact.”

Beatrice must feel guilty about it, as she looked away as she talked.

She looked embarrassed, and her gaze grew even redder as Subaru stared at her. While Subaru did not quite understand what nuance Mana drains had among Spirits, judging from Beatrice’s reaction, it was apparently not very good manners.

¹⁹² Magic Points.

Subaru: “Anyway, you look like you’re very sorry about it, so I won’t probe into it. So supposing we save the Mana you collect from me for everyday functioning, how much stored Mana do you have left?”

Subaru’s Mana reserves were paltry, and Beatrice consumed lots of Mana. Meaning that they would have to use Beatrice’s powerful magic sparingly, chipping away at her reserved Mana bit-by-bit.

So Subaru had to confirm how much Mana she had remaining.

Beatrice: “—None, I suppose.”

Subaru: “...Hmm?”

Beatrice: “None, in fact. I used everything I stored over those four centuries in that battle, I suppose. The loss of the Forbidden Library also took quite an amount and that final Al Shamac was the killer, in fact. Betty’s Mana reserves are empty, I suppose.”

So, what. That meant...

Beatrice had no Mana stored up.

Subaru’s Mana was barely enough to cover Beatrice’s day-to-day.

Beatrice consumed lots of Mana and did not have the Mana to use her powerful magic. Subaru’s Contract with Beatrice meant that he could not enlist the Micro Spirits for help.

Subaru: “So... Did we just make a team of a Spirit and Spiritual Arts User that can’t use magic!?”

Beatrice: “W—well, I suppose that’s one way you could put it, in fact.”

Subaru: “How else could you put it!? The hell! Are you kidding me, is this seriously happening!?”

Going from the results, what Subaru had achieved by becoming a Spiritual Arts User was the acquisition of a little girl.

Subaru: “Actually, I’m really worried about the future right now!? Are you sure we’ll be okay!?”

Beatrice: “Whoopsie, I suppose.”

Subaru: “It’s not funny!!”

This was the newborn pairing of two people that made up half a Spiritual Arts User. Their arguing echoed, far, far, forever through the Tomb.

Arc 4 Appendix - The Advent

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Addendum “—The Return”

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 358

—Footsteps echoed through the cold, dark chamber.

Not a speck of light beamed into the space, making the path equivalent to a charge through dark or shadow.

But the footsteps sounded without hesitation, travelling through the rancid chamber with a casual gait. With such ease that they may as well be traversing their own room.

???: “———”

Water dripped. Insects squirmed.

Mud and gravel crunched underfoot. This place inspired nothing but discomfort, but the silhouette gave not the slightest murmur of discontent.

Hordes of insects opened a path as they fled from the silhouette, their stronghold disturbed. Water flowed over their feet, the gentle downward slope their guide as they walked on.

Eventually, the silhouette stopped, their long hair flowing behind them as they look up.

As before, there was no light. But their eyes shine with a gleam called conviction.

Dim lights danced as wind whipped around the silhouette’s feet.

Their long, pink hair and long-sleeved robe fluttered in the breeze. At their feet, at the point from which the wind blew, a circle drew itself in the ground.

???: “So the starter algorithm still works.”

With that murmur, the silhouette atop the glowing circle, the girl, levitated.

She ascended as if riding on an invisible floor, rushing for the roof of the dark. That instant, as if ghosting through the bedrock, the girl was launched to the outside.

The sunlight burned her eyes. The girl closed her eyelids.

It took exactly ten seconds for her to open her eyes again. Sunrays pierce through her eyelids and into her eyeballs. Prompted by rebellion, and by some amount of impatience, she kept her eyes open wide.

—What she saw, was the sun rising anew.

Girl: “...It is far less emotional than I expected.”

Faced with the daylight, the girl tilted her head.

Indeed, not a single ripple of emotion arose in her apathetic eyes. After all her time spent under a false sun, she had hoped that seeing the real thing again would move her, but the results were not good.

Girl: “Either way, I have safely left the barrier. Meaning that thing safely defeated the Trial, frustratingly. I will give my thanks for that and no more.”

If that had not happened, it would have been inordinately difficult to leave Sanctuary. She would have caught herself in her own scheme. When she thought back on the girl who had dealt with that mess, she felt something akin to displeasure sprout in her heart.

Girl: “Well, it is of no consequence. I cannot be too reckless in this body, and I might as well walk around for a while to fill in the blanks.”

The girl flexed her hands open and closed, checking her body’s condition.

Duplicates of a progenitor body serving as a vessel, and a subsumed soul of the same nature. She had fit her soul to it and anchored in, but familiarization would take time.

Girl: “He already gave me a name, after all. I think I will call myself Omega.”

She smiled as she trod on the grass, slipping through gaps in the trees to exit the forest.

The journey was somewhat troubling for the young girl's legs, but it was no matter. The fatigue and pain proved her soul and body were connected. She must enjoy the life she had long lost, in abundance.

Omega: "Beatrice has left the Forbidden Library and Roswaal has lost his Gospel. Though considering the man who pocketed the burnt remains, and Garfiel's persistent rage, the fires are still smoldering yet. How will he face what is to come? Perhaps I will watch over him, from the sun and in the shade."

Purposefully excluding the girl that irked her, she started walking.

There was a world she was going towards. What never grew dull for her, abundant, endlessly sating her curiosity, a mountain of treasures for the dead Thirst for Knowledge Incarnate.

Omega: "If I am like this, perhaps I will understand someday."

Along her path, the girl sighted a ring of flowers, and smiled. She plucked a flower petal, sniffed its scent, and popped it in her mouth.

Even beautiful flowers would wilt. Why must the flowers wither?

Were even the beautiful memories shared between people destined to wane?

Omega: "—Ahh, why must love fade?"

Muttering, her long pink hair swaying, the girl stepped forth.

Again, the Witch was unleashed on the world.

One Day II Chapter 1 - The Relationship of These Sisters

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 2

—Everyone subject to the scene would agree that it was unbearable to witness.

Garfiel: “H-hey, Sis. That luggage looks pretty heavy there. Want my amazin’ self to carry some?”

Frederica: “Garf... No, do not worry. I am merely offering some slight assistance, since it discomforts me to be constantly served as a guest. Feel free to relax, Garf.”

Garfiel: “O-oh. W-well, got it. Just call if ya need anythin’, ‘kay?”

Garfiel scratched his cheek, standing stock still as Frederica pushed the trolley. Frederica gazed at him for a moment, but immediately pulled herself together and focused back on her work. The small wheels rolled across the floor, their noise fading further down the mansion’s hallway. In a daze, Garfiel watched his sister grow distant.

Subaru: “...So annoying.”

Garfiel scratched at his short, blond hair, sighed, and walked off in the opposite direction from Frederica. Subaru put his hand to his forehead, having witnessed this scene from around the corner of the hallway, and lamented the irritating exchange.

Emilia: “They’ve had a week to calm down and talk... But they still look reeeally uncomfortable.”

Said Emilia, hidden in the same place and same manner as Subaru. Subaru was squatting while Emilia spied the exchange from above him.

Subaru felt Emilia’s breath grow distant as he stood up and rotated his hips.

Subaru: “It’s a decennary reunion... and one without any contact during the decade. I heard their goodbye wasn’t exactly an invigorating one where they were wishing each other success, and I can understand it being awkward, but...”

Subaru crossed his arms and tilted his head.

He could understand it, but it was irritating nonetheless. Annoying. Watching them made his back itch. Garfiel and Frederica had been like this ever since their reunion. While they pretended to be on acceptably friendly terms when others were around, things were actually poor.

Garfiel might look emotional and impulsive, but he was a surprisingly good actor when putting his mind to it. And there was no need to mention how well Frederica conducted herself. They probably had not been planning to, but the siblings had successfully deceived quite a number of people in this handful of days.

But it was obvious to Subaru, who had often caught the two of them alone, and now Emilia had witnessed it too.

Emilia: “It looks like Garfiel’s trying to approach her, but Frederica can’t look at him straight in the eye. Even though they’re finally back together. How come?”

Subaru: “It’s hard to enjoy the reunion when the goodbye had been so messy. I mean, I’m just going off my manga knowledge here, but I think the problem’s Frederica.”

Emilia was right— Garfiel was ready to be open with Frederica. But Frederica looked less promising. Frederica could be feeling guilt toward her brother, who had been left behind in Sanctuary. Over all that time, Garfiel sharpened his fangs to secure a stubborn, childish heart.

And that had comprised a third of the obstacles that Subaru had to deal with in Sanctuary. Yes, Frederica was partly responsible for Garfiel’s attitude.

But having said that, Frederica had not hurt Garfiel intentionally, and nobody was in the wrong. Actually, if there was anybody to be in the wrong, then that person would be Roswaal. And so, Subaru, nor anyone else for that matter, would cast blame on Garfiel or Frederica.

—But it seemed like the feelings of those two were different from the people around them.

Subaru: “Man, what a mess...”

It boiled down to Frederica having an excessively strong sense of responsibility.

Frederica had left for the outside world so that she could create a home for the people of Sanctuary once the barrier was broken. She carried an incredibly noble and lofty burden for a ten-or-so-year-old girl. Perhaps that ambition of hers might have actually arisen because she had left Garfiel behind.

Ultimately, Sanctuary was lost, and Frederica’s worries became reality.

But thanks to her actions, there were places ready to accept them, albeit scattered and shoddy. And that was something she ought to take pride in. Still, the guilt she felt surpassed her feeling of pride and accomplishment. Her guilty conscious must be overly strong.

Subaru: “What the hell, you can’t do that. When you pull off something amazing, you have to puff out your chest with pride.”

Emilia: “Mhm. I agree. And if you think you did something wrong, apologize. Then they’ll forgive you... I just want them to get along.”

Both Garfiel and Frederica had vanished from the hallway.

Emilia looked at the spot where the two had faced off, her amethyst eyes narrowing. Subaru peered at her and nodded.

Subaru: “Yeah.”

Subaru: “Alright. We’re gonna give them a little push so they can sort this out.”

Emilia: “Give them a push... You mean, have them make up?”

Subaru: “Yup. We have complicated brother-sister, sister-brother, human relations here. If the mood’s so sticky they can’t move, then how about some third parties cause enough ruckus to jolt things?”

Subaru clapped his hands, raising his finger as he made his proposal. Emilia considered it for a moment in silence, before giving a determined nod.

Emilia: “You’re right. Mhm, families should get along. Okay. Let’s do it. Let’s do our plumb best to have them make up.”

Subaru: “Who says plumb anymore?”

Muttered Subaru, as a motivated Emilia balled her hands into small fists. While thinking, “Man, it’s been a while since we’ve done those lines”.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The reprieve from issues stemming from Sanctuary had only been brief, as the two problems of terrible post-processing and housing assaulted the Emilia’s camp for a while.

Roswaal’s plot (parts of which he claimed no responsibility for) had caused the mansion to go up in. They could rebuild it but reconstructing a building that had been burnt to a clean crisp would take time. It seemed that there was no convenient magic in this world to reform objects that had lost their shapes, nor any Fullmetal Alchemist-style techniques to erect buildings in an instant.

Their only choice had been to hire a builder from a nearby village or town, or perhaps an architect specializing in noble estates and villas, to build it.

Roswaal: “Hoooooooooover, that mansion was not my main house... It was an discreet spot to shelter Emilia-sama while leading up toooooooo the Royal Selection. I was planning to move to the main house shortly after the Selection started. Sooooooo it’s not as much of a problem aaaaaaaas you’re making it out to be.”

That had been Roswaal’s answer once they started looking for somewhere to relocate. Apparently, the Mathers family possessed several mansions on hand, and the main house had already been prepared as their base of operations.

Nobody was residing in the main estate, except for those maintaining the place. Once the workers had prepared everything to welcome their masters in, the group would relocate their headquarters there.

But where would they stay in the meantime?

Roswaal: “Don’t worry, thaaaaaat’s also been addressed. Some relatives of mine have a mansion in a region nooooooot far from Sanctuary. They are a branch of the Mathers family. We can stay there for a while. Though I suspect the large number of guests will trouble them.”

“Roswaal’s relatives” had been an incredibly unsettling phrase, but nobody had any better plan.

After that discussion, the main players in Emilia’s faction went to the relative’s mansion, while Arlam and Sanctuary’s people went to Arlam Village. Perhaps so that Sanctuary’s residents could be accepted as residents of Arlam, they were also purposefully introduced to other villages within Roswaal’s territory. Frederica had been the one who set the foundations for this, and it all ought to be considered her achievement.

Though, while all of Sanctuary’s residents were partly demi-human, they were also all half-bloods. None of them looked too different from an ordinary human, so blending in would not be too difficult. And though they might have different customs due to their ignorance of the outside world, the kind people of Arlam would surely teach them the basics without hesitation.

Everything might look settled, but the problems would keep piling up still. Even so, no obvious trouble was occurring at the present, since everybody had done their absolute best.

Subaru prayed that all the noticeable problems would be resolved before anything could happen.

—And so, he had judged Garfiel and Frederica’s relationship troubles as something to resolve during this blissful, boring period.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “And thus, masterplan Make Garfiel and Frederica Friends Again is a go... That’s sort of where we’re sitting, do you have any suggestions?”

Ram: “This is the first thing you say to me upon entering the room? Intruding on my peace is a heavy crime to pay, Barusu.”

With an emotionless voice, Ram was sitting down, glaring up at Subaru.

Her face was expressionless as always, but Subaru's relationship with her means he could make out the wisps of emotion swirling in her eyes. As a qualified interpreter of Ram's emotions, Subaru judged that she was currently displeased.

Subaru: "I know you look at me like that a lot, but does that mean that you're basically always displeased when interacting with me? Don't you ever get tired of being like that all day?"

Ram: "Do relax. I only do this when speaking with someone who is either annoying or pointless to interact with."

Subaru: "I see, alright th... Wait a second."

Subaru furrowed his brows at Ram as she implied that he was currently one of the two. Ram snorted at Subaru's reaction before closing the book in her hands.

She stood from her seat and offered it to Emilia, who stood beside Subaru.

Ram: "Here you are, Emilia-sama."

Emilia: "Thank you. But it's okay. I know it's exhausting if we stay for too long, so we'll be done quickly."

Ram: "I see. Then I shall gladly take it."

Subaru: "So you're not offering it to me. You weren't kidding about gladly, geez, nee-sama."

Subaru shrugged as Ram sat herself back in the chair. But something that Subaru had said made Ram's brows furrow slightly.

She must be reacting to the word "nee-sama".

Emilia: "Rem-san's still the same as before."

Ram: "...Indeed. Again today, she's sleeping so quietly that you cannot tell if she's alive."

Emilia spoke with concern, and Ram replied with her voice slightly lowered. On the bed next to Ram's chair, where the pair were looking, a girl was sleeping.

With short, blue hair and a face identical to Ram's. A light blue sleeping gown covered her, and the size of her chest as it pushed the blanket up was the only point of difference between her and Ram.

Obviously, this girl's name was Rem. She had remained asleep through the mansion fire and their relocation. Until they removed whatever was causing it, she would likely remain sleeping forever.

Subaru: "Do you feel like accepting it yet?"

Ram: "I did tell you. I am not so thoughtless as to believe everything when I have yet to speak to her... Although, what I'm seeing is far too persuasive to dismiss entirely."

Complex emotion rose in Ram's eyes, and Subaru ended up frowning.

Ram's expression as she watched Rem sleep was horribly melancholic from Subaru's perspective, being that he had known their relationship. The elder doted on the younger, and the younger respected the elder.

Rem and Ram's relationship had been the exact picture of beautiful, familial love.

As Rem slept, Ram's memories contained no name nor recollection nor existence of her beloved sister.

Subaru had known it would happen, he had anticipated it would happen, but it still made him horribly disconsolate. But even so—

Subaru: "You say it's complex, but you visit her every day."

Ram: "...I do wonder why. Honestly, not even I know what I'm trying to do. But being with this girl you call my sister soothes me... No, part of me is unsettled too, but..."

Subaru: "Unsettled?"

Ram: "It's not quite because I'm seeing my own face... When I look at her as she sleeps, I feel something stir in my heart. It is as though I'm chasing after mist, something which my hands will absolutely never grasp."

Ram put her hand to her chest. Subaru quietly gulped.

Everyone in the world except Subaru had forgotten Rem—but even so, she remained a thorn inside her only blood relative, Ram. The latter did not seem to know the name of that thorn, but if it was something that Rem had left to her dearest elder sister, then it was more than enough of a clue.

Subaru: “I’m open to tell you everything I can like the way she’s like or the times we’ve spent.”

Ram: “—I think it’s better not.”

Subaru offered to help Ram recover her memories, but Ram shook her head. Subaru’s brows furrowed as Ram put her hand to her chin in thought.

Ram: “It’s this, unreachable emptiness. It’s like there’s a hole inside me where she used to be. And if there is, anything you pour into it with will definitely spill out. And even now, just hearing she’s my sister... Her appearance is the most obvious indicator, but it still doesn’t feel real. It feels like the moment I stop these daily visits... even what I’m feeling now will disappear.”

Emilia: “...And that’s the curse of the Witch Cult’s Gluttony?”

Emilia interjected, looking like she could not let the topic slide. Ram looked up to find Emilia with her brows lowered, in a rare display of anger.

Ram: “A gross feast of Names and Memories... My impression of the Witch Cult was never good, but it’s certainly abhorrent now.”

Emilia: “...Witch Cult.”

Emilia let out a quiet mutter, her gaze lowered.

While Ram’s speculation surprised Subaru, her maliciousness also made him wince.

It did not feel real for Subaru, who remembered Rem clearly, but it was not that Rem’s existence was just missing from Ram and Emilia’s memories. It was that it was “missing in perpetuity”. Just how sand would never stop falling from an hourglass, it was continuous, ongoing now and forever.

Subaru: “We can’t do anything unless we stop what’s causing it...”

The more Subaru talked about their memories together, the quicker the sand would fall. Perhaps even Subaru would forget the memory the second he voiced it.

Ram was concerned that Rem would disappear from the world—or at least that must be part of it.

Ram: “It seems that you have some thoughts about the Cult, Emilia-sama.”

Subaru bit his lip while Ram looked up at Emilia. Her pale cheeks stiffened as Ram’s cerise eyes gazed at her, before she slowly nodded.

Emilia: “I’ve done lots of thinking about the Witch. Because I have been cursed at so much for looking like her... But, the Cult is...”

Ram: “———”

Emilia: “Apparently it is something I wanted to forget. But I can’t regard the one I remember and the one that existed now as one and the same. What could have happened since then, now that it’s like this...? That’s what I want to find out.”

Subaru: “I don’t really wanna say this, Emilia-tan, but... you get that they’re not people you can really communicate with? It will probably end up as a painful experience.”

He did not want to snuff Emilia’s will, but it was unfair for him not to say it. The Witch Cult that Subaru knew was a giant mass of malice constructed by a bunch of religious nutcases. He did not know what it used to be like. But that was what the cult was like presently.

Emilia: “Thank you. For worrying about me.”

Subaru’s concern made Emilia smile slightly, and she shook her head.

Emilia: “It’s okay, I understand. What happened in my memories, and the people I was with... All of that happened a century ago. There’s no way they could still be alive. A person’s lifespan is usually one-hundred-years long. That’s a reeeally long time, so I don’t think I can meet them again.”

Subaru: “But you still want to know what happened... right?”

Emilia: “I’m sorry, I know it’s selfish. But I think I’m the only one who needs to find out. Because I’m the only one who saw what happened there, and the feelings that were there... and what Juice and Mother felt.”

Emilia’s eyes were sad as she imagined the two, but her mouth remained set in a gentle smile. That was her mother’s name, and Juice. Those were important memories for Emilia, and apparently connected to the old, completely different Witch Cult.

Subaru: “Got some really mixed feelings here, Juice-san...”

Muttered Subaru to himself with a sigh, somewhat resentful toward someone he had never even seen. Emilia felt familiarity and sorrow for the name, and hearing it gave Subaru complex feelings. If the Witch Cult had not changed its course from the time Juice had been in it, Emilia probably would not have been put through so much crisis.

If he was going to be Emilia’s ally anyway, Subaru would appreciate if he could have stayed at her side from start to finish. That was the breed of selfish resentment he found himself thinking.

Ram: “—I doubt I can be as kind as you, Emilia-sama.”

Although as quiet as ever, her voice was full of chilling animosity. Subaru’s breath hitched as he looked at Ram, who in turn looked at Rem. Her face was expressionless, but the glint in her eye was shockingly red.

Ram: “The Witch Cult’s particulars have nothing to do with me. I will not object to your desires to hear their story, Emilia-sama. I won’t, but do remember that my revenge is another matter entirely.”

Emilia: “Ram...”

Ram: “I could not care less about this Witch Cult or Gluttony, but Ram return what is given, be it debts or enmity. Dismembering that heart-gouging devil still won’t be enough for me.”

Grisly rage overflowed from Ram, her petite frame seeming to blur.

As if a giant were there, emitting an overwhelming sense of presence— Indeed, as if an oni were there.

Ram: “I’ll eviscerate Gluttony so thoroughly that the memory demands awe.”

Rather than resolve, that was more of a death sentence.

The recipient was absent, and her tone was utterly calm. Nevertheless, that was unmistakably a death sentence— It felt like an icicle had speared down Subaru's spine, making him hesitate even to speak.

Subaru: "-----"

With that, silence fell upon the room.

Even the noise from his fidgeting felt like it would break the tense atmosphere, so Subaru was unable to move. What does shatter the stressful mood is in fact the person who caused it.

Ram: "It was unlike me to say that."

She sighed, the tense atmosphere vanishing entirely. Subaru lowered his shoulders in relief,

Subaru: "No, that was not unlike you. The Ram I know was someone who did get violent when stuff involved her little sister."

Ram: "...I see."

Ram's statements had been disturbing, but she had definitely been thinking purely about Rem as she spoke them. Subaru appraised it on that point alone, making him feel glad for Ram's sentiments. Besides, Subaru could not forgive Gluttony either. If he could then he would have Gluttony's neck for himself, without even handing it over to Ram.

The sensation of murder— The sloppy conclusion to his fight with Petelgeuse had left very little direct feeling in Subaru's palms. Perhaps Subaru's hesitation toward taking a life would make him hesitate at the critical moment.

But still, he could not forgive Gluttony, and he had the resolve to do it if it meant saving Rem.

Subaru: "...We got really off topic."

Subaru scratched his head, his dark thoughts not showing in his expression.

Ram looked at him meaningfully, and Emilia looked at him concernedly, but Subaru had managed to smile at both of them, surely.

Ram: “You’re right. Now, since you’re intruding on me as I enjoy my unexpected holiday, I’m sure your business must be suitably important.”

Subaru: “Why are you so audacious when pressuring people? Frederica’s in your position and she feels so apologetic about getting guest treatment that she’s helping in the mansion...”

Ram: “Ram is wounded. And Frederica’s the one failing to read the mood by working when she’s being received as a guest. She can’t stay composed on anything related to Garf, and Clind is inciting her into it too.”

Subaru: “Clind-san is?”

That was the name of the Mathers family’s young butler tending to Subaru and the others. He was handsome, with a slender face, who exuded an incredible aura of grace and capability. He let out a similar vibe to Julius, but unlike Julius, Clind was polite and incredibly considerate.

And so, Subaru thought it strange that Ram did not seem to think too fondly of him. Though, perhaps, that was just what everyone besides Roswaal looked in Ram’s eyes.

Ram: “You should ask Frederica and Clind themselves about how poorly they interact. Anyway, Ram would like to return to her reading, so do state your business quickly.”

Emilia: “I’m sorry, we just keep on talking. I think Subaru mentioned this right at the start, but it’s about Frederica and Garfiel...”

Emilia valorously tried to change the topic.

“Let’s do something about Garfiel and Frederica’s awkward relationship!” had been a nice idea and all, but Subaru and Emilia had found themselves absolutely stuck on what to do, since neither of them were very experienced when it came to mending sibling relationships.

Subaru was an established only-child, and so was Emilia. Neither of them had been blessed with siblings, so nothing came to mind when it comes to non-parental blood relations. And in Garfiel and Frederica's case, they did not even have ordinary parental relations, but that part would be left aside.

So they had wandered around the mansion in search of advice, and visited Ram, who stayed in a fixed location.

And Subaru considered her the closest sister he knew. Though her relationship with Rem was gone from everyone's memory except Subaru's, he hoped that Ram might have something useful to say, considering that she and her sister had had such a good relationship.

And even disregarding that, Ram was Garfiel and Frederica's childhood friend. Maybe something from an episode that Subaru had not been around for would make her come up with an approach to fill this decade-long divide.

Emilia sent Ram an expectant gaze, when her lips come to a halt.

Subaru tilted his head at the frozen Emilia, wondering what had happened, before following her gaze—and freezing still as well.

Ram: "...What?"

Ram narrowed her eyes, looking terribly uncomfortable.

In her hands she held a book, at which Emilia and Subaru stared.

The title, "How to Grow Closer to Your Younger Sibling", was horrifically critical to the current affair.

—It seemed that they were not the only ones feeling clueless about sibling relations.

One Day II Chapter 2 - Young Souls and Watcher

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 11

Having learned that Ram was useless regarding sibling problems without her memory, but that she was nonetheless a good sister, time passed on for Subaru and Emilia with no good progress.

Subaru: “But don’t you feel like Ram was being pretty unsympathetic?”

Emilia: “Don’t say that. Ram has her own opinions... She’s known them longer than we have, so that’s probably the difference.”

Emilia smiled wryly at the pouting Subaru as they walked down the mansion hallway.

They had left Rem’s bedroom and were reflecting on the encounter as they ventured about. Through Subaru’s mind passed the words that Ram had left them with before their departure.

Ram: “Garf and Frederica’s relationship? It should be fine to just leave them be. They are not children. Well, Garf is a kid, but he’s not that thoughtless. Though said thoughts tend to be inaccurate. They will manage something on their own.”

It was a rather ruthless judgement of Garfiel, what with how fond he was of Ram. But it was possible that Ram regarded Garfiel as something like a younger brother. His crush could be called cute, were the feelings not so intense and violent.

Poor Garfiel, infatuated with a fortress of a woman.

Emilia: “—? Hm? What’s wrong?”

Subaru: “No, it’s nothing. Was just reflecting that Garfiel’s not the only one looking at a tall hurdle.”

Emilia: “—?”

Emilia tilted her head cutely. Subaru hated how her mind utterly failed to put together what his gaze and words meant. Perhaps the fact that he ended up forgiving it, was one of those shortcomings of loving someone.

Subaru: “Anyway, so Ram’s out. Who to consult next?”

Emilia: “Huh? You’re going to keep trying without giving up?”

Subaru: “Well yeah. We haven’t solved anything yet, and there’s nothing manly about giving up because you stumbled on the first step. Don’t you want to improve their relationship too, Emilia-tan?”

Emilia: “I do, but Ram knows them best, and that’s what she said, so maybe that’s the best thing to do.”

Subaru: “Leaving them be might solve the problem over time, but you cannot forget that it’s been a decade since they parted. I’m not going to wait another decade for them to reconcile. I want to give them a push so they make up quickly.”

Subaru insisted that they stick with the plan, while Emilia seemed somewhat pressured by Ram’s statement. That said, while Subaru did want Garfiel and Frederica to reconcile, he also did not want this chance to do things with Emilia to escape.

Since no matter what Subaru would do regarding this issue, it would not escalate into bloodshed. Could this heart, after all that time-consuming trial and error, ever feel so light?

Emilia: “What happened? Subaru, you just burst into a grin...”

Subaru: “No, was just thinking that mulling over things without being frantic about it is bliss. Wow! No matter the result, there’s no bloodshed and nobody dies!”

Emilia: “Subaru...”

Subaru shots her a thumbs-up, his teeth sparkling, but Emilia looked at him with incredible pity. Subaru thought back on his statement, figuring that he must have said something strange. And then shocked himself at what a brutal, inappropriate comment it was, and how overly modest his desires were.

Subaru: “D—Disregard that, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “It’s okay. I know it’s been hard. I’m sorry I didn’t realize how you felt. Subaru, maybe you should spend the day resting in your ro—”

Subaru: “No, not happening and that reaction’s for when you don’t realize how I feel!”

Subaru raised his voice at Emilia, who gazed at him with sympathy.

And, at that point in the conversation,

???: “...So you are the ones making this racket, I suppose.”

A sighing, stunned voice. Subaru looked over to the speaker, to find a girl in an extravagant dress standing there— Beatrice. She had come from the other end of the hallway and stopped to look at Subaru and Emilia, her brows furrowed on her cute face.

Beatrice: “You two are certainly enjoying yourselves, in fact. I can hear your arguing from the other end of the mansion, I suppose.”

Subaru: “That’s some sarcasm. If you’re sad you’re not included, then just say it. We’ll let you deliberate with us in our profound discussion hour.”

Beatrice: “Who said anyone is sad about being left out, in fact! Don’t just go saying whatever you want, I suppose!”

Beatrice crossed her arms, her cheeks red with indignation. Both Subaru and Emilia had to smile at how incredibly Beatrice that attitude was.

About a week had passed since Subaru and Beatrice formed their Contract. That said, nothing especially dramatic had changed about their relationship. Subaru would tease Beatrice like always, and Beatrice would overreact. These exact same exchanges repeated endlessly for these two.

But Beatrice had been more out and about lately, having lost the Forbidden Library. And sometimes, as if remembering something, she would arrive and hold Subaru’s hand.

Subaru: “That might be what you say, but really you’re here because you wanna hold my hand. Oh geez, this poor girl’s too much.”

Beatrice: “Don’t distort Betty’s actions by giving them these weird pretexts, in fact. Circumstances demand that Betty keeps touching yo... Subaru’s hand, I suppose.”

Subaru: “It is adorable how you reminded yourself to say that.”

Emilia: “Subaru.”

Emilia cautioned Subaru as Beatrice’s face turned red. Subaru poked his tongue out at Emilia and reached out for Beatrice. Her hand lightly closed around his fingers, before then thinking about it again, and timidly grasping his hand proper. It was what Beatrice always did.

He felt her small fingers on his palm. This tickly, awkward touch was the fruit of Subaru’s hard work. But this time Beatrice did not react, instead she simply staring at Subaru’s hand, hesitant.

Subaru: “What’s up? I do wash my hands after going to the bathroom.”

Beatrice: “I wasn’t worried about that, but now that thought’s going to be in my head and it’s disgusting, in fact! No, it’s something else...”

Beatrice glared in response to Subaru’s unnecessary comment, glanced behind herself. Subaru tilted his head at that, when he heard the answer come from down the hallway.

???: “Where’d you go, Beatrice-chan?”

A voice called from down the hallway, beyond a corner, searching for Beatrice. The voice was female, filled with affection and friendship. But hearing it made Beatrice’s shoulders hitch up—

Beatrice: “Eep!”

Beatrice squeaked, her eyes darting around before she dove into a nearby room. Subaru and Emilia watched on wide-eyed as Beatrice peeked out from behind the door.

Beatrice: “Tell her that I’m not here, I suppose. Please, in fact.”

Subaru: “Hey.”

Beatrice: “Please, I suppose.”

With that, she silently shut the door. Subaru shrugged while Emilia furrowed her brows in confusion. Then,

???: “Oh! Subaru!”

A girl appeared from beyond the bend in the hallway, her face lighting up as she darted over. With the skirt of her maid outfit fluttering, the auburn-haired girl trotted near— Petra.

She was also staying in this mansion following the incineration of Roswaal’s manor. Considering the danger that accompanied being involved, Subaru had tried to convince her to go back to the village, but she refused to listen.

Petra had been utterly focused on helping with odd jobs around the mansion, as part of her maid training. “What an ambitious, disciplined girl”, Subaru thought.

As if complimenting Subaru’s thoughts, Petra gave a polite curtsey to Emilia..

Petra: “Please forgive me, Emilia-sama. I present my apology for having raised my voice.”

And said that.

The childishness she had displayed toward Subaru instantly disappeared, and Emilia’s eyes widened at the maidly behavior.

Emilia: “Ah, um, it’s okay. Don’t worry. You can please relax, knave.”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, «knave»?”

Emilia was going to need to learn how to respond when others would humble themselves around her. But putting aside that messy-yet-heartwarming conversation,

Subaru: “So, what’s up, Petra. Something happen?”

Petra: “No, nothing has happened... But since I’ve finished my work, I was thinking to entertain Beatrice-chan. But I have not been able to find her.”

Emilia: “Beatrice-chan... Gosh.”

Emilia’s breath hitched, and she put her hand to her mouth as she restrained her laughter. Subaru also came close to snickering. Beatrice, for all her haughtiness, had been dubbed with a «chan» by Petra¹⁹³.

Subaru had burst into laughter when he first caught them interacting.

Petra: “Is there something the matter, Emilia-sama? Have I perhaps said anything strange?”

Emilia: “No, nothing. I just thought that was a bit reeeally funny.”

Petra: “«A bit», but «reeeally»?”

However though, sometimes Petra’s childishness did come to the fore. Emilia gave her a smile and glanced to Subaru, her gaze asking him what to do. Subaru pretended to mull over the issue.

Subaru: “Right. Beatrice. She loves the attention, so I’m sure you have fun fussing over her too?”

Petra: “Mhm, I do. Beatrice-chan isn’t honest at all, and she’s super cute whenever I’m with her. I don’t think people like her should be left on their own.”

Subaru: “Why do you think that?”

Petra: “Because she’d be lonely. You can’t leave her alone.”

Subaru nodded to Petra’s smart-yet-simple reply, letting out a “that’s right”.

It had taken a lot of words to get there, but ultimately it was the same reasoning Subaru had used to drag Beatrice out of the Forbidden Library. Children saw the truth of things. Or really Subaru and Beatrice had argued at each other using child’s logic.

¹⁹³ You are probably already aware, but «-chan» is a honorific used for familiar people, especially younger girls. Which means Petra was basically putting Beatrice at the same level as a friendly person her age. Adorable.

Petra: “How come you’re laughing as well now, Subaru?”

Subaru: “It’s not that I’m making fun of you. It’s just that you’re so brilliant, Petra.”

Petra: “Really? Eheehee.”

Subaru pat Petra’s head and gave her a nod. Then he put his hand on the doorknob behind him, and swung the door open.

Beatrice: “Whaagh!?”

With a thunk, an eavesdropping loli was sent to the floor.

She pushed herself back up, her eyes teary and forehead red from having the door against it.

Subaru: “What the heck are you doing?”

Beatrice: “More like what the heck are you doing to me, in fact! This hurts! This sincerely hurts, I suppose! It hurts and furthermore you broke your promise...”

Subaru: “I didn’t promise anything, and I didn’t even say I would do it. After taking careful consideration on who to support, I decided that supporting Petra would be funnier.”

Beatrice: “Funnier! Funnier, he says, in fact! Just abysmal, I suppose!”

Complained Beatrice, rubbing her forehead while Subaru blocked his ears, pretending not to hear her. When a girl cut into their exchange; Petra faced Beatrice directly, making Beatrice’s mouth gawk open and pigtails bob.

Beatrice: “Ah, erm, um, don’t get the wrong idea, in fact... I, I wasn’t hiding from you or anyth...”

Petra: “Come on, Beatrice-chan. You’re going to get told off if you play hide and seek in other people’s mansions. Though I understand wanting to play so much you can’t help it...”

Beatrice: “What!? S—stop acting as though Betty were a child, I suppose! Though I might look like this, I am properly an... Erm, properly an...”

Petra: “Properly an?”

Beatrice: "...Never mind, in fact."

In the end, Beatrice surrendered. Emilia looked surprised, and Subaru also closed his eye at the unfamiliar happenings.

The entertaining thing about Beatrice and Petra's relationship was that, somehow, Petra was the dominant one. Beatrice always maintained a haughty, bullish attitude when interacting with anyone. Subaru and Puck had been the exceptions, and now Petra had thrust herself into that count.

For some reason, Beatrice could not interact with Petra using her normal demeanor. Not even she seemed to understand why was that. But Subaru had spotted her holding hands with Petra, looking rather reluctant about the whole thing, several times now.

No matter what Beatrice would think of it, to an outsider they were just a couple of young girls. And two girls, with portents of feature beauty, holding hands. A charming spectacle.

Petra looked slightly older than Beatrice. Perhaps it was happening because Beatrice struggled to counterbalance Petra when the latter behaved like an older sister.

Petra: "Okay, let's go. We don't want to interrupt Subaru and Emilia-sama's work. And Clind-keisama¹⁹⁴ got some sweets for us, so let's go eat them together. In the dining room."

Beatrice: "O—Okay, I suppose. I'll go... So you don't need to pull me along, in fact."

Beatrice sent a pleading look Subaru's way, as Petra led her out of the room by the hand, but Subaru cruelly replied with a thumbs-up. Emilia waved her goodbye as Petra dragged Beatrice away, still looking mad and with her tongue sticking out.

That skin-ship that was demanded by circumstances with Subaru would have to come later. Emilia put her finger to her lip as she contently watched one girl abduct the other.

Emilia: "That is reeeally surprising. I did not expect Beatrice to be weak to Petra."

¹⁹⁴ Respectful honorific that stands for "older brother" (兄様).

Subaru: “Right? It stunned me at first. It’s adorable to watch though, so I didn’t say anything. And I think Petra’s totally right.”

Emilia: “She will be sad if left alone?”

Subaru: “I don’t mind being with her all hours of the day, but that would defeat the purpose of having leave the Library. If she’s making memories, then the pages of her photo album ought to have as many people in them as possible.”

Because she had to compensate for four centuries of blank pages. If Subaru consumed all the space in her album, it was going to get really old really fast. Her memories needed to be full of lots of people and lots of faces. Subaru believed it was best to stand at her side as she clicked the shutter, sometimes slipping into the frame.

Emilia: “Subaru... Sometimes you are reeeally cool.”

Subaru: “Huh, what, seriously? What happened, what kinda RNG¹⁹⁵ was that!?”

Emilia: “It really is only sometimes though.”

Subaru scratched his cheek with a “You what now?”, as Emilia giggled. While it had been joking somewhat, compliments from Emilia inevitably got him excited. He wanted to always be reminded of this feeling whenever he teased Beatrice. He had to keep teasing her.

Subaru: “Feels like the aims and the means swapped places, but you do get that sometimes. Now, we got to see that heartwarming sight, so next is...”

???: “Indeed, a heartwarming sight. The spectacle of two girls with their lovely souls, smiling as they join hands... That is this world’s splendor. Radiance.”

Emilia: “Eek!?”

Just when Subaru started moving to the next topic, a voice making Emilia yelp spoke up. Because the speaker’s arrival was just that abrupt and unexpected.

¹⁹⁵ Literally “random number generator”, but often times used to denote a random event in video games.

And their location was just as unexpected as their arrival. This character stood just behind Subaru, so close that the latter could feel the other's breath on his neck, their expression nonchalant as they joined the conversation.

???: "I do apologize for the surprise. But I could not suppress my occupational urge to present you with astonishing service. Misfire."

Subaru: "C—Clind-san?"

Clind: "Yes, this is Clind. I hope that I have not fouled your temper? Trepidation."

A handsome, slender man delivered them a perfect bow.

His blue hair was just long enough to touch his shoulders, and he wore a monocle on his left eye. His stiff, black butler suit seemed to take joy in being his clothing as it perfectly displayed its potential, his every movement so refined that Subaru unwittingly stood up straight.

This man's posture was so perfect that it could be a match for Wilhelm's, but the aura that Clind exerted differed from the Sword Demon's.

If Wilhelm gave the impression of a honed blade, then Clind was the flow of pristine waters. Material beauty was dissimilar to conceptual beauty, though both did soothe the mind equally.

Subaru: "It's kinda crappy to show up behind people out of nowhere, Clind-san... Almost had a heart attack."

Clind: "Should that occur, we will devote our utmost efforts into your resuscitation. There is no need to fret, for everything is well. Death's door."

Subaru: "Hm!? Except that's no help at all!?"

While Clind's polite gestures remained strong, his reply fell apart terribly.

However, his current behavior gave no indication of his personality or capabilities. Clind was as excellent a servant as he appeared, being the model butler of the Milord household. Although young, he kept the mansion in order with his bold personality.

And that was not all—he was even capable of swordsmanship in an emergency. He was so skilled that, upon first meeting, Garfiel tried to pick a fight with him, and appraised him at “guy’s pretty freakin’ good”. Though Clind went on to ignore the duel invitation.

However, for all of Clind’s excellence, he did have some flaws. One of them was his demonstrated penchant for mischief. Another was,

Emilia: “Petra hasn’t been any trouble for you, has she? I know that you’re letting her take up part of the work, but I’m still kind of worried...”

Clind: “There is no need for worry. Petra is outstanding for a girl of her age. I await to see how her proficiency and beauty shall bloom. Envy.”

Emilia: “I see. Thank goodn—”

Clind: “However, she shall grow into an adult... Which I find a terrible shame. Chagrin.”

Clind furrowed his brows, looking utterly disappointed. That was one of his flaws, and a big one.

He was extremely interested in young girls like Petra and Beatrice. Putting it straight, he was into little girls—a lolicon.

Clind: “What could be the matter, Natsuki-sama? You look as though you’ve seen a prospective criminal. Have I perhaps done something untoward? Confirmation.”

Subaru: “It somewhat seems as though you’re self-aware about it, considering how precise that comment was. I’m not into younger girls, but seriously, when they’re so young...”

Clind: “It appears that you could be under a terrible misapprehension. Smile.”

“Smile”, he said, while not smiling in the least. His attractive face darkened in dejection as he adjusted his monocle and turned to face Subaru.

Clind: “Do I have your attention? I do not admire Annerose-sama, nor Petra nor Beatrice-sama because they are young. It is because I am infatuated with the promise and youth of their souls. To be enraptured by pure, immaculate souls is natural. And it happens that many possessors of such souls are young. Thus, misapprehension.”

Subaru: "Well, that's just great."

Clind gave a speech to rebut Subaru, though Subaru had been tuned out for most of it. However, Clind's next words destroyed that attitude of Subaru's. He looked at Emilia, and started again with an "In fact",

Clind: "My eyes perceive a similar shine to Emilia-sama's soul. Purity."

Emilia: "Me?"

Subaru: "Goddamnit, geez, Clind-san!"

Emilia tilted her head. Subaru could only find himself shocked and awed at Clind's perception.

It should not be possible to determine that Emilia's mental age was much lower than she appeared without investigating her background and upbringing. Clind's eyes had penetrated straight through that, and he had ascertained that Emilia was a mental loli.

A lolicon's nose was to be feared, was Subaru's assessment in dumb astonishment.

Subaru: "So then Ryuzu-san or something'd be..."

Clind: "Her appearance is exceedingly adorable, but her soul is matured. It is beyond the means of someone as immature as I to find promise from someone so set in their ways. Recklessness."

Subaru: "Amazing..."

It truly impressed Subaru that he could see through the loli-granny.

Emilia had been party to the exchange, but did not seem particularly interested in Clind's fetishes.

Emilia: "Clind-san, there was something I kind of want to ask..."

Clind: "Please ask whatever you wish. Inquiry."

Emilia: "Did Frederica use to work here before she started working in Roswaal's mansion?"

Clind: "...Indeed. Affirmation."

Subaru furrowed his brows, sensing that Clind had been tongue-tied for a second. The hesitation made Emilia blink too, but the conversation continued on its previous flow.

Emilia: “Which means that you’ve known Frederica for a long time?”

Clind: “Frederica and I have known each other for a decade—— I was still a manservant who had only just begun work when the Margrave brought Frederica to the Milord household. We have known each other since then. Old friends.”

Emilia: “I knew it! Okay, so I have a question about Frederica. Is there anything she likes or dislikes that we can use as a starting point for her to reconcile with Garfiel?”

Clind: “A starting point for reconciliation. Ruminating.”

Clind put his hand to his chin, in thought. He looked as beautiful as a portrait even while ruminating. Subaru fiddled with his track suit zipper while lamenting “So hot guys can get away with being lolicons...” about the amazing differences in beauty.

After a minute of thought, Clind nodded with a quiet sigh.

Clind: “I shall make chicken the primary dish for Annerose-sama’s next birthday. Plan.”

Emilia: “Where’d Frederica go!?”

Clind: “...Ah, forgive me. Whenever I attempt to meditate upon her, my brain unfailingly rejects it. I’m afraid this is my quirk. Beg your pardon.”

Emilia: “Do you maybe not get along with Frederica, Clind-san?”

Clind: “Preposterous. Denial.”

Clind shook his head at Emilia.

Clind: “She is an excellent servant who conducts her work swiftly and accurately, and is also proficient in caring for others. Should you ignore her appearance spoils her station, what demands the maid to be adorned in splendor and beauty, I have not any complaints about her. Indifferent.”

Emilia: “Hm? I think I just heard something extremely prejudiced, but is that just me? Subaru?”

Subaru: “No, it’s not just you, it’s just Clind-san.”

It seemed like Clind’s unrelenting prejudice had its origin in Frederica’s appearance. While yes, its initial impact had indeed startled Subaru, Frederica was actually both diligent and abounding in femininity. There was nothing wrong about her as a woman except her appearance.

Clind: “I sense that Natsuki-sama has reached the same conclusion as myself. Espy.”

Emilia: “Is that so? Subaru?”

Subaru: “I’m trying to end my habit of looking for other people’s flaws, so could you please not!? Emilia-tan your looks are a mega critical on me!”

Emilia: “That’s not what we were talking about, geez... But, thank you.”

Said Emilia, her cheeks slightly flushed. These compliments had seemed utterly ineffective before, but ever since had Emilia finished the Trials they had started working on her somewhat, which was novel.

Puck was not around to give Emilia lessons on fashion anymore, and she had gotten into the practice of dealing with her own grooming and dress. Apparently, she had been doing some trial and error on what looked stylish.

Though naturally, on that one time she started thinking about chopping her silver hair short, everyone collectively yanked the breaks on it.

Either way, it did not seem like they were going to get any useful information about Frederica from Clind. Subaru and Emilia sighed, hitting a quick dead end yet again.

Clind, watching that exchange, interrupted with “Simply as speculation”,

Clind: “Judging by what I have heard, could you be seeking an improvement to the sibling relationship between Frederica and Garfiel-sama? Conjecture.”

Emilia: “Yes, we are. But neither me nor Subaru have any brothers or sisters, so we have no idea what to do. We’ve been asking around, but...”

Clind: "Being that Frederica's only issue is her appearance, I believe that issues pertaining to Frederica that are unrelated to her appearance will resolve themselves if left alone. But it seems that you may find this stance unsatisfactory. And so I offer. Proposal."

Both: "Proposal?"

Clind raised his finger. Subaru and Emilia tilted their heads in unison. For the first time that day, Clind smiled.

Clind: "If you are concerned about them, then should you not speak to the person closest to them? Not Ram, but another? Opinion."

Emilia: "Closest to them... Oh!"

Emilia clapped her hands, her eyes shooting open as she finally happened upon this idea. Subaru reached the same conclusion, but something was bothering him first.

Subaru: "Not Ram? I am pretty sure we only mentioned her ages ago, Clind-san, how long have you been listening to us talk?"

Clind: "It is because I am the butler entrusted with the peace and chores of the Milord household. Declaration."

It somewhat sounded like an answer, and yet also didn't to a degree. Subaru scrunched his face up while Clind bowed respectfully.

His conduct as a subordinate was so perfect that it would overwhelm any observers. All Subaru could do was shutting his mouth, and looking sour.

One Day II Chapter 3 - Pretty Girl, Pretty Lady, Pretty Granny

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 22

Subaru: “And thus we hastened to speak with Ryuzu-san, who we figure knows them best.”

Ryuzu: “I’d call yer approach thorough, all told. I don’t mind that yer relying on me... but I don’t get much I can say on the topic.”

Subaru: “Meaning?”

Ryuzu: “Meanin’ I agree with Ram and Clin-bo. Their problem’s their problem. It’s not somethin’ outsiders needta get too involved with.”

It didn’t seem like Ryuzu was too interested in Subaru’s proposal as she sipped her tea. However, she was undeniably a key figure in this whole affair. Subaru was sticking his neck into their business with too little frivolity to back down that easily.

Subaru: “I get that their circumstances are an annoying mess. Since I’ve been involved in it, if only tangentially.”

Ryuzu: “...”

Subaru: “But I don’t think it’s something to just leave alone. I mean maybe it will resolve itself in time... But the way they’re trying settle things is aggravating both to them and to onlookers. It just isn’t working. If a there’s something a third party can do about it, then they should.”

Ryuzu: “That sounds like a load of hard-nosed meddlin’.”

Subaru: “Well I do have a reputation for being shameless and dense.”

Subaru puffed his chest out in pride although it likely had not been a compliment. Ryuzu smiled wryly at him.

The two of them were in a corner of the large room given to Ryuzu, sitting across from each other at a table as they sipped from their cups, silently wetting their throats with tea. When,

???: “Excuse me, guys?”

A voice called to them from a short distance away.

The speaker narrowed their amethyst eyes, their gaze akin to glare as it pierced Subaru. The voice of the speaker was laced with dissatisfaction, unincluded as she was in the conversation, Emilia.

Subaru: “What’s up, Emilia-tan? I mean, you’re cute when you’re angry, but your forehead’s getting all wrinkled.”

Emilia: “If you think so, then shouldn’t you come and help me a little!? Geez! Subaru’s a meany! You ninny!”

Subaru: “Who says «ninny» anymore?”

Subaru smiled at Emilia’s proficient and adorable use of outdated language as he set down his teacup. He looked again at Emilia, and tilted his head at the situation she faced.

Subaru: “You can really call this a spectacle. A fantastical drama unfolding between a pretty lady and pretty girls.”

Ryuzu: “Yer gonna make me blush, sayin’ that.”

Subaru: “You join in too, and it’ll be a drama between pretty girls, a pretty lady and a pretty granny.”

Ryuzu: “Yer gonna make me blush, sayin’ that.”

Subaru: “Seriously!?”

It shocked Subaru that, just when he had expected her to grumble at him, she accepted it. Ryuzu’s cheeks as she watched on with Subaru were faintly red.

The two of them gazed at a bunch of Ryuzus identical to the blushing one, surrounding Emilia in a mob.

—They had brought twenty-six Ryuzu doubles from Sanctuary in total.

Those were the subservient, non-sentient doubles who were not the representative Ryuzu. Though the faction had no tasks for them, they could not simply leave them sitting there, so they presented yet another issue for everybody to mull over.

And the biggest problem was—

Emilia: “Don’t just look, Subaru, come help me.”

Subaru: “I’d love to, but they’re not gonna listen to me. You and Garfiel are the only ones who can command them. Just have to order them with some witty eloquent language.”

Emilia: “I know, but... we just had a terrible fiasco when I told them to step away. Did you forget, Subaru?”

Subaru: “Nobody would forget an organized search effort that last for three days going all the way over the mountains.”

Subaru thought back on the debacle from three days ago.

Crystals in Sanctuary governed the doubles’ command right. One had been installed in the Tomb, and one in the laboratory, each of which recognized either Emilia or Garfiel as holders for that right, and presently continued to do so.

Meaning that the doubles remained in a doll-like state, unable to act without Emilia or Garfiel’s orders. They paid no heed to anyone else’s instructions. Garfiel said that, if they were left without any tasks, they would literally sit there doing nothing until they died and disappeared.

The debacle from three days ago had happened when Emilia, ignorant to the command right’s limits, tried to have the doubles spread out a little distance from the mansion by telling them to step away. The annoying part was that the doubles had their own personal differences, and interpreted the command in slightly different ways. Some of them perfectly adhered to Emilia’s intentions, some of them exited the mansion, and some of them sprinted far from the mansion into the distance.

Were it not for Garfiel's nose and legs, they would not have retrieved all of them. They couldn't just leave these cute, doll-like girls walking around undefended. And it would be problematic if people started questioning the doubles.

Subaru: "Twins or triplets would be one thing, but nobody's gonna believe in twenty-sextuplets..."

Subaru did not remember what the Guinness World Record was, but it was probably less than ten. There was no point even considering it, as there was no way they could use the siblings excuse in this situation.

And as for why they had to come up with excuses in the first place,

Ryuzu: "They were obviously made using forbidden techniques. Frankly said, it'd be an uproar if people found out what we were."

Subaru: "Figures."

Ryuzu: "Yer takin' someone as a foundation point, and constructin' artificial Od of a similar nature to make them— essentially, yer makin' infinite soldiers. There's people out there who'll want that."

Leaving aside the question of practicality there, they were useful for research, as they presented an infinite subject base, to put it simply. One could use the command right to keep them from rebelling, and they would disperse into Mana upon death, so there would nothing to clean up.

Subaru: "Which is all absolute shit."

Ryuzu: "It relaxes us to know ya think that, Su-bo."

Subaru felt something indescribable as he watched Ryuzu smile thinly. Repulsion that his acquaintance could be exploited, and aversion due to the ethical issue. Those feelings were why Subaru was adverse to the concept.

But once he dispelled those feelings, and considered the technique in a vacuum, how long would his resistance really hold against its sheer convenience?

Everyone, including him, pursued an easier method. "Hate being so weak", he thought.

Emilia: "Okay! So what am I meant to do?"

Emilia yelled, having been somewhat excluded from the situation, as she hit her limit.

The mob of Ryuzus wasn't doing anything, but the silent pressure they exerted on Emilia was not good for her mental health.

Subaru crossed his arms as he wondered what to do.

Subaru: "Maybe try settling them down with an order that can't be misinterpreted?"

Emilia: "Like? They went so far when I just told them to step away, so I don't know what to..."

Subaru: "I think saying «sit down» would work?"

Emilia: "...Subaru, you're a genius."

"It's nothing that brilliant", thought Subaru while Emilia asked the Ryuzus to sit, and they each plonked themselves down on the spot.

It felt like Emilia was a teacher in a kindergarten, now that all these little girls were sitting cross-legged around her, but actually the situation was more desperate than that. They had to come up with some smart way to deal with them. Subaru had some relevant proposals he wanted to make once Roswaal returned, so now it was an issue of waiting for him.

Subaru: "Since there's twenty-six of them, naming them after the letters of the alphabet might work to give an identity to each of them, and remember all of them."

Ryuzu: "Ya look like yer up to some nefarious plottin' again, Su-bo."

Subaru: "«Nefarious plottin'» makes it sound bad. All I'm doing is working my brain so everyone I know reaches a happy conclusion."

Subaru gave her a big grin. Ryuzu sighed, looking astonished.

Had she found his efforts credible or not? Subaru optimistically decided that his smile had just looked untrustworthy. When Emilia, freed from the swarm of doubles, approached Subaru and Ryuzu, Subaru presented her with her teacup.

Subaru: “You did a good job, Emilia-tan. Putting in good efforts as always.”

Emilia: “Thank you. But compared to Garfiel, I’m barely doing anything. Garfiel does such good work, ordering them all whenever it’s mealtime...”

Emilia took a sip and sighed as she looked at the doubles. The people usually looking after these girls were the representative Ryuzu, and Garfiel, the other holder of the command right. Garfiel especially was tending to the girls with exquisite care, ensuring that none of them starved to death or got stranded, grumbling about it all the way. He had had far more experience with them, for he had been interacting with them throughout his time in Sanctuary.

Though that was unlikely to console Emilia.

Subaru: “Well, just gotta take it easy. Garfiel’s doing some amazing stuff, but I think it’d be nice to have a more advanced solution.”

Emilia: “Advanced solution?”

Subaru: “I’ll tell you once Roswaal’s back. Until then, care to soothe my mind by freaking out some more in a herd of little girls?”

Emilia: “You are so mean!”

Emilia puffed out her cheeks in indignation. Adorable.

Either way, his plans were still in the draft stage and thus unready for the public. He would iron out more of the details before he revealed it, then basking in the praise.

Subaru: “Anyway, how about we leave the Ryuzu double problem for a moment, and get back on topic?”

Ryuzu: “My answer’s still the same. I’m not thinkin’ to do anythin’... much to get them movin’. I think they’re tryin’ ta keep from worryin’ me. They act like things’re goin’ reasonably well between them whenever I’m around.”

Emilia: “That is so saucy of them...”

Subaru: “Who says «saucy» anymore?”

Subaru averted his gaze to disregard Emilia's glare, and thought about the wily siblings after Ryuzu's testimony.

They were equally unwilling to make Ryuzu worry. And they had figured out how to compensate for it without actually discussing it with one another. Though they knew each other so well, they couldn't take that last step. The key reason for that had to be—

Subaru: "Yeah, it's because of their mother."

Ryuzu: "..."

Emilia: "Their mother... You mean, the one who left them behind in Sanctuary when they were little?"

Subaru: "I've only heard the second-hand story, and I haven't asked how she was like as a person. Actually no, Frederica told me she was extremely unlucky, but that's about it. I mean, I figure it's a given, but you did know her, right, Ryuzu-san?"

Ryuzu put her teacup to her lip, letting the time drag on and on. But it was not enough to escape Subaru and Emilia's focused gazes.

She let out a long sigh, and without looking at the pair—

Ryuzu: "Their mother, Reshia Tinsel, isn't a topic I particularly wanna talk about."

Subaru: "So she's someone you'd rather not remember?"

Ryuzu: "I didn't dislike her or nothing. Liked her a lot actually. She had that friendly kinda charisma, and... her circumstances were an unfortunate thing, which ya can see since the misfortune didn't kill'er. Her household ruined, and she was sold into slavery, then bandits attacked 'n destroyed the traders. Bandits took her home as their spoils, got her pregnant... It's essentially the picture of misfortune."

Subaru: "———"

Frederica had told him all this before, but it was still a horrible story. Emilia had no words for how heartrending it was. Though that final part of the tale may have eluded her understanding.

Ryuzu: “But Reshia didn’t end in misfortune. The bandits took a liking to’er so she lived ta raise her child. ‘Til another band of bandits destroyed the first one, and they entertained themselves with her again.”

Subaru: “Most people wouldn’t recover after all that.”

Ryuzu: “But she did. The bandit group collaps’d, she met Ros-bo on her travels and gained his protection, entrusted Frederica and Gar-bo to him, then left Sanctuary to search for Gar-bo’s dad.”

Subaru: “—Yeah, that’s right. Garfiel did say he thought his mother abandoned them.”

Ryuzu: “...That was probably his weakness talkin’. Since there’s hope in being abandoned.”

Subaru’s breath caught at the seemingly inappropriate word, “hope”.

Where in this tale was there any hope to be found? Before Subaru could figure it out, Emilia lowered her eyes.

Emilia: “She isn’t coming back because she abandoned us... That would mean that their mother might still be alive, is that the hope?”

Ryuzu: “...”

Emilia: “If she promised that she was leaving for a purpose, but still did not come back... It’s too frightening to think about.”

Ryuzu shook her head, looking miserable. She had told them the real reason why Garfiel and Frederica’s mother had left Sanctuary. And why had Reshia’s promise never been kept?

—The question was tied to a horrible answer. Garfiel had seen his mother’s passing. And everything made perfect sense with that.

Emilia: “I wonder if they know.”

Ryuzu: “Reshia left them after Frederica was old enough ta be self-aware. I doubt she’s forgotten it. And Gar-bo... Well, who knows.”

Emilia: “I think Garfiel remembers... No, remembered too. Otherwise, he wouldn’t look so joyful when looking at Subaru.”

It’s possible that Emilia was thinking of something other than Subaru, but he figured that the event in Garfiel’s past, his farewell to his mother, had been resolved and reached conclusion. The problem was that Frederica and Garfiel had not secured that closure equally. Frederica probably felt something very deep-rooted about the whole issue still.

It did seem like Frederica was the one avoiding Garfiel. That was the impression Subaru got when thinking back on their exchange.

Subaru: “Incidentally, do you know anything about what happened to Reshia-san after that, Ryuzu-san?”

Ryuzu: “...I never asked about it. That ain’t a lie. Sometimes, you just don’t wanna know the truth, and so it goes for me.”

Ryuzu averted her gaze, ignoring the truth she had likely already grasped. Subaru was not heartless enough to call it weakness.

A ripple crested through the dregs of tea in the teacup on the table. He watched the wave melt into nothing, a gloomy silence upon the scene.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “I’m feeling that if this goes on, everything will end with us prying further and further into their affairs like a couple of nosy meddlers, but what are your feelings on this, Emilia-tan?”

Emilia: “Uhhmm... I... I’d sooo rather avoid doing that.”

Subaru and Emilia left Ryuzu’s room and walked down the hall as they considered their accomplishments, terrified that they would fail to produce any decent results.

They would rather not have the situation end as just indulging in gossip and rumors. Naturally, their top priority was to improve Frederica and Garfiel’s relationship, but it was typical of life to have problems spring up while problems were already being dealt with.

Emilia: “But since neither talking to Ram or Ryuzu-san went anywhere... maybe we’re out of options? Since Roswaal isn’t back yet either.”

Subaru: “If we’re assuming that we shouldn’t rely on the passive approach of «it’ll resolve itself over time», then we can say that, yeah, the issue is probably family. But where their mom is... Or rather, whatever happened to her after their goodbye, is not the point. It’s more about their mental states back then compared to now, and the stances they held when they parted ways.”

Emilia: “Wouldn’t it be easier to just lock them in a room together?”

Subaru: “I am in shock at Emilia-tan’s unexpectedly barbaric plans.”

Subaru looked startled, but Emilia looked serious as she put her finger to her lip, prefacing with “I mean, right?”.

Emilia: “I think what they need isn’t really time, but a reason to start talking. They have thought about many things over these ten years... So if they get the time to talk about it, I’m sure they’ll manage something.”

Subaru: “Hmhmhm, but that feels passive too. It’s not really any different from the majority opinion of «it’ll resolve itself over time». When people say «it’ll resolve itself over time», they mean that the conversation you’re talking about will naturally occur during that period.”

Emilia: “So why don’t we make that conversation happen for them, unnaturally? I know my idea was pretty extreme... But I think it’s basically what Ram and Ryuzu-san are saying. We just have to leave them to it while they’re alone together.”

Emilia lifted her finger from her lip and wagged it. Subaru listened to her, his arms crossed and brows crinkled in deliberation.

Was that really all they needed to do?

Subaru did understand what she was saying. In fact, it made perfect sense. He was just troubling himself over simple anxieties.

But was it really okay for their involvement to be so shallow? Did they not have to pre-arrange things in more detail for this to work out? Nothing would hit any setbacks, and needlessly escalate in complexity?

Emilia: “Subaru.”

Subaru: “Nuh.”

—When Emilia poked Subaru in the forehead. She looked up at him, brought back to reality.

Emilia: “I know you’re a worrier, and work so hard for everybody’s sake...”

Subaru: “You’re going to make me blush, saying that...”

Emilia: “But I worry as much about you as you do for us. You need to know that you don’t have to take everything upon yourself like this. They’ll be fine.”

Subaru: “...I suppose.”

With everything dismissed by the word “worrier”, Subaru felt the weight fall from his chest. The burden in his heart had been that kind of intangible boulder— which he had shouldered upon himself.

Emilia: “It’d make me happy if you trusted me and went along with my ideas too, sometimes.”

Subaru’s shoulders untensed as he sighed.

Perhaps it was not the conclusion he had been seeking, but it seemed like events were going to end up aligning with the general consensus.

Subaru: “Okay. Then we’ll figure something out and—”

???: “—Goodness, if it isn’t Natsuki-san and Emilia-sama. What are you doing here?”

And just when he tried to adopt Emilia’s plan, someone intruded.

A grey-haired young man carrying a massive stack of papers showed up before the two. Recognizing him, Subaru put his hand to his chin in thought.

Actually, of all the important people in the mansion, there was only one they had not spoken to due to reasons other than absence. With that thought, Subaru considered how useful this man would be for tackling the problem, and nodded.

Subaru: “Okay. Then we’ll figure something out and make that happen.”

Man: “Do you mind if I ask why it feels like I don’t exist in this conversation!?”

The shout from the familiar voice echoed loudly through the Milord mansion.

One Day II Chapter 4 - The Birth of the Emilia Camp's Internal Affairs Minister

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 30

While working away at the massive mountain of paperwork, Otto listened to Subaru and Emilia who sat on the reception's sofa.

He withdrew the necessary documents from the pile, his quill pen occasionally darting over them. He scribbled formulas on a sheet of paper, performed some kind of calculation before jotting them onto the paperwork, and referenced nearby documents while stamping the first with a seal.

With how smoothly his work progressed and how frantically his eyes moved, it was questionable whether he was paying attention to Subaru, but his occasional interjections suggested he wasn't just ignoring them.

Emilia looked impressed as she watched Otto work, Subaru sitting beside her as he explained what they had been doing. He finished his speech at nearly the exact same moment that Otto returned his pen into its holder.

Otto: "So you're looking to improve sibling relations, are you...? Then if you'd like to consult me, I could tell you—"

Subaru: "Where's this going?"

Otto: "You're seeking pertinent advice from someone with siblings, correct? Then, I believe that instead of consulting this bunch solely composed of children, you'd be better off consulting me, someone who has both an elder and a younger brother, indeed."

Subaru found himself overwhelmed by Otto's abounding confidence.

Subaru had never asked about Otto's family make-up, but apparently, he was the middle brother in a series of three. So yes, Subaru and Emilia were indeed craving his advice. However,

Subaru: "But weren't you chased out of your house for being a bad son? It'd be one thing if you had good family relations, but advice from the black sheep isn't exactly helpful."

Otto: "Who are you implying was so poor a son that their parents disowned them!? I've never spoken even a single word of the like! My elder brother inherited the house, so I, as the second eldest, left to go trading of my own will! Perhaps it might be unexpected, but I do believe myself cleverer than my brothers, you see."

Subaru: "What if you're the only one thinking that, and your family's relieved the troublesome one's gone?"

Otto: "Does it somehow displease you for me to be here!?"

Otto slammed his hands on the desk, his face red. Subaru shook his head with an "Of course not". Merely the thought of Otto being absent was terrifying. It was just that Subaru had found himself insulting him before he could thank him.

Which was another one of Otto Suwen's characteristic virtues.

Emilia: "But for some reason you give off this reeeally unreliable atmosphere, Otto-kun. I wonder why that is...? Even though you did so much to help."

Otto: "E—Emilia-sama too..."

Subaru's thoughts expressed themselves vicariously through Emilia as she put her hand on her chin, in thought. Apparently, she was also a victim of Otto's virtues.

This man's aura of dependability correlated negatively with his actual capacities.

Subaru: "Look at how you're tormenting Emilia-tan, you sinful bastard."

Otto: "Utterly unjustified! What did I even do!"

Emilia: "So anyway, Otto-kun. I'd really appreciate it if you could tell us what we should do about them."

Otto: "And right into the main topic! Now aren't you two truly just master and servant!?"

Otto spent a moment overreacting, before seeming to realize that his hysterics were utterly pointless. The back of his chair squeaked as he put his hand to his grey hair.

Otto: "Well, I believe the important thing to start with would be their mutual feelings. From what I've seen, Garfiel does not look to be the problem. His stubbornness is akin to a child's, and I imagine that he'd like to reconcile as he loves his family."

Emilia: "Mm, I think so too. Garfiel wants to make up. But Frederica's having trouble approaching him."

Otto: "Frederica-san must be in a somewhat difficult position. She is the elder sibling, so as the superior she needs to let Garfiel have his way if they're to reconcile. But from what I've heard, it doesn't seem that Frederica-san has made a mistake. She may simply be exhibiting her sisterly generosity. If we consider her capacity to tolerate the younger's tantrums as the heart of this affair... what's the matter?"

Subaru stared at Otto as he neatly arranged his argument, and shook his head when Otto complained.

Subaru: "No, you hit me with an opinion that's way more serious than I expected, and I'm stuck on where to throw in jokes..."

Otto: "It's a serious matter that deserves serious consideration for a serious conclusion!"

Subaru: "Please forgive me. I'm too incompetent to play off your convoluted lead-up..."

Otto: "Are you trying to resolve problems or to stir them up!?"

Of course, Subaru wanted to resolve them, but defying his instincts hurt. Otto and Subaru's conversation aside, Emilia nodded admiringly in reply to Otto, continuing with "Then",

Emilia: "We have to address Frederica's feelings first."

Otto: "I believe so, yes. It doesn't seem that the situation will be exacerbated by Garfiel deeming Frederica-san as unforgivable. And honestly, I doubt anything so picky will be necessary for this. It's one of those problems that time can res—"

Subaru: "We don't want time to resolve it and that's why we're trying to hurry it along. Did you even listen to me all the way to the end? I swear."

Otto: "I shouldn't have to be hearing this!"

Sensing that Otto was reaching the exact same conclusion as everyone else, Subaru snorted somewhat mockingly. Otto was indignant, and Subaru pestered him further with,

Subaru: "So where would you show off that older sibling magnanimity, if it were you? You mentioned a younger brother, so surely you've had a fight where you showcased your broad-mindedness. That's the kinda tale I wanna see, hear, sing."

Otto: "If you'll pardon me on the seeing and singing, yes, a tale... Honestly, my family was rather harmonious. My siblings were good people, my parents were kind, and... Hold on, have we ever actually fought bef..."

Subaru: "Useless!!"

Otto: "Wh—why on earth are you saying that! What's so wrong about a peaceful family! Are you suggesting that relationships are illegitimate if they never involve fights even once? That's ridiculous! What is there to complain about peaceful relationships with no great flaws!"

Subaru: "Well it's the worst card you could've played in this situation!"

Just when it seemed like Otto was going to play something poignant and useful, it turned out that he did not have any cards in his hand.

Seeing as Otto could counterbalance even Subaru's ridiculousness, most likely, he had never got so enraged as to start slinging curses and insults around issues pertaining to family. Or perhaps everyone in the Suwen family shared the same bullyable temperament as Otto. A home where life had been peaceful, but only because no tormentors were around in that tentative paradise.

Subaru: "This poor, sheltered young lad..."

Otto: "It feels like you are insulting me immensely but perhaps that's just my imagination!"

Emilia: "...Huhuhu."

Otto yelled at Subaru, who let his imagination spread its wings. When Emilia, watching the exchange, put her hand to her mouth as she failed to suppress a smile.

The two men fixed their gaze on Emilia, who shook her head.

Emilia: "No, I'm sorry. It's just that you look like you're getting along reeeally well... Kind of like brothers."

Otto: "I'm rather sure that my brothers were kinder to me than this..."

Subaru: "Don't say that, big bro. We always treated you like this, brother, you just didn't realize. Face the reality, my brother¹⁹⁶."

Otto: "Oh, shut up!"

Otto had already exhausted the words and willpower needed to reply. Subaru pouted at him as he incessantly continued, "Brother mine, dear brother, broham, broski, bub-bub, broseph, Esteemed Brother My Elder¹⁹⁷", and so on. Emilia suddenly clapped her hands.

Emilia: "Ah. What do you two always do when you reconcile? I think Otto-kun always concedes, but figuring this out might bring us closer to the answer."

Subaru: "It's amazing how naturally that turned into Otto always conceding."

Emilia: "What if you try letting him win, Subaru?"

¹⁹⁶ Subaru's mocking Otto with several different ways to refer to a brother: "そんなこと言うなよ、お兄ちゃん。気付いてなかっただけで、実家でも兄貴の扱いはこんなもんだっただけ。現実を見ろよ、兄者". In order, "onii-chan" (familiar, casual), "aniki" (familiar, respectful), "anisha" (archaic, respectful).

¹⁹⁷ Subaru continues taking the piss, the original text being "お兄様、兄くん、あにい、兄や、兄チャマ、兄君様". In order, "oani-sama", "ani-kun", "anii", "ani-ya", "ani-chama", "ani-kun-sama". They are all stupid, but the last one extra super-duper so.

Subaru: "I... even supposing I yield to everyone else in the world... am absolutely never, ever yielding to Otto...!"

Otto: "Oh, shut up!"

Otto barked at Subaru's atrocious little drama, rubbing at his temples as he thought. It seemed like he was seriously considering Emilia's idea.

Otto: "Erm, what do I do when I argue with Natsuki-san, hmmm..."

Subaru: "Well, you usually cry yourself to sleep!"

Otto: "The answer didn't even bear thinking and now I'm even wondering what I'm doing!"

Otto cradled his head atop the desk as Emilia stood up and pat him consolingly. While jealous about Emilia's kindness, Subaru judged that he wouldn't be able to get it himself in this scene and slapped his lap before standing up.

Subaru: "Well, that did help. We'll try Frederica first, and depending how that goes, we'll judge how we'll enact Emilia's plan."

Otto: "You realize that you are merely fussing, and you may be breaking your back for no reason?"

Subaru: "I still think it's a lot better than actually breaking your back. Any disagreements?"

Otto: "—Haah..."

Hearing Subaru's answer, Otto let out a resigned sigh. The way his mouth relaxed into a smile was essentially his answer to the question.

Emilia must have also perceived the same thing as Subaru in Otto's expression. She stretched lightly on the spot, and flashed Otto a smile.

Emilia: "Well, Subaru and I will be going now. I'm sorry we interrupted you while you were so busy."

Otto: "No no no, I'm the one who invited you. Also, I am surrounded by mountains of suffocating paperwork. The occasional breather helps to make it easi..."

In response to Emilia's concern, Otto's expression snapped back into awareness.

Otto: "Hold on, why am I working so frantically on Margrave Mathers's feudal paperwork? At some point I got asked to assist with some municipal tasks, and then was permitted to inspect even the territory's administrative logs... I'm sure I was only trying to secure a quote for the price of that oil..."

Subaru: "Oops, Emilia-tan. We stay any longer and we'll be in the way of Otto's work. Let us vacate the premises while happily holding hands!"

Emilia: "Huh? Oh, erm, yes, let's."

Otto put his hand to his forehead, beginning to feel bewildered about his current circumstances when Subaru and Emilia abandoned him. Subaru took advantage of the moment to grab Emilia's hand and exit Otto's office. And just when Subaru attempted to flee the room, his hand on the door,

Otto: "Oh, Natsuki-san—"

Subaru: "Hm? What. Just relax. You're not sitting there because of any mistake or hypnotism or powerful suggestion. You have merely been lured by circumstances, conversational finesse, and..."

Subaru's sentence cut off halfway. He could not keep joking for he sensed something serious in Otto's gaze as he looked at Subaru. As though he was trying to talk about something important.

Subaru shut his mouth, and Emilia tilted her head. Otto looked at the two while a mere microsecond of hesitation flashed through him.

But it all dispersed once Emilia glanced back.

Otto: "—No, never mind."

Subaru: "Come on, I'm curious now. If you're gonna say something, then say it."

Otto: "I would like to talk about it, but... Well, we'll say that presently it would be like trying to hold a cloud. We'll discuss it once things begin to look more hopeful. Since I cannot tell whether it would help you or just bring you unease yet."

Otto scratched his head as he explained his hesitation.

Subaru tried to make Otto change his mind by silently staring at him, but the latter just seated himself and retrieved his quill.

Otto: "I'll be returning to my work, so I leave Garfiel to you. If the military cabinets are not functioning properly, the civil cabinets in the back will be too anxious to work."

Subaru: "—Got it. But whenever you feel like saying whatever that was, please do, Minister of Internal Affairs."

Otto: "Why of course I wi... Uh, civil, cabinet? Minister of Internal Affairs?"

Subaru: "Let's go, Emilia-tan. We'll just be bothering him if we stay any longer!"

Leaving Otto behind as he started worrying over the change in his position yet again, Subaru hurriedly pulled Emilia along by the hand and left the room.

Emilia's eyes darted about in confusion, and she glanced back at Otto the moment before the door closed.

Emilia: "Ah, um, eh, Otto-kun, good luck with your work!"

Unclear whether she was worried for him or giving him a boot in the ass, Emilia called out to Otto as she left the room.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Having left Otto's Office, Subaru and Emilia's course of action grew more definite. Or rather, they already had a solid course before the foreign element called "Otto's opinions" butted in, and now they were moving ahead with a plan just as solid as before.

Subaru: "Thinking about it, that was a complete waste of time..."

Emilia: "Don't say that. Otto-kun's story was, erm, well, it was... Mhm, ah, erm, yes... it helped?"

Subaru: "That impossible-to-hide honesty of yours shows in that question mark, and it's adorable."

Emilia failed in her desperate attempts to back up Otto as Subaru praised her and focused on searching for Frederica.

Anyway, the problem with the siblings was the sister. Garfiel had already made up his mind, so now it was all up to giving Frederica the motivation to make up hers, then—

???: “My, if it isn’t Emily and Subaru. May I ask what you are doing?”

Subaru: “Ugh.”

Emilia: “Ah.”

A voice called from behind them. Subaru’s breath hitched awkwardly to a stop, and Emilia plainly showed her surprise as she glanced back, their gazes landing on a girl in a dress, her navy hair in a braid.

She was less than ten years old, even younger than Petra or Beatrice. She was identical to Beatrice in that she sported an extravagant dress, but hers was decorated with simpler elements than the pigtailed girl’s. Unfitting to her youth, her eyes were stern and her face dignified.

The girl’s name was Annerose Milord.

She was a child of the Milord family which was looking after Subaru’s group, currently acting as lord of the manor in the true lord’s absence, and the one receiving Subaru and the others.

While Clind and the other excellent members of the household would attend to arrangements and the like, Annerose was the one dishing out orders, and she was suitably bold in her bearing.

A statesman’s condescending bearing— but in the form of a child.

This was the Milord family of sorcerers, split from the main household of the Mathers family, which was headed by Roswaal. Annerose already was in possession of all the backbone needed to inherit this house.

Lovable childishness— was something she lacked, which was seemingly why Subaru had trouble with her. It felt like, when facing her as another individual human being, he was being far eclipsed in refinement by a girl about ten years his junior.

But regardless of all that, Emilia’s reaction was very clear.

Emilia: "Agh, Anne. How many times do I have to tell you that I'm not Emily, I'm Emilia?"

Annerose: "Why do forgive me, Emily. Though you are at fault here for hesitating in your speech when you first introduced yourself. And I find Emily an easier and cuter name than Emilia."

Emilia: "Really? I mean, I don't really mind it either, but... I guess there's no choice."

And with that, Emilia had just permitted Annerose to use this nickname.

Emilia had got along strangely well with Annerose since they first met. Ask why, and they weirdly seemed to suit each other just like that.

Annerose's sentiments seemed much like Emilia's, as she displayed not the slightest negativity around the half-elf. She could be counterbalancing it with her mental capacities, but that presented a problem in itself when considering Emilia's age.

Annerose: "Now what is it you're doing with Subaru, Emily? Having a tryst?"

Subaru: "Ah, does it look like one? Does it? Well oh dear, we've gotten so close that it looks like a tryst. You're allowed to blush when the shyness takes you, Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "No, that's not what we're doing at all. All we're doing together is some nefarious plotting."

Subaru: "You know exactly how I feel, and you just cast it aside, geez!"

Annerose looked extremely interested as she asked her question, and Emilia easily shook her head in reply. It appeared that Annerose had not been expecting especially anything, for she looked scornful at Subaru with an "I see", breathing a sigh.

Her eyes were definitely mocking Subaru's ineffectiveness. But Subaru couldn't see himself as being at fault. He had constantly been flirting at Emilia, and she had just gotten better at ignoring it.

Annerose: "I shall inquire into your nefarious schemes later, for have you seen Clind anywhere? I need him and he is utterly missing."

Emilia: "Clind-san was watching over Petra and Beatrice just a moment ago."

Annerose: "...Phrasing truly is the crux of matters, Emily."

Annerose grimaced, seeming to infer everything from that statement alone.

She had known Clind for a long time, so she had to know his disposition very well. After all, his tenacious "Loli Soul" would be usually fixed entirely on his master, Annerose. There was no need to inquire about his resilience or keenness or hopelessness.

Emilia: "He said he had bought sweets for them, so they should eat them. I wonder if he bought any for me. It's kind of reeeally bugging me."

Annerose: "...I doubt that Clind would be that impolite, so surely there are some for you. He already visited myself and presented me with tea as well."

Emilia: "Ah, did he? I'm so excited."

Emilia clasped her hands together in joy while Annerose pleasantly watched.

They were in complete opposite positions to their heights and ages. It was a heartwarming scene, but Subaru had to tilt his head.

When Annerose noticed him doing this, narrowing her blue eyes.

Annerose: "You seem to have time available, so I'm sure you would not mind. Would you care to accompany me for a request of mine?"

Subaru: "Hey now. We might look like we have free time, but we actually don't. What's actually happening with this apparent free time is that we're using this period to substantiate a definite course into doing something productive for abating future troubles which..."

Emilia: "What's your request? I don't mind so long as it's something I can help with..."

While Subaru started weaving long-winded excuses, Emilia thoughtlessly accepted instead. Annerose smiled at Emilia, looking at the pair with eyes so mature they could not conceivably be a nine-year-old's.

Annerose: "There is a man whom I would like to shock, and a maid whom I have long known that I would like to reach conciliation."

One Day II Chapter 5 - Annerose's Trap & Brother-Sister Relations

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 38

Why were they readily going along with the nefarious plots of a nine-year-old?

Subaru watched the back of the small girl leading them down the hallway, annoyed at his own failure to prevent this.

—Annerose Milord.

Being from a branch of the Mathers household that headed by Roswaal, she shared many distinct characteristics with him. Such as her notably navy hair and blue eyes. Her hair was dressed in a crown braid, but since Subaru did not know what the hairstyle was called, he mentally referred to her as Braid Loli. She possessed keen intelligence unfitting to a nine-year-old. Her cleverness and wits did make her seem like a relative of Roswaal's, but the thing most reminiscent of Roswaal showed through.

Annerose: "Emily, would you care to hold my hand?"

Emilia: "Huh? Oh, sure, Anne."

Annerose: "So I oblige. Also, Emily. Would you care to let me hug you?"

Emilia: "Huh? Oh, sure, Anne."

Annerose: "So I oblige. Also, Emily. Would you care to carry me in your ar—"

Subaru: "Enough."

Subaru got Annerose, seeking handholding and hugs and upsy-daisies, away from Emilia. Emilia's eyes widened. Annerose brushed off her lap, undeterred, before exaggeratedly patting at her shoulders where Subaru had touched her.

Annerose: "How brutishly you separate two people who so innocently desire to touch one another, Subaru."

Subaru: "Where'd you get those statistics about those two people? That questionnaire looked to be about walking the Milord estate alone to me."

Annerose: "Your limited your stature must be, Subaru, if you are unable to overlook a child's endearing mischievousness."

Subaru: "Except I would have kept my mouth shut if that was just childish mischief!"

Annerose smoothly attempted to justify her actions. Despite her words, she was still trying to grasp Emilia's hand whenever the opportunity presented itself, so Subaru couldn't get careless.

Annerose was a blood relative of Roswaal's, a prodigy beyond her nine years of age. And her idiosyncrasy was that for some reason, she liked Emilia way too much. Ever since the day that the group had arrived to stay in this mansion and they introduced themselves, Annerose had shown excessive fondness for Emilia. Emilia was a gullible airhead, so she may view it as a cute show of affection, but Subaru viewed it otherwise.

After all, she was related to Roswaal. While his status as a Demi-Human Lover had been overthrown by his actual status as an Echidna Lover, it may not be the same for his relative.

Many of the servants in the Milord household were demi-humans. Ones that Roswaal had assembled from all over his lands, ones who had apparently suffered persecution, and were effectively taking asylum in the Milord residence by Roswaal's will.

Considering that Annerose had been born and raised in this environment, demi-humans were a familiar presence for her. So, while she wasn't prejudiced against Emilia the half-elf, her friendliness was excessive.

Put simply, Subaru was trying to keep Annerose from stealing Emilia. And Annerose was trying to keep Subaru from monopolizing Emilia. Making them rivals for Emilia's affections. Although—

Emilia: "Come on, Subaru. I don't know what's rankling you, but you can't be mad at Anne like this when she's still so little. You're being immature."

Subaru: "Who says «rankling» anymore...? No, I mean, never mind that, look, Emilia-tan. Plainly said, Annerose's gaze isn't the kind you can dismiss as her still being young and..."

Emilia: "No excuses! I'm so sorry, Anne. I think Subaru's still flustered from being in someone else's mansion."

Subaru: "...and it still applies even when you act like I can't settle into unfamiliar beds!"

Subaru and Emilia had disparate stances toward Annerose, so whenever the topic veered onto how they felt about her, it turned into one of these fruitless arguments. Why couldn't Emilia notice how saccharine Annerose's gaze was?

Subaru: "I bet that it's one of those things where only people aiming for Emilia-tan's affections can notice when others are doing the same... Yes, that's definitely it!"

Annerose: "Emily. Subaru has just confessed that he lusts for you. How indecent."

Subaru: "Your word choice's the indecent thing here! Are you really a nine-year-old!?"

While Beatrice was only superficially offensive, Annerose was actually offensive. Subaru could dismiss that "indecent" as a simple riposte, supposing it had come from Beatrice's mouth, but somehow it felt like a real insult when said by Annerose.

Emilia: "How come you two can't get along? It's sooo baffling..."

Subaru: "Emilia-tan, it's because we both l..."

Emilia: "You both?"

Subaru: "—Mhm, guh."

Emilia tilted her head. Subaru could not get the rest of the sentence out.

He had stated his fondness for her countless times, but voicing it around other people made it feel cheap. And he was also saying it unintentionally while running off momentum, which made it both cheap and embarrassing.

In the corner of his eye, Annerose smiled victoriously.

Annerose: "Now then, I will refrain from teasing Subaru further. For let us speak inside my room, which we have reached."

Said Annerose, to pure Emilia and red-faced Subaru.

Abruptly, Subaru realized that they had indeed walked down the whole of the hallway, and indeed stood before an overly ornate door. It was Annerose's room. Apparently Emilia had been invited here many times before, but this was Subaru's first venture here.

Annerose took Emilia's hand and easily moved to welcome her into the room. But Subaru intervened and pulled the breaks on that.

Subaru: "Wait. «Annerose's room» is such a fishy series of words so I'm going in first."

Annerose: "—Huu. Very well, proceed. You are free to do what you wish."

While she did seem bothered at first, Annerose conceded to Subaru with a sigh. Subaru put his hand to the doorknob and, slightly tense, entered the room, where—

Clind: "I have been awaiting your presence, Natsuki-sama. Tea and biscuits have been prepared. Please do find yourself a seat and relax. Chat."

—Clind welcomed him with a formal bow

Stunned speechless, Subaru glanced back, to see that Annerose looked utterly unfazed.

Emilia: "Huh, Clind-san? But I thought you left to go eat with Beatrice and Petra?"

Clind: "So I did, Emilia-sama. However, it appeared that the Mistress found it in her mind to hold a tea party in her room, and thus, I attended to those preparations first. Urgency."

Emilia: "You're right, Anne did say something like that."

Clind: "Indeed, the Mistress so thought of me. Perceptiveness."

Emilia poked her head out from beside the frozen Subaru as she spoke with Clind. But it seemed their conversation did not quite mesh. It was almost like Clind had said "thought of me" instead of "asked of me"¹⁹⁸.

Annerose: "Attempting to rationally comprehend Clind's peculiarities shall drive you to lunacy. It is best for the mind that you simply accept it."

Clind: "I am always vigilant to remain one step ahead of my summons. Objective."

How the hell would vigilance achieve that?

That was what Subaru was thinking, but Annerose and Emilia seemed unbothered as they started taking their seats. While mentally tilting his head, Subaru joined the tea party too.

Annerose: "Seeing that Clind has prepared the tea, we may proceed with our conversation."

Clind: "The one regarding the bettering of Frederica and Garfiel-sama's relationship. Conciliation."

Subaru: "Clind-san, are you one of those butlers where there's actually several of you?"

Clind: "That position has already been filled by Ryuzu-sama. Rehash."

Clind seemed to think that his inclusion in the conversation would just stymie it. He readied tea and biscuits for everyone, before going to a corner of the room where he stood still as a statue. His gaze locked onto Annerose, but she ignored it, long used to it.

¹⁹⁸ Might be worth mentioning here that "thought" in Clind's earlier line was in brackets in the original text, possibly because it has the double meaning of "thought" and "asked" (思われました).

Annerose: "Now, Clind's assessment is correct, this regards our mutual interest in swiftly bettering Frederica and Garfiel's relationship... Would that be a valid thought?"

Emilia: "Yes, that's right. We've been racking our brains trying to do something, but we haven't really come up with any wonderful ideas. It's been a real kerfuffle."

Annerose: "You're adorable when you're stressed, Emily— Then, now that you have ventured about the mansion to discuss the issue, and found yourselves at a standstill, you have come to me."

Subaru: "Stop subliminally throwing your ulterior motives in there."

Annerose, nonchalant, looked utterly unaffected by Subaru's jab.

Either way, she seemed to understand Subaru and Emilia's situation, and so the trouble of exposing the situation was avoided.

Subaru: "But anyway, you're looking to have them make up too? What's the occasion? Everyone else just insisted to let time resolve it."

Annerose: "Perhaps because I am less inclined to resignation, and less accustomed to waiting? I must say that the people you spoke to are largely of that disposition."

Subaru: "Frank, aren't you...? No, but we also asked Otto."

Annerose: "Then I amend that to include those ignorant to success."

Subaru: "Harsh!"

And how sad Otto must be for Annerose to have managed to get this impression of him, when they had only known each other a week. But it was best that Subaru stayed silent, considering that he couldn't refute her.

Annerose: "I cannot deny that time will resolve the issue. A divide of ten years separates them, and given another decade, the issue shall resolve itself. But that is far too prolonged. Why, ten years, that's the same length of time since my Mother and Father last kissed!"

Subaru: "Huh?"

Halfway through a not-so-childlike screed, she abruptly hit a childlike conclusion.

Subaru groaned, unable to keep up with the sudden shift in gears, prompting Clind to put his finger to his mouth in request of silence.

Subaru didn't have a complete grasp of the situation, but perhaps her knowledge in those topics actually were that of a nine-year-old. Though he would rather not probe into it, since Emilia was present and also under the exact same misapprehension.

Annerose: "Care to explain that bizarre groan of yours, Subaru?"

Subaru: "It's nothing. Just some phlegm and hopelessness stuck in my throat."

Annerose: "I see. What tribulations puberty brings. Regardless, I have no intentions of making them wait for a decade."

Emilia: "We are thinking the same way. But, do you have any ideas, Anne?"

Annerose: "What were your thoughts on the issue, Emily?"

She was replying to a question with a question, but regardless Emilia furrowed her pretty brows and put her finger to her lips with a "Hmmm", in thought.

Emilia: "I think they do want to make up. I feel like Garfiel's trying to make time so they can talk, and though Frederica's uncomfortable, I think she does want to talk."

Annerose: "I see, understood. And so?"

Emilia: "And so, I've been wondering if it'd be easier to just lock them in a room together."

Subaru: "You sure are going for the barbaric plans, huh, Emilia-tan!?"

While Subaru had no better ideas, it was shocking to hear it coming from Emilia's mouth. While he did endorse the idea, there were some questions on that approach. Particularly,

Subaru: "I mean we could throw them in a room, but those two can bust out of basically any room when working together. I'd prefer we didn't destroy half the mansion doing this. So instead of a busted mansion, we have a week to get them hanging out together, what is this, a speedrun?"

Emilia: "Then what should we do, Subaru? Should I use ice to make a room that we can lock them in?"

Subaru: "I don't think we need to use such extreme conditions to revive their family love, no! Just, look! Something like, have them go into a room while sharing the exact same goal!"

Emilia: "The same goal?"

Emilia tilted her head, puzzled.

Subaru managed to get away from any criminal ideas, but his proposition did not go any further than that. He had conceived making them share a goal, but had no concrete idea what it would be. Should they defeat some monster that they can only take on together? Where were they going to find such a convenient monster, exactly?

Annerose: "In truth, my thoughts are identical to Subaru's."

Subaru: "Huh? You know where to hire Cyclopes and Chimeras?"

Annerose: "Disregard that."

Annerose gazed scornfully at Subaru, who apologized by poking out his tongue and bonking his head. The nine-year old sighed while Emilia's cheeks flushed, eyes lit with expectation.

Annerose: "We share the same thoughts on the matter of making them share a goal. But I expect that what we know about them differs, and so differs the ideas we conceive, Emily."

Emilia: "What we know about them?"

Annerose: "For you have greater knowledge of Garfiel than Frederica. While I have known Frederica for over eight years. That fanged face has been familiar to me ever since I've been aware."

Subaru somewhat understood what Annerose was trying to say.

Her relationship with Frederica meant that she could supply the information needed to fill the gaping hole that Subaru could not address— rather, the common points that could lead to a common goal between Frederica and Garfiel.

Subaru: “Are you sure this will work?”

Annerose: “Provided that I may secure helpers, yes. Now, Frederica presents no issue, but Garfiel does.”

Subaru: “Garfiel does?”

Annerose: “Should Garfiel’s personality be exactly what I have observed over this handful of days, then we should see no issues.”

Subaru did not know how intensively Annerose had paid attention to Garfiel’s attitude, but as far as he could tell, Garfiel had been entirely himself during his stay. He wasn’t being pointlessly stubborn like he had been in Sanctuary, or trying to hide his fourteen-year-old immaturity. Subaru was sure of that much.

Subaru: “Garfiel’s being entirely genuine, so no issues there.”

Annerose: “Excellent. Next is the issue of helpers... Perhaps we might enlist help from Ryuzu-san, their family.”

Subaru: “From Ryuzu-san?”

She was the person one would name first when listing people most related to them.

But she did not seem entirely cooperative, and it was unknown whether she would entertain this. Regardless, Annerose seemed to think otherwise, and gestured her butler over.

Annerose: “Clind.”

Clind: “We may delay preparations for this evening’s dinner by two hours and use the kitchen. Proposal.”

Annerose: “I see. Very well. Do inform whoever’s tending to dinner of that.”

Clind: “As you command, I swiftly shall. Haste.”

After that quick exchange, Clind silently exited the room. Subaru and Emilia watched on in surprise while Annerose took a sip of her tea, smiling.

Annerose: "Now, let us see this issue quickly done away with. For others yet remain who must be tended to."

She said, plunging Subaru and Emilia deeper into confusion.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

The second Garfiel entered the kitchen and spotted that unfamiliar stature, he sighed, recognizing that he would be caught in a trap.

Garfiel: "...Fuckin' everyone's gettin' so involved."

Despite his cursing, a slight smile was plastered on his face.

Garfiel's nose was built different. His sense of smell was so strong that it was of no comparison to the average man's, and so he had caught the scent before he had even entered the room. That he had nevertheless kept himself unaware was Garfiel's final speck of stubbornness, or perhaps his pride as a man.

???: "Garf?"

Garfiel scratched his head while the woman glanced back, and called to him in unfamiliar voice. Before him stood a woman with long, lustrous blonde hair. She was taller than him, and her build was assuredly robust. The horde of fangs decorating her mouth, combined with her powerful frame, made her seem somewhat savage and violent. Were it not for her gentle voice and the tender gleam in her eyes, people would constantly be getting the entirely wrong impression of her.

Frederica Baumann. That was how she had been introducing herself, or so Garfiel Tinsel had heard. Tinsel was the name of their mother, and Baumann that of her father.

Garfiel did not know why Frederica insisted on using her father's surname, and had opted not to think about it.

He doubted that those who had devised this meeting had also taken those complicated sentiments into account. Or perhaps Garfiel was just exaggerating the whole thing, and to outsiders it did not look like a big issue.

Garfiel: "Ain't often I see ya here, Sis."

Frederica: "And I could say the same. To think that you would find yourself here... dinner has not yet been prepared, you will find nothing here to pilfer."

Garfiel: "I ain't here for food. Stop treatin' me like a damn kid."

Frederica: "But is it not childishness to balk when treated as a child? And I suspect that you are still young enough that you would desire such babying, Garf."

Garfiel: "Nah, I'm fourteen 'n over that hump. Who the hell's a baby here!?"

Feeling pricked, Garfiel howled in rejection.

Frederica shook her head at Garfiel's overreaction and returned her gaze to her own hands—to look into the kitchen.

Frederica: "I am occupied with a task at the moment. Garf, I cannot devote all of my time to relaxation as you can."

Garfiel: "Ain't like I'm spendin' all my amazin' time playin' 'round either. And I ain't here to kill time. Think I'm here for the same reason as ya, Sis."

Frederica: "The same reason?"

Garfiel: "Looks like ya got asked by someone else tho."

By those words alone, Frederica seemed to figure it out. "So that's it", she muttered in comprehension.

Frederica: "I did think it peculiar. Out of nowhere, Annerose-sama started saying that she would die if she did not have one of my meat pies."

Garfiel: "How the hell did that manage to trick you, Sis."

Frederica: "Garf, what did they say... No, what did Grandmother say that brought you here?"

Garfiel: "She said if she ain't gettin' one of my amazin' meat pies she's gonna go more senile."

Frederica: "I also must wonder how you managed to find credibility in that statement."

To Frederica's reply, Garfiel shut his mouth. Hearing her say it did make him question it, but he had been sincerely worried, so there was nothing to do.

Garfiel: "Well maybe ya just can't understand seein' as ya gave up lookin' after her. Ain't weird at all for Granny to show up askin' if dinner's ready yet, even after she just ate. 'Course I'd fuckin' worry."

That had actually been a sad misunderstanding coming from the fact that when the Ryuzu personality would change her rotation to the next one the new Ryuzu would not inherit memories so extensively as to discern whether dinner had happened or not. But Garfiel had never noticed that and neither did Frederica.

The siblings' concern for Ryuzu's mental health increased.

However, Garfiel's statement pricked Frederica in a manner different than described. Because, although unintentionally, had slammed the issue of her decade-long absence right into her face.

Frederica: "...Indeed. I never returned to Sanctuary even once over that decade. And you are the one who protected Sanctuary during that period. I have no right to speak as if I know what happened there, or what has become of Grandmother."

Garfiel: "No, I... That ain't what I was meanin' to say with that. I was just..."

Frederica: "-----"

Frederica glanced back, forcing Garfiel to face her again. Her face remained unfamiliar.

It had been a decade. During all that time, Garfiel's mental image of his sister had remained the same ever since ten years ago. Even though he had reunited and spent some time with her, he was having trouble accepting it. And the situation was the same for Frederica. She must be viewing him with trepidation, just as he viewed her.

But it bothered Garfiel. Why was her trepidation casting waves as intense as his own? What was it that he made her feel?

Garfiel: "...Oh."

With that gaze upon him, Garfiel sighed. The answer fell into his heart with a thunk.

He got it.

Crap, he got it. He knew exactly what emotion was reflected in Frederica's eyes.

It was the same look that Ryuzu would occasionally have, back in Sanctuary. The same look that Garfiel would see on his own face, reflected upon the water.

Which meant that it was melancholy. Combined with apology.

Garfiel: "Of course it'd be."

Garfiel had assumed that the events from ten years ago had been resolved.

Back inside the Tomb, he remembered the goodbye with his mother that had happened when he was young. He now understood what his mother had felt as she left them, and that had resolved the issue for Garfiel.

He had assumed it had been equally resolved for Frederica.

But it wasn't. What happened in the Tomb affected Garfiel, and only Garfiel.

Garfiel came to understand his feelings for his sister, and his mother's love. He had never told or informed his sister of them, distant as she was.

And so, Frederica gazed at Garfiel without any resolution as to what had happened a decade prior, unsure of what to say. Even though she had matured, her gaze was identical to what it had been ten years ago.

Garfiel: "Sister.¹⁹⁹"

¹⁹⁹ Garfiel changes his usual way of referring to Frederica from "anee-touto" (姉貴) to "nee-chan" (姉ちゃん).

Frederica: “—!”

Garfiel: “I’m sorry I didn’t say anything. But it’s okay. I’m okay. I know what happened with Mom, and with you.”

Frederica: “Garf...”

Frederica’s eyes grew teary and wet in the wake of the violent emotion.

While frustrated at himself for his lack of eloquence, Garfiel searched for the words that would convey his feelings accurately. He searched his head, and all the books he had ever read, for the words he must say.

Garfiel: “I get why you left Sanctuary, and why you never came back after that... That ain’t what I can actually say but, I am tryin’ to get it. So it’s... well, y’know...”

Frederica: “You are... ready to forgive Mother?”

Garfiel: “—What’s there to forgive?”

Garfiel’s mouth relaxed into a smile as he replied to Frederica with a shake of his head.

Exactly. What was there to forgive?

The love and hatred that Garfiel had kept in his heart this whole time had been misaimed. He had known nothing of the truth, had not even known his own feelings, lashing out in anger at the impenetrable darkness— all a tantrum and nothing more.

Now that he knew the truth, it was all insignificant. There was nothing to forgive or resent.

Garfiel: “I know now that Mom loved me... that she loved us.”

Frederica: “———”

Garfiel: “So there ain’t no point tryin’ to keep away from me and what happened. Ain’t got nothin’ to do with my amazin’ self. So how ‘bout we get to talkin’ ‘bout somethin’ a lil’ less crap, Sis?”

Garfiel's speech pattern returned to normal as he rubbed his reddened nose. Frederica let a long, deep sigh out, wiping the tears from her eyes.

Frederica: "Garf... you truly have grown."

Garfiel: "Drop the sarcasm! I ain't grown a damn inch compared to ya! The hell happened to ya! How did'cha get so damn— Gaaaah!?"

Frederica: "We may be family, but that is no excuse to say such things to women, Garf. You idiot."

Frederica grabbed him by the leg and slammed him to the ground, the back of his head banging against the floor. Garfiel's eyes spun as he stared up at the ceiling, Frederica in his view above him. Her face was back to a smile.

Frederica: "Come now, stand up."

Garfiel: "Yer th'one who fuckin' flipped me over."

Garfiel took her offered hand and got back to his feet. He lightly wiped himself off and peered over at the counter that Frederica had been using.

Garfiel: "So? How far ya got with yer meat pie, Sis?"

Frederica: "I have gathered the ingredients and had just begun to chop them. Though, it impresses me that you remember how to make it, considering that you only ate it when you were young."

Garfiel: "It's 'cause some wise guy left how to make it behind so I could make it after she left. 'Kay, my amazing self'll knead the dough."

Frederica: "Then I will do the chopping."

Garfiel stood before the ingredients as he wrapped a towel around his head, prepared. Frederica brought out the cooking utensils for him as he did so, smoothly passing them over to him.

The siblings started working in side-by-side, as if there had never been a decade-long divide, as they easily attended to that familiar work together.

One Day II Chapter 6 - Just One More Left

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon — Complete, Page 49

Subaru: “But seriously, I wonder if it’ll work out...”

Emilia: “Really? But I thought our plan was reeeally good. I bet Anne and Ryuzu-san’s acting totally fooled Garfiel and Frederica.”

Subaru: “You sure...? Honestly I found Ryuzu-san’s hammy acting and Annerose’s last-second stage fright absolutely shocking.”

Annerose: “Silence yourself, Subaru.”

The three of them sat at the dining table, waiting to see how their plan had worked out, when Annerose interjected on Subaru’s musings. Her cheeks burned bright red in embarrassment, which made her look her age for once.

Annerose’s plan to remedy their sibling relations was extremely simple.

The topic was Emilia’s proposal, combined with the part that Subaru couldn’t figure out— That is, how to throw Garfiel and Frederica in the same room while sharing the same goal. And Annerose utilized a memory shared between the two of them to easily overcome the issue.

These meat pies that Frederica would occasionally cook had been her specialty ever since her time in Sanctuary. It was uncertain that Garfiel also knew how to make them, but—

Annerose: “Frederica often mentioned it. That her Grandmother had taught her how to cook this, and how she remembers that her Mother cooked it for her. Naturally, Garfiel must have also been raised on this cooking, and I believed it highly likely that he inherited the recipe from Ryuzu-san. From what I've seen, Garfiel is something of a nanna's boy."

Subaru: "I've got nothing against all that. My issue's not with how you insightfully figured this out."

Annerose: "Hmph."

Annerose puffed out her cheeks, but Subaru would not let that erase her mistake.

They had managed to successfully catch Frederica and give her an excuse to get her in the kitchen without any problems. The issue was how they dispelled Frederica's suspicion and the motive they gave her.

Subaru: "What kind of strange affliction is that where you die instantly if without pies? Apologize to the pie."

Annerose: "It was merely a slip of the tongue. There is nothing that necessitates me to apologize to..."

Emilia: "He's right, I'm kinda unsure about that too. Okay, I'll apologize with you."

Annerose: "I—I suppose I have no choice! When Emily says so I suppose I have no choice!"

Annerose's face flashed bright red as she readily agreed with Emilia. Subaru averted his gaze from the charming yuri²⁰⁰ and looked at Ryuzu, who sat meekly at the table.

Subaru: "Ryuzu-san, looks like you're feeling some guilt that you lured Garfiel in your trap so perfectly."

Ryuzu: "Of course not... Nononono, wait! Explain that, that phrasing yer usin' to ecksacerbate my guilt. Ya quit that, that stuff pains the heart."

Subaru's mean-spirited statement did bring back some of Ryuzu's usual attitude. Then she noticed that Subaru had said what he did to energize her, and—²⁰⁰ Slang for a girl/girl relationship with romantic undertones (or overtones, really). Can also be translated as "lilies" or "lilylily", since that's what "yuri" stands for (百合百合).

Ryuzu: “So late, after so much has happened. I’m still not sure I’m glad I did that. I do want them to reconcile, of course. But...”

Subaru: “You don’t have to worry yourself over it. They would’ve wound up the same as ever if we just left them to themselves. So the outcome stays the same. All we did was make said same outcome happen a little earlier. I think it’s best that things happen sooner when they can.”

Ryuzu: “Why’s that?”

Subaru: “Otherwise, it’s a waste of time when instead you could be having fun. Humans are certain to die, so we better take action while we still have sand in our hourglass, right?”

Ryuzu: “———”

Ryuzu’s eyes widened, and she sighed, drained of power.

Ryuzu: “Yer one of those, aren’tcha, Su-bo. A guy who doesn’t second-guess his life principles for a second.”

Subaru: “Nope, that’s not it. You barely get anyone who gets stuck second-guessing minuscule things the way I do. I just try not to overthink it by telling myself that it’s okay not to, and I’m hoping to stick to that principle.”

Ryuzu: “It’s okay, not to overthink.”

Subaru: “Yeah. We have people we want reconciled, and the reconciliation makes everyone happy. So it’s fine not to think about it too much, let’s get them reconciled. When there’s someone you wanna be with, save the worrying for later and go over to them with an «EMT»! That’s what I’ve been considering lately.”

Though of course, he could not apply that to everything.

Subaru truly was a weak person who agonized needlessly over trivial things, while having limited time and only a handful of available choices. He would at least like to remove his second-guessing about the choices he did make.

Ryuzu: “Yer right. When ya get old as me, ya’ve got so many things ta teach and ta learn it’s overwhelming. Doubt I woulda thought anything like this if I stayed in Sanctuary ‘til my end.”

Subaru: “You don’t usually get bored of being alive when you live life. But I expect everyone’s figured that one out without my input?”

Ryuzu: “Then I guess I better enjoy myself in my limited time, too. I’ll start by getting excited for my cute grandchildren ta make up, and come looking fer me ta spoil’em.”

Subaru: “Honestly, I can’t really imagine them just accepting anyone spoiling them.”

Frederica was serious to a fault, and Garfiel was a contrarian. Neither of them were going to accept their grandma’s pampering nicely. But since the two, or rather, the three, desired family love more than anything else, they all made for something quite charming.

???: “I apologize for intruding on the discussion. Rudeness.”

When the voice of a butler who silently appeared in this room whispered at Subaru’s ear. Subaru’s eyes shot open in surprise as Clind took his place to stand beside Annerose.

Annerose: “What’s happened, Clind? I will tell you that I was enjoying a blissful moment with Emily just then.”

Clind: “It pains me to so interrupt you. Heartache. However, I am required to inform that Roswaal-sama has made his return. Notice.”

Annerose: “He has? Another return from him, timed so perfectly it seems as if it was calculated...”

Her brows furrowed, Annerose muttered in dissatisfaction.

While Subaru wept silently at how even Roswaal’s relatives felt this way about his habits, Annerose stood from her seat.

Annerose: “It appears that my uncle has returned, so I shall be excusing myself to welcome him. Emily, Subaru, and Ryuzu-san, I request you relax as you wait here for the siblings to return. Particularly Emily and Subaru. You will be busy.”

Emilia: “Erm? Okay, got it. I’ll wait here.”

Emilia gave an earnest nod, and Annerose gazed at her with affection. Then she glanced to Subaru, piercing him with her gaze and negative aura. While Subaru frowned at the disparity in their treatment, Annerose exited the room with Clind. Which was when Subaru noticed the cups of tea assembled before himself, Emilia, and Ryuzu, and nearly squawked from surprise.

Subaru: “Did anyone see Clind-san set this tea?”

Emilia: “No, I didn’t. Clind-san did excellent work as always.”

Ryuzu: “Mhm, a real professional. This tea’s cooled exactly to my taste.”

Subaru: “My tea’s at the perfect temperature for me too, but how about you, Emilia-tan?”

Emilia: “I like it hot, so mine is reeeally hot.”

Subaru: “What the hell is Clind-san?”

Annerose had told him to just accept it, but Subaru was having trouble. Perhaps this was the fundamental difference between living in a parallel world, and being born and raised in one, he thought as he glanced at Emilia and Ryuzu, who also looked like they felt overwhelmed by Clind. What, so he was a deviation after all?

When,

???: “Hell, so here’s where all the masterminds’ve been lurkin’.”

A few minutes after Annerose and Clind had left, a blond tiger-man opened the door and made his entrance. It looked like he had easily noticed that Subaru and the others had been behind the trap, his expression extremely complex. Either way,

Subaru: “Looks like someone found out we’re the villains.”

Garfiel: “Can tell ya that ya got me good, I looked so frickin’ lame.”

Emilia: “How did it go, how did it go? Did you talk?”

Garfiel clicked his fangs as he walked over, when Emilia excitedly accosted him. Ryuzu tucked her head in, awkward, while listening intently for Garfiel's next words.

Garfiel looked at the two ladies, and sighed.

Garfiel: "Yeh, thank ya fer yer excessive unneeded meddlin'. Sis 'n me... Sure, we had our talk. Y'ain't gotta worry no mo'."

Emilia: "Really? Then how come you didn't come here together, holding hands?"

Garfiel: "Ya think we're capable of that embarrassin' crap! Maybe we made up, but that doesn't mean a bro 'n a sis're gonna hold hands so easy. Don't even joke."

Emilia: "But I don't think it's embarrassing, I think it's wonderful."

Emilia looked not to be teasing, but to sincerely think this, quite unfortunately. Garfiel had nothing more to say to her, as he instead looked at the hesitant Ryuzu.

Garfiel: "Granny."

Ryuzu: "...What's it, Gar-bo?"

Garfiel: "I'm sorry for makin' you worry. I'm fine now, 'n Sis's fine too. Ya don't have to worry."

Garfiel rubbed his nose as he talked, and Ryuzu fell into silence. Her mouth relaxed, and an aged smile unfitting to her youthful looks appeared on her face.

Ryuzu: "I see. That's a relief. Ya can't put too much stress on yer elders. Makes them meet their end quicker."

Garfiel: "It ain't a damn joke when ya say it, Granny, better watch out."

Ryuzu regained her casual demeanor, and Garfiel snorted.

Garfiel: "Anyway, Captain 'n also Emilia-sama, I'm sorry fer makin' ya do that."

Subaru: "Don't worry about it. Me and Emilia-tan were just killing time by improving the interpersonal relations in this mansion. Nothing that deserves an apology. Right?"

Emilia: “Subaru, you were only killing time? This was a serious issue for them, you have to take it more seriously. Hmpf!”

Subaru: “Wha!? My face-saving modesty backfired!?”

Emilia failed to notice Subaru’s roundabout consideration for Garfiel. Or so he thought, when a smile etched itself onto Emilia’s face.

Emilia: “Heehee, just kidding. I know what you’re doing. You’re not honest at all, Subaru.”

Subaru: “My god... EMK²⁰¹ strikes, and her mystique compounds... She must be trying to kill me...”

Garfiel: “The fuck did’cha just do to my apology, oy.”

Said Garfiel, stunned. Subaru and Emilia shared a glance, before facing him again and,

Both: “—We were happy to help.”

The two gave their reply to his apology.

Garfiel frowned in dissatisfaction as Ryuzu shrugged in exasperation. Subaru shots Emilia a thumbs-up as she happily watched the two.

Subaru: “Also, Garfiel. The reconciliation came first, but what happened to with the supposed trigger for the whole thing, the meat pie? Honestly I was really looking forward to it.”

Garfiel: “Ya don’t make a pie that easy. The trick’s to cook it in th’oven good ‘n slow to get that sumptuous taste. «Sumptuous enough to put a Baumbem to sleep»’s a damn good sayin’ here.”

Subaru: “The hell’s a Baumbem. Is it like a *baumkuchen*²⁰²? But I’m pretty sure if you leave a baumkuchen unattended for too long, it goes bad before it gets sumptuous.”

According to Garfiel, it would take two hours before the pie would be ready.

²⁰¹ Emilia-tan Maji Koakuma (エミリアたん・マジ・小悪魔), translated as “Emilia is seriously a little devil”.

²⁰² A cake from German cuisine. For more information, see here.

Which meant it would coincide with normal dinnertime, and probably wind up as a dish there.

???: “—Which I must say soooooounds quite convenient.”

Having lost any way to distract himself from his hunger, Subaru redirected his attention to how to kill two hours of time— when a familiar voice spoke up.

The four glanced over to the speaker, unanimously sour-faced.

???: “Myyyyyyy goodness. I leave the mansion to attend to business, and whaaaaaaaaaat an unwelcoming hello aaaaaaaaawaits me.”

Subaru: “Not that I’m not thankful for your work. But can you please just look at this thing where we reflexively make this expression as you reaping what you sowed? Also, me and them are still being nice. Look at Garfiel, he’s gonna burst a vein.”

A vein bulged on Garfiel’s forehead as his eyes began going bloodshot.

It was the arrival of a man whose refreshed expression remained stable even before Garfiel’s glare— an identity easily deduced from his characteristic speech pattern, Roswaal L. Mathers.

Roswaal had been the mastermind behind the events in Sanctuary, and having confessed to that, had suffered a drop in amicability from basically everyone. Garfiel’s rage burned particularly hot, and it was impossible to predict when he would explode.

Subaru also felt mixed emotions about Roswaal. And after hearing the continuation to Roswaal’s confession, his uncertainty had peaked.

Subaru knew that Roswaal had not been responsible for everything that happened in Sanctuary and the mansion. For some reason, Roswaal had only revealed this information to Subaru. Subaru did not know the reason why, but he felt no urge to purposefully reveal the truth to everyone else.

The responsibility for that turmoil laid entirely on Roswaal— or at least, ninety percent of it did. The remaining ten percent was on the account of some other party.

Subaru would rather not encourage any unneeded anxiety now.

Emilia: “Subaru, are you okay? The face you’re making is reeeally weird.”

Subaru: “Seriously? What’s it look like?”

Emilia: “Hmmm, well, it’s like your eyes gweenked nastier, like this.”

Subaru: “Seriously? My face looks that cute?”

Emilia: “But it’s not cute!”

Emilia’s fingers pulled the corners of her eyes upwards as she mimicked Subaru’s expression. Even when trying to emulate something so awful, her cuteness overrode it. Such was her charm.

Emilia pouted while Garfiel seated himself in anger. Subaru watched Ryuzu prepare tea for Garfiel as he spoke to Roswaal, the only one left standing.

Subaru: “Anyway, welcome back. Did you finish what you went out to do?”

Roswaal: “Ahaaaaaa, how keenly I doooooooo feel Subaru-kun’s kindness. And yes, without issue. I visited several villages within my domain, and our new residence.”

Subaru: “Never mind the residence, you went around the territory? For what?”

Roswaal: “Beeeeeebecause of the ruckus from the territory’s Lord’s mansion buuuuuuurning down. Should I fail to demonstrate my good health, some mischief-makers may begin deeeeeeeevising plots. I make it a rule to attend thoroughly to my land’s peace aaaaaaaaand safety.”

Subaru: “Thoughts on the land’s Lord being the biggest maker of mischief devising the worst plots?”

Roswaal: “Hoooooow harsh. My citizens suffered no harm, and the villagers of Arlam are ignorant to the truth. Do you not think that this persistently thorny attitude of yours will hinder us iiiiiiiiiiin the future?”

Subaru: “Guhgigi.”

Never skipped a beat.

With that sharp jab of criticism, Roswaal regained his previous composure. If Subaru were to publicly disclose that Roswaal had been the one behind the whole affair, then it would only put them at a disadvantage, both in regards to the Royal Selection and management of the territory. And so, even the people of Arlam Village still believed that Roswaal was a good Lord.

Only Petra, who knew the truth, held a different opinion. But she understood her current circumstances, and that the only thing to gain from revealing the truth would be self-satisfaction. Henceforth, it was doubtful that she would do anything extreme. Cleverness did occasionally force people into making cruel decisions.

Subaru: “But that does not make it fine for you utilize this to your benefit. You forget that, and once Emilia-tan’s on the throne you’re getting the guillotine.”

Roswaal: “Terrifying. Hoooooooooowever, even then I maaaaaaaay have a chance to fuuuuuuulfil my goal.”

Garfiel: “We ain’t fuckin’ talkin’ ‘bout ya meeting yer goddamn goals. Gonna make Ram cry if ya keep comin’ up with more bullshit ideas, ya bastard.”

Surprisingly, Garfiel cut in to stop Roswaal’s provocations. Roswaal’s brows shot up in surprise and he casually raised his hands.

Roswaal: “Goodness, aaaaaaaalright. I don’t paaaaaaaarticularly wish to fight with you all aaaaaaaaanyway. Why must this escalate into an argument, when I ooooooonly came here to show my return? I must find this all raaaaaaaather unproductive.”

Emilia: “It’s because you’re saying things to make Subaru and Garfiel mad. And I can tell you’re doing it on purpose. Enough of that, stop provoking people. You’re not a child.”

Roswaal: “———”

Roswaal attempted to condescendingly resolve the issue, when Emilia pressed down on him from further above, her hand to her hip. Roswaal’s eyes shot open in surprise while Emilia continued.

Emilia: “You don’t have to be so anxious, we all remember what you did and what you promised. There’s no point in acting bad on purpose and worrying everyone. You’re just so hopeless.”

Emilia sounded like she was scolding a disobedient child.

But it seemed impossible to dismiss her statements as incorrect or misplaced, and Roswaal remained silent without any rebuttals. In fact, the way he narrowed his eyes and grimaced awkwardly makes it feel like Emilia had hit the bullseye.

Though Subaru did not actually believe that Roswaal was seriously operating off such childish sentiments.

Subaru: “That really did clear the air though. As expected from Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “—? Mhm, thank you. Also, there had to be more reasons for why you have gone around the domain besides just that. What else did you do, Roswaal?”

Roswaal: “Ahahaaaaaaa, you have grown more perceptive. I patrolled the region for reasons as stated, to demonstrate my health, and to prepare the residents of Sanctuary for their migration.”

Garfiel: “The preparations to move!”

Those words could not keep Garfiel from staying silent. Ryuzu hurriedly returned to his side as he slammed his palms on the table.

Garfiel: “That means prepping where they’re goin’, ya?”

Roswaal: “Assuredly. Their time as refugees means that Arlam Village is the best place to aaaaaaaaccept them. But there’s a limit to what the village can hold. Should their population double its original number, they will not be able to sustain themselves. They could expand the village, of course, but there’s also the problem of the barrier.”

Garfiel: “Barrier? Ya bastard, you laid more of those fuckin’ things all over the—”

Subaru: “No, hold up, Garfiel. We’re not talking about a barrier like Sanctuary’s. There’s a whole bunch of Witchbeasts lurking in the mountains around there. So there’s a barrier around the village to keep them away. That’s the one Roswaal’s talking about.”

That barrier had been what had spurred the whole Witchbeast debacle.

It was entirely unfeasible to coexist with the Witchbeasts, and being that the village needed this separation, it was difficult to expand Arlam Village.

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun explained it perfectly, thaaaaaat’s the issue. Whiiiiiiich means that the people of Sanctuary must be distributed partly to Arlam Village, and then iiiiiiindividually to other contenders. Regardless of the place that shall welcome them, they cannot stay together as people of Sanctuary infinitely. I do feel some heart-wrenching sorrow, as I watch them leeeeeeeave the nest.”

Ryuzu: “Impudence and prattle.”

Ryuzu couldn’t hold in the insults as Roswaal feigned tears. Roswaal crafted a smile and continued,

Roswaal: “Aaaaaaand so, I made a quiiiiiiick round of the territory. Though for interests of distance and time, liiiiiiii merely visited the neeeeeeeearby locations. I sent messengers to other townships, seeeeeeeing as we have an abundance of issues that need resolution.”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s right. If you don’t get back to your office quick, Otto’s gonna die from *karoshi*²⁰³. He’ll die crushed between the weight of responsibility and work.”

Roswaal: “What a novel way to die. Veeeeeeeery intriguing.”

Subaru agreed, but did not pursue the topic.

Roswaal was back, so Ram should be livelier. That was how far Subaru had thought before he tilted his head, feeling something awry.

Emilia: “Actually, Anne said she left to welcome you, but she’s not with you?”

It seemed that Emilia had hit upon the same question. Roswaal raised his finger.

Roswaal: “That’s because I had a reeeeeeeequest for her. I was thinking to address one of those issues requiring resolution.”

Emilia: “Issues requiring resolution?”

Roswaal: “The one in the banquet hall. I believe that you have already prepared yourself for it, Emilia-sama.”

²⁰³ Translates directly to “death from overwork” (過労死). A very real problem in modern Japan.

Emilia: “—!”

Emilia’s shoulders jerked up in surprise.

But the shock only lasted an instant. Her expression immediately turned serious, and she glanced at Subaru with strong volition in her amethyst eyes.

He savored the tingle down his spine as he tilted his head, questioning. But no clear answer was given to Subaru’s query.

Emilia: “Okay. Are we starting it right now?”

Roswaal: “We can start the instant you are ready. And we still have time before the pie is done cooking. I would say that now is the perfect time for it.”

Emilia: “This is such an important thing, but doesn’t this all feel reeeally sloppy?”

Roswaal: “It’s presently difficult for us to schedule any designated times. Considering that you will be occupied from tomorrow onwards, should we not take advantage of this opportunity?”

Emilia: “Yeah. okay. I’ll do it.”

Roswaal nodded, entirely satisfied. The two of them looked to have reached an agreement, but Subaru had no idea what they were discussing. Garfiel and Ryuzu must also be in the dark.

Subaru: “Hey, stop going off agreeing to things by yourselves. What are you talking about? You better not be trying to make Emilia-tan do anything funny again.”

Roswaal: “That would be a teeeeeeeeeerrrible misunderstanding, Subaru-kun. And do relax. This issue not only involves Emilia-sama, but very much yourself aaaaaaaaas well.”

Subaru: “What do you mean I’m also invol...”

But before he could finish his sentence, Roswaal had drawn his face near. Subaru unwittingly backed away, his back hitting the wall, and Roswaal’s finger landing on his nose.

Roswaal: “—We’re discussing the ceremony for your cherished knighthood.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Subaru: “You know! Usually you don’t keep the details of an important event a secret from the people involved! Do people throw surprise weddings for the bride and groom? Are surprise funerals ever a thing? No, they are not.”

Having been dragged into a room to get changed, Subaru complained while taking off his track suit. The news from Roswaal in the dining room had been an absolute shock to him.

—Knighthood.

The ceremony where the master acknowledged their subordinate as their Knight, and all others recognized their change in status.

It came with extensive formalities and etiquette, which surely differed by country and by worldview. Subaru had witnessed many such ceremonies in manga and anime, but it was inconceivable that he would remember what they had in common and what diverged.

And of course, he could not be expected to know the etiquette for an accolade of the Kingdom of Lugunica.

Subaru: “Except they all went, and fucking prepared everything like that’s the obvious thing to do. Maybe that damn Annerose was jealous about how I’m all over Emilia-tan and is trying to humiliate me!”

Otto: “I’d surely think not? While naturally the star of an accolade is the knight who receives it, their master is the one obligated to inform them. If Annerose-sama acted out of such pointless stubbornness, it would humiliate not only yourself, but Emilia-sama. Do you believe that someone as clever as her would do that?”

Subaru glanced over to Otto, who was assisting with his change of clothes. You could ask how one would possibly assist with a change in clothes, but these ceremonial outfits did have various modes of dress that Subaru was unaware of.

Clind: “Natsuki-sama. The correct way to wear this requires you to begin with this undervestment and proceed with these lowers. Advice.”

Subaru: “Ah, thanks. Or rather, actually, these clothes fit me so well it’s creepy, how long has this ceremony been planned exactly?”

Clind: “It was raised in discussion instantly following your arrival in our household. And once decisions were made to hold the ceremony after Roswaal-sama’s return... I assure you that Emilia-sama has studied and rehearsed the ceremony thoroughly. Report.”

Subaru: “That report’s late! And why was Emilia-tan keeping it a secret too!?”

Otto: “Perhaps because it would be awkward? Anyway, you truly do not know a single step of the process...? That would present something of a problem...”

Subaru put his arms through the sleeves of the clothes that Clind had handed to him, lost on what to do. Otto perceived Subaru’s genuine discomposure, and looked as if he had started noticing the obstacles impeding this ceremony.

Subaru: “Right? It’s doomed. I’m glad Emilia-tan feels this way, and it’s crazy how honored I am to receive a knighthood, but we’re screwed if this ceremony fizzles out, aren’t we? Yeah, okay, I better get on my hands and knees and beg for this to be postpo—”

???: “Ya step forward when called and kneel before Emilia-sama. Then ya draw yer sword from its scabbard and pass it to her. Emilia-sama takes the sword and puts it to yer neck, she speaks the oath... then you accept the oath in return. Thassall.”

Subaru: “...What, seriously?”

Muttered Subaru in shock. Everyone in the room gazed at Garfiel, who crossed his arms.

Garfiel: “What. Ya don’t believe me?”

Subaru: “It’s not that, it’s that I’m shocked that you know this. How out of character is it for you to be versed in formal events like this...?”

Garfiel: “No, Captain. It ain’t that I know anythin’ ‘bout formal events.”

Garfiel waved his hand in astonishment, but that did not eliminate the fact that he had just outlined the formal process of an accolade. Subaru furrowed his brows questioningly, and,

Garfiel: “It’s just that knighthoods’re awesome so I memorized it.”

Subaru: “Oh, okay. Got it.”

The reasoning was so convincing that Subaru instantly agreed with it.

His mighty *chuuni*²⁰⁴ mind offered assistance even here. Of course Garfiel would know about accolades. Such was the persuasiveness of this argument.

Otto: “Does that account align with your knowledge, Clind-san?”

Clind: “I am only scantily versed in the topic, but my knowledge does coincide with what I heard. I bow my head before Garfiel-sama’s mastery. Succinct.”

Otto: “But that makes it sound as though you also know the procedure... No, never mind. Disregard that comment.”

Otto’s way of life was one of opening cans of worms to find demons inside. Nobody who had witnessed the mysterious gleam in Clind’s monocled eye would criticize Otto for his retreat.

Either way, Subaru smoothed out the wrinkles of his clothes, put on his jacket, and started adorning it with the required ornamentations.

Subaru: “This outfit’s crazy. It took me ages to get used to the butler uniform, but I don’t think I’ll ever own this look.”

Otto: “You won’t be granted enough opportunities to wear it that you could say that you own it. It would be another case, were you entering nobility... Though, I suppose it’s still unclear what your future will bring.”

Subaru: “Meaning?”

²⁰⁴ “Chuuni”, also known as “chuunibyou” (中二病), or literally translated as “middle two disease” or, alternatively, “middle-school second-year disease”. Well-known term to describe kids in middle school who have delusions of grandeur, like special powers. It even has its own Wikipedia page!

Otto: "Emilia-sama is on the social ladder. As long as you follow her, I suspect you will attend more than a few events in this vein. This outfit was specifically tailored, after all."

While feeling admiration for Otto's piece, thoughts of the future depressed Subaru. He imagined these formal events, and his heart shivered, inept as he was at remaining stoic. Though these worries were only to be had if he got safely through this upcoming ceremony.

Subaru: "Goddamn Roswaal, bet he hid it on purpose to make a laughingstock of me..."

Garfiel: "Sulkin' ain't gonna help ya none, Captain. Now repeat what my amazin' self said to make sure ya don't forget it."

Subaru: "I kneel, draw the sword from its scabbard, give it to her, and say the oath. I mean, I've gone through two graduation ceremonies; I can at least memorize this much."

Except he had attended those ceremonies after properly practicing them.

Subaru: "I know this comes late, but if this is an accolade then all the Royal Knights must've done it."

Otto: "Not only the Royal Knights, but everyone who holds the title of Knight. Though I do believe it is rare to disregard all these requirements and pledge directly to a master. Usually, you would swear fealty to the nation before selecting a master."

Subaru: "So it's the difference between serving the country and serving an individual. I think it's right to be serving an individual."

Either way, he could say "I am a Knight", but it wouldn't feel real.

Subaru had proclaimed himself as Emilia's knight multiple times. Insisted it. Even though he knew his false title was going to gain legitimacy, he couldn't exactly accept it. He also questioned how exactly being recognized as a Knight would change him, too.

Subaru: "All this after you dressed me in these formal clothes. For real, this fits me perfectly, when did you take my measurements?"

Clind: "Measured daily, interspersed between breaks in your awareness. I had already confirmed that it fit, but it elates me to see you dressing. Splendiferous."

Subaru: “I’m unsurprised about the measurements, but when did you check the fit? Have I somehow been dressed in this outfit before?”

Clind gave no reply as he smiled, and brought Subaru, who had finished dressing, over to a mirror. As Subaru stood reflected in the full-length mirror, his breathing stopped.

He wore a black ceremonial outfit that clearly exceeded his standing, opulently but not outrageously decorated. No matter how Subaru posed, the captivating clothes made it look good. And when he carried himself soberly, indeed, it was an outfit fit for formal ceremonies.

But, yeah, it definitely felt like Subaru was inferior to that clothing. Something felt off, like he was attending *Shichi-Go-San*²⁰⁵, or something. Nevertheless—

Otto: “Mm. It looks better on you than I expected.”

Garfiel: “Does feel like the clothes’re wearin’ you, but they ain’t totally defeated ya. Relax, Captain.”

Clind: “Indeed, it suits you well. Emilia-sama’s impression of you shall surely climb to even greater heights. Amicability rising.”

Subaru: “You sincerely think that? You all sincerely honestly think that?”

Subaru readjusted his collar time upon time as he glanced suspiciously at Otto, who despite his frankness, had failed to mock Subaru’s appearance. But Otto’s expression remained perfectly stable, and he gazed at Subaru with pride. Not even Subaru could possibly reply to that.

Garfiel: “Here, take this, Captain.”

No amount of fiddling would invite any dramatic change.

Subaru sighed as he turned around, and Garfiel handed him his knight’s blade in support. Subaru reflexively accepted it, when the slender thing made him swallow his breath.

²⁰⁵ A traditional rite of passage in Japan for three- and seven-year-old girls, as well as five-year-old boys, held on November 15. For more information, see here.

Clind: "It would be best that you used your own favored blade, but being that you possess none, our household has provided this. You may keep it should you so fancy. Gift."

Subaru: "A Knight's sword... huh. And it's real, naturally?"

Otto: "I doubt you would ever find a wooden sword with such excellent craftsmanship. Only a child would find joy in something like tha— Hm? Am I sensing a new business opportunity...?"

While witnessing the potential birth of wooden swords in parallel world souvenir shops, Subaru felt the weight of the sword in his hands.

This was not his first time holding a sword.

Last time had been during the Witchbeast affair in Arlam Village, when he ventured into the mountains with Ram to search for Rem. He accepted a sword from the village's Men's Brigade, wielding the thing with barely any thought.

The sword went on to break before he could use it to fight any Witchbeasts, so while it did not manage to a deciding factor, it did provide Subaru with his first experience in stabbing a living creature with a blade, which he had never done since.

This knight's blade should be thinner and lighter than that previous one. But the weight he currently felt in his hands was beyond compare.

Subaru: "——"

He unconsciously clicked his throat, a constricting feeling in his chest. The weight from that sword and this sword were entirely different.

And Subaru knew that the entire purpose of this ceremony was to recognize that fact.

Otto: "—Natsuki-san. I will come and call you before it begins. I will perform the final inspection of your dress then, so please make sure to keep it orderly."

Subaru: "...Understood."

Otto must have seen the shift in Subaru's expression, and sensed how he was beginning to properly face the ceremony.

With those words, he and the others left the room.

Subaru: "-----"

Left by himself in the room, Subaru dragged over a nearby chair and seated himself before the mirror. With the sword in his hands and his visage in the mirror, he submerged himself in thought.

Knight. The weight of the title pressed down on Subaru's shoulders.

Had Subaru ever seriously considered the significance of this word he had so frivolously used? Naturally, he had been entirely serious back then. He would not use this as armor to conceal his rashness in proclaiming himself as Emilia's knight. However---

Subaru: "Julius, Reinhard."

Subaru thought of the upper echelon of Knights in the country. One was the Knight of Knights. One was the Finest of Knights. They were the pride of knighthood, and the emblem of anything knightly.

Back when Subaru called himself a knight, ignorant to those facts, Julius sternly beat the truth into him.

Subaru: "What a Knight needs is both power and fealty... I think was it."

If those were the requirements, then Subaru was still unfit to be a knight.

Subaru's feelings for Emilia were nothing as majestic as fealty. He was incapable on his own, and failed to meet average capabilities even with Beatrice's help. Both his power and his fealty were as insufficient as ever.

But now he had the will that he had previously lacked. It was not fealty, but it was comparably strong.

He might be lacking power, but he had the spirit and resolve to compensate for what he lacked. He couldn't change that it seemed too awkward for him to be called a Knight, but that was what made him Subaru. Like hell Natsuki Subaru was suited to anything so magnificent as chivalry.

???: “What. Seems that I didn’t need to visit after all, in fact.”

It happened as Subaru faced himself in the mirror, having resolved one point.

He saw a small silhouette standing beside him, hunched forward like he was. The girl reflected aside him in the mirror, with her long, extravagant pigtails, was Beatrice.

Subaru: “I’m getting dressed. You dirty loli.”

Beatrice: “You’re already dressed, I suppose. I was asked to come here to do something since you looked so persistently uncertain, in fact. So I had to come here to give you a slap on the back, I suppose—— But it seems that I didn’t need to, in fact.”

Subaru: “Those guys...”

Who had been the meddler here? Otto? Garfiel? Perhaps even Clind? Or maybe it had been all of them, and Subaru had to smile bitterly at how likely that was.

Indeed. There was no one more suited to give Subaru a pep talk at this moment than Beatrice. She was the best choice. So he would indulge himself on her care, and accordingly uplift Beatrice’s expression, as she regretted the needlessness of her presence here.

Subaru: “My back.”

Beatrice: “...?”

Subaru: “If you’re gonna slap me, then please do it. I do feel like I’ve sorted some things out... but I’m still looking for that final push.”

Beatrice’s eyes widened in shock. Her expression was so incredibly darling that Subaru had to keep himself from chuckling.

Subaru: “Come on, please.”

Beatrice: “You don’t have to worry yourself... I know I’m not worried myself, I suppose.”

Subaru: "I'm not saying this out of worry. I just think that, no matter who gives you that slap on the back, that ends up being the final push. So if I'm the one who choose who that person will be, then I want it to be you."

Beatrice: "-----"

Subaru: "I want you to slap me on the back and be the final strength I need to be Emilia's Knight. It feels more like me that way."

He could just be saying it for peace of mind, but what was so bad about peace of mind? Perhaps it was just an issue of how he was feeling. But that just made it more legitimate; of course he should have her make him feel better, then.

Because the heart would always express itself with the simplest language.

Beatrice: "Y—you hopeless fool, in fact. You'd be absolutely lost without Betty, I suppose."

Subaru: "Yeah, I would. I'm utterly useless without you. And when I'm with you I'm normally useless."

Beatrice: "Which means you're still useless, in fact! Sheer discourtesy, I suppose!"

Subaru: "And now this useless fool's gonna be Emilia's Knight and gradually stop being so useless. So whenever I do start bordering on being useless, I'm putting my hopes on you to correct."

Subaru lifted himself from the chair and pat Beatrice's head.

Beatrice looked dissatisfied with his vigorous manhandling, but made no motion to stop him, and voiced not a single complaint.

Subaru: "-----"

After sating himself with Beatrice pats, Subaru slowly turned to present her his back. And surely she understood what it meant.

She took a faint breath, readying herself.

Beatrice: "—Hiyaah, in fact!"

Subaru: “———!”

With an adorable shout, the noise of her palm echoed through the room. The impact from her small hand stung more than Subaru had expected. And an even greater shock ran from his back into his whole body.

Subaru: “Man, you’re surprisingly strong.”

Beatrice: “I didn’t walk around carrying big, heavy books every day for nothing, I suppose.”

Beatrice’s bragging made him think back on her time in the Library. Why yes, Beatrice had always been reading books massive enough to conceal her small frame. Today was where she would showcase the effects of constantly bearing all that weight.

Though he didn’t know if muscle workouts actually did anything for Spirits.

Subaru: “So we’ve unexpectedly uncovered a muscle magician. Big Beako²⁰⁶.”

Beatrice: “I suspect you just used an incredibly terrible epithet on me, in fact.”

Subaru: “Just your imagination. And man, that fired me up. Thanks.”

Beatrice: “...You’re my Contractor, so of course I would do this, I suppose.”

Blushing slightly, Beatrice averted her gaze from Subaru. It made him want to pat her again. But before he could reach out to her——

Clind: “——Natsuki-sama, the time is near. Preparations.”

——Clind knocked on the door and peered in, summoning him. With the seconds looming in closer, he gulped from the tension. But his limbs and face felt less rigid than he had expected. The pent-up tension loosened him up in a good way, and he quietly sang the praises of Beatrice’s unexpectedly effective slap.

Clind: “A seat has been prepared for you as well, Beatrice-sama. As I shall also be humbly attending, I would hold the greatest of appreciation supposing that you may accept my presence. Understanding.”

²⁰⁶ https://youtu.be/U8K_0tZoibQ. If you know, you know. Is spoilerless.

Subaru: “Okay, got it. Please don’t laugh if I mess up.”

Clind: “As you command. Solemnity.”

Clind awaited outside the door to escort Subaru, who sighed and clicked his neck. He glanced back to Beatrice, unsure of what to say.

Subaru: “Well, I’m off.”

Beatrice: “As you should be, in fact.”

It was a simple exchange, but it was enough. Her words and actions had already given him more than enough.

Beatrice: “—Subaru.”

But at the very end of the end, Beatrice halted Subaru one last time. Just before he left the room, Subaru glanced back to a red-faced Beatrice.

Beatrice: “That outfit looks great on you, I suppose.”

And with that, she supplied him with the last bit of confidence he needed.

One Day II Final Chapter - Nonsense Dance Under the Moonlight

Light Novel Adaptation found in Volume 15, Ending Chapter “Offbeat Steps Under the Moonlight”, Parts
1-3

Original Web Novel Chapter – Complete

Original Translation by SummaryAnon – Complete, Page 66

—Subaru had been in this hall before, but it looked nothing like how he remembered it.

Candelabra lined the red carpet. The flickering of their crimson flames submerged the room in further formality, prompting everyone in attendance to straighten their posture.

Almost all the important people of the mansion stood evenly by the wall. Which meant not only the main players, but also some attendants from the Milord household were in presence.

Assembling only people relevant to Subaru meant monopolizing the assembly with his in-group. Even he understood that many more people must play witness to this event. But, having said that, should they truly have brought all the Ryuzu doubles along?

Ryuzu nodded at him, telling him not to worry about it, but of course it was going to bear on his mind. Although he knew that the girls were harmless unless directed, the uncertainty over what they might possibly do unsettled him.

Though, everyone else shared that same anxiety, but regarding Subaru instead.

There were so many points worthy of ridicule among the people here. All the main players were primly dressed in formalwear, which was hilarious.

Disregarding Roswaal and Annerose, who seemed used to their outfits— Otto and Garfiel looked even more awkward in their getups than Subaru. And ignoring how Garfiel's face was jumbled up in a scowl, irked by his stuffy collar, Otto had not even noticed how blatantly awkward he looked. Guy's a riot.

The servants included Frederica and Clind, who were always in formalwear. Subaru did have some qualms about Ram, who stood with them in her maid outfit as if it was entirely reasonable. But once he saw what was beside her, his breath hitched.

A blue-haired girl, seated in a chair.

Her eyes were closed. Naturally. She was still asleep. Subaru resented how considerate Ram had been to bring her here, and have her attend the ceremony. Subaru resented how Ram smirked at him, announcing that she had been the one who had proposed it.

Subaru looked further along to find Petra gazing at him, finely dressed much like he was, with pride. Her dress amplified her splendor, and she shone brightly enough to match Annerose and Beatrice. She was meant to be a simple village girl, so how would you even explain her composure?

Beatrice wore the same outfit as always, but her expression towards Subaru was gentle. Her flushed cheeks reminded him of their exchange in the dressing room, which made embarrassment rise in Subaru as well.

And standing before him—

Subaru: “———”

—Was a silver-haired girl, waiting for Subaru. In her ceremonial outfit, Emilia enchanted Subaru with a completely new kind of brilliance.

Her silver hair shimmered like moonlight, and her amethyst eyes glimmered like jewels. Her face was tantalizingly beautiful as she pursed her lips, apparently tense about this vital ceremony. The outfit amplified the purity that Subaru usually felt in Emilia, hallowed as a priestess' dressing, lined with sublime gold that burned the nobility and seriousness of this ritual into one's consciousness.

The instant that Subaru sighted her, everything in his head fell hush. The last vestiges of his bubbling emotions dispersed, and everything except Emilia disappeared from his mind.

He was absolutely not going to make a mockery of this ceremony, or the people watching.

What did he need to do? Who did he need to be looking at? Where did his heart lay? There was no need to tell him. He already knew.

Subaru: “-----”

Nobody instructed him; his feet took the step forward. His footsteps made no sound upon the rich carpet. He forgot the weight of the knightly blade at his hip, focused with passion holding him aloft, but calm as a resting sea, as he approached Emilia.

Even through the storm of onlooking gazes, his heart remained unshakable. The only thing to cast ripples in Subaru’s heart, in this instant, was Emilia.

He drew near to her, close enough to touch her.

She stood on a dais, her tantalizingly beautiful cheeks rigid. Subaru knelt before her. With his knee to the ground, he bowed his head. All the ceremonial customs that Garfiel had relayed to him took instant command of his body. He kept his eyes closed as her intense gaze stared down at him.

He could almost forget to breathe in this atmosphere. Pleasant stress played on his skin as he looked up, and he took the sword from his waist. He reverently lifted the weighty blade, unsheathing it horizontally before his chest.

Light from the candles washed over the steel, lighting Subaru and Emilia’s eyes equally bright.

Subaru: “-----”

Emilia: “-----”

The beauty of the unsheathed blade burned itself into Subaru’s eyes as he presented it to Emilia. She witnessed the sword cast before her. Her lips trembled with some form of sentiment.

But she instantly asserted control over the words before they could spill, and she held herself firm beneath the surge of emotion. Her pale fingers touched the sword. She slowly lifted the heavy thing, until its tip pointed towards the ceiling.

Illustration from Volume 15, coloring by Setowi (source)

Emilia was beautiful as she held the sword aloft. Subaru restrained his desires to witness the sight, bowing his head, and closing his eyes.

What was presented to Emilia was the sword, the pride of the Knight, alongside his being and his neck, which are those of the Knight.

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “———”

A Knight devoted their life to their Master.

Subaru’s posture illustrated this devotion, making Emilia’s lips and eyes waver. But her hesitation only lasted a moment. Her pursed lips and focused gaze carried not the slightest indecision.

The point of the sword descended upon Subaru’s left shoulder. She rested the flat of the blade on his shoulders, and its weight was enough to almost make him cry out. The pressure bearing on him was nothing physical, but mental.

Perhaps this sensation was the one that every Knight must bear, that thing called “pride”. In this exact instant, Natsuki Subaru finally understood it.

The point of the blade moved to his right shoulder. He felt the weight identically, but the coolness of the blade remained with him this time. Of course. This was when the ceremony’s most important moment would begin.

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “———”

Silence fell upon the hall.

No. The hall had been silent so far. The silence until now had been steeped in a strange tension, ardent and loud.

But the silence in this instant carried a new flame.

Absent of tension, absent of zeal, absent of anything, this silence was legitimate.

A quiet that fell equally upon the heart of Emilia, of Subaru, of everyone in attendance. Only one person had been granted the right to shatter it.

Emilia: “—To the sun that gazes over the radiant world, to the stars that watch the realm in its slumber. To the winds, to the waters, to the earth, to the light, to the Spirits residing in everything.”

The silence shattered.

Emilia’s lips sung the ceremonial rite.

Emilia: “—To the grand world that received you, that nurtured you, that delivered you.”

Trembling. His heart was trembling.

His teeth did not feel to sit right. What was his heart having trouble with? It irritated him to even question his mental turmoil. All he wanted to do in this moment was to drown himself in the chime of that bell.

Emilia: “—To the pride that supports you, that you built, that you fostered.”

He felt the heat in the gaze upon him compound. The passion burning inside him was ready to combust.

His heart thumped wildly, maniacally, as he regardless waited for the question.

Emilia: “—To everything that watches over you, to the world that raised you, to the pride that supports you, let your way cast no shame. Without fear, without dread, without doubt, be true as you are in your heart.”

The rite ended. The question was coming.

It would end the ceremony. Not even Subaru knew the answer to this question. However,

Emilia: “—With your will always strong, and as everything that surrounds you does, will you swear to protect me from this moment forth?”

—His heart did know how to answer Emilia’s question.

Subaru: “To the sun, to the stars, to the world, to my pride— and...”

He would announce his gratitude and determination to everything that had been stated in the rites. Before he made the pledge, he thought of people who he assuredly must thank.

And so, the words flowed naturally from his lips.

Subaru: “—To my mother and my father, I swear.”

Emilia: “——”

Subaru: “I will protect you. I will realize your wishes— My name is Natsuki Subaru.”

He raised his head.

The sword remained at his right cheek. But its gleam failed to catch his eye. The only thing he saw was that brilliant amethyst, gazing back at him.

Subaru: “Emilia. I am your only knight.”

Emilia: “—Mhm.”

He said the words, and she voiced her answer. Emilia’s eyes flooded with emotion.

But she managed to keep anything from spilling as she lifted the sword from Subaru’s shoulder. She fixed its alignment and presented it back to him.

He respectfully accepted it in both his hands, and sheathed it in its scabbard. Subaru returned the blade to his hip as he looked up at Emilia, still kneeling.

He saw Emilia give a slight nod, and stood up. And then,

Subaru: “I’m late in saying this, but Emilia-tan, you look mega sexycute in that outfit.”

Emilia: “You dummy.”

—Shattering the majesty of the ceremony, Emilia poked out her tongue, red-faced.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Many dishes lined the table in the banquet hall.

Social standing and class presented no issue as everyone present at the accolade chatted with each other, turning the buffet into something of a get-together.

Subaru: “I just went through one of the most stressful things of my life, and look at you, having all the fun.”

He watched the banquet from the terrace outside, bathed in the night wind. A plate of food from the table and a drink rested on the nearby railing, but the swell from before had yet to pass.

He was having trouble getting any food or drink down his throat.

The hot flush from his neck upwards wasn’t going away.

His stomach told him that he was hungry, but his chest was too full for anything to get through.

Subaru: “———”

In the corner of his eye, he saw Petra dancing at the head of the hall in her dress. It was the kind of dance being done in festivals taking place in Arlam Village, but with Petra’s take on it, and with her proficiency, it was certainly fit for a noble’s mansion.

She pulled a blushing Beatrice along with her, forcing her into a shoddy dance. Though she tried desperately to stay apathetic and expressionless, Subaru spotted how her ears and nose trembled, unable to hold it in.

As always, it was Petra dragging helpless little Beatrice into it.

Subaru’s cheeks relaxed as he took his glass. He had managed to secure enough composure to at least wet his tongue. Though, he was not ready to reach for Garfiel and Frederica’s pie just yet.

???: “—There you are, Subaru.”

Subaru leaned on the bannister, staring up at the sky, when a voice called him. He looked down to find a moon pixie, her beauty only embellished beneath its light.

Subaru: “Oh no, wait, it’s Emilia-tan. Thought it was an angel.”

Emilia: “You’re saying weird stuff again. Are you drunk?”

Subaru: “I’m still underage so no, I’m not drinking. If I’m drunk on anything, then it’s on the atmosphere and my own ego.”

Emilia: “See, so you are drunk.”

Emilia giggled, and Subaru had to furrow his brows at that.

He saw her pale skin peeking out from beneath her neat dress—and the flush on her neck and cheeks, which made him reach an opinion on her current state.

Subaru: “The heck, Emilia-tan. You go asking me if I’m drunk, when it looks like you’re who’s been drinking.”

Emilia: “I haven’t been drinking. They just gave me some punch. I never drink alcohol and go all weird and funny.”

Subaru: “Man, you’re cute.”

Emilia pouted, completely forgetting the seriousness of the ceremony. Meaning that this right here was just a completely normal adorable girl.

Emilia: “So, Subaru. What are you doing alone out here?”

Subaru: “Well, I already told you. I’m drunk on the atmosphere and my ego.”

It was a frivolous reply, but not a completely inaccurate one, either. What was there to call this but going out into the night alone, moping, unable to vent? Not that he could divulge his feelings to anyone so easily.

Emilia: “Do you regret it...?”

Subaru: “Absolutely not. Gonna be hearing none of that, Emilia.”

Emilia: “Mhm, I’m sorry for that. Sorry. But I’m happy too.”

Her cheeks still flushed from alcohol, Emilia took a step closer to Subaru.

She leaned on the bannister beside him. Their shoulders were close enough to touch, and even with clothes between them, Subaru’s body flared hotter.

Emilia: “Subaru. I apologize that the accolade came out of nowhere. I was ready the whole time, so I thought you knew about it too.”

Subaru: “No, I’m probably just an idiot for not realizing. Thinking back, you did keep asking me if I had practiced, but I just came up with bullshit answers to brush it off every time.”

Emilia had assumed that Subaru was aware, and had been regularly checking on his progress. Subaru had simply never realized it, getting through the conversations with frivolities as they came, never understanding what Emilia had been trying to say, while devoting himself to other things.

And besides, this whole accolade thing was—

Subaru: “That bastard Roswaal’s fault. Actually, almost everything’s been his fault lately. Is he trying to humiliate me? He’s been going seriously overboard this last while.”

Emilia: “I kinda think Roswaal’s always been like that... But, yes, it does feel like he’s been provoking you more than he used to. Maybe he wants your attention.”

Subaru: “That’s a terrifying thought, Emilia-tan.”

Subaru’s attention would only make Roswaal an even more hopeless person, so he would rather not have that. Subaru grimaced at the surprisingly possible idea, and Emilia laughed, waving her hand easily.

Emilia: “I’m just joking. I think Roswaal doesn’t know how he should act now that we know about his plotting. I’m sure that, in a bit, he’ll go back to being like before.”

Subaru: “Going back to «being like before» sounds like he wouldn’t have learned anything at all, but... Well, it’s better than him changing on us and leaving us lost on how to respond.”

It might seem like a half-hearted decision, but Subaru would agree with it for now.

With that part of the conversation over, Emilia took a sip from her glass. She had it with her the entire time, and if Subaru's guess was correct, then it was the alcoholic kind of punch.

It felt like Emilia was getting more intoxicated, which both scared and interested him.

Emilia: "Say, Subaru."

Subaru: "Hm, what? The alcohol's heating you up so it's time to get undressed? Sure, but better not do it here. Okay, let's find somewhere else. Off we go."

Emilia: "Sorry. I'm not entirely sure what you're saying. No, we're staying here."

Emilia shot Subaru a slight glare. It made him shrink back and lower his head, when she jerked her chin towards the banquet hall.

Emilia: "They look like they're having fun."

Subaru: "Yeeeeeah, they do. It's a noble mansion but even the servants are welcome, feels really cozy. As a member of the lower-middle class peasantry, I'd say it's basically the ideal sight."

Emilia: "Mhm, I agree. I think it's reeeally wonderful."

Subaru noticed the affection and desire in her amethyst eyes.

It was possible that Subaru and Emilia were not witnessing the same picture. Emilia was surely seeing a peaceful scene, absent of any class-based or race-based discrimination, while Subaru only perceived the superficial layer of things. Their viewpoints differed completely.

They were seeing the same thing, but thought differently. And Subaru believed that discrepancy was fine.

Emilia: "What's going on, Subaru? You look reeeally gentle."

Subaru: "I wonder. Maybe I'm just happy that I'm here, seeing the same things as you, Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "Really? Then I'm happy that you're seeing things the same way."

Subaru: “I don’t know. I might not be. But I think it’s alright for us to differ.”

Emilia glanced at Subaru. He felt her gaze but kept looking straight ahead, his cheeks relaxing into a slight smile. Emilia noticed him smiling, and nodded.

But something happened right when they reach their understanding—

Subaru: “Oh, goddamn Otto. He’s overdoing it, I doubt he can even hold his liquor.”

In the middle of the hall, Garfiel had challenged Otto to drink a full glass of expensive-looking alcohol in one go. Otto slammed the glass back down to the table, having beautifully chugged the whole thing, to the applause of the onlooking crowd.

But Otto’s face flushed bright red before swiftly paling dead white. Following that change in colors worthy of a traffic light, Garfiel immediately carried Otto and rushed out of the hall.

Subaru: “Guess they’re going to the toilet.”

Emilia: “Will Otto-kun be okay? Um, he kinda looked like how the dogs in the forest do when they eat poison mushrooms, just now...”

Subaru: “You should know what’s up as an adult, now that you’ve drunk yourself to your limit, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “Is that how it works?”

Subaru: “No, I mean, I don’t know.”

He was underage.

And how expensive had that liquor that Otto just drank been, and was probably regurgitating as they spoke? Subaru had doubts that anything cheap or mass-produced was going to be included in this banquet.

Subaru shot Roswaal a glance. Perceptive as he was, Roswaal caught the look and raised his glass to Subaru. The Margrave in his clown make-up easily ingested the same alcohol that had defeated Otto. Either his dignity was winning, or he was just used to the liquor.

Emilia: "...Subaru. I want to tell you something."

Subaru: "What a coincidence. I want you to tell me something too."

Breaking the silence that had fallen between them, Emilia whispered quietly enough to Subaru that only he would hear. He nodded, and while still leaning on the railing, adjusted his posture.

Emilia turned to face him too, leaving them gazing at each other within breathing range. Subaru reflexively stepped backwards, but—

Emilia: "No running."

Emilia's hand grabbed him, stopping his retreat.

The step he had taken winded up as a half-step, putting them even closer than before. Subaru stumbled forward and bumped onto Emilia's forehead. He hurriedly tried to draw back, but Emilia's grip on his ceremonial dress prevented him.

Subaru: "E—Emilia-tan? I'm happy about this situation but, it's kinda a little tense for a conversation..."

Emilia: "I'm tense too. This is my first time having such an important talk with anyone. So, we're even."

Subaru: "N—no, I think I'm winning here..."

He desperately tried to smile and brush it off, but Emilia would not let him go.

Emilia was warm against him as he attempted to at least ease his own stress, and awkwardly moved to hide Emilia from the banquet hall.

It was obvious that they were hugging looking at them sideways. If Subaru shuffled over a little, then it should just look like he had his hands on the railing, staring up at the night sky and spinning poems.

Subaru: "Ok, so those worries are dealt with, now tell me anything."

Emilia: "...Okay, here's a talk between me and my Knight-sama. It's about why Roswaal invited me to participate in the Royal Selection."

Subaru: "———"

Emilia had never discussed this with Subaru before. And it had to have something to do with the Trial, which had so consistently discouraged her.

Subaru swallowed his breath and looked down at Emilia. Their gazes crashed into one another. Seeing himself reflected in Emilia's eyes, Subaru nodded with determination.

Emilia: "Before Elior Forest was frozen, I used to live there with my Mother and... the other elves."

It was a tale of happy memories, a tale of sorrowful memories.

While it arrived in hiccups and pauses, Emilia sincerely told Subaru the story.

Emilia did not know her parents, and Fortuna had loved Emilia in their place. The village had kindly accepted them when they had nowhere to go. And then there had been the organization called the Witch Cult, secretly helping the village, and this character named Juice.

It had been a limited world, but one that showered Emilia in love and kindness. And all was ruined on the day that Elior Forest froze.

The Witch Cult acted brutally as the Witch named Pandora and the Archbishop appeared. The arrival of the Witchbeast Black Serpent, and Fortuna and Juice's tragedy. Emilia kept her mother's promise, and so lost both her and the village. Then came Puck, who she met upon awakening after a long time in the ice.

Emilia: "Puck said he had always been waiting for me, that he had always been looking for me. Then he stayed with me, protecting me, just like he said he would. Even now, he's inside this magic crystal, waiting to be woken up... I can tell."

Subaru: "But you can't speak with him, can you?"

Emilia: "He's still asleep. But it's not because he's rejecting making a Contract with me. I do not think this spellstone will work as his Anchor if he's awake. It needs to be a higher grade, colorless one. If only I could find just a container, and then something to trigger it, I know he will come back."

A blue spellstone was suspended as a pendant around Emilia's neck.

It was a piece of the massive spellstone that had sealed Ryuzu Meyer. It proved insufficient for holding Puck, and the sleeping Spirit could not communicate with the outside.

As if his help during the Garfiel fight had been really, truly his final contribution.

Subaru: "I understand what's going on with Puck. But, about the Royal Selection?"

Emilia: "Me and Puck spent all that time in the frozen forest. Sometimes, I went to the nearby towns too, but they weren't really very welcoming."

Subaru couldn't even imagine how alienated she had been by how that "weren't really very" was. And it was doubtful that Emilia had ever anticipated that she would speak of it.

Emilia: "Then Roswaal came... I think not even a year has passed since then. But it was so sudden that it left me and Puck reeeally shocked."

Subaru: "Well I'd be shocked too, if a guy in clown make-up popped up outta nowhere."

Emilia: "That's true, but what shocked us was that he was in this inaccessible forest. I was on my way back from the village, and he was just standing there waiting for me. And he was playing dumb like always, like, «weeeeeeeeeeeelcome back»..."

Subaru: "Well..."

That would be certainly surprising. It was too late to be commenting on Roswaal's mean-spiritedness, but Subaru could imagine the shock he had given Emilia and Puck at the time.

Emilia: "Puck got so mad... He went from morning to night, just fighting with Roswaal. Thinking back on it, it's a good thing he didn't freeze Roswaal solid."

Subaru: "I mean your smile's adorable, but that's not really something to smile about."

Emilia: "I guess. Anyway, Puck and Roswaal told each other what they wanted while they were fighting, and they managed to start a discussion..."

Subaru: "And Roswaal lured you in by proposing to melt the forest...?"

Emilia's eyes widened. Subaru smiled wryly at her reaction.

Subaru: "It's obvious from how the story was going. And I happened to hear something along those lines before. But, ya know..."

But there had been a shift in Emilia's awareness since then. Before, she had said that she was incapable of freezing Elixir Forest. That she was unable to thaw the ice, even with Puck's help. However,

Subaru: "If you froze the forest, can't you unfreeze it?"

Emilia: "...Mhm, I had that thought too. But I doubt I can."

Subaru: "How come?"

Emilia: "I just can't reach the same power that I had in my memories."

It was an anxious, but confident statement. Subaru furrowed his brows.

"The power I had in my memories". If what Emilia had said was accurate, then that meant power beyond human knowledge. Not even this Witch who called herself Pandora could find a chance to fight Emilia's assault back.

So how come Emilia did not possess that power, considering she had regained her memories?

Subaru: "But you fought the Great Rabbit without backing down an inch."

Emilia: "I don't need Puck or the Micro Spirits' help to cast magic anymore, but that's all. I still can't draw that power out."

Subaru: "-----"

Lamenting her powerlessness, Emilia clenched her fist and weakly shook her head. Her expression, ashamed of her inadequacy, instead shamed Subaru for feeling dejected.

Emilia, of all people, was frustrated about herself. Subaru knew this, so he should not be capable of casting any criticism on her.

And it wasn't even a question that he wanted Emilia to be strong, really.

Subaru: “Ok, no more self-blame. Back to the topic. We’ll agree that you cannot melt the ice... so how’s Roswaal thinking to do it?”

Emilia: “...”

Subaru: “If you can’t do it and Puck can’t do it, then Roswaal shouldn’t be able to either. He may be an amazing magician, but he can’t be ten or twenty times stronger than you. So, how?”

Emilia: “It’s not that Roswaal himself is going to melt the ice. But Roswaal knows something that might melt the ice... All he did was tell me about it.”

Subaru: “Something, that might melt it?”

Something that could thaw the forest that not even the Witch of Glaciation could melt, not even with a Spirit’s help, and not even with ultimate magical power— What could it be?

Emilia: “Dragon’s Blood.”

Subaru: “———”

Emilia: “The Blood of the Dragon, that grants bountiful harvests upon the land, and cures corrupt ground. He said it could definitely thaw the forest.”

Subaru: “Emilia, but that means...”

Killing the Dragon. Wasn’t that right?

She meant to sacrifice the Dragon, which had always protected the Kingdom of Lugunica, for the sake of her forest?

For an instant, the incredible question rushed through Subaru’s mind. But,

Emilia: “No, Subaru. I only need one drop. And the Dragon’s Blood has been used to revitalize the soil during a famine in Lugunica before. I read that in a history book, so it’s definitely true.”

Subaru: “What, so... No, that seriously freaked me out for a second. I mean if we did something like kill the Dragon...”

Would that not free the Witch, sealed by the Dragon's power?

Subaru: "-----"

Anxiety clenched in Subaru's chest, and he forgot to breathe.

The Witches he had met at Echidna's tea party. And the Witch of Envy, who saw him off at the end. Subaru had not forgotten her. He would never forget his resolve from their last instant of goodbye.

But she must not be let free.

She must not be loosed on the world. His instincts assuredly told him so.

Emilia: "The royalty of Lugunica get a chance to talk to the Dragon when they form the Covenant. And some drops of the Blood of the Divine Dragon Volcanica have been kept in the palace, from back then. Once I become Ruler, I want to use that power."

Subaru: "So that's why you're participating..."

Emilia: "...I told you before. The reason I'm participating is reeeally selfish. And that's my selfish reason."

He could hear a smile in her words, but an uneasy one. And her eyes did waver with anxiety as she looked up at him.

She looked scared of what he would say, and what he would think of her resolve. It seemed he was allowed to believe that he was such an important figure to her, that he could make her feel this uneasy.

Subaru: "Don't worry, Emilia-tan. I'm not gonna get disillusioned over something like that."

Emilia: "...Subaru."

Subaru: "You say it's self-centered, but you're not looking for your own gain. You know how to save people you want to save, and instead of dirtying your hands with something like theft, you have decided to use legitimate methods. There is nothing to criticize about that."

Subaru gave her a reassuring smile. But her expression remained anxious.

Subaru knew. This was not what she wanted to hear. If he was going to give her something closer to what she was really looking for, then---

Subaru: "Are you afraid because you think your motivation is inferior to the other candidates'?"

Emilia: "—Hk."

Subaru: "That's a case of grass's greener on the other side. Crusch-san is an amazing person with an amazing goal, yeah, but think about Anastasia-san and Priscilla. Their reasons are nothing worthy of praise."

Greed and ego. That was what motivated them to participate.

And Subaru had not been there to hear it, but what venerable reason could Felt give to be participating in the Selection?

Emilia's desire to save people was not in any way inferior.

Subaru: "And no matter what you wanted at the start, it's different now, isn't it?"

Emilia: "...How can you tell?"

Subaru: "Because you were looking so peacefully at the banquet hall. It's plain for anyone to see."

Unfolding in the Milord banquet hall was a sight where humans and demi-humans, nobles and servants and commoners, all interacted without any division between race or class.

Subaru had called it ideal, and Emilia had gazed at it with longing. Subaru knew exactly how the fire in Emilia's heart was to be kindled.

Subaru: "If your goal is to see that again, I'm helping you. I agree that it's wonderful. No one's gonna stop you from adding that onto your list of reasons for trying."

Emilia: "You'll... really, help me?"

Subaru: “What do you think I just swore to you? Stop worrying, I want you to rely on me first before anyone else. Whenever you want help, I’ll help you, and when you’re unsure, we’ll solve the problem together.”

Emilia: “——”

Emilia swallowed her breath, her eyes wavering.

—What should she say? Her trembling lips could not clearly state what she felt.

Emilia: “—Mm.”

So she muttered only that. And smiled.

—Subaru thought that was all he needed.

Subaru: “Alright, my doubts are all vanished.”

With that, Subaru took in what was left in the glass on the railing. Then he grabbed his thoroughly cooled meat pie, tossed it in his mouth, and chewed. The flavor did not fade even when cold, and the pie just melted in his mouth. Indeed, it was a masterpiece that lived up to Garfiel’s boasting.

Emilia: “Subaru, you’ll choke if you eat so quickly.”

Subaru: “I’ll savor every bite if you feed it to me.”

Emilia: “I feel like I’ve done that somewhere before, when you were exhausted...”

Subaru grinned somewhat sarcastically in response, and led Emilia by the hand to the hall. She looked up at the sky once, before accepting Subaru’s escort and entering the hall side-by-side with him. The party was still underway, and heated up with the honorable guests’ return.

After bringing back a drunk Otto, Garfiel was in agony at the hands of Frederica and Ram’s joint sneak attack, denying him his attempts to drink alcohol. Petra and Beatrice’s uncoordinated dance reached its climax. Sweat dripped from Petra’s brow, and Beatrice was determined to put in an equal effort.

Annerose looked displeased at the fact that Subaru had returned with Emilia, and Clind poked his master's puffed cheeks, aggravating her. Ryuzu and Roswaal stood next to one another, toasted to their repaired relationship, and took a sip from their glasses.

Subaru: "It's wonderful, Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "Yes. This is exactly my ideal scene. I will never forget it."

—So let's have a night to always remember.

They intruded on the two girls, dancing in the most conspicuous spot in the room. They did not know a single step, but they enjoyed themselves all the same.

Through a sea of smiles and confusion, the Knight and Witch, the new master and servant, begun their nonsense dance.

One Day II Special Part 1 - Intersecting Hopes

Has been cut from the Light Novel Adaptation

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by DiscountAnon/Nanashi-tan — Complete (4.5-8.pdf)

Crusch: “Your Highness, your humble servant will now be departing. Please take care.”

A woman respectfully bowed her head, her green hair swaying slightly, and exited through the door being held open by a few attendants. Accompanying the sound of the closing door came her sigh.

Crusch: “My apologies for troubling you, but please take care to make sure that his Highness is not uncomfortable.”

After hearing the replies of the attendants, the woman, who seemed to be suppressing her emotions, turned and strode down a red-carpeted stairway into a grand hall.

Ferris: “—Crusch-sama.”

Waiting in the hall, calling to her in an urgent tone, was an effeminate young man with round yellow eyes, cat ears, and a sly demeanor. His name was Felix Argyle, or, to most people, Ferris. He was the woman’s long-time trusted companion, as well as one of her knights.

Ferris: “Welcome back. How is Prince Fourier’s situation?”

Crusch: “Not very optimistic. His previous liveliness is entirely gone. Today, he suddenly mentioned wanting to go outside and walk in the sun. It was... painful to watch.”

Crusch Karsten shook her head, and Ferris responded with a dejected slump of his shoulders. Seeing the reaction of her flax-haired companion, Crusch spoke up again.

Crusch: “There is no need for you to feel guilt. This illness is a puzzle that the best healers of the country still cannot solve. It is not your fault.”

Ferris: “But, it’s because of Ferri’s own weakness that I cannot meet Crusch-sama’s expectations... I am deeply sorry, Crusch-sama.”

Ferris seemed less remorseful about his inability to cure the illness and more remorseful about Crusch’s grief for Fourier. As usual, he snuggled close to her, and Crusch allowed him to do so.

Crusch: “Does the course of his Highness’s... does course of the Royal Family’s disease remain unchanged?”

Ferris: “Yes, it’s the same as the previous diagnosis, although, as a healer, I don’t want to say this lightly.”

Ferris lowered both his voice and head, but continued to speak without hesitation.

Ferris: “—It is the poison of the Black Serpent. The cause of such a mysterious illness could only be from the creature we don’t know anything about.”

Crusch: “If so, then where is it now...? No, the situation at hand is more pressing. What will happen from here on?”

Ferris: “The worst case scenario is... the death of the entire Royal Family.”

Crusch: “———”

Although she had already reached this conclusion, no matter how many times she heard it, it would still be difficult to accept.

Crusch took a deep, calming breath. This was an unprecedented situation. If she lost her cool and let her feelings run loose, the crisis would never be solved. In such chaos, the only reason the Kingdom had been clinging to stability was because Crusch and the Council of Wise Men had been working with the high aristocracy to lead the kingdom forward.

The blood of the Royal Family of Lugunica was, at this very moment, facing termination.

The first victim of the disease had been First Prince Zabinel Lugunica. Originally, his illness had been diagnosed as fatigue caused overwork, but Zabinel's condition worsened severely in just a few days. Soon afterward, more members of the Royal Family fell ill in a similar fashion, and thus the anomaly of the disease was discovered.

Only those who carried the royal blood of Lugunica were affected. Upon realizing this, the castle collapsed into fierce commotion, only brought to a stop by various members of the Council of Wise Men, whose members resided in the Royal Castle. Crusch, and especially Ferris, the latter known within Lugunica as the one who sat at the peak of healing water magic and held the title of Blue, were also instrumental in this stability.

The various members of the Royal Family were taken to one location, where they were diagnosed and prepared for instant treatment. There, they found that no one, not even Ferris, could cure the disease.

In only a few days, the long-standing lineage of the Royal Family of Lugunica had been brought to the verge of extinction.

Currently, a number of leading healers were gathered, attempting to extend the lives of the Royal Family with magic, but it was merely a temporary solution. The situation of the Royal Family had been hidden from the public, but this pretense of normalcy could only last for so long.

Pondering the severity of the situation, Crusch thought of the person she had been visiting, the Fourth Prince of Lugunica, Fourier Lugunica.

Fourier and Crusch were close together in age, and Crusch, the daughter of a Duke, had been acquainted with him since childhood. Fourier, as a Prince, had difficulty finding friends of the same age, and so Crusch could be counted as one of his closest friends.

Crusch was the same way, never disliking his presence.

Fourier frequently visited the Karsten household, and liked to bring with him a number of troublesome problems to share with Crusch. His real intent was to garner the attention of the girl he liked, but Crusch had never noticed.

She had always merely regarded him as dear, kind-hearted friend who she had not minded.

Fourier, along with the rest of Lugunica's Royal Family, had no great talent as a politician. Even so, his eagerness and virtue were apparent. He was far from succeeding the throne, and his future position would probably not be one of great responsibility. And yet, he was burning with the enthusiasm to do his best at his given role.

Seeing him lying in bed, on the verge of death, tortured Crusch's heart endlessly.

Ferris: "Crusch-sama..."

Crusch's expression remained unchanged, but her eyes were filled with pain. Seeing this caused Ferris's own heart to seize as well.

Using the length of their relationship with Crusch as a criteria, Fourier had known her longer than Ferris had. Of course, Ferris, as Crusch's follower, held a greater amount of loyalty to her. Ferris was content just watching Fourier and Crusch, while burying his feelings deep in his chest.

Therefore, for Ferris, Fourier was a person who evoked several complicated emotions.

Of course, Ferris's feelings would not in any way impact Fourier's treatment or diagnosis. It would compromise Ferris's pride as a healer, as well as serve as a betrayal to Crusch, who trusted Ferris more than anyone else. However, his inability to live up to that trust and save Fourier weighed heavily on Ferris's heart.

Striding through the castle, both the master and the knight walked with heavy footsteps. Crusch thought of the past and of Fourier, while Ferris thought of his incapability and his master.

In any case, today, in the castle, neither of them could do anything. Thus, together, they prepared to leave the castle and return their residence.

???: "—Lord Bordeaux! That is different from what you'd said before!"

Crusch and Ferris, on their way to the castle gate, looked up in the direction of that sound. A little ways from the main gate was a garden, lined with a trimmed lawn and trees planted left and right. The nearby argument disrupted the peace of the quiet scenery.

Crusch couldn't help but look back at the argument occurring in the corner of the garden, between two people, one facing her and one turned away. She immediately recognized the one whose face was visible. He was a tall, bald man with a strong physique named Bordeaux Zergev, a member of Lugunica's Council of Wise Men²⁰⁷. The Council of Wise Men consisted of senior aristocrats who were responsible for the majority of the affairs of the state in Lugunica.

A post in the Council of Wise Men was gained through election, and each candidate's knowledge, heritage, contribution to the kingdom, and overall ability, would be evaluated carefully. Represented by Miklotov, they were now acting as the skeleton of the kingdom.

Bordeaux had once been a battlefield hero, and even on the Council of Wise Men was an outspoken, heavily opinionated man. He was known for his radical remarks and his attitude was enough to be ridiculed by Ferris as "always in a rage". Crusch, upon immediately succeeding her position, had been countless subjected to his remarks.

Perhaps it was because he always wore such a bullish attitude that his gloomy, withdrawn demeanor immediately caught Crusch's attention.

Ferris: "What an unusual expression for Bordeaux-sama."

Having noticed what Crusch also had, Ferris offered his own commentary. Crusch gave a nod and attempted to figure the situation out. If it were just a verbal struggle, there was no need for her to interfere, but even for a modest quarrel, the timing and place were poor.

The soldier standing by the gate, also having heard the shouting, had come to investigate as well, and upon seeing Crusch bowed his head to her, as if accepting her judgement of the situation. Crusch passed her gaze over the guard as well as Bordeaux, who had noticed that people had gathered around him.

Bordeaux, seemingly possessing the intent of leaving the field, nodded bitterly at them. Searching for the right words, he moistened his lips slightly. While watching the gesture, Crusch finally examined the person standing in front of Bordeaux.

²⁰⁷ The Kanji here is “賢人会”, and could be translated as “Council of Sages”. However, I opted to make a distinction from the term Sage/Sage Candidate which uses similar Kanji (賢人/賢人候補, respectively), just in case these are unrelated (which they very well might be).

Crusch finally realized why the other man had failed to enter her perception.

Crusch: “———”

He was a figure dressed in rags.

The true identity of these rags wrinkled and slightly dirty dark blue coat, hanging from the shoulder of a tall body and reaching to the bottom of his waist. His white hair, and the earlier sound of his voice, indicated elderliness. However, from his abundant hair, to the muscles in his back, and the broadness of his shoulders, there was no trace of the weakness associated with old age.

Despite being so prominent, the man had escaped Crusch’s attention until just now. The reason was his perfect stance. His movements were naturally elegant, and he wasted no motion. As soon as she noticed, Crusch was mesmerized.

As a warrior wielding a sword, Crusch had an ideal to strive for. The man in rags in front of her eyes embodied her ideal, serving as proof that with continuous effort and training, that ideal, that of the “apex of the art of war”, could be reached.

Ferris: “Crusch-sama?”

Crusch, who had been unconsciously drawn into a trance, was brought back by Ferris’s call, but she could not recover her previous unaffected state.

Who was that old man?

Bordeaux: “I am deeply sorry to breach our agreement, but our current situation is too dire. I hope you will understand.”

The conversation between Bordeaux and the man resumed, with Crusch standing at a loss. Bordeaux spoke with an air of finality, as if hoping to leave the conversation.

Bordeaux: “If people gather here, the situation will be made public, and trouble will occur.”

Old Man: “Wait... How can I be satisfied with those words? Why... Why did you suddenly change your mind? We’d clearly reached an agreement, and...”

Bordeaux: “It’s not your fault, it’s just a matter of the timing. We will need to delay it for a while. Again, I am sorry.”

Old Man: “But...!”

To the desperate man, Bordeaux’s words came off as hesitant and empty. The reason for Bordeaux’s secrecy was caused by a need to keep the condition of the Royal Family secret. That had taken precedent over Bordeaux’s agreement with the man, and their promise had been, at least temporarily, voided.

However, although the truth could not be spoken, it was clumsy of Bordeaux to not formulate a convincing cover-up story.

Or perhaps something in their agreement left Bordeaux unable or unwilling to lie to the man?

Was hiding facts or telling lies more dishonest? In any case, Bordeaux was unwilling to lie to the man. Bordeaux stood tall and presented his words, but the man in rags could not accept them.

Old Man: “I’ve heard the rumors of the worsening relationship with the Empire. If you are hesitant to leave the country because of that, please at least send a messenger...”

Bordeaux: “It’s not that, I would ask you to refrain from asking too much. Once things have settled down, let’s choose a different place to set up a discussion. I don’t know when that will be, but...”

Old Man: “Then it will be too late! Like I said, next month, I will have results coming in, so we will have conclusive evidence... please at least look at this and consider it.”

In response to Bordeaux’s determined attitude, the words of the man in rags became more desperate. He drew something out of his pocket, a large bundle of papers. The edges were wrinkled, and the papers themselves yellowed and speckled with dirt and blood. How important were those papers to him? Seeing how his fingers shivered while grasping it, anyone could tell at a glance. But—

Bordeaux: “—Enough!”

Bordeaux waved his hand at the papers that were held to his chest. Was it because the man had not been expecting it, or had Bordeaux added unintentional force to it? Perhaps it was the overlap of both. Whatever the reason, that action had led to a result.

Old Man: “———”

The bundle of papers left the old man’s hands and scattered across the garden. The wind, although weak, easily swept the pieces of paper through the air like white petals and scattered them over the garden.

Crusch unconsciously reached out toward them, and Bordeaux’s eyes flashed with a trace of regret. However, neither could react to the man’s immediate response.

Old Man: “Bordeaux!”

With a shout, the man in rags seized Bordeaux’s lapel and shoved him against a wall. The latter released a pained breath from the impact. Although he had been pressed against the wall, raising his large body with one arm was no small feat of strength.

Witnessing the scene, Crusch should have immediately called for assistance.

However, the aura given out by the man in rags overwhelmed her and delayed her reaction. The atmosphere seemed to turn dry, and Crusch felt her skin tingle.

As was, the man in rags drove his sharp gaze into Bordeaux.

Ferris: “Guards! Don’t just stand there, come over here! Quickly!”

A voice rose and cried out for guard, stirring Crusch back into action. Looking back, she saw that Ferris, who had watched the situation deteriorate, had raised his hands to wave the guards at the gate over, who had been frozen in shock.

Granted, they had never seen a Wise Man in danger before. Three of the guards rushed to the scene with swords drawn and surrounded Bordeaux and the man.

The atmosphere seemed to spread, and the situation grew tense, but,

Old Man: “—Apologies.”

With a word of apology, the man abruptly released Bordeaux. Bordeaux collapsed against the wall, stifling his coughing with a hand on his throat.

Although the gate soldiers were watching vigilantly, the old man widened his hands to show no resistance and stepped back slowly.

Guard: "Empty your hands and listen to our instructions!"

The guards, still recovering from their earlier embarrassment, resumed their duties and surrounded the old man. According to the law, the old man would be detained and placed under investigation.

Bordeaux: "Wait... There is no need to conduct this so formally, you can release him."

Guard: "Bordeaux-dono, I am not qualified to say this, but that will damage the reputation of the guards. Can the guards who protect the royals release such a suspicious person?"

Bordeaux: "In that case, restrain him for one night and then release him."

In response to the old man's words, Bordeaux delivered a new instruction in a regretful tone. The guards listened obediently. The old man, being escorted by the guards, turned to Crusch.

Old Man: "I am most grateful."

At the volume he had spoken, he had been only intending for Crusch to hear those words. The old man's clear blue eyes housed a shadow. Although curious, Crusch decided it would be too rude to force the guards to linger for their dialogue.

As the old man left, Crusch turned to Ferris.

Crusch: "Your quick response just now was a great help. I apologize for not reacting in time."

Ferris: "No, no, it was nothing at all. I'm just glad the situation didn't escalate. By the way... Bordeaux-sama?"

Ferris, who humbly put his finger on his lip as he turned the topic back to Bordeaux.

Bordeaux, who had recovered from his previous shock, was crouched on the ground, picking up the scattered paper. Crusch also picked up several fallen pieces near her feet and handed them to Bordeaux.

Bordeaux: "...Thank you, Karsten-kyo²⁰⁸. I apologize for that unsightly scene."

Crusch: "Not at all. Seeing a serious Bordeaux is so rare that I should have paid a viewing fee. That said, could you answer something?"

Bordeaux: "-----"

Bordeaux, rearranging the collected papers, responded with silence. Judging that to be an affirmative reply, Crusch looked towards the direction in which the old man had left.

Crusch: "That man just now, was he an acquaintance of Bordeaux-dono?"

Bordeaux: "—He's an old friend. No, more like a battlefield comrade. A former battlefield comrade, that's what he would accept."

Crusch: "It is not my place to pry, but if you cherish this relationship, you should aim to repair it as soon as possible. Although, you should choose a better occasion next time."

What had caused trouble here had been the time and place. It was the old man who had attacked Bordeaux, but it was Bordeaux's poor choices that had caused it. Seeing the Wind of Regret blowing by Bordeaux however, Crusch did not hold him in disregard.

Bordeaux: "...I do not know if I can face him again, although I do not consider choosing my loyalty to the throne of Lugunica over my gratitude and debt toward him a mistake."

Crusch: "I see."

Crusch was well-aware that Bordeaux would not listen to her advice, so there was little disappointment. Rather, his clumsy stubbornness was even a little admirable. If she said so however, she would certainly anger him like usual.

Bordeaux: "Did you visit his Highness?"

Crusch: "I am returning from visiting his Highness Prince Fourier. Ferris's diagnosis is not optimistic."

²⁰⁸ Note by DiscountAnon: "The «-kyo» honorific apparently equates the English «sir»".

Bordeaux: “That is as expected... While you are here, I should warn you that Leip Barielle is plotting something, although it probably will not amount to anything major. Still, be on guard.”

Crusch: “Baron Barielle... I will keep that in mind.”

She nodded at Bordeaux’s advice. It was distraction from the main topic, but even if she kept pursuing, she knew Bordeaux would not reply. As the conversation ended, Bordeaux held the bundle of collected paper to his chest and left the garden.

Together, Crusch and Ferris breathed a sigh of relief.

Ferris: “Ahhhhhh~, that was a really tense atmosphere. We saw a really rarely seen side of the always tough Bordeaux-sama, though. He would be so much cuter if he were always like this.”

Crusch: “That would be inconvenient, since Miklotov-dono, always calm, and Bordeaux-dono, always in motion, are quite adept at handling the Council of Wise Men together, but...”

The commotion just now, what had been it about? Of course, Crusch wanted to know the details of it, but what had caught her attention more was the old man who had been taken away.

If she could, she would like to learn his true identity.

Ferris: “Anywaysyyy~! Crusch-sama, Ferri would rather not say it himself, but I think that I’m the one that knows Crusch-sama better than anyone else.”

Crusch: “Hmm? That was abrupt... There’s no need to mention such an obvious statement. You are irreplaceably important to me, so why suddenly bring that up now?”

Ferris: “Hearing that evaluation, I think I can go one step further today.”

Ferris stuck out a red tongue with a mischievous expression. Crusch could not tell what he was thinking or planning. The Wind blowing by Ferris was smoky, as if covering up his true feelings, and Crusch had always been unable to discern them.

Crusch Karsten’s Divine Protection of Wind Reading allowed her to see the flow of the Wind. That Wind caught the ripples of feelings of others, and, in general, Crusch had no issue interpreting it. However, in rare cases, she encountered those like Ferris, who were skilled at hiding their emotions.

In Ferris's case, due to their long association, Crusch could read the Wind to a certain degree. There were others, like the Wise Man Miklotov, who could hide their feelings easily due to their many years of experience. Crusch labelled her negotiation technique as a type that was useless against experts at maintaining their composure.

As usual, Ferris did not let Crusch read his emotions, so once he put on that air, Crusch had no choice but to hold her hands together and wait for his answer, per their norm. But she was certain that she could put her full trust in Ferris. And, this time, the trust that their bond had created had again demonstrated its strength.

Ferris: "I'm thinking that Crusch-sama is surely wondering about the old man from just now."

Crusch: "Hmm."

Ferris: "I've already prepared this for you."

Watching Ferris, who was smiling, and seeing what he was holding in his fingertips, Crusch widened her eyes, then suddenly loosened her lips into a smile.

Crusch: "You are truly the one who knows my heart best."

Between the faintly smiling Ferris's fingers rested a single piece of paper, one that he had neglected to hand Bordeaux, one that was waiting to be received while being shaken by the wind.

One Day II Special Part 2 - The Day Before the Selection

Light Novel Adaptation partially found in EX Volume 1, Chapter “The Dream of the Lion King”, Part 6

Original Web Novel Chapter — Complete

Original Translation by DiscountAnon — Complete (4.5-9.pdf)

Crusch: “My deepest apologies, but I have read your secret report.”

Crusch, gazing across the iron bars of the cell, felt as if she were looking somewhere incredibly far away. The old man sat in the center, legs crossed and posture erect.

The rags which he had worn in the garden were neatly folded and placed on the ground. From his posture, Crusch could see that her initial assessment was correct; he was a highly trained warrior. However, his hollow cheeks and faded hair also gave a sense of unhealthiness.

Old Man: “———”

Crusch: “It’s a document assessing the pros and cons of... Oh, excuse me. My apologies for beginning so abruptly without first introducing myself.”

Meeting his silent gaze, Crusch placed one hand on her chest and straightened her posture. The dusty air in the prison seemed to stir with her movements. This change in atmosphere was rather eye-catching nature, and the eyes of old man’s gaze changed slightly in nature.

Crusch: “I am the head of the Karsten family, Duchess Crusch Karsten. Earlier, I had come across you²⁰⁹ and Bordeaux in the palace garden, and I was curious about your argument.”

Old Man: “Duchess... Karsten?”

²⁰⁹ Translation note by DiscountAnon: “Crusch uses a really formal you, it’s more or less the equivalent of «sir».”

Upon hearing Crusch's introduction, the old man's expression changed again, this time to one of simultaneous comprehension and confusion.

Old Man: "Should the head of the Karsten family not be Meckart-sama?"

Crusch: "Meckart Karsten is my father. Two years ago, father passed the position to me, and now I hold the position of Duchess. However, you seem privy to some of our internal affairs... But what you know is probably from several years ago. I am afraid that the reason for the earlier dispute may stem from here."

Old Man: "Were the officials too lacking and so I must be properly investigated by the Duke?"

Crusch: "In truth, I have no intention of prying into the dispute between you and Bordeaux-sama. That is just the pretext I used to convince the guards to let me down here."

In the face of the old man's ironic expression, Crusch could only smile bitterly.

Currently, they were at dungeon near the Royal Knights' barracks, which was located in the immediate vicinity of the castle. Crusch's investigation had led her here, and she had devised a suitable excuse for the guards to let her in. Right now, Ferris was probably still chatting with the guards, stalling for time.

Old Man: "You used the term excuse, so is there another reason you are here? Is this about my disrespect to Bordeaux-sama?"

Crusch: "...Of course not, Bordeaux-sama would never allow me do so. He is a firm believer in taking responsibility for his own actions, and, as such, you will be released tomorrow morning. However, if what happened today happens again, it may not be so easy to cover up."

Old Man: "Those reckless actions will not happen again. The dispute in the garden happened due to my own immaturity, but this cold dungeon has cooled my head down."

The words were intoned with a smile, but the old man's expression did not change. Even so, that self-aware admission was completely sincere. The man felt no anger toward Bordeaux, only self-deprecation. However, in that self-deprecation, Crusch saw an unusually dense, almost overwhelming emotion being carried by the Wind.

—Anger. That feeling was undoubtedly anger.

The rage that had taken root at the old man's heart was strong enough to melt even steel. With a sober, razor sharp gaze, the old man looked at Crusch. And, the cause of that all-consuming rage,

Crusch: "—The White Whale."

Old Man: "——"

Crusch: "The expression in your eyes has changed."

The moment he heard Crusch's whisper, dark anger flashed through the old man's eyes. It disappeared quickly, without leaving a trace, but it did not escape the gaze of the expectant Crusch. She presented the paper she had taken into the prison, the same paper that had been scattered and left uncollected in the garden, and stepped over the metal fence to continue the conversation with the old man.

Crusch: "Like I said at first, my apologies. I have already read through this part of your report. The rest I handed the Bordeaux-sama. This is only a missing piece of it."

Old Man: "...Bordeaux-sama is disagreeable as always. I pointed out a long time ago that he should watch his attitude, it does not seem like he has listened at all."

Crusch: "That is merely a part of his nature. It's difficult to imagine a perfect Bordeaux-sama, after all."

Old Man: "It's just as you say."

For the first time, Crusch and the old man, having stumbled upon a common topic, shared a laugh. Although this was at a bald old man's expense, Crusch was glad to have shared this moment. She breathed a slight sigh and focused on the document once more.

Crusch: "Although I only have one portion of the report, it is a very relevant portion indeed. Its contents are really quite interesting to me, and, if they are all in fact true, then this is a fairly extraordinary discovery."

Old Man: "——"

Crusch: "Appearances of the White Whale in recent years has been summarized in here. This report also contains information from Gusteko, Vollachia, Kararagi, and several small countries. The date and time of appearance and disappearance is recorded in every summary. I only have this one document, but I am sure the full report takes it to an even greater extent.”

Old Man: “———”

The old man voiced no reply.

Mirrored in the old man’s eyes, Crusch grew ever more fervent in her narration. Of course, reading this report would cause most people to react with burning passion.

The White Whale. A Witchbeast which had hounded the world since the days of the Witch. A malicious presence that had ruined countless lives and yet still roamed free. In the past, many soldiers had been assembled to subjugate the White Whale, but the crusade had ended in failure, a black spot in the dignified history of the Kingdom of Lugunica.

The damage suffered then could never fully be recovered from, and most did not know of the full extent of the crusade’s loss. That was the most despicable property of the White Whale; that those who suffered trying to stop it would be forgotten.

Crusch was far from the only angry one. Everyone who knew about the White Whale hated it with a passion.

Crusch: “But you put your anger to use, and the results were fruitful. If we can use your information to defeat the White Whale, it will come to save a great many people.”

Everyone walking in the streets, from businessmen and pedestrians, were constantly exposed to its threat, but due to the White Whale’s unpredictable appearances, it was impossible to protect everyone.

Crusch: “The victims of the White Whale will be greatly reduced, thanks to your valuable actions.”

Old Man: “———”

Crusch: “—«So what of it?», is what your expression says.”

Old Man: “———”

The old man's expression had changed for the first time since Crusch had delved into the contents of the document. Color returned to his cold eyes, and his gaze on Crusch intensified, as if saying "what do you wish to say?". To the silent old man, Crusch responded.

Crusch: "I understand your goal, Sir. To spend so much time and effort to track down this beast, to have the spirit to keep pursuing it, and to then give up on it? You could never do such a thing."

Old Man: "...So, what should I do?"

Crusch: "Your aim is doubtlessly to punish the White Whale. To find a pattern to its appearances is for no other purpose than to track it down and end it with a sufficiently prepared force. You are a swordsman, and what swordsman would throw away the sword and choose the path of escape? Ridiculous."

With the pieces she had, Crusch could puzzle together the arrangement between the old man and Bordeaux. Together, they had been planning to scope out and attack the Witchbeast, but, due to the Royal Family's illness, Bordeaux, busy with his duties on the Council of Wise Men, could no longer assist with the plan. And so, the danger of the White Whale was left unaddressed.

Crusch: "You mentioned sending messengers to Vollachia. Then, the next appearance of the White Whale will presumably be there?"

Old Man: "If the appearance in Vollachia is confirmed, then it will come to the Kingdom of Lugunica in six months' time. Yes, if that confirmation is obtained, then soldiers could be sent out, and...!"

Crusch: "This is surely why Bordeaux-sama is troubled."

Old Man: "Why... Why!? Why, now, are you going back on your word? Have you not talked at length about your grudge against the White Whale...? You too, you too were angry at having something precious being stolen from you! Have you forgotten Thearesia, Bordeaux?!"

The wrathful shout tore through the air of the prison and pierced into Crusch's ears. The old man slammed a fist on the ground and biting his lip. It was anger directed toward Bordeaux, who had broken his promise, and directed toward the White Whale, which had taken something precious from him, but, above all else, it was anger directed at himself, for being too weak to do anything.

Old Man: “I am already running out of time... If this appearance is missed, several years will pass until the White Whale returns to Lugunica. By then, my body will weaken, even more than it has already... This body still continues to die, so if the attack is postponed, my hope at vengeance disappears...”

Crusch: “———”

Weeping.

The old man’s voice was soft and contained little trace of tearfulness. However, his spirit seemed on the verge of vanishing. This weeping, shaking the old man to his core, was more than enough to carve scars on the hearts of those who heard it.

Thearesia. The name spoken by the old man was a familiar one.

And rightfully so. No swordsman in the Kingdom of Lugunica could not have heard of the name of the Sword Saint. Thearesia was the hero who had ended the civil war plaguing the entire Kingdom. She was beautiful, strong, and the sword loved her more than it loved anything else.

And, in the end, she had been killed by the very White Whale she had been sent to subjugate.

Crusch: “Ah.”

Immediately after the mention of Thearesia’s name invoked, another existence was invoked in the recesses of Crusch’s mind.

A person with close ties to Thearesia, a person who had reached the pinnacle of swordsmanship, a person who made Crusch tremble. There was only one such man in her memory. The legendary man was one who had followed the way of the sword, one who had also been one who could end a war with a sword. He had also loved the woman who was loved by the sword.

He had been a demon who had taken Thearesia from the sword god.

Crusch: “The Sword Demon, Wilhelm van Astrea.”

This man was legend upon legend, with a story so fascinating that it was remembered by song. Crusch herself, had too loved that song in childhood.

Then, in front of her was the ghost she had long admired.

Wilhelm: “I abandoned that particular name. I cast off my title and house, van Astrea.”

Crusch: “I see. What name do you go by now?”

Wilhelm: “Trias. The name of a fallen noble house, once located in the outskirts of Lugunica, which was destroyed decades ago. The last head of house loved his people dearly, even though he lacked the power to defend his territory. The current me is merely wandering between worlds, unable to even restore righteousness to the house of my birth. I have only my family name left.”

Crusch: “Wilhelm Trias.”

Wilhelm: “Yes. This is the now shameful name of former Sword Demon.”

Placing a fist on the cold floor, the old man, Wilhelm, made a respectful gesture toward Crusch.

That attitude toward a member of the nobility would typically be marked as disrespectful, but Crusch did not notice this at all. In fact, this display could better be said to have fascinated Crusch so much she could hardly remember to breathe.

Crusch: “Dedicating so much to track the whale... are you aiming to avenge his wife?”

Wilhelm: “I have no other goal... No, I have no other reason to live.”

In his clear eyes, there rested no sign of hesitation.

Crusch had finally arrived at the point where she fully understood Wilhelm’s intentions, and understood the goal he had dedicated a decade to.

—And also understood that, considering the current situation, that goal would not be fulfilled.

Crusch: “—I have understood your wish, but you must understand that that wish cannot be fulfilled as is.”

Wilhelm: "...Why not?"

Crusch: "If you rely on Bordeaux-sama, Bordeaux-sama will not be able to act in time to apprehend the Whale in half a year's time."

As long as the Royal Family was ill, no matter what fate would become of them, the Kingdom would surely enter into an unprecedented state of confusion. The Kingdom and its people would be completely shaken, and everything would be subject to change. The senior aristocrats would try to manage, but, in the end, it was the role of the Council of Wise Men to guide Lugunica back into stability.

Wilhelm: "-----"

Wilhelm remained silent. However, his mind was evidently nowhere near as calm as his expression and attitude would suggest.

Crusch could see crushing, overwhelming anger emanating from Wilhelm. Yes, pure, blind rage.

Right now, the only emotion that remained in the Sword Demon's ghost was wrath.

—Regret.

That was the emotion that Crusch felt toward Wilhelm, and endless regret. Regret, resignation, pity. Such emotions emerged one after another.

Choosing to be bound to a way of life, life choosing a path for one to be bound to. They seemed similar, but, in essence, they were completely different.

Being her real self, acting the way her soul desires to, was how Crusch had decided to absolutely live. Living as if bathed in Wind, that was what Crusch had regarded as the most perfect, the most beautiful way to live.

Therefore, the path of the Sword Demon, who had been bound to his way of life, was too sad, in reality. With unbearable burning anger in his heart, even after a decade, the Sword Demon's blade had stayed honed, and kept its sharpness. If his long-cherished wish could not be reached, then his sharpness could do nothing but tarnish.

Crusch was overcome with the desire to help him, but the same responsibility that had bound Bordeaux bound Crusch as well. Crusch finally believed she understood the meaning of Bordeaux's bitterness in that garden.

Or, rather, to Bordeaux, the name of Thearesia would be more meaningful. The Wilhelm who spoke of Bordeaux without a distant title, and the Bordeaux who had called Wilhelm a friend and comrade. Crusch, in this moment, could not measure up to the relationship between them.

Wilhelm: "I must thank you for your precious time, but it seems as if further dialogue between us will no longer be significant."

Although Crusch's face presented no obvious emotion, sometimes, eyes were more eloquent than words. In Crusch's amber eyes, Wilhelm found an answer. Even without relying on a Divine Protection of Wind Reading, with experience, an ordinary person could discern what they needed to.

Having been seen through, Crusch did not commit a dishonorable behavior such as trying to hide her intent.

Crusch: "After this, what will you do?"

Wilhelm: "My plans have not changed. If I cannot depend on Bordeaux-dono, I will find another influential person to collaborate with. Before this corpse I call my body decays, it must fulfill its purpose of finding revenge."

Crusch: "———"

Wilhelm was in a dilemma.

Only the senior aristocrats had the power to return an answer to Wilhelm's request. But those senior aristocrats were now struggling to quell the confusion resulting from the royal illness. If he found a family of lower aristocrats willing to lend a hand, their house would likely lack the ability to subjugate the White Whale.

If he looked to a sponsor outside of the aristocracy, there would be further complications. A powerful businessman, such as the old fox Russell Fellow, who was based in the Lugunica, would be more concerned with using the White Whale's subjugation for commerce than for crusade.

That said, Wilhelm becoming a target for assassins would be not unlikely. Before Wilhelm had left his family, the prestige of the Astrea family would have protected him. However, now Wilhelm called himself Trias. He could no longer consider himself an Astrea. And so, if any unfortunate situation ever came about,

Crusch: “Do not lose yourself to rage. The only one who can protect you is yourself.”

Wilhelm: “I understand. The inability to achieve my goal because of such frivolity would bring me a greater shame than anything else. Thank you for your heartfelt advice.”

Although he spoke politely, Wilhelm’s thoughts were already far removed from Crusch. Crusch could only think that the old man had already carefully considered each of her ideas on many sleepless nights.

If there was one thing that he had not considered due to his lack of knowledge, it was the calamity plaguing the castle. And that information could absolutely not be leaked.

Crusch: “Sir Trias... No, Trias-dono²¹⁰, I apologize for making you speak of that past that you do not mention lightly. Although I wish there was more I could do, I sincerely hope that your desire will be fulfilled.”

Wilhelm: “Those are wasteful words.”

Closing his eyes, Wilhelm clearly had no intent of speaking again. Crusch had also arrived at this point, where more words would be meaningless. Both sides were speechless. Crusch turned her back to Wilhelm. Her long green hair cut through the air of the prison, and seemed to propel her to its exit.

Ferris: “The conversation went smoothly? By the looks of it, it did go smoothly.”

Climbing the stairs, holding back a sigh, Crusch heard a soft shout. It was Ferris, sitting in the entrance of the guard barracks, rocking back and forth on his chair, causing a creaking sound.

He tossed the cards in his hand on the table and smiled at the two losing guards he was competing with.

²¹⁰ Crusch changes from treating him as “kyo” (卿), the equivalent of Sir, to “dono” (殿), which is more akin to Lord.

Ferris: “Well, since my master is back, that’ll be all for today. I’ll send a knight by later to collect my winnings, so please be prepared.”

Crusch: “What on earth are you betting on this time?”

Ferris: “Ferri would feel really embarrassed saying it, but, but, if Crusch-sama really wants to know, Ferri will bite back his shame and. Crusch-sama?”

Ferris’s fidgeting, blushing expression changed as he approached Crusch. His fingertips brushed Crusch’s cheeks, and the two naturally met their gazes.

Ferris: “Your complexion isn’t so good, is something wrong?”

Crusch: “I still cannot hide anything from you... It is just like the situation with Prince Fourier. My troubles feel overwhelming, which makes me angry at my own powerlessness.”

Ferris: “But, even so, Crusch-sama hasn’t stopped moving forward.”

Ferris gently wrapped a hand around one of Crusch’s, which was painfully tense. The touch caused Crusch’s shoulder to relax a little, and she returned Ferris’s smile.

Crusch: “Really, I can never win against you. You seem to know me better than I do.”

Ferris: “Of course, I already know everything. Inside and outside, there are hardly any places of Crusch-sama that I haven’t touched yet.”

Hearing Ferris’s colorful and rather dramatic words, Crusch was unsure of why the two guards behind them had reacted with confusion. While curious about the reaction, Crusch nodded in agreement.

Crusch: “I will withdraw today, but tomorrow will be different, and tomorrow’s tomorrow will also be different. Right.”

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

In the days after encountering Wilhelm, Crusch passed her time as she had expected.

The Royal Family's health continued to decline, and the liberated Wilhelm fruitlessly searched for another collaborator. Crusch was nigh buried in her work in the Kingdom's affairs and had needed to shamefully request her retired father's help in governing the Karsten territories.

Of course, neither those problems were Crusch's fault alone, but as long as she was involved in them, she would be frustrated at her inability to help.

This almost arrogant sense of responsibility was a part of Crusch Karsten's creed. Those cloudy, seemingly endless days eventually came to an abrupt end.

—The King of Lugunica, Randohal Lugunica, passed away.

And following him came the rest of the Royal Family, Fourier Lugunica being no exception. Fourier expired with Crusch holding his hand until the very last.

And only Ferris had seen the tears streaming down Crusch's face.

Leip: "The Dragon History Stone²¹¹ has new writing carved upon it. I'm sure everyone understands what this means."

In the parliament where the senior aristocrats met together, an old man was unable to hide his excitement. He was Baron Leip Barielle. Although he was the Lord of the Barielle territory, he was also a person who had been entrusted with a special task by the Royal Family. And his role was,

???: "A change in the Dragon History Stone... Is there a new prophecy concerning the future of the kingdom?"

Leip: "This is exactly the case. As is my duty anointed by His Majesty, I will convey to the assembled Lords about the change in Dragon History Stone. Please listen carefully."

He knelt and offered a respectful salute to the members of the parliament. Leip's rank was not so high that he should be part of a meeting of senior aristocrats. Still, they all paid Leip the same respect. This was the influence of the Dragon History Stone.

²¹¹ Opted to use the literal translation for "竜歴石". The Light Novel uses the alternative name of "Dragon Tablet".

The Dragon History Stone— it was one of the sacraments given as proof of the Covenant in place between the Royal Family and the Divine Dragon Volcanica. Like the Blood of the Dragon that would bring plentiful harvests to the land, the Dragon History Stone was treated as a sacred artifact, and was kept secure in a room within the Royal Castle, limited to the Royal Family and some like Leip. Only those with qualifications could enter to read it.

The Dragon History Stone appeared to be a square black plate, made of an unknown mineral. Much of its function was also not understood. The only certain thing was that when the Kingdom approached a crisis, the Dragon History Stone would describe the method to overcome it.

In the past, Lugunica had been saved many times from crisis due to the writ of the Dragon History Stone, and its reliability was more or less guaranteed. However,

Bordeaux: “Wait... Although the prophecy comes from the Dragon History Stone, are we certain we can trust it?”

Interrupting Leip’s description of the Stone’s content was a bald old man, Bordeaux. His severe, glaring expression looked down on the smaller Leip from above. Leip frowned and stared back up at Bordeaux.

Leip: “Trust? That should not be a question, Bordeaux-sama. The Dragon History Stone has never been wrong. As a member of the Council of Wise Men, surely you would be aware of this?”

Bordeaux: “I will acknowledge that it has saved the Kingdom many times, but this time is different. If the Dragon History Stone had served its purpose and tried to save the Kingdom, why did it not react to the illness of His Highness and the rest of the Royal Family? Surely the correct path would have been to save them!”

Aristocrats: “———”

Bordeaux’s phrasing was rough, spoken in a loud voice, and the majority of the assembled aristocrats seemed to agree with him.

Crusch, who was also seated in the parliament, nodded her assent. She firmly believed that if the Dragon History Stone had wanted to help Lugunica, the Royal Family should have been saved.

The strength her hand possessed as it held Fourier’s had vanished, and a shadow came over her face.

Remorse, that was all she felt.

Leip: “—Concerning that, there is something I must tell everyone.”

Bordeaux: “...Yes, what is it?”

Leip: “I did not mention this at first for a good reason, and I hope that everyone will be well-aware of it soon. Please listen carefully.”

Bordeaux: “Clearly state what you want to say!”

Leip: “The prophecy that appeared in the Dragon History Stone did so before His Majesty passed away.”

Bordeaux was stunned by Leip’s words.

But that reaction was not limited to Bordeaux. Every aristocrats seated at the parliament, watching over the exchange, opened their mouths in shock.

Crusch was also lost for words. She fixed Leip with a look of disgust.

Leip: “Everyone must be wondering why I kept silent, so let me first clarify that I have not turned my back on His Majesty.”

Bordeaux: “You bastard, have you forgotten your duty? Not only have you forgotten to fulfill your duty, you brazenly say it! To neglect to mention the guidance of the Kingdom engraved on the Dragon History Stone...!”

???: “Did the content of the Dragon History Stone implicitly suggest that His Majesty and his family would all pass away?”

Bordeaux: “What...!?”

Crusch exhaled sharply as that bomb was dropped on the conversation. Bordeaux, face severely reddening, turned to search for the source of those words. When,

Miklotov: “Hmm... Bordeaux-sama seems to have calmed down a little. Leip-sama, can you discuss this in greater detail?”

Leip: “As you will.”

The old man who had interrupted Bordeaux stroked his long, white beard.

The representative of Council of Wise Men, Miklotov, kept a calm composure as he prompted a change in the course of the conversation.

Leip: “Ten days ago, when His Majesty was still alive, was when I first found the prophecy... I should have consulted with His Majesty, or with the assembled Lords... but instead I kept this knowledge to myself at my own discretion.”

Miklotov: “Hmm... Why did you do so?”

Leip: “The prophecy was as follows— «When the Royal Family’s line ends, the Kingdom shall find five candidates, chosen by an emblem, to tie a new Covenant as a Dragon Shrine Maiden». I did not have the heart to tell this to His Majesty while he was on his deathbed.

Aristocrats: “...What?”

Hearing Leip’s words, the senior aristocrats all sighed.

What a cruel prophecy. To tell the desperately struggling Royal Family and aristocrats that the disease could not be cured, to kill off all hope. Leip’s feelings, in this case, could not be dismissed.

Aristocrat: “The Dragon History Stone... Not existing royalty, but a new Ruler? What do you mean by five people?”

Leip: “There is an Insignia. A jewel that has been handed down by the Royal Family of Lugunica, informing them about the Covenant with the Dragon. At of the moment of His Majesty’s demise, and the bloodline of the Royal Family ended, it lost its light, but... It will shine brightly in the hands of a new, worthy person.”

Aristocrat: “You want us to find five people... who can make this insignia shine!? Preposterous! It will not be possible to determine who shall sit on the throne in such a way!”

Leip: “So you will ignore the writ!? If we cannot select a Shrine Maiden capable of bearing the Covenant, the history of Lugunica will end here! And the same is true of its bond with the Dragon!”²¹²”

Those who attempted to deny this were met with Leip’s fierce words. Those who refuted him with their common sense were all forced to keep their mouths shut.

Crusch: “Would you mind if I speak?”

Leip: “Please, do you have any opinions you would like to share, Karsten-kyo?”

Crusch: “It is nothing that important. It is only natural that negative opinions arise, but first we should determine the accuracy of the writ. Could you bring out these Insignias?”

Leip: “I have prepared one for this moment. Bring it.”

Nodding to Crusch’s words, Leip gave a signal, and the doors of the parliament opened. Some servants wheeled in a cart, the Insignia of the Royal Family of Lugunica on top. Priority was given to those with strong ties to the Royal Family, such as the Royal Knights.

A black triangular stone, with a dragon carved on it in gold. and a red gem in the center. Before the Royal Family died, the red gem would always shine as a sign of the Royal Family’s prestige, but now it grew dim in the face of the King’s demise.

Aristocrat: “It will happen when this thing glows again, correct?”

Leip: “That is correct. If you have what it takes.”

The Insignia in the hands of the servants, each person surrounding the round table was lined up. Some were washed by cold sweat, others’ breaths were taken away, all as they looked down upon the Insignia.

If it shone while held by one’s hands, it would mean that person would have opened the way to the throne. Some cracked under that burden, others cracked due to their modest ambition.

²¹² The expression used is “盟約に耐え得る巫女が選り出せねば”. An alternative wording may be “Shrine Maiden capable of withstanding the Covenant”, which really makes it not seem like the nicest of things.

Aristocrat: “What about Baron Leip?”

Leip: “If I were to make the Insignia shine after having withheld the information about the prophecy, it would only invite suspicion. The Stone would never have chosen something that would cause such discord.”

Leip shook his head at the question, but to what extent was that a serious denial?

Snorting, Bordeaux took the initiative to pick up the Insignia; however, its glow remained non-existent. The insignia, apparently, had not chosen him.

Other members of the Council of Wise Men, including Miklotov, also picked it up, held it in their hands, and shook their heads. As time went on, everyone seated at the round table picked up the insignia, and faint gasps and small sighs spilled out, one after the other.

But then...

Miklotov: “...What?”

A rare look of surprise on his usually calm face, the first to speak was Miklotov. However, that must have been a reflection of the feelings of everyone who had gathered upon this place.

The dazzling brilliance of the Insignia made Crusch look at her own palm, and nod.

Crusch: “Apparently, even those who are unworthy can do something for the Kingdom as well.”

Saying so with surprising calmness, Crusch held out her palm, raised her head, and closed her eyes. And looked upwards.

With her eyes closed, she felt that she could see Fourier’s last smile.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

—There was subsequent confusion over Crusch’s position. Thanks to the prophecy of Dragon History Stone, to Crusch’s existence, the contents of Leip’s words were proven real.

And thanks to this, she was now not only a Duchess, but a provisional candidate for the throne, which bestowed her significantly more power in parliament. And,

Ferris: “From the first time Ferri saw Crusch-sama, Ferri thought she would be destined for something much greater than just a statesman!”

Having heard of Crusch’s new position, Ferris clearly felt a great amount of joy, which Crusch had not even associated with her circumstances until now.

Ferris: “Crusch-sama, why are you stroking my head? I’m happy, really happy, but my ears are really weak!”

Crusch: “You always serve me loyally. From now on, I’ll be asking even more from you.”

Ferris: “Yes, understood. Ferri is more and more captivated by Crusch-sama with each passing day.”

Crusch’s praise made Ferris blush and his tail swayed from side-to-side. Then his expression sobered slightly.

Ferris: “So, what is Crusch-sama’s position now?”

Crusch: “I will be a provisional candidate for the throne. There are four other candidates who are yet to be found. If I win, I will become a Shrine Maiden for the dragon.”

Ferris: “But even with a prophecy from the Dragon History Stone, how much of that absurd story can you believe? Although you’ll have a chance to confirm it with the Dragon.”

Crusch: “Bordeaux-sama also has some feelings of suspicion. He thinks that this may be a story concocted by Leip Barielle... I, too, am a little concerned about Leip-sama’s attitude. And, Margrave Mathers was also suspiciously quiet.”

The eccentric Roswaal L. Mathers had also been in attendance at the parliament meeting, dressed in his typical clownish makeup and outfit. Crusch found it curious that someone who rarely attended important discussions on the affairs of the Kingdom had been so intensely interested in the Royal Selection, and that, furthermore, he had not acted upon his interest.

Crusch: “Either way, pondering upon too many unanswerable questions is a waste of time. There is nothing that I nor Bordeaux-sama can do regarding Leip-sama. And I’m sure that I look suspicious as well.”

Ferris: “Hmph. Are there really such ungrateful people who would suspect Crusch-sama?”

Crusch: “Even I found my timing in that incident more suspicious than just a coincidence. I could not have predicted the situation.”

Ferris: “But even with the timing, hadn’t Crusch-sama considered that she might be a candidate at all?”

In reply to Ferris, Crusch smiled bitterly. Ferris truly knew her heart better than she knew it herself.

Crusch recalled the emotions she had felt during that meeting. When Leip mentioned the Dragon History Stone, Crusch was just as surprised as anyone else. She had agreed with Bordeaux’s argument, and had felt anger at Leip’s reply.

But when asked to try the Royal Insignia, Crusch had done so without hesitation. And upon sighting the red gem of the Insignia shining so brilliantly, Crusch had felt no trace of surprise. There was only the sound of the Wind blowing from her soul.

—She had finally been given the opportunity.

Fourier’s wishes, his hopes for the kingdom, which he had told only her. She had found the opportunity to answer to them. To have Fourier’s death become a sacrifice, to let his demise be a steppingstone to fulfilling his dreams.

Crusch Karsten calmly accepted this opportunity.

And this very opportunity had presented her with an answer to another problem that had been plaguing her.

Crusch: “Ferris, I have a favor to ask.”

Ferris: “I have already confirmed his location. I will be sure to transmit Crusch’s message.”

Ferris had immediately understood Crusch's intent. Seeing this, Crusch smiled a slightly bitter smile, and expression that was already becoming familiar.

Crusch: "Summon the Sword Demon— We shall have a discussion at the estate."

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Wilhelm: "To be summoned like this, I cannot help but feel slight trepidation."

Wilhelm, kneeling and offering the most respectful salute, had been personally invited and received by Crusch. They met in the reception room of the Karsten Estate.

Crusch: "You do not seem to have changed much since the last time I saw you."

Wilhelm: "Indeed, Karsten-kyo also seems to be in the same state of well-being as last time."

During their social routine, the two surveyed each other carefully. Crusch's investigations had told her that since their previous meeting, Wilhelm's actions had been fruitless, and had fully been expecting him to accept this invitation.

Ferris: "It seems that neither party is engaging in dialogue."

Wilhelm: "«I will be hearing the truth today», is what your messenger told me, so I would appreciate it if you would directly discuss the main topic today."

His gaze turned slightly to Ferris, who was standing next to Crusch, holding her wrist. Today, Ferris was wearing a short dress, through which his tail extended.

Cunning, but skilled at prompting discussion, a skill that benefitted a member of the nobility. Better than herself, at the very least. Crusch gave this mental evaluation of Ferris. Setting that thought aside,

Crusch: "The «truth» being referred to is the reason why Bordeaux was unable to assist you in subjugating the White Whale."

Wilhelm: “Indeed, no matter who I ask, I never receive a straight answer. What on earth is so grave that no one is willing to say it? Please inform me.”

Crusch: “Once you know, there is no going back. Knowing this, do you still want the answer?”

Wilhelm: “If this is an obstacle in my quest for the vengeance of my wife, I will overcome it.”

Steel’s nature was one never to bend.

Hearing Wilhelm’s reply, Crusch exhaled deeply.

It was the answer she had been expecting, as well as the answer she had been hoping to hear. But giving a reply was difficult.

What Crusch was about to discuss was information that could only be disclosed to a limited number of people in the Kingdom. Leaking it to Wilhelm, an exile from the house of the Sword Saint, was not something that could be done lightly.

She braced herself and revealed her information in one beat. But that was all it took.

Crusch: “His Majesty Randohal has passed away.”

Wilhelm: “———!”

Wilhelm’s eyes widened, and his expression became one of understanding. But the surprise was not over.

Crusch: “It is not just His Majesty. The entire bloodline of the ancient Royal Family of Lugunica has come to an end.”

Wilhelm: “Absurd! Such a thing cannot happen!”

The kneeling Wilhelm looked up, bared his teeth, and raised his voice. Those words were far too absurd and had brought fury to the old man. It was completely expected, after all Wilhelm—

Crusch: “Is it a shock to you, one who formerly led the Royal Knights of Lugunica?”

Wilhelm: “...”

Crusch: “This is the truth of the matter. His Majesty and his relatives were struck down by an illness which seemed to affect the blood of the Royal Family solely. Although the best healers in the country were summoned, the Royal Family did not survive.”

Wilhelm: “The entire Royal Family... Their bloodline has been disrupted... such a thing, how could it possibly...?”

Wilhelm fell shakily onto his hands as Crusch made the cold announcement. In truth, he understood.

The abrupt change in Bordeaux and the reason why no one would hear his appeal. Something major, something affecting the very existence of the Kingdom— something enough to turn even the White Whale into a mere triviality.

But Wilhelm’s anger was not shallow enough for him to be able to discard it.

But to whom did he hold this anger toward? Where should he direct it? What should he do about it? Even Wilhelm did not know, and so he pushed a fist against the floor and attempted to stifle it. The fist on the floor trembled, the floor cracked, and his blood flowed. He closed his eyes and bit his lip, trying to summon the last bit of reserve he had left.

But this could not be.

This should not be.

Crusch: “This is not the place that you should be directing your anger toward.”

Wilhelm: “—What...”

Crusch: “Your situation has not changed, except that the clouds have cleared and that you have found your answer. Now that you know the answer, what are your thoughts?”

Wilhelm: “There is no need to humiliate me further. You... What do you understand...!?”

Crusch: “I certainly do not understand anything, and I do not have the capability to even try. Currently, I am merely attempting to insert myself into a story whose characters I admire, who are on the verge of resigning themselves and stopping.”

Wilhelm's still contained fury, however, the fire had died down slightly. Because it was a fleeting, swaying flame, one which had lost sight of a future. It was far from the intense flame Crusch wanted to see, but it was a flame, nonetheless.

Crusch: "I told you, Wilhelm. After hearing the truth, there is no turning back. This is a matter concerning the future of the kingdom, and you are now just an old tree of an experienced swordsmen."

Wilhelm: "...And why do you want to belittle this dying, weathered tree?"

Crusch: "No, you misunderstand me, Wilhelm. What I want from you is just one answer. It is your turn to answer. I have been asking you from the beginning, first the encounter in the prison, and now here. Even if we meet again, I will continue posing the same initial question."

Wilhelm: "-----"

Crusch: "Wilhelm Trias— Are you truly okay with the way this affair will develop?"

A sigh of relief.

The old man's eyes, which had fallen into a murky depression, shot open. In there, was a blue that reflected the sky.

Crusch nodded.

Crusch: "In front of you, is the Duchess who is currently one of the most important people in the Kingdom. Prior to this, the senior aristocrats who could lend a hand to you denied you, and those who were willing to assist could not provide the necessary strength to defeat the Whale. Others who could assist would choose to use the subjugation as an excuse for personal gain."

Wilhelm: "You... What, exactly, are you trying to say...?"

Crusch: "It's the same question I have asked you, and I will keep asking. Other than the answer to this question, between the two of us, there is nothing more to discuss."

Wilhelm: "..."

Wilhelm fell silent and tried to look deep into Crusch's heart.

But, Crusch's heart was not something that Wilhelm could see through. Even Crusch herself had difficulty adequately expressing what she felt. Perhaps, Ferris was the only one who could see through her.

And that Ferris, ignoring the heat between Crusch and Wilhelm, leaned closer into Crusch, his face showing no sign of worry or anxiety. Because he knew that his role was, above all, to provide Crusch with support. And Crusch, perhaps more than anyone else, understood Ferris and what actions meant.

Therefore, Crusch Karsten continued to question Wilhelm relentlessly.

Crusch: "Wilhelm. Shall you continue like this, soon your path will be cut off. And, with that path, your quest for vengeance on the Witchbeast cannot be fulfilled. And you will continue to waste away."

Wilhelm: "...You are willing to lend me a chance to continue to swing my sword?"

Crusch: "I will say it again. Wilhelm, the one posing the question is me. The one who must answer is you."

Wilhelm: "-----"

Crossing her arms, Crusch threw those words at him. Hearing them, Wilhelm exhaled deeply and closed his eyes.

Then he fixed his posture, adjusted his pose on the spot, and opened his eyes.

The blue flame dwelling in his eyes caused Crusch to tremble unconsciously.

Wilhelm: "—In slaying the White Whale that killed my wife, I would like you to lend me your power."

Crusch: "...I am just the same as the senior aristocrats that refused all your proposals. Why appeal to me?"

Wilhelm: "Duchess Karsten, can you forgive the White Whale and allow it to continue to wreak havoc upon Lugunica?"

Crusch: "I will not forgive it. Certainly, I could never forgive such cruelty, such barbarity, such violence, such ruthlessness. But—"

Pausing, Crusch gazed at Wilhelm and closed her eyes.

Crusch: “What I find most unforgivable is that the existence of the White Whale made so many people change their way of living. Unable to be themselves and act as their soul desires, their souls are defiled and become dim... That is what I find unforgivable. So, Wilhelm. What I cannot forgive today is your attitude.”

Wilhelm: “...I am a most unworthy figure, aren't I?”

Crusch: “Yes, unworthy. I cannot bear to look at you. Such humiliation is not something that should be experienced. Therefore, the man-eating fiend causing it is also unforgivable.”

Wilhelm: “———”

Wilhelm raised his gaze to meet Crusch's eyes. Crusch unflinchingly faced his sharp, piercing gaze.

Crossing gazes, the two simultaneously relaxed their mouths, and smiled as one.

Wilhelm: “What will you ask of this weathered, old tree, my Lord?”

Crusch: “It has been decided. All I wish to see is true, bright, unashamed soul of the Sword Demon, Wilhelm van Astrea. There is little aside from that.”

Wilhelm: “I cast off the title Sword Demon and the house Astrea a long time ago. As long as the White Whale lives, I do not intend to reclaim either of them.”

Crusch: “Then, allow me to prepare the victory ceremony for you. We will one day recover your name, Wilhelm.”

Wilhelm: “—Yes.”

He nodded solemnly as a response to Crusch's words and accepted them. Seeing his gesture, Crusch nodded, satisfied, and approached Wilhelm, detaching the sword that hung at her waist.

Crusch: “Receive it.”

Wilhelm received the sword as if it were natural, and unsheathed it in a single smooth flowing motion. Turning it around, the sword was presented to Crusch. Upon receiving it, Crusch moved it to lightly touch Wilhelm's left shoulder with its tip, then repeated the motion on his right shoulder.

Crusch: "I hold only one expectation toward you, Wilhelm. As long as you live up to it, all will be well."

Wilhelm: "My sword shall be devoted to you. My body shall be indebted to you. My own soul shall make an Oath to you."

Crusch: "—Mhm. That is good."

In response to that oath, Crusch pulled the blade, and held it out in front of Wilhelm. Presenting the sword to Wilhelm again, Wilhelm received it, sheathing it back into its scabbard, and raised it in reverence. They nod at each other in understanding.

Crusch: "Keep this sword. As a swordsman, holding a sword is necessary, no?"

Wilhelm: "But..."

Crusch: "I want to see you wielding this sword, with the attitude of a swordsman."

In the face of Crusch's expectation, Wilhelm blinked and stood. Then, the tall old man with that treasured sword bowed to Crusch, attached his new sword to his waist, and straightened up.

In that moment, Crusch felt her previous state of confusion and anxiety blow away.

—Here, the Oath between the Duchess and the swordsman was made.

To fulfill Wilhelm's wish and to fulfill Fourier's dreams. If the heavens had chosen Crusch Karsten for this task, she would live up to their will.

To follow the guidance of one's soul and to act the way it was desired. In this regard, Crusch would take up all that she could carry and stride toward a tranquil, cherished, distant future.

—On this day, the Sword Demon found his greatest ally in his quest to subjugate the White Whale.

This was the real beginning of the unity of Royal Selection's Crusch Camp.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

Ferris: “Ahhhhh~, seeing you two would make anyone jealous.”

Wilhelm, who had found a path to fulfilling his ambition, and Crusch, who had established a connection with the one she had admired so much. Seeing how the two had laid down their worries and were now embracing in joy, Ferris bounced on his heels.

Ferris: “Crusch-sama jumped into the main topic way too quickly.”

Originally, Crusch had meant to first relay the story of the King’s death, before denouncing the White Whale and finally persuading Wilhelm to join the camp.

Even so, a fiery passion had entered Crusch, and she had jumped straight into recruiting Wilhelm. Although Wilhelm’s blindness worked in their advantage, Ferris’s heart was pounding like he had just successfully walked off a tightrope. He did not want to see a despondent Crusch-sama who had failed in her task, especially since the one she had been trying to recruit was the Sword Demon who she had admired so much.

Ferris: “Crusch-sama really does make people anxious... But, that’s also a very moving quality.”

Becoming a Royal Candidate and aiming to garner support by hunting the White Whale. Ignoring the preliminaries of conversation and immediately bringing up the main topic, Crusch had been clearly eager to free Wilhelm, in turn clouded by his frustration and desire for revenge.

Ferris, too, would stand by their side and support them through their hunt. He too was well-aware of what the White Whale had done to so many families, and as one of the country’s leading healers, Ferris believed in removing as much weakness as possible in the Kingdom.

Ferris: “Seeing this charming Crusch-sama, Ferri doesn’t want to take his eyes off her for even a second.”

Quietly narrowing his calm yellow eyes, Ferris regarded the old man who had just shed away a heavy burden and gained the weight of Crusch’s expectations.

A person who Crusch had taken a personal interest in. What would happen if he betrayed her expectations?

Ferris: “There are some things that I dislike thinking about.”

The young man’s words were so quiet that they dissipated in the wind before they could reach anyone’s ears.

—Six months after that evening, when the Royal Selection was well under way, the dream of the subjugation of the White Whale became a reality.

Character Pages for Volume 15

Characters

Re: Life in a different world
from zero

Characters

Re: Life in a different world
from zero

The only ability I got in a different world "Returns by Death"
I die again and again to save her.

カーミラ

Carmilla

『色欲』の魔女。明るい桃色の髪を
腰まで伸ばし、ゆるく纏めている。
伏し目がちでおどおどとした印象の美少女。

メイリィ

Meili

魔獣使い。黒を基調とした衣装で
全身を固めている。

Extra Information for Arc 4 Chapters 125B and 126B

???: “Hate, hate, absolutely hate you. Me, I loathe you. I really do. All of it is entirely true. Ever since we first met... I’ve downright hated you.”

Emilia: “———!?”

Immediately following the voice, a vivid scene slipped into Emilia’s perception. Beneath an overwhelmingly giant sun, in a burnt field, standing beside a massive and dilapidated building, bathed in crimson sunlight, was a girl with blood wetting her silver hair— Emilia.

It was her fully-grown self, who she had only witnessed in the Second Trial.

And she looked woeful as she stood before the ruin, assaulting someone with her words.

Emilia: “I’ve had this thought countless times, and denied it countless times, but... Yes, a nightmare really did catch up to me. And so, I will say it.”

Emilia: “———”

Emilia: “Maybe we really shouldn’t have met after all.”

A tear streamed down from the corner of her amethyst eye. It trailed down to her cheek, fell from her chin, and the instant before it struck the ground, the world burst into nothing.

Emilia is certain, as her name is literally given in narration. The target of her speech is completely unknown.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “You’re absolutely right. That kid was our enemy, and our wounds were deep. If we withdrew here, considering that neither of us can heal, maybe we wouldn’t have been saved.”

???: “In that case...”

???: “But they were just a kid— And isn’t that enough?”

Again, the scene changed. Now she witnessed a thick forest, two people standing at the edge of a steep cliff. She could not see their faces. But she knew both of their voices. One was very familiar, and though the other one was not, she did remember it.

The two were facing off before that cliff, one of them kneeling, the other looking down at the kneeling party. Emilia felt like both looked horribly miserable.

???: “You... You are a hero. A hero... is all, you can ever be!”

???: “I...”

???: “Why thank you so very much for your help!”

One silhouette reached their hand out to the other, who turned their face away and left those inconsiderate words of gratitude.

It felt like it had been a definite farewell between these two people. A goodbye laced with only irreparable woe and disappointment.

The world began fading away again, and Emilia’s consciousness returned to the dark space.

It is unknown if these two scenes are one future alone, but I certainly see them as such.

From narration, one of them is very familiar to Emilia, and uses the pronoun "ore" (俺), indicating this person is most certainly Subaru speaking. Other "ore"-users are unlikely, but it could be Puck as he uses it once in the WN in special circumstances, or Al, albeit the written form of his usual “ore” pronoun is written in Katakana (オレ).

The target of this speech is most certainly Reinhard (being called a hero is kinda his schtick), and the pronoun matches up as well with Reinhard's usual "boku" (僕).

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “—Without that, do you not have even a sword to swing. Thief!!”

Speaker is completely unknown. WN Arc 4 translator proposed Wilhelm due to the use of "他", for some reason.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “Witness. The victor remains I.”

Speaker is arrogant as fuck. Most likely Priscilla.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “Subaru, Emilia-neesama, I know you must be so tired. I’m sorry. But I’m going to wind up being a burden too. I’m sorry. All the thanks I’d wanted to say could never be enough...”

Talks to both Subaru and Emilia, calling Emilia "neesama", indicating that it is a young person. SummaryAnon added that it may also sound feminine. Very likely Petra.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: "To think that someone I wanted to kill so much was actually a kind person, what an incredible nightmare."

Pronouns are not present, but SummaryAnon denotes it is a feminine speaker. One of the main possibilities is Ram.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: "There are feelings which must not be spoken. Does it satisfy you, now that they have come to light?"

It is unclear who spoke those feelings, or who is the target of the line in the LN: is it talking about someone else, or themselves? Anyway, SummaryAnon put this as extremely difficult to tell, but possibly Julius as the person talking is masculine.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: "Does this make you feel that you have seen your promise through? If it does... If it does, then I was better off bound and dead in that cave! If I was going to see this dawn, then I should have just offed myself sooner...! Damnit, damnit!"

From circumstances, it is pretty obvious this is Otto. For the kicker, this line features his usual pronoun, "boku" (僕).

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “God I’m sorry. I’m sorry for being so weak. God I’m sorry. I could not make the kill, god I’m sorry. Now  will always be alone forever. God I’m sorry for being so weak...”

Uses "ore" (俺), Subaru being its most frequent user. Other "ore"-users are unlikely, but it could be Puck as he uses it once in the WN in special circumstances, or Al, albeit the written form of his usual “ore” pronoun is written in Katakana (オレ).

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “Yes, yes... my dear grandchild... must’ve grown up well...”

Uses "washi" (儼). The Japanese for “grandchild” is gender-neutral (孫). With these two factors in mind, it is most certainly Rom or Ryuzu.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “I shall never perish to such nonsense as a curse!”

One of the most difficult "future lines". The target of the curse is vague, and hard to discern from the Japanese. The WN Arc 4 translator states that it could also be translated as “You must not perish to such nonsense as a curse!”, and denotes the speaker speaks in a somewhat formal fashion. Given speaking patterns, this may be Wilhelm, Crusch or Julius.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: "It's simply that I realized something. That along the path up to today, I haaaaaaaaaad not been walking alone."

Extends his vowels, so it is most likely Roswaal. The only other character with a similar tic is Hector.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: "How come there is no soul inside!?"

Considering the talk about souls, and that the speaker sounds somewhat feminine or at the very least has a way of speech typical of young people, evidenced by the use of "のぉ", this is probably Felix, which is in line with SummaryAnon's proposal. Some have proposed Beatrice, which sounds unlikely considering her vocal tics are completely absent, "kashira" (からね) and "noyo" (のよ).

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: "Just as promised, I'm fuckin' killin' ya! Yeh!?? NATSUKI SUBARUUUUUUUU!!"

Neither SummaryAnon (nor I) can really deny the speaker is Garfiel, given he speaks like a goddamn redneck.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “Am I being so covetous? Am I saying anythin’ that indulgent? Nobody dies, nobody weeps. What’s so complicated ’bout it?”

Hard to tell. Being "covetous" or "greedy" sounds like it is Anastasia, and SummaryAnon put this down as Anastasia, possibly due to the use of Kararagi/Kansai dialect. It is also possible that it is not the speaker being greedy, but the one the speaker is talking to, but that is highly unlikely.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “After all, we must bleed ourselves to our very last drop to redeem ourselves, yes?”

Uses "watakushi" (わたくし), which is very rare. Famous users are Frederica, Annerose and Crusch, all of which speak formally much like what’s happening in this line. However, this is written in Hiragana, which makes Frederica and Annerose the most likely options, as Crusch is usually written using the Kanji form (私, same as “watashi”).

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “Right and wrong and good and evil’s all a bunch of bullshit. You’re stopping right there. Say it’s the Dragon or say it’s the Witch, if anyone’s blocking the way then I’m... then we’re, gonna crush them.”

This line is vague as fuck in Japanese, but this is its general sense. The use of "atashi" (アタシ) as pronoun, and particularly in Katakana, indicates that the most likely option is Felt.

※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※ ※

???: “—I believe that to pray for one’s requests is arrogance. Prayers are for when you seek forgiveness.”

—In the final world of light, a girl that Emilia had never seen awake and speaking talked.

From simple context, this is most certainly Rem without a shadow of a doubt. As a fun fact, the Kanji translated as “arrogance” is the same one used for the sin of Pride, in Re: Zero (傲慢).

Other Volumes

Main Story (Root folder at <https://bit.ly/3sUbM1t>)

- Arc 1 (Single volume):
 - Volume 1 - <https://bit.ly/3ilbMNw>;
- Arc 4 (Full arc at <https://bit.ly/311w8te>):
 - Volume 10 - <https://bit.ly/3qlw5NF>;
 - Volume 11 - <https://bit.ly/3iDFa7E>;
 - Volume 12 - <https://bit.ly/399hQeP>;
 - Volume 13 - <https://bit.ly/3pf1Ayi>;
 - Volume 14 - <https://bit.ly/39VSpwt>;
 - Volume 15 - <https://bit.ly/367hfIN>.
- Arc 5 (Full arc at <https://bit.ly/2P9kc5Z>):
 - Volume 16 - <https://bit.ly/3pbWovm>;
 - Volume 17 - <https://bit.ly/39c0M84>;
 - Volume 18 - <https://bit.ly/2MjEEj6>;
 - Volume 19 - <https://bit.ly/3sStZfN>;
 - Volume 20 - <https://bit.ly/3qJn1be>.
- Arc 6 (Full arc at <https://bit.ly/38X9re4>):
 - Volume 21 - <https://bit.ly/39cm59j>;
 - Volume 22 - <https://bit.ly/3qGYmny>;
 - Volume 23 - <https://bit.ly/3pjBZEM>;
 - Volume 24 - <https://bit.ly/39caJ5p>;
 - Volume 25 - <https://bit.ly/3c2zkeN>.
- Arc 7 (Full arc at <https://bit.ly/3s4Tj1D>):
 - Volume 26 - <https://bit.ly/2MjN6il>;
 - Volume 27 - <https://bit.ly/3c6OgYx>;
 - Volume 28 - <https://bit.ly/3iafY8R>;
 - Volume 29 - <https://bit.ly/3r84YNs>;
 - Volume 30 - <https://bit.ly/3xBXS6a>;

Side Content (Root folder at <https://bit.ly/39bjoop>)

- Side Stories:
 - Heroic Tale from Zero (Arc 2 spoilers) - <https://bit.ly/3zcuaVZ>;
 - Oni Sisters of the Hidden Village EX (Arc 4 spoilers) - <https://bit.ly/3ySWRa2>;
 - Artbook Short Stories (various) - <https://bit.ly/3eLRxEt>.
- IFs:
 - Rem IF (Arc 2 spoilers) - <https://bit.ly/3yX9PDJ>.